10548. Have you ever been present when a raid has been made and there has been a scramble for the money on the table? When there has been a scramble among the Chinese, do you mean?
10549. No; amongst all the people in the place—the police as well? No. About seven or eight years ago, when we made raids, we used to seize everything that we found on the table in the nature of gambling implements, and so on, and send them to the Inspector-General's office to be sold.
10550. If it has been said that the police scrambled for the money on the tables, and put it in their own pockets and never accounted for it, would there be any truth in it? No; I do not think there would, because everything has to be produced in Court.
10551. Have you ever heard that the Chinese gambling-house proprietors are in the habit of putting something by for a police fund? Yes; I have been told of it for years by the Chinese. The fund was for a kind of mutual protection, I have been told. You will remember that some years ago the larrikins used to annoy the Chinese a good deal, and, as I understood it, they clubbed together and always employed the best lawyers to prosecute.
10552. Then you think that it is a sort of defence fund? Yes; that is what I have always heard.
10553. But the statement has been made that the money was subscribed by the Chinamen for the bribery of the police? No; that would be impossible. In order to bribe the police at all effectually they would have to bribe almost every man in the division. It is not as though one man was always on one beat.
10554. Do you find much crime amongst the Chinese? None.
10555. Are they riotous or drunken? No. There is only one Chinaman in the metropolitan district whom I knew to get drunk, and he was a fish-man with only one arm.
10556. Do you find the sanitary arrangements of their premises good? Fairly good.
10557. Not exceptionally bad? No; far from it.
10558. Mr. Hawthorne.] Do you find that they compare favourably with Europeans living in the same circumstances? Yes; I think so.
10559. Mr. Abigail.] Wexford-street is where the bad women associate with the Chinamen, is it not? Well,

Detective
Keatinge.

13 Nov., 1891.

Well, in Wexford-street there is a terrace of houses inhabited by Chinamen, and there are two or three women cohabiting with them, but they are living with them as their wives.

10560. But there are no young girls amongst them? Well, if there were any there under age we should take them away at once.

10561. I do not mean necessarily under age—I mean from 16 to 20 years of age? Not amongst the Chinamen.

10563. Suppose I put up a notice outside a shop saying that gambling was being carried on night and day within, what, in your opinion, would be the proper course for the police passing that shop day after day to adopt? The mere fact of a notice being stuck up outside a shop saying that gambling is going on inside is no evidence. The point was raised by Mr. Roberts the other day, and it was decided that you must see the game being carried on.

10564. But if you saw me putting up a notice to that effect you would watch me very carefully? Oh, most certainly we should.

10566. There is no doubt that there has been a great deal of gambling carried on down there? Undoubtedly there has been a very great deal.

10567. Then how is it that there have not been more raids made? Well, until recently we have made raids and seized everybody there; but it is very hard to get hold of the real keeper of the gambling-house. The law is very much against us too, for we are obliged to serve the men with summonses before we can proceed against them. However we lock them up and search the place, but the next morning we have to release them and serve them with summonses. The usual mode of dealing with them was for the magistrate to fine them 40s., or levy in distress; but the Chinamen had to be let go, and it was a very difficult thing to identify them again. There are over 500 warrants lying in our station that were issued for Chinamen whom we cannot identify. If the law was so altered that everyone found in a gaming-house could be dealt with straight away, without getting out a summons in such case, we could soon put a stop to the gambling.

10568. That would make people more careful how they went into these places, but I suppose a number go in out of sheer curiosity? Yes; a good many do. If we had the power of walking into a place and arresting anybody we saw gambling, we could immediately put a stop to it all. I have no less than five warrants out now against the keepers of different houses in the Goulburn-street district; but I know this very well, that as soon as we went to serve them the lights would be put out.

10572. Have you always been in Sydney? No; I have been in Sydney since June, 1876.

10573. And it is your undoubted opinion that the gambling has decreased amongst the Chinese places in Goulburn-street and Wexford-street? Most decidedly.

10574. And you do not think that there are now many Europeans indulging in it in Goulburn-street or Wexford-street? No; there are no Europeans playing now except it may be a few speculating in pak-ah-pu tickets.

10575. How is it that the police do not go for the men who deal in pak-ah-pu tickets? I applied to Mr. Beaver, the Clerk of the Peace, some year or two ago, as to whether it was illegal to sell a pak-ah-pu ticket, and he pointed out that it was not illegal to sell it before it had been marked. Up to that time it is merely a piece of paper with a number of Chinese characters on, and is utterly valueless.

10576. Do you not know that convictions for carrying on pak-ah-pu lotteries have been obtained in Melbourne? Yes; but not for selling unmarked tickets. Of course the game itself is illegal. It has been decided by the Full Court that it is a lottery.

10577. Are they carrying it on to the same extent now as formerly? Yes, they are; but they are carrying it on with closed doors now.

10578. How did you suggest that it should be dealt with;—are not the public announcements that it is carried on at certain places enough to enable you to deal with it? No; you would have to see the ticket drawn.

10579. Yes, that is so under the law as it exists at present; but in any future amendment of the law how would you suggest that we should legislate in order to make conviction more certain? I do not know; it is a very difficult thing. In most instances you have to see an offence committed before you can secure a conviction, and I hardly know how you would be able to follow a different course in regard to pak-ah-pu.

10582. Is it a fact, in your opinion, that the Chinese gambling has utterly demoralised the whole of the city and brought misery on whole families? Not at all. The Chinese are a class who stick to themselves.

10583. You are speaking more particularly of the Chinese gambling-house-keepers at the Goulburn-street end of the city? Yes; of the Chinese in No. 2 police district. There has recently been a good deal of fan-tan played there, but there has been no coin put down, and it has been more like a pastime.

10584. How is it that only Chinese play in Goulburn-street, whilst in Lower George-street the places are crowded

Detective
Keatinge.

13 Nov., 1891.

- crowded with Europeans? Well, the Chinese are very like the Italians. When one of them gets hold of a house he lets his countrymen have a part of it.
10585. Have you ever been influenced in your duty by the knowledge of who are the owners of these premises? No; as a matter of fact I do not know who does own them.
10586. Has it ever come to your knowledge that the Chinamen pay more rental than anybody else will pay for a house or shop? No; it has not, and I do not think that is the case, because when a Chinamen takes a lease of a place he generally makes his own improvements.
10587. Mr. Quong Tart.] I have just noticed, Mr. Keatinge, that you have been making a raid at Wexford-street? Yes, we have.
10588. Well, if you go on making raids like that you will soon stamp the gambling out? Yes; we should do if we could continue to get in, but they will soon begin to prevent us getting in at all.
10589. You know several Chinese informers, I suppose? A man came the other day; I think his name was Ah Man.
10590. Is he the only one you know? Yes; I do not know any other Chinese informers. There was a man, who is dead now, called Charlie Lee Wood.
10591. Well, we will let him alone now;—you do not know Loog Pen, the man who lives in Foster-street, and has a half-caste wife? No; I do not know him by name.
10592. We brought him up here to give evidence some time ago—he is a little thin old man with spectacles? No; I do not know him by name, though I daresay I should know him if I saw him.
10593. With regard to these two games, pak-ah-pu and fan-tan, do you know anything about fan-tan? Yes; I understand it thoroughly.
10595. Do many Europeans take part in it? There used to be a great many, but now there are no Europeans taking part in it at all.
10596. Are there many gambling-places in Goulburn-street? I think that there are three or four tables fitted up.
10597. You can always tell as soon as you go into a place by the instruments about whether it is a gambling-place or not? Yes, you see the tables with the China matting over them.
10598. And what about the lottery-places? Those are generally in upper rooms, and railed off up to a person's chin, with bars above like a bird-cage.
10599. Have you any idea how the bank is drawn? Yes.
10600. How many principals are there in it? There are generally three or four drawing it.
10601. How many characters are there on the ticket? There are eighty characters on each ticket.
10602. Are they numbers or characters? They are characters.
10603. You do not find two alike? No; there is a different meaning to each character, and each character is four or five words in English.
10604. Supposing you buy a ticket, what do they give you to show that you have bought it from them? Here is a pak-ah-pu ticket, but it is waste-paper. That is what Mr. Beaver gave his decision upon. The ticket is useless until you initial it. I put my ten marks on and keep it. The Chinaman takes a duplicate, and marks the same characters that I have marked on my ticket. The Chinaman keeps the duplicate. He then puts on your paper the name of the bank, and hands it back to you.
10605. How often does the drawing take place? Oh, about two or three times of an evening.
10606. Well what is to prevent you making raids on the pak-ah-pu houses if you know where the banks are drawn? Well, it is a very difficult thing to see the banks drawn. Last night I managed to get into a place for a consideration, but it is very difficult to get now. Formerly they would let you go and stand in the place whilst they were drawing the banks, but now they are very particular indeed, and will let very few of their own people in.
10607. Do you ever see counters used as in fan-tan? No.
10608. What are the chances against the purchaser of the ticket, do you think? They are 500 to one.
10609. Have you ever heard of any persons winning large sums of money? Yes; I have seen people win two or three times in the course of a good many years.
10610. Have you ever heard of the bank being broken? No.
10611. Mr. Hawthorne.] Do you think that Chinese gambling is anything like as great an evil as the "totes" run by tobacconists and others? No; nothing like.

William Rae called in and examined:—

Mr. W. Rae.

13 Nov., 1891.

10612. Mr. Abigail.] What are you? I am a plain-clothes constable in the metropolitan division.
10613. What station are you attached to? No. 2.
10614. How long have you been attached to that station? Between seven and eight years.
10615. Then you are frequently called upon to pay visits of inspection to Goulburn-street, Wexford-street, and the surrounding locality? Yes.
10616. Have you an intimate knowledge of the Chinese gambling-shops down there? I have often been there with Detective Keatinge.
10617. Have you personally seen the gambling going on there? Yes; several times.
10618. In your opinion is it increasing or decreasing? I think that it is decreasing. There is nothing like so much gambling going on there now as there was some years ago.
10619. Who frequent the places chiefly—Chinese or Europeans? They used to be frequented mostly by Europeans, but now it is Chinese. There are very few Europeans go there at the present time.
10620. Have you in visiting these places not been treated kindly by the Chinese? Well, sometimes they will speak civilly and sometimes not.
10621. Have they ever made you any presents? No sir, never.
10622. Have they never given you a gold watch or a diamond ring? No, sir, I do not possess a diamond ring, and I think there are very few about Goulburn-street.

Mr. W. Rae:
13 Nov., 1891.

10625. Apart from the gambling do you find that the Chinese are very criminal? The Europeans are—some of them.
10626. But I am speaking of the Chinese? I cannot say anything about what the Chinese are now; some years ago two Chinamen kept a brothel in Goulburn-street, and I gave evidence against them and they got six months. Then there were two others who kept a disorderly house in Wexford-street, and we got a summons out against them, but they took the hint and cleared out before we could bring them up. As far as I know, there is nothing of the kind going on amongst the Chinese now. Two girls known as Polly Glover and Yankee Bella go down to a house in Robertson's-lane to smoke opium. Those are the only women except such as are living with Chinamen as their wives who go amongst them to smoke opium.
10627. Do they only go in the Chinamen's house to smoke opium—not for immoral purposes? No.
10628. Mr. Hawthorne.] But I suppose we are to take it for granted, that a woman who goes to a Chinaman's house to smoke opium allows her body to be used in anyway the Chinamen like? No, I do not think so. I am told that it is the reverse—that women who smoke opium do not care for that sort of thing.
10630. Are you very often called upon to interfere with the Chinese for disturbances or drunkenness? No; I never saw a drunken Chinaman but once, and I locked him up. Sometime ago Goulburn-street gave us a great deal of trouble. It was a very low street, and I used to lock as many as forty a month up from it for drunkenness. That would be as much as four years ago.
10631. There would be some special cause of disturbance when you did that I suppose? No; the place used to be infested with larrikins; but there is a great improvement there now.
10632. Have you ever seen much money on the table in these Chinese gambling-houses? No; not much.
10633. Have you ever seen a scramble for what money there was? No.
10634. Never known the police to scramble for it? No, I have never heard of it either. The most money that I have seen on the tables at one time was the other night when the police made that seizure.
10635. Is there great difficulty in getting into these places? Yes; the law gives them a chance as we have to get a special warrant before hand, and they watch for us and can see us coming before we get to the house.
10636. Have you ever thought of any improvement that could be made in the law? Well the only thing would be to give us the power of arresting them without a warrant.
10637. And then I suppose you run some personal risk if you go in and find them carrying on illegal games? Sometimes.
10638. But you have no doubt about the fact that gambling is decreasing down there? Oh, I am quite certain of that. There is no question about it.
10639. And you are quite certain that you have never received a bribe or even had the offer of a bribe? Never a penny-piece.
10640. Mr. Hawthorne.] Do you state as your experience that although the Chinese appear to be carrying on a large amount of opium-smoking down there, as we have ourselves observed, there is no immorality connected with it? Well to my knowledge there is not much opium-smoking going on down there now. There are only one or two houses that I know of where it is carried on.
10641. Does a week pass over without you going into these places? No, we are always in and out of them. We go in once or twice every week.
10642. You do not ask of anyone leave to go in? Oh no; if we are looking for any criminal we go in as a matter of course.
10643. Do you find any females of respectable appearance frequenting these houses? Not now.
10645. You have never found any cases of that kind? No, I have not.
10646. Do you think that the Chinese living in Wexford-street and Goulburn-street compare favourably with the Europeans of a similar class as regards their moral practices? Well, I cannot say as to that. There is one European girl who lives down there with a Chinaman, and her sister goes there some times.
10647. At all events you do not think there are any respectable females being taken away from their homes by the influence of the Chinamen? No, there are only those that I have spoken of.
10648. Are these two respectable women? No, they are common prostitutes.
10649. And they go into Wexford-street? No, into Robertson's-lane. One of them was convicted once for being a common prostitute, and the other was locked up on one occasion, but the Magistrate would not convict her. At one time there were a lot of girls living with the Chinamen down there. There were two girls in one family, but they are not on the town now and I have not seen them for years.
10650. You have already sworn, I think, that you have never received any presents from Chinamen? Yes, I have never received any presents from anyone.
10651. And have none of the other constables, as far as you know, ever received any? Certainly, not as far as I am aware.
10652. Mr. Quong Tart.] Who is your superior officer? Mr. M'Kay was until he retired, last month, and I have been under him ever since I joined the force.
10653. From your joining the force until now have you always been on the same kind of duty? No; I was in uniform until the last two years, and was then shifted about from one part of the district to another.
10654. From that time to the present do you think that gambling has increased or decreased? It has decreased very much during the last twelve months.
10655. Has it decreased since this Royal Commission was appointed—about three months ago? Well, they are certainly more careful now, and I do not think there are so many houses in which gambling is carried on. One house in Goulburn-street has been closed since the Commission was appointed.
10656. Do you think there are also fewer in Wexford-street? Well, I do not know. There are several warrants

- Mr. W. Rae. warrants in existence against the keepers of Chinese gambling-houses in Wexford-street, but we cannot get in to execute them.
- 13 Nov., 1891. 10657. Now look at this Chinese writing on the placards posted up outside the shops in these photographs. I believe you could guess what it means? No.
10658. But has not your attention been drawn to it lately? I believe the attention of the inspector in charge of the district was drawn to it lately.
10659. What does it mean? I was told that it meant "Gambling carried on here day and night."
10661. They are not carrying the gambling on so openly now then? No; they are very careful now.
10662. How many now, do you think, are carrying on gambling in Goulburn-street? I do not think there are more than one or two now, though they might be all carrying it on for anything I know. There is one house in Goulburn-street where pak-ah-pu is being played. We have tried several times unsuccessfully to get in, but last night we succeeded in watching them finish a game, and if we can get in to-night we might manage to arrest them.
10663. Have any of the Europeans in Goulburn-street, Campbell-street, or Wexford-street complained of this gambling as a nuisance? No.
10664. What do you think of opium smoking? It makes a very nasty smell.
10666. Do you know any Chinese informers? There is one man who used to inform on them, but he is dead. His name was Sam Lee Wood.
10667. There was one man who came up the other night—what sort of a man was he? He is a little dark man; he is locked up now for assaulting another man in the late raid.
10668. How long have you known him? The first time that I saw him was in that raid.
10669. Do you know whether any of the respectable Chinese encourage this gambling? No; not to my knowledge. I cannot say.
10670. Any who are in favour of it or in any way connected with it? I cannot say. There are very few that I speak to.

Mr. William John West called in and examined:—

- Detective West. 10671. President.] What are you? A member of the detective police.
10672. Where are you located? I am attached to No. 2 division.
- 13 Nov., 1891. 10673. Mr. Hawthorne.] Did you at any time undertake the duty of going round to inform the proprietors of the Chinese gambling-houses in Goulburn-street and Wexford-street and that neighbourhood that the Chinese Gambling Inquiry Commission was about to come round on a tour of inspection? Never.
10674. You never in any way gave any hint to those people that they were going to be inspected, either by your superior officers or by the members of the Commission? Certainly not. Before the visit of the Commission I did nothing more than I have been in the habit of doing during the last eight years.
10675. Are you on very familiar terms with the keepers of the Chinese gambling-houses down there? Yes, I have had prosecutions against them for the last five years.
10676. Do you remember the Commission going round recently? Yes; I showed them round.
10677. You did not go round previously to tell them to stop the gambling and keep their houses clean, because the Commission was coming round? No. I did not know that the Commission was coming round until the previous evening.
10678. You did not go round to any of these places after hearing that the Commission was going round? I would not swear that because I am in and out of these places almost every evening.
10679. At all events you did not warn the occupants? No, certainly not.
10680. How do you account for the fact that there was less gambling that night than at any other time? Well, I thought that it was strange. I went into the big boarding-house at the back of Robertson's-lane and saw the Chinese whitewashing their closets and walked out again. That was before I knew that the Chinese Commission was going round. I thought it strange.
10681. And you were not there after you knew that the Commission was coming round? No.
10682. How does it strike you that they got the information that the Commission was going round? I do not know. I cannot say, but I believe that they got it somewhere.
10683. Well, have you any idea how they got it? That I cannot say.
10684. Do you think it was from any member of the police force? No; I do not. You see we cannot get inside the houses without a warrant, and very few know that the warrant is in existence, but if any hitch occurs, and we have to delay the execution, it is always much more difficult to put the warrant in force than as though we had taken it out immediately beforehand.
10685. Would you suspect that any of the clerks engaged in making out the warrants at the Water Police or the Central Police Court give the information to the Chinese? That I cannot say.
10686. But nobody else except the clerks at the police courts or some member of the force could give the information? Well, I cannot say. It is possible that the proprietors of the Chinese gambling-houses have seen the police hanging about their houses.
10687. I see you have to inspect the places beforehand? Well, we must be in a position to see who are the principals in the game, or else there is no case. But as they are very suspicious people, if you pay one house more attention than another house they begin to imagine that something is going to happen.
10688. But, so far as you are concerned, you have no idea how the information that warrants are in existence against certain gambling-house keepers is conveyed to them? No; I have not.
10689. Mr. Abigail.] Have you ever received a bribe? Never in my life, from Chinaman or white man.
10690. You have been making some successful raids lately have you not? Only one.
10691. But some time ago? Yes; but we only got them fined £5 for pak-ah-pu after a great deal of trouble.

trouble. It is a most difficult thing to get at them. Every precaution is taken to prevent us gaining a conviction. The lotteries are generally conducted at the top of the house, in rooms that are very difficult of access from the street, and before you can get there the door is locked, and everybody is gone.

Detective West

10692. Can you suggest any improvement in the law? Well, I would suggest that if these agents who sell lottery-tickets were made amenable to the law it would be a long way towards stopping the evil.

10693. Comparing this Chinese gambling—fan-tan and pak-ah-pu—with the "totes" and consultations carried on by Europeans, is it a very great evil? Oh, I do not know. I think that at the present time there are a number of Chinese banks about the city. This much I have no hesitation in saying—that the money involved in Chinese lotteries is nothing in amount to what is involved in gambling amongst Europeans. The banks are generally backed up with reserve funds of £200 or £300.

10695. No, but if you sent people to buy tickets you can tell in how many places pak-ah-pu is carried on, and in that way you could find the principals out? Yes, but as the law stands at present the person who sells the ticket is not open to conviction. The law only takes cognizance of those who are at the back of the lottery. It is only the keepers of the places where the lottery is conducted, or the actual conductors of the lottery, that we can get at.

SATURDAY, 14 NOVEMBER, 1891.

Present:—

THE MAYOR OF SYDNEY (MR. ALDERMAN MANNING, J.P.), PRESIDENT.

FRANCIS ABIGAIL, Esq., J.P., VICE-PRESIDENT.

QUONG TART, Esq.,

JOHN STUART HAWTHORNE, Esq.

Inspector Atwill called and examined:—

10696. President.] What is your name in full, please? Alexander Atwill.

10697. You are an inspector of police? Yes; in charge of No. 4 division of this city.

10699. That is nine years? About that.

10700. Before that, where were you located? I was about twelve years at the Mint; and also in the central division. I took charge of the No. 4 division when Mr. Johnson left.

10701. When you took charge of that division did you receive any special instructions from the head office? No.

10702. Do you remember seeing a newspaper account of the deputation which waited on Sir Henry Parkes in July last in reference to the Chinese gambling-houses in Lower George-street? Yes; I saw the report.

10703. Did you, after reading that account in the newspapers, discuss the matter with any of your superior officers? No; we did not discuss the thing.

10704. Did you discuss it with any of your inferior officers or your men? No; not at all.

10705. Did the Inspector-General of Police ask you for any report upon the circumstance? I do not think so.

10706. Now, speaking generally, are the statements which were made by the members of the deputation regarding the extent of Chinese gambling in Lower George-street according to fact? They were largely exaggerated.

10707. Can you state how many gambling-houses there are in Lower George-street from Bridge-street northwards? I think there are altogether about twenty-one, and of that number there are about three or four—certainly not more than four—where Europeans are in the habit of visiting.

10708. Out of the twenty-one gambling-houses which you say there are in Lower George-street, only three or four are frequented by Europeans? I do not think there are more than three, but I am certain there are not more than four.

10709. Do those four houses carry on a large gambling business? Not an extensive business as regards European fan-tan playing. That has been very much exaggerated. I do not speak of the pak-ah-pu tickets which a number of the people come to buy. The number of those who go there to play fan-tan would be hardly noticed. I am, I think, within the mark in saying that 95 per cent. of the people who go to these places are pak-ah-pu ticket buyers. In fact I should say more than that.

10710. Of what class in society are the pak-ah-pu ticket buyers? Every class of working men.

10713. The banks are constantly being drawn? Yes; they must do so. But I do not know where the banks are, and the gamblers are not likely to tell whether they win or lose on the speculation.

10714. It has been alleged that respectable people hardly dare walk down Lower George-street from Bridge-street northwards by reason of the congregation of the Chinese there connected with these gambling establishments. Is that statement correct in your opinion? No. There is not one syllable of truth in it. Since I have had charge of that division there never has been a complaint lodged at the station of any person being insulted, spoken to offensively, or interfered with in any way, either by man or woman. I never heard of such a thing until the inception of this Anti-Chinese League. Then it was said that a couple of women had been insulted by some Chinamen down there. But, as I have said, no such complaint ever reached my ears.

10715. Do you think the business generally, of Lower George-street, has been prejudicially affected by reason of the existence of the Chinese gambling-houses in that quarter during the last three years? I do not think there is a syllable of truth in that. The trade depression is no more marked in Lower George-street than it is in the centre of the city.

10716. You think if there has been any depression in trade, which is probable enough, that it is not to be attributed to the presence of these gambling-houses? No. It is a depression which has been felt throughout the length and breadth of the land, more or less. I have no doubt that the removal of a good deal of the shipping further round the harbour has had something to do with the falling off in trade amongst those who sell seamen's goods, and the publicans. The late strikes have also contributed to a falling off in business there, as it has done in other directions.

10717. You have never heard of the Chinese down there being rude to women, or anything of that kind? I have never in my life had a complaint of the kind. I may say that I have made careful inquiries since I heard that such a statement had been made, and persons who have been reared in that district—girls and young married women—testify that they have never been insulted or in any way interfered with by the Chinese. The very reverse has been our experience; for the keepers of Chinese gambling-houses down there have actually sent for the police to remove women who have come to their quarters.

10718. Then you admit the existence of Chinese gambling-houses in Lower George-street, but you contend that the greater number of these are used solely by the Chinese themselves? Yes.

10719. And that there are some three or four Chinese gambling-houses which are principally frequented by Europeans? Yes; there are three or four houses in which Europeans are allowed to go in.

10720. Have you ever had any difficulty yourself in getting into these gambling-houses? I cannot get in. Some of my best non-commissioned officers who have visited those places have come to me to see if I would go round with them, and I have said to them, "If I come with you, you will not get in at all." They know me too well.

10721. But the plain-clothes constables have gone in, I suppose? Yes; they have paid chance visits to them.

10722. Now, I want you to state shortly what is the position of the law with regard to these gambling-houses? Well, in the first place, before I can do anything at all with one of these gambling-houses, I have to lay the necessary information; that is to say, I have to go before a Magistrate, and swear that it is a common gaming-house, and commonly reported so to be; upon which I obtain the necessary warrant to enable me to act. Then, having got the warrant, I have to do my best to get into the house, which is a very difficult matter; and I may tell you that, unless I can get one of my own men inside, I cannot secure a conviction at all. He must see the game played, the money pass, and identify the banker, and croupier there. But that is not all. After having been to the trouble of forcing my way in, and arresting those present, I can only deal with the principals when they are brought up at the police court. The others who were in the place at the time can only be proceeded against by summons, and that has to be based on an information laid subsequent to the arrest. The warrant only affects the principals (the banker and croupier). The Magistrate immediately discharges all the others, and we generally take them into the yard of the station until such time as the summonses are ready. In such cases we have had the lawyers come up and say, "Let these men out of the gate, for they are out of your custody now, and you will keep them here at your own risk." Thus we are placed in a very awkward position. If we let them go we cannot identify them again, for they do not give their proper names; so our only chance is to keep them, though we really act illegally by doing so, until we can get the summonses to serve upon them. As I have said, it is necessary that we should see the game going on, and the money pass, and identify the banker, croupier, and the doorkeeper, if there is one, before we can proceed successfully.

10724. What penalties are inflicted upon the croupier and banker? The fines have ranged from £10 to £40. On the last occasion I think £40 was the highest.

10725. During the nine years you have been in charge of the No. 4 division, how many raids have you made altogether? I cannot say exactly, but I think I made about eleven.

10726. Can you tell us the number of persons against whom you have procured convictions? I arrested 133 persons, on whom when searched was found £119. The first raid I made I found twenty-six persons in the house.

10727. Can you give the dates of the raids? On the 6th November, 1886, there were found twenty-six persons in a house, and the fines amounted to £3 9s. 10½d., or an average of 3s. 5½d. per man. I made one on the 6th December of the same year, and found seven persons there, who were fined £1 18s. 1d., or an average of 5s. 5d. I made one on the 21st June, 1887, and found sixteen persons there, who were fined £17 7s., or an average of £1 1s. 0½d. On the 6th July, 1888, I found sixteen persons in a house, who were fined £7 8s. 7½d., or an average of 9s. 7½d. On the 24th July, 1888, I found ten persons in a house who were fined £21 17s. 8½d., or an average of £2 3s. 9d. On the 4th August, 1888, I found eleven persons in a house, who were fined £6 5s. 10d., or an average of 10s. 5d. per man. In July of same year a raid was made, but I have no account of it. It was made illegally—that is, without a warrant, by some indiscreet men. On the occasion of the last raid we found fifty on the premises, and the amount found on the persons arrested, when searched, amounted to £27 16s. 8d., or 11s. 1½d. per man. That makes seven of which I have given you an account, and there were two illegal raids besides.

10729. Independently of these raids was it not customary for your plain-clothes constables to enter these gambling-houses at times and disperse the people assembled there? Yes; and on many occasions we attempted or contemplated raids that we could not carry out owing to the difficulties in the way. With regard to the buyers of pak-ah-pu tickets I may say that the constables were not really entitled to disperse the people who bought lottery-tickets, and they got to know this and would not go at last.

10730. Will you explain the law as it stands with regard to this pak-ah-pu business? I may state that in the year 1889 a case was referred to the higher court, in which it was ruled against us that pak-ah-pu was not a game within the meaning of our Gaming and Wagers Act; that if it was anything it was a lottery-

Inspector

lottery—that is, under the 16th Vic., and we do not work under that, but under the 14th Vic. No. 9. Under the 16th Vic. (Geo. III) the lottery must be in goods, wares, or merchandise; but in pak-ah-pu there is no mention of anything of the kind. There is nothing said to a person buying a ticket, either verbally or otherwise, either written or implied. You just go in and buy your ticket.

10731. In point of fact the police did try to suppress this pak-ah-pu business? Yes.

10732. You brought a test case, and it was referred to a higher court, which practically ruled that the law was ineffectual? Yes; that pak-ah-pu was not a game within the meaning of the Act.

10733. Mr. Abigail.] Since then have you not secured one conviction in a pak-ah-pu lottery case? Yes; but that was where the bank was seen to draw, and the manipulation of the tickets in the bank. This enabled the Judge to say that as there was consideration of some kind it was a lottery.

10734. President.] In that case the conviction was upheld? Yes.

10735. But taking that view of the law, it is your opinion that the process of obtaining convictions against the pak-ah-pu lotteries would be extremely difficult and tedious? We simply could not do it.

10737. Can you suggest any amendment of the law as regards lotteries;—do you think, for instance, that if it were extended to apply to money and prizes as well as merchandise, &c., that it would meet the case? I would not suggest an alteration in that way.

10738. Then in what way would you suggest an amendment? Well, I would simplify the law by making amenable either the purchaser or seller that might be found in the house, and in the case of fan-tan I would make the fact of the doors being locked an offence against the law, and the finding of gambling implements in the house sufficient evidence of the purpose to which the house is being put. As I have said in the case of pak-ah-pu tickets, I would simplify the law by making it punishable by fine or imprisonment to be found buying or selling a ticket—let both parties be made amenable.

10739. Have you had any of your men dismissed for inattention to their official duties during the nine years you have been in charge of the division? No; not for inattention to duty.

10740. Did you ever have occasion to complain that your subordinates did not take sufficiently energetic action against the proprietors of these gambling-houses? Never.

10741. Did you give instructions to your men how to deal with the proprietors of the gambling-houses and places that you suspected of being gambling-houses? I do not think I ever gave them definite instructions on the subject.

10743. Have you ever given any instructions to the plain-clothes constables as to how they should conduct themselves with regard to the proprietors of these gambling-houses and the houses themselves? They have general instructions to visit these places once or twice a week all over the division.

10745. They were merely to visit them? Yes; for the purpose of keeping down the causes of complaints in other direction. For instance, if they saw anything in the way of insanitary conditions, or immorality, or found children of tender age in these places, they were to report to me.

10746. And have they ever made any reports to you of the kind? Yes. They have reported cases of immorality to me, where young girls have been found in Chinese quarters, and have brought the girls out, and charged them under the Vagrant Act with having no visible lawful means of support.

10747. Have you had any reports as to business carried on in the suspected gambling-houses? Yes. I sent them repeatedly for the purpose of ascertaining whether there was much gaming going on. I sent them to places for which I had taken out warrants so that I might not be unsuccessful in making a raid I had everything ready for the purpose.

10748. And you made raids in consequence of the reports you received from your men from time to time? Yes; I trusted to Senior-sergeant Higgins and another man that worked with him to assist me in what I had to do.

10750. Have your men in that division been shifted about much during the last nine years? No.

10751. They are permanently stationed there? Yes; unless they misconduct themselves they are not removed.

10754. Not more than that? No.

10755. Now, I suppose you know a good deal about the circumstances of your men;—have any of these men who have worked in Lower George-street become, comparatively speaking, wealthy, as compared with those who have worked in Kent-street, say, or other parts of the division? I do not know of a solitary man that has become wealthy. As a matter of fact there is not a wealthy man in my division, nor do I think there are many men in the division who have much beyond their month's pay ahead of them.

10756. Have you any reason to believe that any of your men have been corrupted by receiving presents from the Chinese? No; I never heard a whisper of it until this Anti-Chinese League was formed.

10757. There is an officer under you who is reputed to be wealthy, Mr. Atwill—I refer to Senior-sergeant Higgins? Well, he is not.

10758. What is your idea of wealth? Speaking in the case of a policeman, I should say that a man is wealthy who can support his wife and family independently of his pay.

10759. Sergeant Higgins has acquired some property, I believe? Yes.

10760. Do you believe he has acquired that property in an honourable manner? Certainly. I thoroughly believe that there is not a more honest man in the world than Sergeant Higgins.

Inspector
Atwill.
14 Nov., 1891.

10761. I suppose it did occur to you, when these charges of corruption against the police were made, that some of your officers had acquired property, and that Sergeant Higgins was one of them? Yes.
10763. Do you know when Sergeant Higgins first acquired property? Yes; he acquired some property very cheap on the Rocks. That was over twenty years ago.
10764. And that property has largely increased in value? Yes, very largely.
10765. In your experience he is a thrifty man, hardworking and industrious. Have you ever known him to spend any money in drink at all? I never saw him drink so much as a glass of beer in my life. Of course he may go into a public-house occasionally, but I never saw him.
10766. Constable Beadman has also been spoken of as possessing some means? He came into £1,800 by the will of a relative, and he was a good while in Balmain, where he was at no expense at all.
10767. You are in a position to state how Constable Beadman and other officers under your direction, happen to possess property, whatever they may possess, and that they acquired it honorably? Yes.
10768. And you are quite sure that they have been in no way assisted by bribes or presents from the Chinese or anyone else? I do not believe there is a Chinaman in the district that would give them what would buy a brick.
10769. Then as to the property-owners in Lower George-street, has it ever come to your knowledge that people in high places have attempted to corrupt the police, and get them to connive at houses being used for the purposes of gaming-houses? I do not believe that men in high places have ever spoken to the men at all, or the non-commissioned officers either.
10770. Have you been deterred or influenced in the discharge of your duty in any way whatever by the fact, if it be a fact, of people in high places being interested in these properties in Lower George-street? Certainly not.
10771. By Members of Parliament, for instance? Indeed I have not.
10772. Now is there any connection between these gambling-houses and the prostitution of women by the Chinese, Mr. Atwill? Not the slightest.
10773. Whatever opium-smoking, for example, there may be in your division, is not contracted specially by reason of the existence of the Chinese gambling-houses in that locality? No; there is not one-tenth of the opium-smoking that there used to be down there when I first took charge of the division.
10774. Have you noticed that any of your officers wear jewellery extensively? I have seen only one man with any jewellery.
10775. Who is it? Constable Beadman.
10776. Do you think it is likely that the jewellery was presented to him by any of the Chinese merchants down there? It is not true.
10777. Do you know how he acquired the jewellery? Yes; he showed me a ring he bought some years ago, and told me whom he bought it from.
10778. Then you have taken sufficient interest in the charges which have been made against the police to make inquiries, and you are in a position to state that if any of your officers do wear jewellery they have acquired it in an honorable way? Yes, with regard to this particular charge.
10779. When I heard of it I made it my business to question the constable. I said to him, "I want you to tell me exactly where you got that ring you wear, and that pin?" And he told me then and there from whom he got them, the persons he referred to being both reputable citizens.
10780. You have made it your business to inquire into these charges, and you are satisfied that they are groundless? Yes.
10781. You remember reading in the account of the deputation that waited on Sir Henry Parkes a statement to the effect that coal-lumpers, after working day and night, would go into these gambling-houses, and in a few hours lose the whole of their week's wages;—will your experience bear out that statement? I only know of one case, in which a woman told me that her husband used to take his week's wages to the gambling-houses and spend them. She was a coal-lumper's wife. Her husband was afterwards unfortunate. He got into gaol for embezzlement or something in connection with the Coal-lumpers' Union.
10782. It was also alleged that it was a well-known fact that Lower George-street was one of the best beats in Sydney for the police to make money? There is not a beat in my division or in the city of Sydney that a policeman can make money out of—at least I hope there is not.
10783. As a matter of fact, you know that the men in your division are not in particularly fortunate circumstances—that, in fact, they are not more than able to pay their way? That is correct.
10784. And that if any of them have means beyond the pay they receive you know that they acquired it in an honorable manner? Yes; every one of them.
10785. Do you not think you could suppress this Chinese gambling if more vigorous measures were resorted to than you have had recourse to in the past? No, sir. The law must be simplified in the first instance.
10786. Do you not think that if you made a greater number of raids it would have the effect of putting down the evil? Well, so far as that goes, I have never been successful in putting any of them down entirely.
10787. They simply paid the fine and went on again? Yes; they are at no expense for the plant. They simply have a table, and consequently are very easily set up. Then, again, in making a raid we have great difficulty in obtaining access to the premises.
10788. In any of the raids you have made have any of your men sustained personal injury? I do not know that I could say they sustained personal injury. There were no limbs broken in connection with any of these raids.
10789. Had not your men to incur personal danger in that duty? To a certain extent, yes; and I can explain how that is: In the first place a raid can only be made on a dark night, and in some cases the men have had to scale the houses in order to get inside, and this has involved the risk of falling from a height of two storeys. I know the work has been attended with the greatest difficulty and anxiety to me. For instance, I may send one of my men in, and may tell him that I will be in at a certain hour, and I have have to wait until that time, and then there are three or four doors to break through probably. One night one of my men was a long time before he could tell me how many men there were there, or anything about them, having received a blow from someone, on his seizing the bank.

10790 $\frac{1}{2}$. Have you had any conversation with any of your officers or men in regard to the agitation about these Chinese gambling-houses? Only with Sergeant Higgins.

10791. Of what nature was that conversation? I asked him on one occasion if he saw the statement that had been made by the deputation to Sir Henry Parkes. He said he had read a little, and I then read the remainder of it out for him.

10792. Before this Commission was appointed did you have any correspondence with the Anti-Chinese League? No. I think, on one occasion, when I was in Mr. Buchanan's, and they were talking about it, I said if the citizens would only help to simplify the law it was the best thing they could do.

10793. You had no communication from the League? No.

10794. Did you have any conversation with a person named Maguire on the question of the Chinese gambling-houses in Lower George-street? Never.

10795. You know Mr. Maguire, I suppose? I know Maguire, the photographer.

10796. Did you not have any conversation with him at all relating to the League? Not to my recollection.

10797. Did you have any conversation with Mr. Nock on the subject? Not until the first meeting had been held.

10798. What was the nature of the conversation you had with him then? I merely asked him what they had done on the previous night, or something like that.

10799. When this Commission was appointed, did you go to Ah Toy, cabinet-maker, and ask him to give you a receipt for some money you had paid him some considerable time before? Yes; I asked him for my bill.

10800. As a matter of fact, you had paid the money? Yes; and I had asked him for it (the bill) seven or eight times.

10801. But you asked him for it after the Commission was appointed? I did.

10802. Now, I want to know what moved you to do that? Well I scarcely like to tell that. It is a private matter entirely.

10803. When this Commission was appointed you were anxious to get a receipt from Ah Toy for some money you had paid him a considerable time before. Now why were you anxious to get that receipt—it is better that you should explain? Well, as I have said, I did apply for the bill before, and not having it when I read the statements made by the deputation to the Premier, I knew not what might be said if I could not produce this bill, should anything arise to bring it in question. I therefore determined to have my bill, and in this determination I was supported by the recollection of some unpleasant experiences I had undergone a little while previously. When I asked Ah Toy for my bill he said, "What you want it for; I will not ask you to pay twice. I will give it you some other time." But I told him I must have it. One reason that made me so anxious to have my bill was that some time previously it was alleged in an anonymous letter to the Inspector-General of Police that I had accepted a present of a pony for my boy, or my boy had been allowed to accept it. The letter was sent to me, and I forwarded the receipt showing where I purchased the pony. The Inspector-General returned the letter to me, with the expression of his hope that I would find out the writer. In another case I purchased about 23s. worth of books for my son at the High School. I purchased a Key to Colenso's Arithmetic, and I said at the time I purchased it, "If this does not prove useful to my boy you will let me return it?" However, he did keep the Key. This was a cash transaction. But some time after I got an account for the books, although I had paid cash over the counter. I went to the place and asked for the foreman. It appeared that he was then in Sussex-street in business. I told them that it was a cash transaction, and referred them to him. They apologised accordingly. These things necessarily made me careful about the other matter, especially when I heard what was being stated with regard to the police in my division.

10804. You had been wrongfully accused by an anonymous writer previously, and you were determined you would have the receipt for the money which you had paid this Chinaman, Ah Toy, so that you would be in a position to meet any accusation that might be made against you in connection with the furniture you purchased from him? Exactly.

10805. And you swear positively that you did pay Ah Toy for everything you had from him in the course of business? Yes. I had from him a washing-stand, a deal table, this book-case, and some polishing done, and I paid him for everything as I got it.

10806. You buy your necessary furniture in Lower George-street in the same way that you buy your groceries from the local tradespeople? Yes; just the same.

10807. And everything you have required for your family in that way you have paid for? Yes; no man ever had to send a bill twice to me.

10808. You confess that on seeing the statements in the papers charging the police with corruption you were necessarily alarmed, and induced to provide yourself with receipts for everything, so as to be in a position to meet any unjust accusation that might be made against you, such as you had already experienced in another case? Exactly; I thought it was best to have my bills.

10809. Do you know Mr. Nolan, Mr. Nock's accountant? I do not think I would know him if I met him in the street.

10810. Did he ever say anything to you about a Chinaman having come to him to make out a receipt for you? I do not know him. I never spoke to him in my life.

10811. You do not remember having a conversation with Mr. Nock on the subject of the Chinese gambling-houses? I do not.

10812. Do you not recollect calling upon him yourself? Yes; just at the time I did.

10813. What occurred on that occasion? He told me of certain things that had come before the meeting with regard to the Chinese places, and inferred that the police did not proceed against the Chinamen because the houses belonged to Members of Parliament, or something to that effect.

10814. Did you not discuss with him the difficulty of getting into the Chinese gambling-houses? I might have done so, but I did not wait upon him for that purpose. I just called in to see him on account of seeing that he had been to the meeting.

Inspector

- 10815-16. Did not he mention to you anything about chests or half-chests of tea being hawked about at Christmas time in compliment to the police? No there is not a word of truth in that.
10817. You never had a conversation with Mr. Nock in the course of which he insinuated to you that such things were not hawked about at Christmas time for nothing? No; he never made any such communication to me. If he had done so I would have told him distinctly that he was stating what was a slander upon my men.
10818. Then you did not discuss with Mr. Nock on that occasion the difficulty you experienced in getting into these gambling-houses? I might have mentioned about the difficulties of getting in, but I did not discuss anything with him.
10819. Did you ever ask his aid in the matter—for instance by saying, "Will you go into these places at night and let us in"? I never said that. But I might have said that if the citizens would only enable us to get in by taking a man in whom we could appoint, it would be of assistance to the police; but I never said more than that.
10820. Did you see Ah Toy after you got the receipt from him? I saw him about a month ago.
10821. Did you see him immediately before he came here to give evidence? No.
10822. Did you make any suggestion to him in any way on the subject? No. I did not know that he was coming, or that he was here at all.
10823. You never suggested to him what he should say to the Commission about that affair? Never.
10824. Do you recollect how you paid Ah Toy for that cabinet? I do not exactly.
10825. Do you keep a banking account? No. I did not pay him by cheque.
10826. Who carried the book-case up to your place? I do not know.
10827. Did the Chinaman deliver it himself? I suppose so; I had nothing to do with it.
10828. Did you give special instructions for it to be taken to your house at night-time? No.
10829. You gave no instructions at all with regard to it? None at all. It was brought there after dinner. I was not there.
10830. Did you pay the ordinary price for the book-case? I think I did. But I am not a judge of these things. But I can say that if he gave me a bargain he gave it to me voluntarily. He is an honest respectable fellow. I simply measured the recess where the book-case was to stand, I told him that I wanted a book-case that size. He charged me £5. He said it was a cheap book-case, but he did not say whether it was a bargain or not.
10831. Have you much property yourself Mr. Atwill? I have not too much.
10832. Do you recollect having a conversation with Mr. Maguire, the photographer, in which ex-Inspector Anderson's financial position was spoken of, at about the time of his retirement from the police force? I might have had, but I do not recollect it.
10833. When you stated that you were all right, as you had sufficient property to retire on? I do not recollect ever having said such a thing to him.
10834. As a matter of fact you are not a rich man? I do not know what you mean by rich.
10835. Where do you live? In Fort-street.
10836. You have a wife and family? There are nine of us altogether.
10837. What is your salary? I receive £325 a year.
10838. Do you live in your own house? No. The Government pays my rent.
10839. Would you find it convenient to resign your position and live on your capital? No; I could not get bread and butter for my children if I were to do so. I might just as well tell you what I have. I have two houses in Kent-street, which were given to my wife by her father; that was before I was married,—sixteen years ago. The first thing I did when I came to this country was to buy a house in Railway-place, a leasehold property, which I sold to Mr. Larkins, and made £50 on my bargain. I then went to Derwent-street and purchased two cottages there, also on leasehold ground, for £80, and I built larger houses there.
10840. Do you know Mr. George Black; I believe he is a Member of Parliament? I do not. I would not know him if I saw him in the street.
10841. Did he not interview you once? He wanted to interview me about a public-house which had come under the notice of the police.
10842. What did he want? I suppose he thought the licensee was hardly treated.
10843. It had nothing to do with the gambling business? No.
10844. Then all the rumours about your being a rich man are without foundation? Entirely. I may mention that I got the money to build the two houses by selling some land, two allotments fronting Johnson-street, which I bought when the Annandale Estate was first sold. That is the extent of my property.
10845. You recollect the time this Commission paid a visit to Lower George-street? Yes.
10846. Well, it has been alleged that the news of our intended visit was spread about the whole of the neighbourhood on that occasion? That could not be; for there was not one that knew it but myself.
10847. Then you take all the responsibility on that head? Yes; I received a note from the Inspector-General to say you were coming, and to meet you. No one else knew of it. You will recollect that you found some men in one of the places you visited, and they certainly would not have been there had they known of your coming.
10848. Did you have any communication with the police of the Goulburn-street division about our visit there? None whatever.
10849. Then as to the attitude of the police towards these gambling-houses, you maintain that there has been no neglect of duty whatever? I do. I have not known a single instance of the kind.
10851. Do you remember having a conversation with Mr. Nock in which he drew your attention to the fact of raids being made in Melbourne among the Chinese? There was no conversation; but I remember him sending a memorandum to me in red ink, drawing attention to it, and I thought it was a very impertinent thing for him to do. On two occasions he sent memoranda of the kind to my house.
10852. When you made that last raid on Moy Ping's establishment, were you properly provided with crowbars and the necessary implements for forcing an entrance, without going to the shopkeepers in the neighbourhood to ask for them? Yes.

Inspector
Atwill.

14 Nov., 1891.

10853. You did not go into the shops and advertise the fact that you were going to make a raid by asking for the loan of a crowbar for instance? No, there is no truth in that. I saw the crowbar slung round Beadman's neck in my own office before we went out, and the other crowbar was got at the Water Police Court.
10854. Do you know Mr. J. Armstrong? I do, he is a tobacconist and hairdresser.
10855. Do you know if he is interested in running a totalisator? I do not know. My officers on one occasion told me that he tried to engage with a man to run a "tote" there, saying that he could run it, and that the police would not interfere; but the man to whom the proposal was made would not join in the transaction with him. As to whether he is connected with any other "tote" or "totes" in the city I am unable to say.
10856. Have you ever had made to you presents of small value such as chests of tea or jars of preserved ginger, since you have been in Lower George-street, Mr. Atwill? No. Further, I can solemnly swear that in all my thirty-five years service I have never received a single £, or even 3d. or 1d. in the shape of a present from any man or body of men.
10857. Then if it has been stated by any one that you have received such presents, that is false? Yes, sir; if any man states that I have received anything, even to the value of a lead pencil such as I hold in my hand, without paying for it, he states what is untrue.
10858. And you still insist that it would have been impossible for the police to do more than they have done to suppress the Chinese gambling evil in Lower George-street? Yes, it would be impossible under the circumstances.
10859. You cannot organise a succession of raids now and stop it? Well, at present I cannot get a raid made in the division—there is no gambling going on. From the reports I have received from my officers, and from what I have seen, since this Commission began to sit, I do not think you would find fifty people entering all these places, except a few might go in to buy pak-ah-pu tickets.
10860. What was Constable Quealy dismissed for? He was dismissed for drunkenness.
10861. Not because he was neglective of his duty among the Chinese? No; he was dismissed for repeated drunkenness, and I was very sorry for it, because he did good service in checking the larrikins down there; but there was no alternative but to dismiss him after the third time of offending.
10862. Have you ever had any conversation with Mr. Maguire about the Chinese gambling evil, and about making raids upon their houses? No; I would not think of it. But it would be hard to remember what Maguire would say to you; he is such a man for chattering and talking.
10863. You do not remember him offering you some advice, or telling you what was going on? No; no man could instruct me on that score.
10864. You do not remember him advising or recommending you to prosecute the people for loitering outside these places? No.
10865. Who is your superior officer in the district? I have no superior officer in that district.
10866. What is Mr. Read? He is the Superintendent of Police for the whole of the metropolitan district.
10867. Does he visit your district much? Yes; he visits every night.
10868. Has Mr. Read conferred with you on the subject of suppressing the Chinese gambling? Yes; he confers with the inspectors about every matter in the metropolitan district. We meet him at 10 o'clock every morning, Sunday excepted.
10869. Do you remember having a conversation with Mr. Maguire about some photographs? No.
10870. Did you ever suggest to Maguire that he should take the photographs of you and your family gratis because of the protection that the police afforded the inhabitants of Lower George-street? I never said such a thing in my life. It is utterly untrue.
10871. Do you remember having met him at the door on one occasion when he suggested that you should speculate five shillings in a photograph, and you replied that you never had your photograph taken? Well, if I was disposed to have my photograph taken I would not go there; I look upon Maguire as an amateur photographer.
10872. You never said that he should supply you and your family free of charge? No; but if I did say such a thing I would be joking him.
10873. And you never said that the butcher, baker, and coal and firewood man should also supply you free of charge for the protection you afforded them? Well, I think any one can see the absurdity of it.
10874. But it is necessary for you to deny it in so many words if it is untrue? Then it is untrue—grossly untrue.
10875. And any conversation that may have taken place on the subject must have been by way of a joke? I have never had much talk with Maguire at all. He is a person who would want to know more about police matters, than it would be right to tell, if I was to make much freedom with him.
10876. In making raids on Chinese gambling-houses have you seen a lot of money on the table? No, not a lot.
10877. How is that money disposed of when you seize it? It is taken to the station, and afterwards forfeited, and paid into the Consolidated Revenue.
10878. Have you ever heard that the police go into these places occasionally, and disperse the people there and take the money off the table to put in their own pockets? I never have; and I am sure that no policeman would attempt to do it. He would not want to be a policeman any longer afterwards if he did so.
10879. Do you know Sun Sam Kee? Yes.
10880. What sort of a man is he? He keeps a gambling-house—that is the house you were in that night.
10881. Would you be surprised to learn that he has said in the presence of a witness that the funds of a certain Chinese society were used to corrupt the police? Yes, I would be surprised; although I scarcely know the man to speak to.
10882. Have you ever heard that they do contribute to a fund for the purpose of bribing the police? No.
10883. Or for defending themselves against any prosecutions by the police? Yes, I have heard that they deducted a certain amount from the winnings to protect themselves against prosecution.
10884. You are quite sure that no overtures have ever been made to you on behalf of the Chinese gamblers to stay your hand? I am quite sure. No man has ever said to me, would you do this or that,

Inspector

for any consideration, or anything bearing upon it. I walk Lower George-street hundreds of times without a Chinaman bidding me the time of day; and I have never stood inside a Chinaman's place except when I have been armed with a warrant, or I have been signing a license. No man knows less of the Chinese personally than I do.

10885. Do you think your failure to make successful raids on certain occasions has been occasioned by the Chinese getting information of your intention beforehand? Well I do not know. I have been several times unsuccessful. I have never been without warrants. But the place I take a warrant for to-day might perhaps be changed hands to-morrow.

10886. You say you have been unsuccessful, but you do not know whether information has been given to the gambling-house keepers previously or not? Yes, I have been four or five times unsuccessful.

10888. You know that presents have been sent to the residences of officers under you, and in such cases those officers have reported the matter to you? Yes.

10889. Do you know a man named Lindeman, who kept a hotel in Lower George-street? Yes, he kept the “Ropemakers' Arms Hotel.”

10890. Did you assist him to get his license for the hotel? No, I was against him; I got him fined £30 for sly-grog selling.

10891. And you opposed his application for a license? I did.

10892. On what ground? On the ground that he had been fined for sly-grog selling while he kept a private hotel or boarding-house in Princes-street.

10893. You held it to be your strict duty to do that? It was my duty. I knew also that he was not a good man to hold a license.

10894. What kind of a house did he keep in Princes-street? Well, there is no doubt that he sold drink there the same as a publican.

10896. Then, after having been fined for sly-grog selling he applied for the license of the “Ropemakers' Arms Hotel”;—did he get it? Yes.

10897. But through no act of grace from you? No, indeed.

10898. What kind of a boarding-house did Lindeman keep;—was it respectable? Well, he used to keep runners there to wait on the boats when they came in; that is the kind of house it was.

10899. Did you have any conversation with Lindeman after he got his license for the “Ropemakers' Arms Hotel,” his (Lindeman's) wife and barmaid being present at the time? I do not think I did.

10900. Did you go into the hotel afterwards? I went into the hotel perhaps to summons him again.

10901. What was that for? They took a shop off one end of the house, and I proceeded against him for allowing his premises to become retail premises contrary to the Act. The magistrates viewed the house, and refused to renew the license until the house was reinstated in its former position.

10902. Was it so reinstated? It was remeasured, and the Bench found that the house had the accommodation required, and the license was accordingly renewed.

10903. Now, immediately after that, or at any time, did you go into Lindeman's house and tell him that he ought to give you £100 for getting his license? No sir; he would rather give £100 to bury me.

10904. You clearly and utterly deny that you ever made use of those words at any time or under any circumstances? Yes. I utterly deny it. I would not make that much freedom with Lindeman.

10905. Do you think it possible—seeing that you had strongly opposed him getting the license—that you might have said this jokingly to Mr. Lindeman? I think it is very unlikely that I would. I have never permitted him to make any freedom with me at all.

10906. As soon as he had got the renewal Mr. Lindeman sold out? Yes.

10907. Were you annoyed at his getting the best of you? No. In a case like that I am never annoyed after I have discharged my duty, which is to put in the objection.

10908. Have you brought in any receipts of purchases you have made from the Chinese? I never had but the one.

10909. That is the receipt I have examined you about? —

10910. I believe Lindeman afterwards applied for a license for an hotel called the “Labour-in-Vain Hotel”? Yes.

10911. Did you meet him in Lower George-street on one occasion, and tell him that you would take good care he did not get that license because you would oppose him? I do not think so.

10912. Would you have been referred to in connection with his application for that license? Yes. He would not get it without.

10913. In the ordinary course of your duty you must have reported upon that? Yes.

10914. And in that report would you state the facts about sly-grog selling that you have related? No. Under the circumstances, all I had to do was to report that after he had got his license from the Magistrates he had given the police no trouble. [At this stage Inspector Atwill produced receipt, dated 1st August, 1891, from Ah Toy, for the sum of £5 in payment for a book-case.]

10915. Have you had any communication from the Inspector-General of Police on the subject of the Chinese gambling-houses in Lower George-street since the appointment of this Commission? I have some letters that passed through him from the Commission.

10916. I mean when the Commission was appointed, just after the deputation waited upon the Premier, did the Inspector-General call upon you for a report? No.

10917. The Inspector-General never sought any information from you upon the subject of the expensive jewellery worn by policemen in your division, and the development of policemen into capitalists which occurred so suddenly as alleged? Never. The Inspector-General knows well how any man in the police has got the property he may own.

Inspector
Atwill.
14 Nov., 1891.

10918. Do you know anything about the existence of Chinese secret societies? No, I never heard of them.
10919. You know that the Chinese put certain notices or advertisements outside their shops in Lower George-street? Yes.
10920. Did it ever occur to you to find out the meaning of these notices? I never troubled myself about what was on their walls. Some of the Chinamen have a wonderful amount of paper on their walls.
10921. Would you be surprised to learn that these advertisements which appear outside the Chinese shops announce that fan-tan gambling is carried on there day and night? I would not. I would think it was addressed to their own countrymen.
10922. But it would be known to the Chinese interpreter employed by the police department? Yes, I suppose so.
10923. Did the interpreter never communicate with you on the subject? It never occurred to us to ask for an interpretation. It did not occur to me that those notices would be addressed to anyone but their own countrymen, because no one else could read them.
10924. You are prepared to swear that only four of those houses in Lower George-street are frequented by European gamblers? I do not think there are more. In fact I am satisfied that if there are four, there are no more where Europeans go in to gamble.
10925. Mr. Abigail.] Has it ever come under your notice that you are held responsible for the existence of the Chinese gambling-houses down there, that they have been carried on with your connivance;—have any shop-keepers made that statement to you? No shop-keepers have ever attempted to speak to me in that way.
10926. Now, in reference to these white-paper notices, do you not think it is the duty of the police to make themselves acquainted with every public notice that is put up, more especially when it is in a foreign language? I cannot say that.
10927. Suppose I took a shop in Lower George-street, and put up a notice outside, "Gambling carried on here day and night," would you not give your officers particular instructions to watch me closely? Of course we should. In that case, however, we could read it for ourselves.
10928. But does it not become even more necessary to be on the alert when a notice is worded in a foreign language? How are we to know what it is?
10929. You have a Chinese interpreter at your disposal? Well, that never occurred to me.
10930. Had you known that the notices which have appeared outside about twenty places in your district indicated that fan-tan was carried on there day and night, would you have given instructions to your men to watch those places particularly? Yes; but I should say that even with that knowledge they could not be better watched than they have been, nor could we have had much knowledge of what has been going on even if we had known the purport of the notices. If there were 100 of these notices put on the walls, I could not swear an information simply on the strength of knowing the purport of them. We know that gambling is going on in these places, but I must see it going on before I can take an oath.
10931. Would it not help you in your prosecution to be able to bring before the Bench the fact that these people publicly announced in that manner that they were carrying on gambling? I should have to catch them in the act in the first place, so I do not see how it would be of any particular assistance.
10932. Now, before the last raid you made, do you think this could have occurred, as described by a witness before the Commission:—A witness was asked a question in reference to the raid, and he said: "One officer went into a tobacconist's shop, and asked the tobacconist's wife if her husband were in," and she replied, "No; what do you want?" he said, "We are going to make a raid to-day; have you got a crowbar you can lend us?" Is that statement correct? Was that supposed to be in the daytime?
10933. Yes? No; it could not be correct; because my men did not know that the raid was going to be made until about ten minutes before we started.
10934. Is it a fact that all the arrangements made by you for the raid were known in the streets before it came off? No; I could not have caught anyone in that case.
10935. Is it a fact that on nearly every Saturday night in Lower George-street a successful raid could be made in fifteen or twenty minutes? It is untrue.
10936. In the course of your replies to the President you have said that you never received any presents of any kind during the term of your police service; do you know Mr. Dawson, a fruiterer, in Lower George-street? Yes; I know him well; he has not been very long there.
10937. What is his character, generally? Well, I see him very often in the public-houses.
10938. Has he ever been arrested? I have never known him to be in custody, but he is a tremendous drinker.
10939. Is there any unfriendliness between you and him? No; I bid him good-day when I pass by.
10940. Do you remember giving Dawson notice that you were going to lodge a complaint against Lindeman when he occupied a portion of his (Lindeman's) premises? Yes; I think I remember telling him that some place was likely to become vacant, and that he would do well to shift, as he had no convenience in the shape of a back outlet where he was; in fact his wife, an elderly person, had to bring all the slops and house refuse out the front way, and it was scarcely decent.
10941. And did he shift into the place you had indicated to him? Yes.
10942. Did Dawson offer to make a present to you on any occasion? No. I never had a thing from him in my life. On one occasion he said to me, "Mr. Atwill, you smoke, and I am going to get you a nice piece of tobacco." He afterwards left at the station a small piece of tobacco, what they call sailor's prick tobacco, wrapped round with string.
10943. Did he send you any cigars? No; and I never smoked a pipe of the tobacco. It was as black as tar.
10944. Now before he left that piece of tobacco at the police station did you ask him to obtain it from the men-o'-war? No, there is not a word of truth in it. I never asked a man to obtain a piece of tobacco for me in my life. He asked me if I would have it. It was the dirtiest looking thing of its kind I ever saw, about 3 inches long.
10945. Would it weigh a pound and a half? No, I should say not a half a pound.
- 10945½. You are quite sure there were no cigars? Yes; I never had a cigar from him in my life, or from any other man.
10946. He left the tobacco at the station? Yes, a considerable time afterwards.

Inspector
Atwill.
14 Nov., 1891.

10947. If it has been stated that since this inquiry began you have shown a considerable amount of ill-feeling towards the persons who have given evidence here, would that be correct? No, I am just the same as ever I was. As a police officer I should never exhibit any bad feeling towards anyone.

10948. Did you know a Chinaman named Gouldtown? No, I never knew him.

10949. If it has been stated that hundreds of Europeans have been visiting these Chinese gambling-places up to within the last month, would that be true? It is not true. I will tell you the position of matters. Two or three causes have contributed to lessen the gambling down there of late years. In the first place, there was the Chinese Restriction Act coming into force, and also the removal of the shipping interest to a large extent from that immediate vicinity, so that there have not been such a great number of sailors about there as there used to be. Then there was the strike, from which the people have not nearly recovered yet, I can assure you, and consequently there is not the money to spend in that way. In fact the night I made the last raid was about the busiest night we had seen there for three and a half years. Not but what I am positively satisfied that people will go there. Some people have a liking for going into these places, and it is with the greatest difficulty that we can make a raid upon them.

10951. What took place on that occasion? At the time I was giving instructions to some of my plain-clothes men. Dawson, who had just been visiting a public-house, came over, and addressing me said, "Hi, just look in there, and see a place full." I said, "Dawson, if you would go home and stop with your wife, it would be far better for you." He then said, "Oh, if you put up your b—— back like that"—and I said to him, "I will not permit you talk to me like that in the street; go into your house."

10952. You did not tell him that you would find him another billet? No; that was all I said to him. And I may also tell you that not a single soul was playing fan-tan in that house he mentioned, or ever did to my knowledge.

10953. Then you state it is incorrect that there has been so much gambling in Lower George-street for the last two years? Yes, it is quite incorrect.

10954. Have you ever been told that you ought to send your present staff of policemen into the country, and get a fresh batch to employ in the detection of the Chinese gambling? No; any man who said such a thing could not be knowing what he was talking about. A new policeman could not go up the street twice without being known by every Chinaman in the locality.

10955. What have you to say of the sanitary condition of the Chinese quarters down there? Generally it is good.

10957. If it has been said that you walked up a lane with a Chinese gambling-house keeper on one occasion, and he put a handful of sovereigns in your hand, that would be incorrect, I suppose? It would be incorrect. I think I have sworn before that during my thirty-five years' service I have never received a present of as much as a shilling from any man, or body of men, in the country.

10958. I am now asking you questions on which direct evidence has been given, and I am only putting these questions to you to enable you to deal with them;—you state that there is not a word of truth in the statement about your having received a present of sovereigns from a Chinaman? There is not a particle of truth in it. If you will be kind enough, and if you do not think I am doing anything wrong, I would ask, as bearing upon that, that a letter which I have here might be read. [Letter read as follows]:—

Dear sir,

Sydney, 2 August, 1891.

As a lover of fair play, I consider it my bounden duty to apprise you of a conversation I incidentally heard between Armstrong and Nock at the last named's shop two or three days ago. As you will see by the tenor of the following conversation between those two gentlemen, a regular "cabal" is in force to annihilate you. Armstrong said to Nock, "Buchanan and Christensen are showing the white feather. They are frightened of Atwill. Atwill has been talking to Christensen, so Christensen says, and he seems frightened to take any prominent part in the League in future." Armstrong said, "Look here, Nock, you and I must do the dirty work. It will not do to trust the others. They might come it on us. We must move heaven and earth to remove that old wretch Atwill. If not, he will be worse to us than the Chinese pest. We have all the members for West Sydney on our side, and they will do anything we ask them, so that surely the influence they will fetch to bear on Parkes will remove him." In fact, Armstrong continues, "I would sooner see Atwill removed than the Chinamen." Armstrong, who seemed to be the moving spirit, then said, "We must try and bribe some of the loafers that frequent the fan-tan shops to swear they have seen the Chinamen give Atwill and his subordinates money at different times. You know, Nock, a pound or two would go a long way with that class of persons." To the foregoing Nock generally applied in the affirmative, and one time he said, "I will stick to whatever you consider best, Jack." Pressure of time caused me to leave the shop (after I had made my purchases), although when I left the shop they were still discussing the subject. I have done my duty. Beware of these gentlemen, or they will be your downfall.

AMICUS.

Witness: That will give the Commission an idea of what I have to contend against down there in connection with this matter.

10959. Mr. Abigail.] I would draw your attention to part of the evidence, as follows:—"I was told by Mr. Alfred Law that Sub-Inspector Atwill's New Year's box from the Chinese last year amounted to £150. At least what he said was this—that the Chinese Association had subscribed a sum of that amount, but the Chinaman to whom it was entrusted was a bit clever, and stuck to £30, so that as a matter of fact what Mr. Atwill is said to have got was £120";—what have you to say to that? There is not a syllable of truth in it.

- Inspector
Atwill.
14 Nov., 1891.
10962. Are not the hawkers mostly located at the back there? Yes. There are a good number of Chinese married men who have brought their wives there, and have children at the Fort-street school. With regard to the business down there, I know Mr. Beale had those houses of his done up from floor to ceiling, and was not going to let a Chinaman in, but he found he could not get the price for them, and they were eventually let to the Chinese. Other owners had the same experience down there.
10963. Have you heard that the Chinamen pay bigger rents than the Europeans will pay? No; I think they look to pay smaller rents.
10964. Have you not heard of the Chinese paying bonuses to get into these places? Never. I think the landlords are sick and tired of looking for tenants, and that they are only too glad to let them. I do not think there is a house there would pay 2½ per cent. on the capital invested if they paid lower rents than they are paying now.
10965. Now, returning to the allegation that you suggested to Mr. Lindeman he should give you £100, you are quite sure that nothing of the kind ever took place, either jocularly or otherwise? Nothing of the kind ever took place, but if it did it would be in the merest jest.
10966. President.] As a matter of fact you were opposed to him on that occasion? Yes. I have no doubt that he thought I was his deadliest enemy, but I was merely discharging my ordinary duty in the matter.
10967. And you never said to him that you would prevent his getting the license for the "Labour in Vain Hotel"? Quite sure. He could not have got the license if I had opposed him.
10968. Mr. Quong Tart.] In your opinion, to what extent is Chinese gambling carried on at present in Lower George-street? It is on the decrease, decidedly.
10969. What is the principal game played in the houses which carry on now? Fan-tan.
10970. Which do you consider the worst—fan-tan or pak-ah-pu? Well, I look upon any kind of gambling as a great evil myself. I am hardly a judge as to which of the two is the worst; but I think there is more money spent on pak-ah-pu than on fan-tan. I should say there was £20 spent on pak-ah-pu for every £2 spent on fan-tan.
10971. Do the Chinese or Europeans patronise pak-ah-pu mostly? Both the Europeans and Chinese buy tickets.
10972. Do you know anything about the game of pak-ah-pu? I do not.
10973. Have you taken proceedings against the pak-ah-pu lotteries? No; I never interfere with them, only to put the Europeans out of those places.
10974. It is said that there are about twenty-one gambling-houses in Lower George-street;—do you know whether any of these carry on pak-ah-pu at all? No; I have not the slightest idea where there is a bank in Lower George-street.
10975. Have you seen a ticket like this [producing one]? Yes, that is one of them. The ticket having been marked its counter-part is sent to the bank, which is drawn at a certain hour of the day or night, and when the duplicate comes back you can tell whether the ticket you hold has won anything.
10976. Can you tell by this ticket where the bank is drawn? No.
10977. If you could tell by the ticket where the bank is opened, and the name of the banker, then you would be able to arrange your own plan? Yes. I may say when I took charge of the division I used to be able to see the bank, but that is different now.
10978. What do you think of the chances—the odds, in connection with this game? I have not the slightest idea.
10979. You say there are four houses where the Europeans gamble with the Chinese? I think there are about that number.
10980. In the other houses the Chinese gamble by themselves? Yes. I do not call it gambling when the Chinese play fan-tan by themselves. It appears to be their national amusement. They have nothing else to do in their spare hours apparently.
10981. But it is against the law? Yes; it is against the law.
10982. Can you give any reason why Chinese gambling is so largely allowed without any interference by the police? Well, the police contend that the amount of gambling spoken of is largely exaggerated. We say, if there is gambling carried on, it is in three or four houses only. But there can be no doubt that gambling in these places is very much on the decrease so far as the Europeans are concerned, and at present there is very little gambling going on at all.
10983. The police have made a number of raids upon the gambling-houses in the city and suburbs? Yes.
10984. You have made raids yourself in Lower George-street? Yes.
10985. Then, having the power to do so, why do not the police continue to make raids? That is just it. If the doors were left open to us we might be able to do that.
10986. If you can do it in one case could you not do it continually, and so stamp it out altogether? No, sir; you cannot do it continually.
10987. And you suggest that some additional power should be given you to deal with the evil? Yes.
10988. Has your attention ever been drawn to a house as a gambling-house, or a place where gambling is carried on? No; but I know it myself without anybody drawing my attention to it.
10989. You say you have made eleven raids altogether, and the last place I suppose was Moy Ping's? Yes.
10990. Have you ever suggested to the Inspector-General of Police what would be the best means of putting down this evil? It has been suggested, and I believe we shall hear more of it by-and-by.
10991. It has been stated that the police walk up and down the street, and take no notice of these places although they know them to be gambling-houses? Yes; that is what people say, but they do not know what is going on inside, or what difficulties the police have to contend against.
10992. Have you known of any Chinese informers down your way? Yes.
10993. What kind of characters do they bear? They are no good. You cannot believe a word they say.
10995. You are quite able to act yourself in these cases, having all the necessary information, where you go to make a raid, without the aid of an informer? Yes.
10996. Have you had any complaints from the Chinese merchants down there about the gambling? The Chinese merchants have often said they would assist me to put it down.
- 10997.

Inspector
Atwill.
14 Nov., 1891.

10997. Regarding opium-smoking—it has a peculiar smell, has it not? Yes.
10998. Is it the smell of opium that you notice coming from these places? Yes, I suppose it is. There is always the same kind of smell in passing the Chinese quarters there. I very seldom go inside myself.
10999. Have you known many Chinese informers? Yes, a good many.
11000. Can you give the name of any of them? There was one man named Wood.
11001. He is dead now? Yes. He was no good. We acted on his information once, and we never had a successful case afterwards. He would come and tell us all manner of things, and next day he would go and tell the Chinamen. I am perfectly certain that I was unsuccessful in several cases through that man. He carried the information away from us to the others.
11002. Do you know Robert Lee Kum? Yes.
11003. What do you think of him? He is no good.
11004. He belongs to the Salvation Army? Yes.
11005. Mr. Hawthorne.] Do you know Mr. Buchanan, Mr. Atwill? Yes.
11006. He is a publican, carrying on business in Lower George-street? Yes.
11007. Where you at one time on particular friendly terms with him? Yes.
11008. On more than ordinarily friendly terms I mean? Well, I do not know that exactly. Only I used to go into his place and have a drink, a favour I do not extend to anyone else in Lower George-street. Dr. Hunter and I used to go in there sometimes.
11009. Have you had a quarrel with him? No.
11010. Did the fact of his allowing the Anti-Chinese League meeting to be held there change your feelings towards him? I had no feeling—I just refrained from going there, that is all.
11011. So that up to the time of the Anti-Chinese League holding their meetings there you were in the habit of going in and out? Yes.
11012. Therefore, the cause of your withdrawing your custom from his house was that he allowed the meetings of the League to be held there? That is just it. I thought the League were slandering the police.
11013. Did you think they started with that object? No; I do not think so in the first instance.
11014. You think their object in the first instance was a good one? Yes—to have the law simplified.
11015. What did you think of the statements made to the Premier by the deputation with regard to the police? I thought it was slanderous. I felt it a good deal, being in charge of the district, that the men should be slandered in that way.
11016. You thought the statements made were generally exaggerated, and that the charges made against the police were without foundation in fact? I knew they were untrue, and that they would be found out to be untrue.
11017. Did you ever know of any man in your division, since you have been in charge there, who had received a present of any kind from any person in the district? Never, to my recollection, once.
11018. Have you ever suspected by the manner of your men that they were too easy, or that they were neglecting their duty in any way in regard to the Chinese residents of Lower George-street? No. I never expected my men to take action in regard to those houses unless they were called in to stop a quarrel, or something like that.
11019. Have you ever had reason to reprove your men for negligence? No.
11020. You never instructed them to trouble about the Chinese more than any other class of people? No; quite the reverse; I have instructed them to render the Chinese protection, rather than anything else.
11021. Mr. Abigail.] Why? Because of the conduct of the larrikins, and to protect their property.
11022. Mr. Hawthorne.] You have found the Chinese as well behaved as other classes of the community? If they were all as well-behaved as the Chinamen we would not have so much trouble in the district.
11023. They give you very much less trouble than the larrikin element, for instance? Very much; in fact there is no comparison at all.
11024. You know Mr. Dawson, who keeps a fruit-shop in Lower George-street? Yes.
11025. Are you on particularly friendly terms with him? No.
11026. How did it come about that you accepted such things as tobacco and cigars from him? I did not. There is not a word of truth in it.
11027. If he has stated that you said to him, as he was in the habit of going on board the men-o'-war vessels, he might get you a bit of tobacco and a few cigars free of duty, would that be true? No; it would be grossly untrue. I would not allow a bit of tobacco or a cigar to be in my place which had not paid duty any more than I would steal a man's money.
11028. You did not speak to him with the idea of ascertaining whether dutiable goods were being removed from the vessels or not? I never spoke to him on the matter at all. I had no object, and I never spoke to him.
11030. Did you call at his house to thank him for having left you any tobacco? No, certainly not.
11031. Then if he has said that you did call to thank him he has stated what is untrue? Yes; he slanders me. I never did such a thing.
11032. I want to clear up this point as to how it came about that Dawson was entrusted with this commission, and how the occurrence took place? Yes; but you put it in a queer way.
11033. Well, I will put it in another way: How was it that you and Dawson got discussing the question of tobacco, and what made him take the trouble to get some of this tobacco and send it to you in the station—that small parcel you referred to? It came about in this way: I saw Dawson either in the street or at his own door. Dawson said to me, "You smoke, Mr. Atwill?" and I answered, "Yes," and he then said, "I will get you a bit of good tobacco; I sometimes get a good bit on the ships." "Very well," I said, and that was all that transpired. A considerable time after that he left a small piece of tobacco at the station. It was nothing like a half-pound—black tobacco. I could not smoke stuff like that. It lay on my mantelpiece until it was as dry as chips.
11034. You did not smoke it? No; it would make a man sick to smoke it.
11035. Do you smoke cigars? Not as much as two in a week. I do not buy cigars myself to smoke.

Inspector
Atwill.
14 Nov., 1891.

11036. Mr. Abigail.] Have you had any conversation with Mr. Christensen about this Commission? No.
11037. Have you, in conversation with any shopkeepers down there, who have been examined, or were likely to be examined, warned them not to say too much against the police? No; I would not think of saying such a thing to any man.
11038. From your knowledge of the men in your division, do you think it likely that any of them, in reply to a request to be allowed to make use of a statement which he (the constable) had made, would say, "Do you think I am a b——— fool to do such a thing?" It would be a very improper thing, and if I knew that one of my men had spoken in that way to a citizen I should certainly report him to Mr. Read, the Superintendent.
11039. Mr. Hawthorne.] With regard to the transaction you had with Ah Toy, did you go down to his place yourself to ask for the receipt? Yes, I did, once.
11040. What did you say to Ah Toy? I said to him, "Mr. Ah Toy, I have repeatedly asked you for my bill, and I have come for it now."
11041. It never struck you that there was any absolute need for it until you saw the statements which were made on the occasion of the deputation to the Premier? No; I had asked for it before, but after that I was determined to have it.
11042. You considered it was necessary that you should have a receipt for anything which you purchased from the Chinese? Exactly; that was precisely my view of the matter.
11043. Did you say to Ah Toy that they might possibly make a charge against you of having received the book-case as a present? I do not think so.
11044. Did you enter into a discussion with him at all? He said he had no one to make out a bill. I told him I must have it, as I did not want any doubt thrown on the transaction as a stain on my name in after-life. I think I said that.
11045. Did you know that Ah Toy would require to go into Messrs. Felton and Nock's clerk to get the receipt made out? No; and I did not care whom he went to—to get my bill was all I wanted.
11046. Was the book-case a large one? I do not think it would be called a large one. I may say that I do not think Ah Toy would take a penny from me more than it was worth. I suppose I paid a fair price.
11047. You consider you had a fair bargain, but nothing extraordinary? Exactly.
11048. In other words, you did not think you were getting a book-case worth £8 or £10 for £5? No.
11049. You felt under no obligation to Ah Toy in connection with that transaction? No; not the slightest.
11050. It would not have prevented you acting against Mr. Ah Toy in your official capacity if he had deserved it? No; unquestionably.
11051. Have you always found Ah Toy a respectably-conducted Chinese resident? Yes; as good as gold. And I may say the same of every one of the Chinese merchants. I would not desire more gentlemanly men than they are.
11052. You say the book-case was delivered at your house after the dinner-hour? Yes.
11053. And if it has been said that it was delivered after dark, would that be true? No; it would be a falsehood.
11054. Do you remember whether you paid for the book-case, in notes or gold? I am almost sure I paid in notes, because we receive our pay in notes. I know I did not pay by cheque.
11055. You did not tell Ah Toy to show the bill to the Commission? No; indeed, I did not know he would see the Commission.
11056. You have two men in your division named Carson and Beadman;—what stamp of men have you found them? They are both high-spirited, honest men.
11057. You have never had a complaint made to you that would lead you to suspect them in any way? No; I never had the slightest cause for suspicion of any man in the station.
11058. In your intercourse with Mr. Maguire, the photographer, did he not broach the subject of your having your photograph taken? He said to me at one time that I had never honored him with a sitting the same as Mr. Anderson and other officers had done. He spoke in a business way.
11059. What did you say in reply? I do not remember; but if I said anything in reply I think it would be that I did not want to be put in his show-case for my lifetime.
11060. You did not say that? No; I do not think I said anything.
11061. Mr. Quong Tart.] Is any gambling going on in the Chinese shops on Sunday? No; not that I know of.
11062. At what hours do they usually play fan-tan? From about 8 till half-past 10 o'clock at night.
11063. Have you known the Chinamen to stand at the doors and invite people in? I have not heard of them inviting anyone in.
11064. Mr. Hawthorne.] Do you remember having accepted any present at all from a Chinaman in Queen-street? I never spoke to a Chinaman in Queen-street in my life. If any such statement has been made it is a deliberate lie. You can see what they are driving at from that anonymous letter which I placed before you.
11065. You are quite sure you never received a present from a Chinaman in Queen-street, or any other street in Sydney? A Chinaman never approached me in my life in that way. I never received as much as a threepenny bit from a Chinaman. The man who said I ever did that would hang me.
11066. Have ever you suspected Mr. Nock, Mr. Maguire, or Mr. Armstrong of being men that would be likely to do you an injury if they had the power? Well, I do not know. I might say something wrong against the men which I would regret in after-life if I answered on the spur of the moment. I may say that Messrs. Armstrong, Nock, and Maguire are men whom I have had very little to do with; in fact I have kept myself very much apart from everybody down there. I have a very troublesome division under my charge. A police officer who will do his duty is not likely to make friends for himself. If I were offered a present, either by a Chinese or a European, I should look upon it as a snare, and not as a gift.
11067. You have never had anything recorded against you since you were a police officer that could possibly be interpreted to mean that you had at any time received a bribe? No. I never had a scratch against my name either here or in the Old Country.
11068. How long is it since you succeeded Inspector Johnson in that division? I succeeded him in 1832.

- Inspector
Atwill.
14 Nov., 1891.
11069. And during the whole of that time you have never been found fault with by your senior officer for the manner in which you have discharged your duty? Never.
11070. How was it that you and Dawson got at loggerheads the other night when he approached you on the subject of Chinese gambling? His manner was offensive, and he eyed me as if I was a dog, and then he spoke as I have already stated.
11071. If it has been stated that there was a crowd in front of his shop blocking up the footway, and extending half way across the street, would that be untrue? Yes, decidedly untrue.
11072. He did not approach you with civility, and draw your attention in a respectful manner to the fact of a crowd of people being there? He came up to me in a drunken manner.
11074. Is he addicted to that kind of thing? Yes.
11075. And you say he came up to you in an offensive manner? Yes, and stamped his foot, and when I told him he had better go home he said, "Is that the way you are going to put up your b—— back?"
11076. And it was after he used that language that you threatened to lock him up? I told him to go home at once. I would be sorry to lock up a man of his age.
11077. You do not know who has given evidence before this Commission? No; I have not gone out of my way to ask who has been summoned to the Commission; and I do not really know whether you have had one Chinaman or three before you. One Chinaman did come up to me and tell me that his son had been before the Commission, and he said he was very sorry for it.
11078. Was that Mr. Law? That was Mr. Law's father who spoke to me. He said, "I am very sorry to say that my son was before the Commission, and he was wanted to tell a lie upon you."
11079. Did he state what the lie was? He said something about what his boy was wanted to say, or should have said, and I told him not to trouble about that.
11080. About Lindemann, do you remember having gone into his house when he got his license for the "Ropemakers' Arms Hotel"? I do. I went in to see if his house was furnished in accordance with the Act, and force him to put new beds in his house.
11081. So that it was an official visit? Yes; I told him if he did not put sufficient furniture in his house I would summons him, which I did.
11082. And the only other time you went to the house was in company with the Magistrates? Yes, and Mr. Macintosh said it was my fault that the house was not better furnished.
11083. You never went in again to indulge in a bit of jocularity while Lindemann's wife and barmaid were present? No, not to my recollection.
11084. If it has been said that you visited that house on one occasion, and said to Mr. Lindemann in the presence of his wife and the barmaid, that he ought to give you £100 for allowing him to get his license, is that true? No; it is grossly untrue. I have never made that much freedom with Lindemann.
11086. And you kept him at arms' length in consequence? Yes.
11087. Do you remember having gone to Dawson, and told him that Lindemann was sure to lose his license for the "Ropemakers' Arms," and that he had better shift his quarters? No; I said that a certain house which I indicated was going to become vacant, and as he had told me that the place he was in was inconvenient, because he had to bring his slops out from the front, he had better take this other place, as it would be better for his wife. This shop Dawson occupied at the time, and he had not got the use of Lindemann's yard from the back, so they had to bring the house refuse out by the front to get into the yard by way of Barker's Lane.
11088. Then you did not speak in a spirit of animosity towards Lindemann, but in the interests of sanitation? I was principally moved to speak to him in the interests of the aged woman his wife, who was put to so much inconvenience in the way I have described.
11089. Did you on one occasion say to Maguire that the Government did not pay you sufficiently, and that was the reason you would like to have your photograph taken free of cost? I never said anything of the kind. It is utterly untrue.
11090. Have you had any conversation recently with Mr. Maguire? No; and I do not think I ever will have any.
11091. Have you noticed that Mr. Maguire keeps away from you very much of late? Yes; he goes the other side of the street when he sees me.
11092. Is that because you have attempted to approach him to see what information he has with regard to the evidence given before this Commission? No; I think it is because he thinks he is under a cloud of condemnation.
11093. And you do not go so far as to salute him? No; not that I have any illwill to him. But I have heard that he has taken an unworthy part in the Anti-Chinese League altogether, and I thought and think still that the police deserve better of the citizens in Lower George-street. I can say on behalf of the eighty or ninety men there that they have always faithfully discharged their duty as police officers. I would not be the last to find fault with a man if he was not doing right. But they have done their duty well, and if it were not so I would not want to be over them.
11094. Have you heard of your men going in with the Chinese down there to partake of refreshments? I have heard of it since this League commenced.
11095. Do you think it was necessary for them, in the interests of their duty as policemen, to go in with the Chinese and have refreshments for the purpose of obtaining information? Well, our plain-clothes men have very often to be in disagreeable company. In the early days I have found fault with them myself. I have seen them take in prostitutes about the Prince of Wales Theatre and treat them, and I have seen them take thieves off the streets and drink with them; and at that time I thought it was queer—that is, when I was younger; but I have found that it is a case of "thief catch thief" with the police. They must be among the people who are known to be criminals. I have known them to run down criminals through the assistance of the Chinese. I would not make a good detective in that respect, because I am rather particular as to whom I eat and drink and sit down with. If the plain-clothes constables want to be successful men they very often have to mix in strange society.
11096. The discipline in the case of plain-clothes constables is rather more free than with the men in uniform? Yes.

11097. With regard to Sergeant Higgins—have you suspected him of doing anything wrong? No. I would as soon suspect myself. He is a thoroughly honest man. I am quite certain he would rather give a poor man a shilling to get a bed than take one from anyone.

Inspector
Atwill.

11098. You think any charge of unworthy conduct or suspicion against Sergeant Higgins would be unfounded? Certainly.

14 Nov., 1891.

11099. Mr. Quong Tart.] Could Dawson "walk a chalk-line" that night when he came up to you to complain of the crowd? He could not.

11100. Have you found the Chinese to compare favourably with the general run of the European population? So far as the sanitary condition of their places is concerned, I think they are really clean.

11101. Is there much prostitution carried on among the Chinese down there? There is none. There are a good many of them living with women, and they take good care of them.

11102. Do you find that they take many women into their places and girls of tender years, and make them smoke opium? No. I may say that our plain-clothes men have these places regularly under observation. But unless the Chinese pick up with women to take and live with themselves, there is nothing of that kind. In fact some of the lower class of women from the other end of the town do come there occasionally, but they are not there five minutes before the Chinamen come to us and ask us to take them out.

MONDAY, 16 NOVEMBER, 1891.

Present:—

THE MAYOR OF SYDNEY (MR. ALDERMAN MANNING, J.P.), PRESIDENT.

FRANCIS ABIGAIL, Esq., J.P., VICE-PRESIDENT.

QUONG TART, Esq.,

JOHN STUART HAWTHORNE, Esq.

Mr. Alexander Mackay called and examined:—

11103. Mr. Abigail.] You have been in the police force of New South Wales, Mr. Mackay? I have.

11104. And you are now retired? Yes.

Mr.
A. Mackay.

11105. How long were you in the police force? Over thirty years. I was in charge of No. 2 police station when I retired.

16 Nov., 1891.

11106. How long were you in charge of No. 2 police station? About eleven years.

11108. Have you any information as to how many Chinese, about, were located in your district? I have no idea. We took the number of them before I left, I think, but I forget what it was.

11109. Do you know how many premises they occupy? There are a large number now. About two years ago they were located principally in Goulburn-street, but from there they spread to Campbell-street.

11110. Would that be a kind of overflow from Goulburn-street? I do not know, but I fancy they came from the other end.

11111. However you know they increased very considerably? Yes, very much.

11112. Since about two years ago? Yes. They came down to Campbell-street and got possession of houses there. Latterly they have begun to locate themselves in Wexford-street also, in a terrace of houses belonging to the late Mr. Ben. James. In fact they hold possession of nearly all of one side of that street; from the corner of Elizabeth-street and Wexford-street, on the left-hand side going towards Goulburn-street.

11113. Now, what is the nature of their habits—do they carry on business? I think they do. A number of them are engaged selling vegetables during the day, for instance, and in the evening they play fan-tan and amuse themselves in their own way.

11114. Do you know how many fan-tan places there are in Wexford-street? When I left I think there were two there; what we should call bad ones, that would not be put down, although we used very often to go in and talk to them and threaten them, but they would take no notice.

11115. What class of people visited these places to gamble? The Chinamen. Some larrikins occasionally go in to buy pak-ah-pu tickets.

11116. They are not recognised as places of general resort for fan-tan playing by Europeans? Oh, no.

11117. What would you say of the moral state of the Chinese quarters in that street;—are there many women among them? I do not think so. Three or four years ago the larrikins and common class of girls used to go to the Chinese houses to smoke, and all that kind of thing; and some of them would smoke opium. Some of the Chinese are married to European women, and have set up little establishments of their own, and these women who live with the more respectable class of Chinese, keep the places in very good order, that is clean and tidy.

11118. Did you regard that street as one of the worst in your district? The larrikins and prostitutes used to frequent it very much.

11119. Were disturbances common in that street? There were rows occasionally in connection with the women and girls. The men would come down to see the girls.

11120. Do the Chinese ever create disturbances there? Sometimes they used to quarrel among themselves, though not very often; disputes used to arise over the fan-tan playing.

11121. How many raids were made on these gambling places during the time you were in charge of No. 2 station? There were five raids made on Chinese places.

11122. In how many years? I am only speaking of the time I was there myself. There were five raids on the Chinese and one European. I dare say some members of the Commission may remember it. We made a raid on premises at the back of the "Dog and Duck Hotel," and apprehended thirty-one Europeans there.

11123. There were no Chinese connected with that establishment? No, they were all Europeans there. Since I am speaking of raids, I may mention three houses, bad ones, in Campbell-street, that we visited. One day I got three warrants out for the three houses at the same time, and I took my men down to the Haymarket, and having made very complete arrangements, I made a successful raid upon the three places simultaneously, and cleared all of them out, taking the prisoners to No. 2 station where they were locked up.

- Mr. A. Mackay.
16 Nov., 1891.
11124. Did you secure convictions against them? Yes.
11125. Were there any Europeans in these places? No; there was not a European in any of the three houses.
11126. From your experience, the Chinese gambling-houses are not largely frequented by Europeans? When I left the police force there was one house in Goulburn-street which the Europeans used to frequent, but they used to keep the doors locked, and not a policeman or anyone else could get in to see what was going on, so carefully was it guarded. We got inside several times, but could not make a successful raid.
11127. You never made a successful raid to find Europeans present? No. On the occasion we made the raid upon these three houses I think there were two or three American negroes among the Chinese.
11128. Can you recollect how much money was on the table on the occasion of the successful raid you have mentioned? A mere trifle—perhaps 30s. in the three houses. But I am not certain of the amount now.
11129. The Chinese do not play for any high stakes? No; they generally play for 6d. or 1s. They make a great noise sometimes when they are playing amongst themselves, but what they say we do not know.
11130. Is it your opinion that there is not much immorality among the Chinese down there? Well, apart from the gambling, I do not think there is anything wrong with them at all.
11131. Apart from that they have not given the police much trouble? No; very little trouble indeed.
11132. Generally speaking, are their premises kept in a cleanly manner, or are they dirty? I cannot say they are dirty; some of the Chinese there are married to European girls, and they keep their premises pretty tidy.
11133. Is there much overcrowding of the premises in the Chinese quarters? There is one place in Robinson's-lane—which used to be Mr. Robinson's coach factory—where they are packed as thick as possible, but I do not think they gamble in there much.
11134. Have you ever had complaints made to you about the Chinese molesting women in any way? I do not remember hearing of any complaints.
11135. Have you heard of any assignation-houses being kept by the Chinese in that quarter? No; I do not think I have heard of that.
11136. Have you ever heard of any young women or girls being decoyed there for the purposes of prostitution? No. Of course I am speaking now of two or three years ago. European girls used to go there, but whether they were decoyed, or went of their own accord, I do not know. I should imagine they went of their own accord. They were young prostitutes.
11137. Was any complaint ever made to you about your men receiving bribes to allow these gambling-houses to be carried on without police interference? I never heard of such a thing as bribery in connection with the police of this city until this Commission was appointed.
11138. Did you read the account in the newspapers of the deputation that waited on the Colonial Secretary with regard to Chinese gambling before this Commission was appointed? Yes.
11139. You saw that the police were charged with getting diamond rings and gold watches, and so forth? Yes; and I was amazed at it. Of course I am speaking for myself; I cannot say what my men were doing.
11140. Mr. Hawthorne.] Did you ever hear anything in regard to any of the men in your division receiving presents of any kind? No; never.
11141. Mr. Abigail.] You have been a long time in the police, and have been in charge of No. 2 Station, which is a very important division? Yes; it is a very troublesome division.
11142. And you have a fairly good knowledge of the men attached to that station? Yes; I think I know them all.
11143. Well, during the time you were in charge of that station did you ever have to dismiss any of your men, or recommend them for dismissal? Do you mean for bribery, or what?
11144. I am coming to that presently. Have you had any dismissals? Lots of them were discharged.
11145. Now, among those cases, were any of the men discharged for receiving presents of any kind from the residents of the district? No; I never heard of such a thing.
11147. Were they principally dismissed for drunkenness? No. They were as sober a lot of men as ever I met with.
11149. About how many men are there attached to No. 2 Station? There were about ninety, all told, when I left.
11150. Speaking of the ninety men, generally, what was your opinion as to their honesty and integrity? I had the highest opinion possible of them as a body of men. Of course we might get a black sheep occasionally.
11151. Did you ever hear of any of your men becoming possessed of household property whilst in the force? I daresay they have; men who have been in the force for a considerable time. But as far as the men in that division are concerned, I can say that a more trustworthy lot of men I have never met.
11152. Were you in the habit of visiting these Chinese places yourself? I used to go round occasionally and threaten them, perhaps, but it had very little effect.
11153. Do you remember the time that the Commission paid a visit to Goulburn-street? I heard of your being there.
11154. Did you go round, or send your men round the day or two days before to warn the Chinamen that the Commission were going round? Certainly not. I was round there the night you would have been there, or the night before, but I certainly never warned a soul of it. I have heard that a well-known criminal said that I did so, but it was a lie.
11155. There is no truth in the statement that you went round the Chinese gambling-houses and warned them them not to play that night, as the Commission was coming round? Never such a thing came out of my lips. I was round to caution them, and I have been doing that all along.

11156. Mr. Hawthorne.] In cautioning the gamblers you made no reference to the proposed visit of the Commission? Not at all. I did not know that you were coming.

11157. You have a good knowledge of the law under which you act with regard to these people? Yes.

11158. Kindly state to the Commission the mode of procedure when you make a raid, and tell us how it is you do not make raids more often, when you know that this gambling is carried on? The mode of procedure is this: When we are certain that gambling is carried on in a particular house we go to the police court for a warrant to make a raid upon that house and against the persons we find there.

11159. Have you to communicate the names of the individual gamblers in writing? Only the principals. If we know the keeper of the house we give the name. Having got the warrant, the next step is to make arrangements for the raid, most probably in the evening of the same day. Sometimes warrants are got out, and we are not able to execute them. I think I left one or two at the station that we had not been able to execute. The gamblers sometimes get knowledge of our intentions. In order to make a successful raid we have to catch them in the act of playing. We must have a man inside to see them play before we can execute the warrant.

11160. Have you experienced any difficulty in getting into these places? I did not down there, except in the case of that house I have mentioned in Goulburn-street, where the Europeans used to go. They kept it barred and locked, and we tried it time after time, but could not manage to effect our purpose.

11161. In the other cases you were able to walk in? Yes. We had a man in plain-clothes who would be affecting to look on carelessly, and at a given signal from him we would go in, and keep inside all that were present and arrest them, and take them to the lock-up.

11162. You then proceed against the banker and croupier, and the door-keeper, if you know him? Yes, and all the others—the visitors, as it were.

11163. You have to proceed against them by summons afterwards? Yes; but every one found in the house is taken before the magistrate the following morning.

11164. The most difficulty you have to contend against is—? The difficulty of securing convictions in these cases.

11165. In what way particularly? Well, we have always thought, and I think so still, that if the law were amended in that respect a great deal of this Chinese gambling could be put down.

11166. In what way would you recommend that the law should be amended? I do not know that I could recommend. But I will tell you what the police officers did two years ago. The whole of the inspectors and sub-inspectors of Sydney met together to consult on the subject. We had the Acts of Victoria and New Zealand, dealing with the subject, before us, and we selected several of the sections from each of these Acts, which appeared to us to be applicable to the condition of the things here, and these were forwarded to the Government with the view of having our law amended in such a way as we thought would enable us to secure convictions much easier. It would have removed the difficulties about getting in, and all that sort of thing, concerning which you have questioned me.

11167. Was that sent to the Inspector-General? Yes.

11168. You do not know what became of it afterwards? No.

11170. If you had known that the white paper notices stuck up outside these places announced that fan-tan gambling was carried on there day and night, would you have given greater attention to them? I cannot say that. I thought I was giving them all the attention I could. I might pass up and down, and perhaps take no notice of these papers. I know they used to hang out notices in red Chinese lettering, on the shutters.

11171. Nobody, I suppose, according to law, would be entitled to put up notices of that description—at least not without exciting police suspicion and prosecution? I do not think it would be a ground for prosecution, even if the purport of the notice were known. I have never tried it.

11172. Mr. Hawthorne.] You never called in the aid of a Chinese interpreter to ascertain the meaning of those notices? No.

11173. Mr. Abigail.] Do you think that these people, keeping houses as they do, should be brought under the provisions of the Common Lodging House Act? Yes, I have no doubt they should.

11174. They should be made to provide the same air space, and maintain them in a state of cleanliness as the European houses? That is my opinion.

11175. Mr. Hawthorne.] How many years were you in the police force altogether, Mr. Mackay? Over thirty years.

11176. During the whole of that time has there been any report against your character in any way whatever? I have never heard of a thing having been urged against me, except what was said in Parliament at one time about my being hard upon the publicans.

11177. That was in connection with applications for publicans' licenses? Yes.

11178. There has never been any charge against you in any way since you entered the police force? I never heard of such a thing.

11179. You have never had it charged against you that you accepted a bribe from any person, or a present that was likely to have had the effect of making you more lenient towards the people with whom you had to deal, than was consistent with your duty? Never. I dare say that some people in my district might have thought I was too strict, that is all.

11180. You read the remarks of those who addressed the Premier on that deputation, and it struck you that there was no truth in the statements made with regard to the police? I thought it was a gross falsehood, from the knowledge I had of the police officers in Lower George-street.

11181. Have you as many Chinese living in your portion of the police district of Sydney as Inspector Atwill has in his? Well, I cannot say what number he has, but I think there are more down this way now.

11182. Did you instruct your men to make daily visits to the Chinese houses? Well, perhaps not daily, but I gave them general instructions to visit the Chinese quarters, and they did so.

11183. On their return are the men supposed to furnish written reports of anything that strikes them on their visits to these places? No, if they see anything important, they tell me, and I take action upon that with regard to making raids, or anything like that.

Mr.
A. Mackay.
16 Nov., 1891.

Mr.
A. Mackay.
16 Nov., 1891.

11184. If they saw a great display of immorality on the part of the Chinese would they bring that under your notice? Yes, most decidedly.

11185. And also if they saw gambling carried on systematically by the Chinese there they would draw your attention to it? Certainly, they have done so, and I have taken action accordingly.

11186. If a statement has been made to the Commission that either you or any of your officers gave information to the Chinese gamblers, and warned them to be careful, as the Chinese Commission was coming down on the following Saturday night, would that be true? It is quite untrue so far as I know. Of course I could not know what would be going on among my men.

11187. You could have no object in giving this information to the Chinese? I could have no object in frustrating the objects of the Commission—how could I?

11188. Your object would be rather to assist than retard the Commission? Certainly.

11190. But how could information on that particular point leak out;—do you think it was on the part of the officials connected with this Commission? No.

11191. Do you mean, when you speak of “interpreters,” that you mean it was through the interpreter connected with this Commission? Well, there would be no difficulty in the interpreters informing their countrymen down about Goulburn-street, and Wexford-street, and Campbell-street, if they wished to do so.

11192. We have only one paid interpreter here? The fact of his being paid does not make much difference in my opinion. But, as I have said, I heard of the Chinese witnesses being examined here. The witnesses themselves told some members of the police force the following night the questions that were put to them—that is the leading questions, regarding the alleged bribery, and so on.

11193. In reply to Mr. Abigail you stated that a well-known criminal had said that you gave information to the Chinese with regard to the proposed visit of the Commission to their quarters;—to whom did you refer? I alluded then to what my men had told me that a man had sung out that “old Mackay was round telling the Chinese that the Commission was coming.”

11194. Do you know his name? No, but I can get a witness that will tell you his name, and what he said about me, that is supposed to have given rise to this statement.

11195. This man has been convicted by you, has he? No; but I was told he was convicted.

11196. He is a man of unreliable character? I have been informed so, but do not know of my own knowledge that he was ever convicted. He lives in Engine-street, I believe.

11197. The man we refer to stated that he was an iron turner, and lived in Allen-street, Ultimo, and that his name was Rigby? Perhaps he is the same man—I do not know. As I have said, Detective West will tell you all about the man I refer to. On the occasion when the Commission were going round to Goulburn-street, some of my men were about in plain clothes, and one of them came and told me a couple of hours afterwards that so-and-so, a well-known criminal, who was known to Detective West, had been heard to sing out at the corner of the street, that “old Mackay was round warning the Chinese that the Commission was coming.”

11198. Where warrants have been taken out for the purpose of making raids on these gambling-houses have you ever suspected any of your men of giving information to the Chinese in the matter? No.

11199. Did you employ men of long service in the force to do duty in the Chinese quarters? Yes; the best and most experienced constables that I had.

11200. And you never found any of your men giving information that would defeat prosecutions in these cases? Never.

11201. You found them, on the contrary, always willing and anxious to assist you? Yes, in every particular.

11202. In short, you never found out anything in connection with your men that would lead you to believe that they were accepting presents so as to perform their duty in a dishonest manner, or to neglect their duty in any way? No, certainly not. I do not believe that anything of the kind ever took place in my division.

11203. Mr. Quong Tart.] With regard to Wexford-street, Mr. Mackay, you say that the gambling is confined to the Chinese there—that there are no houses frequented by Europeans? No; as I have said I do not remember any but the one house I have mentioned where Europeans were in the habit of going.

11204. Was that the place where a row occurred, and an iron bar was used? Yes; we tried to get at that and could not.

11206. I gather from what you say that so long as they (that is, the Chinese) play among themselves you do not take so much notice of them? Well, I do not think it is such a very great crime, so long as they do not have any Europeans or young girls among them.

11207. Wherever you have found any Europeans in these places, or young girls or children there, you have taken action at once to put a stop to it? Yes; the fact is, that we used to take them by the neck and turn them out—that is, the young men of the larrikin class who are in the habit of visiting these places.

11208. Do you know how many of these places carry on the pak-ah-pu business? In the houses in Goulburn-street they sell pak-ah-pu tickets for the places that carry on in Lower George-street, or anywhere else. They also sell tickets in Campbell-street; but the lotteries may be drawn anywhere. There may be some there now.

11209. How long is it since you retired? A couple of months.

11210. In your time did you find any pak-ah-pu lotteries in Campbell-street? There was one there, but they stopped it. About a month before the Commission came down there was one upstairs in one of the houses. We visited it several times, and it was done away with. The fixtures were there, but there was no play going on.

11211. You can tell by the appearance of the place where pak-ah-pu has been carried on? Yes; I know the the game, I spent a month studying it, so as to be able to explain it to the magistrates and Judges. Detective Keatinge and I were weeks studying the game in connection with the first case we took before the magistrate.

11212. Where was the house—in Goulburn-street? Yes; I think it was in Goulburn-street. But we tried one case in particular;—it was the first case tried in Sydney, before the time I am speaking of.

11213. Did you secure a conviction? No. The magistrate said it was an offence unknown to our law. We did not explain it, and could not make the magistrate understand it, and the case was dismissed.

11214. How long is that ago? It is about four or five years ago; however, I succeeded after that, and got a conviction at the Quarter Sessions.

11215. How were they punished—by fine? Yes; they were fined heavily. I really forget the amount of the fine.

11216. Do you remember the names of the defendants? No.

11218. Do you know how much they can win at the game? I heard of one man winning £75 one night, but I do not know whether it is true or not.

11220. Do you think it is worse than fan-tan? Yes; because the Europeans, young and old, go in for it.

11222. You say in one case you got a conviction at the Quarter Sessions; give us the particulars of the case? As we had not succeeded in the first case, we—that is Detective Keatinge and I—made a study of the game. We went upstairs, and saw the whole process. One man sings out, and another marks off the tickets, and puts them into a bowl. We saw a lottery drawn, and brought them to court; they were then committed for trial, and at the Quarter Sessions were convicted, and heavily fined.

11223. Suppose you knew that lotteries were carried on now could you not punish them? We cannot get a conviction against them unless we see them draw the lottery, and that is the difficulty.

11224. Could you not get at the ticket-seller? Not at present. The law does not make the ticket-seller amenable.

11225. If the law were amended so as to enable you to proceed against the ticket-seller would that prove effectual in stopping the operations of these banks? It would be a great assistance; doubtless the ticket-seller ought to be amenable as well, but the present law does not affect him; if it did there would not be so much pak-ah-pu as there is.

11226. You have said that no obstacles were put in your way in going into these Chinese houses in your district? That is correct, where only the Chinese assemble among themselves.

11227. If anyone has stated that the police, knowing of the existence of these gambling-houses, have purposely shut their eyes to the fact, is that a fact? No. Of course I can only speak for myself, and I know I have taken notice of them, and prosecuted them.

11228. In Campbell-street are there not three places? I know of one or two places there—perhaps there are three.

11229. Do you know the names of those places? I really cannot tell you; I got warrants out for one or two houses there—No. 65 I think; but I did not take much notice at the time; these coming in the way of ordinary duty with us.

11230. Have you ever had any suspicion that any of your officers in that district were bribed by the Chinese? No, I never heard of such a thing.

11231. In your time did you ever dismiss any of your constables for any offence? Several ordinary constables have been dismissed perhaps, but not for anything of that kind as I have already explained.

11232. You say you had a meeting of inspectors and sub-inspectors to consider the Chinese gambling question;—how long ago was that? Well, it was not the Chinese gambling altogether that we met to consider. It was the Betting-houses Suppression Act we met to study, but we took in the Chinese gambling as well, and selected certain portions of the Acts we had before us that seemed to meet the case of Chinese gambling.

11233. At what hours of the day is gambling mostly carried on in these places? In the evening I think. So far as my knowledge extends most of these Chinese are engaged selling vegetables in the day, and they amuse themselves gambling in the evening after dark. They gamble more on Saturday than any other day in the week.

11234. Have you ever received information from Chinese informers? Yes; but we could not act on their information without finding out for ourselves whether there was anything in it, which I used to set my men to do, and they would generally find that there was not much in it.

11235. You found that the informers were worse than those they informed upon? Yes, many times worse. Some of those men who act as informers come down from the country, and I may say that they generally want to get a portion of the fine—in fact that is what they appear to do it for.

11236. You do not think they act from a desire to benefit the community, but in their own interests? Yes; for their own benefit. I may say there was one man that gave me information shortly before I left. I sent Detective West with him, and they succeeded in getting a conviction against the banker and croupier, and so on. That informer, I believe, was here. I saw him the morning he came to you.

11237. Have you ever found any respectable Chinese engaged in gambling? No; they are against it.

11239. Have you found that there is much opium-smoking down there? No, not a great deal.

[The witness withdrew.]

Mr.
A. Mackay.
16 Nov., 1891.

Mr.

Mr. Alfred Potter called and examined:—

- Sub-inspector 11240. President.] You are an inspector of police? A sub-inspector.
 Potter. 11241. What division are you engaged in? At present I am in charge of No. 1 division.
 16 Nov., 1891. 11242. How long have you been located there? Since March, 1890—about eighteen months.
 11243. What locality does that division embrace? From north to south, between Margaret and Liverpool Streets; from east to west, between College-street and Glebe Island.
 11244. That does not include the Chinese location in Goulburn and Wexford Streets? No.
 11245. Where were you located before? From 1885 to 1890, when I came here I was in charge of what is called the Redfern division.
 11246. Does that embrace Waterloo? Yes; it embraces Redfern, Waterloo, Alexandria, and Darlington.
 11247. Mr. Hawthorne.] It does not extend to Botany? No.
 11248. President.] The boundaries you have mentioned include all the crowded portion of Waterloo and the Chinese gardens there? Yes.
 11249. Mr. Hawthorne.] During your residence in the Redfern division, were you required to make many raids in connection with Chinese gambling? No, I never made a raid there.
 11250. Is gambling not carried on much in the Redfern district amongst the gardeners? Not amongst the gardeners. I may explain that the Chinese locality in that direction is generally spoken of as Waterloo, but it is in reality in the borough of Alexandria, which abuts on the Botany Road.
 11251. That is the dividing line between Waterloo and Alexandria? Yes.
 11252. Where are the Chinese most numerously congregated? That would be in what we used to call Retreat-street, in the borough of Alexandria, just before you come to the Waterloo stopping place, where the motors take in water before starting for Botany—near the Public School.
 11253. Are there not a good many on the left-hand side there? No, not in Waterloo.
 11254. Not as many as in Alexandria? No. There are a number of Chinese gardens in the direction of Shea's Creek, and the road leading to St. Peters.
 11255. What do the Chinese labourers generally do after they have finished the work of the day? Those who do not remain in their houses go down to the gambling-houses in Retreat-street.
 11256. Are there regularly organised gambling-houses in Retreat-street? Yes; at the time I left there were a number of places which I could recognise as nothing but gambling-houses.
 11257. Have they been in existence since you left? Well, I have not been there since I left the district.
 11258. Who is now in charge of your old division? Sub-inspector Lawless.
 11259. During the time you had command of the district how did you find the Chinese conduct themselves from a sanitary standpoint? From a sanitary standpoint the houses in Retreat-street were capable of great improvement. The houses were very light structures, built of iron and slabs.
 11260. Did you find that they had separate places for stowing their vegetables, or did they stow them in their sleeping compartments? I think I shall have to explain. Retreat-street is a blind street, off Botany Road; at the end of it a fence and gateway. It had originally been the 'Bus Company's stables, and the houses called gambling-houses are on both sides of the small street. On the inside of the gate there are a number of small tenements occupied by Chinese hawkers, furniture makers, and one or two rag-pickers, and in two or three of these places they certainly did stow the vegetables. The great evil was that they were kept in baskets in these small close rooms. I never saw men sleeping on the vegetables; they would generally be placed in one end of the room.
 11261. And at the other end of the room would be the sleeping-berths, I suppose? Yes.
 11262. How many men would sleep in one room? In these small places occupied by hawkers not more than two.
 11263. Did you find women frequent these places at all? Well, when I first went there I found I had to adopt a certain course. When I went there in 1885 I found in Retreat-street particularly that a great number of the houses were occupied by Europeans of indifferent character—principally low women, who lived there and only attracted others of a like or perhaps worse class. I accordingly made certain arrangements for dealing with the state of things I found there, in which I was ably seconded by my sergeants and constables, and after a time we succeeded in routing out all these characters by bringing them up under the Vagrant Act. In fact only one woman remained who lived in the top house of the street, and she eventually got into serious trouble herself. From that time until I left, Retreat-street, together with the place where the hawkers lived inside the gate, was what you might call a Chinese quarter, pure and simple.
 11264. You confined that particular part of the district, which had previously been inhabited by a mixed population, to the Chinese altogether? Yes. At times we would have women of low character slipping into these places, but most of the Chinese were opposed to their coming near the place, and they would let us know.
 11265. You found amongst the Chinese residents there men who were disposed to conduct themselves in a respectable manner? Yes.
 11266. And who aided rather than interfered with the police in their duty? Yes. In the matters of that kind—such as low women coming there—they would let us know, and we would warn the women or arrest them.
 11267. You found that although they engaged in gambling they had some respect for morality? Yes, I think so. They were certainly opposed to these women coming near the place.
 11268. From a sanitary point of view what was your experience of these places? Well, the houses there are built on poor sandy soil, with pit-closets, and the places were not always in a good sanitary condition, but I drew the attention of the local inspector of nuisances to it, and he would go round once or twice a week and remonstrate with any of the residents who seemed to be remiss in the matter of keeping their places clean. As a result we managed to get that quarter tolerably clean.
 11269. Do you remember hearing of any great losses being sustained by those who indulged in the practice of gambling in these places? No. In the fan-tan rooms the stakes are mostly coppers—you very seldom see silver.

11271. While you were resident in the Redfern district did you find that the European population visited the gambling-dens very much? No; I only found one European there, and he was put out very promptly.

11272. But had you occasion to turn out any large number of Europeans from these places? No.

11273. So that the state of things prevailing in Lower George-street as regards Europeans visiting the Chinese gambling-dens did not exist in the Redfern district during your time? No; we had our larrikins there, of course, but they do not affect the Chinese quarter.

11274. What arrangements were those you made when you first went to take charge of the Redfern district, and which you say had the effect of separating the European from the Chinese population;—was it a system you laid down to apply more particularly to the Chinese? Yes, I may say at once I thought it was better to recognise the evil, and keep it within bounds—that is, to keep the Chinese in one place, where I could have them under command as it were, rather than cause them to spread over the district by subjecting them to continual prosecution, in which case it appeared to me that the evil might be greater, inasmuch as it would be less under my control. Of course I took the responsibility of this arrangement. I went round and saw that they left off at 10 o'clock every night, and at 11 o'clock on Saturday night; and all the Chinese were told to go home, which they did, either to their gardens or got on to the trams, and went elsewhere. And I took care to see that on Sundays there was no gambling about the place.

11276. Did it not strike you that if the gambling was an evil after 10 o'clock at night it was also an evil earlier in the evening? As I have said, the gambling was only amongst themselves—there were no Europeans mixed up with it. We took care of that. Sometimes I have thought the evil is magnified as regards gambling among the Chinese. It seems to me that with them it is a national amusement. Where Europeans take to one pursuit or another in which they have an interest the Chinese take naturally to fan-tan playing to while away the time.

11277. Have you found the Chinese a sober race of people? Yes; particularly so.

11278. And this fan-tan playing is the only kind of amusement they find for the employment of their spare time? Yes.

11280. You never looked upon it as a great evil, or, at any rate, that it was likely to do much harm to anyone but the Chinese themselves, and that not to any great extent? We recognised, of course, that it was a breach of the law; but, at the same time, as it was confined to the Chinese themselves, I did not think it expedient to take the matter in hand further than to keep the houses under control in the way I have stated.

11281. Upon the whole, have you found the Chinese residents to compare favourably with the European portion of the population which may be said to move in the same stratum of society? Well, they were never disorderly, or caused any trouble to the Europeans down there.

11283. Was the woman living with him? She had been living with him. It was just about the time I went there.

11284. Is there much opium-smoking going on in that district? There is, or was, a certain amount, but not very much. It is principally amongst the older Chinese. They seem to be seasoned to it.

11285. The younger ones go in for tobacco? Yes—Chinese tobacco.

11286. Did you find the Chinese guilty of such offences as assaults upon children or anything of that kind? Not generally speaking. There was one case in which a Chinese was convicted of indecent assault, and in which two European women were convicted of aiding and abetting. Also, two young girls, under the age of 16, were said to have been assaulted by a Chinaman there, but the medical testimony did not bear out the charge. We brought up several girls under the Industrial Schools Act, and the nature of the evidence in these cases was that they had been seen going to the Chinamen's houses; but although under the age of 16, they were older in other respects—girls of bad habits.

11287. They were presumably trading as prostitutes with the Chinese? It is hard to say, but I would draw that inference.

11288. Looking to the extent of Chinese gambling in the city and suburbs of Sydney, has it ever occurred to you that stringent legislation is necessary to deal with the question of Chinese gambling? Well, that is a difficult question to answer after the expression of opinion which I have given that gambling appears to be a national amusement among the lower order of Chinese.

11292. You think that instead of legislating for the Chinese population in this respect specifically, there is really more need for legislation to deal with the European portion of the population in respect of the gambling

- gambling evil generally? I cannot say that exactly, although I would be very glad to see all forms of gambling blotted out.
11293. Mr. Abigail.] Do you know that in Lower George-street it is said that hundreds of Europeans visit the gambling-houses there, and that in many cases working men lose the whole of their week's wages in those places? I believe that is the case from what I knew of the place previous to 1885. I know that the gambling-shops there used to be patronised largely by wharf-labourers, coal-lumpers, and sailors, and I have no doubt there was a great deal of truth in the remarks I have heard there about the wives of these men going short in consequence.
11294. That imparts a more serious feature to the Chinese gambling, does it not? Certainly, speaking of that particular locality. But Mr. Hawthorne, I understood, was confining me to my experience of the district of which I have been speaking more particularly.
11295. Your impression is that the law ought to be put in force against gambling generally? I would like to see it applied to all forms of gambling.
11298. Mr. Abigail.] Your chief object I understand was to keep European women from frequenting the Chinese quarters there for immoral purposes? Yes; that was the primary object. It must not be understood, that as a police officer I took it upon myself in any sense to frame regulations of my own; I simply introduced a system of working which appeared to me to be expedient under the particular circumstances.
11299. How long have you been in the police altogether? Eighteen years.
11300. Have you been all that time in the city of Sydney? Yes; I was from 1873 to 1883 at the central station.
11301. How long have you held your present position? I was appointed a sub-inspector in 1884.
11302. You have, I suppose, had a considerable amount to do with the police constables in different parts of the city? Yes.
11303. Speaking generally, what class of men have you found them—reliable or unreliable; honest or dishonest? I should think that they are generally reliable men. If I find them otherwise it is my duty to report them, and get them removed as soon as possible.
11304. Did you read the account of the deputation that waited upon the Premier before this Commission was appointed, at which statements were made about bribery and corruption of the police, and so forth? I did.
11305. Did it ever occur to you before you read those statements that the constables were being bribed by the Chinese gambling-house keepers to let them alone? No. I saw something—a paragraph in one of the papers—dealing with the subject, in which something was said about a “police sustentation fund.” It struck me that this was an error—that possibly the Chinese themselves formed a fund to meet possible expenses of police prosecutions against them.
11306. You thought any fund of that kind would be a defence fund to pay the expenses of the prosecutions? That is what I thought.
11307. It was put forward that 2d. out of every shilling of the winnings of these gambling-houses was kept back for the maintenance of a fund to bribe the police? Yes; I saw that in another paper.
11308. And you never heard of that until it appeared in the newspapers? No.
11309. Has it ever come under your notice, by complaint or otherwise, that the police have neglected their duties in the different districts you have been connected with? No; I do not remember any complaint of that kind being received when I was at No. 4 station assisting Mr. Atwill.
11310. How long were you at No. 4 station? Two years.
11311. While you were there did it ever come under your notice that constables evinced a particular desire to get on the Lower George-street beat? No. On the 1st of the month the officer in charge is supposed to make his arrangements for the disposal of the men on the different beats, and they are selected according to the nature and necessities of the different beats, some of which will require greater experience than others.
11313. You never heard in connection with the police on that beat that they received presents in money or kind from the Chinese gambling-house proprietors to induce them to let them alone? Never.
11314. Were you influenced in your duty while you were down there by your knowledge of the ownership of any of those places? No. I must confess that after a time I got to know who the houses belonged to, but I can say that such knowledge did not influence me in my duty in any way. I never prosecuted any of them down there, but very often on a Saturday night I would have to take a sergeant or a senior-constable with me and go round these places, and if we saw any young men or boys in them we would turn them out on the streets.
11315. When you visited these places did you find large numbers of Europeans inside? Yes; on Saturday nights I have seen a variety of people there, from labouring men to what I would consider clerks or shopmen.
11316. Would they play fan-tan or pak-ah-pu? Both.
11317. When you went into these places and saw them playing fan-tan, did you ever see much money on the table? No, mostly coppers; there might occasionally be some shillings.
11318. Would you be surprised to hear that hundreds of pounds have been won in a night in these places? I cannot say I should be surprised; as I have said before, the counters they play with sometimes may carry heavy stakes.

Sub-Inspector
Potter.
16 Nov., 1891.

11319. Were you ever present on any occasion when the constables made a scramble for the money on the table? Yes; on one or two occasions we broke up a crowd and took the money away.
11320. What became of the money afterwards? I presume it is in the office yet.
11321. Was that a legal proceeding? Well, strictly speaking, I do not think it would be so considered.
11322. When you take other people's money in that way it should be followed by a prosecution? We left it that way, for them to come and claim it if they felt disposed, but they never did.
11323. You did that several times? Once it was done to my knowledge. We went in there, and, legal or not, we cleared them out and swept the table.
11324. If it has been said that the constables put the money into their own pockets and kept it;—would that be true? I cannot say, but I should not think so.
11325. While you were on duty down there did you ever receive a present of any kind from a Chinese merchant or anyone else? No.
11326. No tea, tobacco, or cigars, or anything of that kind? I remember one occasion—I was living in Lower Fort-street at the time—when I came home my wife told me that someone had brought round a chest of tea—I think it was about the time of the Chinese New Year—and she refused to take it in; and once, when I was at Redfern, a chest of tea was brought to my house and it was refused. In that case I was sorry that there was not someone with the man who could have spoken English, because I believe it was offered with the best of motives. It was just after a number of Chinese had been burnt out there, and Mr. Quong Tart was authorised by the Government to disburse a sum of money amongst them. As I say, I think the offer on that occasion was made with the best of motives, and I would have been glad to have tempered my refusal with an explanation.
11327. From your experience of Lower George-street did it ever occur to you that the Chinese, associated together as they are down there in large numbers and carrying on a system of gambling, had a demoralising effect upon the district generally? Well, I should say it must have a demoralising effect upon the young men who go to those places and have nothing in their minds but the profits of gambling.
11328. Do you think it has had a deteriorating effect upon the value of property there, for the purposes of business? Probably so; of course it would not affect the owners of houses occupied by the Chinese.
11329. But you think it may have affected the European shopkeepers there? No doubt many of them have felt the inconvenience of being flanked on either side by Chinese shops.
11330. Have you ever heard of European women being assaulted or molested while walking up and down Lower George-street? I cannot call to mind anything of the kind.
11331. You heard of no complaints to that effect? I do not think so.
11333. They punished him under that impression? Yes.
11334. Did you find many women among the Chinese in Lower George-street, while you were there? We used to find some in Hanson's Buildings on the west side of George-street, but we cleared them out as soon as possible. There were others married to Chinamen, and some who had been living with Chinamen a long time, and claimed to be married—possibly they were.
11335. Do these women who live with the Chinese ever bring up the men for assaulting them? Never; on the contrary they are, as a rule, I believe, most kind to their wives.
11336. Were there any raids made on any of the Chinese gambling-houses in Lower George-street, while you were there? No.
11337. We understand that great difficulties surround the police in making raids there? There are great difficulties. Having got a warrant to enter a place, the difficulty is to effect an entrance, so as to catch them in the act. They have their places barricaded—barriers here, and partitions there; and then we have to contend against the spies employed by the Chinese and the white people who go there, who are the first to give information of the police coming.
11338. Have you considered a way of overcoming those difficulties by legislative enactment;—do you think they should be prevented from putting up barricades and locking their doors, and so forth? I do not know. I think we should look at it in the light of how such a law would apply to ourselves. Would it not be interfering with personal liberty, for instance?
11339. Doubtless. But knowing that these places carried on for an unlawful purpose, could we not make special regulations to deal with them apart from the general community? Perhaps; I may say that I have never gone in for games of chance, and have no sympathy with gambling in any shape or form. If a special law were made to stamp it out, I believe it would be a good thing.
11340. Mr. Quong Tart.] I think the first time I met you, Mr. Potter, was in connection with a case of false imprisonment? Yes.
11341. You regard the gambling among a certain class of the Chinese as the principal objection to them? Yes.
11342. What steps would you adopt to put down the evil? I hardly know what to suggest, unless it is to give the police power to enter without a warrant any place where gambling is carried on, whether it be Chinese or European, and arrest the players then and there.
11343. Do you know anything about pak-ah-pu? Yes; I know the game.
11345. Do you know any of the Chinese informers now? No; when I was at Waterloo I knew Long Pen, who gave the information about the opium.
11346. What do you think of his character? Well, his evidence was very good at that time. But the Chinese out there said he was not a reliable man—that was what they seemed to think.
11347. What was his occupation at that time, do you know? No; I cannot say what he did for a living.
11348. Do you know if he is an opium-smoker? He is an old man, and very thin; he may have been an opium-smoker.
11349. Is he a married man? I believe so. He had a woman living with him. I am now speaking about two years ago.
11350. Do you know if he has a wife in Sydney now? I do not.

16 Nov., 1891.
11351. Have you ever known the Chinese merchants in Lower George-street to encourage gambling? I never saw anything there which would lead me to believe that the Chinese merchants were gamblers.
11353. For what class of offences have you found the Chinese generally proceeded against in your experience? I have known Chinese arrested for indecent assault, but they are not great offenders against the law.
11354. President.] The offence you have named you do not look upon as a standard offence of the Chinese? Not at all.
11355. You do not regard them as special offenders in any direction? No.
11356. As a matter of fact you regard them generally as a law-abiding people? Yes; I have found them a very law-abiding people.

TUESDAY, 17 NOVEMBER, 1891.

Present:—

THE MAYOR OF SYDNEY (MR. ALDERMAN MANNING, J.P.), PRESIDENT.

FRANCIS ABIGAIL, Esq., J.P., VICE-PRESIDENT.

RAMSEY MCKILLOP, Esq., | QUONG TART, Esq.,

JOHN STUART HAWTHORNE, Esq.

Mr. Octavius Charles Beale called in and examined:—

- Mr.
O. C. Beale
17 Nov., 1891.
11358. President.] What is your occupation, Mr. Beale? I am a merchant and importer of pianos and sewing-machines.
11359. You are the owner of property situated in Lower George-street? I am the part owner of some property in Lower George-street.
11360. You are interested in property situated in Lower George-street as owner of a moiety? Yes.
11361. What does that consist of? It did consist, when I purchased it, of several old shops.
11362. How many shops are there on the land? There are now eight shops and four warehouses.
11363. Did you build the shops and warehouses? Four of the shops were there when I bought the property, four I have built since, and also the four warehouses.
11364. Then, of the entire number of shops, four are new? Yes, comparatively new.
11365. Whom were the four old shops tenanted by before you bought them? Perhaps it would complete the point if I told you that there were seven when I bought them, and that I pulled down three.
11366. Then the remaining four were tenanted by whom? By Chinese.
11367. Chinese merchants? No; by Chinese of a very low type.
11368. What business did these carry on? I cannot tell you, but they were Chinese who kept their houses in a very disorderly state.
11369. Did you send them away? Yes.
11370. Did you do up the houses then? Yes; I pulled down three of the old houses (all seven were occupied), and renovated the four remaining ones, which were comparatively new.
11371. To whom did you let the houses that were renovated? Perhaps I may tell you that my idea was to get rid of Chinese tenancy altogether, no matter of what character, so that I pulled down the three older buildings and rebuilt them, and renovated the other four with the object of letting them to ordinary European tenants, such as occupy the general run of shops in Lower George-street, calculating that by doing so I should raise the value of the whole of the property. I had several opportunities of letting them to Chinese tenants but refused, feeling satisfied that I should be able to get European tenants for them. The consequence was, however, that whilst my own shops remained empty the Chinese who had previously occupied them, instead of leaving the neighbourhood altogether, as I had hoped they would, simply moved a little further up the street, taking shops that had not previously been occupied by Chinese at all.
11372. They moved in a southerly direction, I understand? Yes; they moved further along the street, thus unfortunately extending the Chinese locality.
11373. That is the point you wish to make? Yes, it is. My four shops remained empty for a lengthened period; I cannot say how long, but for many months.
11374. All that time you were striving to get European tenants? Yes; we made every effort that we could think of.
11375. And whilst they were empty you rejected Chinese tenants? Yes; a great many waited upon me in reference to the houses, but I refused to have anything to do with them.
11376. What rent were you asking from Europeans at that time? We were asking £5 a week for each house.
11377. Then eventually, after an effort extending over many months, you failed to let the shops to Europeans? Yes.
11378. And then when you failed to let them to anyone else the Chinese offered to take them? Yes; they had indeed offered all along.
11379. And up to that time you had refused them? Yes.
11380. Then you were driven to extremity;—your property was unproductive, and you decided to let the property to the Chinese? Yes.

11382. So that you got 30s. a week more from the Chinese than you would have got from Europeans? Yes.
11383. But as a matter of fact, the Europeans did not come forward and offer any rent at all? No; unfortunately they did not.
11384. So that it was not a question of competition between European and Chinese tenants? No; not at all.
11385. What rent do you get now for the shops? From £3 10s. to £4 10s. a week.
11386. And the difference in the rental of the various places is accounted for by the difference in the accommodation afforded by them? Yes; by the difference in the frontages.
11387. Well then, as a matter of fact, since you have let your shops to the Chinese, the rentals have been reduced? Yes.
11388. Now, how was that reduction brought about? By lapse of time only.
11389. Was it brought about by reason of the Chinese leaving the houses, and refusing to pay the £6 10s. a week rent? They did not refuse to pay the rent, but they left the shops.
11390. Therefore the presumption is that they could not afford to pay the rents you were asking, or that they got cheaper houses somewhere else? I believe the fact was that they could not pay the rent.
11391. Then the consequence was that you were compelled to reduce your rents to less than you were prepared to let your houses for to Europeans when first they were built? Yes.
11393. So that in three years your rentals fell off about 30 per cent? Yes, really more than that, because some shops were and are unlet.
11394. What purpose did the Chinese occupy your premises for? Chiefly as boarding-houses and restaurants, and a clause was put in the leases of four of the shops that were taken by one Chinaman to prevent him carrying on illegal practices of any kind. Of course our only method of insuring that illegal practices shall not be carried on is to insert such a clause, saying that interference by the police would entail the vitiation of the lease.
11395. That is an extraordinary clause to put in a lease;—why did you put it in these leases? Because we thought that the houses might be used as gambling-houses.
11396. And you provided that anything on the part of the tenants giving rise to police interference should entail the cancellation of the leases? Quite so.
11397. Did you find out that the Chinese were using these houses as gambling-houses? No.
11398. Did you visit the houses yourself to get the rents? No; never. Hardie and Gorman are the agents, and I leave the business in connection with the houses entirely to them.
11399. You were never brought in contact with the tenants? No; they came to see me sometimes, but I always sent them on to the agents.
11400. I understand that you wished to be called as a witness before the Commission;—was that from something that you had heard? Mr. Playfair told me that my name had been mentioned before the Commission, and suggested that it would be as well if I offered to come and give evidence.
11401. You heard nothing further? Nothing further.
11402. With regard to the property owners in Lower George-street I may tell you that the general allegation is that you prefer the Chinese to the Europeans as tenants because you get higher rentals from the Chinese and also bonuses for giving preference to them? Do you mean that that was alleged of me personally, or of the owners of property in Lower George-street generally.
11403. It has been stated of the owners generally—did you ever get a bonus? No.
11405. Then it is not your desire to let the houses to Chinese in preference to Europeans? If I understand, you mean that I would rather take less rent from a European.
11406. I did not put the question quite in that way;—I stated that it was not true that you would rent your properties to Chinese at a somewhat higher rental in preference to Europeans? No, it is not true.
11407. And that is proved by the statements that you made at the beginning of your evidence to the effect that you were at first prepared to take £5 from Europeans, and that although you were offered a higher rental from the Chinese you preferred to keep your shops vacant for several months in the hope of getting European tenants? That is so.
11408. And that when you did get an increased rental from the Chinese that rental fell away very soon from that increased rental to a much lower rental than you were previously asking from Europeans? Yes.
11409. The rentals of your houses have on the average fallen from £4 10s. to £3 10s. a week? Yes, more than that.
11410. The difference is practically from £4 10s. to £3 a week? Yes.
11411. And you say that you have never been even offered a bonus by Chinese desiring to rent your houses? Quite so; and so far as I have been able to observe, it is quite untrue that any bonuses have been offered to landlords by the Chinese, or that anybody would prefer Chinese to European tenants. I may say, however, that I am not further informed than in relation to one or two large landowners.
11412. Mr. Hawthorne.] What is your preference for European tenants? I presume that it is a matter of racial prejudice. It would certainly be regarded as a disadvantage by the general public that there should be Chinese there at all.
11413. But do you as a landlord prefer European to Chinese tenants, because the Europeans keep the premises in better repair than the Chinese? No; the Chinese keep the houses very cleanly. I have never been in the shops since the Chinese first inhabited them, but I have seen them from the back.
11414. Then, as far as the question of cleanliness is concerned, you would prefer Chinese to Europeans? No; I should prefer Europeans under any circumstances whatever.
11415. But as a landlord you have not found the Chinese more dirty than the general run of Europeans? No. If anything, we have found them more cleanly.
11416. So that any objection you had to them was more racial than sanitary? It would proceed from racial prejudice I think. I may say that no request was ever but once preferred by the police, and that was in connection with the tenants next door. The police desired that we should restore the fence between my property and the next door place, which is a public-house, because of an unseemly row that had taken place. The fence was not ours, however, and there are no Chinese next door.

Mr.
O. C. Beale.
17 Nov., 1891.

11417. How long did the houses remain empty after you had rebuilt them and had decided that you would no longer let them to Chinese tenants? About six or eight months.
11418. Was it then that you allowed competition for them to be general, without restricting it to Europeans? Do you mean at the end of the six or eight months?
11419. Yes, you were compelled at the end of that time to accept any tenants, were you not? We were compelled then to accept any orderly tenant. We took every precaution however to get orderly tenants, and I think events have proved that we succeeded.
11420. While the houses were empty had you any applications from the Chinese? Oh, yes; many.
11421. So that you, as landlord, or your agents, whilst getting frequent applications, refused to let the houses to Chinese? Yes; both of us did so.
11422. And, as a landlord, you suffered pecuniary loss through not allowing these houses to be let to the Chinese? Yes; very severe loss.
11423. Are the houses occupied now by Chinese or Europeans? There are four warehouses occupied now by Europeans, but they are not fronting Lower George-street.
11424. I am referring to the houses fronting Lower George-street? There are five occupied by Chinese, and three vacant.
11425. And do you find property generally had letting down in that part of the city, by reason of the presence of so many Chinamen? There are more than two sides to that question. The frontage is affected but not the property at the back.
11426. There is no difficulty in letting the warehouses? No.
11427. Mr. Abigail.] Is not the reason for that that in the front street general business is carried on, and in the back only storage? Yes; I have just let a large warehouse to Messrs. Hoffnung & Co. at £700 a year.
11428. Mr. Hawthorne.] What are the warehouses occupied as? They are occupied for general storage purposes. There is a boot factory at the back, and Messrs. Caird and Maxwell have their stores there. The Chinese question does not affect the back.
11429. What is your opinion, as an owner of property, as to the falling off in business at that part of the city during recent years. From what we have heard, there has been very little business done down there recently in comparison to what was done a few years ago? I do not think that there has been a falling off in business in the Lower George-street end of the city. As a matter of fact, there was no trade there four years ago.
11430. Do you think that the retail business in Lower George-street is as good now as it was three or four years ago? Oh, yes; I should think so. I should think it is rather better.
11431. If it has been alleged before the Commission that business had fallen off in Lower George-street owing to the existence down there of so many Chinese gambling-houses;—would that, in your opinion as a landlord, be true? No; because there are many fewer Chinese down there than there were formerly.
11432. Then, in your opinion, on that account property ought to be more valuable down there now than it was formerly? Well, I can only speak from personal experience of the value of property on one side of the street, but I should certainly think that property ought to be more valuable down there now than it was two, three, or four years ago.
11433. And you think that business is as good as it was three or four years ago? I think it is better. I should say so from what I have seen.
11434. Then how is it that rents have come down? Purely by the residence of the Chinese. We cannot get the same class of tenants as we did formerly, but that is not my objection to the Chinese, because I purchased the land with the intention of building large warehouses on it, and the people to whom I should let them would not object to the presence of the Chinese.
11435. Mr. Abigail.] If the provisions of your leases had been carried out the tenants would have been turned out if the police had interfered with them? Yes; but the police never did interfere with them.
11436. President.] Not as far as you are aware? No; and I think that I should have known of it.
11437. Mr. Abigail.] Is there any gambling carried on there? Oh, yes; one may be sure that there is. Indeed, whether they were occupied by Chinese or Europeans there would in all probability be gambling carried on there. We only regard those shops as temporary premises, and I suggested to the agents that I would rather take £3 a week from the sort of European dealers that there are now at that end of the city than £4 from the Chinese, in order to get a better class of tenants, but Hardie and Gorman said that that would only be a way of getting out of the frying-pan into the fire—that we should get a worse class of tenants than the Chinamen. We might get low tobacconists, who would probably do a much larger gambling business than they do in the fan-tan shops themselves.
11438. Your opinion is that Lower George-street is not a good part of the city for retail business? No; I do not think it is.
11439. Your opinion is then that the Chinese congregating there tends to send respectable people away and lower the class of business done? Undoubtedly it does. When first I bought the property I asked several of the property owners if they would join me in an attempt to turn out all the Chinese of the class that we have been speaking of from that part of the town. I am not referring to the respectable Chinese merchants, but of the people who keep shops that may be gambling-houses or anything else, but I could not get any response from them.
11441. And supposing also that the land-owners bundled the whole of the tenants out of that part of the town would it not increase the value of the property because they could use it for mercantile purposes? I do not think so.
11442. I thought your opinion was that the removal of the Chinese would improve the value of the property in that part of the town? Yes, but not by ejecting both whites and Chinese;—only by ejecting the Chinese.
11443. Then if you ejected the Chinese only your land would have a much greater value now than when you bought it? Well, it would have a greater value than it had two years ago.
11444. But surely it would have a greater value than when you bought it? I do not know that. It was rather a “booming time” when I bought three years ago.

11445. But at all events you acknowledge that the block of shops north of Bridge-street would not be as good for ordinary business purposes as the block south of Bridge-street? Quite so; though I think the block south has depreciated in value.

11446. Mr. Abigail.] Still it is your opinion that the presence of Chinese in the neighbourhood means decreasing the value of property? Yes.

11447. And there are fewer Chinese down there now? I believe there are.

11448. Mr. M'Killop.] Are the Chinese down there of a better class than those who lived there formerly? That would be impossible for me to say.

11449. Mr. Quong Tart.] What were the names of the Chinese who came to ask you to let your houses to them? Ah Kum, a Chinese cabinet-maker, was one. We told him that we required references, and he referred us to Messrs. Hoffnung & Co., and was very well spoken of by them.

11450. Was it for himself that he wanted to rent the shops? Yes, for himself and his friends.

11451. Of course you are aware of the complaints made by the tradesmen and others at the Lower George-street end of the town about Chinese gambling. I suppose you consider that their gambling habits are the most serious objection to the Chinese? Yes, quite so.

11452. If they carried on legitimate business like merchants you would not mind them then? Oh, I would take a much lower rent from an assured person than from one of whom I had any doubts.

11453. You do not want to have your name as a landlord mixed up with anything like Chinese gambling—your good name is worth more to you than the few pounds a week that you get from these shops in Lower George-street? Well, I do not know that considerations of that kind exactly have affected my action in the matter.

11454. At all events you would like to be assured? It will make the thing particularly clear when I explain that we never desired the Chinese as anything but temporary tenants.

11455. Tenants from week to week or month to month? They are weekly tenants. We accepted them on such terms that any time when we desire to build we shall be able to displace them.

11456. You never had any application from large merchants? No.

11457. Do you own any other property beside this in George-street? Yes.

11458. Is it letting well? Yes. I only own George-street property.

11459. What would you suggest as the best way of putting a stop to the Chinese gambling business; you have a special clause in your lease, you say? Yes; if the police had to interfere with the tenants we should immediately eject them.

11460. Is that the only course? That is the only course open to me.

11461. Mr. Hawthorne.] If you had four or five Chinese shop-keepers on each side of your own premises opposite the Town Hall would that affect their value? Oh, there is no question about it.

11462. You think that if these Chinese shop-keepers came from Lower George-street to this part of the street it would have the same depreciating effect on property that it has there? I think it would. I think it would be a perfect calamity.

11463. Do you think that business has increased in the city during the last few months? I can hardly say, but I should think that it has increased.

Mr. Edmund Lawless called and examined:—

11464. President.] What are you, Mr. Lawless? A sub-inspector of Police.

11465. What district are you in charge of? I am now in charge of the Redfern district.

11467. Generally speaking, your district includes most of the Chinese quarters in Waterloo? Yes.

11469. And before that, where were you? I was at No. 2 station.

11470. Where is that? Near Christ Church. I was assisting Inspector M'Kay.

11471. Mr. Hawthorne.] Since you went to that district have you had much to do with the Chinese? Not a great deal. I made one raid on them.

11472. One raid already;—when did that take place? On the 4th July last.

11473. And what was the effect of that raid—did you make any arrests? Yes; we arrested twenty-seven of them.

11474. Mr. Abigail.] Were they all Chinese? Yes; all Chinese.

11475. Mr. Hawthorne.] Did you find any Europeans at all in the house when you made the raid? No, I did not. Of course I can only speak from the information I got at the time, and I was told that the Europeans had just cleared out before we made the raid.

11476. What were they playing at when you made the raid? Fan-tan.

11477. Did there appear to be much money on the tables when you entered? I think there was about £4 or £5.

11478. You obtained convictions against six of the gamblers, did you not? Yes; but through an inadvertency of the magistrate the three principal members, who were fined £30, were discharged. The magistrate inadvertently sentenced them to six months imprisonment, or levy and distress, which he is not entitled to do.

11479. An appeal was made to a higher court? Yes; and the result was as I have said—that the principals got off.

11480. I think that the ruling of the Court was that they could not fine and sentence? Not for six months. They gave six months, and in consequence I had to refund all the money.

11481. You say you have made one raid since you were appointed to the Redfern district? Yes.

Mr.
O. C. Beale.
17 Nov., 1891.

Sub-Inspector
Lawless.
17 Nov., 1891.

- Sub-Inspector Lawless.
17 Nov., 1891.
11484. I suppose that forty-eight hours after the conviction took place they would be reverting to the same game again? Yes; so far as my information goes, though I did not see them playing again in the same house.
11485. Then perhaps it has the effect of making them more cautious? Yes; they kept the door shut, which previously they had left open.
11486. Oh, previously to your making the raid, they played fan-tan with the doors open? Yes.
11487. And now fan-tan is played with closed doors and the accompaniment of spies? Yes; I suppose so.
11488. Mr. Abigail.] Is it your opinion that before you made that raid the Chinese knew that they were breaking the law in playing the game? Yes; because I have made several raids in years back, and I have always found that the moment they suspected we were coming there was an immediate rush away. Some rushed through windows, others I have pulled down chimneys and from roofs, so that now I always put men all round the building.
11489. How were you able to make the raid without observation? I sent a man to see when there was likely to be a large number there, and I had the men planted about, and at a given signal he let them in.
11490. How many men did you require to make this raid which turned out a success? I had not many men to spare—only about 8 or 9.
11491. And did you keep it a secret from them until you took them up to the Chinese quarter? With the exception of two men whom I told beforehand, I kept it a secret up to an hour before I made the raid.
11492. Have you found that, as a rule, your men are capable of keeping a secret when they are likely to engage in work of that nature? Yes; I have no reason to suspect otherwise, except in cases not very material, when I have fancied that they have sometimes been a little incautious; but not in serious cases. I have thought sometimes that secrets might leak out through the clerks at the police courts.
11493. But you have noticed, when you have been going to make arrests, that information has been supplied to the parties by somebody? I could not say so.
11494. However it has struck you that they must have been informed? My impression at the time was that they must have got the information from their own people, who are always going into the police office, and who, seeing me go in, have, perhaps, got suspicious.
11495. Are we to understand, then, that you have intended upon certain nights to make a raid, but that you have found that it would not have been a success, and so you have had to postpone it to some further date? Yes; I have made the raid afterwards. Of course it has only been a surmise, but I fancied that as they have not been playing much, then they had got wind of it.
11497. What have you found with regard to the morality of the Chinese;—have you found much immorality as between men and women existing amongst the Chinese in Redfern and Alexandria? I have not had much opportunity of making a close personal investigation into the matter, but from information in reference to persons arrested there, I find that about twenty of them were women in the habit of frequenting the residences of the Chinese down there. I have the facts down on this paper.
11498. Oh, I see—the paper that you are going to read from now for the benefit of the Commission gives the number of convictions of girls of European parentage in the habit of frequenting these Chinese quarters? Yes; but I should add that since these returns were compiled, so I am informed, the place has very much improved, and nothing of the kind has taken place during the last twelve months. These girls got from one month to six months imprisonment for being vagrants. They were all found in the Chinese quarters.
11499. Was that before your appointment to the district? Yes; some time before.
11500. And since your appointment you have had no convictions against girls of European parentage? No; none at all.
11501. What was the date of your last conviction previous to your entering upon your duties here? The date here recorded is the 5th January, 1889.
11502. And is that the last conviction that has taken place against young girls of European parentage for visiting these Chinese quarters? No; that is not the last. I made a mistake. I took the wrong column. The last was on the 23rd March, 1891.
11504. But, as a matter of fact, she was apprehended for visiting the Chinese quarters for immoral purposes? Well, she was found there. She had been watched. The police watch these places very carefully, and do not take action against the women unless they find, from careful observation, that they are in the habit of frequenting the Chinese quarters for the purpose of prostitution.
11505. Your men do not take them in charge on the first occasion that they see them there? No; they threaten them. They say, "Do not let me see you here again; if I do I shall have to take you in charge," or something of that sort.
11506. But since you have been inspector there have you found it necessary to caution any of these girls about visiting these Chinamen's places for immoral purposes? No; I have not. There was a girl locked up for being there on the 14th February, but that was before I came to the district.
11507. And I suppose you visit the district almost daily? Very nearly. Sometimes I go there twice a day.
11508. But your duty as inspector necessitates your visiting the place once every day at least? Yes; some time during the day.
11509. And your opinion, as inspector of the district, is that the conduct of the Chinese about there is respectable? I could not say that their habits are dirty.
11510. It is chiefly from a sanitary standpoint that you object to them, however;—you could not say that they were over clean; have you ever drawn the attention of the Inspector of Nuisances to the fact? No; I have not, but other parties have.
11511. And you think that on the whole the Chinese are not remarkable for the earnestness of their efforts towards good sanitation? Oh, they are very bad.
11512. But with the exception of their neglect in that respect you have nothing to complain of the Chinese residents of Alexandria? There are several respectable storekeepers and others amongst the Chinese. Those I have to complain about are the low class of people.
11513. Those men are engaged chiefly in the gardens, are they not? Yes; they are gardeners and rag-pickers, pickers, and I suppose there are between twenty and thirty who do nothing but gamble and assist in keeping the gambling-dens.

11514. Mr. Abigail.] Can you give us any notice of about how many Chinese there are in that district altogether? The nearest approach I can get to accuracy is 375.

11515. Mr. Hawthorne.] Will you give us the divisions of those 375 in their respective trades? There are 150 gardeners, 14 rag-pickers, 113 hawkers—that is, those who go about hawking vegetables and other things, though mostly vegetables. There are 2 cooks, and 1 man who makes fly-catchers, and also a wood-turner. Then there are 52 cabinet-makers, 13 storekeepers, 1 doctor, 1 butcher, and 13 whom we call gamblers. Then there are 14 who sell pak-ah-pu tickets, and are always to be found about the gambling-places. They are a kind of touts. I think when you count those up you will find that they make 375.

11516. And that embraces the whole of the Chinese residents in the district under your control? Yes. I have been informed, and I think it is correct, that during the last twelve months the number has been reduced something like 75 per cent.

11517. Mr. Abigail.] Do you know what part they have gone to? No; I have been informed that they have gone back to their own country, but that I know nothing about.

11518. Mr. Hawthorne.] Can you not give us any reason for this startling migration? Well, I have made inquiries, and it is said that most of them are gardeners, and that it does not pay them so well as it did.

11519. Mr. McKillop.] Perhaps the contracts that they came out under have proved too stiff for them? Yes. Well, I do not know anything about that.

11520. Mr. Hawthorne.] How do you find that they compare with the general run of Europeans, as far as the police are concerned;—do they give you much trouble or annoyance? No. I have had to arrest a few of them; there was one occasion on which a Chinaman got three years for an indecent assault on a little girl.

11521. But was that since you have been down there? No.

11522. You have had no cases of indecent assaults on little girls? No; nor for young women prostituting themselves with the Chinamen.

11523. And you have had very little trouble with the Chinese, except as far as the gambling is concerned? No; very little.

11524. And indeed, compared with the Europeans, you find them a very law-abiding people? Yes.

11525. Their only offence is the gambling? Yes.

11526. Are there any European women living with them? I believe that there are three European women and one Chinese woman living with them.

11527. Is the Chinese woman living with one particular Chinaman? From what I hear they are living together as man and wife. They are quiet and orderly, and I have had no occasion to interfere with them.

11528. The women you have referred to are not there for the ordinary purposes of prostitution? No; not so far as our information goes.

11529. The European women have Chinamen living with them? Yes; and they are steady in their habits.

11530. You were a long time connected with No. 2 division;—were there not a good many Chinamen living there? Yes; there were some thousands living in No. 2 division.

11531. Some thousands of Chinamen in the neighbourhood of Goulburn-street? Well, I ought not to say "some thousands," but there were certainly over 1,000.

11532. I suppose it is populated more thickly with Chinese than any other district? Yes; you might call Goulburn-street, Wexford-street, Foster-street, and that end of Sussex-street, a Chinese quarter.

11533. And what was your opinion of them there;—were they tolerably law-abiding people except for the gambling? Latterly they were, but originally they were not. The first raid I made was in Goulburn-street, in 1877, and on that occasion we got twenty.

11534. Mr. Abigail.] Were they Europeans as well as Chinese? Yes, Europeans and Chinese; but on that occasion I counted fifteen young girls in one place, and the oldest was not more than 18. I prosecuted the owner of the place and he was fined £10 for gambling and subsequently indicted and sentenced to six months' imprisonment for keeping a brothel.

11535. When was the next raid made? In 1880; and I caught thirty-five then.

11536. Europeans and Chinese? Yes; I got a good many Europeans, and amongst them several of the Corporation men—some of the foremen employed by the Corporation. They were all gambling. Out of the thirty-five there were about twelve Chinese. The principals were fined £30, and the Europeans were fined too.

11537. Then both of these raids were successful? Yes.

11538. And what about the next raid? Of the next raid I have no recollection. The books have been displaced. But I know that I made two raids, and that we got Europeans in each of them. We found a lot of money there too.

11539. On the table? No; on the persons of the gambling-house keepers.

11540. Did you ever see much money on the table? Yes; we found over £20 on the table on one occasion.

11541. Have you ever known the police to scramble for the money? When we went into a gambling-house for the purpose of making a raid there was invariably a scramble.

11543. Those who run the table? Yes.

11544. When you made these raids you endeavoured as far as possible to obtain all that was on the table? Yes.

11545. What is done with it? It is all put down in a book—everything that is got; and when the case is tried the Magistrates invariably confiscate it. Then after that it is sent to the Superintendent's office, and what becomes of it eventually I do not know.

11546. Mr. Hawthorne.] Did the Chinese ever try to get round you to make it easy for them by offering you bribes or presents of any kind? No, never. In fact I always thought that the Chinese looked with suspicion on me when I went down the street.

- Sub-Inspector Lawless. 11547. Mr. Abigail.] Did you ever hear of any constables in connection with No. 2 station being offered a bribe? No, never.
- 17 Nov., 1891. 11548. How long were you attached to No. 2 station? Since 1866; but I have been a constable since 1848.
11549. Then you have actually seen the commencement of the location of the Chinese in that district? Well, not quite.
11550. In 1866 there could not have been very many? No, there were not many; there was not a fraction of what there is now.
11551. You say that in 1877 things were very bad in that quarter, as far as the young girls were concerned? Oh, very bad.
11552. And after that there were a number of young girls brought up, and sent to the Industrial School, I suppose? Yes; I arrested fifteen of them myself. They averaged between 12 and 17 years of age. I remember that some of them were too old for the Industrial School, and had to be discharged.
11553. Do you remember a Select Committee of Parliament sitting in connection with the question of common lodging-houses, and making a report as to the frightful immoralities amongst the Chinese with young girls? I remember a Committee of Parliament sitting, but I do not remember any of the details of the report.
11554. That was in 1876? Yes.
11555. Did it have any effect upon the action of the police, in making them give more attention to the care and protection of young girls? No; the men were always told, as far as I can remember, that if they ever found any young girls in those places they were to bring them out, and take them to their parents, if they had any, and if they had not, or they could not find them, they were to bring them to the station.
11556. Did you ever find any young girls in bed with the Chinese? Only in that instance when I prosecuted the man for keeping a brothel, and the evidence in that case was very bad. I found the girl suffering from the effects of opium, lying about the place half-naked.
11557. Then so far as the immorality with women is concerned the conduct of the Chinese is very much better than it used to be? Yes; I have not found so many young girls with the Chinese as there used to be; but the women who have grown up with them, and are now 30 or 40 years of age, still go amongst them.
11558. That is in Goulburn-street and Wexford-street? Well, principally in Goulburn-street. We got two girls out of there, and the proprietor was sentenced to six months for keeping a brothel. In Wexford-street they are principally common gambling-houses. The difficulty in prosecuting these people has always been that you were never sure of finding the same parties there on the next night. Very frequently, when we had made all our arrangements for a raid, we had not been able to find the same parties there, but had found a totally different set of men. It would seem as though they sub-let the table night after night for two or three hours. We had several warrants out, but we could not execute them for that reason—we could not find the people against whom they were issued.
11559. Gambling is still carried on in Goulburn-street, Wexford-street, and Campbell-street, is it not? Well, it was up to the time I left that district.
11560. But there is not the same amount of immorality amongst the Chinese that there was at an earlier period? No, they having much improved on that score. I think they must have got frightened.
11561. Do they keep their premises clean down there, or are they dirty? Well, the houses are pretty fair, but the huts at the lower end of Retreat-street are very bad. About Waterloo there are sixty or seventy huts. One man—a Chinaman called Sun Moon—has forty-four tenements, and Mrs. M'Ilhinney has twenty, all of which are let out to Chinamen.
11562. Do they overcrowd in these tenements? Well, I have not seen much overcrowding. Perhaps I do not go there at the proper time. I have been told by the men that sometimes there are as many as four, or five, or six in these places. They are just galvanized roofs with a fence round them, and all the rubbish is thrown in front of the door.
11563. Did you read the report of the deputation that waited on the Colonial Secretary some months ago and gave rise to this inquiry;—they stated that the police were in the habit of receiving gold watches and so on? Yes; I did, and I was very much amused. It struck me that the persons who imagined anything of the kind must have been themselves guilty of something of that sort, because my large experience of the police has led me to recognise them as very honest men. There may be some bad ones amongst them but I have never yet come across any who would accept bribes.
11565. And in that twenty-six years you have never heard of a policeman having being dismissed for having accepted a bribe? No; I cannot remember such a case. It is possible that such a thing may have happened, but I am not aware of it. There is one thing that would certainly tend to prevent that. The police are promoted to various classes, and there is always a certain jealousy existing amongst them as every one naturally looks anxiously for promotion. That would tend to prevent anything of this kind because if one constable knew anything about another receiving a present the probability is that at the first opportunity he would be glad to mention it so as to give himself a better chance.
11566. To make bribery effectual it would have to be general would it not, so that every man on a certain beat would have to be bribed? Yes. The first man might possibly be tempted to receive a bribe, but the next man might say, "Oh, I will have nothing to do with it!" and he would go to his sergeant and explain what had happened to him.
11567. But you have never had any experience of such a thing? No, absolutely none.
11568. And as a superior officer you have had a large number of police passing under you? Yes; a very large number.
11569. And as a general rule what is their character? Well, I believe that as a general class their character is quite irreproachable.
11570. You have found some who have had a failing in the drink line? Yes.
11571. And that no doubt has led to dismissal more frequently than anything else? Yes; when you come to think of the kind of people and the kind of temptation that the police have to deal with you will think that they are very honest. Perhaps you read the other day that a young policeman locked a man up with £200 in his pocket.

11572. So that when you read the report of the deputation you were very indignant? Yes, very indignant, because Mr. Read is a very strict Superintendent, and the Inspector-General would show no man any mercy who would do anything of that kind.

11573. From your experience can you make any suggestion for the better suppression of gambling amongst the Chinese? Yes; I think so. In the first place my impression is that we ought to be able to arrest at sight.

11574. Without the necessity of a warrant? Yes; they are committing an offence. We can arrest in the street and it does seem hard that we cannot go into the house and arrest them when we see them playing from outside.

11575. And you would make any gambling implements found in the gambling-house evidence against the proprietors, I suppose? Oh, certainly. That would be important evidence. Then I would compel them to have decent habitations and contribute something to the revenue of the Colony.

11576. In fact they should be brought under the same sanitary laws as Europeans? Yes; there should be a good lodging-house Act, allotting a certain space to each occupant, and of course the Chinese would come under that, and would be obliged to have decent habitations.

11577. In reference to the huts at Waterloo, is it not part of the duty of the Inspector of Nuisances there to see that the Chinamen do not herd like pigs? Yes; it should be.

11578. I suppose they have an inspector of nuisances? Yes.

11579. Who is the Mayor of Alexandria? I do not know. I have only come there very recently, and I do not remember the name, but will get it for you.

11581. The Chinese behave well towards the women whom they take to live with them, do they not? Yes; they give them plenty of money, and keep them well dressed; and there is another thing: When young prostitutes come out of gaol they seem to have no other resource but to go to the Chinamen, for the larrikins only kick them about. They cook for the Chinamen, and keep their houses in order.

11582. Do you find the Chinese very drunken or riotous? No; they are very sober.

11583. Have you ever had to arrest any for drunkenness? In one or two isolated cases; but drunkenness is certainly not a very conspicuous vice with them.

11584. Do you think it is a good thing to have them located in one district, or would you prefer to have them spread over a large area? I think it would be a very good idea to have them located in one district.

11585. It would enable the police to supervise them better, you think? Yes; I think it would be an excellent thing, although, I daresay, it would meet with a good deal of opposition from the people of the neighbourhood in which it was proposed to locate them.

11586. Does the locating of a large number of Chinese in any district tend to lower that district, then? In my opinion it does.

11587. It deteriorates the district? I think it detracts from the value of property in the district.

11588. And would interfere with business, excepting business of a very low character? Yes; I think so. That is my impression.

11589. Do you know what profits the landlords make out of dens in Waterloo;—I am referring to the houses in Retreat-street and the huts at the end of that street? Yes; I understand that they pay as high as 20s. a week for a cottage, such as you would not give more than 12s. or 13s. for if it was situated in any ordinary street of the town.

11590. Twenty shillings a week for such a cottage as you have described? Yes; from 15s. to 20s. a week, and they are not worth anything like that, because you can get very much better places for less rent elsewhere.

11591. You do not know what the person, who sublets them to the Chinamen, gives for them? My impression is that the person who leases the land from the Cooper family has put up those places. The people who live in the huts pay 1s. or 2s. a week each in rent.

11592. Now, with reference to the sanitary question;—can you make any suggestion that would have the effect of bringing the Chinese residents under a general or municipal law that would compel them to keep their premises in a state of cleanliness? My impression is that they should not be allowed under any pretence whatever to live in these hives. They are very handy mechanics, and very ingenious men, but they should not be allowed to erect such habitations as those for themselves. Whatever places they live in should be detached. They should not be allowed to erect long sheds and partition them off into a number of living rooms.

11594. So that, if a Common Lodging-house Bill were passed it could be made to reach them? Yes; a good Common Lodging-house Bill would make a clean sweep of them, and that of course would have a wonderful effect upon that phase of Chinese life, whilst a Bill enabling us to arrest at sight in cases of gambling, would get over the most serious difficulty that we have to contend against on that score. It would make it very much easier for the police if we could arrest forty or fifty men at sight.

11595. And if the magistrates had the power of inflicting imprisonment instead of merely imposing a fine, that I suppose would have a salutary effect? Oh, it would strengthen our hands very much.

11596. Is it your opinion that the presence of the Chinese in large numbers in parts of the city and suburbs has affected Europeans to any large extent? I think so; I think that their presence has had a very bad effect upon the lower order, and upon young people. I have frequently gone into lottery-places in Goulburn-street, and turned out as many as twenty or thirty young European lads; but as that has only been in the cases where they have been playing pak-ah-pu, all that we have been able to do has been to turn them out and frighten them away. It is so difficult to get a conviction. Of course I understand the game perfectly.

11597. Do you not think that if it were possible to frame a law, so as to enable you to send private persons into these pak-ah-pu and fan-tan dens, who could give evidence in Court against the croupier and banker, to the effect that they had actually seen them playing the game, it would facilitate prosecutions against

Lawless.
17 Nov., 1891.

Sub-Inspector against them? Yes; I think that it would; but I must say that I should not be in favour of employing private persons to go into the houses for that purpose alone. They should be accompanied by at least one police officer, otherwise it would give rise to a good deal of suspicion.

Lawless.

11598. But, in your opinion, if a private citizen who had a desire to suppress this evil was sent in to the houses in company with a constable, it would facilitate prosecutions? Yes, no doubt; but as I say, the very fact that we should have to arrest the banker and croupier afterwards would make that only a preliminary step.

11600. But if there were two of them? Yes; that might do.

11601. But still you would have to get out a warrant? Yes; I will give you an instance of the difficulty of employing outsiders in the way you suggest: I made an arrangement with a man who is now a Chinese interpreter up the country, to go into a house—a very bad place in Goulburn-street. We were to meet at the house at a given time. I went there at the hour appointed, but he did not turn up. I wondered how that was, and then after waiting a little time, wandered into the next house, and there, to my astonishment, I found him presiding over a game of fan-tan. The fact of the matter was that he was the proprietor of the house, in which I found him, and his only object in putting us on to the other place was to get it shut up, in order that the business of his own place would be increased.

11602. That instance would naturally make you very suspicious in any future cases in which Chinamen come to give you information about gambling? Oh; I would not have anything to do with them. I should at once conclude that it was only in order to increase their own business.

11603. It has been stated by a Chinese witness that he frequently went to Inspector Mackay to make complaints of this nature, and that they put him off from time to time at the police station, and he had to go to the Inspector-General about it? Most likely. It is quite probable that he was one of the kind of persons that I have been alluding to. I have frequently sent away such men who have come with complaints to me.

11604. Mr. McKillop.] But was this Chinaman an apparently trustworthy man? Yes; apparently respectable man.

11606. Mr. Quong Tart.] You were sub-inspector under Mr. Mackay? Yes; for eight years.

11607. And now you are in the Waterloo district? Yes; I have the whole of Alexandria, Waterloo, Darlington, and Redfern.

11608. You made a raid a little while ago? Yes.

11609. In that raid did any Chinese give you assistance? No; I went down there, saw what was going on, and told the men on duty there that I should have to make a raid.

11610. On what day of the week was it? I think it was on Saturday night.

11611. I suppose your experience has led you to believe that Saturday is the worse night? Well, there are more men there on a Saturday night than on any other night, and I wished to get as many as I could.

11612. Are there many lotteries carried on down there? I have only seen one, though I have heard of two, and I have not had an opportunity yet of starting any prosecutions though I intend to do so if necessary.

11613. You say you understand how the game of pak-ah-pu is played? Yes; I understand it perfectly.

11615. Are they all alike or different? All different. There are eighty different characters. My opinion is that pak-ah-pu should not be classed as a lottery. It should be classed as a gambling-game. I go to a fan-tan shop and I purchase a ticket for (say) sixpence.

11616. And who would sell it to you? Some man in the shop who has a book, and he allows me to mark the ticket with a pencil. I make a mark on ten out of the eighty characters—whichever I like. He marks a copy of the ticket similarly, and puts his initials on it for the purpose of identification I think. At all events he makes a mark upon it.

11617. What is the smallest number of marks you can purchase? Sixpenny tickets are the cheapest I have ever seen, and I have bought sixpenny ones myself.

11619. The highest prize you say is £75? Yes, about that.

11621. But how much would you get on that? Oh, I should think something like 1s. 6d. They begin with something very small, and then it doubles or trebles as it goes on, according to the increasing number of marks you obtain. If you get six marks you might get 6s. or 7s.; then if you get seven marks, you might get £1. But then there is this to take into consideration, you only get a chance of marking ten out of eighty, and eighty numbers can be transposed billions of times, so that they have an enormous number of chances against you.

11622. You think that guessing what are the right numbers to mark is something like looking for a needle in a haystack? Just so. Therefore the bankers have every chance against you.

11623. How do they draw the bank—what kind of place do they draw it in? It is generally a kind of office, barred in with wooden bars, like a guard-house or a cell, and there are three men there, two marking the numbers and one watching the game. They have a number of knives on the table, or sometimes a revolver or two.

11624. What for? Oh, I think it is mere display.

11625. How many engage in the game? Well, when the bank is going to be drawn they have four basins, and one of the men takes up eighty tickets each corresponding to one character on the ticket that you have purchased, and rolls it up. There are four basins, and he puts two tickets into each, until he has has disposed of them all. There are then twenty tickets in each basin; after that he takes up four figures, blocks of wood generally, and folds them up in paper, and puts one in each basin. He then takes four corresponding numbers and puts them into a hat or jar, subsequently holding it up and allowing anyone there to put his hand in and draw one out. When the number is taken out of the hat it is read, and the basin corresponding to it makes the game. The other basins are discarded. The banker then draws the tickets out of the basin selected, and pastes them on a board so that the number of characters on your ticket corresponding with them determines your chance.

Sub-Inspector
Lawless.
17 Nov., 1891.

11626. Have you had any prosecutions against the lottery-banks? Well, Detective Keatinge had a case some little time ago, but it should have been brought under the Lotteries Act instead of the Gaming Act.

11627. Then you have to see the bank drawn? Yes; just as with regard to sweeps, unless I could prove that a race had been actually run there would be no offence at all.

11628. Of course there is a ticket-seller, and you have to buy the ticket from him? Yes; we can proceed against him as an accessory.

11629. Mr. McKillop.] But you can harass them? Only by going in day after day and frightening them whenever they are about to play.

11630. Mr. Quong Tart.] But surely it would be possible to enact some law that would enable you to get at them? Yes; I think so. What we want is a law that would make it easier to catch these people, and then when they are caught, and the case against them proved, to punish them severely. That would do some good.

11631. If you buy a ticket from a man, and by that means trace the principals, it seems to me that you have all the evidence that you require? Well, the man who sells the ticket is an agent, and he would come under another law.

11632. Can you make any suggestions as to how, in your opinion, the law should be altered in order to facilitate your operations? I think that the fact that any one has in his possession a ticket of this kind should be sufficient evidence against him to secure a conviction. It is a peculiar ticket—there can be no mistake about it—and they are very openly sold.

11633. Do you ever see any young children going into these places to buy the tickets? Yes; I have turned them out 9 years of age—children who have been sent there by their mothers to buy tickets. That was in Campbell-street.

11634. Which is the worse evil, fan-tan or pak-ah-pu;—which does the most harm to the European population, do you think? I should say that pak-ah-pu is the worse of the two.

11636. Do you know of any syndicates running fan-tan places? No; I have not known that any of them were as a matter of fact run by syndicates, but I have suspected it for a long time, and for this reason: When I have been going my rounds in Goulburn-street I have invariably seen one man—a little dark man—dodging out of these places, and I have been told that he is one of a syndicate who run the banks.

11637. Is he a little dark respectably-dressed man? Yes; he is a little dark man, and speaks English very well.

11638. Could you not give us his name? No; I should have to see him first. For years I have seen him going in and out of these houses, but whenever I have been going to make a raid I have not been able to find him.

11639. I suppose you know that there are some respectable Chinese in the city carrying on a legitimate business? Yes.

11640. And you know a Chinese loafer when you see one? Yes.

11641. And that is the class that the public complain of;—it was the doings of that class that led to the appointment of this Royal Commission? Yes; the upper class of Chinese we have nothing to complain of, and on the other hand the loafers, I suppose, would be objected to just as strongly in their own country.

11642. You could take a prostitute up for being found, for an immoral purpose, in a European house just as well as for being found for an immoral purpose in a Chinese house? Yes; if we found her in a brothel. We should not interfere with a girl, however, if we found her in a respectable house, whether it was a European or a Chinaman's house, as long as she was there on a visit, or something of that kind.

11643. I suppose you have found the Chinese gardeners hard working and industrious men, and you would not compare them to the proprietors of Chinese gambling-houses? No; you could not compare them at all. I speak of the gamblers as those who are living upon the gardeners, actually cheating them out of their substance. And they do cheat. I have a coin in my possession at home that is made for the purpose of cheating at fan-tan. If they are playing with a soft kind of person, as they turn over the counters after having covered them with the cup, they will see where the biggest stake is, and if it is on the three, and that is going to be the number of coins left, they will turn one over and make it show two edges, thus making the number left four instead of three. That coin is made so that when looked at on one side it shows one edge just as an ordinary coin, and when seen on the other it shows two edges and looks like two coins.

11644. But if the bank were winning without using that coin they would let it alone, I suppose? Yes; they are very quick indeed. I believe that invariably they can tell how many coins are under the cup.

11645. Do many Europeans gamble with the Chinamen in Waterloo? My men tell me that some do, but I have never seen any.

11646. Do they gamble on Sundays down there? I am told that they do, but I have not personally seen them.

11647. What is the name of the street in which those tenements that you were referring to are situated? Part of them are in Retreat-street, and the rest in a paddock.

11648. You would like to see a law enacted that would apply to everybody—that would prevent too many Chinese living in a house, or too many Europeans either? Oh, certainly; we want a law that would apply to all nationalities, and it would be a great assistance to us.

- Sub-Inspector Lawless. 11649. Have you found any other nationalities in the city who have the same characteristic of overcrowding that the Chinese have? In Redfern there are some people called Assyrians, who live very many together in one house; but that is a house, not a hut.
- 17 Nov., 1891. 11650. But it is only in Waterloo that the Chinese live in huts? Yes, excepting in very large establishments, like Robertson's coach factory. At the same time I have seen thirty or forty Chinamen in a house that would not accommodate more than four or five Europeans.
11651. With regard to women, you have just said that there are some women of the lower order living amongst the Chinese—that, however, I understand you to say is only as a last resource? Yes, in all probability, having no other place to go to when they come out of gaol, they would go to the Chinamen and try and live at peace as far as possible.
11652. How many Chinese informers were there to your knowledge in No. 2 district at the time you were assisting Inspector Mackay? I cannot say. There might have been three or four. People have told me about them. Two Chinamen sent memorandums to the inspector about the gambling, but after the experience we had had we did not take action upon them.
11653. Do you remember Robert Lee Kum? I do not remember the name. On the occasion to which I refer we did not want the information. We had enough evidence to prosecute upon, and we found that these people were only trying to get money out of it. They asked what kind of reward they were to receive, and that exposed their object at once.
11656. Was there an increase or a decrease in the amount of gambling carried on in No. 2 district during the time you were there? I think that the gambling was slightly on the decrease before I left. They had slightly overdone the thing I fancy, and as they can't all get a living out of it the number was decreasing.
11657. With regard to the gambling the public complain that the police walk up and down the street in front of the very places where it is being carried on, and take no notice of it. Now, I see that there is a good deal of difficulty about it? Yes; there is. In the first place the constable has to see that there is gambling really being carried on, and then he has to report the result of his investigations to his superior officer. Then we have to lay an information and get out a warrant, but it is very difficult to identify anybody, particularly a Chinaman, until you have seen him several times. It is a very difficult thing to identify a dozen people whom you have never seen before.
11658. Then the law requires altering very much? Yes; but as far as the charges of neglect of duty that have been preferred against the police are concerned, we are pretty well used to all kinds of calumny.
11659. Mr. Abigail has just suggested that you might get citizens to help you in bringing the gambling-house proprietors to justice, but it strikes me that it would be a very hard thing to get reputable citizens to help you in that kind of work, so that what you really want is an amended law? Yes; that is it. I think that a very short Bill would do it. We want a Common Lodging-house Bill, and a Bill to enable us to arrest gamblers at sight.
11660. From what you have said I gather that you have found that the Chinese merchants and the hard-working Chinamen are never in favour of gambling? Well, I cannot say that, because it is upon the hard-working people, particularly the Chinese gardeners, that these gambling-house keepers prey.
11661. But you have found that the really respectable merchants are not in favour of it? Oh, no. As I was saying, there is a syndicate of Chinamen running the gambling-houses.
11662. Did you ever speak to any of your superior officers about the difficulty of getting a conviction under the law as it stands? I have spoken to a magistrate on the question, and he has told me that he would not convict without a warrant.

WEDNESDAY, 18 NOVEMBER, 1891.

Present:—

THE MAYOR OF SYDNEY (MR. ALDERMAN MANNING, J.P.), PRESIDENT.

FRANCIS ABIGAIL, Esq., J.P., VICE-PRESIDENT.

RAMSEY MCKILLOP, Esq.,

QUONG TART, Esq.,

JOHN STUART HAWTHORNE, Esq.

Mr. John Maguire called and examined:—

- Sergeant Maguire. 11664. President.] You are a member of the police force? Yes—a sergeant of police, stationed at No. 4 station, Lower George-street.
11665. How long have you been there? Nearly eight years.
- 18 Nov., 1891. 11666. Where were you stationed before that? At No. 2 station, near the railway.
11667. How long were you there? Ten years and a half.
11668. During the seven years you have been stationed in Lower George-street the Chinese gambling has increased considerably, has it not? I do not think so.
11669. Do they not now occupy more shops on the front street than they used to in years gone by? A number of shops have been built there during that time, but there were houses on the ground before, and they were pulled down.
11670. You have no hesitation in saying they have not increased? They have increased, I think, but very little.
11671. Were you engaged in any of the raids that were made in Lower George-street during the past seven years? I was. 11672.

Sergeant
Maguire.

18 Nov., 1891.

11672. In how many? I was engaged in all the raids that Mr. Atwill made.
11673. How many raids were made during the last seven years? I cannot tell you from memory.
11674. Has there been one for every year that you have been down there? I cannot tell you, but I believe I was in every raid that was made since I went to the division.
11675. Have you had complaints made to you specially by the shopkeepers of the way that gambling is carried on down there? No, I have not had complaints made to me personally, but they have complained. Two or three years ago some of the coal-lumpers informed me that they had arranged in their society to inflict fines upon any of the Union men that they would find in these gambling-houses; but I do not know whether they carried it into effect or not.
11676. Have not the European shopkeepers complained to you? Some have.
11677. Mr. McKillop.] Who are those persons that complained to you? Mr. Nock told me once that the fact of so many Chinese being there would spoil the business of the Europeans.
11678. Mr. Abigail.] Did Mr. Maguire, the photographer, ever complain to you? If he did I have no recollection of it.
11679. Of what nature were the complaints generally, as far as you remember? I know Mr. Nock told me that in consequence of the Chinese occupying these places in George-street the business of the Europeans was falling off. He told me his trade had fallen away.
11680. And he asked you, I suppose, to give special attention to suppressing the evil;—did he ask you if anything could be done? I believe he did.
11681. What did you reply to that? If my memory is clear, I said that if the law was simplified we could deal with them easily enough.
11682. Then would you simplify the law so as to be able to deal with the Chinese gambling effectually; can you suggest any amendment of the present law to that end? I can only go by the experience we have had down there. On several occasions when raids were made the police had to resort to extreme means of getting into the places. I will give you an illustration:—On one occasion Senior-constable Adair, in company with myself and several other members of the police force, whose names I cannot call to mind just now, under Mr. Atwill's instructions, went to one of these houses for the purpose of making a raid. Mr. Atwill was at the front and we were at the back. We thought we should get into the premises by way of a gate that was there; but it was locked and barred on the inside. Constable Adair, who had been a seafaring man in his time, got two ropes and attached hooks to the end, which were thrown over the gate, and by this means he got over to the other side. The noise made in doing this had given them a warning inside the house that something was wrong, and most of them got away before we could succeed in catching them. If some law were made to simplify the work for the police, so that they would not have to lose so much time it would be an easier matter to deal with the Chinese gambling-houses down there.
11683. If they were forbidden to lock or bolt their doors do you mean? No; but if it were made an offence for persons to be found on the premises, either in the front or back rooms.
11684. You would make it an offence for persons to be found on the premises where it was known to be a gambling-house? Yes, or a reputed gambling-house. If it were made an offence for persons to be found there without lawful excuse it would simplify the law very much.
11685. In some of these places they erect strong partitions and barricades, do they not? Yes.
11686. Would it not be of considerable assistance to you if they were prohibited from erecting these obstructions? Well, I do not think we could interfere with them to that extent—to say that they must not put up a partition on their own premises.
11687. But are they not erected for the purpose of keeping the police and others out while gambling is being carried on? No doubt that is the purpose they erect them for.
11688. In the course of your ordinary duty have you been in any of the gambling-houses down there and seen them play fan-tan? I have never been inside any of these places, except when I have been on duty as I have described, and in uniform.
11689. You have seen persons going into these places I suppose very often—Europeans as well as Chinese? I have seen them in the shops numbers of times.
11690. And I suppose you know that the people who went there did not go for ordinary business purposes? That has been my impression, but I had no proof of it.
11691. Many of these Chinese shops do not carry on any legitimate business whatever? Well, if they do it must be very small, if we may judge by the stock appearing in the windows. It does not appear to increase or diminish very much, if at all.
11692. Is it not a fact that the stock you see in the windows is a mere "blind" in most cases? I have stated that the stock in these places is very small, that it does not seem to increase or diminish to any extent, and in my opinion they do not carry on a legitimate business.
11693. Do you remember having read in the papers the account of the deputation that waited on the Colonial Secretary in reference to the Chinese gambling in Lower George-street? I read the account.
11694. And you remember that some members of that deputation made statements to the effect that the police of No. 4 station particularly were in the habit of receiving bribes or presents, and so forth? Yes, I remember reading that.
11695. Now, during the seven years you have been on duty in that division do you remember any circumstance having occurred that would lead you to believe that there was any truth whatever in those statements of bribery and corruption in connection with the police? No, nothing of the kind.
11696. Have you never heard of a constable receiving a present of any kind whatever? No; I never heard of a policeman of any rank receiving a present from a Chinaman until I saw the account of that deputation that waited on Sir Henry Parkes.
11697. When you saw that in print what impression did it make upon your mind? I thought it was untrue.
11698. Has it ever come under your notice that constables have evinced a desire to get on the Lower George-street beat particularly? I never heard a constable express a wish for any particular beat. A man has to work his beat for a certain number of hours, no matter where he is.
11699. Are you on friendly terms with the Chinese in Lower George-street? Well, if a Chinaman meets me, and says, "Good day" or "Good morning," I have the courtesy to reply to him, but my acquaintance with them extends no further.

Sergeant
Maguire.
18 Nov., 1891.

11700. Do you know Mr. Dawson? I do.

11701. Have you had frequent conversations with him about the Chinese gambling? Well, he has had frequent conversation with me on the subject. When I say that I mean that he has forced his conversation on to me, and I have told him that the law is defective.

11702. I believe he made a complaint to you on one Sunday, and you went out together to find and arrest a man—do you remember that? I do, but that was not in connection with the Chinese question.

11703. But while you were out did not you have a conversation with him on the subject of the Anti-Chinese Gambling League, and so forth? Possibly I may have—I will not be sure.

11704. Did you have any conversation about the Chinese gambling-house keepers getting information of the intentions of the police when a raid was contemplated? I saw that in print.

11705. Did you have any conversation with Dawson about it? No; but Dawson told me that on one occasion a Chinaman came to him and told him that a raid was to be made on a certain night.

11706. Did you say to him, in discussing this matter, that it looked very suspicious, and you wished you knew who it was gave the information? I never expressed those words.

11707. You never used those words, or words to that effect to Dawson? Never.

11708. Did you ever say there must be police traitors in the camp? Never, in my life. Dawson said so. I do not like to say a harsh thing of him, but the fact is he is very seldom sober.

11709. Mr. Hawthorne.] You would not trust the deep secrets of your mind to such a man? I would not trust anything to him.

11710. Mr. Abigail.] And you state positively, that you were never offered, or received a bribe or present from a Chinaman? Never in my life, either directly or indirectly.

11711. Is there much immorality (as between the sexes) among the Chinese in Lower George-street? I can only speak from what I have observed, and I consider you find as much immorality among a similar number of Europeans.

11712. There is nothing exceptional in the state of the Chinese, morally speaking, down there? In my opinion there is not. At any rate it has not come under my observation, and I have been on duty there at all hours of the day and night.

11713. Have you had complaints made to you that the Chinese are particularly offensive to European women passing up and down the street there—respectable women I refer to? Never.

11714. You never heard of them being assaulted, or anything of that kind? I never in my life heard of anything of that kind taking place down there.

11716. Can you state in how many cases that has taken place? I cannot say the number of cases. I know that when any case of the kind has come under the notice of the police they have always acted upon it in the usual way.

11717. I suppose, Mr. Atwill, the inspector in charge of the division gives instructions to you, or the other sergeant in command of the men, to inform them how they are to carry out their duties, does he not? When Mr. Atwill is absent the responsibility rests upon the non-commissioned officers under him. If Mr. Atwill was away I would do my duty just the same as if he was in George-street with me.

11719. Did you do that often? Yes, I did; although I know that I was doing an illegal act at the time.

11720. Mr. Hawthorne.] You knew, as a matter of fact, that you had no more right to go into these Chinese shops ostensibly carrying on a legitimate business, in the way you stated, than you would have to turn the customers out of a European shop? Yes; I knew I was doing an illegal thing.

11721. But you thought they were carrying on an illegal business, and upon that belief you acted? Yes; my impression was strong, but I could not prove it.

11722. Have you ever heard it charged against the police that they have connived at this gambling among the Chinese, or that they have not exercised proper vigilance in suppressing it? Well, I have seen statements of that kind in the Press since the Anti-Chinese Gambling League started.

11723. You never heard of it before? No, and I do not believe it, although I saw it in print; and I think I have as good a right to an opinion on the subject as other people down there.

11724. Do you know, as a matter of fact that the Chinamen congregating as they have done, in Lower George-street, has had a deteriorating effect upon the whole district—given it a bad tone altogether? I have heard the members of the Anti-Chinese League call it “Chinatown,” but I have not heard anybody else say it.

11725. Do you not think that the trade of the European business people down there has fallen off very much? I do not think so. The general stagnation in trade is injuring their business in my opinion.

11726. You think the falling off of business arises from other causes, and not from the presence of the Chinese as they exist in that quarter? Yes. There is not much money in circulation, and no flush of trade in any direction.

11727. Mr. Hawthorne.] In your opinion, if the whole of the Chinese premises in Lower George-street were vacated straightaway, so far as the Chinese are concerned, the business would still be as dull as it is at present in that quarter? I do not believe those places would be let again.

11728. A great number of the shops would remain untenanted? Yes. I may say there are a great many empty even now.

11729. And that state of things, you think, is owing, not to the fact of it being called Chinatown, from the presence of Chinese in considerable numbers there, but rather to the stagnation of business generally in the city? That is my opinion.

11730. How many of these Chinese dens are there in Lower George-street? You mean reputed gambling-shops, I suppose?

11731. Yes. Do you think there are twenty? I should think there are about twenty; there may be more, or perhaps less.

11732. And of course there are some respectable Chinese merchants carrying on business down there who

- who have nothing whatever to do with Chinese gambling? Yes. They are highly respectable people, I consider. Sergeant
Maguire.
11733. They carry on their business in a manner equal to the Europeans, I suppose? They carry on an extensive business, importing and exporting. 18 Nov., 1891.
11734. They give no trouble to the police in any way? No.
11736. They are a sober race as a rule, are they not? Yes. I do not think I ever saw three of them locked up for being drunk during the whole of my experience.
11737. As regards sanitary arrangements, do they keep their places clean, and in every way to be desired? So far as they have come under my observation they are as clean as other premises. Of course the sanitary condition of the houses is in the department of the Inspector of Nuisances—the police do not take control of that.
11738. But, as you visit these places, you can see whether they are dirty or otherwise? I have not particularly directed my attention to whether they were clean or otherwise.
11739. Have you noticed whether there is much opium-smoking down there? No; I do not think there is much opium-smoking.
11740. You know the smell of opium? Yes; I know it well. I have seen them smoking opium sometimes; but I do not think there is much opium-smoking in Lower George-street. I have only seen it used in one house there.
11741. Now, going from there to Goulburn-street, that is, in No. 2 division, how long were you there? I was there from 1873 to 1883.
11743. During the years 1876 and 1877 were there not a number of young girls arrested under the Industrial Schools Act in Goulburn-street? I have no recollection of it; it is a long time ago.
11744. But you know that a large number of young women used to visit the Chinese there? Yes; and if we found they had no other means of support we would arrest them and charge them under the Vagrant Act.
11745. At that time was gambling carried on in Goulburn, Wexford, and Campbell Streets to a very large extent? A number of those who used to go out hawking during the day would live together and play fan-tan at night.
11746. Did Europeans visit them? I never saw many there.
11747. Have you ever heard of anything occurring in the way of the police getting bribes or presents in connection with No. 2 station? No; I never heard of it, and I would not believe it if I did.
11748. Did you ever hear that in these gambling-houses so much in the shilling was put aside to form a fund called the Police Sustentation Fund? No; I saw it in print.
11749. Did you understand that the object of that fund was to bribe the police to let the gamblers alone? According to what appeared in the papers that was what it was for, but I have no doubt in my own mind that it was a lie.
11750. You believe it is absolutely untrue? Yes.
11751. You have a great deal of experience in connection with the police? I have.
11753. Did you ever know of any of them being dismissed for receiving bribes or presents from anyone on their beats? No case of that kind ever came under my notice.
11754. Mr. Quong Tart.] How long have you been engaged under Mr. Atwill in Lower George-street? Eight years next December.
11755. Mr. Hawthorne.] Did you not spend some time in No. 2 division also? Yes; I was ten and a half years there.
11756. And you had ample opportunity of investigating the Chinese quarters in that division as well as No. 4? Yes.
11757. Mr. Quong Tart.] Which do you consider the worst district now—No. 2 or No. 4? Well, I have not had any knowledge of No. 2 for eight years, so I cannot speak with authority; in fact I am a perfect stranger to it now.
11758. Can you say when your attention was first called to Chinese gambling in Lower George-street? It has been carried on, more or less, all the time.
11759. To what extent is it carried on now;—do you think it has increased up to the present time, or decreased? I cannot say.
11760. Say within the last six months? It is a very difficult thing for me to pick on the gamblers because I never see it; I may speak on suspicion.
11761. Well, are there more houses to let there, or have they changed hands? The Chinese are always vacating houses, and others coming into them again.
11762. Within the last six months are there more Chinese shops in Lower George-street, or are there less? Within the last three or four months, that is, since the Chinese Gambling League started there have been less people about the Chinese places than formerly.
11763. Do you know if there are any of these Chinese places to let down there? Yes; there are some to let; I have seen the notices on the doors or windows.
11764. Tell me where are the Chinese business places—in what part of Lower George-street are they mostly to be found? There are more between Bridge-street and Circular Quay than further on; but there are Chinese all over the place there. 11765.

- Sergeant Maguire.
18 Nov., 1891.
11765. Between No. 4 station and Dawes' Point are there many places to let? Yes; there have been places empty there for months.
11766. I asked you the question because of the complaints we have heard of the Chinese crowding out the Europeans in that direction, and spoiling the business, and you say there are plenty of shops to let? Yes; there have been shops to let there for six months.
11767. Has your attention ever been drawn to the Chinese gambling-places down there by Chinese informers? There was one Chinaman who used to live principally in the country, and who, when he would come to Sydney, would complain that gambling was carried on in this or that place. I really believe—though of course I might be mistaken—that the man was hardly right in his head.
11768. Would you take action at once if a reliable man came and told you that gambling was going on in one of these places? What action could I take—the police must get a warrant out before they can enter a place, and that is the business of the inspector.
11769. I understood you to say that you turned out the Chinamen and Europeans from these places sometimes? Yes, from the front shops; but I really had no power under the law to do that.
11771. Mr. Hawthorne.] In the same way, if you see ten or a dozen youths assembled together in the open air, you may know or shrewdly suspect in your own mind that they have been gambling, but you must actually see them in the act before you can prosecute them? Yes. In order to make a successful raid on these gambling-houses we not only have to arrest the people we find there but secure the gambling implements as well. In fact we have to prove clearly that gambling has been going on under our own observation, in order to secure a conviction.
11772. The gambling is conducted away in the back premises, which are shut off by two or three barred doors as a rule? Yes.
11773. So that you have great difficulty in getting into the place where they are engaged in gambling; and, by the time you reach them, all the implements of gambling are, as a rule, cleared away? Certainly.
11774. And there you see a certain number of men, whom you believe to have been gambling—in fact you know in your own mind that they have been—but you have got nothing to prove it? We have no doubt about the matter, but cannot prove it; that is the position, we have no doubt.
11775. Mr. Quong Tart.] It has been stated that in some of these places they play behind a calico screen, and that when the wind blows this on one side the gambling can be seen going on from the street? Well, I suppose I can see as much as other people, and I have never seen it. In every raid we have had the greatest difficulty was in gaining an entrance to these places, and on the last occasion Mr. Atwill had to use sledge-hammers, crow-bars, and picks to break the doors, and then it was only by the aid of some civilians that we effected our object.
11776. What would you suggest to do away with the difficulties that confront you in dealing with this evil? Well, my position is much humbler than other members of the police force that you have examined here, and I do not know that I am in a position to suggest. I can offer my opinion only.
11777. Mr. Hawthorne.] You have a delicacy in answering the question because you think any suggestion as to an amendment of the law for the suppression of the betting propensities of the Chinese or Europeans should come from higher officers in the service than yourself? Yes. I may offer an opinion, and my answer to the question is that the law is inoperative.
11778. Mr. Abigail.] How can it be inoperative when you make successful raids? What I mean is that it ought not to be necessary to use crow-bars and picks in order to get into these places.
11779. It is extremely difficult under the existing law to deal with this question? Yes; that is why I say the law is inoperative.
11780. Mr. Quong Tart.] Can you not make a suggestion as to how the law should be amended? My suggestion would have no effect. It is the business of the law officers of the Crown to frame the law, and the legislature passes it into effect.
11781. Quite so; but, as an experienced police officer you ought to be able to recommend something that would throw light on the subject? I have already stated in the earlier part of my evidence that I would make it an offence for persons to be found on the premises of a reputed gambling-house.
11782. Mr. Hawthorne.] In other words, for the efforts of the police to be effectual, you think it is necessary that they should be able to go into a gambling-house at any time, and if you find persons assembled there for the purpose of gambling, although you may not see them in the act, to arrest them and charge them with the offence? Yes. If the law were made like that, we should not have much difficulty.
11783. Mr. Quong Tart.] What game do the Chinese principally indulge in? From what I have seen, fan-tan is the principal, but they also play a game called pak-ah-pu, which I do not understand.
11784. Have you formed any idea which is the worst, fan-tan or pak-ah-pu? I never spent 1s. on either, so I cannot tell you.
11785. Do you know any of the bankers in connection with the lotteries? I do not know anything about it.
11786. You have not found any of the Chinese merchants down there connected with gambling-houses? No; they are strictly business men.
11787. Do you think they are opposed to gambling? I do not think they trouble themselves about it.

Mr. Robert Anderson called and examined:—

- Mr. R. Anderson.
18 Nov., 1891.
11788. President.] You are a retired Inspector of Police, Mr. Anderson? Yes.
11789. While you were in the service in what parts of the city were you mostly engaged? I was in the central division last. I was for fifteen years in that division.
11790. What part is that? That includes all that part of the city north of Margaret-street and Hunter-street, as far as Liverpool-street.
- 11791.

Mr.
R. Anderson.
18 Nov., 1891.

11791. And where were you before that? Before that I was in the north end of the city.
11792. And that would include the Chinese quarters of Lower George-street? Yes.
11793. How many years were you there? Between six and seven years. I took charge of that division on the 19th June, 1868, and I left it on the 12th February, 1875.
11794. Mr. Abigail.] During those years were there many Chinese residents in Lower George-street? Yes, there were a good many Chinese residents, merchants, cabinet-makers, and others, and there were some houses which were reputed gaming-houses. There were about eleven of that class, I think, in that division.
11795. Were they frequented by Europeans and Chinese? They were situated in Lower George-street, Harrington-street, Cambridge-street, Gloucester-street, Brownbear-lane, and Vinegar-lane.
11796. They were distributed over those places? Yes.
11798. Did you take any action in consequence? I did. I may mention that I not only took action against any of the Chinese that carried on unlawful gaming, but also took measures to prevent the Chinese from being maltreated by the larrikin class. I may mention that the Games and Wagers Act is a very defective measure. It is, in fact, one of the most confused pieces of legislation in the statute book.
11799. Is that the Act under which you have to proceed against the Chinese? That is the present Act; but although it is so very defective it is quite evident from the preamble that it was the earnest intention of the Legislature to put down all kinds of unlawful gaming. I think the preamble is something like this: "Whereas the laws hitherto made in respect of unlawful gaming have been found of no avail to prevent the mischief which may happen therefrom, be it therefore enacted," and so on—giving power to issue warrants and search places, and so on. The 6th section of the Games and Wagers Act gives the police power to enter all billiard and bagatelle rooms; also all houses, shops, and premises of any kind, where any bowls, fives, rockets, quoits, skittles, nine-pins, or any game of a like kind is played. Taking these concluding words, "any game of a like kind," with the preamble to the Act, I considered that this section authorised me to enter any place where I had good reason to believe any unlawful game was going on, and on that I acted.
11800. You acted upon that in connection with the Chinese gambling? Yes, acting on the belief that the 6th section gave me the power, as I have stated, I visited all the places where I had reason to believe gambling was carried on. I always was able to get information from the respectable class of citizens; indeed the more respectable Chinese themselves assisted me very materially. I never applied for any warrant, as I considered the Act gave me authority sufficient for my purposes, and it has always been my object, throughout the whole of my career, to prevent crime without prosecution, if possible. So I instituted a systematic course of visitation late and early.
11801. How often did you visit those places? Two or three times a week, according to the information we got of what was going on. I may mention that one Sunday morning I paid an unexpected visit, very quietly to a house called concerning which I had received information, and we got seventy-five men gaming in a room at the top of the house.
11802. Europeans or Chinese? They were all Chinese—cabinet-makers, market-gardeners, hawkers, and that class of men. The first thing I did was to seize all the money on the table and the counters, and those who were present ran away as fast as they could. I asked who the money and counters belonged to, and as no one claimed them I handed them over to the Superintendent of Police on the following day. I mention this case as an example of the system I adopted in dealing with them.
11803. President.] You simply dispersed them on that occasion? Yes. I made a great many visits of a similar nature.
11804. Did you take any action at all that led to a conviction? On another occasion I visited a house in Harrington-street in the evening. There must have been about eighty there, I should think; some were gaming, and the remainder looking on. There was a large table in the room. I got in softly, but I had not time to count those present before the lamps were put out. As I have said, however, I should think there were about eighty. I had a talk with the keepers of these houses, and warned them that I certainly would institute a prosecution of some kind against them if they did not stop the gambling. They all did so except one, who was interested in keeping not only a gambling-house but a disorderly house. I proceeded against him for keeping a disorderly house, and he was convicted at the Quarter Sessions. After that I really had no trouble in connection with Chinese gaming down there. When I left that division, on the 12th February, 1875, there was not a Chinese gambling-house or disorderly house in it.
11805. During the term you have mentioned, am I right in concluding that the Chinese places were not frequented by Europeans? Not for the purpose of gaming. Women of loose character would visit them occasionally, but that I effectually stopped as well.
11806. Mr. Abigail.] Are we to conclude that this constant visitation had the effect of stamping the Chinese gambling out? Yes, it had.
11807. Were you ever a party to trying to obtain convictions against Chinese gambling, and failed, owing to the defectiveness of the present law? No; I did not institute any proceedings of the kind. As I have said before, the Act is very confused.
11808. You saw great difficulty in proceeding under it? Yes.
11809. Were you a party to any proceedings at all against the Chinese gambling? Not further than I have stated, by a systematic visitation. I invariably went myself, taking a sergeant with me.
11810. President.] You never took actual proceedings against them for violating the law? No, except in the case I have mentioned.
11811. That was also a gaming-house? Yes.
11812. You achieved your object by means of visitation? Yes.
11813. Mr. Abigail.] Do you know if the Chinese gambling in Lower George-street has increased to any extent of late years? I cannot give any particulars myself, but I have heard so.
11814. You have seen the reports that have been in the press? Yes.
11815. Do you think that a system of visitation, the same as you established in your time, would have the same effect now? Well, I think if the system I established of visitation of all suspected places in that respect had been continued the present state of things, as alleged, would never have arisen.
11816. Mr. Hawthorne.] Are we to understand that those who have since been in charge of affairs there have not visited those places regularly, or that they have adopted other methods? I cannot say. I have not the slightest idea what method has been adopted.

- Mr. R. Anderson.
11817. Mr. Abigail.] But I understand you to state that if the same regular system had been carried on the evil would not have increased to the extent people say it has? No; I do not think so.
11818. Mr. Hawthorne.] Do your remarks apply to Chinese gambling or the European method of betting? I am speaking of Chinese gambling.
11819. You were for many years in charge of the central division, were you not? Yes.
11820. There was not much Chinese gambling in that division, was there? There were a few places, but they were gradually stopped.
11821. How many years is it since you were attached to No. 4 station? I left in February, 1875.
11822. That was fifteen years before your retirement? Yes.
11823. Mr. Abigail.] I suppose you read the accounts of the deputation that waited on the Colonial Secretary on the subject of Chinese gambling? Yes.
11824. And you saw that some serious charges were made against the police? Yes.
11825. From your long experience in the police force of this city, do you think there was any justification for those charges? I do not think there is a word of truth in those charges. I know several of the officers of the division more particularly referred to, and they are men of high character.
11826. How long were you in the New South Wales police force? Thirty-five years and eight months.
11827. During that time did you ever have brought under your notice one case of a policeman having received a present or bribe from any one on his beat? No; I never had one such case.
18828. Were you ever offered a present, Mr. Anderson? No; except when I left that division. I was presented with a handsome testimonial in the shape of an address and a gold watch and chain and a silver tea and coffee service and gold watch and chain for my wife, which was given by the general public there, including the Chinese merchants.
11829. So that the articles of jewellery which you are now wearing were not purchased by you out of your accumulated funds, or obtained as presents from persons with whom you have to deal as a police officer, but were simply presented to you as a token of esteem by the citizens of Sydney? Yes; they were presented to me at a public meeting.
- [Inscription on the case of the watch presented to Mr. Anderson:—"Presented to Robert Anderson, Esq., Sub Inspector of Police, by his friends of the Northern Division, on the occasion of his transfer from the charge of that Division to that of the Central Division of the city of Sydney; March 31st, 1875."]
11830. Mr. Abigail.] Before you accepted that present did you have to consult the Inspector-General? Yes; I had to obtain sanction.
11831. And you say that was the only occasion on which you received any present during your service in Lower George-street, and that was publicly made as a recognition of your efficient discharge of your duty and not for neglecting it? Decidedly.
11832. Mr. Hawthorne.] That present was subscribed for by the public generally, a few Chinese merchants being among the number—it was not distinctly a Chinese presentation? No; it was from all classes and creeds.
11833. Mr. Abigail.] Do you know Inspector Atwill? Yes.
11834. How long have you known him? About twenty-five years.
11835. Do you think he is a man who would be likely to take a bribe? I do not think so. From what I know of him I am certain he would not.
11836. Is he efficient in the discharge of his duty? That is a subject I would rather not give an opinion upon.
11837. Do you think he would be likely to wink at any breach of the law or any crime whatever for any cause? I do not think he would wink at anything in the shape of bribery.
11838. Do you think he would be likely to allow Chinese gambling to be carried on to the injury of a whole district, for any reason whatever, if he could stop it? I do not. Whether he would take the proper steps to combat with the evil, of course I cannot say. I was always too busily engaged with my own duties to pay much attention to others.
11839. Mr. Hawthorne.] Would you think him above suspicion in the matter of accepting a bribe? I am certain he would not do it; he is a man of high character.
11840. Mr. Abigail.] Does that remark also apply to other officers of the police with whom you have come in contact during your service in the force? Yes; more particularly the old officers. I would not speak with such confidence of men I had not known for a long time.
11841. Do you know Senior-sergeant Higgins? Yes; he is one of the best non-commissioned officers in the whole of the service.
11842. Do you know whether he has accumulated any property? I believe he has.
11843. Do you think it likely that Sergeant Higgins was helped to acquire his property by accepting bribes? I do not believe it. A more honourable, upright man in every way I do not know than Sergeant Higgins.
11844. Do you know Constable Beadman? I know there is such a man, but cannot speak of him personally.
11845. Was Sergeant Macintosh in No. 4 division when you were there? No.
11846. Was Dawson there? He was.
11847. Do you think he is a man likely to do anything of that kind? No; he is a man of high character and an efficient officer. I do not think he would accept bribery in the discharge of his duty.
11848. While you were down there were any complaints made against Chinese storekeepers of receiving stolen property? There was a complaint made in one case.
11849. Was it Way Kee? No. I would not call this man a storekeeper. He lived in Harrington-street. There was some old copper found in the place, and there was some action taken, but it could not be proved that he knew of the copper having been stolen. That is the only case I remember.
11850. Did the Chinese ever give you any assistance in carrying out the law while you were down there? Yes; I received assistance in that way from the respectable Chinese merchants.
11851. Apart from gambling, did you find the Chinese a riotous or drunken class—did they give the police much trouble? Quite the contrary; they are a quiet and orderly people; even those men who gambled were quiet. They gave the police no trouble whatever.
11852. So that if the Chinese gambling as at present carried on were suppressed there would not be much cause for a great outcry against these people? No; unless things have altered very much since I was there. The Chinese as a class are very orderly. In all my experience I never saw a Chinaman drunk.
11853. Are they exceptionally clean in the way they keep their premises? No; they are not. Sometimes we had cause of complaint in that direction.
- 11854.

Mr.

R. Anderson.

18 Nov., 1891.

11854. Sometimes their premises were not in keeping with proper sanitary regulations? Yes.
11855. Have you heard of them being prominent in assaults upon women, or anything of that kind? No. On the contrary, the European women living with them have often spoken of the uniform kindness they receive at their hands.
11858. Can you offer any suggestion as to how the present Act should be amended to make it effective? That, perhaps, would take too long. But I think it might be made to embrace all the present forms of gambling. You will see, if you read the Act, that many of the forms of gambling mentioned there are not known now, and I think, therefore, it should be altered not only to meet the present requirements but be made so elastic as to meet all future forms of gambling, as they are so frequently changing. Perhaps in ten years hence there will be forms of gambling not known at the present time. There is also too much circumlocution about the present Act, and it should be made more simple and clear, in order to enable the authorities to deal effectively with this evil.
11859. Then you would amend the law so as to enable the police to deal with all present and future forms of gambling whatsoever? Yes.
11860. You would be in favour of making it a penal offence to be found in a gambling-house? Yes, I think so.
11861. Do you know that at the present time the Chinese erect strong barricades inside their houses, and bolt and bar the doors for the purpose of keeping out the police? I have heard so, but have no knowledge of it personally.
11862. If it is so, would it not be well to prevent the bolting and barring of doors, and so forth? In my time I should have asked why the barricades were erected. But they never attempted to interfere with me in any way.
11863. In your time these barricades did not exist? No.
11864. Mr. Quong Tart.] I believe there was a great deal of larrikinism in Lower George-street while you were there, Mr. Anderson? Yes; and I put a stop to it, for which I received a special letter of thanks from Messrs. Curtis and Gannon.
11865. Your only object was to maintain the law without respect to the question of race or nationality? Yes.
11866. Did you find the Chinese merchants in Lower George-street willing to co-operate with you in putting down the gambling evil? Yes, they often offered to assist me, such men as On Chong, Cheang Ah Teek, and Ah Toy and others.
11867. How many gambling-places were there in Lower George-street during your time? There were eleven reputed gambling-houses, where gambling was occasionally carried on.
11868. Were there any lottery-shops there for the sale of pak-ah-pu tickets? No; there was none of that then; only fan-tan.
11869. Mr. Hawthorne.] While you were stationed at No. 4 station did you ever receive from the Chinese merchants any presents of preserved ginger, chests of tea, or anything of that kind? No.
11870. Is it a customary thing at the New Year time for instance? I do not think so.
11871. You never found it so in your own case? No; I have visited the Chinese, and had tea with them; or some whisky, perhaps at the New Year, and I think I had champagne on one occasion.
11872. But you never received anything in the shape of a Christmas box? No.
11873. Mr. Quong Tart.] You went in simply to show good feeling? Yes, that is, I am speaking now of the respectable merchants, such as Sun Kum Tiy, On Chong, and others.
11874. Mr. Hawthorne.] You could go in and out of these places with perfect confidence, because they never gave you any trouble? Yes, and not only that, but they gave me every assistance when I wanted it.
11875. Mr. Quong Tart.] In your time down there did you ever hear of any complaints from the European residents of Lower George-street that the Chinese obstructed the foot traffic, or interfered with females passing up and down in any way? No, so far as my memory serves me I did not. I have found the Chinese as a class very orderly.
11876. You found them inclined to obey you when you spoke to them? Yes.
11877. If you went into European houses the same as you did in these Chinese places you speak of, where gambling was going on, that is, places of the same class, you would have to take certain precautions? Yes.
11878. About the sanitary condition of the Chinese premises, you say some of them were dirty? Yes, there were complaints made on that score. I remember there were some places I had received complaints about, but when I spoke to them about it, they set to work to clean them, and kept them clean.
11879. Do you think those persons knew the sanitary law in the first place? Possibly they did not. As I have said, they paid attention to what I told them.
11880. Do you think if they were constantly visited, and made to understand what the law was, that they, as law-abiding people, would keep the law? I believe such would be the case from my experience of them in that respect in the past.
11881. Supposing notices were written in Chinese character, stating the regulations as to sanitary arrangements, that only so many persons should be allowed to sleep in one room, and so on, do you think that would have a good effect? Yes, possibly it might. There is no doubt a great deal of overcrowding amongst the Chinese. I think some arrangement of that kind—to provide that each individual should have so many cubic feet of air—is very necessary.
11882. Did you find much opium-smoking there? Yes, there were a good many opium smokers in those places where I suspected gambling to be carried on. There were two or three women who contracted the habit too, and I spoke to them very strongly. They left the locality soon afterwards. I used to personally visit those places where I suspected gambling was carried on very frequently.
11883. Is it true that the Chinese decoy young women to their places, or have you ever known any cases? Well,

Mr. R. Anderson. Well, there were some young women who used to frequent several of those places, but I cannot say about them being decoyed.

18 Nov., 1891. 11883. In those cases would you say that the young women were virtuous before they went there, or were they already degraded? I can only say that we found some young women there. I invariably turned them away myself if I went, and I employed one officer specially, I think it was Senior-sergeant Bradwell, to see that no young women were allowed to remain in the Chinese quarters, of the character I refer to.

11884. Mr. Hawthorne.] The young women you found in the Chinese quarters, were they, any of them, of the more respectable class? In some cases I have found highly-educated women among the Chinese.

11885. What are we to understand—that you found young women of poor but respectable parentage going to live amongst the Chinese for purposes of prostitution? Well, it may be only for a time. For instance, I can mention, without giving the name, the case of one young woman, of a respectable Colonial family, who learnt to smoke opium there, but I got her away. Then, again, I found quite an accomplished lady in one place in Cambridge-street. She was brought by a Chinaman from Melbourne. I spoke to her on several occasions, and advised her. Of course if I found a young woman in a place of that kind, I tried to do something with her, and to that end spoke to her kindly. This man kept a brothel there, and kept this educated young person for his own purposes.

11886. They were not married? No; she was about 20 years of age, and apparently an educated and refined person, with small hands, unaccustomed to work, and in every way lady-like in appearance. That woman is now the wife of one of the richest men in this Colony.

11887. And you found her in a Chinese den? Yes, in Cambridge-street. This man had brought her from Melbourne with him. I had a very earnest conversation with her, and offered her assistance to go away. She said she had some friends. The next time I visited the place she was gone. I did not see her again until the opening of the exhibition in Prince Alfred Park, when I saw her with her husband on that occasion. The last time I saw this lady she was sitting in her carriage, opposite David Jones' shop, in George-street, with her two little boys.

11888. The instances you are giving us, I suppose, are few and far between? Yes.

11889. The general run of females you have found associated with the Chinese are taken from the ranks of prostitutes? Yes, most of them are. I may mention the case of another young woman, the daughter of a respectable man in Surry Hills. I found her in a house in Brownbear-lane, at 3 o'clock one morning, in an advanced state of pregnancy. I took her up to the Cumberland-street Station, and got her a comfortable bed in my own room. In the morning, after speaking to her kindly, and advising her, I took her to Mr. Crane, C.P.S., at the Water Police Court, and got an order for her admission to the Benevolent Asylum. I told her when she got over her troubles to endeavour to get into service with a respectable family. She did so; and now she is a respectable married woman, living within a quarter of a mile of where we are now sitting.

11890. Mr. Tart.] You have said you found women opium-smoking in reputed Chinese gambling-houses? Two of them.

11891. Did you find many of that class of women there? Not a great many. I always ordered them out when I visited those places.

11892. If anyone has stated that large numbers of young women visit these Chinese quarters, would that be true? It was not so in my time. I could always count the number of young women who frequented this class of houses.

11893. Mr. Hawthorne.] Have you ever found, concerning the opium question, that it is possible for young women to visit the Chinese quarters for the purpose of smoking opium, and still retain their respectability in other respects? No; I do not think that would be possible. No respectable woman would do so. I used to endeavour to persuade them to discontinue the habit. I noticed that one of the effects of opium-smoking was to cause a falling away of flesh. It is so with the Chinese themselves; and I remarked it in the young woman I have referred to as having contracted the habit. She was a young woman. I lost sight of her, and what became of her I do not know.

11895. Have you always found him to be a man of high character? Yes; I regard him as a highly honorable man in every respect. He is one of the most honorable men I have ever known.

11896. And you think that any offer of a bribe from a Chinaman, or any other man, so far as he is concerned, would meet with scornful rejection? Certainly.

THURSDAY, 19 NOVEMBER, 1891.

Present:—

The MAYOR OF SYDNEY (MR. ALDERMAN MANNING, J.P.), PRESIDENT.

FRANCIS ABIGAIL, Esq., J.P., VICE-PRESIDENT.

RAMSEY MCKILLOP, Esq.,

QUONG TART, Esq.,

JOHN STUART HAWTHORNE, Esq.

Mr. George Read called, and examined:—

Supt. Read. 11897. Mr. Abigail.] You are the Superintendent of Police, Mr. Read? Yes—Superintendent of Police for the Metropolitan Police District.

19 Nov., 1891. 11898. How long have you held that position? I have been in the Sydney police for some thirty-six years, and have been Superintendent of Police for about twenty years.

11899. What was the first rank you obtained in the Sydney police? My position was that of a detective when I first came here—for a very short period.

11900. Then you have gone through all the stages of the force? Yes; every stage in the service. I may say that I came here from London under engagement with the Colonial Government to serve in the police force of this city.

11901. Therefore you have an intimate knowledge of the proceedings of the police in connection with the city of Sydney? Yes; I am presumed to be tolerably well acquainted with police matters.
11902. You know the purpose and objects of this Commission? I believe I apprehend them.
11904. At that deputation to the Premier, it was stated, in the first place, that a number of the police were influenced in their action with regard to the Chinese gambling, in consequence of the ownership of many of the properties in which this practice has been carried on;—have you heard or do you know anything to justify that statement? I do not believe any such considerations influence the police in the smallest degree, so far as I have been able to ascertain.
11905. I believe you frequently visit the different portions of the city yourself, Mr. Read? Oh yes, I am about daily and nightly.
11906. You have paid frequent visits to Lower George-street? I am there, perhaps, five nights out of the seven every week.
11907. And you know, as a matter of fact, that gambling is carried on there largely in a number of Chinese places? There is gambling and a good deal of play amongst the Chinese—play, I mean similar to card parties amongst the Chinese, where, to give a zest to the game, they deposit 3d. or 6d. with the object of making the entertainment more interesting.
11908. It has been stated that fan-tan is indulged in by hundreds of Europeans, who visit these places nightly, Sundays included? There is no doubt that the Chinese play fan-tan extensively, and that Europeans, to some extent, have participated in the game.
11909. It is also urged that a large number of men go into these places and lose the whole of their weekly wages, leaving their wives and families in absolute poverty in consequence, and, it is contended, that if the police were sufficiently active in the discharge of their duties, that this state of things could be stopped? I have no doubt that some persons, Europeans, have lost money in playing fan-tan with the Chinese; but it is a very remarkable fact that no complaint has ever been made to me personally by any person who have sustained loss in that way.
11910. It has been stated that complaints have frequently been made to the officers of No. 41 station, and to the policemen on duty in Lower George-street, and that the persons who have made these complaints have been treated in a very flippant, and, in some instances, offensive manner? No such complaints have ever been communicated to me.
11912. You know that a number of raids have been made upon these Chinese gambling-houses? At various times, yes.
11913. And in most cases they have resulted in convictions? Yes, for the most part, they have been successful in that respect.
11914. But these raids have been made at very long intervals, and it is urged that if the raids were made more frequently, or if a rigid police inspection of the premises were carried out, as was done in the years 1876 and 1877, it would have the effect of stamping out the evil? But the raids which have been made have been made after careful observation and preparation, that is to say, when it was thought that the gambling proceedings, which were presumed to have been carried on, were of such a character as to insure the obtaining of sufficient evidence for conviction. I am not aware that any different course was adopted about the dates you mention, and I was in Sydney then. But, as a matter of fact, there was not then the same cause for action as has existed during more recent years.
11916. The evidence we have had is to the effect, that the places I mention, ten or twelve, were frequented chiefly, in fact, almost solely by Chinese, and that, on several occasions, the police visited one of the places and found as many as sixty or seventy Chinese engaged in the game of fan-tan; but a very close visitation of these premises took place, and, as a result, at the end of 1877 those ten or twelve places had disappeared;—have you any knowledge of that? I am not aware that any closer visitation took place then than now. Of course there is much more to attend to now than there was at that period. The police business generally has increased enormously. My impression is that the police supervision was not more effective then than it has been recently. Chinamen, like other people, profit by experience. When a few Chinamen are prosecuted they take additional precautions to prevent the police obtaining evidence and consequent convictions.
11917. What are these additional precautions? Well, I do not remember, until recently, for instance, that the Chinamen effectually secured their premises against the approach of the police. Not long since there was a raid made upon a place in Lower George-street, in which, I was informed, there were no less than three doors to break through before the police could obtain entrance to the gambling-room.
11918. Do you think they should be forbidden to erect barricades to bar the progress of inspection? I may mention that by a law which was passed not very long ago in New Zealand, the barricading of premises reasonably presumed to be gambling-premises is in itself an offence.
11919. And you think such a law would facilitate the operations of the police here? Yes. It would facilitate the obtaining of evidence, because there would be no obstructions to break through in order to gain an entrance.
11920. While we are on that point I would ask, with reference to the present mode of dealing with gambling-house, do you think it desirable that the police must first arm themselves with a warrant before attempting attempting to deal with any of these gambling-houses, although they may be firmly convinced of the character of those houses as such? I think every non-commissioned officer of police, and, perhaps, every first-class constable, should have authority to arrest on view—that is, if he sees the gambling law is being violated, he should have authority to effect an arrest, the same as he would have if he saw one man pick another man's pocket. I may mention incidentally that I have recently been looking at some of the Police Returns from California, and I find that there they have a law empowering the police to arrest all persons (Europeans) found in a fan-tan house; all persons offering pak-ah-pu tickets for sale; all persons purchasing such tickets, and all persons having them in their possession;—all these are offences for which the police can arrest. This, of course, facilitates police operations considerably, and if that were incorporated in our law here, it would enable us to effectually stamp out this evil, I am certain.

11921-2. Do you think the landlords of these places, after proper notice being given them, should be made parties to any proceedings the police may take, for allowing their properties to be occupied by the persons who keep gambling-shops? Well, that is rather a delicate question. The landlord cannot possibly know what the premises are required for—that is to say, he has no right to assume that they are required for some illegitimate purpose, and it would be a hardship to make him responsible for what he could not possibly prevent in the first place.

11923. But afterwards—after the proceedings have been taken (say) and a conviction obtained against one of these gambling-houses, and the landlord duly notified to that effect, if gambling should be carried on after that, do you not think the landlord should then be held in a measure responsible? I think, perhaps it might be an advantage that he should have some kind of responsibility, but as I have said, it is rather a delicate matter to legislate in.

11924. Now, from your extensive knowledge and experience in the city, what is your impression as to the effects of Chinese gambling upon the general community, Mr. Read? I think it is extremely demoralising, for a reason which I desire to give. If a man wants to go and gamble after the European fashion—at Randwick, for instance—he must go provided with considerable funds. He could not do the thing respectably there unless he had £5 or £10 in his pocket. But the gambling indulged in by the Chinese is adapted to the circumstances of labouring men, and the lower classes generally. For instance, if a man has only 1s. in his pocket he can go into a Chinese gambling-house and play a couple of games of fan-tan at 6d. a game, and have a chance of winning, perhaps, 10s. or 15s. That is why I consider Chinese gambling a serious evil.

11925. Do you know, or have you heard, that it is resorted to by young lads, and even young women, sometimes? Yes, they frequently do, I believe; although I am satisfied that the police endeavour, so far as they can, to keep them away, and generally to purge the evil of the European element.

11926. Have you ever heard of the police going in and finding a number of those people playing, and hunting them out? Yes, I have heard of occurrences of that nature.

11927. Have you ever heard it stated that on occasions of that kind there has been a scramble for the money on the table, and that members of the police force have been large gainers by that? I have heard of the police taking possession of money they have found in gambling-houses, on one or two occasions, which money they have brought to the station, and reported to the officer on duty there; and as no claim has been made for the money it has been forwarded to my office.

11928. Can you state about how many of these cases have come under your notice? I cannot say how many. I may mention that gambling cases of that kind are comparatively common; for instance, perhaps the police discover a number of larrikins playing "pitch-and-toss" on a vacant piece of ground, and immediately the players see the constable they clear away, frequently leaving some of their money behind them; the police take possession of the money, and bring it to the station, where they report the matter in due course.

11929. You read, I suppose, the account that appeared in the daily papers in July last, of a deputation that waited on the Premier, and which contained statements as to bribery and corruption in the ranks of the police force? Yes.

11930. When you read that, did it come upon you as a surprise? Not at all; for I have been hearing for the last thirty years and more that all the grades in the police department were bribed—the Superintendent, the inspectors, the sergeants, and everybody else.

11931. Then of course, not being surprised, you did not take any steps to satisfy yourself whether there was any truth whatever in those statements? When I saw the paragraph, I spoke to Mr. Atwill, the officer in charge of the northern end of the town, and asked him whether he thought there were any grounds for any such statements, and he said he was satisfied there was not the slightest ground for it whatever. I may mention that inquiries have been made into charges of that nature in former years, and I know of only one instance during the whole course of my experience in which there appeared anything like reasonable grounds of suspicion: that occurred about twelve or thirteen years ago, and the services of the constable were dispensed with; that is the only instance I have ever heard of.

11932. But these statements have been made by Members of Parliament; does not that give greater weight to them? It might in the estimation of some persons, but it does not in my estimation, considering the circumstances under which the statements were made; I think they were made hurriedly, without sufficient consideration, and that they did not fully realise the importance of the statements which they made.

11933. One gentleman said that the police saw that the Anti-Chinese Gambling League were moving in the direction, and suddenly a successful raid was made in consequence; do you know whether the police were influenced at all in that direction? The raid was made before the deputation waited on the Colonial Secretary.

11934. But do you know whether the police were influenced in any way by what was taking place down there among the people—such as the agitation of the Anti-Chinese Gambling League? I don't think so, as far as I can ascertain. I may mention that about four or five weeks before that raid was made I passed the house in question late one night, and saw some Europeans going in and out; I met the officer in charge (Inspector Atwill) on Circular Quay shortly afterwards, and I mentioned that he should give special attention to this matter, and make preparations for a raid upon this particular house; and the result was that the raid was made to which you refer.

11935. Has it ever come under your notice that members of the police have stated that they could not do anything in connection with these gambling-houses, because the buildings occupied by the Chinese were owned owned by Members of Parliament, and other influential men? I have heard that that has been said by certain persons, but have failed to discover that there was the slightest ground for the statement.

11936. One of the Members of Parliament on the deputation said that the police were not content with getting gold watches within three months, but that they must have diamond rings on their fingers; and that it was a well-known fact that they were being paid to keep their eyes shut to what was going on down there. Do you know anything at all that would warrant such a statement as that? I may state broadly that I do not believe that any member of the police force in Sydney ever received 6d. from any Chinese by way of a bribe; and I may also say that if it were true that some of the Chinese had made presents to the police I should not be surprised, for the simple reason that many of them are under very considerable obligations to the police. I myself have had to direct sometimes that fifteen or twenty men should be placed in the vicinity of their quarters to protect them from the violence of the larrikins; and constituted as human nature ordinarily is, I can well believe that these Chinese might feel themselves under considerable obligations to the police, and they would very likely be disposed to recognise it in the same manner as Europeans ordinarily do.

11938. Another statement made by a Member of Parliament was to the effect that he believed the police winked at the Chinese gambling evil, and that the Chinese were informed when a raid was about to be made on their premises. Do you think it possible that by any action of the police attached to No. 4 station the Chinese knew the day beforehand that a raid was to be made? I do not think they could have known, certainly not from any member of the police force. But it is possible that when application was made for a warrant at the Police Court that it may have been overheard by some person in the office at the time, and communicated by them to the Chinese. In fact the officer in charge of No. 4 station made a complaint to me on the subject, to the effect that he had noticed on the particular day he took out a warrant on one occasion, the gambling was suspended in the very house on which he intended to make a raid; and that he had noticed the same thing happen on one or two occasions previously. In consequence, he made application to the Clerk of Petty Sessions at the Water Police Court, to allow him to take the warrant forms, and permit him to make out his own warrant ready for signature, so that it might not by any possibility become known.

11939. Was he permitted to do so? No. It was considered that it would be a breach of the office regulations, and the officer in charge of the office took exception to the course proposed.

11941. I find it stated that the police are afraid to take action because they believe that Members of the Legislative Council or the Lower House of Parliament would use their influence to have them removed from the force. Now, has any Member of Parliament ever influenced you, or tried to, or would any attempt of the kind have had any effect upon you? No Member of the Legislative Assembly or the Upper House has ever spoken to me on the subject, or, I believe to any other officer of the police, or the head of the Department. And I think I may say of the officers (that is the inspectors) in charge of the several divisions—for it is mainly their responsibility—that they would not be influenced one iota by anything which might be said to them by any persons such as you have mentioned.

11942. Again, it was said by some Member of Parliament that Inspector Atwill should carry out his duties more fearlessly than he did. Have you any reason to believe that Inspector Atwill does not carry out his duties fearlessly? No, I have not. I may say that I have sometimes said to him that I should be glad if he could do a little more in the direction of suppressing Chinese gambling; but he represented that he did the best he could under the circumstances, and in the face of the difficulties he had to contend against, which in numerous instances were almost insuperable. I have sometimes feared that the small penalties that have been inflicted on convicted persons, and the obvious failure of prosecutions to effect any diminution of the evil, might have slightly discouraged the police in some instances. It seems to be very much like proceeding against persons for drunkenness; the thousands of arrests made yearly do not seem to have the slightest effect in the way of diminishing drunkenness. The small penalties imposed in the case of gamblers is no real punishment to them. It simply has the effect apparently of inducing them to take additional precautions against future prosecutions.

11944. Have you ever heard of a fund being subscribed for in connection with the Chinese gambling-houses, called "the police fund," and which is raised and maintained by deducting a small percentage from the winnings in these places? I heard a statement of that kind recently, but I did not attach much importance to it, because I knew it could not be true.

11945. After the deputation to the Premier on the 31st of July, I believe you supplied a report to the Colonial Secretary on this particular question? I did.

11946. Is this [produced] a copy of your report? It is.

11948. You arrived at that conclusion after mature consideration, and reviewing in your mind the whole of the circumstances and your knowledge of the police? Yes; the fact is, that no man after he has been in the police service a short time, and become acquainted with its internal arrangements would attempt to receive a bribe unless he desired to lose his situation, because he could clearly see if he had any brains at all, that he could not do so without being detected. In short no man could carry on a system of bribery in the police force without being detected. This is so, for two general reasons. In the first place the persons whom it would pay to bribe the police are the last persons you could trust in such matters; and in the next place, if the police were wicked enough to be consenting parties to such a transaction there would be too many to settle with.

11949. You know that Chinese gambling has increased of late years? Yes; as I have said, it has increased simultaneously with the development of gambling amongst Europeans, but whether the Chinese have been infected to a larger extent with the mania by the Europeans, or the Europeans by the Chinese, I am unable to say. But the fact remains that it has increased amongst them simultaneously.

- Supt. Read. 11950. Have you thought about the relative proportion of Chinese to European gambling? Yes, I have often thought about it. Taking the aggregate Chinese in Sydney, a larger proportion of them indulge in gambling than of the aggregate European population; but the amount of money that changes hands in connection with Chinese gambling transactions in a whole year is not equal to the amount that changes hands at (say) Randwick at a principal race meeting in one day. I am quite satisfied of that.
- 19 Nov., 1891. 11951. So that while you think there is need for a change in the law as regards Chinese gambling, you also think that the subject of European gambling is deserving of attention? Yes, there is even a greater need for amendment of the Act as regards European gambling.
11952. The question of European gambling is one which I should very much like to examine you upon, Mr. Read; but it does not come within the scope of our inquiry. I am sorry it does not, because I know that the effect of the gambling tendency on the community in general is alarming. Now with reference to the influence, morally speaking, of the residence of Chinese in this city, has it come under your notice that young European girls have been entrapped to the Chinese quarters for immoral purposes? I believe there have been a number of instances of Chinamen enticing young girls into their quarters, and they have no doubt behaved indecently to them.
11953. Do you think that occurs to the same extent now that it did a few years ago? I think not.
11954. During the years 1877 and 1878 I believe some very active steps were taken to suppress that kind of thing? Yes, there were a few very bad cases about that time.
11955. Young girls used to be found in the Chinese places in Goulburn-street and thereabouts? Yes. The instructions to the police are that they shall at once proceed against any girls discovered under such circumstances, when they are under the age of 16 years, and can be dealt with in terms of the Industrial Schools Act.
11956. Your impression is, that there are not many cases of that kind in the city at the present time? I do not think there are now.
11959. Has it come within your knowledge that the Chinese as a class are amenable to advice, and that when they are visited, and a certain course of action is pointed out to them as regards the observance of sanitary laws, they are disposed to follow it willingly? Yes; I think they are very attentive to anything that is said to them on the subject. But their habits and associations are essentially different from Europeans.
11962. In your opinion, has the fact of the Chinese congregating as they have done in places like Goulbourn-street and Lower George-street, a deteriorating effect upon the district—in other words, lowers the tone of it? No doubt it has that effect. I think there cannot be any question about that. No decent man, unless his circumstances compelled him, would like to reside in the vicinity of ordinary Chinese quarters.
11963. So that it would affect business as well? It would, I should suppose.
11964. Have you any suggestion to make as to any alteration of the law that would give increased facilities to the police in dealing with the Chinese, and thus tend to obviate the evils we are dealing with? Well some time ago I forwarded to the Inspector-General of Police a number of suggestions for the amendment of the law, and I think they were by him forwarded to the Colonial Secretary, and should be in his hands now.
11965. Could you furnish the Commission with a copy of those suggestions? I have not a copy.
11966. President.] Can you state from memory what the suggestions were? One suggestion was that persons should be held liable for selling tote tickets in the public streets.
11968. And another was, I suppose, dealing with people found on the premises? I do not remember whether that was referred to.
11969. I thought you referred to that earlier in your evidence, and that you thought it would be desirable? I said that such a law was in force in San Francisco.
11970. You also referred to a provision for allowing first-class constables and all non-commissioned officers to enter these suspected gaming-houses without a warrant? Yes; and to effect an arrest whenever they should see the law being violated.
11971. Now, supposing I were to take a shop here, and put up a notice to the effect that gambling was being carried on day and night on my premises, how would the police deal with me under the existing law? It would be a reason for keeping you under close observation, but it would not afford ground sufficient for instituting proceedings against you.
11972. Do you know that, as a matter of fact, there are in the city of Sydney about fifty places exhibiting notices of that character? I have been informed that there are such notices, but I am not able to read Chinese.
11973. The white paper notices that you may have observed on the walls and windows of Chinese shops in Lower George-street, Wexford-street, Goulburn-street, and Campbell-street, signify that fan-tan is carried on in these places day and night? I have seen placards similar to these [produced] in Chinese characters.
11974. I am bound to say that I have been rather surprised to hear a number of constables state that they did not know what these notices meant, since it appears to me that it is the duty of constables on a beat beat to make themselves acquainted with all public notices, and more especially those in a foreign language? A constable could not know unless he employed an interpreter. No constable that I know of can understand Chinese.

Supt. Read.
19 Nov., 1891.

11975. There are interpreters at the disposal of the Police Department, I understand;—would it not have been advisable to obtain the services of one of these to translate the notices? It might be well that the police should know it, although I fail to see that it would be of very great advantage to them, because they are in and out of the Chinese quarters almost every day, and know what is going on in these places.

11976. But would it not strengthen your evidence in prosecuting the keepers of one of these places if you could show that they held out a public notice—which is tantamount to an invitation to the public—that gambling was carried on in those premises day and night? Incidentally, it might be, but it would not be evidence on which to base a prosecution. For example, a burglar might put up a notice that he committed burglaries on every opportunity that presented itself in the city and suburbs, every week, but that in itself would not be a reason for taking proceedings against him.

11977. But suppose you did proceed against him on a distinct charge, and supplied that as a supplementary evidence? I doubt whether it would be considered evidence of a material kind.

11978. Mr. Hawthorne.] Supposing that a notice of that kind had been put up in large type, and in English, so that the policeman could read it as he passed, say in Goulburn-street, Wexford-street, or Lower George-street, would that have entitled him to enter the premises for the purpose of investigation? No; in that case he would have been a trespasser. The probability is that if he had seen a notice like that you mention he would have said to the occupiers of the house, "Take that down, or I will prosecute you," and that the Chinamen, not knowing that he could not prosecute them for that would have taken it down most probably. But there is no law to prohibit the posting of such notices on a man's premises.

11979. So that the matter would have stood where it is if the notices had been printed or written in English instead of Chinese? Yes.

11980. Mr. Abigail.] Scarcely the same, I think. I understand you to admit that a knowledge of the meaning of the notices would have stimulated the police in the execution of their duty. I am now speaking as regards the law? Doubtless it would have stimulated the police to some extent.

11981. Could a tobacconist in the city put up a notice, "Totes run here?" He can if he likes—there is no law to prevent him.

11984. Mr. Abigail.] Have you had cases where a Chinaman has informed upon his next door neighbour, with the object of getting him removed, in order to improve his (the complainant's) own business? There have been cases where we have suspected that, but in the absence of proof it would not be safe to assert it.

11985. That is so far as the Chinese are concerned, but a portion of the question I put to you on this subject in the first place had reference to complaints made by business people to the police. It is alleged that such complaints or representations on the subject of Chinese gambling in the immediate vicinity of their premises have been treated by the police with indifference, and sometimes in an offensive manner? All I can say is that they have not made any complaint to me in a single instance.

11986. Have not the business people there written to the Inspector-General of Police? Recently, since this Commission has been sitting.

11987. Not prior to that? No; I have no recollection of any complaint being referred to me by the Inspector-General on the subject, as having emanated from the Europeans in Lower George-street or elsewhere.

11988. Have there not been representations made to the effect that Inspector Atwill is not sufficiently energetic in the discharge of his duties? Recently there have been communications that would imply that indirectly.

11989. Do you think it would be an advantage to change the men on duty in that division periodically? I do not think so. The whole matter is in the hands of the officer in charge of the division.

11990. My question also refers to the men in charge of the division? Well, we have changed them in days gone by, but no sensible advantage has been gained by doing it. In fact there is a very great advantage in the officer being known to the inhabitants.

11991. Now, I will conclude my examination of you, Mr. Read, by putting a question of a definite character: During the thirty-six years experience you have had of the police in this city, what has been the general character of the men you have associated with, and had under your control? I think I may say that the general character of the force has been absolutely good, and that it does not—so far as I have had opportunities of judging—suffer by comparison with the London force, in which I have served, and which I may say is supposed to be the model force of the world; especially considering the disadvantage we have laboured under here of a too frequent change of men. This has been owing to the fact that the men have been able to better their position, and to obtain other employment; the result being that we have not the same proportion of experienced men here as they have in the London force. But as regards their general conduct, that is, in sobriety, integrity, and attention to duty, as well as education and ability, I believe they are not inferior to any police force in any European city.

11992. And during the whole of your service in the force here you have only known of one case in which there was a shadow of suspicion or ground for a charge of corruption? Only one case in which, as I have stated, there appeared to be some slight ground for suspicion.

- Supt. Read. 11993-4. Mr. Hawthorne.] I suppose the officers who would have to deal with the Chinese gamblers particularly would be men who have seen many years service? Their rank would be evidence of that.
- 19 Nov., 1891. No man is promoted to the charge of a division unless he has seen long service.
11995. You have not observed a desire for change in the case of men reaching the rank of sergeant? They necessarily value the situation the more lucrative it becomes. It is more common among the men who have served only a few years.
11996. The men on the beat, I understand, have very little to do with the gamblers beyond paying visits to their places occasionally when required to do so? No policeman of any division takes action without the approval of his superior officer, and the officers again have to submit the matter to me and obtain my sanction before taking action. I see the officers of the Metropolitan District, as a rule, every morning at 10 o'clock, so that I am made acquainted with all that takes place during the preceding twenty-four hours.
11997. Before you admit men into the force do you require them to furnish testimonials as to previous character? Yes; they must produce satisfactory testimonials.
11998. From your knowledge of the general conduct of members of the police we may infer that they would be unlikely to accept bribes from those with whom they have to deal in the discharge of their duty? I am satisfied of that. But if they were wicked enough they would see that it would not be politic—because it must inevitably be discovered.
11999. Take No. 2 Division, in which Mr. Mackay laboured for a number of years;—do you think Mr. Mackay is the class of man who could be bribed by any person? I am sure he would not. He is the very antipodes of anything of the sort.
12000. And would the same remark apply to Mr. Atwill? I am certain he would not be guilty of anything of that nature.
12001. I suppose the No. 2 and No. 4 Divisions are the only divisions in the Metropolitan district in which large numbers of Chinese are resident? Yes; the bulk of them are in those two divisions. There are some in Waterloo.
12002. Can you say whether Acting Sub-inspector Lawless has always borne a good character? Yes. I have never known him to do anything wrong since he has been in the service. He was a sergeant in the London Police before he came here.
12003. And has been a great number of years in the force here? Yes. I suppose he must have been twenty-six or twenty-seven years here now.
12004. I suppose we may also infer that Sub-Inspector Potter is a man of similar calibre to Inspector Mackay and Inspector Atwill? He is a man of integrity. I have every confidence in him myself.
12005. So that you have every reason to believe from your experience of all these men that the statements which have been made about members of the police force being bribed, and so forth, are without substantial foundation? I am morally certain that there is not a scintilla of truth in any statement of the kind that has been made.
12006. Had any report of improper conduct on the part of any of your officers, having a colour of truth in it, been made, it would I suppose, as a matter of police business, have been brought under your notice? Yes.
12007. And up to the present moment you have not been called upon to examine into any case of alleged bribery or corruption against any member of the service? No. The only case I know of I have mentioned, and that was some years ago, in which there appeared to be some ground of suspicion.
12008. Was that in regard to any particular phase of the Chinese question? No. Our suspicions were based upon the whole conduct of the man. We did not like his methods or associates.
12010. You have stated that when the higher officers of the police have gone to take out warrants for the purpose of making raids upon Chinese gamblers, the information has leaked out in some way occasionally, and I understood you to say that you thought it occurred through persons hanging about the Clerk of Petty Sessions' Office overhearing;—is that the case? There have been indications that the Chinese were aware that warrants were being issued, and we could not see how the information could have been obtained unless something had been overheard at the Police Court when the warrant was being applied for.
12011. Is there not a private room in which the Clerk of Petty Sessions is stationed, and could not the officer wait until the room was perfectly clear? The process is not applied for in the private room. The officer goes into the "Long Room" where the information is filled in. The information is entered in a book, and passes through two or three hands. There are always a number of clerks and others about, and it is possible that it may have leaked out in that way.
12012. You think it possible that any information which has leaked out may not have gone through the police force but through the office in which the warrants were obtained? It is probable. I cannot say it is so; but it is probable.
12013. Supposing a raid were contemplated to-night or to-morrow night, how many of the police in the particular division concerned would be likely to know of it beforehand? The officer in charge of the division, and probably a couple of non-commissioned officers are all that would be likely to know at the time.
12014. What would be the average of successful raids as compared with the failures? I cannot say. There have been failures, because when we have noticed that the Chinese have taken effectual precautions against detection we have abstained from attempting to execute the warrants.
12015. You allow the warrants to remain in the station? Yes; there are a number of men now in No. 4 station.
12016. President.] Have there been many such cases? No; not many.
12017. Mr. Hawthorne.] What method would you suggest for more effectually dealing with the Chinese in the matter of taking out warrants? I think it would be better for the warrants to be made out by the police themselves, and that could be brought about without any new regulations being made. The Minister of Justice could direct the Clerk of Petty Sessions to supply us with the necessary forms for such purpose.
12018. Have the police ever made any application to the Minister to give such directions? I do not think so, because this matter has only cropped up within the last year. Many years ago we were in the habit of writing our own informations in matters in which secrecy was essential to success.

12020. Do you think that would account for the better working of the police department that has been suggested as regards twelve or fourteen years ago, compared with the present time? It might in some degree, perhaps, but I cannot say that there has been any observable difference. It must be remembered that the gambling carried on now is one hundredfold greater than it was fifteen or sixteen years ago. I was in charge of the northern end of the city when the Chinese first located themselves there, and they rarely attempted gambling of any description then. 19 Nov., 1891.

12021. Mr. Quong Tart.] There are two or three questions I should like to ask you, Mr. Read: Do you know what percentage of the Chinese gamble in this city? I should think, so far as my observation has gone, that at least four-sixths of the Chinese indulge in gambling. I may say, however, that it is extremely difficult sometimes, when you see them play, if one does not understand the game—and I must confess I do not—to determine whether they are gambling or not.

12023. You think as long as they play cards or dominoes there is no harm in it, so long as they do not play fan-tan and pak-ah-pu, which attracts so many to invest their shillings? That, as I have said, is the strongest objection to fan-tan playing, in my opinion—that a larrikin, or a labouring man, if he has a shilling in his pocket, can go into the Chinese quarters, where the game is being played, and have a couple of games of fan-tan for his shilling. It resembles very nearly the game of "pitch and toss" that is played by the troublesome youths of the city.

12025. But that, I suppose, does not apply to the pak-ah-pu lottery that is patronised by the Europeans as well as Chinese? No.

12026. And your objection to fan-tan becomes stronger when the European element enters into it? Yes; that is the principal objection I have to it. It is a sort of training for other and more serious descriptions of gambling very frequently.

12027. Would you consider it the duty of the police to be very active against the Chinese engaged in fan-tan among their own people in their own houses? I should think the most desirable thing would be to purge it of its European element. As I have said here to-day, it is just as useless to attempt to put a stop to fan-tan among the Chinese as it is to prevent drunkenness. There were 10,000 people arrested last year for drunkenness, and I question whether it has cured one of them; the penalty inflicted has no deterring influence at all.

12029. Do you think there is much danger in pak-ah-pu? I think it is a very demoralising game. It affords every facility for a large number of Europeans to participate in it.

12030. Do you know how much they can win at that game? No; but I know it is considerable. I may mention that it is a form of gambling in which the police can do very little, the Supreme Court having decided that it is not an offence against our law. If it is anything it is a breach of the Lotteries Act. We recently proceeded against the promoters of one of these lotteries under an Act of George III, and obtained a conviction.

12031. You have not a high opinion of the Chinese informers, I believe? They are invariably men who have been gambling themselves, because they have always complained of losing considerable sums of money. Some of them have said that they were storekeepers in the country. It has generally happened that when we have wanted them to make use of in connection with prosecutions they could not be found. Whether they were settled with by their countrymen, or simply abandoned the matter, I do not know.

12032. With regard to the sanitary arrangements—do you think some special provisions should be made to ensure that the Chinese quarters should be properly looked after in that respect? I think they are well looked after, and, as I have already stated, I think there has been considerable improvement in their sanitary conditions of late years, though whether that has been the result of contact with Europeans, or from more rigorous enforcement of municipal sanitary laws, I do not know.

12033. Mr. Hawthorne.] The police have no instructions from you to interfere with the sanitary arrangements;—you leave that to the municipal councils in which they reside? Yes; but the Chinese quarters could not be in a bad sanitary condition without injuriously affecting the Europeans, and if we saw anything exceptionally bad we should call the attention of the proper authorities to it.

12034. Mr. Abigail.] You know Constables Beadman and Carson, and ex-Constable Quealey? Yes; I know them all.

12035. With reference to Constables Beadman and Carson, what would you say as to their general character? They are well-conducted men.

12036. It has been stated in evidence here that the charges of bribery which have been made do not affect the whole of the force, but that they are confined to four individuals, namely, Inspector Atwill, Constables Carson, Beadman, and Quealey? I have perfect confidence in the integrity of every one of those men.

12037. Constable Quealey was dismissed for drunkenness? Yes; recently.

12038. Did nothing ever come under your notice affecting the character of any one of these men? Not the slightest thing, on any occasion, affecting their general honesty and uprightness.

FRIDAY,

FRIDAY, 20 NOVEMBER, 1891.

Present:—

THE MAYOR OF SYDNEY (MR. ALDERMAN MANNING, J.P.), PRESIDENT.

FRANCIS ABIGAIL, Esq., J.P., VICE-PRESIDENT.
 RAMSEY MCKILLOP, Esq., | QUONG TART, Esq.,
 JOHN STUART HAWTHORNE, Esq.

Mr. Edmund Wolcott Fosbery called in and examined:—

Mr. Fosbery. 12039. President.] You are the Inspector-General of Police for the Colony? Yes; Inspector-General of Police for New South Wales.

20 Nov., 1891.

12040. How long have you been Inspector-General? For seventeen years.

12041. And previously to that? I was Deputy Inspector-General for thirteen years.

12042. Has your attention been directed to a deputation that waited upon the then Colonial Secretary in July last with regard to the prevention of Chinese gambling? Yes; I saw the account of it, and I also had an interview with the Premier upon the subject.

12043. And I suppose that you travestied the charges made by the deputation against the police? Oh, no; I did not. I said that I should like to see an independent investigation into the matter in order to let daylight into it, whatever it was.

12044. And, as a consequence, I suppose this Commission was appointed by the Colonial Secretary? Yes; I suppose so.

12045. So that it really was upon your own suggestion that this investigation was begun? Well, I cannot say that. I do not know whether Sir Henry Parkes would have appointed the Commission of his own accord or not.

12046. But, as a matter of fact, you did suggest it? I did think so.

12047. Then, after that, did you call for any reports from any of your officers—particularly the officer in charge of the Lower George-street district? I have had reports periodically, but I do not think that I called for any, especially on that account.

12049. Previous to the deputation waiting upon Sir Henry Parkes, had your attention been called to the number of Chinese gambling-houses in that part of the city? Oh, yes, frequently; I have had my attention drawn to it on one occasion by the leading Chinese residents, who expressed themselves extremely anxious that this gambling amongst their countrymen should be suppressed.

12051. Did they tell you that it was spreading amongst Europeans? They did not.

12052. But, as a matter of fact, their action was taken in consequence of the evil amongst their own countrymen? That is so.

12054. In fact you urged the various officers to take the necessary action to minimise the evil? Yes.

12055. Did they make any observations to you on the subject then or at any subsequent time? Of course we discussed the impediments in the way of a thorough enforcement of the law—the difficulties that present themselves in a variety of ways, and the position generally; but I cannot remember everything that transpired in the course of our conversation.

12056. I will now, Mr. Fosbery, get you to briefly put before us the state of the law in relation to the matter, and to point out the difficulties against which you have to contend. In the first place you might shortly explain what your powers are, and then afterwards tell us what are the difficulties in the way? Well, I do not think that I could cover the whole ground satisfactorily on the spur of the moment. I should have to refer to the law books to speak with certainty on the matter. Even lawyers do not like, as you are aware, to give legal opinions without reference to their books, and I am not a lawyer.

12057. I thought that possibly you might be able to give us a rough general idea? Well, generally speaking, the difficulty is that you must proceed by laying an information before a magistrate, and obtain a warrant to authorise you to take proceedings.

12058. That is to say to break into a gambling-house? Yes, to make a forcible entrance where that is necessary; and a further difficulty is the proof of the kind of gambling that is carried on. The Supreme Court for instance have held that pak-ah-pu is not gambling within the meaning of the Act. The difficulties are no greater than in enforcing the law in any other direction against criminality, but it is possible to enlarge the powers of the police to enable them, or certain of them, superior officers down to a given grade, to enter at once and arrest at sight, and in that way take more summary means of bringing the offenders to justice, but whether it would be, all things considered, advisable to alter the tenor of the law in this direction as regards the Chinese only is a larger question.

12059. A question, you mean, more for the legislature? More for the Government and the legislature.

12060. But, as a matter of fact, to bring about convictions in the case of pak-ah-pu there is no need of a forcible entry at all? No; the principals in the game of pak-ah-pu can be proceeded against for running a lottery.

Mr. Fosbery.

12063. As a matter of fact, you do not mean to admit that there has been a lack of vigour in the manner in which the police have dealt with Chinese gambling? Oh, I think that it has received reasonable attention from the police. I may perhaps say that Chinese gambling is very nearly related to the question of gambling generally, and we are all aware that gambling of every description has increased to an alarming extent during the last few years. It is not, therefore, when you look at the question in all its bearings very surprising that Chinese gambling should have increased.

12064. If the Chinese gambling-houses were only places of resort for the Chinese themselves to game in their comparatively small way the police would not consider it a very pressing matter;—they would not consider that they should take the strength of their force from somewhere else for the sake of suppressing the evil in that locality? Well, in my younger days when I was a Superintendent of Police, I knew a great deal more about the Chinese, from personal inspection, than I do at the present time; my conclusion was that they were amongst themselves almost wholly addicted to petty gambling, and that it was seldom absent from their amusements. There is no doubt that the Chinese are a gambling race, and we are fast becoming so ourselves. I may say that I personally think that so long as youthful Europeans—and, indeed, Europeans generally—do not resort to the Chinese gambling saloons, the public injury arising from them is not so great as that caused by many other forms of gambling. You must remember that the stakes played for by the Chinese are usually extremely small.

12065. Mr. McKillop.] Is that an inducement, do you think? An inducement for them to gamble, do you mean?

12066. Yes;—particularly for youthful Australians to take part in their games? Well, it is a facility.

12067. Mr. Hawthorne.] I suppose we are to infer from that remark that the evil is not a very great one, as the stakes are not so large as in European gambling? Oh, I should certainly say that the greater the chance of loss the greater the injury arising from gambling.

12068. President.] At all events, if the gaming was confined to the Chinese, and the temptation to Europeans to indulge in it was small, you are of opinion that the police would be under a less serious obligation to interfere with it than with the gambling that is actually carried on amongst Europeans? Well, it would not call for as much attention from the police as many other places of gambling.

12069. Talking of pak-ah-pu, I understood you to say that prosecutions had been instituted against it, and that they had proved the law to be defective? Yes; pak-ah-pu was proved not to be gambling in all the Games and Wagers Act, but it can be reached under an old Act as a lottery.

12070. Oh, it can be reached as a lottery;—but the prosecutions taken by you failed? They were quashed by the Supreme Court.

12071. But were there not other cases in which the prosecutions succeeded;—I refer particularly to some cases heard before Judge Backhouse in March, this year? That may be so. At the present moment I do not recollect the case to which you allude.

12072. The principals in the game submitted to the decision without appeal? That may be; but of course, if they submitted without appeal, it does not affect the question. The decision recorded in that instance might be over-riden by a judgment of the Supreme Court.

12073. President.] Have you discussed with your officers the question of how it would be possible to prevent Europeans visiting these gambling-places? Yes; I have frequently; because during recent years the evil has greatly-increased.

12074. And what did the officers say in reply? Oh, they admitted the extent of the evil, and said that they had directed their energies to the places that were most frequently visited by Europeans.

12075. You know, of course, that there have been prosecutions? Yes.

12076. Did they represent to you that there was great difficulty in making the raids? Yes; inasmuch as they have to get warrants before they can enter the gambling-houses.

12078. Did they never say to you that there were special difficulties in the way of getting in a Chinese gambling-house, because of the necessity of climbing in over walls, or through windows, and in some cases, even letting themselves down through holes in the ceilings? Oh, those difficulties exist in all places where gaming is carried on; but no doubt the Chinese take every precaution to prevent a raid being successfully carried out.

12080. So that your personal cognisance of these raids would be confined to what you saw in the morning papers? Not necessarily; because the officers would probably mention the matter in connection with a number of other things. They are always reporting something or other; indeed, as I have said, I am in daily communication with them, and it is most likely that I should hear about particular raids. What I said was that it was not incumbent upon an officer who contemplated a raid to mention the matter to me before carrying out his plans.

12081. President.] Did the police tell you that the Chinese gambling-houses, particularly those in Lower George-street, were frequented by Europeans of all classes? They said that they were frequented by Europeans, but not by Europeans of all classes.

- Mr. Fosbery. 12082. Do you know that the police were charged with accepting bribes for the purpose of conniving at these breaches of the law on the part of Chinese gambling-house proprietors. Did you read this statement made by the deputation that waited upon Sir Henry Parkes, for example? Yes, I did; but I do not see very well how it would be worth while for the Chinese gambling-house keepers to bribe a policeman on his beat who would have nothing to do with the instituting of raids.
12083. If these bribes were bestowed on the police they would have to be given to one of the officers in order to make them at all effective? Yes; to one of the officers in charge of a division or a district.
12084. But still, you thought it worth while to ask Sir Henry Parkes, when Colonial Secretary, to appoint an independent Commission of Inquiry into the matter? The only thing I said to Sir Henry Parkes (and I also said it to a member of this Commission) was that my desire was that there should be an independent investigation so that the atmosphere should be cleared.
12085. And you personally refrained from making any inquiry? Oh, certainly.
12087. Would it come to your knowledge if constables were anxious to be employed in Lower George-street in preference to any other part of the city? Oh, I think it would be a very unlikely thing that I should hear anything about it.
12088. If any of the constables or officers put forth special exertions in order to receive appointments in Lower George-street in preference to any other part of the city you do not think you would be likely to hear of it? If any of the officers did I should certainly know of it, because I make the appointment of officers myself; and if a policeman was to apply for any particular beat I hope that the matter would be brought before me as a very serious thing, considering that there would probably be some underhand reason for it.
12089. Then it would be the duty of the officer to inform you of it? Certainly.
12090. And he would fail in his duty if he did not notice that a number of constables were desirous of being appointed to a particular beat? He would be a very inefficient officer if he did not see through it, and deal with it accordingly.
12091. Are the sergeants appointed by you also? No; they are appointed by the Superintendent.
12092. If a sergeant showed a strong preference for any particular beat, Mr. Read would deal with his request with suspicion? Yes, and would probably make a report of it to me, feeling that I ought to be made personally aware of the matter.
12093. Is Lower George-street, as far as you are aware, from a policeman's standpoint, a desirable beat? No.
12094. So that it would be a peculiarly suspicious circumstance if a number of men in the force evinced a desire to be transferred from other beats in the metropolitan area to that one? Yes; I should think so.
12095. Are sub-inspectors appointed without your knowledge? No sub-inspector could be placed anywhere without my special approval.
12096. Was there ever any application on the part of anyone in the force, so far as you are aware, for a position in the Lower George-street district? Certainly not. Members of the force go where they are sent. I never knew a man apply for any particular locality.
12097. So that, although it was stated by various members of the deputation that there was a desire amongst the men of the police force to go to Lower George-street, you would not think that it was a fact? I should consider it most improbable.
12098. I suppose you do not consider it your duty to interfere with the private affairs of your men or officers? Not unless it is a matter that appears to me to affect their probity or character.
12099. If you were informed that some of your officers in Lower George-street were acquiring property would you consider it a matter of importance to know how they were acquiring the property? I should be very glad to think that they had been so saving. There have been many means by which a constable even might secure a freehold by saving and fortunate speculation.
12100. Mr. Abigail.] But a terrace—a terrace of several houses? Oh, there have been many means by which a constable might acquire a terrace even—land booms and speculations.
12101. President.] At all events, would you think it your duty to inquire into the matter? Not unless I thought there was something suspicious about it. I know some constables who have acquired what might be called a terrace of houses, and I know the way in which they have got the money, and it has been got most honestly.
12103. With regard to alterations in the law, can you make any suggestions? You might have a drastic measure which would cover gambling of all kinds, except gambling on the Stock Exchange, but whether it is the intention of the legislature to go to that length is a matter that I cannot even conjecture. I think that it is highly improbable.
12104. Mr. Abigail.] Do you not think it would be an immense public benefit to have a drastic measure dealing with gambling generally? I am perfectly certain that if such a measure were passed it would enable us to deal with gambling to some extent, but it would never lead to a decrease in the evil generally.

12106. But now we have entered into an area of public gambling "tote-shops, fan-tan dens, and pak-ah-pu lottery-houses?" My reason of saying what I have done about totalizators is that I believe they are demoralising the youth of the Colony, who are invited to put money on them, and that is a form of gambling that is increasing every day. The prosecutions have been to my mind utterly inefficacious; but of course you, Mr. Mayor, are perfectly aware that more money changes at Randwick on a big race day than in these small places in a whole year.

Mr. Fosbery.

12107. Mr. McKillop.] But it seems to me that the evil of the minor forms of gambling lies in the fact that the sums for which it is possible to play are so small that young people who would never think of going out to Randwick are by means of totalizators, fan-tan houses, and pak-ah-pu banks drawn into the vortex of gambling mania? The forms of gambling to which you refer are undoubtedly a temptation to children and particularly objectionable on that account.

12108. President.] From what we have gathered from the evidence of your officers, it seems that they are of opinion that the law is unnecessarily complicated, and farther that it would be possible to simplify it in a variety of ways? Of course some police officers look upon the law as something that should be made so elastic that a prosecution would follow the laying an information as a matter of course, but he forgets that the law-framer has to proceed on legislative lines, judicious in their whole bearing, and cannot therefore pass Acts of Parliament that would give a policeman powers equal to a judge of the Supreme Court.

12110. If any of your officers suggested to the Commission that the presence of a fan-tan table and other gambling implements in a house should be in itself sufficient evidence to secure a conviction against the occupant of the house, would you think that an unwise suggestion? As the law stands, I should consider the presence of gambling implements a very valuable piece of evidence.

12112. If any of your officers had advised that the mere presence of a man in a gaming-house should be sufficient to convict him of being there with the intent of gambling, or as having gambled, would you consider that an unwise or unpolitic suggestion? I should consider that it was going too far.

12113. But supposing that the person was there habitually? I should always be afraid of throwing the onus probandi of innocence upon an accused person. It is contrary to the whole tenor British law.

12114. Mr. Abigail.] Is it not contrary to the law that a person should be in a gambling-house at all? No; he may be there for lawful purposes.

12115. Mr. Hawthorne.] Supposing that a man was there at the time a raid was made, would that be enough to convict him? I should be very sorry to see a man who chanced to be in a gambling-house at the time a raid was made convicted because he happened to be there when the raid was made. He might be there for the purpose of making a purchase, or for any other legal purpose.

12116. President.] Some of your officers and some other people have contended that the mere presence of a person in a gambling-house should be sufficient to secure a conviction against him? I can only say that I do not agree with them.

12117. Mr. Abigail.] And do you not think that the presence of a person in a gambling-house should be sufficient to warrant a prosecution? I am not prepared to go that length. The weight of evidence should decide the case.

12118. President.] Have you made the law, as it affects gambling-houses, a study? I have given it attention in connection with the whole of the statute law that I have to understand.

12119. But I mean particular attention? I have not given any special attention to it over and above other branches of the statute law, but I know it generally.

12121. Very often they give wrong names? Yes; just as Europeans do.

12122. Well, do you not think that the law could be amended there? I think that they might be detained until they gave satisfactory bail or evidence of their place of residence.

12123. Do you not think that the necessity for a summons in these cases might with advantage be abolished in favour of arrest? Yes; I think that it might be.

12124. Have you instructed your officers, with regard to the Chinese generally, to visit them and see what their habits are? No; that is no part of their duty to study their racial habits. Some years ago I was the means of getting a Commission appointed, of which I recommended that Mr. Quong Tart should be made a member, in order to furnish the Government with information with regard to the conditions of life and residence of the Chinese in the Colony, and the report of that Commission was laid before Parliament.

12125. But is not the duty of the police in a district to make themselves thoroughly acquainted with the habits of the people in that district? A policeman is supposed to make himself acquainted with the habits of every resident.

12126. Supposing he saw that the Chinese dwellings were not in a good sanitary condition, would he not have to acquaint the authorities with that fact? Oh, certainly; one of his regulations tells him that he must do so. He has to report upon anything injuriously affecting the health or welfare of the public generally.

12127. Have any complaints been made to you with regard to opium-smoking? Yes, occasionally; indeed I have been round to the different places to judge for myself on that point.

12128. Has it ever been represented to you that the Chinese had induced women of easy virtue and children who are supposed to be pure to enter their houses for the purpose of opium-smoking? Oh, repeated charges of that kind have been made, but in nearly every case it was found, upon investigation, that the women were of such an age that the police had no powers of interference.

12129. Have reports ever been made to you to the effect that girls of tender years have been inveigled into the Chinamen's houses, when there induced to smoke opium, and then, when in an unconscious state, polluted by the Chinamen? Yes; reports of that kind have been made, but I cannot charge my mind with a single case in which it was found, after careful inquiry, that they were under 16 years of age.

- Mr. Fosbery.
20 Nov., 1891.
12130. Are you aware that there are European women living amongst Chinamen in various parts of the city, particularly in Wexford-street, Stephen-street, and Exeter-place? Yes; and I think it is a very lamentable thing that European women should be made common to a number of Chinamen as they are.
12131. But do you not think that they must have been bad women previously? Oh, yes; because some of them have told me that they have gone of their own free will, and for the first time in their lives have been treated kindly by the men with whom they cohabit. The Chinese almost invariably treat these women well.
12132. If it was alleged that the Chinese have been in the habit of ruining a number of young girls, leading them on by means of presents of various kinds, until they reached the lowest depths of degradation, you would not be inclined to believe it? Most certainly not. I do not believe that the Chinese would have the power of seducing any young girls who were pure. I can hardly believe that they would attempt it.
12133. You have never had reports on this question from your police officers? I have had numbers of reports, but the charges were mostly found to be baseless, the women being too old to interfere with.
12134. Did the baseless reports come from your own officers? Oh, they would come from a variety of sources.
12135. But you have had no startling reports of that kind from your own officers? Not that I remember.
12136. It would be their duty to report to you if they discovered anything of that sort? Yes; and no doubt they would have done so.
12137. Particularly with regard to Wexford-street and Goulburn street? Oh, it would have been their duty to have reported the matter at once, wherever it had occurred.
12138. But you do not remember having had any reports to the effect that these young women had been seduced into any of these opium dens. It has been alleged, as I have said, that the Chinese are in the habit of enticing young girls into their dens, inviting them to smoke opium, and then effecting their ruin? I should think it very probable that there have been such cases.
12139. Have you ever heard of any from your officers? I cannot recollect any particular case.
12140. Would you have heard of them if there had been any cases of that kind? Not necessarily. The matter may have been silenced by money. A woman may be so degraded that she would sell her own offspring, but it does not follow that the police would hear anything about it, so that we could prosecute.
12141. But if the Chinese were successful in getting a number of women into their clutches it would come to the knowledge of your officers, and they would report the matter as being of public interest? Yes; they certainly would.
12142. And, as a matter of fact, you never have had such reports? Oh, there may have been some.
12143. But certainly not a number? No.
12144. Then, if any cases of the kind had happened they would be isolated cases? Yes. Of course it may happen that the Chinese have been concerned in some disorderly houses, out of which girls had been taken.
12145. Mr. Anderson was in charge of the Lower George-street district in 1873, I believe? He was in charge of it for some time before he came to the Central.
12146. Do you remember if he ever made any reports to you concerning the Chinese in his division? He made the reports, no doubt, that his duty required him to do, very faithfully, but I do not know that there was anything exceptional about them.
12147. Do you know that he was in the habit of visiting the Chinese dens, then, for the purpose of suppressing the gambling that went on in them? I think that he ought to have done so, and I have no doubt that he did.
12148. Do you know that as a matter of fact, he used to constantly disperse the Chinese when they were assembled for the purpose of gambling? I did not know that he was in the habit of doing so more vigorously than any other officer in his position would have done. All the police do so at times. They sometimes exceed the powers that are given to them by law by threatening ill-conducted people that if they do not clear out they will compel them to.
12149. I suppose you cannot charge your mind with any particulars of Mr. Anderson's inspectorship? I do not remember anything arising out of it with regard to the Chinese gambling-houses particularly.
12150. But if his efforts were very successful in the suppression of Chinese gambling, could not similar efforts be put forth now? I am not aware that he was more successful in his efforts than the inspector who is now in charge of the district.
12151. It is said that with no more legal power than any other police inspector enjoys he visited these dens very frequently, and by frightening the gamblers minimised the evil very much; Mr. Anderson was succeeded in the district by Mr. Atwill, should he not have done the same? Mr. Atwill is a faithful officer, and I presume that he fulfils his duties in much the same way that Mr. Anderson did.
12152. Of course he may have discharged his duty according to his own lights, but two officers may have different policies;—Mr. Anderson seems to have made it his duty to institute these frequent visitations? I dare say he did, but I have no recollection of the matter.
12153. Do you not think that if constant visitations were made by Mr. Atwill it would diminish the evil? I think that all police officers should take special notice of this gaming, and I believe they do.
12154. Well, if they visited them (say) three times a week, would that not have the effect of driving away the customers? Oh, I think they should prosecute and put a stop to it in that way.
12155. But do you not think that the visitations would have much the same effect as the prosecutions? I dare say they would do good, but not to the same extent.
12156. But would not the Europeans be afraid of being shown up? Yes; no doubt.
12157. Well, then, should not your officers go into these gambling-houses if only for the sake of clearing the Europeans out of them;—we have it in evidence that whenever the police do make their appearance there is an immediate stampede? Yes; the object of the police is to visit all places where they think there is likely to be a breach of the law. A constable's duty is to prevent the breach of the law as much as to secure the punishment of the offender when the law is broken.
12158. Still, if Mr. Atwill attempted to get into any of the Chinese gaming-houses, would he not be denied admission? I dare say he would. An Englishman's house is his castle.
12159. You know that Mr. Anderson went in without warrants? I do not know what Mr. Anderson did in that respect.
- 12160.

12160. We are informed so? Well, I can walk into the Town Hall, but I can be ejected if I am not wanted. You may go into any place if you can get in—there is nothing criminal in that—but you have not the power to remain in if you are told to go out. Mr. Fosbery.
20 Nov., 1891.

12161. Do you not think that any house suspected of being a gambling-house should be liable to be entered by the police without a warrant? Not by any constable. I think that that is a power that might be wisely conferred on sergeants or sub-inspectors.

12162. You would be in favour of an alteration in the law to that effect, then? Yes.

12163. Then that power would apply to the whole of the police over the whole of the Colony, and anybody's house could be entered in the same way if it was suspected of being a gambling-house? Oh, I thought you were speaking of the Chinese.

12164. No, I am referring to the desirability of bestowing more extensive powers upon the police for the suppression of gambling generally? If you gave such powers to a police sergeant he could walk into any club or any private house where you were having a rubber of whist.

12165. Supposing you restricted those powers to police sergeants in regard to the houses occupied by Chinese only, they could then walk into any Chinese merchant's house? Yes; but you must remember that the police officer must have very good reason for suspecting the house, or else he could not take any action.

12166. At all events, you are distinctly of opinion that you would not bestow these powers upon the police as a body? No; I should certainly restrict them to officers above a certain grade.

12168. Have you ever had any reports made to you with regard to neglect of duty on the part of any of your men, with regard to the Chinese in Lower George-street? Well, I had to punish and dismiss a good many men at one time and another, but I hardly know the kind of neglect of duty you refer to.

12169. Well, we will put it first on the ground of inefficiency. Have you ever had to dismiss any men in the Lower George-street district for inefficiency? Probably.

12170. Have you ever had to dismiss a man because it was proved that he neglected his duty with regard to the suppression of gambling, particularly amongst the Chinese residents of Lower George-street? Not to my recollection.

12171. And the same answer applies to other parts of the city, where the Chinese reside in considerable numbers, I presume? Many hundreds of men have been dismissed by me, and of course I cannot recollect what they were dismissed for.

12172. But not for taking bribes? I cannot remember a single instance of a policeman taking bribes. Of course I have heard a good deal about police officers taking bribes; but I cannot charge my memory with a single instance in which a charge of that nature has been substantiated.

12173. Have you heard anything about the way in which Mr. Atwill discharges his duties under the Licensing Act? Yes; I have had complaints about it.

12174. What was the nature of the complaints? Well; it has been said that he has been too strict with the licensees, that he has pushed his way in, and spoken roughly and so on.

12175. That he has been too exacting in the discharge of his duties against the publicans? Yes.

12176. You never heard that he asked the licensees for presents of money? No; he would not occupy his present position if he did.

12177. And what is more, no insinuation has ever been made to that effect? No; never to my knowledge against his probity; sometimes against his judgment, but never against his probity.

12178. What is your opinion about Mr. Atwill as an officer? I consider that he is not always judicious in his speech and bearing; but I believe that he is an honorable upright officer.

12179. Have you had any communication addressed to you by the Anti-Chinese Gambling League? I think that I have had several; but I do not know what they were about.

12180. They were not sufficiently important to impress them on your memory? No.

12181. Mr. Abigail.] Mr. Fosbery, you have given us a record of seventeen years as Inspector-General, and thirteen years as Deputy Inspector-General. That is thirty years, and previously to that you had ten years' service in Victoria I believe, so that you must be intimately conversant with the duties of the police? Yes; I think I know as much as most officers about police duties.

12182. The President has examined you generally, but I am going to put very definite questions to you, bearing upon what was said at the deputation to Sir Henry Parkes by men of very prominent public positions to enable you to give your version of it. Do you know how many reputed Chinese gambling-places there are in Lower George-street? No; I do not.

12183. Would you be surprised to learn that within the last few years they have been increased from ten to twenty? I should not be in the least surprised.

12184. Would you be surprised to know that hundreds of European youths and men, and sometimes girls, as far as the pak-ah-pu places are concerned, visit these Chinese gambling-dens? If it were only hundreds out of a population of 400,000, I think I should be surprised.

12185. Has it ever come beneath your notice that there is a wide-spread feeling among the European business people in that part of the city that the increase is solely the result of neglect on the part of the police to perform their proper duties? Oh, I know that people generally blame the police for everything that goes wrong. I am not surprised to hear that.

12186. It is reported that a raid is made once every two years, and is successful, and it is said that it is just as easy to make a raid once every three months? I do not think that there is any fixed date for making raids.

12187. There might be a raid made once every year, but reputable business people have stated that the gambling is openly carried on every day of the week, Sunday included, and that people passing up and down the street can see it, so that it must be seen by the police, and yet they take no steps to check it? I think that must be incorrect, because a great many prosecutions have taken place.

12188. Are you aware that the Chinese in Lower George-street, Goulburn-street, Campbell-street, and Wexford-street, have public notices posted up outside their places to the effect that fan-tan gambling is carried on within, night and day? I have heard so.

12189. Should not those notices make the police pay more attention to the places outside which they are posted? In Chinese characters? 12190.

Mr. Fosbery. 12190. Yes? Well, a constable passing up and down on his beat, would probably never notice a placard in Chinese characters, but even if he did, and reported the matter to his superior officer, the fact that the notices were put up would not constitute an offence.

12191. But supposing I was a tobacconist in the city, and posted up a notice outside my shop to the effect that gambling was carried on within, would the police take no action in the matter? They would probably keep an eye upon you.

12192. Quite so; and it is urged that the police ought, in consequence of the notices, to have been more vigilant? Well, that is a matter for you to judge of. As I said at the commencement of my evidence, it was always possible for the police to display more vigour in any given direction by concentrating their energy upon some particular question.

12193. Mr. Hawthorne.] But then, if they showed more vigour in the prosecution of Chinese gamblers you say that they would have to neglect other duties? We are always short-handed, so that if some things get special attention, others get less than usual.

12194. Mr. Abigail.] It has been stated also that the police can do nothing as the law now stands? Well if that has been said by the police I should think that it was an ignorant policeman who said it.

12195. Quite so; the fact that they have made raids and secured convictions is in itself an answer to it? Yes.

12196. Do you think that fines are a sufficient punishment for the keepers of these fan-tan houses? No; I have always thought both with regard to European and Chinese gambling that if fines have no effect, as it is a lucrative business, there will have to be recourse to imprisonment.

12197. If a man was brought up five times, and fined on each occasion, and always without effect, do you think that a fine would be a sufficient punishment for the sixth offence? Certainly not. The law recognises a gradation of crime, according to the frequency of its repetition.

12198. It has been alleged that European youths can play, particularly at the Lower George-street gambling-dens, for very small amounts;—does not that add to the seriousness of the evil? Yes; as I said at the beginning of my evidence, the evil is aggravated by the fact that the young are seduced into playing, but you must remember that you can put 2s. 6d. on a tote.

12199. Yes; but you can play fan-tan if you have only a penny? Yes.

12200. Has it ever been brought under your notice that a number of working men have lost the whole of their wages at the fan-tan tables in Lower George-street, and that their wives and families have been left in a starving condition as the result of it? I have no knowledge of it, but I think that it is extremely probable. That applies pretty much to gambling of all kinds. Families are ruined by it, and women and children compelled to go without food or clothing.

12201. It has been alleged that if the Chinese can get Europeans to gamble with them they will not play amongst themselves? I was not aware of that.

12202. And it is stated further that they have men stationed in the streets as touts to invite passers-by to go in. Would you believe that there are 400 Chinese making large sums of money by keeping gambling-establishments? I should not be at all surprised to hear it.

12203. Now, here are some photographs of Chinese gambling-houses in Lower George-street. The white paper notices stuck up outside the walls are to the effect that gambling is carried on there day and night, and we have had evidence to the effect that all day long, and far into the night, as well as on Sundays, there are always to be found crowds of men inside playing fan-tan, and often boys, and sometimes even girls, purchasing pak-ah-pu tickets;—do you not think that, as far as the law stands, it is in the power of the police to keep the places clear of Europeans by frightening them away? I have no doubt that a police warning in a matter of that kind would have a good effect, even although it had no legal significance.

12205. It has been said that the police saw that the Anti-Chinese Gambling League were moving determinately in the direction of suppressing the gambling-dens that they made a successful raid;—is it a fact that the police were galvanised into action by the Anti-Chinese Gambling League? That is not the case. Strange to say, before any action was taken by the Anti-Chinese Gambling League the Superintendent spoke to me on the subject. He said that he thought the evil was increasing in Sydney, and that he had directed the attention of his officers to it. They had not a very busy season on just then. Of course there are times when the police are very busy, collecting electoral rolls and jury lists, and Mr. Read was wishful to take advantage of the occasion by devoting special attention to the Chinese gambling evil.

12206. Mr. Nock made this statement before the Colonial Secretary, "The police have said that they can do nothing because the buildings occupied by the Chinese are owned by Members of Parliament and other influential men. The police had said that nothing could be done, but when the league moved, the police took action. Well, there are 1,700 police in the Colony. If the gentleman who made the statement would say that it was Constable Brown or Constable Jones who said so I should know what to do, but as it is the charge is quite palpable.

12207. Well, that statement has been applied to Senior-Constables Beadman and Carson, as well as two or three others? Well, if the Commission takes no notice of it, and the statement comes to me, those men will very soon be placed on their defence. I do not believe it for a moment.

12208. It was further stated by a member of the deputation that "the police were not content with getting a gold watch in three months, but must have diamond rings on their fingers. It was a well-known fact that they were being paid to keep their eyes shut. On the night of the raid the police went into different Chinese shops before commencing operations to ask for crowbars in order to break into Ah Ping's. Of course it was known, and Ah Ping got away. He hoped that steps would be taken to change the police, and to change them frequently, and that raids should not be made now and again, but every night until the evil was put down." All I can say is that the men on that beat have to pay so large a rent for their houses that they would rather be stationed in some of the suburbs, where house rent is less, and they can get places with small gardens attached to them. As for the wearing of diamond rings, I did hear of a constable who was a sport before he entered the force wearing a diamond ring, but you can buy them for half-a-crown.

12209. President.] You are referring to Senior-Constable Beadman, I suppose. He was not a sporting man—he was a sculler? Yes; he was a sculler.

12210. But you have not heard that he obtained that diamond ring in an improper way at all—as a bribe, in fact? I never heard of a case in which it was even stated that the police had accepted bribes. 12211.

12211. You have heard rumours to that effect, I expect? Oh, yes; because a policeman is everybody's butt.
12213. Mr. Hawthorne.] I suppose when they do that sort of thing you only consider that they are doing their duty? Undoubtedly. It is their duty, and in the force is regarded as a matter of course. Numberless cases have come under my notice in which the police have saved large sums of money in the possession of drunken men or persons in other ways incapacitated from taking care of it from the hands of thieves.
12214. Mr. Abigail.] These statements were made by men holding high and responsible public positions, and consequently weight is attached to their word by the general public. Mr. Black said that the police were bribed by the Chinese, not only by chests of tea but by gifts of money;—"he had heard that for years the constables in a given district are constantly being changed. Some men may remain longer than others in a district, but it would be necessary to change the policemen who had been in that quarter for so long." To show you how constant the changes have been since I have been in Sydney I may say that I have had 6,000 recruits through the depôt in that time.
12216. Mr. Abigail.] And then to show you how the statement has fastened itself on the minds of some people Mr. Kelly, another M.P., said that he believed that the police winked at the evil. It has been asserted that the day before the raid was made it was known to the people about there that a raid was going to be made, and as a consequence they were prepared for it? Yes, there was something of the kind, but that may have leaked out as we all know things will leak out, sometimes in a way that is not attributable in the direction surmised.
12218. I presume that if anyone attempted to use influence with you——? I should show him out of the door.
12219. Then he thinks so? Well it is possible. We are all in unprofitable servants. We could all do a little better if we tried.
12220. You have yourself said that the police might possibly have been more active, and the members of this Inquiry since hearing the evidence up to now think that a more frequent visitation with a view to harassing the people engaged in these gaming-houses, and frightening the Europeans who visit them would have a salutary effect? The result of the deliberations of this Commission will be entitled to every consideration and attention.
12221. Mr. Hawthorne.] What kind of officers have you found Mr. Atwill and Mr. McKay to be;—have you found them to be men of very high character? I would trust them privately or publicly as implicitly as I would trust any member of the community.
12222. During the whole course of their work as inspectors you have never heard of any suspicion attaching to the way in which they have carried out their duties? Never a word; never a word that carried any conviction with me.
12223. And judging them as you have judged them, having had so many men under your control, you think that they would be very unlikely men to allow anybody to approach them with bribes for the purpose of allowing anybody to go unmolested when they ought to have been apprehended for wrong doing? I should think that it was in the highest degree improbable.
12226. And judging from the reports of your officers has it appeared to you that the gambling amongst the Chinese and the Europeans who visit them is as bad in its effect upon the community as the form of gambling promoted by the springing up of totalisators? No; I do not think that it is so bad, because the Chinese, as a rule, have not got wives and families depending upon them.
12227. The name of Senior-constable Beadman was mentioned just now;—are you aware that he has had several presentations made to him by several public bodies for meritorious services of one kind and another? Yes; I am also aware that he is a very efficient and trustworthy officer, and the public are fortunate in having such a man in the force.
12228. Perhaps you are aware also that he wears a good deal of jewellery? Oh! I hope he does not; I think it is very bad taste for a policeman to wear jewellery.
12229. You are not aware that he was presented with a watch by the Mayor and Aldermen of Balmain, for rescuing a boy from drowning? I think I did hear something about it.
12230. If you saw a policeman coming into your presence with a large amount of jewellery, would you question him as to how he came by it? I do not think so; but a constable coming in with uniform on would not show his jewellery.

Mr. Fosbery.
20 Nov., 1891.

- Mr. Fosbery. 12231. But the men who have been charged with wearing so much jewellery are plain-clothes constables? They are plain-clothes constables sometimes, but at other times they may be in uniform; and, at all events, I should probably tell them of it if I saw them wearing what I considered to be an unbecoming amount of jewellery. You must remember, however, that a plain-clothes constable might wish to make a great display of flash jewellery if he was going amongst a lot of betting men.
12232. You said just now that you were quite satisfied with the integrity and probity of every member of your force? That is rather a large order. I said that I was perfectly satisfied with the integrity and probity of the police force as a whole.
12233. But the question was with regard to the police officers in the Metropolitan Division? Oh, yes; I have every confidence in every single officer in the Metropolitan Division.
12234. You have seen nothing amongst your officers that would lead you to believe that they were treating with an unfair degree of favour, either the Chinese or any other class in the community? Absolutely nothing. If such a thing were proved, they would not hold their positions for an hour.
12235. Mr. Abigail.] Have you ever heard that there was a police sustentation fund? No; that is an invention of the enemy.
12237. Was there anything in his administration to lead you to believe that he was more active than Mr. Atwill is? Certainly not. Both men are excellent officers.
12238. Was there less gambling among the Chinese then than there is at the present time? That I cannot say. I have no knowledge of it. I should think, from what Mr. Abigail has said, that you had already an answer to that question; and I have stated that there is an increase of gambling generally. As a matter of fact there has been a general tendency to public gambling since 1875.
12239. Do you find it a common thing for policemen to be tendering their resignations in the metropolitan districts? Some resign; not many.
12240. Do you find the resignations in No. 4 more numerous than in other districts? No.
12241. Do you find more applications from constables to be transferred from No. 4 than from any other district? Yes; because they find so much difficulty in getting houses—rents are so high.
12242. So that if it has been said that policemen prefer the Lower George-street district to any other, and are constantly applying to be transferred there, that would be untrue? It would be the reverse of the truth. They like to be stationed at places like Balmain or the Glebe, where they can get a decent little house for their allowance.
12243. So that your experience is, that instead of No. 4 being looked upon as a district to be greatly desired, it is generally regarded with something like aversion? All other beats are preferred to it.
12245. Mr. Hawthorne.] Are we to understand that you would have special regulations to deal with the Chinese as a race, apart from the rest of the community? I certainly should. The way they are housed, their employments, their habits of life, their opium-smoking, and their invitations to Europeans to indulge in the pernicious practice should, in my opinion, be dealt with by a special Act.
12246. Mr. Quong Tart.] Do you remember a Chinaman called Robt. Le Kum coming to your office and complaining of the gambling? I know that some Chinaman did come to me and complain of it.
12247. And he said that it had caused a great deal of trouble because he could not get the Inspector at No. 2 station to take any notice of him? It is possible, but I do not remember.
12248. Mr. Abigail.] In fact the complaints of the man referred to and some other Chinamen are, that when they have been to the police with information they have been treated with great abruptness and that no action has been taken upon the strength of their stories? Exactly. I should treat them in much the same way, because it is well known that when one Chinaman comes to complain of another he is jealous of him.
12249. Mr. Quong Tart.] Do they complain to you for their own benefit or for the benefit of the country at large? The higher class of Chinese are good citizens, and they very much regret the evil practices of their countrymen.
12250. You have found the Chinese merchants very much in favour of suppressing gambling, have you not? Yes; and there are a great many highly respectable Chinese. Indeed I would like to take this opportunity of saying that some of the Chinese here have given me the greatest assistance in the discharge of my duties.
12251. Mr. Abigail.] They cannot sell opium without a license, can they? No; it is contrary to law.
12252. Do you know that several of the merchants in Lower George-street are doing so? Well, it goes into so small a compass that it is not very easy to detect them; but that comes more within the province of the Custom-house officials than the police.

MONDAY, 23 NOVEMBER, 1891.

Present:—

THE MAYOR OF SYDNEY (MR. ALDERMAN MANNING, J.P.), PRESIDENT.

FRANCIS ABIGAIL, Esq., J.P., VICE-PRESIDENT.

RAMSEY MCKILLOP, Esq., | QUONG TART, Esq.,

JOHN STUART HAWTHORNE, Esq.

Mr. Richard Seymour called and examined:—

12253. President.] You are Inspector of Nuisances for the city of Sydney? I am.
12254. How long have you been in that office? Close on thirty years. Previous to that I was assistant to Mr. Stubbs for eight years.
12255. You drew up a report for the Commission called "A report on the premises occupied by the Chinese within the city of Sydney," referred to in a letter dated 22nd September, 1891? I did.
12256. And you swear that that is a true report as to the condition of the premises mentioned therein as to the number of Chinese sleeping in each particular house, and as to the condition of each particular house? Yes.
12257. All the details given in that report are true to the best of your knowledge and belief? Yes.
12258. Now, do you remember being examined by a Committee appointed to inquire into the state of the common lodging-houses in the city of Sydney in 1875? I do.
12259. Have you a good recollection of the evidence you gave on that occasion? I do not recollect it.
12260. I believe the evidence given by you before that Committee was confined to the common lodging-houses of Sydney? Yes.
12261. It did not include the Chinese habitations? I do not think so.
12262. But you are not quite sure? No.
12263. You were asked on that occasion, "Do you know whether the Chinese keep lodging-houses in any part of the city of Sydney?" and you answered, "I have a good deal of inspection amongst the Chinese";—do you remember that? Yes.
12264. And you proceeded to say that "the Chinese lived eight or ten in a room, and lay on stretchers, something like a table";—do they continue to live in that fashion? They do not live so many in a room as they used to do.
12265. Do you think that change for the better is in consequence of your inspections and your reprobation of such practices? Every Chinese building is inspected every month in connection with the inspection of common lodging-houses.
12266. And, as a consequence, you have procured a diminution in the number that sleep in one room in these places? Yes.
12267. Have you legal power to do that? Yes.
12268. You are confined entirely to the city of Sydney? Yes.
12269. There is a general improvement in the style of living of the Chinese now as compared with the time when the report of that Committee was produced in 1875? There is, sir, a wonderful improvement. The Chinese premises are wonderfully clean. I can swear that.
12270. Do you remember being with the members of this Commission one evening when they attended a place in Little Essex-street? I do.
12271. And do you remember I subsequently condemned that building? Yes.
12272. Do you consider that was a building which should have been allowed to exist? No.
12273. But you had visited that frequently? Yes; I had them fined in that place.
12274. Did they keep the premises clean generally? After they were fined they did.
12275. Did you report the existence of that building to the proper officers of the Municipal Council or the Mayor? I reported it to the City Architect, who is the officer of the Council to which all such matters are referred.
12276. And you did that with a view to procuring its condemnation and removal? Yes.
12277. What interval elapsed between the date of your reporting to the proper officer of the Council and its condemnation by me? I do not think it was very long.
12278. As a matter of fact, your report to the City Architect was just anterior to my visit? Yes.
12279. Who is the owner of that building? I do not remember just now, but it is in that report. I think the house referred to is No. 40, Little Essex-street.
12280. In that building there were nineteen bunks, and some of them in a cellar? Yes; there was a man and his wife living in that cellar.
12281. Are there any other buildings like that in the city—any that are deserving condemnation but which are not condemned? No; not occupied by Chinamen.
12282. I suppose there are no buildings occupied by Europeans and used as common lodging-houses anything like as bad? No.
12283. In your evidence before the Committee on Common Lodging-houses in 1875, you described a number of indecent situations in which you had found Chinamen with European women? Yes; that was in Cambridge-street and Goulburn-street.
12284. Have you witnessed any similar scenes of late? No; I have not.
12285. Then there has been a great improvement in that respect as well? There has been a great improvement.
12287. Mr. Abigail.] Was it during a day inspection that you saw the things you described in your evidence before the Common Lodging-house Committee? Yes; it was in the day-time.
12288. President.] And you make constant visitations now, and have just the same opportunities and means of discovering gross violations of decency if they occurred, but you have not discovered them to anything like so great extent? No. Only one case came under our observation some months ago, in Wexford-street, when we found a young woman there with a baby in her arms, and that was a case of indecent exposure, the last I have seen among the Chinese dwellings.
12289. Have you noticed if the opium-dens are as numerous as they were in 1875? I think they smoke as much.

Mr. Seymour.
23 Nov., 1891.

- Mr. R. Seymour.
23 Nov., 1891.
12290. They are as much frequented? Yes.
12291. Where are they situated chiefly? In Lower George-street and Goulburn-street, in Wexford-street, in particular, and Essex-lane; all round the block there.
12292. Have you seen young girls indulge in opium-smoking? I have frequently in former years.
12293. You have not noticed so many lately? No.
12294. Since 1875, I suppose, there has been a great diminution in the number of young women that indulged in the habit of opium-smoking? Yes.
12295. To what do you attribute the change;—is it the result of greater supervision of these places? They are afraid of us and the officers of the police going in. If there are any women about the place and they see us they scurry away at once.
12296. You think your visitation has not only had the effect of bringing about an improvement in the sanitary condition of these places, but that it has also had the effect of improving their moral condition by operating as a deterring influence? It has.
12297. Do you think the police are more active or energetic in this connection than they were in 1875? They are; I have seen them in these quarters frequently.
12298. Has there been any alteration in the law since 1875? No.
12299. Then, in point of fact, the effect of the inquiry in 1875, although it was not followed by Legislative enactment, was beneficial to the community? It was.
12300. There is nothing like the same amount of overcrowding in the Chinese quarters now as there was then? No.
12301. And there is no such gross violation of ordinary decency in those places as there was in 1875? No. You may travel through these houses for a week and not see one exhibition of immorality.
12302. What are the ages of the women that you see consorting with the Chinese in their houses? They range from about 18 to 20, now.
12303. And over 20, of course? Yes; previously there used to be some very young girls. I turned fourteen young girls out of one house in Castlereagh-street; it was a carpenter's shop. Before 1875 I have seen mere children there, as young as 10 years of age.
12304. Do you know when the reformatory at Watson's Bay was established? I do not.
12305. Did the police apprehend young women who were found in the Chinese quarters? They did.
12306. They would be dealing with them according to law? Yes; and they apprehend a great many of these young girls wandering about the street at night before they go to the Chinese quarters.
12307. So that the vigilance of the police has contributed greatly towards keeping young girls out of the Chinese quarters? Yes.
12308. Mr. Abigail.] Have you ever made any inquiries as to how these women gravitate towards the Chinese quarters? I have asked several women whom I found there, and they state that they are married to the Chinamen. Then I have asked them how they came to marry Chinamen, and they say, "Because they treat us better than white people; they give us clothes and money, and the Chinese as a rule do not drink and beat us."
12309. Have you in any of your more recent visitations found young girls, under the age of 16 years, cohabiting with the Chinese? I have not.
12310. Has it come to your knowledge that the Chinese endeavour to get hold of pure young girls—Europeans—and by inducing them to smoke opium, get possession of them? I have heard so, but I have not seen it myself.
12311. Have you gained information to that effect from reliable authority? I have not.
12312. Such cases would be few, then? Very few, I should say.
12313. Is it your opinion that many of the women who consort with the Chinese have previously led impure lives? I am sure of it.
12314. You are not of opinion that the Chinese are a great factor in effecting the ruin of young girls in this city? I know for a fact that many of the young girls I have seen in the Chinamen's buildings have been prosecuted by me for soliciting prostitution from our own countrymen.
12315. Do these women you have found in Chinese dwellings show any evidences of disease at all? In one instance, in a place called "Suez Canal," I saw a woman in a dreadful state of disease, and I had the Health Officer called down, and she was sent to Little Bay.
12316. Mr. Hawthorne.] How long ago was that? A couple of years ago.
12317. President.] Can you give us any information as to whether disease is spreading among the white people through these women? I have seen men in these places with them; not many. Many of the women I have seen there were not healthy-looking; they had a bloated appearance.
12318. As a rule, you do not find many white men cohabiting with the women who live among the Chinese? No; the number is small, I should say.
12319. What sort of men frequent the houses in Wexford-street? Only Chinese.
12320. No larrikins? Yes; some larrikins and Italians.
12321. What do they go there for? For gambling purposes.
12322. Not for opium-smoking? Well, I have seen white people opium-smoking there too.
12323. Do you think the habit has taken hold of the white people to any extent? I have not seen it increase much. I have seen them lying on the stretchers smoking occasionally.
12324. Who is the owner of that long terrace of houses in Wexford-street? It did belong to Ben. James formerly, but I think he sold out recently.
12325. Do you know anything about the rents obtained for these houses;—are they excessive, compared with the rents of other houses in the street? They are excessive.
12326. Would you advocate the locating of the Chinese together in a particular part of the city? I decidedly would.
12327. As a matter of fact, they are located very much in one or two places? Yes.
12328. At the northern end of the city? Yes; and the south end—in Wexford-street, Foster-street, Goulburn-street, Campbell-street (very few there), and Exeter-place.
12329. In what locality is the Chinese population most congested? I should say in Wexford-street and round that block.
12330. You regularly visit that locality, you and your officers? Yes.
12331. And you have nothing to complain of with regard to the drainage system there? No; we find the premises very clean.

Mr.
R. Seymour.
23 Nov., 1891.

12332. Are the Chinese themselves clean in their habits? There is one very dirty habit they have, of expectorating, no matter where they are, on the floor, and it lies about. This is a disgusting habit, more noticeable where they lie smoking opium.
12333. Have you made any night visitations to these places lately? Not since I was out with your worship.
12334. You have said that you saw women smoking opium in these places? Not lately; some years ago.
12335. How do the Chinese lodging-houses compare with the common lodging-houses, favourably or unfavourably? Favourably.
12337. You have prepared a report for the information of the Commission called "A report as to common lodging-houses, 17th October, 1891"? Yes.
12338. The contents of this are true, and in the description you have given similar details to those you have given in report about Chinese lodging-houses? Yes.
12339. And you say that the Chinese lodging-houses compare favourably with the common lodging-houses? Well, I cannot say that so far as the bunks are concerned in the Chinese places.
12340. But so far as the internal cleanliness is concerned? They do.
12341. The only great point of difference is as to the number of occupants of the rooms? Yes.
12342. Now, as to the number of occupants of a room, is there any law defining how many persons shall sleep in a certain cubic space? There is not.
12343. Is it your opinion that the Legislature ought to pass an Act dealing with all lodging-houses, and defining the amount of air space which should be allowed to each individual in them? I think it should have been done years ago.
12344. Did you not recommend to the Royal Commission in 1875 some such course? I did.
12345. Mr. Abigail.] Do you remember the terms of the Report of the Common Lodging-houses Commission? I do not.
12346. They recommended that "All lodging-houses should pay a license fee either to the Government or the Municipal Council of Sydney, and that officers be appointed whose duties should consist in inspecting such houses and reporting to the proper authorities any breaches of the law that might take place;"—do you remember that? Yes; I recollect seeing that in the papers.
12347. And you think that would be a good provision to apply to Chinese as well as Europeans? Yes.
12348. The report also, "Recognised that each keeper of a common lodging-house should be compelled to provide a certain amount of accommodation as regards space, lavatories, water-closets, &c;"—I suppose a provision of that kind would apply particularly to the Chinese habitations at the present time? Yes.
12349. I suppose there is no question or doubt that many of these places are overcrowded? No. They are overcrowded.
12350. You know the old coach factory in Robinson's-lane? Yes.
12351. That must be frightfully overcrowded? Yes; I know the place well. They are all market gardeners that go there.
12352. The condition of the people thus huddled together as they are cannot but be detrimental not only to themselves but to the public health of the district? Certainly.
12353. You have heard of young girls being induced to go to these places by Chinamen, who have then drugged them with opium? I have seen it in years past.
12354. But a great improvement has taken place in that respect? Yes.
12355. You have said that many of the women living with the Chinese have to your knowledge previously been prostitutes—in all probability they take to the Chinese quarters as a sort of refuge? Yes; and they say that they receive protection from the Chinese people, and consequently stop with them.
12356. From about 1875 to 1880 there were a large number of young girls arrested I believe and sent to different institutions? Yes.
12357. You would very rarely find any young girls under 16 years of age in the Chinese quarters now-a-days? No; but it is by no means a rare thing to find them on the public streets.
12358. In past years the Chinese used to keep brothels? Yes.
12359. Do you know of any of them keeping places of that kind now? I do not. I know on the north side of Goulburn-street, before you come to Castlereagh-street, there was a very large Chinaman's brothel at the back of the street. It was a galvanised iron building; but that was demolished.
12360. You have no doubt, I suppose, that one of the chief agencies of immorality among the Chinese was the use of opium? It was.
12361. And you think Legislative enactment to suppress the use of opium would be an immense public advantage? I am sure of it.
12362. I see by your report that during the years spoken of you had 247 cases against the Chinese for keeping dirty premises? Yes.
12363. And, as a consequence of those prosecutions, a large improvement in the sanitary condition of the Chinese premises has since taken place? Yes; through the prosecutions and the constant visitations of our officers.
12364. Do you find, as a rule, that the Chinese are amenable to advice. Suppose, for example, you officially instruct them to keep their premises clean and so forth, do they, as a rule, show a disposition to carry out those instructions? They do.
12365. Do you find the Chinese more troublesome than the same class of Europeans? I find a great deal more trouble with the Italians and Lascars, and people of that class. They pay no heed to what you tell them at all.
12366. So far as the gambling is concerned among these people, you have nothing to do with that in the discharge of your duties, do you? No.
12367. You have no doubt that the morals of the people are affected by the sanitary condition of their surroundings, I suppose, Mr. Seymour? Undoubtedly.
12368. And one of the greatest levers that could be employed to maintain a good standard in this respect, among the Chinese in particular, would be a Common Lodging-house Act, with similar provisions to those suggested in the report of the Committee on that subject in 1875? Yes.

- Mr. R. Seymour. 12369. Mr. Quong Tart.] During your long experience in the city have you found the Chinese to compare unfavourably with the people of other nationalities in the observance of law and order and cleanliness? When first I took them in hand I did. But when a system of constant visitations was established they improved greatly. They are very frightened of the police and ourselves—that is, the sanitary inspectors.
12370. Are they disposed to be law abiding? They are. At least they are very frightened of the officers of the law. They are a clean race of people compared to what they used to be years ago.
12371. Do you think that the Chinese, before you went among them, understood the law of the country? I do not think they did at first.
12372. But when you explained to them what they had to do they carried out your instructions? Yes; that is the case.
12373. Do you think if you had notices written out in Chinese characters explaining what they had to do to comply with the sanitary law that would be a great help? I am sure it would.
12374. You say you have found some of the Chinese lodging-houses overcrowded? Yes.
12375. Of what occupations were the people you found in these places? Mostly gardeners, and people of that class. That place in Robinson's-lane was frightfully crowded. The number of bunks show. It is like a beehive. But, as I have said, there has been a wonderful improvement in the condition of the Chinese quarters generally of late years.
12376. With regard to the present law, if you go into a place and find a number of persons occupying a room 10 feet x 10 feet, have you no power to do anything? None whatever. We want an Act to deal with all the lodging-houses in the city—a comprehensive measure.
12377. Regarding opium-smoking, do you not think that is a great curse to the country? I do regard it as a great curse. If it were abolished there would be very few females frequenting these places. They cannot keep away from it when once they get used to it. The girls have told me so themselves.
12378. Your remarks with regard to dirty premises do not apply to the respectable Chinese merchants? No; the premises of the merchants in Lower George-street are very creditable.
12379. Mr. McKillop.] Do you know whether the rents of houses in the Chinese quarter of Lower George-street have increased during the last five years? I am not in a position to say.
12380. Have you observed that the presence of the Chinese in any locality has had a markedly deteriorating effect upon the Europeans in that locality? Yes, it has.
12381. Have you noticed that the more respectable Europeans, if possible, remove from the quarters where the Chinese establish themselves? They do. Take Wexford-street, for instance. At one time there was not a Chinaman in it; but when the Chinese came there, and the women followed them to their houses, the white people left the place, so that it is now really a Chinese town—that is what I call the whole block.
12382. Would you like to see the Chinese—with the exception of the respectable merchants—that is, the whole of the class you have spoken of, removed and confined to some particular portion of the city? Yes; I have said so.
12383. Mr. Hawthorne.] How would you draw the line between the better class of Chinamen, and those with whom we are called upon to deal? It is very easy to draw the line. You have only to go round their places to see whom you have to deal with. If you were to go into the houses of the respectable Chinese merchants, and see them and their families, you would be quite surprised perhaps. Then come here southwards, and see the contrast. I could indicate every house that should be removed. There are classes of Chinese, as of other nations. Indeed there are here in Sydney, Italians, Turks, and Greeks, and others, who also might be separated from the more respectable class of people in the community. You have only to go down to Fowler's Place, off Castlereagh-street, where the Italians, Turks, and Russians live, to get an idea of what they are like.
12384. You have found, as Inspector of Nuisances for the City of Sydney, that people of other nationalities introduced here are becoming quite as dangerous to the well-being of the citizens generally as the Chinese? Yes; I am sure of it. That is the reason why I mentioned one place to you. Look at the Lascars in Harris-street, over here. They live like pigs. I have counted forty in one house. They give us a great deal of trouble. The low orders of the different peoples I have mentioned are a filthy race of people.
12385. Mr. McKillop.] Although you have nothing to do with the gambling question in your official capacity, Mr. Seymour, I think it only fair to ask you if you have noticed an increase in the number of gambling-houses in Lower George-street of late years? I have.
12386. And in Wexford-street? Yes; I have seen them gambling all hours when I have gone into their places.
12387. With Europeans? Yes; large numbers of them. The last place I was in—it was shown when the Commission was down there—they had got into a room at the top of the house, and there was a regular stampede. They got away through a gate at the back like a swarm of flies.
12388. If a law were passed to do away with the barricades and secret places that exist in the Chinese gambling-places, the police would have a far better chance of entering and making raids? Yes.
12389. Mr. Hawthorne.] From your knowledge of what has been going on in the Chinese quarters all these years, Mr. Seymour, do you think the Government in the past displayed sufficient activity in dealing with the Chinese? I am sure they did not. If a Common Lodging House Act had been introduced, and stringent laws had been laid down for the guidance and direction of the Chinese the evil would not have lasted half as long as it has done.
12390. You have no greater power now than in the past to compel these people to conform to what would be considered proper and healthy conditions in the matter of the number sleeping in a room, for example? I have not the slightest power.
12391. Do you think it possible for young women to visit the Chinese quarters for the purpose of smoking opium, and still retain their virtue in other respects? Certainly not. They go in for other purposes. I have seen them in the act.
12392. Have you inspected the Chinese quarters in any of the other colonies? I have in Little Bourke-street, Melbourne.
12393. How do you think the Chinese here bear comparison with those located in Melbourne? We have nothing in Sydney to hold a candle to the condition of things I saw in Little Bourke-street. I went there about eight years ago during the Exhibition time with the late City Architect (Mr. Sapsford), and the the present City Solicitor (Mr. Merriman). In one of the places we saw a finely-dressed young woman, who came out and asked us what we would take, "wine, spirits, beer, or porter," and she brought out biscuits. In reply to a question from Mr. Merriman she said she came regularly to the Chinaman's quarters. There is no hell in Sydney equal to Little Bourke-street, Melbourne.

Mr.
R. Seymour.
23 Nov., 1891.

12394. With regard to the barricades the Chinamen erect in their gambling-dens, you have no power to compel the Chinese to pull them down, have you? I think the Improvement Board could compel them. I have no such power; but I think if the attention of the Improvement Board were directed by the proper officer to a quantity of timber being piled up like that, the Board could deal with it.

12395. Do you think it is within the power of any one under the existing law to compel the Chinese more than other folk to refrain from overcrowding their premises with material of any kind? No; you can see that if you go to the Chinese carpenters.

12397. You have found in the course of your inspection of the houses of the more well-to-do class of people in the eastern portions of the city that they allow their servants to sleep in places and under conditions that would be considered unfit for a Chinaman? Yes; or, in fact, for any human being. It is really disgraceful to see the way some of the poor servants are stowed away.

12398. And you have found domestic servants so treated very often by persons holding leading positions in society? Yes; I have known that state of things in the establishments of men owning extensive property, and living in style. I have seen in such a house the poor servants stowed away in the cellar, which has been divided into two compartments by a wooden partition with a door; the females sleeping on one side, and a male on the other.

12399. So that viewed either from a moral or physical standpoint you have found conditions as objectionable on the premises of some of the well-to-do Europeans as among the Chinese? With regard to the housing of their servants, I have unquestionably.

12400. Mr. McKillop.] And in extreme cases like that you have no right to interfere? No.

12401. Mr. Hawthorne.] How long is it since you, as representing the City Council, started this house-to-house inspection which, as you say, has had such a beneficial result in regard to the Chinese as well as the European portion of the population? About eleven years, to the best of my belief.

12402. You have found it very beneficial from every standpoint, in suppressing crime and vicious practices among different classes of the population, as well as in adding to the sanitary well-being of the city? No doubt of that. We have a thorough system of inspection by officers specially appointed for that duty of the Chinamen's quarters and the common lodging-houses every month.

12404. Then I gather from your evidence, Mr. Seymour, that the noticeable improvement which has taken place in the moral and sanitary condition of the Chinese quarters and other common places in the city, as compared to the fearful state of things disclosed in your evidence before the Commission of Inquiry on Common Lodging-houses, in the year 1875, has been due to the system introduced by the Sanitary Department of the City Council, and the vigilance of its officers, rather than to any foresight or activity on the part of the general government of the country? That is the case, I think. When my first report came out about the Chinamen's places a pamphlet was printed on the subject, and it was stated that the picture was overdrawn or highly coloured, but I was in a position to say, from personal inspection, that, if anything, the picture was not highly coloured enough.

12405. Mr. Abigail.] Seeing that constant supervision has brought about such a marked improvement in the sanitary condition of these parts of the city more particularly referred to, are you of opinion that constant supervision of the Chinese gambling-houses on the part of the police would have the same effect in respect to the gambling evil? I am sure it would.

12406. You have heard that a number of European people visit these Chinese places for the purpose of gambling? Yes; numbers of our working men go there.

12407. And you have no doubt about it being carried on openly? Yes; as openly as the sun is in the heavens. I have seen it myself.

12408. If you had the same power to deal with this gambling evil as you have with regard to the sanitary condition, do you think you could soon put a stop to it? Well, we could assist to do so.

12409. You would minimise it considerably? Yes.

12410. I believe you have been assisting the police in the matter of persons loitering in the streets in connection with the "totes"? Yes.

12411. And complaints have been made in the City Council about the officers of the Council being used for that purpose? Yes; but we have only assisted so far as giving evidence is concerned.

12413. You think, then, that the "tote" business is a greater evil, and more inconvenient to the public generally than you have ever found to arise from Chinese gambling? I am sure of it. You will see the streets crowded with these young fellows having cards, and others buying from them, many of them, little boys, coming out of the different business places in the city, to put their half-crowns on a race.

12414. I suppose that kind of thing is a development of the "tote" business chiefly? Yes; within the last couple of years.

12415. Mr. McKillop.] They are becoming more experienced gamblers? Yes.

12416. Starting so young they grow up pretty clever at the business? Yes; they are pretty expert at the business.

SATURDAY,

SATURDAY, 28 NOVEMBER, 1891.

Present:—

THE MAYOR OF SYDNEY (MR. ALDERMAN MANNING, J.P.), PRESIDENT.

FRANCIS ABIGAIL, Esq., J.P., VICE-PRESIDENT.

QUONG TART, Esq.,

JOHN STUART HAWTHORNE, Esq.

Mr. William Wong Goldtown called and examined:—

W. W.
Goldtown.
28 Nov., 1891.

12417. President.] Have you had any other name besides that which you have now given? No.
12418. How long have you been in this Colony? Nearly four years.
12419. Did you come direct from China here? Yes.
12420. So that you have only been four years away from China? Yes.
12421. What occupation did you take up when you landed in Sydney? I became a general agent and translator.
12422. Did you carry on business on your own account? No; I was with a friend of mine; we were in partnership.
12423. What is your friend's name? Alfred Archey.
12424. Did you have a place of business? Yes; in King-street—No. 133.
12425. How long were you in partnership with this friend of yours? About a year, or perhaps—some-where about that time.
12426. You were a kind of agent for the sale of Chinese goods, is that so? No; we were general agents for the gardeners. We had all kinds of business to transact for them—making out leases, and so on.
12427. In fact you were a general agent for the Chinese gardeners? Yes.
12428. Where did you acquire your knowledge of English? In Hong Kong.
12429. What business did you follow there? I was a translator, and clerk to His Excellency the Netherlands Minister.
12430. After you went out of partnership with your friend what did you do for a living then? I got my living by translating and sometimes interpreting, and gave myself to private study.
12431. I want to know how you earned your living? I can live on what I earn by translating and interpreting.
12432. Were you ever employed by any Chinese merchant? Not permanently.
12433. Were you employed by some of them occasionally? Yes.
12434. In what capacity? As an interpreter.
12435. You were never employed as clerk or book-keeper or agent for any Chinese merchant in Sydney? No.
12436. Were your services much in request as interpreter? Yes.
12437. Was it sufficient to maintain you? Yes; and some time ago I established a business in Park-street, as a tea merchant.
12438. And I suppose you also acted as an interpreter then? Yes; and also I was a general agent for my countrymen.
12439. What was the number of the building in Park-street where you established this business? No. 12.
12440. Was it a large business? Not very.
12441. How long did you carry on business there? About eight months.
12442. Did you fail? Yes.
12443. Did you turn insolvent? No.
12444. What were your liabilities? I can hardly tell you; I could tell you about the amount perhaps.
12445. If I failed ten years ago I could tell how much I owed at that time approximately; I do not want to know the exact amount;—generally, what were your liabilities? My liabilities amounted to about £40 or £50 at the time I gave up the business. That was after I sold the assets.
12446. You were £40 or £50 on the wrong side? Yes; about that.
12447. Who were your principal creditors? The London ham-shop, Mr. Atterton, a painter; I cannot think of any others to whom I owed anything on account of the business.
12448. What were your total liabilities before you realised on your stock? About £150. I always paid cash for my goods.
12449. Did you owe any money to any of the Chinese merchants then? Not on account of that business.
12450. Did you owe money to any of the Chinese merchants in Sydney on account of any other business at that time? No.
12451. Well, when you failed, what did you then do? I kept a school, in Robertson's-lane, off Goulburn-street.
12452. Whom did you teach? I taught some of the Chinese.
12453. And what did you teach then? English. I also kept a school in Alexandria before I opened in Robertson's-lane.
12454. Did you earn your living solely by these means then? Yes; by teaching and interpreting.
- 12454½. How long were you engaged in teaching—up to what date? Up to the time I went to Queensland, that is about three months and a fortnight ago. The school is not broken up even now. There has been a holiday. It will be reopened some time next week.
12455. What do you charge your countrymen for tuition? Ten shillings for a fortnight—that is, I charge them 5s. a week, and they pay fortnightly.
12456. And you have done nothing else for a living since you came to Australia, except what you have told me? Yes, I have been connected with the gardening business.
12457. Where were the gardens situated? In Arncliffe; I have nothing to do with them now.
12458. Do you recollect seeing in the newspapers an account of a deputation that waited on Sir Henry Parkes, in reference to Chinese gambling? Yes.
12459. You became interested in the question of Chinese gambling just before that, did you not? Yes.
12461. Then your interest in Chinese gambling arose from a desire to see it suppressed? Yes, that was my object.
- 12462.

12462. And you would do all you could to bring about its suppression amongst your own countrymen, as well as among Europeans? Yes.

12463. How did you become aware of the existence of what is called the Anti-Chinese Gambling League, in Lower George-street? The League was formed before I went there, and I saw it in the paper, and went and called upon the treasurer.

12464. What is the name of the treasurer? Mr. Buchanan; that is the name of the gentleman I first saw.

12465. Mr. Hawthorne.] Did you go to Mr. Buchanan, or did he come to you in the first instance? I went to Mr. Buchanan.

12466. Voluntarily? Yes.

12467. Were you authorised by anyone to go and see Mr. Buchanan, or did you go of your own free will? I went there the first time of my own free will.

12468. President.] The treasurer's name is Buchanan, you say? Yes.

12469. Now, I want you to be very particular about answering the question I am about to put to you: Is it not a fact that you were urged to go down to see that gentleman, and become a member of the League, by some of your countrymen? I was not urged to go.

12470. Were you asked to go? Not exactly asked. I and some of my friends talked it over.

12471. It was suggested to you? No, not suggested to me. I saw the report in the paper, and some friends and I had a chat together about it. I said it was a very good thing to have an Anti-Gambling League, and that I thought I would go there and become a member; and my friends—who knew of course what sort of a man I was—said if such a thing could be done, so much the better for the whole community. That is the conversation we had about the matter.

12472. Where did that conversation take place? In the school-room.

12473. Were any of your scholars present? No, they were not there; there may have been one or two of them—I cannot say.

12474. Can you tell us the names of any of your Chinese friends who were there? No, I cannot.

12475. Are you quite sure you cannot tell the names of the friends you sat and chatted with? Of course I know them; but I cannot say which of my friends were there on that occasion. Some might come one night, and some another. I cannot remember distinctly at present the individuals I spoke to—perhaps I shall be able to later on.

12476. Would you recommend us to adjourn the meeting, and ask you to come again, so that you may remember? I would not. I may recollect presently.

12477. Is it not a fact that some of those to whom you spoke on the subject were themselves gamblers? I do not know whether they are gamblers or not; I was not told that they were, and I never saw them gamble.

12478. Some of them have the reputation of being gamblers, I suppose? I never heard that.

12479. Was it not a matter well known to your countrymen, that some of these men whom you spoke to were gamblers, although you might never have seen them gambling;—in other words, were they not suspected of gambling? I never suspected them of gambling at the time.

12480. Will you swear they were not gamblers? I will swear I never saw them gambling; and I will swear I did not know them to be gamblers at the time, even if they were.

12482. And they were intimate friends of yours, were they? Not very intimate—just ordinary friends.

12483. How was it they came to the school-room to discuss this question with you? They did not come especially for that purpose. Our countrymen always visit each other's houses to have a chat.

12484. If a strange Chinaman came to your school-room would you not ask him what his business was? No.

12485. The very fact of his being a Chinaman would be sufficient to account for his presence there, although you had never seen him before? Not by himself, but if he came in with a number of other friends it would.

12486. Then you admit some of them must have been friends of yours? Yes.

12487. And yet you cannot give the name of anyone of them? I do not know which party to name.

12488. You can give the names of half a dozen if you like? I cannot say. We just met together to have a chat, as we often do. I cannot remember who were present on that particular occasion.

12489. Had you not reason to believe that they came to discuss the Chinese question with you? No; I do not think that they came for any purpose of that kind.

12490. However, you entered upon a discussion of the Anti-Chinese Gambling League, and you said it was a very good thing for your countrymen to suppress the gambling, and that you would become a member of the League; and thereupon you waited on Mr. Buchanan? Yes, I said that; and some two or three days after I went to see Mr. Buchanan.

12491. What occurred at the interview between yourself and Mr. Buchanan? I went to Mr. Buchanan's public-house; I had a drink and asked for Mr. Buchanan. We then introduced ourselves, and I asked him about the Anti-Chinese Gambling League. He said he was the treasurer, and I suggested that he should ask his fellow members of the League to admit me as a member, as I admired the movement for bringing about the suppression of gambling. He seemed to be very pleased, and after some conversation with his fellow members, I was introduced to the meeting.

12492. Was that at the same time as the interview? Yes, they had a meeting there then; that was the second or third meeting. I was introduced to the meeting as a visitor on that occasion, Mr. Buchanan probably having told them something about me before I was introduced. The next day I saw in the paper a report of the meeting, in which it was stated that I said I represented a number of Chinese and so on, but I did not say anything like that. But that does not matter. I was at the meeting, and I was requested to make a speech, and I did say something about the matter.

12493. Give us some account of what you said? I said I was very pleased to see that such a League had been formed for the suppression of gambling; and I pointed out that if the League had been formed for the purpose of putting down gambling simply without calling itself the "Anti-Chinese" Gambling League, it would have been more generally admired; but I hoped they would succeed, and so on. I regretted that in a city like this such an evil should be allowed to go on, and informed them that in China the gambling gambling suppression laws were very strict; some of the old offenders having been even beheaded for gambling. I also said I was of opinion that if the Government took the proper steps there would be no difficulty in putting it down.

12494. Were you made a member of the League that night? Yes, when the meeting was over.

12495. Did you see Mr. Nock there? I did not know the names of the gentlemen—they were strangers to me.

12496. You spoke to a number of the members afterwards privately, did you not? Yes; there was a general conversation, over a drink.

12497. And they were very glad at your having come to the meeting to help them, I suppose? Yes.

13498. It was a great satisfaction to them? They seemed to think so.

12499. Did you not say to Mr. Buchanan that you represented twenty-five, or a number of Chinese merchants, who were desirous of aiding in the suppression of Chinese gambling? Not exactly that. I said to him that it was not only myself, but many more—perhaps I said twenty-five at a guess—of my countrymen agreed with me in my view of this matter.

12500. The Chinese merchants, as a matter of fact, are desirous of suppressing this gambling, are they not? They seem to be so.

12501. And you had these in your mind when you said you represented them, or when you said that others of your countrymen would aid in the suppression of gambling? Yes.

12502. Now, give us the names—a dozen or twenty if you like—of some of those whom you either said you represented, or whom you thought you could get to assist the League? Cheuk Wah, Chong Lum, Ting Sang, Ah Sing, Sey Ying, Yee Lum, Liy Tong, Goo Lun.

12503. Any more? I cannot remember the names of any more.

12504. Are those you have mentioned the names of the principal Chinese in Sydney? I do not know what you mean by principal; they are interested in store business and so on.

12505. In Sydney? Yes.

12506. In what part—any of them in Lower George-street? Some of them; and some in Goulburn-street, and some in Waterloo.

12507. You cannot think of any more names now? No.

12508. Did you not say that these Chinese merchants had deputed you to attend the meetings of the League? I cannot remember.

12509. Think now? I did not say that at the meeting.

12510. Did you say to any of the officers of the League at any time that you represented twenty-five Chinese storekeepers or merchants? I cannot remember now. I remember that I said nothing about it at the meeting.

12511. Did you say it to any of the officers either before or after you were at the meeting? I do not remember.

12512. Supposing that one of the officers of the League has sworn that you stated you represented twenty-five Chinese merchants, would he be stating the truth or not? It might be the truth.

12513. Do you mean to say you cannot remember whether you were deputed to take that course or not? I had no such thing in my mind at the time.

12514. Do you mean to say that you cannot remember whether you told the officers of the League, or any one of them, that you were deputed by twenty-five Chinese merchants to represent them at the meeting? Well, you see, it is now so many months ago, I have to think over what I said.

12515. It is about three months ago, and there ought to be no difficulty in carrying your memory back to that extent on such a plain matter of fact. Did you not represent to any of the officers of the League that you were deputed to represent these people of whom you have spoken? Not that night.

12516. On that or any other night did you tell the officers that—I want yes or no to that question? Yes; but I wish you to understand that I cannot recollect exactly.

12517. I asked you did you tell the officers of the League at any time that you represented twenty-five Chinese merchants, and that you had been deputed to attend that meeting, on their account, and you answer yes to that question? Yes.

12518. Very well. Now, what were your instructions from the principals of those twenty-five merchants whom you represented? It seems to me that it is necessary for me to make an explanation. It will not take two minutes.

12519. Very well—explain? The question you asked me was something about my being deputed to go down to join the Anti-Chinese Gambling League. Well, the Chinese, in doing business of this kind, do not authorise a man as the English people would do—that is, appoint a representative. No matter what the business, the Chinese do not appoint a representative in that way. On this occasion we were having a talk together about the Anti-Gambling League, and it seemed to me that they all approved of a measure like that, and I told them I would give my services, and help the League to the best of my ability. My friends seemed to approve of that, and to think it would be a good thing for our own community, and for the whole of the city.

12520. As a matter of fact, they practically did give you authority, according to your own statement, to attend the meeting, but left you to take your own action? I was not commissioned to go, but I told them I was going to the meeting.

12521. They approved of your going? They admired me—that is all.

12523. Did they say to you that they would subscribe to the funds of the Anti-Chinese Gambling League? Not at that meeting.

12524. Did they at any time? At one time I said I did not know whether the League would do anything or not; that I would give my services, but if anything were done I suppose it would cost some money.

12525. Did they authorise you to pay any money? No.

12527. Is there any society out of the funds of which they could have helped you? No.
12528. Any monetary assistance they might have given you would have come out of their individual pockets? I think so.
12529. They did not tell you that they would subscribe to the funds of the Anti-Chinese Gambling League? They said they would be happy to do all I asked them to do.
12530. Did you ask them to subscribe to the funds of the League? I did not ask at that time.
12531. Did you not say at the meeting, or to Mr. Buchanan privately, that twenty-five friends of yours would subscribe to the funds? That was my opinion—that I could get it.
12532. Did you have any conversation with Mr. Buchanan about the police? I did say that the gambling that was now existing in the city of Sydney was owing to the laxity of the Government or the police. I think I said that at the meeting too.
12533. Did you say that you had reason to believe that your countrymen paid money to the police to avoid prosecution? No.
12534. Are you quite sure that you did not say anything about that? I am.
12535. Did you say that there was an assurance fund collected by the gambling-houses amongst the Chinese for the purpose of paying the fines of those who might be brought before the Court by the police? No.
12536. You will swear positively to that? Yes.
12537. Will you swear positively that you did not say to Mr. Buchanan that money was subscribed by the Chinese gamblers, or keepers of Chinese gambling-houses, for the purpose of bribing the police? I remember a question was put to me about that, and I said I did not know, that it might be true, or it might not.
12538. You will swear that you never told him that it was within your knowledge that money was subscribed by the Chinese gamblers for the purpose of subsidising the police? Yes; I did not tell him that.
12539. And you will swear that you never offered to bring to Mr. Buchanan the man who collected the money to bribe the police? I will.
12540. And if Mr. Buchanan swore these things that I am speaking of now he would not be telling the truth—you never told him any such things? I did not say anything to that effect.
12541. Did you offer to go to the Premier with the deputation from the Anti-Chinese Gambling League? I did not offer to go, but I was asked, and I did not object.
12542. And will you swear that you did not, on two or three occasions at the meetings of the League, offer to hand over £25, on behalf of twenty-five Chinese whom you said you represented, as a contribution to the funds of the League? I did not do so.
12543. Did you represent yourself as a silk-merchant to Mr. Buchanan? Yes; I told him that I was a tea and silk merchant.
12544. Do you know Moy Ping? Yes, I know him.
12545. Is he a friend of yours? Yes.
12546. Now, is it not a fact that Moy Ping instructed you to go and attend that meeting? No.
12547. Did his cousin come to you and have a conversation with you on the subject? No.
12548. Did the relative of any of the Chinese gamblers in Lower George-street come to you upon the subject and suggest that you should attend the meeting? No.
12549. Did any Chinese merchant, or anyone in Lower George-street, request or suggest that you should attend that meeting? No.
12550. Have you not sworn that some of those who met and conversed on this subject with you were merchants, and resided in Lower George-street? Yes, but they did not suggest that to me.
12551. Well, did they approve? Yes.
12552. Then the suggestion came from you, and they approved of it? Yes.
12553. Do you know the firm of On Chong & Co.? Yes.
12554. Did they have anything to do with the matter? No.
12555. Have you had any business connection with any of the respectable Chinese merchants in Lower George-street at all? I have had interpreting business, and sometimes done writing for them.
12556. You have never had any trade with them? Yes, a little.
12557. Did you owe any of them any money in connection with your business? No.
12558. And you do not now? No. They did not supply me with goods.
12559. Now, did you attend at the Police Court lately and pay the fines of your countrymen who were prosecuted? Yes.
12560. How came you to do that—under what circumstances? Moy Ping asked me to go. I had advised him that the best thing to do was to plead guilty.
12561. Where did you get the money to pay the fines? Moy Ping gave it to me. He said he did not like to be seen in the office. He gave me the money in front of the Court-house. We went together in a cab.
12562. That was after you had joined the Anti-Chinese League? Yes.
12563. Are you intimately acquainted with Moy Ping? Not very intimately. We are just ordinary friends.
12564. How came Moy Ping to employ you on that occasion;—he did not employ you on that occasion? He did not employ me. I advised him to plead guilty.
12565. Did he ask you for your advice? He did not.
12566. Where did you meet him? I met him, I think, in George-street, near Goulburn-street, by accident. He was in a cab at the time, and he stopped the cab when he saw me.
12567. Was he not looking for you? I do not know.
12568. Did he say he was? He did not say so. It was, on a Sunday, and there were not many people passing by. We stopped at the corner of a street and had a chat. I said, "I hear that a raid took place last night at your place," and he said, "Yes, what I am going to do I do not know." I said, the best thing in such a case was to plead guilty, as it would save a lot of trouble. That was the advice I gave him. He did not ask me.
12569. Is that all that occurred? Yes.
12570. Then how came you to attend the Court the next day? He asked me to. There was another man in the cab with him, and Moy Ping told the man to go with me to a lawyer (Joe Lowe), and instruct him to go and plead guilty for the prisoners when the case came on.

- W. W. Goldtown.
12571. Did not you tell Mr. Buchanan that you could not give him the names of the twenty-five men you said you represented, as they did not wish their names to be disclosed to their countrymen? I told Mr. Buchanan that I would get some people to assist me, and he asked who they were. I told him that their names must not be mentioned; nor did I want my own name mentioned if I should say anything at the meeting.
12572. If your friends objected to their names being mentioned, what reason had they if they were not going to pay any money into the funds—you have sworn that they never authorised you to pay any subscription to the League? Yes.
12573. Then why should they object to their names being disclosed? That was my opinion.
12574. Their names could not appear if they did not pay any money? I told him that neither my name, nor my supporters' name, ought to appear.
12575. You have given some of the names of the Chinese who you say were favourable to your action in connection with the Chinese gambling question? Yes.
12576. Now, is it not a fact that some of them are gamblers? Not that I know of—they may be, of course, but not to my knowledge.
12577. You will swear positively that you do not know? I will. They are all interested in store business.
12578. Would you be surprised to learn that they were gamblers? Yes; I would be.
12579. When did you leave Sydney for Brisbane? About the 13th or 14th of September, I think.
12580. Who employed you to go to Brisbane? Nobody.
12581. What did you go there for? To avoid the people talking too much about me. Some of them even threatened to have my life. But, as a rule, I go away every year to enjoy myself somewhere.
12582. But your chief reason for going away on this occasion was to avoid gossip going on about you, and in consequence of certain threats that had been made? Yes.
12583. Now, who was it threatened you? Lee Kum, for one.
12584. Anyone else? Cheang Sow.
12585. Anyone else? Lin Man; and I think two or three more, but I forget.
12586. What are these people who threatened you? I do not know.
12587. Are they gamblers? Well, I have never seen them gambling, but I have heard of them doing so.
12588. Are they generally supposed to be gamblers? Yes; I think so.
12589. What did they threaten you for? For taking an interest in the Anti-Chinese Gambling League.
12590. Did you on going away travel right through to Brisbane? Yes.
12591. You did not stop at Emmaville? Yes.
12592. What did you do when you went to Brisbane? I simply enjoyed myself travelling about—not only in Brisbane but in other places in Queensland.
12593. You came back by rail? Yes.
12594. Did you travel right through without stopping anywhere? Yes.
12595. Did you get any letters from Sydney while you were away? No.
12596. Will you swear that you did not get a letter about this Commission? No; I saw it in the paper.
12597. What paper? The Sydney Morning Herald, I think.
12598. What did you see in the Morning Herald? About five gentlemen being appointed. It was about a fortnight after I got to Brisbane. I was stopping at the "Metropolitan Hotel," and I read that in the paper one morning.
12599. You say you left Sydney about the 14th September? Yes.
12600. And a fortnight after that you saw something in the Herald about the appointment of this Commission? It might be less than a fortnight, perhaps. But it seems to me that it was some time after I left Sydney.
12601. Would you be surprised to learn that nothing appeared in the Herald about this Commission a week after you left, from which, indeed, it would seem that you have concocted this story you have been telling me? It was either in the Morning Herald or the Daily Telegraph. I saw the appointment of the Commission in the news columns, and the names were mentioned.
12602. Now, do you not know, as a matter of fact, that this Commission was appointed on the 23rd of August, and therefore you must have known of its existence before you left for Brisbane? No; I have said that I was away three months. Perhaps I have mistaken the name of the month. It may have been August that I left Sydney for Brisbane.
12603. It appears to me that you have been concocting a story. Will you swear that you have not received letters from Sydney about this Commission, since you have been away? Yes, I will swear it.
12604. You will swear that the Commission was never mentioned to you? Not in any letter.
12605. When did you return to Sydney? Yesterday week.
12606. Did you write to any one in Sydney from Brisbane? I wrote to my cousin, Ah Sing.
12607. Where does he live? In Willoughby. He has got a garden.
12608. Did you write to anyone else? Yes, I wrote to Saw King.
12609. Did you write to Lee On? No.
12610. Do you know Lee On's place in Goulburn-street? I know a place of that name.
12611. Did you write to him or to that place? I did not write to Lee On.
12612. I suppose you know that Lee On's place is a gambling-house? Yes.
12613. Are you not a partner in it? No, I am not.
12614. And never were? I never was.
12615. Did you never have a share in any gambling-house, or any pak-ah-pu business in Sydney? No.
12616. And of course you would not hold a share? No.
12617. How came you to be in the place where I saw you yesterday? I was visiting.
12618. That is a gambling-house? Yes; but there was no gambling going on.
12619. You admit it is a gambling-house? Yes.
12620. Then how came you to be staying there yesterday, holding the principles you profess? I was requested to have my tea there with a storekeeper from Waterloo. Since my return from Brisbane I have been invited to take tea at one or other of my countrymen's places.
12621. Is it not a fact that you have stayed there constantly since you returned from Brisbane? No.
12622. Where do you stay? At Hip War & Co.'s place, where I used to keep my school, at Alexandria.
12623. Have you stopped there every night? Yes.

12624. Will you swear that you have not attended the gaming-houses, and particularly the one in Goulburn-street, since your return from Brisbane? I have been there, but not to sleep.
12625. Will you swear that you have not been there when the game has been in progress—I want you to be very careful? I have been there sometimes, to have a conversation, that is all.
12626. Have you remonstrated with the keeper of that establishment, and pointed out to him the evil of gambling? I always give them lectures like that.
12627. When we came into that place yesterday why did you hold your head down, as if you did not wish to be seen? I was at my tea, having my wine; you cannot hold your head up when you are having your wine.
12628. Well, I generally do so? But we have to use our chop-sticks and little wine cups; besides it is very impolite to look around when you are eating at a Chinese table.
12629. Did you do any business at Brisbane at all? No.
12630. Now, will you swear that you were not sent away from Sydney by some of the Chinese gamblers—that you were not provided with funds by them to go away? I was not.
12631. You will positively swear that? Yes.
12632. What would the travelling and other expenses of a gay young man like yourself amount to in a trip to Brisbane and back, extending over a period of three months? I think about £50 or £60.
12633. Where did you get that money? By saving.
12634. Did you keep your money in a bank? No.
12635. Where did you keep it? In my pocket, and in my cases.
12636. Did you take your money away in notes or gold? Some notes and some gold.
12637. How long were you saving up that £50 or £60? Well, I have always some money by me.
12638. Have you got any more money? No.
12639. Do you not make any money at “fan-tan”? Certainly not.
12640. I mean as a partner in a fan-tan shop, not as a player. Of course you could not make any money in playing the game, could you? Well, I suppose I could if I staked any money, and I was lucky.
12641. Are not the chances all against the player? Not all against, I should say.
12642. You would not pursue it for a living, would you? If I were that sort of a man I would. It simply depends on luck, that is all; it is just the same as you English people going to the races.
12643. Now, do you not think it was very hard that you should have been put to the expense of £50 or £60 in going away from Sydney, as you say, by reason of your noble efforts to suppress gambling for the saving of your countrymen? I cannot help it.
12644. Do you not think that the Anti-Chinese Gambling League should come forward and help you, as to part of that expense at least? I do not know.
12645. Did you ever inform them that you had to leave Sydney by reason of the action you took in connection with that League? No.
12646. Do you think that would have been a reasonable course to pursue, seeing that you have been, as you say, put to this inconvenience and expense, in consequence of your advocacy of their views? Well, it seemed to me that the members of the League, many of them, were rather rough, and disagreeable to a certain extent.
12647. Do you think they are shrewd clever men? It seems to me that I should not be likely to get any assistance from them; although they promised me all the assistance in their power.
12648. You think that, ordinarily speaking, you would have had some claim upon the League for a part of your expenses? No; I did not expect anything from them, for I could not legally claim it.
12649. You never informed them that you had been threatened, and that you had to leave Sydney in consequence of your advocacy of their objects? I told them I had been threatened.
12650. Did you tell them before you left Sydney that you had to leave in consequence of those threats? Perhaps during the course of conversation I may have said something about it; I cannot remember distinctly.

[The further examination of the witness was postponed till the Monday following at 10:30 o'clock.]

MONDAY, 30 NOVEMBER, 1891.

Present:—

THE MAYOR OF SYDNEY (MR. ALDERMAN MANNING, J.P.), PRESIDENT.

FRANCIS ABIGAIL, Esq., J.P., VICE-PRESIDENT.

RAMSEY MCKILLOP, Esq., | QUONG TART, Esq.,

JOHN STUART HAWTHORNE, Esq.

William Wong Goldtown further examined:—

12651. President.] You remember the date of that deputation that waited upon Sir Henry Parkes about the gambling carried on by the Chinese in Sydney? No; I forget the date.
12652. It was on the 30th July; you were in Sydney at that time, were you not? Yes.
12653. Do you remember a meeting being called at Sun Sam Kee's shortly after? I know that there was some meeting amongst the Chinese perhaps a little before, perhaps a little after.
12654. But do you recollect any meeting at all at Sun Sam War's? Well, I have heard of one.
12655. Were you present at that meeting? No.
12656. You were not present? ———
12657. If anyone swore that you were present they would not be telling the truth then? At what meeting? Which one, Sun Sam Kee's or Sun Sam War's?
12658. At any meeting at Sun Sam War's? Tell me the subject that the meeting was called to discuss?
12659. Well, first answer me this question: Were you ever at a meeting at Sun Sam War's in your life? In my life! Yes.
12660. What was the meeting about? I think that perhaps a little seclusion would assist you in answering these questions. If I were to let you go and reflect in Darlinghurst gaol it might improve your memory? No, I have to think over things. I don't understand exactly what you say.

W. W.
Goldtown.
30 Nov., 1891.

12661. Well if you don't answer my questions I am afraid that I shall have to send you there? Why? I am going to answer you, if I understand you.
12662. Well don't take such a long time about it. I asked you a very simple question—if ever you attended a meeting at Sun Sam War's place in your life? And I said "Yes."
12663. After a great deal of hesitation you did, and then I asked you what the meeting was about, and you pretended that you did not remember? Well I have attended a great many meetings at different places, and I might get mixed as to what they were all about.
12664. Was it for the propagation of Christianity in China? No.
12665. Well what was it about? Two subjects were discussed at that meeting—one was about the general appearance of the Chinese in Sydney, and the other was about the Anti-Chinese Gambling League.
12666. Then that meeting must have been held after the establishment of the Anti-Chinese Gambling League? Yes.
12667. Therefore it must have been some time in July or August of this year? Yes.
12668. Then you acknowledge that you were there? Yes.
12669. You know that you said just now that you were not present at a meeting of the Anti-Chinese Gambling League; anyhow you now recollect that you were there;—tell us what happened at that meeting? They were talking about a Chinese gentleman having been admitted to the meeting. They saw it in the paper, and they asked whether it was I, because they said that I had been seen there. I said, "Yes." Then they asked me what the Anti-Chinese Gambling League were going to do. "Well," I said, "I do not know much, because, although I have been at the meeting, all I know is what you have seen in the papers, that the members of the League are trying to get assistance from the Government to stop gambling."
12670. That was the general scope of the meeting? Yes; and they said to me, "What made you go to the meeting and join the League?" I replied that I thought that it was for the good of the public generally, because I am against gambling, you know. Then some of them had an argument, and it appeared to me that there was some confusion, and I left during the confusion.
12671. Is it not a fact that some of those who were at the meeting were gamblers? Yes.
12672. The probability is that they were all gamblers, I suppose? I cannot say that; but I think that some were.
12673. Well, how was it that you, an anti-Chinese gambling man, were there? Well, they asked me to go without telling me the subject of the meeting. As a rule, I am asked to attend all meetings of the Chinese here, whatever they may be about.
12674. Did they not accuse you of telling the Anti-Chinese Gambling League that deductions were made from the winnings of the banker for a certain purpose? Well, they asked me about it, but I told them that I did not say anything about it in the meeting of the League. Indeed, I heard no such thing said at all.
12675. You are quite sure that you did not admit having mentioned to the League that 2d. in the £ was deducted from the winnings of the bank for the purpose of assisting poor Chinamen? I did not say so myself.
12676. And if any person says that you did it would be untrue? Yes.
12677. Are you quite sure? Yes; I am quite sure.
12678. Did they at that meeting accuse you of being a spy and an informer? No; nobody said that I was a spy. They might have done in my absence, but they did not in my presence. All the members of the League seemed to receive me on very intimate terms.
12679. What League are you speaking of;—the Anti-Chinese Gambling League? Yes; none of them said anything against me.
12680. But when I asked you if you were accused of being a spy, I meant by your own countrymen at Sun Sam War's? A spy, about what?
12681. A spy upon them? No; I was invited to the meeting.
12682. Did they tell you at the meeting that you had better leave Sydney for a little while? They did not tell me that.
12683. And yet you left Sydney because you were afraid? Yes, I was afraid.
12684. But if you were afraid why did you go to that meeting where most of your countrymen were assembled? Because after that meeting something worse was said about me. Some people were trying to take my life, and so on.
12685. Of whom were you afraid? I was afraid of Robert Lee Kum, Cheang Show, and Lee Man.
12686. Are they members of a secret society? I do not know.
12687. Will you swear that they are not members of a society called the Loon Ye Tong? They are not as far as I am aware.
12688. Do you know of the existence of any Chinese societies in Sydney? Yes.
12689. Give us the names of them? One is called the Hung Fook Tong, and its object is the removal of dead bodies to China, and so on.
12690. Yes—do you know of any more? There is the Koong Ye Tong.
12691. Is there a society called the Loon Ye Tong? Well, I do not know. There is one belonging to the Hung Shang district, in China. The people from that district have formed a society among themselves and subscribe money.
12692. Yes. Do you mean to tell me that you do not know of a society called the Loon Ye Tong. If you can tell the truth, please, oblige us by doing so? Yes; I am willing to tell you anything that I know. I never knew of that society.
12693. I want you to cudgel your brains and see if you cannot remember having heard of the Loon Ye Tong? No, I cannot say whether such a society is in existence or not.
12694. You will swear that you do not know anything about a society called the Loon Ye Tong? Well, I may have heard of it, but I cannot tell you anything about it.
12695. You do not know what any of its objects are—whether it is to construct a railway to the moon, or to subsidise a line of mail steamers between Sydney and Hongkong? No, I do not.
12696. You do not know anything about it? About what?
12698. Do you know Mr. Way Kee? Yes.

W. W.
Goldtown.
30 Nov., 1891.

12699. Was he not one of the officers of the Loon Ye Tong? I do not know.
12700. I suppose that all the Chinese societies that you do know of have very laudable objects in view? Most of the societies that I know anything about were formed for the purpose of assisting in removing dead bones to China.
12701. I see. Is there any Chinese society existing that has for its aims the payment of fines for its members when convicted at the Police Courts? I never heard of anything of the kind. Generally when cases are brought against Chinamen in Court their countrymen subscribe to pay the expenses, and sometimes even to pay the fines.
12702. Is it a fact that you advised some of your countrymen who keep gambling-houses in Goulburn-street to pay a sum of money to the police to get them off? No.
12703. You are quite sure that you never told them to bribe the police? Quite sure.
12704. Have you ever acted as agent for the letting of houses to the Chinese? No.
12705. Never acted as interpreter when a Chinaman has been taking a house from a white man in Lower George-street or Goulburn-street? Yes; I have acted as interpreter on one or two occasions.
12706. When one of your countrymen would want to take a shop in Lower George-street or Goulburn-street, you have acted as interpreter? Yes.
12707. Do you remember whether, to your knowledge, your countrymen have had to pay a bonus to the landlord for being allowed to take the house;—by a bonus I mean a sum of money in addition to the rent? Not in the cases that I have been alluding to.
12708. Irrespective of those cases, have you ever heard of any of your countrymen having had to pay a bonus to a landlord in order to get a house instead of a white man? No; I have never heard of anything of the kind. I have heard that they have sometimes had to pay for the fixtures, and so on.
12709. And would the tenants have to pay considerably above the value of the fixtures or what? Well, I do not know.
12710. Do you know Mr. Jack Armstrong, a member of the Anti-Chinese Gambling League? Yes.
12711. Did you meet him very often? After I joined the League?
12712. Yes? About six or seven times.
12713. Did you represent him that you were a Consul of China? No.
12714. And if he swore that you said that you represented twenty-five Chinese merchants who had asked you to join the League for the purpose of assisting its objects, he would be saying what is untrue? Quite so.
12715. And if he said that you knew that 2d. in the shilling was stopped from the prize fund at the gaming-houses, for the purpose of bribing the police, that would be untrue? That would be untrue.
12716. And if he swore that you said that this was a fund that was collected weekly from certain Chinese at the different gambling-houses for that purpose, that would be untrue? Quite so; it would be untrue; I never said anything of the kind.
12717. And if he swore that you said that you actually knew the man who collected the money for that purpose it would also be untrue? Yes.
12718. And is it not true that you tendered £25 to the Anti-Chinese Gambling League? It is not true. I never tendered £25 to it.
12719. And if it is said that you tendered £25 for the purpose of assisting the League, and that it was tendered on behalf of these Chinese gentlemen, that would be untrue? Quite untrue. The fee of the League is only 2s. 6d., and why should I go and offer them £25.
12720. You were informed by Mr. Armstrong were you not that the fee was 2s. 6d.? Yes, and I gave 2s. 6d. to the League.
12721. Did you tender twenty-five half-crowns? No, only one half-crown for myself. I gave £1 to Mr. Buchanan, the treasurer, and he gave me the change.
12722. You never tendered the £25 for these Chinese gentlemen, and said that you must keep their names secret, because there was a secret society, and if it was known that they had been subscribing to the League their lives would be in danger? No, it is untrue.
12723. Were you ever asked by Mr. Armstrong, or any other member of the society, to make an affidavit of certain statements that you made? Yes; Mr. Armstrong, Mr. Christensen, and Mr. Buchanan, three of them, were present at the time. I was late for the meeting that night. It was on a Friday night, I think. The meeting was over when I arrived. They asked me if I had seen the report of the deputation in the newspaper, and what I thought of it, and so on. I said, "I don't know anything about it; where did you get this information from?" They said, "We got it from a short stout man." I said, "What is his name?" They did not give me his name however, but they said, "We are very sorry that you were not at the deputation." I said, "Why?" They said, "Because we want you to realise our standing before Sir Henry Parkes." I said, "How could I do so." Then Mr. Armstrong took me aside and said, "We made all these statements in the presence of Sir Henry Parkes, and Sir Henry Parkes said, 'Who is your informer?' and as you are a Chinaman and go about amongst the Chinese here we thought that you must know all about it, and that no better name could be given; so we gave your name to Sir Henry Parkes."
12724. Well, I will stop you there;—you must answer "Yes" or "No" to these questions—Did they not ask you to make an affidavit? They asked me to make a written statement.
12725. And did you make it or not? I refused to make it.
12726. If you were desirous of suppressing gambling why did you refuse to make it? They wanted to dictate to me what I should write down.
12727. But they would have taken a modification of that statement;—they would have taken any statement you had liked to make that would have shown up the evil of Chinese gambling;—did you offer to make any such modified statement? Well, if they had not insisted that the statement should have reference to the alleged bribery of the police, and to the deduction of 2d. in the £ for a defence fund, I would have done anything that I could to help them to suppress gambling.
12728. But you say that you refused to make a written statement? I did not refuse to make any written statement. I refused to make that particular statement—the statement that they wanted to dictate to me.
12729. Did you volunteer to make any modified statement? Yes, I did volunteer.
12730. And they never drew any modified statement up for you to sign? I said that I would make any statement, but not that kind of statement.
12731. What particular parts of that statement did you object to? I objected to what they wanted me to say about the bribery.

W. W.
Goldtown.
30 Nov., 1891.

12732. You had no cause to think there was bribery, and therefore you objected to that? Exactly; I could not furnish any proof of it.
12733. And what other part did you object to? I objected to what they wanted me to say about the subscription of funds from the winnings of the gaming-tables.
12734. Did you object to anything else? No; I think that was all.
12735. Do you know Mr. R. V. Kelly, of the Anti-Chinese Gambling League? The Secretary! Yes, I know him.
12736. Did you inform Mr. R. V. Kelly that you knew of one Chinaman who had remitted some very large sums of money home to China—who had in fact sent home £60,000 in one year, representing the profits accruing to him during that period from the gaming-house of which he was the proprietor? No.
12737. Did you tell him that you knew of a syndicate of Chinamen who had remitted that sum of money, or any large sum of money, to China? No.
12738. Had you any conversation to that effect with Mr. Kelly, or with any other member of the League? No.
12739. No conversation about any sum of money being sent home as the profits of gaming? No.
12740. If Mr. Kelly has told the Commission that you informed the Anti-Chinese Gambling League that the police were bribed by chests of tea, or sums of money, would that be true? It would be untrue if he said that I said it.
12741. Well, would it be untrue if he had sworn that you told the League that somebody had informed you that that was the case? That would be untrue too.
12742. You did not tell him that somebody had informed you that the police were bribed by your countrymen? Well, I have heard some people talking about it, but I do not know myself whether it is true.
12743. Have you heard from your own countrymen that they have paid money to the police for the purpose of bribing them not to interfere with gambling? Well, there was some talk about it.
12744. Did any of the proprietors of Chinese gambling-houses in Lower George-street say so to you? No.
12745. Did any of the Chinese gamblers in Goulburn-street say anything about it to you? No.
12746. Well, who did tell you? I forget who told me. It was said in the course of conversation when several of us were sitting together smoking. Some of them said that they thought there must be something in it, as there were so many gambling-shops, and they were allowed to carry on operations without interruption.
12747. What sort of people were they who told you this;—were they Chinese gardeners from Botany or North Shore? I think most of them were hawkers.
12748. At all events it was gossip amongst them? Yes.
12749. But you are prepared to swear that you did not know of any of your countrymen having paid money or made presents of any kind to the police, to allow them to gamble with impunity? I will swear that.
12750. And if Mr. R. V. Kelly has sworn that you said you would take any member of the Anti-Chinese Gambling League round, and show him where the weekly dividends were paid for the purpose of corrupting the police, that would be untrue? I beg your pardon, sir.
12751. If Mr. Kelly has sworn that you said you would take any member of the Anti-Chinese Gambling League round, and show him where the weekly dividends were paid for the purpose of corrupting the police, that would be untrue? It would be untrue.
12752. Have you attended any meeting of the Chinese since that meeting at Sun Sam War's in July last? No; that is the last that I have been to.
12753. Can you tell me whether you are aware of any of your countrymen losing large sums of money in those fan-tan shops? Well, some have lost as much as £20 or £30.
12754. Do you know of any of them having made large sums of money through gambling? Some have won, and some have lost.
12755. Tell me whether the owners of the fan-tan places (say) in Lower George-street make large profits out of gambling? Some of them make some money, others do not.
12757. Do you know Robert Lee Kum? Yes.
12758. Have you ever had any monetary transactions with him? No.
12759. Never borrowed any money of him? No.
12760. Quite sure? Quite sure.
12761. Did you ever lose any money yourself? No.
12762. If anyone has sworn that you lost £20, or £30, or £40, by gambling, would he be swearing falsely? Yes; that is false.
12763. You never lost £30 by gambling in your life? No; I have never played fan-tan in Sydney.
12764. Then if anyone has said that Mr. Goldtown was a great gambler he would be swearing falsely, would he? Yes; that is false.
12765. And yet you live almost continually in these gambling-houses? No.
12766. Well, you are very frequently there? Well, I have to frequent them. I often act as interpreter for my countrymen, and that is where I meet people, and I often sit down and chat with them there.
12767. Then, although you go into these gambling-houses, you yourself never embark in the game? No.
12768. But is that not because you are a partner? No, I am not a partner.
12769. You will swear that you have no interest in the place in Goulburn-street in which we found you the other day? I have no interest in it whatever.
12770. Nor in any other? No.
12771. You do not work on commission for any of these gambling-houses? No.
12772. You will swear positively that you do not? I will swear positively that I do not.
12773. And you will swear that the proprietor of Lee On's, in Goulburn-street, is not a partner of yours in any sense of the word? No; I have no connection with him whatever.
12774. Have you had any communication with the police since you returned from Brisbane? No.

W. W.
Goldtown.

30 Nov., 1891.

12775. Can you give us any information as to the state of the Chinese at Hay? I have never been to Hay.
12776. Have you been to Narrandera, where there is a numerous Chinese camp? No.
12777. Do you know anything about the camp at Emmaville? Yes, I have been there.
12778. When were you last at Emmaville? Rather more than three months ago.
12779. What business had you there? It was as I was going to Brisbane that I called there.
12780. Are there many of your countrymen there? Yes; formerly there were some hundreds there belonging to the same district in China as my father, but now there are only about fifty-seven or fifty-eight.
12781. Is there much gambling going on there? When I was there there was not.
12782. No fan-tan? Oh, there were some fan-tan-shops up there.
12783. Patronised by Europeans very largely, I suppose? No.
12784. Were they confined to Chinese players? As far as I could ascertain.
12785. Well, would a population of fifty-seven Chinamen support them? No; I did not finish my statement. There are about fifty-seven or fifty-eight Chinese there belonging to the same district as my father, I was going to say.
12786. I want to know how many Chinese are there altogether? Oh, I suppose there would be between 300 and 400 Chinamen in Emmaville altogether.
12787. Well, could the 300 or 400 Chinese keep the fan-tan-shops going themselves? I think they could.
12788. Europeans do not go in there to gamble? Well, I did not see any.
12789. Were you long there? I was there one day and two nights.
12790. You do not know much about the place then? I was there about two years ago on account of a case in which I was engaged as interpreter. I settled it.
12791. Have the Chinese a camp to themselves there? Yes; there is a Chinatown.
12792. Are there many white women there? No; I do not think so.
12793. Did you live in the camp yourself? No; I was staying in the hotel.
12794. Did you ever stay at No. 2 Coffee Palace, Sydney? Yes.
12795. Did you ever cash a cheque there when you had no funds in the bank to meet it? Yes; and I told him that I gave him the cheque in good faith, and that he must give it back to me, and I would then pay him the amount in cash. The proprietor was a good friend of mine, and had been working in my place.
12796. What was the amount of the cheque? £4 10s.
12797. Did he give you any change, or was the whole £4 10s. due to the Coffee Palace people? Oh, I borrowed the money.
12798. You gave him your cheque for £4 10s., and he gave you £4 10s. in cash? Yes; and I told him not to present it at the bank—that it was only a pledge of good faith.
12799. Who cashed the cheque for you? Mr. Puig.
12800. When was he to present it? In a couple of weeks.
12801. You will swear that he knew that the money would not be paid if he presented it at once? Yes; I told him so.
12802. Will you swear that the police were not communicated with upon the subject? Well, I do not know that he mentioned it to the police.
12803. Did he ever prosecute you for it? No; subsequently I paid the money, and he sent me back the cheque.
12804. How long after? Two or three weeks after.
12805. Will you swear that he had not reason to believe that you were going to defraud him, and informed the police about it? I do not think that he thought I was going to defraud him.
12806. Will you swear that he did not tell the police about it? How can I possibly know that?
12807. Well, I want to know if you do know? I do not.
12808. It may be interesting to you then to know that the police were informed of the matter? I did not know it.
12809. Mr. Abigail.] How many meetings did you attend at Sun Sam War's? Only one.
12810. Think again? Only one; I am quite positive.
12811. How many persons were present? About thirty or forty.
12812. How were you invited to be there;—did they give you a written invitation or a verbal one? A verbal one.
12813. Who gave you the verbal invitation? A man called Ah Sum.
12814. Where does he live? I think that he lives in Lower George-street.
12815. What business does he carry on? I do not know.
12816. Is it not a fact that he carries on a gambling-house? I do not know; perhaps he does. He must live in one of those gambling-places.
12817. Does he live in the place where the shutters are always up? I do not know; I have never been in his place.
12818. Are you quite sure of that? Quite sure.
12819. Are you quite sure that you did not, on a second occasion, go to Sun Sam War's? No; I did not.
12820. You stated to the President that at the meeting there was some confusion, and that during the confusion you left? Yes.
12821. What was the origin of the confusion—were they not denouncing you as a spy and a traitor, and threatening you, and so on? They were not using any threatening language at the time, but they seemed to be somewhat excited.
12822. But did anyone at that meeting say that you wanted a good hammering? They did not say it to me, at all events, and I did not overhear it said.
12823. Now, did they not say that you were acting out of spite, and that you had told lies to the members of the Anti-Chinese Gambling League, and that your object had been to shut up some houses at the expense of others—did they not tell you that in plain terms at that meeting? Not when I was speaking. At all events, if it was said when I was there, it must have been said very quietly, for I did not hear it myself.
12824. You could not swear that that was not said at the meeting? No, I could not. I did not hear them, there was so much confusion.
12825. There must have been a tremendous uproar there? Well, they were all talking together.
12826. So there was a considerable amount of excitement about it? Yes.
- 12827.

W. W.
Goldtown.
30 Nov., 1891.

12827. And all because you went to the meeting of the Anti-Chinese Gambling League? Well, they seemed to go against me.
12828. What for? For joining the Anti-Chinese Gambling League, and some of them were kicking up a row.
12829. And did they believe that when you joined the Anti-Chinese Gambling League you were sincere, and going to give evidence that would be harmful to the Chinese? They seemed to think so.
12830. Did they not say at the meeting that you were particularly friendly with Moy Ping, and that Moy Ping was getting you to shut up some other places for the purpose of benefiting him? I did not hear it.
12831. Are you sure also that in consequence of these statements, and the excitement that accompanied them, that you were afraid that if you did not clear out they would inflict some injury upon you;—did you not escape to save yourself from being handled by some of them? Yes; I had reason to fear injury.
12832. What business did you start after you gave up the tea-shop? Teaching a school, and interpreting.
12833. If anyone has sworn that you went to gamble after you gave up the tea-shop that would be untrue? That would certainly be untrue.
12834. What part of China did you pass the most of your time in before you came here? In Hong Kong.
12835. Did you take any part there in the suppression of gambling? Yes.
12836. And you told the members of the Anti-Chinese Gambling League that at their meeting, as a kind of introduction? Yes.
12837. You are perfectly clear, on your oath, that you did not offer them, or even show them, twenty-five sovereigns? I can swear that I did not.
12838. You mentioned a number of names—the names of Chinese merchants who were likely to help you in your endeavours to suppress gambling, did you not? No, I did not.
12839. Did you mention no names at that meeting? No.
12840. And you did not mention any number? No, I did not.
12841. Then if three or four people have come here and sworn that you mentioned twenty-five Chinese merchants at the meeting of the Anti-Chinese Gambling League it would be untrue? Oh, the number of persons who said they would be willing to assist? I told them that twenty or thirty Chinese merchants would be willing to help in the suppression of gambling. I thought you were referring to the number of gambling-shops.
12842. Did they ask you for the names? Yes, they asked me for the names.
12843. And did you tell them that these gentlemen did not want their names mentioned, lest their lives would be in danger? No; I told them that I could not give them any names, because I was not authorised to go there.
12844. Did you not tell the members of the Anti-Chinese Gambling League that your friends told you not to give their names up, because there was a secret society which they feared would make attempts upon their lives if it was known that they had attempted to interfere with gambling? No; I did not; but I told them that my friends told me to be careful not to let my own name be known to the public or published in the newspapers.
12845. You have spoken about an affidavit. Tax your memory as to what answer you made to them upon that occasion? I said, "I will not put my name to a statement like that."
12846. But did you not say that now that the Commission had been appointed they could verify everything that you had said? There was no Commission appointed at that time, so I could not say that.
12847. Did you not attend another meeting of the Anti-Chinese Gambling League after the Commission had been appointed? No; I left Sydney before the Commission was appointed.
12848. Are you sure? I think so.
12849. Can you tell us the date, or about the date, that you left Sydney? This is November—it was in August.
12850. Then you left immediately after the meeting at Sun Sam War's? Almost immediately after.
12851. Had you received any intimation that led you to leave more quickly than you otherwise would have done? I think the next day, or, perhaps, that night, I went down to Mr. Buchanan and told him that I had been brought up to a meeting of Chinese, and that during some confusion I left. He seemed to think that I was going to put them away; so, after that night, I have never seen any of them since.
12852. You are quite sure that you did not go down the second night to tell them what you had done? Quite.
12853. Did they say to you, "All this nonsense (meaning the agitations about the Chinese gambling) has come from you"? Yes; I heard some voices saying that.
12854. And did you tell them that you had not said anything calculated to injure the Chinamen? I did not say that.
12855. You are quite sure that you have never said to anyone that 2d. or 3d., or indeed any sum, was kept back from the winnings of the banks in order to create a fund out of which the police were bribed? I never said anything of the kind.
12856. Did they not accuse you of being a spy or an informer for private gains? Who?
12857. Your own countrymen—at the meeting at Sun Sam War's? There were some voices to that effect.
12858. Some of your countrymen's voices? Yes; the voices from the meeting.
12859. Did they not also accuse you of giving information to the Anti-Chinese Gambling League in order that some of the gambling-houses might be cleared away, and others, with which you were connected, or with the proprietors of which you were friendly, might be retained? No.
12860. Do you know Pow Chee? Yes.
12861. Are you very friendly with him? Well, I know him pretty well.
12862. What is his general character—is he a reliable sort of man? Well, I cannot say; I have never had any transactions with him, except that sometimes we have been employed in certain cases to interpret Chinese evidence, or to instruct lawyers.
12863. Had you never a conversation with him in the course of which you said that you would have to clear out of Sydney in consequence of this Chinese gambling business? No; I never told him that.
12864. Have you ever had much to do with him? No, never much.
12865. Did you not tell someone that you had become frightened—that on account of the double part you were playing, some of the Chinese would give you a hammering? No.
12866. Have you ever been retained to appear in Court in any case? Yes, as interpreter.
12867. In many cases, or only in a few? Oh, in a good many. 12868.

W. W.
Goldtown.
30 Nov., 1891

12868. In thirty or forty? Yes, I should think so.
12869. Have you been engaged as interpreter in many cases in Sydney? Yes, in a good few.
12870. Who has generally engaged you—your own countrymen? Yes.
12871. Have you ever appeared in Court on behalf of the police? Yes; I have in a few cases. I have generally instructed the lawyers, and if Mr. Chong has not been there I have interpreted.
12872. Who most frequently engages you—your own countrymen? Yes.
12873. Have you appeared in many cases where there have been prosecutions for gambling? No; only in one—in Moy Ping's case, and I told him to plead guilty.
12874. And what are you paid? A guinea a day.
12875. Your feeling against the gambling is very strong; you would go a long way to abolish it;—you believe that it is injurious to your countrymen and to the Europeans too? Yes.
12876. Have you ever intimated to the police that you are willing to help them to stop it? Yes; but I applied for no warrant. I mentioned to one of the inspectors of police that I would help them if they wanted me; but I asked him not to make a raid. I wanted them to think of some plan for keeping people out of the gambling-places.
12877. What would be the best plan, without making raids, to prevent people gambling;—you have had a great deal of experience? Well, in Hong Kong there was once a great deal of gambling going on, and when I was in the office of the China Mail, where I was employed as a translator, some of my friends, after a great deal of trouble, organised clubs.
12878. Would regular police inspection stop it? Well, it would do good to a certain extent.
12879. And then, as soon as the backs of the police are turned, they are at it again, are they not? I think most likely.
12880. You are in the habit of visiting a number of these gambling-houses, are you not—not for the purpose of gambling, of course? I constantly visit them.
12881. In Lower George-street? Yes.
12882. Have you seen numbers of Europeans there? Yes; buying tickets, and so on.
12883. Have you ever seen a number of Europeans present when they have been playing fan-tan? Well, I seldom go into the gambling-places in Lower George-street, because they keep the doors bolted there.
12884. Are they allowed to keep their doors bolted in China? Formerly they did, but not since our movement.
12885. Then you stopped it did you? Yes, to a great extent.
12886. Did you compel them to open their doors? No; all the residents in a given street consult together, and in addition to that they depend a great deal on leagues of one kind and another. We advised the members of the leagues to carry on the business in the form of a club, and not to do it publicly, allowing only their friends to join.
12887. In this club do they allow them to carry on games for money among their own members? Well, they have games. They bet as to who pays for smokes, just as Europeans bet who shall pay for drinks.
12888. When you went to the Anti-Chinese Gambling League did anybody suggest that you were humbugging them—throwing dust in their eyes—not telling them the truth, but attempting to get what information you could, and to use it for the benefit of the gamblers? That was not suggested by anyone in my presence; but it may have been said in my absence.
12889. At all events nobody ever suggested it to you? No.
12890. Did your own conscience suggest it to you—did you laugh in your sleeve to think how well you had got at them? Might I explain that Mr. Christensen said to me, "If you will do whatever we like we will make you a Consul." I said, "I came here to assist your cause, and did not expect anything like that"; and they said, "If you do good instead of doing harm, we will do what we can for you. You need not be afraid. We will protect you and make you a Consul."
12891. But what I want to put to you is this: Are you perfectly satisfied that you were sincere in going to the Anti-Chinese Gambling League and offering to assist them in putting down gambling, or was it only a little bluff on your part? I was quite sincere.
12892. You know of course that a great deal of opium-smoking is carried on both among the Chinese and among the Europeans? Well, I do not know that there is much amongst Europeans, but there is a lot among my own people.
12893. Is it not very injurious to the smoker himself? Yes.
12894. And it creates a somewhat offensive smell in any neighbourhood where it is smoked, does it not? Yes; the smell is offensive to anyone who is not accustomed to it.
12895. Do you think that it would be well to suppress opium-smoking as an evil? Oh, yes, but trying to suppress opium is just like trying to suppress drink.
12896. Mr. Quong Tart.] Is not the effect of opium worse even than the effect of drink? Opium-smoking is not so bad as drink, because it simply injures the smoker himself, but when a man gets drunk he will do harm to others.
12897. Mr. Abigail.] Opium makes a man torpid, whilst the drink excites them? Yes; the opium-smokers seldom get excited.
12898. Do you know Waterloo? Yes.
12899. Retreat-street? Yes; I know it.
12900. Have you seen the huts at the back of Retreat-street in which your countrymen live? Yes.
12901. Do you think those huts are fit for human habitation. Are they fit for your countrymen to live in? Well, they feel comfortable in the huts, but I should not.
12902. Are there any sanitary laws in Hong Kong, or in any part of China? There are no such huts in Hong Kong as those at the back of Retreat-street.
12903. Nothing as bad as those? No; but there people build those places themselves, whereas in Hong Kong rich people build houses and then let them at a low rent.
12904. Would they be allowed to live in such places in Hong Kong? No; the law would prevent such sheds being built.
12905. Do you know whether gambling has increased or decreased here lately? I think it has decreased.
12906. It is a sort of national pastime in China, is it not? Yes.
12907. And the police, I suppose, do not make raids or anything of that kind there, do they? Sometimes.
12908. When it becomes very offensive or very outrageous? Yes; then the police begin to act.

12909.

- W.W. Goldtown.
30 Nov., 1891.
12909. Do you know a firm here that has sent very large sums away to China as the result of its winnings? No.
12910. You have never heard of a firm sending as much as £30,000 away? No.
12911. Mr. Quong Tart.] Before beginning to examine you, I want to get a little about your character placed on record. Since you joined the Anti-Chinese Gambling League, Mr. Kelly and other gentlemen have made certain statements about you. I am, therefore, going to elicit exactly what I know about you. When you first arrived in New South Wales some of your district friends brought you up to my place, in the Sydney Arcade, and introduced you to me. Is that not so? Yes.
12912. Your friends referred to your ability. They said you were well educated both in English and Chinese, and that you wanted to start in life out here. I said, "I am not selfish, and should be very pleased for any Chinaman to make a mark in Australia by conducting himself properly"? Yes, you did.
12914. I said, "I am very pleased to see any Chinese resident working hard and acting intelligently and respectably, and no doubt you will get on in Australia if you do that"; then I asked you what you could do, and you said that in China you had been engaged in interpreting and translating; I told you to get a place in the centre of the city if you wanted to get on? Yes, you did.
12915. Where did you commence business in Sydney? At 133, King-street.
12916. I assisted you, did I not, by giving you translations to do for myself, and by getting you work from some of the lawyers and some of the merchants in town;—I told you to be discreet in your conduct and to beware of the blackguards in China who live on their wits and are always stirring up strife and putting the country to a lot of trouble; I told you always to take the weakest side? Yes.
12917. You carried on business in King-street for some time? I remained for a few months in King-street and then I removed my office and went to Alexandria.
12918. And then you found that you had not enough business, did you not? Yes.
12919. And who took the office after you left? We handed it back to the landlord.
12920. Then you looked round for another business, and I offered to give you a show in my place in George-street? Yes.
12921. And you found that some of your friends were against it—that they thought I wanted to get you in there so that I could get rid of some of my old stock;—that was the thanks I got? Yes, some of my friends thought so.
12922. However you had your friends, and where did you go then? To Park-street.
12923. And how did you get on there? I failed in business.
12924. How long were you there? Eight or nine months.
12925. And do you not remember that I had to help you then? Yes.
12926. And then you asked me what I thought of the place, and what did I say to you—did I think it would pay or not? You said that you did not think it would pay.
12927. And I told you not to take it, did I not? Yes; but I did not like to go too much against the opinion of the friends who had supported me.
12928. Then when you failed in that place I asked you what you were going to do, and you said that you were going to study in a lawyer's office and still do the interpreting, did you not? Yes.
12929. And that is the last I saw of you? Yes.
12930. Up to then you were respectable, and showed a great deal of ability in acquiring local knowledge, but since then I know nothing of your conduct? Quite so.
12931. Some members of the Anti-Chinese Gambling League came to me, and asked what your character was. I said what I knew about you. Then they said to me, "Do you think it is true that Mr. Goldtown represents twenty-five Chinese merchants," and I said, "I cannot tell whether it is true or not"; then I sent for you and asked if you gave that information to the League, and what was your reply? I said that when I joined the League I was asked by Mr. Armstrong if it was true that 2d. out of every five marks in the lottery went to the police as a defence fund, and that I replied that I did not know anything about it. You asked me then what I knew about the alleged bribery—whether the police took anything from the Chinese. I said that I did not know, and upon that you pressed me with the question.
12932. And then I asked you if you told them that you represented twenty-five Chinese merchants? Yes, and I told you that I was asked whether there were any other Chinese merchants here who would join the League.
12934. Then I asked you if they had requested that you would make an affidavit? Yes, and I told you that the people belonging to the League asked me to sign a statement that they wanted to dictate to me.
12935. Did you not say to me, "If they want me to go before the Government, and I am obliged to give a statement, then I will do it"? Yes, I said that; but I did not say anything about the Commission. There was no Commission appointed at that time.
12936. Mr. Hawthorne.] You were referring to a deputation that was to wait upon the Government at that time? No. I said that if I was brought up before any Government officer I would make my statement.
12937. Mr. Quong Tart.] Did these twenty-five merchants authorise you to represent them on the Anti-Chinese Gambling League? Well, it was only my opinion at that time. They seemed quite agreeable.
12938. You are sure that they did not hold a meeting to decide it at the time? Quite sure.
12940. Mr. Abigail.] You are quite sure that you mentioned nothing at all about £25? Quite sure.
12941. Mr. Hawthorne.] Mr. Quong Tart wants you to say distinctly whether you mentioned anything about £25 to the members of the Anti-Chinese Gambling League? I did not.
12942. Mr. Quong Tart.] Nothing at all? Nothing at all.
12943. If they say you did, it is untrue? It is untrue.
12944. And now about the bribery of the police;—did any Chinese say anything about bribing the police? No, I never heard anything at all about it.
- 12945.

W. W.
Goldtown.
30 Nov., 1891.

12945. And you never made any statement about it? No.
12946. What about the meeting at Sun Sam War's;—was there any other interpreter there? Yes; Pow Chee.
12947. What part of the day was it? It was at night.
12948. What was Pow Chee doing there? He was reading the correspondence about the Anti-Chinese movement from the newspaper.
12949. Did they say anything to you about joining the Anti-Chinese Gambling League? Well, they asked me if I had joined the League and so on—some voices asked me.
12950. You say that you were frightened, and got away from Sydney? Yes.
12951. Were you frightened of the Europeans or the Chinese—the Anti-Chinese Gambling League or the police, or the Chinese gamblers? Well, I was frightened of both Europeans and Chinese. I was frightened of the Chinese, because Robert Lee Kum, Cheang Show, and Lin Man had threatened to take my life. As far as the League was concerned I was only frightened of it because they asked me to sign a statement that they wanted to dictate to me. I refused to sign it, and Mr. Christensen, who had got something in his head that night, and seemed inclined to be rather disagreeable, wanted me to explain the matter. Mr. Armstrong said that my name was given to Sir Henry Parkes as the man from whom the information came, and that in consequence of that they looked upon me for a corroboration of the evidence. I told them that I would not sign the statement, but that I should know what to say if called upon.
12952. Did you ever, in the League, say that the police were bribed with diamond rings, gold watches, chests of tea, or other articles? No.
12953. If anybody said that you did make a statement to that effect, it is untrue? Yes; quite untrue.
12954. And what is your opinion of gambling;—how would you suggest that it should be suppressed? Well, it is hard to say what is the best thing to do in a city like this.
12956. Well, give us your opinion as to how the gambling should be put down;—we are sitting here for the good of the public, and want to suppress it if we can;—have you given the matter any consideration?—suppose you were the Inspector-General, or the head of the Government, what method would you adopt for putting it down;—you would not remain quiet, would you? When I was a member of the Anti-Chinese Gambling League I suggested that I should make the landlords responsible to a certain extent, but now, after considering the matter, I have come to the conclusion that that could not be done, because the landlords would have their friends in Parliament, who would oppose any such alteration in the law.
12957. Mr. Quong Tart.] Certain witnesses have said that they have given you £40 to attend a case at Gundagai or Tumut;—is that true? What sort of a case?
12958. It was a sly-grog selling case? Yes.
12959. Did Robert Lee Kum say that he would give you £40 to go to Tumut? No; it was not Lee Kum.
12960. Did you get £40 from me for that case? No; I got paid by the prosecutor.
12961. Mr. Abigail.] Did Mr. Quong Tart at any time give you £40 to go up there? No.
12962. Mr. Quong Tart.] Now, here is another Chinese witness who says that you humbugged the Anti-Chinese Gambling League;—were you sincere or insincere? Well, I was quite sincere in everything I did to help the League to put down gambling.
12963. Mr. McKillop.] Do you know Pow Chee? Yes, I know him.
12964. Were you present at the first meeting held down in Lower George-street? Do you mean the meeting at Sun Sam War's—the one that his Worship the Mayor mentioned?
12965. Yes; at the first meeting that was held down there? Yes; at least I suppose it was the first meeting at Sun Sam War's.
12966. Is it not a fact that at that meeting you were charged with being the whole cause of the deputation to Sir Henry Parkes? Some voices said so.
12967. Were you not also threatened that same night? I thought that some voices threatened me.
12968. Were you not also asked at that meeting whether you had made the statement that there was a sustentation fund in existence for the purpose of bribing the police not to interfere in Chinese gambling? They may have said so.
12969. Was Moy Ping at the meeting? Yes, I think he was.
12970. You have been in partnership with him, have you not? No, I have not.
12971. Who paid your expenses out of Sydney on the occasion of your recent trip? I did myself.
12972. Were you not assisted by some who thought that you might give detrimental evidence to the Commission? No.
12973. Only you would not have left Sydney if you had not thought that some harm would come to you? Well, I go away for two or three months every year—a fortnight at one time, a fortnight at another time, and so on, whenever I have the time to spare.
12974. Have you been residing in Goulburn-street long? I have never resided there.
12975. Did you stop for any length of time in George-street? Yes, at No. 2 Coffee Palace.
12976. How long had you stayed there? Four or five weeks.
12977. And where do you generally stop when you are in Sydney? In Alexandria.
12978. Do you carry on business there or are you in partnership with anybody who is in business there? No.
12979. Have you any share in any of the gardens there? I own a garden at Arncliffe—the whole garden belongs to me—4 or 5 acres.
12980. Is it a freehold? No; it is a leasehold, and is cancelled now. It was cancelled last year.
12981. Then you have no interest in any garden at the present time? No.
12982. And you are not in any business? No.
12983. You just make a living by teaching and interpreting? Yes.
12984. And you are not in partnership with any gamblers? No.
12985. Are you sure of that? I am quite sure of that.
12986. Is there any immorality down in Lower George-street? To some extent.
12987. Are any young girls decoyed down there? Well, many a time I have seen them larking in front of the shop and so on.

W. W.
Goldtown.
30 Nov., 1891:

12988. Do they ever lark inside the shops? I have never seen them inside.
12989. Do you not consider that the games called fan-tan and pak-ah-pu are being carried on right in front of the policemen's nose? Well, the police must have noticed it.
12991. When did you come back from Emmaville? From Emmaville I went straight on to Brisbane.
12992. Is it not a fact that you were written for and told to come down? No.
12993. You came back of your own free will? Yes.
12994. I suppose that you thought that the whole matter had blown over? No, but my money was spent. I had been in Brisbane enjoying myself.
12995. Are there many Chinese in Brisbane? About five hundred or six hundred.
12996. Do they all live in one quarter? Most of them are gardeners.
12997. Is there much gambling carried on there? There is a lot of gambling carried on there.
12998. Do you know anything about Melbourne? No.
12999. Have you never been to Melbourne? No.
13000. Is Emmaville the only country place that you have ever visited where the Chinese are to be found in great numbers? No.
13001. Have you ever been to Wagga Wagga or Tingha? No.
13002. What place have you visited besides Emmaville? Maitland, Newcastle, Goulburn, and Tumut.
13003. Are there many Chinese residing there? Not very many.
13004. I suppose gambling is carried on wherever they reside? Some of them carry it on.
13005. Do you know Pow Chee well? Yes, I do know him.
13006. What character has he got. Is it a good character? Well, is it right of me to speak of a man's character behind his back?
13007. Well, he has given us his opinion of your character. Are you friendly with him? We are not bad friends.
13008. Is he a man of very good character? Oh, I do not say very good character—I do not know much about his character. I have had no business transactions with him, and should not like to pass an opinion.
13009. Mr. Hawthorne.] Were you and Pow Chee on very friendly terms when you were in Sydney? We were not on very friendly terms, but we were friendly.
13010. Used you to visit his house and he your store when you had one? He never visited my place.
13011. But you have visited his place, have you not, and had some meals with him? I have not had any meals at his place.
13012. Never taken tea with him and his wife? No.
13013. Are you sure that you have never visited his house? I do not know his house.
13014. And you have never been on intimate terms with Pow Chee? No; not on very intimate terms.
13015. Do you know James Nug Quoy? Yes; I know him.
13016. Were you on very intimate terms with him? So, so.
13017. By "so, so" you mean middling? Yes.
13018. You met Pow Chee at the meeting of Chinese at Sun Sam War's after the rather startling statements which had been made to the Premier by the deputation that waited upon him? Yes.
13019. Had you much conversation with him that night? No.
13020. Are you quite sure? Quite sure.
13021. Did you address the meeting that night? Yes; I answered some questions.
13022. Did you tell the Chinamen that you were only "fooling" the Anti-Chinese Gambling League? No; I did not.
13023. What sort of men did you find the members of the Anti-Chinese Gambling League to be—were they a very agreeable class of men? Yes; they made me very welcome, though some of them are rather disagreeable when they have got something in their heads—like Mr. Christensen.
13024. What do you mean by saying "when they have something in their heads";—do you mean when they have had too much liquor? Yes; I have seen two or three of them with too much liquor. I had to take one of them home one night, and he fell down.
13025. You remember on one occasion having to take a member of the Anti-Chinese Gambling League home? Yes; I can give his name;—it was Mr. —
13026. He was an active member of the League, was he? Yes.
13027. And at that meeting he had been speaking against Chinese gambling, had he not? Yes.
13028. Were you in the habit of partaking of refreshments after the meeting was over? Yes; if we got there before the meeting started we generally had some drinks, and then afterwards we often stopped there until half-past 12 and 1 o'clock, and had to be let out at the back door.
13029. You had liquor before the meetings, and you also had liquor after the meetings, and generally remained at Mr. Buchanan's house until after half-past 12 o'clock? I have even seen—(mentioning one of the officers of the Anti-Chinese Gambling League) drink too much. On one occasion he had another glass and vomited.
13030. Are you quite sure that these gentlemen were not overcome by the tremendous statements that you were making about Chinese gambling. Are you sure that it was the liquor with which they were overcome? Oh, they were overcome with liquor.
13031. And Mr. — (the officer of the League, mentioned above), even took too much liquor? Yes.
13032. And on one occasion you saw him vomit? Yes.
13033. Whilst the meeting was going on? No; after the meeting was over.
13034. Did you know the members of the League personally? I did not know them before I joined the League.
13035. Used you to go and visit them at their private houses, or their business establishments? As a rule I only saw them at Mr. Buchanan's hotel, though once Mr. — took me to his place and introduced me to his wife. He was half drunk then, and asked me to have another drink.
13036. Were you ever drunk yourself when attending these meetings? I have never been drunk in my life.
13037. Are you quite sure that you always had some drink at these meetings of the League? Yes.

W. W.
Goldtown.
30 Nov., 1891.

13038. Then how was it that you did not get drunk? Because the others took spirits, but I took only wine and claret, and lemonade.
13039. So that the reason that you kept sober whilst they got drunk was that you were more choice in your liquors than they were? Yes; they always took strong spirits.
13040. So that if some of the members of the League said that you made very remarkable statements, could you understand it on the ground that they did not quite know what they were doing? Yes; they generally had a sort of debate when they were drinking. We talked much more in the room where we were drinking than in the meeting-room. In the meeting-room one would propose, another second, and the rest pass resolutions—that was all.
13041. Were they sober when they were discussing these questions or not? I do not know.
13042. But surely you can tell when a man is sober and when he is not? When they were in the meeting-room they seemed to be right to a great extent.
13043. Did you notice any member of the League under the influence of liquor when the meetings were being held? No; but I noticed one man say something, then get up and swear and walk away. Then he came back and apologised for being so excited. He might have been a little bit tight. That was at the meeting that I first attended.
13044. How many men used to attend these meetings—was there a big crowd? No; from ten to fifteen.
13045. Never more than fifteen? No, about fifteen.
13046. Where were the meetings held—at Buchanan's, on the ground floor or up above? The room in which they were held is rather more elevated than the bar.
13047. And you say that as a rule there was not much business done at the meetings? Not very much.
13048. Simply formal business? Yes.
13049. And the general discussions took place after they had adjourned, and were partaking of refreshments in the form of spirituous liquors? Yes.
13050. You are quite clear upon that point? Quite clear.
13051. And how long did the meetings themselves last? The longest meeting I attended was the one at which I was first introduced to the League. It lasted from about half-past 8 to a little after 10 o'clock.
13052. But then you made a long speech on that occasion? No; I spoke for a few minutes.
13053. As a rule do you make long speeches when you are discussing things? Not when I am speaking in the English language.
13054. Were there any Members of Parliament present at any of the meetings? I saw Mr. T. M. Davis, of the Labour Party, present at one of them for a few minutes. He made a speech and said that he would do what he could for the League. He admired them he said, and he assured them that he would bring the matter before Parliament, and asked some of his fellow members to co-operate with him, suggesting at the same time that a Bill to make the landlords responsible would be a good thing.
13055. He did not seem to have much sympathy with the landlords? No, he said that the Labour Party would hold a caucus at Parliament House and discuss the matter.
13056. Was that at the second or third meeting that you were at? I think that it was at the second meeting.
13057. I suppose that Mr. Davis's remarks met with the entire approval of the League? Yes.
13058. Did they adjourn that night for refreshments? We adjourned every night.
13059. So that when the time for the meetings came round you looked upon it that you were going to enjoy yourself that evening? Yes, and I did enjoy myself very much too.
13060. Are you perfectly sure that you did not drink so much on one of those occasions as to make you large minded and generous enough to promise £25 towards the funds of the League? I am quite sure.
13061. You are quite sure that you were always perfectly sober, and remembered afterwards everything you said? Yes.
13062. And what would you say if some of the men has said that you made an offer of £25 to the Anti-Chinese Gambling League? I should say it was false.
13063. Then do you think they were in the habit of imagining things at these meetings of the League? Most of them got information from some of their friends outside. They would say "So and so said such and such a thing" and "somebody else said such and such a thing."
13064. That took place, I suppose, as you were drinking the grog? Yes, after the meeting was over.
13065. Did you usually find them more talkative and vigorous in their action after or before the meeting? After the meeting was over.
13066. Did they always seem to be in a hurry to get through the formal part of the meeting? Yes, they did seem to be so.
13067. Do you know Mr. Nock? Yes; in the meeting he always spoke with a shaky voice, but in the after meeting he talked like anything.
13068. Did he take anything at all to drink? Yes, I have seen him take something to drink.
13069. Spirits? Well, I have shouted for him, and he has shouted for me.
13070. Did you notice what he took? No. I was the only one who had wine and lemonade. The others had beer, whisky, and brandy.
13071. Mr. Quong Tart.] And champagne? No; there were too many there. We could not afford it.
13072. Mr. Hawthorne.] Did your drinks come from the 3d.-bar or from the 6d.-bar? We paid 6d. for each drink.
13073. Who appeared to you, as an observer of character as you evidently were, to have been the most prominent member of the League? Mr. Nock.
13074. And who else;—do you remember Mr. Maguire, the photographer in Lower George-street? No; I do not know him. Mr. Nock was the principal speaker.
13075. Was Mr. Nock in the habit of staying late at these after meetings;—did all the members stay until the meetings closed, or used some to leave before the others? Mr. Nock used to leave before the others—about 11 or half-past.
13076. Did they all stop until after the hotel was closed? Yes; all of them.
13077. And would they bring up grog into the room after 11 o'clock? Yes.
13078. And who used to be supplying the grog, Mr. Buchanan or his wife? Both of them.
13079. You have seen him and his wife serving liquor up to half-past 12 o'clock? Yes.
13080. And then the customers always used to be let out the back way? No, not always; on one occasion they were.
- 13081.

30 Nov., 1891.

13081. And on the other occasions you were always put out at the side door? No; on one occasion at the back door, and on one occasion at the front door in Lower George-street.
13082. Did not Mr. Buchanan shout sometimes? No, he did not shout. It was always the members of the League who shouted for Mr. Buchanan.
13083. Do you know Moy Ping? Yes.
13084. Are you friendly with him? Yes.
13085. And have you been in his place since you returned from Brisbane? No.
13086. Are you quite sure that you have had no conversation with him about the business of this Commission? Yes.
13087. Nor with James Nug Quoy? No. I have not been in Lower George-street since my return from Brisbane. I have been too busy in Goulburn-street.
13088. What do you mean by being busy? They are all my own countrymen who live in Botany, Waterloo, Rockdale, and Goulburn-street, and every day I have been invited to take a meal at a different house. I am one of the Gow You district men, and a leader amongst them. As they esteem me in that light, they came to see me when I returned.
13089. Where are you living? With Hip War & Co., storekeepers, Alexandria.
13090. Do they charge you anything for board and lodging? No. Even if I offered them money they would not accept it. I did offer Hip War money when I had the office in King-street, but he would not accept it.
13091. You have found that the people from your part of China entertain you in the most friendly and hospitable manner? Yes.
13092. And they will not accept anything in return because they like you? I suppose so.
13093. You have not seen Moy Ping since you came back? No.
13094. Were the members of the Anti-Chinese Gambling League serious when they held out this position of Consul to you if you supported the statements made to Sir Henry Parkes by the deputation when it waited upon him? That is a long question.
13095. You say that the members of the Anti-Chinese Gambling League said to you that if you stuck to the statements made to Sir Henry Parkes by the deputation they would have sufficient influence to make you a great man—like a Consul in China? Yes, they said so.
13096. Were they serious, or were they only fooling you? Well, they looked serious. They gave me the pen and ink, and wanted to dictate to me what I was to write and sign. I asked them what they wanted me to put down, and they said that I might put down anything I liked in addition to these two things about bribery by the proprietors of the gambling-houses, and the deduction of money from the winnings of the banks in aid of a police sustentation fund.
13097. In other words, they wanted you to sign the statement that they made to Sir Henry Parkes? Yes.
13098. And it was when you refused to do that that Mr. Christensen and some other members of the League began to show temper towards you? Yes.
13099. And it was also after that that you ceased to have anything to do with the Anti-Chinese Gambling League? Yes, it was after that.
13100. And did they tell you that you had better clear out of Sydney? No, they did not tell me that.
13101. Did they make a threat of any kind? Well, some of them said that they would go for me.
13102. And you really got frightened of these men? Yes, to a certain extent.
13103. What men were you the most frightened of—these men, or your own countrymen? Well, one lot threatened to take my life, and the other lot to put me into gaol.
13104. Who threatened to kill you? I have already given their names to the Commission.
13105. Who threatened to put you into gaol? The Anti-Chinese Gambling League people said that as I refused to sign the statement they were afraid that I would not assist them in any shape or form, so they threatened to go for me.
13106. They threatened that they would do you some harm? Yes.
13107. That they would assault you? No; I did not know whether they would assault me or put me into gaol.
13108. Was it this fear that made you go away from Sydney for some time? Yes.
13109. And you went away because you were afraid of your countrymen because they said that you were trying to inform of their habits, and of the Anti-Chinese Gambling League because you would not sign a paper substantiating the statements they made to Sir Henry Parkes? Yes.
13110. What do the three Chinamen do whose names you gave to the President as those of the men who were going to kill you? Well, they have no business to do.
13111. How do they live? I have heard a great deal about them in the capacity of informers, threatening to bring actions against people if they would not give them money. They try to extort money from them.
13112. These three men are continually threatening their countrymen that if they do not give them money they will bring actions against them, and drag them up before the Courts? Yes.
13113. Mr. Pow Chee does not know enough of your character to warrant his giving an opinion as to the kind of man you are, does he? I think not.
13114. Have you ever done anything in your life to lower your character—have you ever been in gaol for any crime? No, no.
13115. Have you got an unblemished character up to now? Yes, I think so.
13116. Be quite sure of that. You were never prosecuted before you came to this country? No.
13117. And you stand in high repute amongst your countrymen? Yes.
13118. So much so that they are quite willing to keep you without charging you anything? Yes.
13119. You are a good English scholar, are you not? Well, I do not know.
13120. You can read and speak English fluently, cannot you? Yes; I can read better than I can speak.
13121. Do you understand any other languages? No.
13122. What were you studying for in Hong Kong? I was studying for the law.
13123. What made you change your mind? My health. I decided to go to Peking, but it was rather too cold in Peking, which is in the north of China, so I then made up my mind to come down here.
13124. You came down to Sydney in search of health, and had to abandon your studies in the law on that account? Yes; I have given myself up to private study since I came to Australia, and to writing a book, which I have not yet finished.
13125. Are you writing the book now? Yes.

13126. Is it too much to ask you what the subject of it is? It is to teach all the English and Chinese speaking people to know each others habits, and manners, and customs, and history. It also gives some phrases that do not lend themselves very easily to translation.
13127. You say that you are quite positive that you never indulge in gambling yourself? Yes, never.
13128. And you never kept a gambling-house? Never.
13129. And if it has been asserted by Pow Chee that you kept a gambling-house after you gave up the tea-shop, that would be untrue? Quite untrue.
13130. And he has no foundation for saying such a thing? He has no foundation at all.

[The witness then withdrew.]

FRIDAY, 4 DECEMBER, 1891.

Present:—

THE MAYOR OF SYDNEY (ALDERMAN MANNING, ESQ., J.P.), PRESIDENT.

FRANCIS ABIGAIL, Esq., J.P., VICE-PRESIDENT.

RAMSEY MCKILLOP, Esq., | QUONG TART, Esq.,
JOHN STUART HAWTHORNE, Esq.

Mr. Frederick Henry Searl called and examined:—

13131. President.] What are you in business? We are nurserymen, seedsmen, and florists.
13132. Where are your gardens situated? One garden is situated at Botany, another at Ashfield, and another at Petersham. We have three nurseries.
13133. Do you employ Chinese at any of them? Only at the one at Botany. We have employed them there for the last three years.
13134. For the last three years you have employed Chinese only on the Botany premises, and you do not employ them in the Ashfield or Petersham nurseries? No; only at Botany.
13135. How many Chinese have you there? Well, when we were breaking up the land, and so on, we employed as many as nine or ten. At the present time we have only one, but I intend to put on a couple more, so that the average would be about three.
13136. Do you keep any Europeans at work there now? Oh, several; about five or six.
13137. What wages do you pay the Europeans? Their wages vary from 30s. to 42s. per week.
13138. And do you ration them? No; they keep themselves.
13139. Their wages depend upon the value of their services as workmen, I suppose? Yes; and when I say that the highest wage paid is 42s. a week, I should add that that man has a cottage rent-free, so that his wages really amount to about 50s. a week.
13141. And do you give them any advantage in the way of fruit or vegetables out of the garden? No; nothing of that kind.
13142. What do you pay the Chinamen? From 24s. to 30s. a week.
13143. And you lodge them, I suppose? No.
13144. Are they not so skilful as the Europeans? No; they have not the knowledge that the Europeans have, but they are particularly good at cleaning and tidying up.
13145. What time do the Europeans knock off on Saturdays? About 4 o'clock in the afternoon.
13146. And the Chinese knock off then too, I suppose? Yes.
13147. Do they ever work in the nurseries on Sundays? No.
13148. Do you never work your Chinese on Sundays? No; never.
13149. It has been stated before the Commission that you do? I can give the lie direct to that.
13150. And then it was also alleged that you employed a greater number of Chinese than you say you do. It has been stated by those who professed to know that you employ as many as twenty Chinamen at the present time? No.
13151. Then if it was alleged that you employ twenty Chinamen it was untrue? Yes; quite untrue. As I said we had nine or ten Chinese working for us when we were breaking up the land and preparing to plant—that would be for about six months—then the number came down to six, and then six or eight months ago it came down to four, and since then the number has been reduced to one; though, as I have told you we intend putting on two more, and that will be our full complement of Chinamen.
13152. Do you know anything about the condition in which the Chinese live in that neighbourhood? Well, only as far as our own are concerned; I have seen the way they live, and have thought that they appeared to be clean tidy fellows and saving too.
13153. Then, really, your experience of the Chinese gardeners is rather limited—limited at all events to those in your own employ? Yes. I may say, however, that one man, a Chinaman, whom we employed as a foreman down there, got £75 a year for five years, and ultimately left for China with £500.
13154. But if he was only in your employ for five years at a salary of £75 a year he could not have saved that amount as a result of the work he did for you? Oh, I don't say that he saved it all in our employ; he was an exceedingly good man, and when he left I thought that we would not take on any more Chinamen, but we have found it advisable to do so.
13155. You pay some of your Chinamen 30s. a week then? No—that was an exceptional case—that man was a foreman.
13156. What would you have to pay Europeans to do the same class of work? Well, we could get eighteen or twenty who would come for the same money; but we have found for that class of work Chinamen to be the most satisfactory.
13157. Are you able to say whether the Chinamen would be able to do the same amount of work in a given time as Europeans? Yes, of that particular kind of work they would do as much.
13158. Have you had any difficulty at any time owing to their raising objections? Do you mean the Europeans raising objections?

W. W.
Goldtown.
30 Nov., 1891.

Mr.
F. H. Searl.
Dec., 1891.

- Mr. F. H. Searl.
4 Dec., 1891.
13159. No, the Chinese as to the amount of money you paid them, or the number of hours they have to work, and so on? No; they have been most satisfactory in every respect, and that is why we have employed them.
13160. How many Europeans do you employ? Altogether, including those in the town and suburbs, we employ about thirty-seven hands.
13161. Have the Europeans ever made any complaints to you? No; hitherto we have had no trouble whatever.
13162. As a matter of fact you are looked upon as a good employer? Yes, I think so; we have had men with us for as long as ten years.
13163. You are not in a position to speak as to the moral condition of the Chinese? Well, I have seen very little of them; but from hearsay, and what little experience I have had, we seem to have been lucky in getting good, respectable men.
13164. Do you hear anything about gambling being carried on there? No; if we have had any with a tendency in that direction they have gone to Waterloo to play.
13165. Mr. Hawthorne.] What is the reason that you employ Chinese at the Botany gardens but not at Ashfield or Petersham? Well, in the first place, because the Botany garden is right in the heart of the Chinese population, and, in the second place, the soil at Botany is light, and the Chinese are on that account, well adapted to work it. They are no good at all at working heavy soil like that at Ashfield and Petersham.
13166. If you wanted the Chinese to work on stiff soil like that at Ashfield or Petersham, they would raise some objection? I think they would.
13167. What is the Botany gardens used for principally? For bulbs, carnations, and so on—flowers that grow better in that kind of soil.
13168. Have you ever had Chinese employed at Ashfield or Petersham? No; I think not on any occasion.
13169. What has been the greatest number on your garden at Botany since you started? Eight or nine, or ten, and that was at the commencement. I do not think we have ever exceeded nine at any time, and that was only for a very few months when we were preparing the ground for the first planting.
13170. Since you begun to employ Chinese have you ever found that the European gardeners working on the same garden have raised any objection to working along with them? No; we have had no difficulty or trouble at all as far as that is concerned.
13171. Knowing, as of course you do, the amount of ill-feeling that exists in the community generally about the employment of Chinese by Europeans, how is it that you prefer to employ them even at almost the same wages that you give to European gardeners? Well, for the particular kind of work we use them for they answer our purpose admirably. They are tidy and clean, and for that work I think a little cheaper than other labour.
13172. You find that for that particular kind of soil they do the same amount or perhaps a little more work than Europeans, and that their wages are lower? Yes, that is so.
13173. What kind of men are they you employ at 30s. a week. You stated just now, in answering a question put by the President, that the rate of wages varies from 30s. to 45s. a week? Well, there are two young men from 20 to 25 years of age whom we employ at that rate of wages to do the carting and rough work for us.
13174. And they get no allowance in the shape of board and lodging? No; no allowance over and above their wages.
13175. In other words they are unskilled labourers? Yes.
13176. Those who receive 45s. a week are men who have a knowledge of gardening in its various branches? Yes.
13177. Do you pay anything higher than 45s.? We pay 50s. to one man at Petersham, and 45s. to three or four others.
13178. And I suppose we are to conclude that if from 30s. to 45s. is paid to the men in your employ, that is the rate of wages in other nurseries? Yes; that is about the thing.
13179. Do your men experience any broken time, or do they get their wages wet or dry? Oh, it is a steady wage.
13180. So that we are not to understand that they are only paid 35s. or 40s. during steady work? No; oh, no.
13181. And that 35s. or 40s. would be paid under any circumstances and nothing deducted for holidays? Of course, as I have already said, our line of business is somewhat irregular and necessitates the men working for an hour or two on a holiday occasionally.
13182. How many hours a week do they average? Ten hours a day, and two hours less on Saturdays.
13183. So that is fifty-eight hours a week? Yes.
13184. Have the men ever appealed to you to increase their wages? No, never.
13185. Do they appear quite contented? Yes.
13186. The Chinese enjoy the same privileges as regards time that are allowed to Europeans? Yes.
13187. And, as a matter of choice, if twelve Chinese and twelve Europeans offered themselves, each possessing the same amount of knowledge in your line of gardening, which of the two classes would you prefer? Well, if the wages were equal, we should prefer the Europeans, but the wages not being equal we take the Chinese occasionally.
13188. You do not find that the Chinese do better work than the Europeans? Well, they plod along very steadily, and I think that at weeding or trenching, or anything of that kind, if they worked side by side, we should find that they did a little more.
13189. And I suppose that is why you employ them even, against the wish of the public? Yes.
13190. Are Chinese employed by any other nurserymen? I know that Pearce Bros. used to employ them, but I do not know whether they do so now.
13191. Do you know whether Shepherd employs them? No, I do not.
13192. Do you know of any others who do? A few months ago Iliffe & Co. used to do so at Rockdale.
13193. You are not aware whether they do at the present moment? No, I am not. I rather think, however, that Jno. Treseder at Ashfield does, but I would not be quite sure.
13194. So that most nurserymen in connection with certain branches of their work employ a few Chinese? Well, the custom has been to employ one or two.
- 13195.

13195. Mr. McKillop.] Assertions have recently been made to the effect that you have a large number of Chinese in your employ? Well, I have not heard it said that we have a large number in our employ.
13196. Well, fifteen or twenty? Yes, I did hear that.
13197. Was it not brought under your notice not very long ago by the Gardeners' Society? There was some society amongst gardeners organised recently, I believe.
13198. Your attention has not been drawn to the employment of Chinese, has it? Yes, it was not very long ago, by the Trades and Labour Council.
13199. Are none of the men employed by you members of this Gardeners' Society? No, not to my knowledge.
13200. Mr. Hawthorne.] Is it to your knowledge that the Union men demand higher wages than the men in your employ? No, I am not aware that they do.
13201. Mr. McKillop.] Do they demand shorter hours? No, not that I know of. I have really taken no notice of the communication of the Trades and Labour Council. We know how to conduct our own business, and must be left to do so as we think best.
13202. Would shorter hours be possible? Not without inconvenience, I think.
13203. Do you provide houses for your Chinamen? Yes; we do provide one house. It is a weather-board structure, about 12 feet square.
13204. Mr. Hawthorne.] And how many have you seen living there at a time? Well, at first I saw about eight, I think, but latterly I have only seen three or four.
13205. If you asked eight of your European gardeners to sleep in that place do you think they would raise an objection? Undoubtedly.
13206. Have you noticed the sanitary condition of the premises, as far as the personal habits of the Chinese affect it? Yes. I have always found it very clean and tidy. Having so many Europeans about has kept them up to the mark, I think.
13207. You do not find any house accommodation for the European gardeners? No; excepting that the foreman at Botany, and also the foreman at Ashfield, has a house. The Ashfield man gets 45s. a week, and the house in which he lives is worth another 10s. a week, so that practically his wages amount to 55s. a week.
13208. Mr. Quong Tart.] Is the work heavy? At Botany it is very light—the soil there is light and sandy.
13209. You say that the men are employed from 6 to 6, but it is not hard work? No; for the first hour or so it is merely going round and picking flowers, and after that it is principally chipping, and so on.
13210. Is there any objection on your part if a man likes to take a spell? No; none whatever. If a man feels a little bit sick there is no objection to his knocking off for the afternoon.
13211. You find men sick and off colour sometimes;—do you deduct anything from their wages? Well, it all depends upon the merits of the case. Sometimes there is no deduction at all, and at other times we only deduct half.
13212. Would there be any deduction for half the absence that occurs? No; nothing at all. Sometimes, however, men want to get away for a month's pleasure, and that is a different thing.
13213. You do not think that your men work hard for the whole ten hours? No; two hours a day might average pretty hard work, but the rest of the time is employed in clipping and hoeing and cutting flowers, and so on. It is harder work at Ashfield, because the soil is stiffer, but at Botany it is simply child's play.
13214. If it rains do they work outside? Well, if it is only light rain they do, but if it is very heavy they go inside. They are not supposed to run serious risks of that kind.
13215. You say that if you had to pay the Chinese 30s. a week, and could get Europeans for the same money, you would let the Europeans have the work? Yes, I think so; because they are my own people, and of course one has a natural preference for them, but I must say that our experience of the Chinese has been very satisfactory.
13216. Do they smoke opium? Well, they do smoke a good deal, and I suppose it is opium.
13217. Is it an ordinary pipe that they use? Yes.
13218. Then you may be sure that it is not opium? Well, perhaps not. I have not noticed particularly, but as I have said we have been getting a rather superior class of Chinamen.
13219. If it has been said that you have at any time employed twenty Chinamen or more for the purpose of running Europeans out of the market, is that true? No; certainly not.
13220. Supposing there was no complaint on the part of the public about the employment of Chinamen, would you do exactly what you are doing now? Yes.
13221. That is, you would employ mostly Europeans, and indeed only one or two Chinamen? Yes; as I said, we received a notice from the Trades and Labour Council the other day, and we wrote back saying that we declined to discuss the question. We have flattered ourselves upon doing well by our employees, and must be allowed to make our own arrangements.
13222. The Trades and Labour Council is the only body that has objected in any way to the employment of Chinese in your nurseries? Yes; as far as I am aware.
13223. Nobody at Botany has objected? No.
13224. Mr. Hawthorne.] Where is your garden at Botany? It is between the "Sir Joseph Banks' Hotel" and the Randwick racecourse. It is just behind Mr. Stephen's place.
13225. Mr. Quong Tart.] I suppose there is a great deal of patience required in working in gardens like yours? Yes; it is careful work.
13226. And you want men to suit that kind of work? Yes.
13227. Mr. Hawthorne.] In other words, Mr. Quong Tart wants to draw out this point: that his nationality are more efficient for that kind of work than our own? Yes; I think they have more patience than Europeans.
13228. But for heavier and more laborious work you find that the Europeans are better? Yes; but as regards patience and neatness the Chinese are admirable. Their beds are always straight and neat.
13229. If you were to go out to-day and compare the work done by a Chinaman and a European in different portions of the garden, you could pick out the Chinaman's work without being told that it was his, because of its great neatness? Yes.
13230. Mr. McKillop.] You have no vegetables? No; only flowers now. When we first broke up the place we had a little a bit of vegetable garden, but that was only for the purpose of sweetening the soil and getting it into order for floriculture.
- 13231.

Mr.
F. H. Searl.
4 Dec., 1891.

- Mr. F. H. Searl. 13231. Mr. Hawthorne.] Has it ever suggested itself to you that the Chinese might become a danger to florists as they have been to the vegetable-growers? Well, we wanted the work done, and that thought has not troubled us in the least.
- 4 Dec., 1891. 13232. Have you not noticed the Chinese on a Saturday selling flowers in the Belmore Market? No; I did not know that they do.
13233. At all events, as far as you are able to judge, there is no such danger to the European florists as there has been to the vegetable-growers? No.

MONDAY, 7 DECEMBER, 1891.

Present:—

THE MAYOR OF SYDNEY (MR. ALDERMAN MANNING, J.P.), PRESIDENT.

FRANCIS ABIGAIL, Esq., J.P., VICE-PRESIDENT.

RAMSEY McKILLOP, Esq., | QUONG TART, Esq.,

JOHN STUART HAWTHORNE, Esq.

Mr. Alfred Sparks called and examined:—

- Mr. A. Sparks. 13234. President.] You are the mayor of North Botany, Mr. Sparks? Yes.
- 7 Dec., 1891. 13235. How long have you been an alderman of the borough of North Botany? Since its incorporation, about 3 years ago.
13236. Mr. Abigail.] In North Botany you have a number of Chinese residents, I believe? Yes; a considerable number.
13237. About what number should you say? I find 'by a return prepared by the Council Clerk that there are fifty-five separate assessments of the Chinese gardens in the borough; and I think if you multiply that number by four it will give a fairly correct account of the number of Chinese in the borough.
13238. That would be about 200? Yes.
13239. Have you visited any of these places? I have occasionally during a ten years' residence there.
13241. Then you have not taken much notice of the habitations of the Chinese in your boroughs, and the sanitary arrangements in connection with them? I have been in them from time to time, but so far as any action by the Council is concerned —
13242. I was not asking you about the Council's action just now, but about your own observation of these places? Well, their places are fairly clean, considering the circumstances. They have not boarded floors or anything of that kind; but they are, generally speaking, kept fairly clean, I think. So far as the Council is concerned it has not been deemed necessary to take any action against them. They are not offensive in any way.
13243. Are there any European gardeners in your borough? Very few.
13244. Most of the gardens are kept by Chinese? Yes; the great bulk of them.
13245. Do you find them peaceable and well-behaved and so forth as a class? Very. I have no fault to find with them.
13246. Do you know Sam Lee and party, who have a garden near the end of the tram terminus at Botany? No; that is in the borough of Botany.
13247. Does George Hill's place, between the tram terminus and "Sir Joseph Banks' Hotel," on the left-hand side going out, come within your borough? No; that is also in Botany.
13248. Do you know if there are many European women associating with the Chinese in your borough? Occasionally they come there, but not to live with them.
13249. These women come for immoral purposes, I suppose? Yes; that would be the inference, but it is not a matter of common occurrence.
13250. Do you know whether the police are often called upon to interfere with the Chinese there? I do not think they are. If so it has never come under my observation—that is, with the exception of the raid which they made on the Chinese gamblers there, about two months ago.
13251. So far as the Chinese gambling evil is concerned have you ever heard that it is very prevalent in your borough? Well, prior to this raid I have mentioned there were three recognised gambling-houses there.
13252. Has the effect of the raid been to deter them from gambling? I cannot say that exactly. Certainly they have not congregated about the places so much since then, but I cannot say it has checked their gambling propensities. My opinion is that they still gamble in their own places.
13255. Of your own knowledge I understand you know nothing as to the personal cleanliness of the Chinese, or their mode of living? I have frequently entered their places during the ten years I have lived in the district.
13256. Did you ever hear of the police receiving any presents from the Chinese in connection with the three gambling-places you have referred to? No; as a rule, I may say, the Chinese are very hospitably inclined, especially at Christmas time or the new year; they make small presents to everyone around them pretty well.
13257. Have you ever received any presents from them? I have on several occasions—trifling presents at such times.
13258. Have you heard of them making similar presents to policemen? No; I have not.
13259. Mr. Hawthorne.] What kind of presents were those you received? Some preserved ginger, or something like that—nothing of any value.
13260. Do you know whether these Chinese gardeners work on Sundays? Occasionally. I have seen them do a little watering in the early part of the morning before the sun comes up.

13261. Are they to be seen working all the day? No; I have stated practically all I have seen of their working on Sundays.

13262. Mr. Quong Tart.] How many years have you been living in that part of Sydney? Close upon ten years.

13263. Have you found that the Chinese have driven the European gardeners out of the field? Well, as the Chinese have increased so the Europeans have decreased. There are several reasons for this: The Chinese generally pay a high rent, and they work longer hours and more continuously than the Europeans, and they do not let the ground lie fallow to the same extent. They grow crop after crop to such an extent that the Europeans say they impoverish the ground. Certainly they never let it lie idle for any length of time.

13264. Do you know of any garden being given up by the Chinese gardeners and left vacant? Yes; during the last twelve months half a dozen of the gardens in our borough have been given up by the Chinese.

13265. Do you know the cause of that? I can only give my opinion. I should say it was owing to the state of trade and the high rent.

13266. Now, supposing the Chinese were to leave all their gardens in Botany, do you think the Europeans would take up the land and work it as the Chinese do? That is an open question. I scarcely think they would. Before the Chinese came there in such numbers, 50 per cent. of the gardens were tilled by Europeans; but, as I have stated, they have gradually disappeared owing to the keen competition of the Chinamen, who work longer hours, more continuously, and live cheaper.

13267. Do you think the European gardeners would show so much patience and perseverance in the dry season as the Chinese do? No; they would not to the same extent carry the water, for instance, to water the beds, which is necessary in the dry seasons.

13268. You say you have seen the Chinese gardeners working sometimes on a Sunday? I have seen them watering their gardens sometimes up till 8 or 10 o'clock.

13269. That was in a case of emergency, I suppose—do you think that justifiable? My opinion is that they are perfectly justified in doing so. I would not look upon it from a Sabbatarian standpoint at all. In the dry season it is necessary for them to work to that extent.

13270. It is just as necessary as giving the horse food in the stable? Yes.

13271. Have you had any complaint made of the Chinese in that locality being a nuisance? Not so much of late. At one time there used to be complaints about their using night-soil, and so on; but after the borough became incorporated they ceased to use it to the same extent, although they do in some gardens now, but generally in the shape of liquid manure, and then they use it early in the morning.

13272. What kind of manure do they use? Animal refuse generally brought to a liquid state.

13273. The owners of the land occupied by the Chinese gardeners received the special benefit of high rents from these people, I understand you to say? We are all prepared to take high rents no matter where it comes from. But latterly they have absolutely had to lower the rents because of the Chinese having the place.

13274. Do you think the Chinese have been induced to give up the gardens—those who have gone away—by reason of the general slackness of trade? That is the only reason I can give for that.

13276. What is his name? Mr. M'Gill; and there is another which is tilled by Mr. Coward.

13277. Mr. Coward used to be mayor of your borough? Yes. And there is another garden that belongs to Mr. Gates, an engine-driver in the Tramway Department.

13278. Do any of the aldermen of your borough own gardens that are rented by the Chinese living in your district? Mr. Coward rents a garden to some of the Chinese.

13279. Do the population living in your borough show any particular aversion to the Chinese residents, or are they opposed to the owners of land leasing their gardens to them? Well, it is a question that comes to the surface occasionally, especially in February, when the municipal elections are held.

13281. So, we may conclude that the Chinese voting-power in North Botany has now become of considerable importance to aspiring citizens with an eye to municipal honors? If it were used it would; but as a rule the vote is not used. Personally, I would endeavour to keep them from using the vote. Attempts have been made to introduce the Chinese vote into municipal politics, but I do not think it is wise to encourage them, because in nine cases out of ten they absolutely know nothing whatever about the qualifications of the different candidates; and their votes are given, if at all, for purely personal considerations.

13282. How often have you been before the municipal electors, Mr. Sparkes? On two occasions.

13283. Have you and other aspirants for the position of alderman sent circulars round to the Chinese soliciting their votes? I have not. On the last occasion a deliberate attempt was made to bring in the Chinese vote, but popular pressure to a certain extent kept it back. In Rockdale, and some other boroughs, the Chinese regularly vote, I believe. Over 100 voted in Rockdale during the last municipal election there.

13285. You would not consider their position as voters so strong as to warrant the assumption that the council or the mayor might be influenced in the direction of overlooking certain offences committed by them against the municipal law? I do not think so for a moment. As a matter of fact there is a popular prejudice against the Chinese which would operate as a counteracting force. Besides, it is well known that they, being an alien people and having no knowledge of local wants and requirements, would or could only be influenced in voting by personal likes or dislikes.

13286. They do not take any interest in municipal work generally? No.

13287.

Mr.
A. Sparks.

13289. Are we to understand that you think it would be a danger to municipal life to allow the Chinamen to become ratepayers and exercise their votes? My reason for objecting to the Chinaman voting is that by the actual circumstances of his position he is practically an alien to the representative institutions of the Colonies; and from that point of view I look upon it as a crime to endeavour to involve them in local politics, which they do not and cannot, in the nature of things, understand, because, unless they were persuaded, they would not have anything to do with them. If you ask a Chinaman to record his vote, he does it simply as a personal favour. He has no practical interest in this country, owing to the widely different character of his early associations and habits. In short, these people adhere very closely to the habits and institutions of their own land.

13290. What are the questions which are put to the voters, and which you say the Chinese cannot understand? First, What is the name and business? 2nd, Has he voted before? and also if the qualification is the same now as when the roll was prepared.

13291. Generally, you have not found them able to intelligently answer those questions, and you have to reject them as voters? Yes.

13292. So that the number of the Chinese who vote in connection with municipal elections in your district is not sufficiently large or important to make them a power in the community? No. I may state a circumstance which will show you how the Chinamen vote. I think it was a by-election prior to last February, and Messrs. Foster and Coward were the candidates. A Chinaman whom I had known for a considerable time came up there, and was standing outside the booth. I caught sight of him just as he was going in. I may state that the man I was supporting had determined not to call in the aid of the Chinamen at any cost. However I saw this man going inside the Town Hall gates, and I asked him whom he was going to vote for. He replied, So-and-so, being my candidate's opponent; so I said, "Don't vote for him—he's no good; vote for the other man." The result was that the Chinaman voted for the man I asked him to. That, in fact, is practically how the thing works.

13293. You wish to show that when a Chinaman goes to the polling-booth to vote he can be induced to vote whichever way he is asked by some personal friend? Yes; he has no knowledge of the different qualifications of the respective candidates.

13294. Would your remarks apply with anything like equal force to the case of a Chinaman who is engaged in the storekeeping business? Perhaps not. He might be affected by different influence. But even a Chinese storekeeper, in nine cases out of ten, in my opinion, would be really ignorant of the different qualifications of the men seeking to be elected—whether this or that one was really fitted for the position or not. Consequently in his case, too, his vote would be directed by some one having personal influence with him.

13296. Say you saw a European gardener going up to vote, and he was a personal friend of yours, do you not think your persuasive powers could be used as effectually upon him as upon the Chinese you have told us of? I do not think so, speaking generally.

13297. In the case of the European you would not feel quite so sure as to whom he would vote for when he got inside? That is the case; he would very likely have strong prejudices or leanings that my persuasion could not override.

13298. How often do you go round among the Chinese in your district? I have never been systematically round them; but whenever I go through any of the gardens, I generally—I may say always—look in at their premises.

13299. The same as an ordinary friendly visitor? Yes.

13300. Your duty, as mayor of the borough, has never taken you to visit the Chinese gardens or dwellings from a sanitary standpoint? No.

13301. Has your Inspector of Nuisances general instructions to pay regular visits of inspection to these places? Not to my knowledge. If anything were reported, or any complaint were received, of course he would do so, but not otherwise.

13302. Have there been any complaints on the part of the European residents of North Botany concerning the methods adopted by the Chinese in keeping their gardens—as to any nuisance arising therefrom, for instance? Some two or three years ago complaints were made, but since the borough has been incorporated the Chinese have been very particular, because they know full well that they are amenable to the municipal by-laws.

13303. Did the officers of your council ever report anything in connection with the mode of living amongst the Chinese that was considered detrimental to the sanitary interests of the borough? No. I do not know of any occasion on which it was done; but it might have occurred without having been reported.

13304. Is your inspector of nuisances paid especially for that work? No, he is also council clerk.

13305. Is he compelled to devote his time to the duties of his office under the council, or is he allowed to attend to other duties in the day-time, and do this work in the evening? No; all his time is employed by the council. He is council clerk and inspector of nuisances. He is also supposed to take the levels of streets, and acts as librarian.

13306. How many aldermen are there in your council? Nine.

13308.

Mr.
A. Sparks.
7 Dec., 1891.

13308. And these presents you have spoken of were given as a kind of reward, or return for your kindness in explaining to them the language? Well, I do not think that exactly; but if any of the neighbours round about are at all courteous to them, so far as wishing them "good-day," and so forth, they are almost certain to make small presents to them at particular seasons of the year.

13309. And you have not received any presents from Chinamen since you became an alderman? No, not to my recollection. These presents I have spoken of were mere trifling things, in value, perhaps, not exceeding 1s. or 1s. 6d.

13310. In short there has never been any reason, either in the value of the presents or anything else, that the Chinese were trying to bribe you in any way? Certainly not.

13311. Mr. McKillop.] Have you made personal inspection of any of the buildings on these gardens during any visit you have made to them since you have been an alderman? I have visited those immediately round where I live.

13312. Have you found these places overcrowded? You can scarcely call them overcrowded. The places occupied by the Chinese in these gardens are generally large sheds, and they live four or five, or, perhaps, six in a shed, which might be 15 ft. x 30 ft.

13313. Has it ever occurred to you as strange that they have a dread of keeping their windows open—for the purpose of ventilation, I mean? Well, I have always looked upon that as being due to the customs of the country from which they come. They never have windows. But the doors are generally open.

13315. Under the Municipalities Act have you power to compel these people to supply a proper amount of ventilation, and conform generally to the sanitary regulations? Yes; we have power sufficient for that. But then you must recollect that as a rule these Chinese gardeners live in the very midst of their gardens, and with unoccupied lands around them. In our borough it is so, at all events. You will not see another habitation within a couple of hundred yards all around them. Generally the drainage is imperfect, owing to the low-lying character of the land.

13316. Can you give the Commission any idea how it is that the Chinese have driven the European gardeners out of your borough as you say? I have already given the only reasons that have occurred to me. The Chinese have superseded the Europeans in that line of business, it appears to me, because they pay a higher rent, work longer hours, live cheaper, and they seem to have a faculty of persistent working, hour after hour, which the Europeans have not got. In times gone by the Europeans in the district where I reside did well out of gardening, but at the present time, and with the ruling prices, they cannot do anything.

13317. The Chinese have more patience and energy? They certainly have more patience. They are a very mechanical people in their style of working. Starting as early as 5 o'clock in the morning, they work until 6 or past 6 at night.

13318. With regard to the Chinese voting at Municipal elections, to which you have stated that you object, seeing that the Chinese are in appearance so much alike to European eyes, and as they change places in these gardens so frequently, I suppose it is quite possible that the wrong one would often record a vote? In nine cases out of ten that is the case.

13319. The person actually on the roll being away? Yes.

13320. And such men improperly exercise the franchise, seeing that they have not been residents of the district sufficiently long to entitle them to vote? Those are the dry legal grounds, but I think the other objections to which I have referred are of even greater weight morally speaking.

13321. Has your inspector of nuisances ever had reason to summon the Chinese gardeners for keeping accumulations of filth on their gardens, or anything of that kind? To the best of my knowledge he has not.

13322. Have any European gardeners been summoned for dirty practices? Not in our borough. With regard to the Chinese, I should say that they have one great virtue. They are good ratepayers; that is to say, they pay their rates regularly and without any trouble. I only know of one case in which a Chinaman failed to pay the rates, and that was the case of a man who left the place suddenly.

13323. Have you found the Chinese generally a law-abiding class of people? Yes; they are very civil, inoffensive, and obliging.

13325. Some of these gardens have been brought to a state of perfect cultivation from the virgin soil, have they not? Yes; a large number of them.

13326. Do you know if they use much human manure in the cultivation of their gardens? Prior to the incorporation of the borough they used to use nightsoil, but that has been suppressed since. They get what they can now from the boiling-down establishments.

13327. Have you noticed what the Chinese use and the Europeans also. Have you noticed that they used urine? Some of them use what they call "soup," that is, liquid matter that comes from the boiling-down establishments.

13328. Have you seen those jars they use in Chinese gardens? Yes.

13329. Do you know what purpose they are used for? Yes; I perfectly understand.

13330. Do the Europeans use it the same as the Chinese? That I cannot say. I do not suppose there are above half-a-dozen European gardens in the borough.

13331. Is there a nurseryman named Searl in your borough? No; he is in Botany.

13332. Do you know anything about his garden? No; I do not.

13333. Is there a nurseryman of the name of McGill in your borough? Yes.

13334.

- Mr. A. Sparks.
7 Dec., 1891.
13334. Does he employ Chinese or European labour? I cannot say whether he does employ Chinese now. He used to when he first formed the garden. I fancy I have seen one there. M'Gill has been there three years. There is another nurseryman named Milligan; and also Hazlewood, and Mungen.
13335. Do they employ Chinese? They all have at one time or another, but do not now.
13336. Does Mr. Coward? No; he tills his garden himself. He generally sows it in potatoes.
13337. Do the Chinese follow any other occupations out there besides gardening? There are Chinamen butchers who go round visiting the various places.
13338. No storekeepers? Sue used to, but he does not now. It is a cabinet-maker's place. I never looked into the shop. It is in a very low spot.
13339. Have you seen fan-tan tables in these places? I cannot say I ever saw it in Suc's. I have been in Yee See's old place when they have been fan-tan playing, with a lot of counters. I have been there twice. The first time they asked me what I wanted, and stopped playing.
13340. Have you ever seen any of the pak-ah-pu lottery tickets? Yes; any number of them.
13341. Have you noticed Europeans taking these tickets? No.
13342. The traffic in them is principally amongst the Chinese, you think? It is almost exclusively confined to them, I should say. They generally get the tickets from Sydney. I have marked hundreds of them.
13343. Not for yourself;—you have done it for them, I suppose? Yes; they will come to you and ask you to mark the tickets for them for luck.
13344. Mr. Quong Tart.] Regarding the voting, Mr. Sparks, you say that the Chinese have not been allowed to vote on account of not being able to answer certain questions put to them by the officers at the booth;—do you put similar questions to Europeans? Yes; every one is challenged. You see each candidate has a scrutineer, to whose interest it is to prevent, if he can legally do so, a vote being recorded for the opposite side; and if a scrutineer imagines a man's qualification is not good, he immediately challenges him.
13346. Supposing a Chinese merchant was paying £200 a year in rates, would it be fair to deprive him of the privileges of citizenship in this respect, because he happens to be a Chinaman? Of course legally they are as much entitled to vote as a person born and bred in the Colony. I was simply expressing a personal opinion when I said I would not for my own part encourage or induce them to take part in an election.
13347. You know it is the boast of Englishmen that they love freedom and fair play;—do you call it freedom to prevent one man who pays rates enjoying the right to vote which another man in the same position has? It is not freedom, I candidly admit that. But still for the reasons I have given I do not think it desirable to bring the Chinese residents into the elections.
13348. I suppose you sometimes find Europeans who do not understand the process of voting at elections the same as the ignorant Chinese? Yes.
13349. Do you think it right to make one law for the Englishmen and another for the Chinamen on the same level? Well, I think there is something above that to be considered. There is not, as I have explained, in my opinion, the community of interest which is desirable in matters of the kind. There may come a time when they will be able to, but at present I think they are as well left alone, especially as they do not want to exercise the privilege. As I have explained to you already, it is almost a matter of compulsion when they do vote.
13350. Take persons of other nationalities—say the Italians, would they be allowed to vote? Well, it is really a question of municipal ethics, so to speak; if you were a scrutineer, and had a candidate in the field, and the Italian vote was against you, if you could block him you would do so, and challenge him accordingly. That is the state of the case, putting it in a general way.
13351. Do you know how much the Chinese in your borough pay in rent per year, the total amount? I cannot say. I know it is a considerable sum.
13352. Is all the land worked by them owned by Europeans? Yes.
13353. Was any of the land worked by other persons prior to the Chinese gardeners taking it up? Yes, in numbers of cases it had been.
13354. In how many cases, what proportion, do you think the Chinese cleared the land themselves? I should say one-half or two-thirds had been European gardens previously.

Mr. Thomas Watson called and examined:—

- Mr. T. Watson.
7 Dec., 1891.
13355. Mr. Abigail.] What position do you occupy? Council Clerk and Inspector of Nuisances of North Botany.
13356. What are your duties as Inspector of Nuisances? I make regular inspections of the premises in the borough, and attend to all complaints that may be sent in from any of the ratepayers, and look after the welfare of the borough generally, as regards its sanitary condition.
13357. Have you held that position since the borough was first incorporated? No; I have only held the position for about eight months.
13358. How often do you make inspections of the borough? I make a general inspection once a quarter, and I make a special inspection if I am called upon, that is, if any complaint is made.
13359. Have you been called upon to make any inspections of the Chinese premises in your borough recently? I have never once been called upon to make inspections out of the ordinary way. I have inspected them.
13360. In what condition, generally, have you found their premises;—are they clean and well ventilated? I cannot say that they are extra well ventilated or particularly clean or tidy.
13361. Have you ever noticed smells of an offensive character about them? No, I cannot say there is.
13362. With regard to the sleeping accommodation, are they crowded together very much? Yes, they lie pretty close together; in some cases they use bunks; in others they lie on the boards with a mat and a pillow.
13363. The population is not very dense in your borough? No; we have a small and scattered population.
- 13364.

13364. If any nuisance did exist on the Chinese premises other people are not sufficiently close to them to be noticeably affected by it? No.
13365. Do you know if there is much Chinese gambling carried on in your borough? I believe it is to a great extent among the Chinese themselves, but they are very strict about not admitting outsiders. I know of only one case where they allowed a European in while they were gambling.
13366. Do they quarrel and fight much in these places? No; we have no trouble with the Chinamen there at all. I have never received a complaint respecting a Chinese gambling-house.
13367. Do they pay their rates regularly? Yes.
13368. You have no particular cause of complaint against them as a class? None whatever. I may mention that I knew a case where two young men, Europeans, visited one of these gambling-dens—the one where the raid was made last—and as soon as they went in the gambling was stopped, and they were told to go out by the Chinamen there.
13369. Are there many women living with them? I do not know of a single instance of a woman living with them.
13370. Have you known women to visit them? No.
13371. Do the Chinese gardeners work on Sundays? Yes.
13372. Are there any Europeans keeping gardens out there? Yes.
13373. Do you know if they employ Chinamen to work their gardens? In one or two instances; but I cannot speak with certainty. I know they do employ Chinamen.
13374. You know they work on Sundays? Yes; I have seen them in the morning, on the main Botany Road, when they have been pulling the potatoes.
13375. Would that be for their own consumption on Sunday? I cannot say.
13376. Mr. Quong Tart.] At what time did you see them working on Sunday? At different times, but in the morning principally.
13377. How many would be working at the garden? Generally two or three.
13378. Have the police ever stopped them, or interfered with them? Not in my time. I have only been there seven or eight months.
13379. Concerning the gambling, do you know what kind of gambling they indulge in? I am told they play fan-tan; but I do not understand it, and I have never seen them play.
13380. Have you seen the pak-ah-pu lottery drawn? I have seen that; but it was some time before I took office. I know very little about it.
13381. Mr. McKillop.] Have you noticed much opium-smoking there? No; they do it at night-time, I think; and I am very seldom about the Chinese places in the evening.
13382. Have you heard of Europeans visiting these places at night-time, for the purpose of smoking opium? I have not.

Mr. James Ralph called and examined:—

13383. Mr. Abigail.] You are mayor of Alexandria, Mr. Ralph? Yes.
13384. In your borough there is a place called Retreat-street? Yes.
13385. Have you visited that part of the borough? I have frequently.
13386. Have you seen the fan-tan tables in the Chinamen's quarters? I have not. I know that gambling goes on.
13387. Have you noticed many Europeans about? Yes; they intermingle freely.
13388. Do you think that the carrying on of fan-tan, gambling, and opium-smoking to the extent they do there, tends to elevate the tone of the people in that part of your district? Quite the reverse.
13389. Then you would like to see it done away with? Yes; decidedly.
13390. Have you ever visited the sheds in Retreat-street, where the Chinese live, and made a personal inspection of them for yourself? No; I have not. For what information I have on the subject I am indebted to our inspector.
13391. Would you be surprised if I were to tell you that the condition of these places is such that no European would allow a dog to live in them? I would not be surprised. I know they sleep in bunks one above the other.
13392. Have you not power under the Municipalities Act to remove these places, seeing that they are a manifest nuisance to the whole of the district? No; I do not think we have.
13393. I suppose the inspector of nuisances would know more about the condition of these places, and the law bearing upon it, than yourself? Yes; I think he has all the information that you require to obtain on this subject. I sent him especially to collect information to bring before the Commission.
13394. As Mayor of the Borough it is your duty to give instructions to the officers of the council, is it not? Yes.
13395. Have you ever instructed your inspector to make special inspections of these places and report to you, or the council? No; not to report to the council. But when I heard that the Commission would require information on the subject, I instructed him to go round and collect the information necessary.
13396. Mr. Hawthorne.] How long have you been mayor of the Borough of Alexandria? Since February last.
13397. Mr. Abigail.] Has the question of the Chinese mode of living—the sanitary, moral, and social conditions of the people—in your borough, ever been brought before the council while you have been a member of it? No.
13398. How long have you been an alderman of the council? Nearly five years.
13399. And this question has never been considered of sufficient importance to form the subject of any debate or discussion by the council? I think there was some slight discussion on one occasion, but that was all. It has often been in my mind to visit them. I think something should be done.
13400. I would recommend you, as mayor of the borough, to make a personal inspection, as the Commission has done, of these quarters, and I am quite sure you will find that they require rooting out for the benefit of the community;—I gather from what you have said that you are strictly opposed to gambling? Certainly.
13401. Does that remark apply to all forms of gambling? Yes; I am opposed to all forms of gambling.
13402. And also to opium-smoking, I presume? Yes.

Mr.
T. Watson.
7 Dec., 1891.

Mr. J. Ralph.
7 Dec., 1891.

- Mr. J. Ralph. 13403. Do you know anything of the opium-smoking carried on in some of these places? I do not.
 13404. When the Commission visited that quarter of your borough they went into five of these places, and in every one of them found fan-tan tables and opium-smoking. In two of the places we caught the inmates in the act of gambling;—I am telling you this for your own information, as the mayor of the borough, so that you may know what is going on, and take action if you think fit, so far as the law allows you to deal with this matter? Personally, I have looked upon it as a matter entirely for the police to deal with.
 13405. Would it not assist the police if your officers, on making their inspections, if they found anything wrong in that way, reported it to the police? I do not think it would be.
 13406. Is it not part of their duty to assist the authorities in preventing a state of things which degrades the community? I am quite satisfied the authorities know all about it.
 13407. If they know all about it in the light of the information I have put before you do you think they have done as much as they could have done to suppress it? I do not.
 13408. You think there has been a laxity on the part of the authorities in dealing with it? I do.
 13409. Mr. Hawthorne.] You think the conduct of the officers of your council has been all that could be desired in this matter, but that the conduct of the officers of the police has been wanting in vigour and earnestness? Well, the council might, perhaps, have done a little more than it has done, but seeing that the police should have grappled with it, I fail to see that the council has neglected its duty in any way.
 13410. Do you know the general character of the Chinese in that particular locality—Retreat-street? I should imagine, from the appearance of the places and what I know of them, that they get their living by gambling. I have seen the Chinamen lounging about, smoking, and going from one hut to another.
 13411. Do they pay their rates regularly? Well, a number of the buildings there belong to one party—Mrs. M'Elhinney—who kept a public-house there. We have to summons her frequently.
 13412. However, your opinion is, that these people are a very undesirable class of residents? Yes; there can be no two opinions about that.

Mr. Wm. Setchell called and examined:—

- Mr. W. Setchell. 13413. President.] You are inspector of nuisances for the Borough of Alexandria? I have occupied that position for about twelve months.
 13414. What was your occupation before that? I was a contractor in the same locality.
 13415. How long have you been in that locality? Twenty-five years.
 13416. You have an intimate knowledge of the Chinese settled in your borough, I suppose? Yes.
 13417. And in the course of your duties you have visited the various gardens and dwelling-places of the Chinese? Yes.
 13418. Are they generally in a satisfactory sanitary condition? In one or two instances I have had occasion to make them clean their premises up.
 13419. State their general condition? They are not, as a rule, nearly as clean as the Europeans.
 13420. Are they not mostly market-gardeners? Yes; but also there is a small colony of them in Retreat-street, dealers, and persons of that class.
 13421. What kind of dwelling-places have they? Some of them two-storey places, and also cottages, built of brick.
 13422. How many? There are about a dozen brick places; then there is a long building, which the Chinese erected themselves; it is built of Hobart-town palings.
 13423. In what condition do the Chinese live in the brick houses; how many live in one room, for instance? I cannot tell you.
 13424. When you make an inspection of these places, do you not collect such facts? Not as to how many live on the premises.
 13425. Did you not notice the number of Chinese bunks in a room? I have not seen many. I may say these places are mostly used for gambling purposes, not for residential purposes.
 13426. What was the state generally of the brick houses inside; were they clean and tidy? They were very good when I visited them, for Chinese residences.
 13427. Have you, in the course of your duty, ever found it necessary to summon any of them? No.
 13428. That was, you found the conditions of their dwellings satisfactory? For Chinese places I thought so.
 13429. Does the same remark apply to the wooden-houses? They were burnt down some eighteen months ago, and have been rebuilt.
 13430. Have you not gone inside these places? No.
 13431. How many rooms are there in the brick houses? Four as a rule.
 13432. On your visits did you go into each of the rooms? Not upstairs.
 13433. Did you find the privy arrangements satisfactory? Yes.
 13434. How do they dispose of the night-soil? They have the pan system, and the borough carts take it away every week.
 13435. There are twenty-five houses in that street;—how many of them are gambling-places? I know of nine or ten, I think.
 13436. The other houses are used simply for residential purposes? I have not seen gambling going on in them. There are two or three used as shops.
 13437. Have you ever seen any young white women in that quarter on any of your visits? No.
 13438. Have you noticed any women at all? I have seen women who are living with the Chinese—they may be married to them.
 13439. Is it within your knowledge that the Chinese living in your borough seduce young white girls, or entice them to their houses for immoral purposes? Nothing of the kind ever came to my knowledge.
 13440. How many opium dens are there in your borough? They all smoke opium more or less in the houses I have been in.
 13441. You have not seen any women smoking the drug? No.
 13442. How many Chinese gardens—separate holdings—are there in Alexandria? I cannot tell you off hand; but I can furnish you with the exact number afterwards if you want it. 13443.

Mr.
W. Setchell.
7 Dec., 1891.

13443. Have you made inspection of the market gardens? I have gone over them.
13444. How many people live in the huts in these gardens? About seven or eight generally.
13445. How many rooms do the dwelling-places contain? Sometimes two, and sometimes three or four.
13447. What kind of closets have they? Ordinary pit closets.
13448. Are these closets near to or far from the house? Some of them about 10 yards away and others 20 yards.
13449. You did not find them adjoining the huts in any case? No.
13450. Where do they have the stable—alongside the hut? Yes; it is right up against the house in most cases, in the form of a kind of small lean-to.
13451. Do you think that is conducive to health, having the stable adjoining or under the same roof as the dwelling? I should think it would not be very healthy.
13452. Do they take care to drain off the horses' urine? No.
13453. The earth becomes saturated with it? Yes.
13454. Is there, or have you noticed, a bad smell from the Chinese gardeners' huts? No, not a bad smell; but there is generally a peculiar smell in all Chinese places.
13455. Have you ever had reason to bring any of the Chinese gardeners before the Court for having unclean premises? No.
13456. Do you know anything about the methods of cultivation employed by the Chinese—how they fertilise the soil, for instance? They use horse manure.
13457. Is it not a fact that they use human excreta and urine? Not that I know of.
13458. Do you not know that they use it from the closet pit? They may do so; but I do not know of it.
13459. Do you not know that they preserve the urine separate from the solid excreta, keep it in cans or jars, and sprinkle it over growing vegetables? Not that I am aware of.
13460. Do you know whether the Chinese market-gardeners keep on their premises the conveniences for playing fan-tan? Not that I have seen.
13461. Do they play pak-ah-pu in your borough? In Retreat-street they do.
13462. Do many white people go there? They go there.
13463. Do the police ever make a raid upon them? Yes; a short time ago they did. I was in a place there on Saturday night.
13464. Were they gambling then? Yes; they were playing fan-tan.
13465. Were there any other Europeans there besides you? Yes; there was a young man who was with me, and one who was playing. There were ten Chinamen and one white man when we went in.
13466. As a rule, do Europeans attend these gambling-houses in numbers? Yes.
13467. But you only found one there on that occasion? Yes.
13468. Have you reported the matter to the police? It is well known to the police.
13469. Do the market-gardeners work on a Sunday? Yes; in every garden in the borough.
13470. Continuously? Yes. There is work done in every garden—not exactly all day—but in every garden you will see them working. They generally work during the forenoon.
13471. Is that not an infringement of the law? No; there is no Act to deal with them.
13472. Have persons not been summoned and fined for Sunday working? There is no fine. If they are convicted it is so many hours in the "stocks," and we have no machinery to carry out the law in that respect.
13473. They have not to your knowledge been summoned and fined? Not since I have been inspector.
13474. Are there many cabinet-makers in your borough? There are about six.
13475. How do they dispose of their goods? They bring them into town.
13476. Mr. Abigail.] Did the Mayor of Alexandria instruct you last week to pay a number of visits to these places in Retreat-street? He did not. We were talking over it, and I said I would go round and have a look; that is the reason why I went on Saturday night, as I have said. It was an understood thing.
13477. Do you report to the mayor the result of your observations in such cases? Yes.
13478. What report did you make to him as to the twenty-five huts at the further end of Retreat-street? Well, I cannot say I reported at all.
13479. Did you go inside them? No.
13480. Then you were not in a position to say whether they were fit for occupation or not? No.
13481. As a matter of fact, this Commission has assured itself, by personal inspection, that those places are not fit for a dog to live in, so filthy are they. Is it not your duty to see that the whole district is not poisoned in that way? Well, it was the practice before, and has been allowed to stand. As I have told you, I have only been in office twelve months.
13482. Your business is to inspect these as well as other places, I presume? Yes.
13483. And to report to the mayor and council, and make recommendations if you find anything dangerous or injurious? Yes.
13484. But you have not done so up to the present time? No.
13485. Let me recommend you to make a personal inspection of the interior of these places. The Commission is of opinion, at any rate, that it would be difficult to find in all Australia anything to equal them for dirtiness, and insanitary conditions generally, and that they ought to be razed to the ground. Regarding the brick houses, you say that nine of them are used for gambling purposes? Yes; there are six such houses in Retreat-street, and three in Botany Road.
13486. And in most of these places fan-tan and opium-smoking are carried on to a large extent? Yes; you can see them from the street.
13487. Do you know what occupations the Chinese follow who live in the huts in that quarter? They are dealers, vegetable hawkers, rag-gatherers, and so forth.
13488. Do you know how much they pay a week for some of these huts? I cannot say.
13489. Mr. Hawthorne.] How often are you supposed to visit those places for purposes of inspection? There is no stated time.
13490. Have you never been called upon for a report in regard to the Chinese habitations in your borough? No.
- 13491.

- Mr. 13491. And you never made one? No.
- W. Setchell. 13492. Mr. Abigail.] And never having inspected these places inside, you cannot say whether they stow the vegetables—those that they bring back at night after a day's hawking—under their stretchers in the sleeping-room? No.
- 7 Dec., 1891. 13493. But you think that would not be a desirable state of things, I suppose? Certainly it would not. I do not allow my wife to buy from Chinamen.
13494. And you do not think they are a desirable class of residents? No; I do not.
13495. The Chinese you have met are quiet and amenable to the law outwardly, I suppose? Yes; they are quiet enough.
13496. Mr. Quong Tart.] How many European gardeners are there in your district? About four.
13497. Do they work on Sundays? Not that I am aware of.
13498. In what part were the Chinese gardens in which you saw the men working on Sunday? Near the road; they were watering and weeding.
13499. Are the European gardens near the road too? Not so close.
13500. Do you know any Chinese who speak English well out there? They are mostly gardeners whom I know. There is a storekeeper on the Botany-road, near the tram terminus, and a butcher, who both speak English tolerably well.
13501. Do the respectable Chinese encourage gambling at all? Not that I am aware of.
13502. Do you know how it is that so much Chinese gambling is allowed to be carried on without police interference? They are very careful—the Chinese. For instance, on the Saturday night I went in there, there was a gentlemanly-dressed Chinaman standing outside; and as I went in, he gave a whisper to those inside that I was there. I stood at the table for about two or three minutes. Directly they saw me there was a scatter out of the room at once.
13503. What was that Chinaman like that you have referred to, at the door—was he tall? Yes; pretty tall, and well dressed.
13504. Do you know his name? No. I have been informed that there is never the same banker there for any length of time. They change about in and out of the city.
13505. Now, have you any idea as to how this gambling could be stopped—can you make a suggestion? The only way that I can see is to prosecute them constantly, and frighten them.
13506. Mr. Abigail.] Have not the police done that? They have not done it as well as they might have done it.
13507. They have not proceeded against them frequently enough? No.
13508. In short, they have not shown activity enough? No. I may say they never take any notice of a man in uniform. They assume he is on his regular duty. But when they see a man in private clothes they at once suspect danger to themselves. That is how they came to stop so suddenly when I went in on Saturday night, as I have told you.
13509. Mr. Quong Tart.] What do you think of the game of pak-ah-pu;—do you think it as bad as fan-tan, or more dangerous? I have never played it; but those who have tell me that it offers a better chance than fan-tan—that it does not admit of so much trickery.
13510. Mr. Hawthorne.] Was yesterday the first Sunday you have been engaged in going round the Chinese dens? Yes.
13511. And if it had not been for the notice from this Commission you would not have considered it necessary to go there? No.
13512. Mr. Quong Tart.] You have said you would not buy from Chinamen. Do they not grow most of the vegetables in the market? What I mean is that I do not like the Chinese hawkers. I know that the Europeans get a quantity of vegetables from the Chinese gardeners to sell again; but they get the vegetables straight from the garden, whereas the hawkers, I suppose, frequently keep the vegetables in their dwelling places. I would sooner deal with the gardeners direct.
13513. Mr. Hawthorne.] Have you been into the dwellings to see for yourself whether the Chinese hawkers stow vegetables and other articles of food they trade with, in their dwellings? No. The reason is that these places are nearly always locked up all day, and I cannot visit any place after 6 o'clock.
13514. How often have you been called upon to summon Chinamen for infringement of the sanitary laws or regulations? I have never summoned a Chinaman.
13515. Do you find them superior to the Europeans from a sanitary stand point? No.
13516. How many Europeans have you summoned for infringement of the sanitary law? I cannot say exactly. But for dirty premises, I think, not more than half a dozen since I have been inspector.
13517. Do you think the half dozen whom you summoned for having dirty premises compared unfavorably with the Chinese? Yes.
13518. You think they were worse than any Chinese you have living in the locality? I do.
13519. So that you have dirtier Europeans than you have Chinese in your borough? In half a dozen cases.
13520. Your council has never asked you for any special report in regard to the Chinese quarters? No.
13521. Mr. McKillop.] You have resided in Alexandria for twenty-five years? Yes.
13522. Were there any gardens there belonging to Europeans previous to the Chinese going to the district? Yes.
13523. Were many of the gardens, belonging to the Chinese at the present time, in the first instance formed by Europeans? Yes, the majority of them.
13524. Can you give us any idea as to the cause or reason why the Chinese gradually superseded the Europeans in this business? The only reason I can think of is that the Chinese work on a cheaper principle—and they offered higher rents. They generally bought the Europeans out.
13525. What number of gardens are there in your borough? I cannot tell you just now.
13526. Does your borough derive much revenue from them? Not very much, I should say.
13527. Can you give any idea? No, I cannot.
13528. With the exception of those in Retreat-street, are there many Chinese living in your borough? There is a colony of them just at the tram terminus, and one further on, where the old fruit preserving works used to be; but those have got proper sanitary accommodation—I have been through them.

[The witness withdrew.]

TUESDAY,

TUESDAY, 8 DECEMBER, 1891.

Present:—

THE MAYOR OF SYDNEY (MR. ALDERMAN MANNING, J.P.), PRESIDENT.

FRANCIS ABIGAIL, Esq., J.P., VICE-PRESIDENT.
RAMSEY MCKILLOP, Esq., | QUONG TART, Esq.,
JOHN STUART HAWTHORNE, Esq.

Mr. J. Ashburton Thompson, M.D., D.P.H., called and examined:—

13529. President.] You occupy an official position in connection with the Board of Health, Dr. Thompson? Yes; I am Chief Medical Inspector.

13530. I suppose, in the course of your official duties, you have from time to time visited some of the Chinese gardens in and around Sydney? Yes.

13531. Do you recollect when you made the first visit? No, I do not; but I think it was probably in connection with small-pox in the middle of 1884.

13532. And at various times since then you have visited the Chinese gardens? Yes; I have visited them in all parts of the country.

13533. Have you had occasion to visit the Chinese dwelling-places in the city and suburbs of Sydney? Yes.

13534. Now, with regard to the mode in which the Chinese cultivate their gardens and fertilise the soil will you tell the Commission, in your way, what your experience has been, and what conclusions you have come to on the subject, in so far as it relates to the health of the citizens? Yes. As to the method of cultivating, that is almost the same as the method of cultivating a sewage farm; but of course in execution, as it is carried on on a very small scale by a number of different proprietors, it is not done nearly so well as it is on a sewage farm. The utilisation of sewage in that way is quite scientific, and quite safe as regards health. There is no objection whatever, on the score of health, to the vegetable products of land thus manured with human waste; only this precaution ought to be observed, that nothing which is grown in that way ought to be eaten except after cooking.

13536. What is the difference in the effect upon the soil? Simply this: that when the sewage is fresh it has in it elements which are useful as manure, which are lost in the process of putrefaction.

13537. So that, as a matter of fact, the application of human waste—excreta and urine—by the Chinese to their gardens is not to be objected to any way, save with regard to such vegetables as come on to the table without cooking? Exactly.

13539. Have you any notes on this subject for the further information of the Commission? No; but the Commission have directed my attention to four properties occupied by Chinese. I examined them on 5th December, as well as the short notice given allowed—not fully, but fully enough to enable me to give evidence concerning them. Before doing so, I beg leave to make a preliminary remark. I shall have to describe insanitary conditions of a very gross kind, and the remark I wish to make beforehand is this: if my strictures should be taken to have special applicability to Chinese just because they are illustrated by reference to dwellings which happen to be occupied by Chinese, their true bearing will be missed. As for the Chinese poor, I have always observed them to be very much like the poor of other nations; but they are, in my opinion, seldom quite so dirty, so indifferent to comfort and decency, or so squalid as some of our own poor often are; while in point of personal cleanliness they are upon the whole very much better. They have a tendency to live in small and dark rooms, and in what we call a muddle, which is derived doubtless from their birth in a much overcrowded country; but with exception of that local peculiarity, which the laws of our country do not restrain, I find them no worse, and in some important respects, much superior to the poor of our own race. It would be a serious error if the grossly insanitary state of the dwellings I have to describe were regarded as especially due to their occupation by Chinese. I have already on many occasions described the same or worse faults with reference to dwellings occupied by whites. In short, the faults to be pointed out are due neither to poor whites nor to poor Chinese, but to those of us who know what sanitary laws are necessary, and yet as a community either do not enact them, or else if we enact them, yet do not faithfully execute them. I went first to a property which stands in Alexandria. It is reached by a very short street, called Retreat-street, which turns off the western side of the Botany Road, a little distance short of the Waterloo Public School. It consists of a double row of brick cottages, three or four on each side. The houses look dirty and untidy outside. There is a sewer down the middle of the street, which has been gazetted as ready for house-connection for more than two months, and a manhole at the western end, and against the south-western house is a sewer ventilator. This short street is inhabited by Chinese. The houses have scarcely any curtilage—scarcely any yard at the back; water is laid on to them, but there are no gullies to carry off the waste, although they stand in contiguity to a sewer, and notwithstanding that circumstance, their dilapidated and filthy closets are fitted with pails. That, I think, is enough to say about these cottages at this time, but if they could be presented for demolition as being unfit for habitation, there would be no difficulty in making out a strong case against them, I believe, on the score of improper construction. Passing out of the street to the west, over the manhole of the unused sewer, an area of irregular sandy ground is reached, which is surrounded on its other three sides by vegetable gardens. I dare say it may be about an acre in size, perhaps perhaps a little larger. Upon it is a series of six long low sheds, built for the purpose to which they are now put, and nearly uniform in construction. They are of sawn wood, which is very old, green with moss, and apparently the wreck of a paling fence. They are about 18 feet wide; their walls are about 7 feet high; the roofs are open to the ridge; they are divided by cross partitions about 10 feet apart, and each division thus made has a door and is a tenement in which one or sometimes two men live. The floor is sometimes the natural surface, and then it is often covered neatly with sacks, &c. In some places there are no sacks, and in some others the tenant has put in a wooden floor, or rather has laid down boards. There are no windows; the light comes in part from the door of entrance when it is open, and in part from shuttered holes in the walls. The best point about these hutches is the disrepair and imperfect fitting of walls and roof: these are eked out with bits of tin, scraps of sawn wood, and sacking; but luckily not so perfectly as to prevent a very free ventilation. There are no internal fixtures whatever; no fire-place, for instance. The fire is made either on the ground, and the wooden walls protected with sheets of tin, or else on a wooden shelf covered with clay, and the fire retained with two or three bricks, and, of course, there is no chimney. In short, the tenements are rotten sheds, fit for nothing but destruction; and all the five living blocks are sufficiently described thus. But in two or three cases where the tenement is used for a carpenter's shop, the size is considerably larger, and then the tenants sleep in the shop either in very small hutches partitioned off from the working space, or in a perch or loft made by putting a kind of ceiling under the roof, or else on the table with blankets enclosed under a sort of tent which everywhere is the type of Chinese bed. All of these tenements show within signs of domestic comfort, such as is possible, and of ornament; they vary in this respect and in cleanliness with the character of the occupants just as other peoples tenements do; and against the occupants regarded as poor people, who must live under such accommodation as their means afford and as the laws allow I have no complaint to make. These five barracks are inhabited, two by cabinet-makers, one by rag-pickers, one by gardeners, one by vegetable-hawkers; and besides these there is a sixth long shed, open on one side, and divided into stalls, in which there is just room enough for their horses to stand. That sufficiently describes the tenements and their inhabitants; the latter being reputed to number about eighty. I come to the general sanitary state of the camp, as distinguished from housing and personal cleanliness. There is no water laid on, though the mains are close by; they carry all their water from a shallow hole in one of the contiguous vegetable gardens, which hole must, in consideration of the usual mode of manuring, furnish a not very diluted sample of sewage. Then for these eighty people there are six privies arranged in three pairs at different points on the outskirts of the camp, built of brick, not connected with the neighbouring sewer but furnished with pans, and the whole rickety, filthy, and offensive in an extreme degree. They are emptied by the municipal contractor. Besides the privies the vegetable-gardeners have erected two urinals opposite their dwellings, which consist of a large covered earthen-pot, very decently surrounded with three old sheets of iron; they were kept clean; the collection is valued by the gardeners for manure; and the other traders contribute to it "without charge," as one of them told me. The stables have sawn wood floors, very irregular, and as filthy as the similar floors of cow-bails, which the Board of Health has experienced so much trouble in getting removed from the sheds of European cow-keepers; and there was everywhere neglect to sweep up and collect the dung regularly—for no doubt it is ultimately swept up for use and not wasted. There was also a good deal of garbage scattered about the general surface—chiefly of vegetable kinds, and a more or less offensive smell everywhere. That is all I have to say about this camp as it stands. It will be noticed that it is, together with the brick cottages in Retreat-street, unfit for human habitation. I regard the place as a standing menace to the public health; for the neighbourhood is populous, and the camp is exemplary of places in which epidemic diseases are fostered when they have been once accidentally introduced, and from which they are spread throughout cities. Now I will point out how it comes about that so insanitary an area exists. In the first place as to improper construction both of the sheds and of the cottages: there is no law in New South Wales to prevent the building of houses in ways very well known to be dangerous to health, or to cause houses to be built with observance of certain precautions known to be necessary to preserve health. Any person who has land may build where he pleases, on what plan he pleases, and on what foundation he pleases—even if that foundation should be nothing but garbage, as I have lately shown was done in the borough of Redfern, as well as elsewhere. So that if these poor people live in insanitary structures the fault is not theirs: it is the fault of the community that exercises no control in a matter which is pre-eminently in need of legal control—without which legal control it is properly transacted in no country in the world. So much on the fundamental point of structure and plan. As for other conditions there are existing laws which, if they had been reasonably well executed by the Council of Alexandria would have prevented the following matters. The sewer down the middle of Retreat-street has been gazetted more than two months, and yet the Council have not taken steps to abolish the pail-privies in the houses of that street, or to provide them with drainage for their slop-waters. The law affords a very simple and a summary remedy; all the Council need have done was to draw the attention of the Water and Sewerage Board to the matter by letter; and then that Board would either have compelled the owner to make connection with the sewer or else would have made it for him if he failed, and have recovered the cost from him. As a matter of fact that Board has of its own motion taken the first step; but had the Alexandria Council chosen to attend to it, it might by this time have been already done. But even two months ago, before this branch sewer was finished they could have caused the filthy, tumbledown, offensive and dangerous pail-closets to be converted into decent and cleanly pail-closets, under their own 9th and 12th by-laws made under the Nuisances Prevention Act: but they have not executed the existing law they are appointed to execute, but have neglected it. Then, although the houses have water laid on, the camp just beyond has none, although (as I judge) the nearer huts are within the statutory distance of the water-main in the street, and under the Metropolitan Water Act, or failing that by management and in a more roundabout way, they could have caused steps to be taken long ago to provide the camp, at one or two points at all events, with pure water; but they have neglected this power too. Lastly, as to the filthy stables and the garbage about the general area, their own municipal by-laws are sufficient to cause both these to be altered—namely, their 35th by-law, made under the 153rd section of the Municipalities Act; but they have neglected this too. In short, the existence of these faults is due, not to the Chinese, but to want of law in some part, and in greater part to neglect to execute existing laws.

From Alexandria I went into the city—to Robertson's-lane, which turns off Goulburn-street at the back of the south side of Goulburn-street, back of 71-79. A large enclosed yard is entered by the door numbered 14 in the lane, which is not in connection with any residence. It is used as a Chinese boarding-house, by means of the wooden structures fixed round the walls within which I am going to describe. About one-fourth of this yard is roofed, floored, and enclosed more or less perfectly. It is used as a cabinet-maker's work-shop. Then along the wall against the lane is first a floored part, open to the yard, which has racks in which the lodgers neatly stack their panniers, and any vegetables they have failed to sell during the day's work—for they are all vegetable hawkers who lodge here, and they generally number about forty-six. This part was very dirty, but not untidy, and there was smell of decayed vegetable matter. At another part of the wall was a large sort of room, also open on the yard side, which was used as a kitchen. It was very dirty indeed, disorderly, and generally in an improper state. Next to this and against the wall which separates this yard from the backs of the houses in Goulburn-street, were closets and a urinal, and then the cabinet-maker's shed was arrived at again. The yard was open to the sky in the centre, and paved with brick, but very irregularly graded; it was wet in consequence, but clean. In this open part of the yard, and near the kitchen, was a yard-gully. It was of a bad pattern, and in direct communication with the sewer. The closets were quite dark, and so constructed as to be indescribable—I mean as regards woodwork, &c.; in this respect they were altogether improper—wet, filthy, and offensive. The pans were of a very old and discarded pattern. They were supplied with an insufficient stream of water by a plug-valve in a barrel, which was supplied from the main by a ball-cock. There were two such closets, and alongside them was a urinal in the floor of which there was a little gully with a water-tap over it. All these fittings are improperly placed, of improper construction or form, and improperly connected with the sewers. By a dirty and old companion-stair a kind of wooden balcony was reached extending over the racks mentioned above, looking inwards to the yard, and having round it against the wall six or seven small rooms or hutches; in each of these sleep the lodgers in groups of four to seven. All of them were manifestly overcrowded, insufficiently ventilated and lighted, and improperly placed in being over the racks below, with their load of decaying vegetable matter, &c. I am of opinion that these premises are fit for nothing but destruction, and that while they are used as at present that they are likely to injure the people who live there, constitute a standing menace to the public health of the city, and are, besides, dangerous as regards risk of fire.

From Robertson-lane, on the south side of Goulburn-street, I went to the two-storey houses numbers 50 and 52 on the north side of that street. These houses are used as cook-shops. I believe that is their principal use. They are not old houses. The area of land on which they are built is extremely small, and I am of opinion that plans for two houses of the arrangement they have should not have been passed, and would not have been passed in any city where there was a Building Act. I cannot intelligibly describe them in words. A rough ground-plan would be an instructive and important thing. However, I believe the Commission have visited them. The ground-floor where the cook-shop business is conducted was very dirty; the very small eating-rooms at the back of the shop were squalid and ill-lighted; and another very little room behind that contained a water-tap, and seemed to be sometimes used as a scullery—a brick or two knocked out of the outside wall at the floor level, permitting wastes to flow out to the yard. These buildings have very small yards—perhaps 12 feet by 14; they are bricked, and contain a water-closet, and the usual yard gully. These closets and gullies are out of repair in some respects, and in others are altogether improper, being, for one thing, in direct communication with the sewer, and for another, insufficiently supplied with water. All this is bad enough; but the peculiar feature of this case is that these small yards containing closets, and drains in direct connection with the sewer, have been covered over and closed in by the tenants, so as to make an additional room, and that the room thus made is used as the cook-shop kitchen. At the time of my visit provisions of several sorts were awaiting the fire, and all the operations of a busy kitchen were in active progress, in immediate proximity to the closets and the faulty gullies. Now, here, for the third time, I cannot proceed without pointing out that although this misuse of premises is due to Chinese tenants, yet it has been made possible only by imperfection of the existing law touching buildings.

From Goulburn-street I was conducted to Queen-street, which turns out of —street, and runs northerly parallel with Lower George-street. It begins as a moderately wide road, with houses on both sides; but it then contracts, a row of four cottages on each side leaving no room for a roadway between them; the space resembles a court, and looks like a cul-de-sac, the only exit from it being by a narrow passage. These eight cottages are inhabited by Chinese hawkers. They are of brick, and of two storeys; but they have only two rooms, one above the other; and then they have very small yards, about 12 feet by 10. At first the visitor thinks that they are three-roomed cottages, without any yard at all; for here, as in Goulburn-street, the yard has been enclosed, so as to make a third room of it. None of these cottages have any closet at all. The four on the eastern side have no communication with a sewer nor any gully; all slop-water has to be carried to an ill-constructed gully-trap which stands in the middle of the court-like space; those on the western side are still less fortunate. I was able to enter only one of them, but I was informed all four were alike. In this there was in the room made out of the yard the mouth of a 4-inch glazed pipe; it was laid slanting into the ground; there was an improvised sink around it; its mouth protruded into the room, and was delivering a steady current of foul-air to the whole house, and it was armed with a slight grating, roughly made of iron-wire, against the passage of rats. None of these houses have water laid on; there is a single tap over a yard-gully in the passage which leads to George-street, to which the inhabitants resort. These houses are, in my opinion, fit for destruction and for nothing else. I need make no further remark at present concerning their existence here, in the heart of the city, except to point out, once more, that the faults are not due to the Chinese, who are compelled by poverty to live where they can, and for whom our own neglect leaves such death-traps open. I have no good idea of the number of tenements as faulty which a systematic inspection of the city and of Sydney would reveal in occupation of Europeans, but I know there are many.

From Queen-street I went to 166, Lower George-street. This is a rather new building of two storeys, used as a boarding-house, and, as I understood, chiefly by old Chinese past work. The internal condition as to cleanliness was not satisfactory. The upper floor was divided into cubicles which were not of uniform size; some were about 5 ft. by 7 ft.; some only about 6 by 5 ft., and all 10 feet high; ventilation and lighting were both seriously defective. In the small yard was a water-closet, which was out of repair, filthy, offensive, and dangerously connected with the sewer. But the special feature about these premises was a cellar, entirely below the natural surface, approached by a flight of wooden wooden steps, and having no openings either for light or ventilation, except the door of entrance. Round three of the walls a partition had been erected, which ran up to the roof, and which stood 4 or 5 ft. from the walls; and the space thus formed was divided into hutches about 6 ft. wide, in which were wooden shelves arranged in the usual way for sleeping. It is not necessary to do more than say that this arrangement is entirely improper and dangerous to the health of the lodgers, and, in consequence, of the neighbourhood.

Now in these three last cases the faults are due to much the same causes as in the Alexandria case, which I have already dealt with. They are due in part to want of suitable laws, but in a much greater part to the neglect of the Corporation to execute existing laws. As to laws which are wanting: I have already said that there is no law to prevent any person from building on any improper plan, site, or foundation, he may choose to use; and as to regions outside the city that is quite true. But within the city there is an Improvement Act. I need not say much about it; because it has been formally reported by the Improvement Board time after time to be an utterly useless statute, entirely ineffective for its intended purposes, and has been strongly condemned by a Judge of the Supreme Court. I need only point out that in Robertson's-lane there is an abominable and dangerous wooden structure maintained in spite of that Act; that in spite of it the back-yards in Goulburn-street have been so enclosed that a kitchen is formed which includes a water-closet and a drain-gully, and that in spite of it a similar course has been taken with the cottages in Queen-street. I can say no more about this; the facts have been perfectly well known for years, and yet have not been remedied. Then there is another point of great importance to meet which there is no law. I did not mention it in connection with Alexandria, because in that case each man's hutch is a separate tenement; but in Robertson's premises, and in Lower George-street numbers of men occupy rooms which are part of one premises, and consequently those premises are brought under the description of a common lodging-house. There is dangerous overcrowding in both places—an unhealthy want of light and air-space; but all these are matters which cannot be interfered with at present for want of a law to regulate houses let in lodgings. I must guard once more against misapprehension: there is overcrowding here, but it is not due to choice of the poor Chinese who live there. Thus, as bad, or, perhaps, a worse case was examined by the Board of Health in an ordinary boarding-house in the city last May; no Chinese lived there, but poor white people, and they lived under entirely improper conditions. I have recently examined boarding-houses for whites at Broken Hill, quite as bad and as dangerous to health. How can poor people compel landlords to build faithfully, or principal tenants to apportion the living space rather with regard to health of lodgers than their own pockets? The fault lies in the want of a law to regulate lodging-houses, such as is in use in every large city of Europe and many large cities of America—such a law as was originally suggested in the Public Health Bill of 1885, or such as was introduced in the Legislative Assembly, but not passed, a year or two ago. But after giving full weight to this defined want of powers (to be exercised either by Municipal Councils or otherwise) there still remains the fact that the most urgent and the most dangerous and simplest of the faults I have mentioned about the three city premises last described, might very easily have been corrected under the powers which the corporation do enjoy. Thus Robertson's premises were, at my visit, in such a state as regards the kitchen and as regards the basket-store, as would, in my opinion, justify the issue of a summons for filthy premises if the landlord failed to cleanse them after receiving notice to do so. Then, under section 193 of the Sydney Corporation Act the whole of these premises and the other two premises could have been compulsorily whitewashed without the least trouble; but they have never been whitewashed, or, to judge by appearances, have not been whitewashed since they were first erected. Again, as to defective, filthy, and offensive privies, the corporation have powers, under parts 9 and 10, to alter and regulate them almost in any way they choose to require; nevertheless the privies on Robertson's premises they are as they stand, distinctly filthy and dangerous; the privy in Lower George-street is also offensive and dangerous; and as for the cottages in Queen-street, which never had any privy at all, it has been within the power of the council to compel the connection of those cottages with a sewer, under part 10. Existing powers,—powers provided by the Sydney Corporation Act, have thus been neglected—have not been executed by them; but there is another point: For a long time past they need not have relied upon that Act, but might have thrown the whole trouble and responsibility upon the Water and Sewerage Board, who would have caused suitable privies—cleanly, properly placed, properly furnished with water, and safely connected with the sewers—to be put in, either by the owner or at his expense. As far as this goes all that was necessary was to write a letter, but even this easy remedy has been also neglected. Lastly, just one point has been omitted: it may be thought that these premises are owned by Chinese landlords. I believe the Alexandria camp is so owned; but in two, at all events, of the other three cases, I have been informed that the landlords are well-known European citizens.

13540. President.] Referring to Retreat-street, Alexandria, you say that the state of things to be found there is not an exceptional case. Are we to understand from that remark that European habitations presenting equally bad sanitary conditions, can be found in that locality, or elsewhere in the city and suburbs? I was then referring to the overcrowded condition of premises in Lower George-street, rather than the nuisances on the premises.

13541. As a matter of fact, having seen those huts in Retreat-street, do you know of any other place in New South Wales, where Europeans are living, or even Chinese, so bad as they are? I do not know of any other place where the same numbers are gathered together under such conditions.

13542. Do you know of any place where Europeans are living in similar huts with similar surroundings? I have seen many huts in all parts of the country, which, as separate hutches or tenements were no better.

13543. I am speaking more particularly of the rag-pickers, living in the midst of all the filth they collect? Well, I think if you were to go to any marine store dealer you would see something very much like it, only the marine store dealer generally lives in town, and in a superior sort of house to those in question. The trade ought to be regulated by law for that very reason.

13544. With regard to that place in Robertson's-lane, you have stated in clear terms that you consider it is only fit for destruction, and that the well-being of the surrounding district demands that it should be so dealt with? I think so.

13545. At that place, No. 166, George-street, did you see any men in those hutches then? Yes; there were men in two of them; the others were not occupied at that time. It was about 1 o'clock on Saturday afternoon.

13546. Did you notice the state of one man who appeared to be somewhat blind? No, I did not notice that. There was an old man, rather thin and pale; and, besides, he had his little lamp between me and himself, and I did not take it that I was examining the inhabitants particularly. I did not take him out and look at him.

13548. You believe there is strong necessity for a Common Lodging-house Act, to cover all kinds of houses where people go to sleep or board? Yes; but I should prefer to refer to them as "houses let in lodgings." The common lodging-houses in America and England are of the class sometimes called "Two-penny Ropes." We want something more than that in this country.
13549. The Act we require would be one to cover all classes of houses of that description? Yes; and "houses let in lodgings" would cover any description of lodging-house.
13550. You think there is no doubt that a measure of that kind would be beneficial to the health of the city, and also advantageous from a moral standpoint? Yes; I have long thought that. In my opinion it is a very important matter indeed both for Sydney and many country towns.
13551. Do you regard the overcrowding among the Chinese as a national characteristic consequent upon the overcrowded state of the country? I should be sorry to think they are all like it. But these are poor people.
13552. Now, I want to submit to you a suggestion that has been made to me: whether the Chinese living under these conditions are not healthier than they would be if they had very much cleaner surroundings? Well, no; I cannot admit that any human being would.
13553. On the principle that a pig would not thrive in a drawing-room, you know. However, that has been seriously suggested to me, that the Chinese would, and actually do, thrive better under the conditions we are speaking of than under much cleaner and happier circumstances, from a European point of view? We are all alike in point of general constitution, and what would hurt us would hurt them. And as for the pig, we all know that even he gets on much better when he is kept clean.
13554. Mr. Hawthorne.] Have you visited the Chinese quarters in San Francisco? No; I have not been there.
13555. Have you visited any of the Chinese camps or colonies in the country districts of New South Wales, such as Narrandera, Hay, Emmaville, and Tingha? I have not been to Emmaville and Tingha; but when I have been in country towns I have visited some of the residences of the Chinese.
13556. Have you visited the Chinese quarters at Narrandera? I have been in two or three of the houses.
13557. How would the places you have visited in the country compare with those you visited in Alexandria and Lower George-street? I think Alexandria is an exceptional place; I do not know any other place just like it—that is, built upon that plan.
13558. Do you think they are built on a superior plan in Narrandera and Hay? I have merely passed through the town of Hay, and had no opportunity of visiting the Chinese quarters there.
13559. Is that of Narrandera the only Chinese settlement you have visited in the interior of this Colony? No; I have been in many others.
13560. Will you mention those you have visited? I have seen Chinese residents in Albury, for instance, though I have never made a systematic inspection of them.
13561. As a matter of fact, until you were requested last week to make an inspection of the Chinese premises in Alexandria and the city, you were never called upon to make an inspection of any Chinese quarters? That is the case; but in the course of my visits to different parts of the country I always keep my eyes open to anything of the kind.
13562. How do you think the poorer class of Chinese compare with Europeans of the same walk in life? I think they compare favourably with Europeans in the same rank of life.
13563. Mr. Abigail.] In reference to this place in Goulburn-street, where you found the closet in the kitchen, that, I apprehend, would be calculated to impair the character of the food? I should think so. The imperfect fittings of the closet and gully, to speak of nothing else, must deliver impure air.
13564. In your report you make a statement with respect to Robertson's-lane, which leads me to the conclusion that you think the Corporation officers have neglected their duty to some extent;—is that so? It is.
13565. I may state that the description of the closets by you confirms my own observations of those places;—then if an inspector under the Corporation of the City of Sydney has stated that in connection with these places the sanitary arrangements are perfect, that would not be correct? It would not.
13566. And the same remark applies to those places in Queen-street, I suppose? Yes.
13567. In most of the Chinese houses down in Lower George-street which we visited we were informed that they took in lodgers, and in nearly all of them we found these wooden partitions dividing the rooms;—in framing a Lodging-house Bill do you not think it would be well to prescribe how they should be erected, and what amount of space should be allowed to each of the occupants of a room? Yes; that would be one of the things either to be stated in the Act itself, or to be regulated by by-laws under the Act.
13568. You consider it a matter well worthy of serious consideration? Certainly.
13569. Mr. Hawthorne.] I suppose any complaint as to the insanitary condition of the city would not be sent on to you, Dr. Thompson—they would rather be forwarded to the City Health Officer? They are made to the Board of Health very often.
13570. But the council have appointed a City Health Officer, whose duty it is, I understand, to attend to the health of the city? I do not know what his duties are. I know they are obliged to provide one under their Act of Incorporation.
13571. I suppose the fact of your not having made any inspection of these places previously resolves itself into this, that you consider that the duty of the Municipal Health Officer, or the officers of the Municipal Council of Sydney? Yes. I belong to an Administrative or Central Department, whose function is to make inquiries that cannot well be made by any council, and to advise as to proposed measures of sanitary reform, but not itself to execute them. I go about a great deal, and, keeping my eyes open, I cannot help noticing these things. But it is not my business to draw attention to them, except in the special cases I have referred to, for the Board is an Administrative and not an Executive body in respect of these matters.
13572. Then you had really made no inspection of the Chinese quarters in Lower George-street? I had made no formal inspection.
13573. Mr. Abigail.] Has the Board of Health power to direct the attention of the Improvement Board or the council to any buildings that may appear to be in a dangerous or insanitary condition? The Central Board does, at its own risk, draw the attention of municipal authorities to anything of the kind kind it may become aware of. It has happened, though but seldom, that councils have sent replies not exactly courteous when they have been communicated with touching such matters. You see, the Board has no locus standi in that direction; the public appeal to it, and it does for them what it can.

13574. I understood you to say that you visited Albury with a view to reporting upon a certain portion of that district? Only under "The Dairies Supervision Act." In that case the Board has a supervising authority—to see that the local council do their work properly.

13575. Supposing an individual sent a letter to the Board directing attention to what he might think a public danger, would the Board give attention to that? Invariably, even if the complaint is trifling; in fact the Board is very unwilling to let anything pass by without attention. For example, a complaint reached us that a cabstand in a certain locality was not as clean as it ought to be kept. Now, it is not exactly my business to inspect cabstands, but under the circumstances I made a point of looking at it. I did not see anything in the complaint at that time. But if there had been necessity we should have communicated with the proper authorities on the subject.

13576. In your report you speak of a Judge of the Supreme Court having condemned the "City of Sydney Improvement Act," and pointed out the strong necessity of an amended or new law? Yes; he did so.

13577. The defect in that Act arises from a division of powers conferred under it, does it not? That was the point the Judge took.

13578. I suppose you have no doubt that if the Improvement Board had full power to act in such matters, there are a number of places in Sydney which could be removed with benefit to the general health, comfort, and safety of the inhabitants? Yes; a great many, but not in the city alone.

13579. You think it is necessary to apply the same law outside the city? Quite as necessary.

13580. That power is, in a measure, exercised by the authorities now—for instance, we have a Building Act? Yes.

13581. That applies, in a measure, to the City of Sydney, but we do not find the municipalities make application to bring themselves under its provisions? There you point out a serious working difficulty. For my own part—but this is only a personal opinion—I think the local councils should manage their own affairs as far as possible; but, the fact is, that they very often fail for some reason or another, and I do not think any measure of the kind would be properly executed, as a general rule, unless there were some outside independent body with power, in cases of extreme necessity, to step in and say, "If you do not do this, we shall do it for you, and charge you with the cost."

13582. The body you have in your mind to perform this duty would be a body similar to the Board of Health, with large powers to step in and compel the local governing bodies to do what is right and just to the people, in the event of such local bodies persistently neglecting to carry out the powers vested in them to that end? Exactly. It is only in virtue of such power that the "Dairies Supervision Act," in reality, has been effectually worked.

13583. Mr. McKillop.] I suppose, in the course of your travels, doctor, you have come across a large number of houses of similar condition in many respects to those you have described in your report? Yes, a very great many. You see, I go into houses for different purposes—in connection with small pox or typhoid fever, perhaps, or else in consequence of special complaint by tenants. With regard to these matters that I have been speaking of, I have no power to do anything but look and record the facts.

13584. You say there is a very large number of these houses? Yes.

13585. Have you noticed any cases of leprosy in any of these houses, amongst the Chinese? I have never found them myself, but they have been reported. We have at Little Bay twelve or thirteen Chinese lepers and five natives of the Colony.

13586. Have any cases of syphilis amongst the Chinese come under your notice? No; they would not come under my notice.

13587. Syphilis is contagious, is it not? Yes.

13588. We have had evidence here that a very large number of Europeans congregate in these Chinese gambling-dens, in Lower George-street and elsewhere. Is it not possible that Europeans coming in contact with Chinamen, suffering from this disease, in such places, might catch it, and become diseased themselves? No. It is inoculable. I have known one man who knocked down another who was syphilitic, and cut his knuckles against the man's teeth, to get syphilis in his hand. But it is not contagious by casual contact.

13589. Mr. Hawthorne.] Suppose a Chinese vegetable hawker had syphilis, do you think he would be likely to communicate the disease, and thus cause it to spread by handing the vegetables to the various customers? I do not think so. I do not see the use of speculating about it.

13590. Mr. McKillop.] But I suppose it is quite possible for them to contract some disease or the other in these gambling-houses? Certainly, because they are overcrowded and dirty places.

13593. Mr. Quong Tart.] Do you think the Chinese, regarding personal cleanliness, compare favourably with the Europeans? I do.

13594. Have you noticed that when the Chinese workmen knock off at night they sponge themselves all over, and before they go to bed, wash their body and feet? I have not noticed that, but I have been told that it is the custom.

13596. Supposing that in one of these Chinese gardener's houses a person was suffering from typhoid or some contagious disease, and the human waste in such a case were converted into liquid form and used to manure the garden, do you not think there would be danger to health in that? There is always risk of that sort of thing in connection with sewage farms necessarily; and that is why I advise precautions being taken in eating vegetables grown in that way. I never have eaten any salads in Australia.

[The witness withdrew.]

Mr. George M' Rae called and examined:—

13597. President.] You are City Architect and Building Surveyor to the City Council of Sydney? Yes.
 13598. Have you, in the course of your duties, made any inspection of the Chinese tenements in this city? Yes; several times I have had a look round them with my inspectors.
 13599. In what localities? I visited Goulburn-street some months ago. I forget the exact date.
 13600. Have you visited Lower George-street? I have not been round there for some-time.
 13601. When were you last round there? About four months ago.
 13602. Have you noticed whether it is the custom of the Chinese to alter the internal arrangements of the houses they take on lease? Yes; that is very often the case.
 13603. They put up wooden partitions and subdivide the rooms? Yes.
 13604. That, of course, increases the inflammability of the building? Yes.
 13605. Do you know whether the insurance companies have ever objected to such alterations? I do not know that they have; and I may say that under the City Improvement Act we have no power to deal with them.
 13606. I shall come to that presently; this subdivision, which in many cases is done with a view to increasing the accommodation, very much reduces the cubical contents of the sleeping apartments, does it not? Yes.
 13607. Now, before they make that internal alteration, have they not to give you notice? No; not for internal alterations. The City Improvement Act, by which we are to be guided in such matters, is a very defective measure.
 13608. If you have the Act there, kindly refer to the section which covers the class of cases I am referring to? It would come under the 24th section; but we have very little power under that section, as I have already said.

Mr. G. M' Rae.

Witness read section 24 of the Act:—

Before any building on old or new foundations, or on foundations partly new and partly old, or any wall or fence fronting the building-line of any street shall be begun to be built, and also before any addition or alteration shall be made to any building, and also before any other matter or thing shall be commenced which by this Act is placed under the supervision of the surveyor, the person causing such building or wall or fence to be built, or such work to be executed, shall give to the said surveyor three clear days' notice in writing in the form or to the effect set forth in Schedule H, No. 1, and shall forward with such notice a general plan of such building or work for the approval of the said surveyor, who shall return the said plan within seven days, with his decision endorsed thereon; and if such person as aforesaid shall neglect to give such notice, or shall begin or allow any person to begin to build or to do any of the works, matters, or things aforesaid without giving such notice or furnishing such plan, or before the expiration of the said period of three days, he shall for every such default be liable to a penalty not less than £5 and not exceeding £20; and if any such person having duly begun any such building or other work, matter, or thing as aforesaid, shall for any period exceeding one month suspend the progress thereof and again go on with the same, then two clear days before any such recommencement or resumption of work, he shall give notice in writing to the said surveyor in the form or to the effect set forth in Schedule H, No. 2, of this Act. And if any such person shall neglect to give such notice, he shall for every such offence be liable to a penalty of not less than £2 and not more than £20. And any such building or other work, matter, or thing so begun to be built, pulled down, rebuilt, cut into, or altered as aforesaid, or proceeded with after suspension thereof as aforesaid without such notices and plan being given respectively as aforesaid, shall be liable to be declared and abated as a common nuisance under the provisions hereinafter in that behalf contained. Provided always that if, by reason of any emergency any act, matter, or thing hereby placed under the supervision of the said surveyor be required to be done immediately or before such notice as aforesaid respectively can be given, then any such person as aforesaid may do such act, matter, or thing so requisite, but such person shall within twenty-four hours of commencing such work give to the said surveyor notice thereof in writing, or in default be liable in all respects as if no such emergency had arisen.

13609. President.] It appears to me that this section of the Act is very comprehensive. It very clearly directs that before any addition or alteration shall be made to any building, and also before any other matter or thing shall be commenced, which by this Act is placed under the supervision of the City Surveyor, &c., three clear days' notice in writing shall be given to the said surveyor in the form set forth in the Schedule;—do you not think that internal alteration I have referred to in the houses occupied by the Chinese is an alteration under the meaning of this clause? It ought to be within the meaning of the clause, certainly.

13610. You think it is? Yes.

13611. Have you ever had reason to alter that opinion by reason of the City Solicitor advising you otherwise? I have consulted with the City Solicitor on that matter, but that was some time ago.

13612. In your opinion, the alteration which the Chinese make in the houses they take from the European landlords is an alteration within the meaning of the 24th clause of the City Improvement Act;—that is your opinion? Yes.

13613. Then have you ever had reason to alter that opinion in consequence of advice given to you by the City Solicitor? No.

13615. As a matter of fact, I suppose you never objected to these alterations being made, because they never gave you notice, and you were really not cognisant of their being made? No; but I should say that even if they gave notice, I, as City Surveyor, would have no power to object, because the Act gives me no discretionary power in the matter—it simply says that outside walls shall not be constructed of certain materials; it gives no power to determine with regard to inside walls. I may say, however, that these matters have been carefully considered in preparing the new Act, and full powers given for the supervision of buildings, to determine the size of rooms, and so forth.

13616. You are clear that you have no power under the old Act to do anything, except in regard to the exterior walls of a building? Yes; I do not think we have any further power than that under the 24th section.

13617. Have you taken the City Solicitor's advice? No.

Mr. G. M' Rae. 13618. Then it is a mere assumption of your own? I have had no legal advice. But if you turn to pages 59 and 63 you will see how the powers of the officers are limited by the Schedules A, B, and C. It says:—
8 Dec., 1891.

Every external wall or external enclosure to buildings of every rate or class, and of every addition or enlargement hereafter to be made, to any buildings now erected, or hereafter to be erected, shall be erected with reference to height and thickness, subject to the provisions of this Act and of Schedules A, B, and C.

And then it goes on to give particulars.

13619. Then your contention or belief is that the section and Schedule relative to the materials and construction of outside walls govern your powers altogether? Yes.

13620. It seems to me that it governs your power only so far as exterior walls are concerned; you hold a different opinion, and want to make that section which deals with the construction of external walls limit your power as to internal walls? What I say is that the Schedule limits my power and authority altogether to external walls.

13621. Does not that section, No. 24, clearly provide that notice shall be given to you before any building or any alteration is begun in any building? Yes.

13622. Was your attention never directed by any person to the fact that these internal alterations were going on in the Chinese houses? I had a general knowledge that such things were done.

13623. Did it strike you that it would be desirable to limit the powers of the Chinese to subdivide their premises? Yes.

13624. And I understood you to say that arrangements have been made in the new Act to give the officers of the Council ample powers in that direction? Yes.

13625. With regard to the enclosing of yards, which you have probably noticed the Chinese are much addicted to, in order to get an additional room, which is used for cooking or storing purposes, do you consider they were entitled to make that alteration or addition without permission? Certainly not.

13626. Can you tell me why you have not directed the attention of the Mayor, for the time being, to that custom of the Chinese? Well, it is very difficult to get at these people doing anything of that kind, and, unless we can catch them red-handed, we have no power to act. Besides, very often the work has been done in such a way that we could not find out what was going on.

13627. Is not the owner or the tenant presumably liable for all the work done on the premises? I do not think so, in this instance.

13628. The clause says before any buildings, or old or new foundations, or any wall or fence, &c., or any additions or alterations shall be made, the person causing such to be built shall give due notice? Yes; I know it says that, but we have to get at the person.

13629. Should it not be easy to trace the persons who cause these things to be done? On the contrary, it is most difficult in some cases. It is difficult to find out when they do it, for instance. If you ask them when was this or that done they will tell you it has been done a long time.

13630. They do not do the work all at one time—that is, finish it from the start without a break? No; they do it gradually sometimes. I may say the Act is defective in many respects.

13631. Are you of opinion that such enclosures as I have referred to increase the inflammability of the buildings? Yes; it is calculated to produce insanitary conditions and cause disease.

13632. Have the insurance companies never communicated with you officially in the matter? No; they have never approached me officially on the subject.

13633. Is there any provision in the new measure to compel people to have a certain yard area, and to observe certain regulations with respect to new buildings? Yes. It also provides for a certain cubic area for sleeping places.

13634. Will that apply to old buildings too? Yes.

13635. The new Act will regulate the amount of cubic feet of space that a man may sleep in? Yes, the object being to prevent the tremendous overcrowding. I have been much impressed with the necessity of such a provision when going through some of these places. In the new Act ample provision is made for dealing with all such matters under the by-laws.

13636. As City Architect and Building Surveyor, do your duties include the inspection of properties with a view to their condemnation? Yes.

13637. Do you know Robertson's-lane, off Goulburn-street? Yes.

13638. Do you know a large building there that used to be Robertson's Coach Factory, and which is now occupied by a number of Chinese? I have been there; I think about four or five months ago.

13639. What caused you to visit it? I really forget.

13640. Do you visit it alone? No; I went with Inspector M'Nulty.

13641. What impression did you gain by your visit to that place? That it was a very indifferent class of building, but the place seemed to be kept pretty well.

13642. It was clean and sweet? Yes.

13643. Did you look at the water-closet accommodation? I do not remember that I did.

13644. That would be more in Mr. Seymour's department? Yes. My inspections are made with the view of seeing if there is anything ruinous and dangerous about the buildings I visit.

13645. You did not find the place in question in a sufficiently dilapidated state to demand condemnation? No. In the case of being ruinous and dangerous it would be referred to the Improvement Board.

13646. Was it such a building as you might have brought under the notice of the Mayor as being unfit for human habitation? It did not strike me as being so at the time, considered as a Chinese place.

13647. Did you regard it as a dwelling-place, or a workshop? As a dwelling-place.

13648. Have you any idea how many Chinese were living there? No; I did not count the beds.

13649. And you made no report to the Mayor on the subject? No.

13650. Have you visited any other Chinese places that you would like to speak about now? No. We have cleared out a number of them during the last few years, but I cannot think of any at present.

13651. Do you remember a place at the corner of Brown-bear-lane and Lower George-street, which I condemned? Yes. I visited that place some months ago, and after the notice was served I saw them clear out with the exception of one old man, and the next day, when I went round, the whole place was clear.

13652. You are clearly of opinion that the practice of Chinese householders closing in their yards in the way I have referred to is illegal? Yes.

13653. And could that be done away with at once? Yes.

13654. Is it the custom of Chinese to store timber in their houses? Yes.

13655. Is there anything in the Act to enable you to prevent that? No.

13656. Mr. Abigail.] Referring to that building in Robertson's-lane, do you not think that is a class of building that should be condemned? I have not visited it lately. When I did visit it, it was apparently a building of undesirable character perhaps, but it was not either ruinous or dangerous.

13657. Now, with regard to these additions that the Chinese are in the habit of making to their houses, you say that it is difficult to find them in the course of construction. But suppose a man does such a thing, and you find he has acted illegally, have you not power to compel him to pull the additions or alterations down? The only course is to take him before a magistrate; but if we cannot prove that he did it we cannot take proceedings against him at all. If my inspector goes round and sees something of the kind, and makes inquiry, he will probably be told, "Oh! that has been up for years"; and we cannot prove that it has not been up for years. I may say that I have only one inspector for the whole of the city.

13659. With regard to these partitions, you say that you have no power to deal with them under the Improvement Act, although the Mayor evidently believes, or is of opinion that you have. I may tell you that these partitions are put up in the houses of the Chinese, in many instances, to prevent the police interfering with the illegal practices carried on there. Have you ever consulted the city solicitor on the subject? No.

13661. Mr. Hawthorne.] Supposing I have a boarding-house in the city, and I make up my mind to divide one of the rooms into four, have you not power to prevent me doing so? No.

13662. You are perfectly helpless in the matter? Yes; we have no power. But I may say that ample provision has been made for all these things in the new Act; as well as for dealing with the construction of buildings generally in such a way as to ensure—especially in the case of houses built in flats—ample provision for the health, comfort, and safety of the inhabitants.

13663. Mr. Quong Tart.] Regarding these places where alterations and additions are made to the premises, you say that you have only one inspector, and that is not sufficient? No; we really require three or four; and each one should be made responsible for a particular district, and also for any alterations that are going on to buildings. Sometimes this work is done at night.

[The witness withdrew.]

WEDNESDAY, 9 DECEMBER, 1891.

Present:—

THE MAYOR OF SYDNEY (MR. ALDERMAN MANNING, J.P.), PRESIDENT.

FRANCIS ABIGAIL, Esq., J.P., VICE-PRESIDENT.

RAMSEY McKILLOP, Esq., | QUONG TART, Esq.,
JOHN STUART HAWTHORNE, Esq.

Mr. Henry C. L. Anderson called and examined:—

13664. Mr. Abigail.] You are Director of Agriculture for the Colony, I believe? Yes.

13665. The duties of the Commission have led them to the consideration of the production of vegetables in this Colony by the Chinese. They have visited and inspected a number of Chinese gardens in the suburbs, and from what they have seen at those places they have, in the absence of scientific authority, been led to believe that what goes on there may be injurious to the health of the people who consume the vegetables so produced. They have therefore decided to seek the evidence of yourself, as a man versed in that branch of science. We have seen that the Chinese use all the filth and offal, the human excreta and human urine that they can get hold of for the purpose of dousing their vegetables with them; and the question that has exercised our minds is whether the vegetables grown in that way would be injurious to the health of the consumers. So we have asked you to be good enough to attend our meeting this morning for the purpose of giving us whatever information you could upon the subject. You have been at the Sydney University, I believe? Yes.

Mr. H. C. L.
Anderson.
9 Dec., 1891.

13666. And you have gone through all the branches of scientific study in connection with agriculture, have you not? Yes. I might, perhaps, make a short statement before you begin to examine me upon the question. It is one that has been seriously complicated by the fact that men have taken it up who do not really understand it from a scientific stand-point; and in that way statements utterly opposed to scientific discovery have been made to my knowledge, both in the press and in lectures. Many men will argue that the dung of a human being is horribly offensive and dangerous to health, and yet the same men will use the dung of another animal in their gardens, and see nothing at all objectionable in it. As a matter of fact, chemistry makes no distinction between elements in a manure, such as nitrogen or potash, or phosphoric acid, whether they are in the form of cow dung or, to speak quite plainly, man's dung. They are all the same to a chemist. I saw it stated in a newspaper a little while ago, for example, that the Chinese saturate their vegetables with ammonia, and that that caused typhoid fever. Now, ammonia can no more cause typhoid fever than it can cause any other disease that is the result of a germ; but if, on the other hand, vegetables were doused with matter containing that germ, of course it is within the bounds of possibility that typhoid fever might be spread in that way. The danger in that case would be with those quick-growing vegetables, salads, and so on, that are speedily produced and eaten without being cooked. Any filth that attaches to them is injurious to health, but they could not possibly produce directly a specific disease like typhoid fever, unless the filth with which they had been doused contained the germ of typhoid fever. The best gardeners are the men who use every possible source of manure, human or animal or vegetable. They mix them all together, and take care to keep down offensive smells by mixing plenty of earth and other absorbents with them; in other words, they make a good compost heap, and when that is thoroughly rotted they spread it on the soil. Chemists can see no difference between the

Mr. H. C. L. manurial constituents, whether they be in the form of offal, decayed vegetables, a dead dog, or the Anderson. evacuations of any animal. Some of them act more quickly than others, and are consequently more valuable to the gardener.

9 Dec., 1891.

13667. I understand then that human manure contains exactly the same properties as the manure of any other animal? Exactly the same chemical constituents, only in a different form and in different proportions.
 13668. And human manure, if used in growing vegetables, cannot be any more injurious than any other kind of manure? No; certainly not, unless it has in it some specific germ coming from the man producing the manure and adhering to the vegetable at the time that it is consumed. If the fæcal matter of a man suffering from typhoid fever were used in the form of liquid manure and applied to the plant instead of to the soil, I think it is quite possible that the germs might linger on a rapidly-growing vegetable like a lettuce, and in that way the disease might be conveyed to the consumer of the lettuce, but as a matter of fact, science has never, as far as I am aware, fully investigated the question. There would be less danger of germs in the case of cabbages and similar vegetables, because they would be destroyed when the vegetables were cooked.

13669. Nor in the case of any other vegetable that is cooked before being eaten, I suppose? No; not in case of any cooked vegetable.

13670. Mr. Hawthorne.] Have you had a look at any of the Chinese gardens in Waterloo or Alexandria? Yes; I have seen them several times.

13671. You know what they use for manure? I have seen them use liquid manure, and also solid manure.

13672. Have you also seen them using their own excreta? No; I have not seen that.

13673. Were you aware that they did use it as manure? Yes; I have understood that.

13674. Mr. Abigail.] You said just now that typhoid fever might possibly be conveyed through a typhoid germ lingering about a lettuce that had been doused with the manure of a man suffering from typhoid fever;—did you mean that the germ might possibly be absorbed with the manure by the lettuce itself, and in that way enter into the organic life of the vegetable spreading through its tissues, and thus becoming a source of danger to health, or merely that if thrown over a lettuce in the form of manure, and through carelessness not washed away before the vegetable was consumed, the typhoid germ might in that way be conveyed upon its fatal errand? I do not think the question has ever been investigated whether a fever germ can be absorbed into the tissues of a plant, and thus be conveyed to the human being. I do not think that it is at all likely; but it is certainly a matter well worthy of investigation by bacteriologists.

13675. Have you ever examined a cabbage grown under the conditions we have been describing. A cabbage grown by a Chinaman at Forbes was brought up to Parliament House on one occasion, and handed round as an illustration of the injurious effects of the kind of manure used in its production; the vegetable was undoubtedly very seriously diseased; we split it down the centre and right up the stalk nearly as far as the leaves; there was manure almost in its earthy form;—what could bring that about; would it not be dangerous to the health of the consumer? Do you mean that the manure was inside the stalk of a cabbage?

13676. The forcing had been so rapid that the manure had gone right up the stalk of the cabbage almost into the leaves? In what form was the manure visible?

13677. When the stalk of the cabbage was split it was seen to be brown right up to within an eighth of an inch of the outside of it. It was a large cabbage, and was shown as the result of the forcing to which it had been subjected, the stench being enough to knock you down. I saw that myself, and it was that that gave a great deal of force to my impression that Chinese-grown vegetables were injurious to health. Even after knowing what you have told us, that the boiling of a cabbage even in that state would destroy any germs, one cannot get rid of the idea that it would be a very horrible thing to eat such a vegetable? I have never seen anything at all similar to what you have described.

13678. It was grown by a Chinaman in the district of Forbes? It is a very remarkable thing, because the manure is put into the ground, and is not used by the plant at all in the form in which we put it there. It must be decomposed and must be in solution before it is absorbed. It is impossible for the exceedingly minute root-hairs of plants to absorb any solid matter. It is said, for example, that plants absorb ammonia, but there is no proof whatever that plants can do so. The bacteria of the soil turn it into nitric acid before the plants can utilise it.

13679. So that if a plant was put into liquid manure, whether human or animal, and great heat was applied to it, that would not affect what you have said? Under those conditions the plant would die. The chemical action of the manure would kill all the fibres of the plant. You can easily kill a plant by giving it too much manure. It produces too much chemical heat. You might make your soil very strong indeed with manure and not kill a plant, but you could not grow it in pure manure. There must be some soil there, and there must be a low form of life, what are called bacteria, there to decompose the manure. If you killed the bacteria by excessive fermentation you would not grow anything.

13680. And you do not think that under all the conditions of Chinese gardening it would be possible to bring about injurious effects any more than might be the case by European gardening? The only thing I can imagine is that the germs of disease might be conveyed, as I have said, by lingering on the leaves of vegetables that are eaten raw. I do not think that any European gardener would water a vegetable of that kind with liquid manure over the leaves. It would go against his sentiment, and I must say that I think it is very largely a question of sentiment. We all put liquid manure about the roots of plants, but not over the plants themselves. The only danger I can see is by your depositing anything on the leaves of a vegetable, and its not being washed away by rain. For example, there is a little moth that is very injurious to cabbages or potatoes, and in order to poison its food-supply we water the leaves of the plants with a solution of London purple—a compound of arsenic, which is of course very poisonous. You might say that that was dangerous, but as a matter of fact, thousands of experiments have been tried in America, where they have watered vines, cabbages, and all sorts of fruits and vegetables with it, and it is perfectly clear that the first shower of rain washes it off. You may spray plants with this solution of arsenic until, with the aid of a magnifying-glass, you can see a light film all over them, and yet there is no danger to the health of the consumers, provided the spraying is discontinued a fortnight before the vegetables or fruit are to be used.

13681. Not even without the shower of rain coming to wash it off? No; it would do no harm whatever.

13682. Well, there is an impression that the Chinese adopt a different method in growing vegetables from that

- that adopted by Europeans, and there is an idea that it is not a matter of sentiment but an actual source of injury to consumers. Let us go a little farther into the question. Vegetables are taken out by the Chinese hawkers, and those that are unsold are often placed in ill-ventilated bed-rooms, and taken round for sale on the following day. Is that likely to be a means of injury to the consumer? Vegetables allowed to fade in that way lose their value for purposes of food. Anything that is used as a fresh food loses its feeding value to a great extent by being kept. In time, of course, decomposition would set in, but whether they would absorb disease through being kept in ill-ventilated rooms, where the germs of disease were present, I do not think that I am able to say. It would require a specialist to answer a question of that kind.
13683. Well, when vegetables lose their properties in that way, are they not likely to affect the health of the consumer injuriously? Only in a negative way, I think; they would be less nourishing. I think, however, that it is possible that a succulent vegetable might take up the germs of disease in that way. Milk does it, and I think it is possible that a lettuce might; but it is a matter that has never been fully investigated in New South Wales.
13684. You have said that liquid manure thrown over vegetables may be injurious to health, but do not European gardeners force vegetables in the same way? They use animal manure in a liquid form, I know. I have seen them often; but I think that sentiment would restrain them from using human excrement in that way. Of course all gardeners use liquid manure in raising plants in a hot-house. Many people in the suburbs have earth-closets, and are in the habit of burying the matter in their vegetable gardens. They have no sentimental objection to that; but, mark you, how they treat it. They dry that excrement with ashes, and any person might use it without offence, just as though it were a piece of dry cow-dung, but still it is not altered in its essential elements, nor deteriorated in its manurial value.
13685. Have you ever heard of Europeans using urine on vegetables? Yes; I have seen it done often. It is a very valuable manure, it decomposes so rapidly.
13686. Mr. Quong Tart.] You say that you have seen the Chinese use human manure for cabbage—at what distance from the plant do they use it? I have seen them spread liquid manure over the tops of the cabbages; but the solid manure is always put into the rows or holes before the vegetable is planted.
13687. Have you ever noticed what strength they use it? Oh, the stuff that I saw them putting on was very much diluted.
13688. I understand that they mix a large quantity of water with it, so that it will not burn the plants? Yes, that is so.
13689. Do you not think that the discoloration in the stalk of the cabbage referred to by Mr. Abigail might have been the result of some injury to the vegetable? It is very hard to say what it was.
13691. Well, you have seen dark matter in potatoes very often—that is the result of a disease which has nothing to do with the kind of manure used, and might not the same apply to cabbages, whether grown by Chinese or Europeans? Yes, such a disease may be due to a fungus. But, as I understand Mr. Abigail, there was an objectionable odour with that cabbage.
13692. Mr. Abigail.] Oh, yes; it was most objectionable? Of course that cabbage may have been decomposing, and there is nothing more odious than a decomposing cabbage.
13693. No, it had all the appearance of a very healthy cabbage? I never heard of such a thing.
13694. Mr. Hawthorne.] How do you account for the Chinese in a few years driving almost every European in the county of Cumberland out of the cultivation of vegetables? There are a good many reasons for it. They work harder, they utilise manure more scrupulously, and they have always got situations for their gardens in which they can use water. That is the great secret. You see them watering morning, noon, and night.
13695. And you think that the real secret of their driving Europeans out of the gardening industry is due entirely to their superior industry? Yes; I have watched them repeatedly in Canterbury, and can only speak of them in terms of the highest praise. They are most industrious and highly-skilled gardeners.
13696. Is it that they get their knowledge from books, or is it inheritive? They are gardeners by tradition. A Chinaman is a gardener from his youth up, and probably his father was before him.
13697. You think that it is all a matter of birth with the Chinese—that the Chinese who garden to such perfection have simply inherited what their forefathers knew? Yes; they never read anything that we publish. They pay £9 a ton for blood manure from the abattoirs, which our gardeners will not buy at £6 a ton.
13698. Then as a matter of fact the Chinese are larger customers for the manure manufactured at Glebe Island than the Europeans are? Yes; they are the only people who properly appreciate it.
13699. Then the fault is not with the Chinese at all but with the Europeans for not being so patient and industrious and skilful as the Chinese? I think so, and also because the Europeans do not use sufficient water. If you pay a man 7s. a day for taking round water, vegetable-growing will never pay, but if you can buy a windmill and irrigate in an economical way then the Europeans need not fear the Chinese.
13700. But, in the absence of machinery, Europeans will not take the trouble to resort to manual labour like the Chinese do? Very seldom, I think. It would hardly pay.
13701. Have you visited any of the Chinese gardens except those at Canterbury? Yes; I have visited those at Botany and Waterloo.
13702. Did you go there for the purpose of seeing how they raised their vegetables, or merely on a friendly visit? Entirely to see how they utilised manure.
13703. And you think that the whole of their apparently scientific knowledge in using manure and dealing with ground that was previously of very little value is the result of traditions handed down from generation to generation, rather than from any knowledge of literary productions on agriculture written in Chinese? I do not know what books on agriculture they have got, but I have noticed from my reading that they utilise manure here in the same way that they do in China. I understand that in China they utilise the whole of the human manure, and here they do the same. I understand that in China they have little wayside retiring places, where the wayfarer can go and ease himself, and from which the manure is removed direct on to the ground for use in the compost heap, or in a liquid form.

- Mr. H. C. L. Anderson.
13704. So that your statement would justify the various municipalities in using the excrement that they now carry outside the Heads and throw into the ocean? I am quite sure that we are wasting a great source of national wealth in throwing the night-soil into the sea. I have made a calculation that the manure made by an ordinary family is worth 26s. a year for the purposes of gardening.
13706. In other words, what an ordinary family throws away in the course of a year is worth 26s.? Yes. I may just say one thing to illustrate what I have said. I have a quarter of an acre of ground round my house, and for seven years I have not spent a penny in manure. I have simply used the night-soil from the house, and my trees, shrubs, and other plants grow as luxuriantly as I could wish, and simply because I scrupulously use the night-soil, the slops, ashes, and the bones from the house. I reckon that they are worth £4 or £5 a year to me. Of course I have used manure on my orchard, but never one penny-worth on my own garden.
13707. There is evidently no by-law in your municipality against the utilisation of night-soil on your own ground as there is in some places? No.
13708. Then there is no offensive smell arising from it? No.
13709. Mr. McKillop.] You treat the night-soil in some way, I suppose? I only mix dried ashes with it, and there is no offensive smell whatever with it; excessive fermentation is checked, and offensive gases are absorbed by the dry earth.
13710. In the course of your experience in connection with the Agricultural Department have you found that the Chinese are going in for the cultivation of fruit to anything like the extent that they have been cultivating vegetables? No; I have never heard anything about that.
13711. Have you found the Chinese to be at all successful in the cultivation of fruit in this country? I do not know a single Chinese fruit-grower. I know Chinese who manage fruit gardens for other people, but none who own gardens of their own.
13712. Has not Dr. On Lee got some orchards? Not that I know of.
13713. How is it that the Chinese devote so much more time to vegetable-growing than to fruit or flower growing? Well, principally, I suppose, because vegetable-growing produces a return in a very few weeks, whilst fruit-growing takes a long time to become profitable.
13716. Then you think that if the Chinese were to enter into competition with the Europeans in the growing of fruit they would be placed at a disadvantage? Yes; because, as I say, they have not grown a good many of our fruits in China, and they would have to begin to learn, and the average Chinaman cannot learn like one of our students. He has to acquire his knowledge from experience, and cannot study it in the light of science.
13717. So I conclude, from what you have said, that you think there is no danger to health from the manner in which the Chinese cultivate their vegetables? I cannot say that there is no danger. I can pledge my word that from a chemical point of view there is no danger, but from a physiological standpoint I cannot possibly say that there is none.
13718. You have never investigated the effect of vegetables grown in that way upon the bodies of the persons who eat them? No.
13719. That would be more a question for medical men? Yes, and even specialists among medical men.
13720. Would you not think there was a danger in salads (I understand you to say that you would) grown in that way, especially if the people who used them were not particularly careful in the way in which they prepared them? If there is any danger at all that is where it would be.
13721. Mr. McKillop.] Is it a fact that there is more ammonia in human dung than in that of the brute creation? Everything depends upon the food of the animal making the dung.
13722. Compare human dung with horse dung? Horse dung contains a great deal more nitrogen (which will become ammonia by fermentation) than cow dung, and I should think that it contains as much as average human dung and urine mixed together. Human excrement in a solid state does not contain much ammonia, but if you were to mix human urine, which does contain a large percentage with it, I suppose you would find that the compound contained more ammonia than cow dung, and about as much as horse dung.
13723. Have you ever boiled a European grown cabbage in one pan and a Chinese-grown cabbage in another, and then compared the difference in the scent of the two waters? No, I have not, and I should hardly think that there would be any difference in the scent.
13724. There is a difference—a great difference, however—and I should like you to make the comparison for an experiment. The question was asked by Mr. Hawthorne, whether Europeans use as much human dung as the Chinese do; you said that they would not, and that suggests to my mind that it must be the large amount of human dung used by the Chinese that brings about the strong smell that I have just alluded to in the water in which Chinese grown cabbages are boiled? Why would you think so?
13725. Well, I can only state the fact that there is that difference in the odour of the two waters, and in the absence of any other explanation conclude that that must be the true cause of the bad smell of that in which the Chinese grown cabbage is boiled? If you take human dung and decompose it into its chemical elements you will find that these elements are the same in varying proportions as the elements composing any other kind of dung. Take a dead animal for example: That would decompose into gaseous matters quite as offensive as anything from a human body; but if that is buried in the soil the offensive constituents are absorbed by the soil, and not by the plant. The really offensive vapours and gases emanating from a dead body are sulphuretted hydrogen, a compound of sulphur and hydrogen, which you never find combined in a plant.

13726. Why is it that a cabbage makes a smell so much more offensive than other vegetables? Because of the amount of sulphur there is in it. Any complete manure that contains a good percentage of sulphur grows cabbages well, and the cabbages when rotting form compounds of sulphur with carbon or hydrogen—both of which smell very vile. Mr. H. C. L.
Anderson.

13727. Guano has a large amount of ammonia in it, has it not? The best guano is very rich indeed in nitrogen in some form, and ammonia is one form of nitrogen that is reckoned valuable; but nitrogen may exist in a form that is not so valuable. Fresh human urine contains no ammonia, and therefore it is absurd for people to say that they taste ammonia in the water of cabbages that have been watered with fresh human urine.

13728. Manure containing dead cats or dogs is very valuable manure is it not—more valuable than the excrement of either man or beast? Oh, yes, very valuable; our manure is only waste matter ejected by the body; but a dead animal contains the whole of the elements of nutrition of which the body is composed. Then, of course, in the same way the value of manure depends, as I have already said, entirely upon the food of the animal producing it. A ton of manure from an animal fed on turnips is worth 4s. 6d.; a ton of manure from an animal fed on linseed cake is worth more than £5.

13729. Is it necessary to use human manure in gardening? No, it is not necessary; but it is economical to do so. You can grow vegetables or anything else without it.

13730. Then, it is on the score of economy, I suppose, that it is used? Yes.

13731. Bone-dust is a very valuable manure is it not? Yes.

13732. I suppose it is not so largely used owing to the fact that it is so expensive? Yes, and also owing to the fact that it is not a complete manure. It only contains ammonia and phosphate of lime, whereas dung is a complete manure, that is, it contains a little of everything needed to make a complete fertiliser.

13733. Guano? That is a complete manure—it contains a little of everything, but especially nitrogen in some form.

13734. But to use it in a large vegetable garden would be too expensive, I suppose? Yes, I think so. It is very expensive, because there are so many charges to pay upon it.

13735. In sewage farms all the excrement is utilised is it not? Yes.

13737. With regard to the loss accruing from human excrement being taken outside the Heads you say that it is very valuable manure. It is utilised in some places, is it not? Yes; it is to some extent in Sydney too. It is made into what is called poudrette, but the cost of manufacturing it is so great that it does not pay to use it generally. The water is all evaporated, and in the form of poudrette the manure is a perfectly solid substance.

13738. But would it be advisable for the Government to build establishments for the purpose of treating all this night-soil? Well, from a sanitary point of view it would certainly pay, but I do not think you could hope to make money out of the sale of the manure when manufactured. All that I have heard about the poudrette manufactories of London and Paris is, that it costs about as much to manufacture the manure as the manure is worth. In Sydney they ask £5 a ton for poudrette, but our experience is that it is not worth more than 35s. It contains much accidental foreign matter—bits of broken glass, coke, sand, clay, &c., and so on, that is not valuable for the purpose of manure.

13740. Well, I have understood that they only pour liquid manure over their young cabbages, and I wanted to know how old the cabbages were before they ceased to treat them in that way? I have seen them pouring liquid manure over cabbages that have been about half full-grown. They do not continue the practice up to the time the cabbages are ready for cutting, I believe, and that is why, I think, that there is a minimum of danger in the practice.

13741. Mr. Hawthorne.] Are you aware that the Chinese gardeners use the refuse from the boiling-down establishments, and also from the wool-wash as manure? Yes; and very valuable manure it is.

13742. That was never taken advantage of during the whole course of this Colony's agricultural history, I think, was it? No, I do not believe that it was to any extent. We have just been examining the scrapings from a tannery, and have found that it is worth 35s. a ton as a manure, yet, because of the ignorance that obtains as to its true value, you can get any quantity of it for 1s. a ton. A man offered me 100 tons of it the other day at the nominal price of 1s. a ton. A man who has one of the best vegetable gardens in the Colony, at St. Mary's, uses it, and it was he who asked us our opinion of it. It is very offensive, but it makes splendid manure, especially when properly treated in the compost heap.

13743. Europeans have never used it, have they? Not here, to any great extent.

13744. Then had it not been for the investigation of the matter by your department nobody would have known the value of it? It has been neglected here, but, as a matter of fact, its value has been well known in other countries for a very long time.

13745. Mr. Quong Tart.] Mr. McKillop just referred to the smell of the water in which Chinese-grown cabbages were boiled, and compared it to the water drained from European-grown cabbages; but, as a matter of fact, are there not many different kinds of cabbages? I can assure Mr. McKillop that the higher the form of animal life the greater the decomposition in death. There is nothing in the world more offensive in decay than a beautiful well-nourished human being. A well-fed animal is full of nitrogen, and when it decomposes will smell horribly, but a starved or ill-fed animal in decomposition would not form so much foul gas. So a well-nourished vegetable would suffer more decomposition, and therefore create more offensive gases and vapours.

THURSDAY, 10 DECEMBER, 1891.

Present:—

THE MAYOR OF SYDNEY (MR. ALDERMAN MANNING, J.P.); PRESIDENT.

FRANCIS ABIGAIL, Esq., J.P., VICE-PRESIDENT.

RAMSEY MCKILLOP, Esq., | QUONG TART, Esq.,

JOHN STUART HAWTHORNE, Esq.

Hannah ————— called and examined:—

- Hannah
10 Dec., 1891.
13746. Mr. Abigail.] The Commission has summoned you to attend here for the purpose of obtaining certain information from you; and I may tell you now that we do not propose to publish your name in full, so you need have no apprehension on that score, nor need you have any hesitation about speaking freely in reply to questions which will be put to you. It is as well, also, that you should thoroughly understand that the questions you will be asked are not prompted by any desire to gratify idle curiosity on our part, but to enable us to properly perform a public duty that we have been charged with by the Government. Now, are you a married woman? Yes.
13747. You are separated from your husband—is he a European? Yes. He was never much use to me.
13748. How long have you been separated from him? I was separated four years last November.
13749. What was the cause of the separation—was it your fault or his? It was his fault. He was always going to gaol, and was no use to me whatever.
13750. He never supported you? No. The Chinese have been the best to me since I left my mother's home.
13751. When you separated from your husband did you go to live with the Chinese? Yes.
13752. And have you been living with one Chinaman ever since? Yes. Mr. Quong Tart was in my house—it is next to the public-house.
13753. What is the general treatment you have received from the Chinaman you are living with—is he kind and considerate? There could not be a better man to me in the world. He supplies me with anything I want. Any of the police down there can give you his character.
13754. Does he drink? No; he never drinks or smokes.
13755. He never quarrels with or strikes you? No.
13756. It has been represented to us that the Chinese entrap young and virtuous girls to their places, and, getting them under the influence of opium, seduce them? It is simply ridiculous.
13757. You do not think a statement of that kind has any truth in it? No. I do not believe opium could make anybody like that.
13758. But about the first part of my question—do you think there is any truth in the statement, or have you seen anything to warrant you in believing that the Chinese do entrap young girls to their places for improper purposes? I do not believe it. Of course I have had only one to deal with. And I have not much time for running about and talking to people, as I have enough to do in my home. All the neighbours about will tell you that. My man does not like me to go out much, or go to the hotel, or anything like that.
13759. Does your present husband have any of his countrymen come to visit him? No; no other Chinamen come there.
13760. Do you smoke opium? I have smoked it. But I was very sick and had to knock it off. Now and then I may have a couple of pipes unbeknown to him. He does not like opium-smoking, and never uses it.
13761. You are not a regular smoker? No. You can see that by my appearance.
13762. How did you first become an opium-smoker, seeing that the man you are living with never uses it? I got into company with those who smoke. I have had a few pipes now and then with some of his friends. I will own that I have had the habit, but I have knocked it off for about five months now.
13763. Is it not a difficult matter to break yourself of the habit? I do not know. I think it is easy enough to knock it off. Some persons might be too lazy to try.
13764. If you have determination sufficient you can give up anything? Certainly you can—I know I can.
13765. What is the particular fascination about the opium that induces you to use it even now that you have given it up, as you say? Well, sometimes when I go and see a friend I may have a pipe.
13766. Do they ask you the same as a person whom you go to visit would ask you to have a cup of tea? Yes; you see I have been with this man a long time, and understand their language, and as I live with him I have to follow the Chinese fashion as well.
13767. You are quite satisfied with your treatment in every respect? Yes; I find the man I am living with is far kinder to me than my European husband was. If I were divorced to-morrow I would get married to him if I could.
13768. And the only thing that prevents your being married to this man is your husband being alive? Yes.
13769. Is your husband now living with somebody else? No; he is in trouble (gaol). I was very young when I got married. I had no sense, and did not know what he was.
13770. Your married life has not been a very happy one? No, it has not.
13771. Mr. McKillop.] Was your husband in a respectable position when you married him? He is a dentist by trade, but he will not keep to it.
13772. Mr. Abigail.] I suppose you have a pretty general knowledge of a number of these girls who are married to Chinamen? I know a few of them; but I make it a rule not to mix up with them.
13773. From your knowledge of them, should you say that the treatment they receive is similar to what you receive from the man you are living with? Oh, yes; some of them.
13774. Have you ever heard of Chinamen being cruel or unkind to their women? No. If so it is the girls' own fault.
13775. Their general tendency is to be kind to women? Yes; that is my experience. Of course I have only had dealings with one.
13776. How did you come to attach yourself to the man you are at present living with? When I left my husband I went up country for a while, and when I came back again I met him, and have been with him ever since.

13777. What business does he follow? When he came down from the country he had a garden at Cooma, and he has shares in that garden yet.

13778. You are not stinted in money for any of your requirements? No; I can have everything I want for the house, and so on.

13779. Where did you first meet him? In Wexford-street.

13780. Were you living there? No. I was living in Belmore-street, but I used to pass up Wexford-street.

13781. You met him in passing up and down the street, and an acquaintance sprang up between you in that way. When you left your husband what means of living had you? I went home to my people for a while after he got into trouble.

13782. Mr. McKillop.] How long have you been with the man you are at present living with? I have been with him three years on the 25th of this month.

13783. Were you any time on the streets? Not much time, and not to say exactly on the streets. I had no occasion to do that.

13784. Have you any children? I had one.

13785. Used your husband to ill-treat you? Certainly he did, when he was out of gaol.

13786. He beat you? Yes.

13787. Did you have any children by him? Yes; I had one, but it is dead.

13788. Mr. Abigail.] Have you ever heard of Chinamen decoying virtuous young girls into their places for the purpose of betraying them? No; I have not. They are too frightened to do anything like that. If they think a girl is too young they would not allow her on the premises.

13789. You think that in the majority, if not all of the cases, where girls are found with Chinamen, they have been betrayed before the Chinese got acquaintance with them? Yes; they are generally on the streets before they go with the Chinese. It is very seldom you see a respectable girl go with the Chinese—not to say a virtuous girl. It is ridiculous talking like that.

13790. Mr. McKillop.] You do not think they have been bribed by jewellery or presents of money, and enticed in that way to the Chinese quarters? I do not think so—I never heard of a case of that kind.

13791. Mr. Quong Tart.] Your house is about the third door from the hotel in Wexford-street, is it not? Yes.

13792. I have seen your house; it is very clean and creditable to you. You say the man you married went to gaol—how long ago is that? He was sentenced to seven years' imprisonment, and he had done four years last November.

13793. How old were you when you were first married? I was not quite 16 years of age.

13794. What age was your husband? He was about 19.

13795. And you say you have never known any respectable young girls to be decoyed from their homes by the Chinese for immoral purposes? No; I never did.

13796. You were not decoyed? No; I went of my own free will. The Chinese have been better to me than my own husband. Even if my own people were opposed to it I would go against them, and stop with them.

13797. Do your own people know you are living with this man? Some of them do, and some do not.

13798. Mr. Hawthorne.] Are you a native of Sydney? Yes.

13799. How long is it since you took up with the Chinese in the first instance? Three years.

13800. That was twelve months after your husband became imprisoned? Yes. I thought it was better to have one man than to be knocking about the streets with everybody.

13801. You would have been compelled to take to the streets? What else was I to do?—his people would not look after me.

13802. You were left penniless when your husband became imprisoned, and you had to choose between prostitution and living with Chinamen? Yes.

13803. You found that this man you are living with treated you on the whole in a kindly manner? Yes.

13804. Supposing your husband were released to-morrow, and he made offers to take you back and provide for you, would you go with him? No; I would not chance him any more. When I first married him he used to stop out till 3 and 4 o'clock in the morning, so you may judge he was up to no good. Everything I had was put in the pawn, and if I said anything I was beaten for saying it.

13805. While he was out of gaol did he make any provision for you at all? No. I never knew him to work for money.

13806. Are there many other girls living as you are about Wexford-street? I do not know of any more in Wexford-street; there may be up the lane. But I have no associations with these women.

13807. Is it your opinion, or within your experience, that women who take up with Chinese, also indulge in prostitution? I cannot speak for them. I am never out with them. I know what I do myself. Some of the girls are very deep; they will not let you know their business.

13808. You, at any rate, are faithful to the man you are living with? I can solemnly swear that. Indeed I have not much chance of being otherwise. If I was to do anything wrong there are plenty of his Chinese cousins who would carry it to him.

13809. The members of your husband's clan would consider it their duty to inform him of it? Yes.

13810. Mr. Quong Tart.] Do any of the Chinese informers live in Wexford-street? I do not know.

13811. I mean the Chinamen who inform on their countrymen for sly-grog selling, and anything like that—give information to the police;—did you never hear your husband talk of them? No; he never tells me anything like that. He does not gamble.

13812. Do you know Robert Lee Kum and Long Pen? I have heard of Long Pen. He is married to a European.

1381. Do you know much about these informers? No.

13814. Do you remember a row that occurred, just behind your place, sometime ago, in which a man was struck with an iron bar? I do remember having heard of it—that's all.

13815. Have you lived in Wexford-street ever since you have been with your husband—the man you are living with? No; I lived in Surry Hills for some time.

[The witness withdrew.]

Adelaide ——— called and examined:—

- Adelaide
10 Dec., 1891.
13816. Mr. Abigail.] Are you a married woman? No.
13817. What is your age? Twenty-six years
13818. Are you living with a Chinaman? Yes; in Exeter-place.
13819. What kind of treatment do you receive from the man you are living with? I could not wish for better treatment.
13820. You have a comfortable home, and are supplied with money for all your requirements? Yes.
13821. Has he ever ill-treated you in any way whatever? He has not. I have been living with the one man this seven years. I have lived with him since I came from Adelaide, where I went after I left Way Kee's son, Ah Bow. His father wanted him to marry a Chinese woman, and sent him home for that purpose.
13822. Were you first betrayed by a Chinese or a European? By a European.
13823. It has been stated that it is the custom of the Chinese to entrap young girls into their place for the purpose of betraying them;—what have you to say to that? I do not believe it. They run away with a foolish idea who say that. I was young when I went amongst them, and I know I was not betrayed by them.
13824. The girls that associate with the Chinese, I suppose, as a matter of fact have, generally speaking, fallen before they could go to them? Certainly they are. I have never seen any young girls enticed to stop with a Chinaman unless they wanted to do so; and I think I have been enough amongst them to know.
13825. Mr. McKillop.] Do you think virtuous girls have been brought by other girls of bad character to the Chinese quarters? Certainly; I admit that.
13826. Well, have you ever heard of respectable girls being put under the influence of opium, when they have gone to such places, for improper purposes? No.
13827. Have you known them to be asked to drink spirits? No; I never have.
13828. You are living with one Chinaman? Yes.
13829. Are you faithful to him? Yes.
13830. Do you smoke opium? No; I did so at one time, but have not for four years. It did not agree with me. The day you came into my house and saw me making it I was making it for Tong Way.
13831. Was he not capable of preparing it for himself? No, he cannot make it.
13832. Have you attained particular facility in making it, so that you can make it exceptionally nice? I do not know, I'm sure.
13833. Where did you learn to smoke opium? In Queen-street, Lower George-street, with Way Kee's son, Ah Bow.
13834. Then you went to Adelaide, and continued smoking there? Yes; I was very ill for nine months out of the twelve when I was there. I tried not to smoke then; but the doctor said if I smoked a few pipes it would be better for me, so I continued; but when I returned to Sydney I knocked it off.
13835. If you smoke opium continuously does it not destroy the vitality and energy, and make you feel altogether unfit for any ordinary duties? It does to a certain extent.
13836. Does smoking opium render you unconscious, so that you would be absolutely at the mercy of anybody who would be in the room with you? No, it does not.
13837. Mr. McKillop.] You have your senses about you the whole of the time? Yes.
13838. It has not the same effect as drink? No.
13839. Mr. Quong Tart.] Regarding this charge against the Chinese of enticing young persons to their places for improper purposes, can you say whether any of these have been virtuous, pure girls? I cannot say, I am sure. How could I tell? They might be respectable-looking girls, but I could not tell you whether they were virtuous or not. At the same time I should say they were not virtuous.
13840. Mr. McKillop.] Do you drink at all? Yes, I drink occasionally.
13841. Which has the greater effect on you, drink or opium? Drink, certainly.
13842. After you were seduced did you go on the streets? No; I worked in several boot factories. I worked for Mr. Abigail six months, and for Mr. Jackson five years—I served my time there—and I worked for Mr. Hunter twelve months, and Mr. M'Murtrie two years.
13843. How did you pick up with Way Kee's son? I was brought to him.
13844. Enticed by other girls? Yes. A girl I knew asked me to go down to Lower George-street with her, and I went. Way Kee's son took a fancy to me, and I to him. I was to be married to him when he deserted me; his father did not care about English women, and, through his influence, he left for China. He had to go, because, if he had not done so, his father would not have left him any money.
13845. Do you think he would take up with you again? Certainly he would.
13846. And you would be willing to live with him? Yes. He is not like a Chinaman.
13847. You would sooner have him than the man you have at present? If I could get him, I would sooner be with him; but, as I cannot, I must do without.
13848. Does the man you are living with treat you well? Yes; I could not wish for better treatment. I have been living in that house four years.
13849. Is the house kept by your husband or that elderly woman we saw there? She only comes in to work for me.
13850. Do a large number of Chinese frequent your place? No; the only one is that old man you saw lying on the bed that day. He is a friend of my man's.
13851. And you do not allow any street-walkers to enter your house for immoral purposes? No.
13852. Did you have any children by Way Kee's son? No.
13853. Mr. Quong Tart.] Way Kee disapproved of his son opium-smoking, did he not? Yes.
13854. And was angry with him for gambling? Yes, that particularly. It was the gambling he cried out about most.
13855. Way Kee is a pretty wealthy man, is he not? Yes, I think he is rich.
13856. Did he ever give you any money? No.
13857. Did you ever apply to him? No. When the boy went home to China he gave me £7; and the watch and chain which he gave me (it cost £22), which I had pledged for £5, he took out of pawn.
13858. You say this man you have now keeps you fairly well? Yes; I get as much as £2 or £2 10s. a week from him. He comes into town three times a week.

13859. You say you were enticed by another young woman to the Chinese quarter;—how was that? This young girl I speak of was with him. I was at work in Hunter's at that time. Going home one day from work this girl says to me, "Come down to Lower George-street," and I went down with her. It was Ah Bow she went to see; but he took a fancy to me, and left her. Adelaide
13860. Mr. Hawthorne.] You have had a good deal of experience in different boot factories about Sydney; you have also had a good deal of experience in connection with the Chinese quarters, and apparently you have been on the streets for a short time? Not running about the streets. In times gone by I was to a certain extent in the direction of Lower George-street. 10 Dec., 1891.
13861. Although not in a very public manner, you have nevertheless been a prostitute, have you not? I have done it certainly in a quiet way.
13862. Now, do you think there is much prostitution carried on in consequence or as a result of the inter-mixing of the sexes in these factories? I do not think there is.
13863. Was it in consequence of your mixing freely with the males in the different factories in which you were engaged that caused your downfall in the first instance? No.
13864. You never met with any special temptations there? No. I kept company with a young man while I was in Jackson's factory.
13865. Was the young man working in the factory too? No.
13866. Can you call to mind an instance where a young girl in one of these factories has been seduced through the intermixing of the sexes? No. I do not believe that anything of the kind has happened in any factory. We always had a forewoman or foreman over us.
13867. Have you met with any girls lately—within the last twelve months—who have been induced to cohabit with the Chinese in your particular part of the city? I know of several who do. There is that young woman who was here before I came in.
13868. Is it the custom for the Chinese gardeners to keep women in the town? Of course it is. They could not take them on to the garden to live with other men.
13869. So that, although we remark an absence of women among the Chinese gardeners at Botany and Alexandria, we are not to infer from that that these men do not have their women, but they keep them in houses about the city or in some portion of the suburbs? Yes. And there are plenty of women who have English husbands and yet go with the Chinamen.
13870. Do you mean that you know of instances of women who have European husbands in the city lending themselves to the Chinese vegetable gardeners or hawkers who come into the city? Certainly I have. Only yesterday I saw one. Her husband gave her a black-eye, and she went away after that to a Chinaman.
13871. To live with him permanently? No, only for a few hours, and she afterwards went back to her home.
13872. And you say there are lots of cases occurring like that in the city? Yes; I know of several instances.
13873. Are there any houses about your district to which the Chinese resort regularly to cohabit with women? There are plenty such houses down Lower George-street, I know. There is _____ place in Cambridge-street. She is married to an Englishman, but lives with a Chinaman.
13874. Do you have Chinese come to visit your house? No; I live with the one man.
13875. With the exception of this man you are living with, the only Chinaman you have lived with was Way Kee's son, and you have lived with him as his mistress? _____
13876. Would Way Kee know you now if you went into his store? I do not think he would know me at all.
13877. Mr. McKillop.] Did the young man you kept company with in the first instance offer or promise to marry you previous to seducing you? Yes; my mother did not approve of it. She said he was no match for me.
13878. Mr. Hawthorne.] Is your mother alive? Yes.
13879. Mr. McKillop.] Then the young man would have married you? Yes; it was not his fault.
13880. You have said that you have known of several instances of the wives of Europeans going to the Chinese to have sexual intercourse;—how do you know that they were married? Of course I know.
13881. Do you personally know them? I only know one girl.
13882. But you said you knew several? So there are. Look at _____ 13883. But you only know one case such as you have mentioned—personally? That's all.
13884. Mr. Hawthorne.] I suppose the women you have spoken about as not being satisfied with being married to Europeans, but cohabit also with the Chinese, are generally of the lower order, and much given to drink? I have not seen them.
13885. Would you take them to be respectable? They are of the same class of people as myself.
13886. Mr. Abigail.] When these women you speak of go to the Chinese like that, is it not the result of cruelty on the part of their husbands, generally speaking? Yes.
- [The witness withdrew.]

Ellen _____ called and examined:—

13887. President.] Where do you live? In Foster-street; but I am going up country in a few days. Ellen 13888. With whom have you been living? With a Chinaman. 10 Dec., 1891.
13889. How long have you been living with him? Close on five years.
13890. With the one Chinaman? Yes.
13891. Is he an opium-smoker? You cannot call him an opium-smoker. He may have a pipe now and then.
13892. Do you smoke? I do.
13893. Constantly? Yes.
13894. When did you first commence to smoke opium? About three years ago I should say.
13895. How came you to become familiar with the Chinese? I was brought to them by another young woman.
13896. Had you been on the town before? Yes.
13897. I suppose you were seduced by a European? Yes. 13898.

- Ellen
10 Dec., 1891.
13898. How long were you on the town before you went with the Chinese? About two years.
13899. And have you been constantly with the Chinese since then? Yes.
13900. With one man? Yes.
13901. Have you been constant, faithful to him? Yes.
13902. As a matter of fact you do not lead the life of a prostitute now? No.
13903. Then you are practically the wife of this Chinaman? Sometimes when I go up country I am with another man. Not with several, you know—with one in particular.
13904. Are the Chinese kind to the women living with them? Yes; they were always kind to me.
13905. How many people live in the house in which you reside? I and another young woman, and the two Chinamen.
13906. Does your female friend take white men there at all? No.
13907. Do the Chinese with whom you are living allow you to have intercourse with other men? No.
13908. They object to it? Yes.
13909. Do they entrust you with the house-keeping? Yes.
13910. As a matter of fact you perform the ordinary duties of a wife, except that you are not married? Yes.
13911. Have you had any children? No.
13912. Do the police interfere with you at all down there? No. They may look in now and again, but very seldom.
13913. Is your house a place of accommodation for other women to bring men there? No women come to my place at all. I have been out of Sydney for nine months.
13914. And you are going up country now? Yes; I often go up for a trip. I have relations in the country.
13915. Mr. Abigail.] How long have you been an opium-smoker? Nearly three years.
13916. Did you acquire the habit while living with the man you have now? Yes.
13917. What induced you to take up opium-smoking? That I cannot say. I saw others do it, and I followed their example I suppose.
13918. Had the form of life anything to do with it, the same as other people sometimes take to drink? No; it was not that at all—it was my own foolishness.
13919. You do not drink? No.
13920. Does opium-smoking have the same effect as drink, do you know? No; it has no effect. The only thing is when my time comes to take it I feel I must have it.
13921. When you smoke opium does it render you unconscious? No. Before your time comes for a smoke sometimes you are sick, and after you smoke you are all right again. It makes me tired, and gives me cramps now and again.
13922. Why not give it up now? I cannot. It is part of myself to smoke it.
13923. Have you ever heard of any virtuous girl being taken away by the Chinese, and betrayed? No.
13924. Your experience is that the treatment of women by the Chinese is very kind? Yes. I kept company with a European for four years, and he was never as kind to me as the Chinamen. He led me to what I am, and then went away and got married.
13925. He betrayed you? Yes.
13926. Does the Chinaman you are living with drink? No.
13927. Does he ever ill-treat you or swear at you? No; nothing like that.
13928. Are you going away from Sydney with any other man? No.
13929. Are you going for a trip? Yes.
13930. And when you come back again will you return to the same man? Yes.
13931. You are not going away for any immoral purpose? No.
13932. Do you preserve the ash of your opium? Yes.
13933. What do you do with it? I sell it.
13934. For what purpose? I hear they cook it again, and make second opium of it, to sell.
13935. What do you get for it? It depends upon the price of the opium; sometimes I get £1 per lb. for it, and sometimes only 15s.
13936. How long would it take you to save a pound of the ash? If only one pipe is going I might get it in a fortnight; if two pipes are going of course I would get it in half the time.
13937. How much opium would it take to produce that pound of ash? I cannot tell you.
13938. To get a pound in a fortnight; does that mean one pipe constantly going, and being used by different people? No; one who smokes a lot would produce a pound in a fortnight; it takes me nearly a month. I do not smoke so much.
13939. How do you buy your opium? I get 1s. worth at a time.
13940. How much do you get for a shilling—a teaspoonful? A little more than that—they sell it by Chinese weight.
13941. How much do you use in a day? Sometimes 2s., and sometimes 1s. 6d. worth.
13942. Do most of the European girls who go with Chinamen use opium? Yes; the most of them do, I think.
13943. Do those who use opium as you do take intoxicating drink? No; I have not seen two women who smoked opium drink as well. I used to drink terribly myself before I took to opium.
13944. Mr. Hawthorne.] When persons who drink take to opium do they knock off the drink immediately? I cannot say for all. I know I did.
13945. Have you smoked opium this morning? No.
13946. How many pipes do you have a day? I cannot tell you.
13947. Have you no fixed time for smoking? Yes; I generally smoke between 3 and 4 o'clock in the afternoon, and at night between 10 and 11 o'clock.
13948. Does that interfere with your sleeping power? Not at all.
13949. You take it just prior to going to bed? Yes.
13950. What part of the country did you live in previous to you coming to Sydney? I was in Tamworth. I have a sister there.
13951. Is she married? Yes.
13952. To a Chinaman? No; to a European.
13953. Are your people aware that you are living with a Chinaman here? No.
13954. Are your parents living? My mother is.

Ellen

10 Dec., 1891.

13955. Is your mother in Sydney? She is in Melbourne.
13956. Does she not make inquiries as to your course of life? She believes what I say to her.
13957. You deceive her? Yes.
13958. Have you ever been to Narrandera or Tingha? No. I have never been anywhere in the country but Maitland, Singleton, and Tamworth. I was only in Singleton for a day.
13959. There are a good few Chinese there and in Maitland? Yes.
13960. While at Maitland do you cohabit with a Chinaman? Yes.
13961. Is it customary for women who mix with the Chinese in Sydney to take these trips round to the Chinese camps in the country? I do not know that.
13962. You are starting from Sydney with the definite object of going to another Chinaman in the country? I was with him before, you know.
13963. Does the man you live with in Sydney know that you go to this other Chinaman in the country? No. He thinks I am going to Tamworth to my sister.
13964. Mr. Abigail.] About the effects of opium-smoking;—is it not a fact that it has a tendency to give you beautiful dreams, to send you off into a dreamy state, in which you are visited by strange fancies? No; it makes no difference to me, only that I have the habit of it, and cannot do without it.
13965. Could any man take advantage of you in that state without you being conscious of it? No one in the world could.
13966. Mr. Quong Tart.] There have been complaints made against the Chinese that they decoy young girls away from their homes and ruin them;—you have had a lot of experience among the Chinese in Sydney, and you say you do not know of anything of the kind having occurred? I have never seen anything like that since I have been with the Chinese. The only girl in Sydney I ever heard was seduced by a Chinaman was ——— 13967. How did you know of that case? Only from what she told me herself. It was before my time.
13968. Mr. McKillop.] What is the name of the man you are living with now? Wong Sin.
13969. Is he not called Willie Ah Sin? Yes; but his Chinese name is Wong Sin.
13970. What trade does he work at? He is a carpenter, and works at a furniture place at Pyrmont.
13971. What wages does he get? He gets 30s. a week, and he feeds there.
13972. Does he give you that 30s. for yourself? Yes.
13973. And you do not go on the streets to augment your weekly allowance? No, I do not.
13974. Has ——— gone up country? No.
13975. What is the man she is living with? A cook at Riverstone. He goes on Sunday and comes home again on Saturday night.
13976. How long has she lived with this man? To my knowledge, she has lived with him about two years and nine months.
13977. Is he in the habit of giving her the whole of his wages? He gets £2 2s. a week, and gives her 30s. £3 keep the lot of us.
13978. Is it not a fact that ——— did earn her living on the streets while her man was out of work? She might, but not since she has been with me.
13979. Does your man ever ill-use you at all? Once he did, and then I deserved it.
13980. What was it? It was a fit of temper on my part.
13981. Is he jealous of you? Yes.
13982. Do other Chinamen come to your place? Sometimes when he comes home. He only comes once a week, and stops from Saturday to Sunday night.
13983. You have had no children? No.
13984. Are you a native of Sydney? Yes.
13985. Do your parents reside in Sydney? My mother is in Sydney at present; but she generally resides in Melbourne.
13986. You were enticed by other girls to enter the Chinese quarters? No; I went of my own free will.
13987. But this girl you have spoken of was the first to put the idea into your head? Yes.
13988. What part of the town did you visit first? A part of Goulburn-street.
13989. Was it one of the places where gambling is carried on? No; it was a private house in Robertson's-lane.
13990. Was it a house where prostitutes generally used to visit? A few girls used to go there.
13991. A good deal of it is carried on in that lane still, is there not? I do not know. I never go there now.
13992. Are there any houses of ill-fame in your street? Not that I know of.
13993. Is not No. —, Foster-street, a house of prostitution? There is only a Chinaman living there. I have seen one or two girls going in; but I have never seen any harm done certainly.
13994. Do you know this Foster-street? I do.
13995. Do you know of any European women living with Chinamen there? I know one.
13996. Is she married to the Chinaman? I do not know; but she has been with him a long time.
13997. Does she keep to herself? Yes.
13998. You are sure nobody enters those buildings for the purpose of prostitution? I cannot say that. I am scarcely ever out myself.
13999. When do you leave for the country? I was going to-day, but coming here put me off. I may go to-morrow.
14000. Did the young man that seduced you promise you marriage previous to betraying you? He did. I kept company with him for four years. I went on the streets while I was with him.
14001. How old were you when you were first seduced by him? About 14, I think.
14002. Were you employed at any factory at the time? Yes; I was a boot machinist, working at M'Murtrie's.
14003. While you were in any of these factories did you see any immorality carried on between the young men and women there? No; where we worked the men were kept separate from the girls.
14004. Are you in the habit of visiting the country frequently? Yes. I only go to three places—Maitland, Singleton, and Tamworth.
14005. And you have a Chinese friend in each place? No; only in Maitland.
14006. What is he in business? He sells fancy goods and jewellery.

14007.

- Ellen
10 Dec., 1891.
14007. You are going to him now? Yes.
14008. Mr. Quong Tart.] How will you do for your smoke while you are travelling? It takes only four hours to go to Maitland, and I shall get there before it is time for me to have my smoke.
14009. I suppose sometimes you carry an opium pill? Yes; if I want it I take it; but I do not always want it. Sometimes I can do without it for a couple of hours after my time.
14010. Do you not think opium-smoking is a great evil? No; I do not think so. A woman that smokes opium has always got her senses about her, but a woman who drinks has not.
14011. Do you not find that it takes away all your energies, and makes you poor in health and thin? No; I have not altered in the least since I have smoked; in fact I am stouter.
14012. Yours is the first case of the kind I ever heard of? Well, I am, certainly.
- [The witness withdrew.]

Mr. George Merriman called and examined:—

- Mr.
G. Merriman.
10 Dec., 1891.
14013. President.] You are City Solicitor to the City Council of Sydney? Yes.
14015. Mr. Abigail.] I would like to ask Mr. Merriman whether you have ever had submitted to you the question of the Chinese covering in their yards and making extra rooms to their premises without first obtaining the permission of the City Architect? I do not think the question has been submitted to me; but I have spoken with Mr. M'Rae in reference to these things, and I was told yesterday that the Commission wanted to examine. The only way you can deal with them under the Improvement Act is to prosecute them under one of its sections for having these wooden structures on the ground, that they are a danger to the neighbourhood, owing to the risk from fire.
14016. Would not that apply to those houses where the Chinese put up all kinds of partitions, and convert the place into a veritable rabbit hatch. This is a positive danger to the neighbourhood generally, and from a sanitary point of view in particular, and we believe it is an infringement of the law? I do not think so. I went through it hurriedly yesterday with Mr. M'Rae, and therefore am speaking without having gone very fully into the matter; but I am of opinion that the Act gives the Council no control over the internal fittings of buildings. It refers specifically to "external walls," and so on. It is one of the worst drawn Acts I ever met with in my life; and its phraseology is ridiculous. But I would like to attend before the Commission again; and I will go very carefully through the Act, with Mr. M'Rae, in the meantime.
- [It was decided to defer the further examination of Mr. Merriman until Wednesday, the 16th December.]

FRIDAY, 11 DECEMBER, 1891.

Present:—

THE MAYOR OF SYDNEY (MR. ALDERMAN MANNING, J.P.), PRESIDENT.

FRANCIS ABIGAIL, Esq., J.P., VICE-PRESIDENT.

RAMSEY MCKILLOP, Esq., | QUONG TART, Esq.,
JOHN STUART HAWTHORNE, Esq.

Sun Sing Loong called and examined:—

- Sun
Sing Loong.
11 Dec., 1891.
14017. President.] Where do you reside? In Retreat-street, Waterloo.
14018. What business do you follow? I am a carpenter, and have a little shop there.
14019. How long have you been living in Waterloo? About five years. I have been ten years in Sydney altogether.
14020. Have you followed the occupation of a carpenter the whole of the time? Yes.
14021. What rent do you pay? I pay 2s. a week for a little place in a shed.
14022. Who do you pay your rent to? To a Chinaman named Ah Quong.
14023. How many people live in that house? Only two.
14024. Do you know who the property belongs to? They belong to a Chinaman named Sun On.
14025. Is there much gambling going on in the premises about Retreat-street? In the little places I have mentioned there is none, but further out there is.
14026. Do Europeans assemble there to gamble? No. Only Chinamen.
14027. Do they do much business out there in the game of pak-ah-pu? Yes; they sell pak-ah-pu tickets.
14028. The Europeans buy largely of these tickets, I suppose? They buy a few.
14029. Do you know if the lottery-banks are affiliated to the shops in Lower George-street? I do not know.
14030. What wages do you get from your employer? I am an employer myself. I engage one man.
14031. Where do you buy your timber? From Allen and Walker.
14032. Is it a fact that you buy old packing-cases, and so on, to use in connection with your manufactures? Yes; we use that for the interior parts of the furniture—to fill up with.
14033. Do you use the packing-case wood for the interior parts only? Yes; the exterior parts are always made of new timber—Kauri pine.
14034. What profits do you make in the year? The whole business done during the year represents a turn over of £100, including material.
14035. What do you get out of it? Sometimes we lose. We average about 10s. a week per man—that is, my man and myself.
14036. What particular class of furniture do you mostly make? Tables and kitchen safes.
14037. Where do you dispose of your furniture? Messrs. Harris and Ackman sell it for me.
14038. Are there many cabinet-makers in Waterloo? A good many.
14039. In Retreat-street? Yes.
14040. How many Chinamen are there living in that street altogether? About 100, or a little under.
- 14041.

Sun
Sing Loong.
11 Dec., 1891.

14041. Are the conditions of life healthy in that locality? I never saw much sickness there.
14042. Is not the condition of the premises about there very insanitary? Yes; it is bad.
- 14042½. And notwithstanding that, you and your countrymen enjoy good health there? Yes; we are pretty nearly all of the same health.
14043. Do they smoke much opium in that locality? Yes.
14044. Do any white women visit the houses of the Chinese? No. Formerly they used to, but they do not now.
14045. About how much a week does it cost you to live? About 8s.
14046. Mr. Abigail.] Does that include rent and provisions? Yes.
14047. What class of provisions do you have? Beef, fish, rice, and cabbage.
14048. How many meals a day do you have? Three meals a day.
14049. You say you use packing-cases in connection with your work—from whom do you obtain the packing-cases? An Englishman with a cart goes round to these places hawking them, and we buy from him.
14050. What do you pay for them? Two shillings and 2s. 6d. per case.
14051. What would a 2s.-case produce in the way of furniture? I cannot exactly say that, as I do not know what quantity I might have to use in any piece of furniture. It would be used to fit in with other articles. You could not make an article out of a packing-case.
14052. How many hours a day do you work? From 6 o'clock in the morning until dark.
14053. Do you take an hour for each meal? I take nearly an hour at my place.
14054. At what rate generally do you sell your furniture? All my stuff is sent to auction to bring what it will.
14055. Now, cannot you tell us how much profit you make on each week's labour, after deducting the 8s. for living? About £1 after paying everything.
14056. Have you any place in Sydney where you visit a woman? No.
14057. Has the shed you live in the water laid on to it? No; we have to carry the water.
14058. Are the closets attached to the sewer? No; they are earth-closets, a good distance from the house.
14059. Your work-room is kitchen, dining-room, and bed-room as well, I suppose? Yes; I live in the same place.
14060. About what are the dimensions of the place? About 20 ft. x 12 ft.
14061. How long have you been in this Colony? About thirteen years.
14062. Did you follow the trade of furniture-making in your own country? Yes.
14063. What did you earn there per week? I earned there about 9d. per day.
14064. Would you work the same hours then? Yes.
14065. Would you live in the same manner as you do here? No; not quite so bad as we do here. My provisions would be better in China.
14066. What would they consist of? Beef, pork, fresh fish, and rice.
14067. Could you buy all that for 9d. a day, and save money? I would get 9d. a day, and my master would provide the provisions.
14068. The 9d. a day would be clear profit? Yes.
14069. What would your wages be if you had to find yourself? An industrious man would make about 2s. a day; a lazy man would make perhaps 1s. 6d., or less.
14070. What would it cost you to live in the style you live in here? Twopence a day would keep me in China.
14071. Could you buy beef, pork, fish, and so on, for that? Yes; quite sufficient.
14072. Am I to understand that 2d. a day would find you in three meals a day as liberally as you live here, with meat and bread, and other requirements? Yes; it would be quite sufficient. But in China we only have two meals a day.
14073. Then 1d. will provide each meal. Do you get meat at each meal in China? Yes; 1d. a meal would be quite sufficient. At one meal we might have a little fish, and at another a little meat. But 2d. would be quite sufficient to provide all we want.
14074. Describe what you would have at a meal? Rice, meat, fish, and cabbage—no bread.
14075. And you drink tea, I suppose? Yes.
14076. Then, as a matter of fact, if what you say is true, you would be much better off in your own country than you are here? I do not see much difference. It is easier and quicker to make money in this country.
14077. Do you work on Sunday in China? Yes.
14078. Then if you were an industrious man in China you would be able to earn 14s. a week? Yes.
14079. And you could live for seven days, at 2d. a day, that would be 1s. 2d., which would give 12s. 10d. profit? Yes.
14080. And I suppose the value of 12s. 10d. in China would be four or five times as great as it is here? Yes.
14081. Then what induces your people to leave China, where you live under such favourable circumstances, to come here? Every working man in China does not earn as much as I have stated. He must be a good man to make that money. Some of them would not earn enough to keep themselves in food. The rate of wage I have mentioned is the highest obtained in China for skilled workmen.
14082. Do you gamble? I buy tickets in the lottery.
14083. Have you ever been successful—lucky? No, I never won.
14084. Do you smoke opium? No.
14085. Is there much opium-smoking out your way? Yes; a good many of them smoke opium.
14086. As a rule, what effect has opium upon those who indulge in it? They are very thin fellows.
14087. Does it injure their health? It is bad for them.
14088. If you wanted to engage a man to do a good day's work would you employ a man who smoked opium? No; I would not engage an opium-smoker.
14089. You believe it impairs their energies—destroys their manhood? It does. They are no good.
14090. Do you believe gambling is an injurious habit? Yes.
14091. I suppose you are saving up money to get back to your own country? Yes. I am trying to. I wish to get back.

Sun
Sing Loong.
11 Dec., 1891.

14092. What do you consider will be sufficient to take you back and enable you to live comfortably there? I would like to get £200.
14093. If you got back with that amount, would it be enough to enable you to start in business or live comfortably? It would be quite enough. I would buy rice-fields, and receive the rents from them.
14094. What value would £200 represent in Chinese money? One thousand dollars. With that £200 I would buy ten mows (fields) of rice, that is 30 acres, and that would give a fairly good income.
14095. Would you consider yourself independent then? I might do a little work.
14096. Mr. Quong Tart.] You are a carpenter by trade? Yes.
14097. How many years have you been in that line constantly? I have been two years working for myself, and before that I was working at the trade for a master.
14098. How much have you made now? I have saved very little money. I have spent it nearly all.
14099. But you must have saved money when you were employed by others, and had no business losses? Well, I sent a good bit of money home to my people.
14100. Have you gained or lost during the two years you have been working for yourself? I am just about in the same position as when I started.
14101. Complaints have been made about the Chinese cabinet-makers injuring the trade of the Europeans, and I want to know from you something about the extent of the Chinese production in this direction, and what they receive in return;—how many cabinet-makers are there where you live? Twelve.
14102. About how much in value could they produce in a week? About £30 worth of stuff.
14103. How much would you make out of that £30 worth of furniture in the way of profit? After deducting the cost of timber, nails, and everything, £14 would be the net return.
14104. Where do you buy the materials you use in the manufacture of these articles? We buy it from the Europeans.
14105. You pay away £16 in that way? Yes.
14106. Now, who buys the goods from you? All my goods are sold by auction, and are purchased by Europeans.
14107. Do any Europeans come to your place to order goods? No.
14108. How much do you make clear after paying for your rent and grub, &c.? About 18s. is what I get clear. Of course if the goods do not fetch a good price we lose.
14109. Why did you not continue to work for a master instead of starting for yourself? I made a mistake when I started for myself.
14111. What do you use the old cases for? For the inside of chests of drawers, and so forth.
14112. Would that be sufficiently good for the very best work? No; it is not so good as the other timber. It is used for filling up in parts of furniture that are not seen.
14113. Do you know if other Chinese cabinet-makers work on the same lines as yourself, or is yours the only place where they work like that? They all work in that way in Waterloo.
14114. What kind of work do the Sydney firms do? The Sydney firms all do good work.
14115. Are there not some at Botany? There is only one at Botany. He employs ten men at the same kind of work.
14116. Where were you employed before you commenced to work for yourself? I worked for Ah Toy.
14117. What did Ah Toy give you a week? He gave me 22 shillings a week and my keep.
14118. Then you got more as a journeyman than you do working for yourself. Is that because the Sydney firms get a better price for their furniture? Yes; they make a better class of goods.
14119. You thought that you could, being an industrious man, make more by working for yourself? Yes; I thought by our industry I should be able to make more.
14120. Now, how much would one penny of English money represent in Chinese cash? One English penny is equal to twenty Chinese cash.
14121. In China a man has to serve so many years' apprenticeship before he becomes a competent tradesman, does he not? Yes; three years.
14122. What did you serve your time to? Cabinet-making.
14123. I suppose the 14s. a week which you say a journeyman could earn in China would be the wage of a tip-top man? Yes; a first-class man would earn that.
14124. And a good man like that would not find any difficulty in getting a living in China? No.
14125. Is it not a fact that the employers will have nothing to do with tradesmen who are opium-smokers? They will not employ opium-smokers.
14126. With regard to this £200 worth of rice-land that you would purchase if you had the means, what would be the rent you would receive for it? The rice crops are twice a year; I cannot exactly say what the £200 would return me.
14127. Go by percentage? One division of land would give ten very large baskets of rice, each weighing about 60 lb., and the occupiers of the land would give me one of those baskets as rental.
14128. That would be 10 per cent.? Yes.
14129. How many pak-ah-pu banks are there in Waterloo? Two lottery-banks.
14130. Is it not very difficult indeed to get a certain mark in pak-ah-pu? It is very hard to win anything.
14131. In China they would describe it as being as difficult as "getting the moon under the water"? Yes.
14132. Do you think gambling is a demoralising habit? It is bad—very bad.
14133. It is bad for the poor Chinese workers, this fan-tan and pak-ah-pu? Yes; they lose their money at that.
14134. Would you like to see the gambling stopped? Yes; I would like to see gambling and opium-smoking done away with.
14136. And how would you do with the lotteries? I think the best way would be to get hold of those who had shares in the lottery.

14137. Would it be a good thing to punish the ticket seller? The best way, in my opinion, would be to get hold of those interested when they opened the banks to call out the numbers. They would soon be frightened to proceed.

14138. How many gamblers are there living in the place where you are? There are over twenty where I live—that is, living on the game.

14139. Do you know any Chinese informers? There is one out there whom the Chinese talk a good deal about; his name is Lee Kum. He lives on them out there.

14140. How many gambling-tables are there out there? There are seven.

14141. Do you know how many Chinese cabinet-makers there are in Sydney? I cannot say.

14142. Do you think the Chinese cabinet-makers earn much money in the city and suburbs at the present time? Business is very bad at the present time.

14143. Why? Because prices have become very low. The firms make up quantities of goods, and then cannot sell them.

14144. Do you buy the clothes that you wear in this country? Yes; all our clothing is bought here.

14145. Do you bring from China any of the material used in your trade? None of the timber we use comes from China. Everything in connection with the business is bought here.

14146. And the tools you work with—where do you buy those? All tools are bought here at the iron-mongers.

14147. Do they not use a Chinese saw sometimes? A very little comes from China—perhaps a little saw, or an occasional tomahawk.

14148. How is it that the Chinese-made goods are cheaper than the English make;—what is the difference between the two articles? The difference can easily be seen. The difference arises from the Englishmen's wages being higher, and because they are slower workmen.

14149. But what kind of work do they turn out;—that is the thing? The Englishman takes more care over the work, and the Chinese make a quick job; and the Englishman's work is more lasting, because the wood is better shrunk.

14150. You say the Chinese are quicker;—is the difference because in the case of equally good workmen belonging to both nations the Chinese will not take so much pains over the work? If the timber is well seasoned my work will be equally as good as an Englishman's.

14151. Mr. Abigail.] Then the difference is in the timber and not in the work? Yes; that is where it arises.

14152. Mr. Quong Tart.] Is this table made by Chinese or Europeans? It is a European-made table.

14153. Mr. Hawthorne.] How can you tell it is of European manufacture? Looking it all over I can tell. The "turning" of the legs is European turning.

14154. Is it not a fact that some of your countrymen in Goulburn-street have stacks of timber drying for months? Yes.

14155. Do you think the Chinese cabinet-makers about Goulburn-street in a larger way of business make up better work than you do? Yes; goods that are ordered.

14156. Could you tell the difference between some of the ordered goods made by first-class Chinese cabinet-makers and European work? Yes.

14157. How is it that the Chinese do not arrive at the same perfection as cabinet-makers as the Europeans? Because they want to get things done quickly, and are always in a hurry.

14158. Do not the Chinese use nails where the Europeans use screws? Yes.

14159. Where did you learn your trade? In China; I served an apprenticeship of three years.

14160. Is that the usual time that youths in China serve to learn the cabinet-making? Yes.

14161. Are they supposed to be journeymen at the end of three years? Yes.

14162. Do they ever take apprentices here from your countrymen, and bind them the same as they do in China for three years to learn the business? No; they take them for few months and set them to rough work when they first come in.

14163. Is it not a fact that the planes which the Chinese use are made in China? No; they are bought here.

14164. Are not the Chinese planes very different from the Europeans? No; there is not much difference.

14165. When you want any tools that are peculiar to the Chinese race do you write home for them, or indent them through the Chinese houses here? If we want an article like that we get one of the Chinese stores to write home for it.

14166. Have you got a wife in Sydney? No; in China.

14167. Are you in the habit of going into houses of ill-fame in Wexford-street or elsewhere? No.

14168. Do women go from Sydney to Waterloo, seeking custom among the gardeners and cabinet-makers there? No. There might be a few in Botany, but not where I live.

14169. Do you pick a woman off the street, or go to one of their houses? I go to Wexford-street.

14170. Are there many houses of ill-fame kept by Europeans there for the use of the Chinese? There are several; but I do not know how many.

14171. In the event of Chinamen getting venereal disease, as they frequently do, where do they go for treatment? They go principally to a Chinese chemist, or in some cases to an English doctor.

14172. Is it a common thing to find your countrymen afflicted with venereal disease? I cannot say how many there are, but that some have it while they are working at their trade.

14173. Have you known many cases of Chinese vegetable-hawkers suffering from this disease? They will not tell you. But there are some I know to have the first stages of it.

14174. Mr. McKillop.] What part of China do you come from? Canton. I am of the You Yup community.

14175. Are there many of your clan in Sydney? Yes, there are over 1,000 of them.

14176. Do you know of the existence of any Chinese secret societies? I only know of one society called the Hing Fook Tong, the object of which is to take old men home to China, and take their bones home.

14177. Has it no other object? No.

14178. Do you not know of any secret society that has for its object the raising of funds for the protection of those who may be proceeded against by the police? No.

14179. Are you in any way connected with those gambling-houses in Retreat-street? No.

14180.

11 Dec., 1891.

14180. Do you know that there is a certain percentage of the winnings of these gambling-houses placed to a fund for the purpose of defending Chinamen that are prosecuted by the police for gambling? I have heard of it; but I cannot say whether it is true or not.
14181. Do you know of any cases where young boys have been tampered with by Chinese, in a criminal manner? I never saw anything like it, but I have heard something about it.
14182. In your quarter? I have heard Chinamen out there talk about it. But whether any such a thing occurred I do not know.
14183. Do you know of any young girls of 12 or 13 years of age visiting the Chinese quarters in your locality? No; I never saw any girls there, or women either.
14184. Is it not a fact that parents in Alexandria send some of their children to the Chinese gardens to pick vegetables? I have seen girls at the gardens, but what their object has been I cannot say.
14185. Do the men in your locality visit the various places in Lower George-street, Goulburn-street, and Wexford-street on Sundays, for the purpose of gambling and smoking opium? Yes.
14186. Do you smoke opium? No. I have smoked a little in times past, but I never smoke opium now.
14187. How many opium-dens are there in your street? There are four known places.
[The witness withdrew.]

SATURDAY, 12 DECEMBER, 1891.

Present:—

FRANCIS ABIGAIL, Esq., J.P., VICE-PRESIDENT, IN THE CHAIR.

RAMSEY McKILLOP, Esq., | QUONG TART, Esq.,
JOHN STUART HAWTHORNE, Esq.

Lay Jong called and examined through the interpreter:—

Lay Jong.
12 Dec., 1891.

14188. Mr. Abigail.] Where do you live? In Elizabeth-street.
14189. What business do you follow? I keep a furniture shop.
14190. How many men do you employ? Twenty-five.
14191. Do you find them in food? Yes.
14192. What wages do you pay in addition to the food that you give them? Some get 30s. a week and some 35s.
14193. Is 30s. the lowest? £1 is the lowest, and 35s. is the highest.
14194. What rate of wages would the same class of men receive in China? About 15s. a month and their food.
14195. That would be about 3s. 9d. a week? Yes; but that is the lowest wage that would be paid in China.
14196. What would be the highest? A good man would get 30s. a month and his food.
14197. So that the rate of wages in China would be from 3s. 9d. to 7s. 6d. a week in addition to food? Yes.
14198. What hours do your men work here? From half-past 5 in the morning to half-past 6 at night, with one hour for each meal.
14199. And how many meals a day do they get? Three.
14200. But do they take their tea before they knock off at half-past 6, or after? After they have finished their work for the day.
14201. So that, as a matter of fact, between half-past 5 in the morning and half-past 6 at night they have two meal times? Yes.
14202. Now what description of food do they get? Pork, beef, salt fish, rice, and cabbage.
14203. And each man is allowed to have as much as he thinks fit to take? Yes.
14204. Now is that sort of living equal to or superior than the same class of men would get in China? It is about the same.
14205. And are the hours of work about the same? Yes.
14206. Do they receive three meals a day in China when they are working? Yes.
14207. What would it cost for a man to live in China as you have described your men living here? About 3d. a day.
14208. You say that it would cost 3d. a day for a man to live in China; about how much would it cost a man to live in the same style here? Between 6s. and 7s. a week on an average.
14209. So that a man can live on a fourth of the amount in China that it takes for him to live here? Yes.
14210. And he earns here more than four times as much as he would earn in China? Yes.
14211. What is the description of work that they do at your place? It is all high-class furniture.
14212. Do you use any old packing cases? No.
14213. All new timber? Yes.
14214. And from whom do you obtain your timber? From John Bull & Co. principally.
14215. And to whom do you sell the finished articles? To Farmer & Co. and Hoffnung & Co.
14216. Do you send any into auction? No.
14217. What amount of capital have you embarked in the business? About £500.
14218. And what is your turnover? A little over £60 a week.
14219. So that you turn your capital over twice in the course of a year? Yes.
14220. Is it a profitable business? I do not make much money.
14221. And is that the result of keen competition with your own countrymen? Yes.
14222. There is a large number of Chinese cabinet-makers in the city at the present time? Yes.
14223. And they cut against one another in competing for the market, and in that way reduce the prices? Those at Waterloo and Alexandria are spoiling our trade.
14224. Do you know how many Chinese furniture factories there are about the city? Large and small, including those places at Alexandria, there are about forty or fifty.
14225. And about how many men are there employed in them? There is an average of thirteen persons in each place, or something like 500 altogether.
14226. Do you think that the general condition of these 500 is much superior to what their condition would be if they had remained in China? My opinion is that they are better off here.

14227. As a rule, are the Chinese furniture-makers a steady, saving class of men? Yes, they are industrious men. Lay Jong.
14228. Do they gamble much? Yes, they do gamble. 12 Dec., 1891.
14229. Is not gambling a national pastime in China? Yes, it is, more or less.
14230. Are they very strict in your country in the means they take of suppressing it? Yes.
14231. And yet it is carried on? Yes.
14232. Is it a customary thing for the gamblers there to make presents to the people charged with the administration of the law, with the object of being allowed to carry it on? I cannot say myself. I have been out here so long.
14233. Have you ever heard of the police in this part of the world being bribed? No.
14234. Do you gamble? No.
14235. Do you smoke opium? No.
14236. Do you believe both gambling and opium-smoking to be bad? They are no good.
14237. Are you married? I was married in China, and my wife is there.
14238. Are you not living with a woman here, or, at all events, keeping one? No.
14239. Have you ever heard of the Chinese here entrapping young girls into their places for the purpose of seducing them? No.
14240. What form of religion do you adhere to? I am a follower of Confucius, though sometimes I go to hear Mr. Soo Hoo Ten preach in Pitt-street.
14241. Do you know any means that would enable the Government to suppress fan-tan and pak-ah-pu, and also opium-smoking? I should like to see them suppressed, but I do not know what would be the best means of doing so.
14242. You said something about the Waterloo cabinet-makers doing more harm to the furniture trade than anybody else;—would you kindly explain what you mean? The Waterloo cabinet-makers are not legitimate traders. They buy up all kinds of old timber, use up old packing cases, and so on, and run the furniture up quickly and roughly, making it look decent only on the outside. Then they send it to auction, and it is bought by the dealers cheap.
14243. And, I suppose, that when it is taken home it dries and cracks? Yes; it breaks open.
14244. Do you ever have any complaints from Farmer & Co. and others about the furniture you make? No; I have been serving Farmer & Co. for the past twelve years.
14245. What accommodation have you in your place;—how many rooms? There are eight rooms. At my own expense I put a couple of rooms on the roof.
14246. And how many of these rooms are occupied as sleeping apartments by these twenty-five men? Some of them go home to sleep, but in my large rooms four sleep in a room, and in the others three.
14247. Is the sanitary conditions of the place good, or have you had any complaints from the inspector of nuisances? No; they have always said that my place was very clean. My landlord is the Honorable John Lucas, M.L.C., and in consequence of the improvements that I have made I pay £2 2s. a week rent.
14248. Have you a yard? Yes.
14249. And is it enclosed? Yes; it is covered over for the men to work in.
14250. And is the water-closet enclosed in the yard? It is at the far end of the yard.
14251. It is not near to the cooking arrangements? No.
14252. What is the number of your place? 429, Elizabeth-street.
14253. And no women ever visit that place? No; excepting one woman, who comes to take away washing.
14254. But there are no women in the habit of visiting your place for immoral purposes? No.
14255. Do you know the effect of opium-smoking upon the persons who smoke? The habitual opium-smoker has no flesh; it is all dried up.
14256. Do you think it is possible for opium to be administered to a girl, so that she would lose her consciousness and be unaware of anything that was done to her whilst she was under the influence of the drug? I never heard that it was so.
14257. Are you living in the hope of going back to China? Yes.
14258. About how much money would be sufficient to enable you to return and live comfortably there for the rest of your life? About £300 or £400 would be enough.
14259. Have you any partners? There are five of us—all brothers—in the concern, and I am the eldest.
14260. Have you been employers all the time that you have been here? I worked three years for wages, and the balance of the time I have been an employer.
14261. And does the same apply to your brothers? They have been with me ever since they came out.
14262. Have they wives in China? Yes.
14263. And do they equally abstain from any contact with European women here? I cannot say.
14264. Do you remit any money to your wives? Yes.
14265. How much? Each of us send £5 a year.
14266. Are you connected with any other business or vegetable garden? Formerly I had a vegetable garden, but I have not got one now.
14267. How long is that ago? It is six years ago.
14268. Used you to employ men in the garden? We employed six men in it.
14269. Where was the garden? At Rooty Hill.
14270. And how much a week did you pay the gardeners? 18s. or 19s. a week.
14271. And out of that they had to find themselves, I suppose? Yes.
14272. Did you make a profit out of the garden? No; we lost, and that is why we gave it up.
14273. Have you ever been connected with a syndicate that ran opium-smoking and gambling-places? No.
14274. You are very strongly opposed to both opium-smoking and gambling? Yes, I am.
14275. Have you any property in China? I have a little.
14276. And who is looking after the proceeds of that? A son of my old uncle.
14277. What about your wife;—does she not get any of it? Yes. The son of my old uncle looks after her.
14278. Does that property consist of a farm? It is a rice field.
14279. Rice-growing is a very profitable occupation, is it not? Yes; some people manage to make money out of it; others cannot.
14280. You have got £500 in the business amongst you, and when you have increased that so that every one of you can draw £300 or £400 each you will return to China? Yes. 14281.

- Lay Jong.
12 Dec., 1891.
14281. Are you ever interfered with by the Government or by larrikins, or by the police, or by anybody else? Sometimes larrikins throw stones on the roof of the buildings, but that is all the interference we ever get.
14282. And you have no fault to find with the laws of the country or the general way in which you are treated? No; the laws of the country are very good.
14283. Supposing the poll-tax was taken off, would it result in your bringing your wives here and making this country your permanent home? Yes.
14284. Mr. Quong Tart.] You have had a long experience in Sydney; I can tell that by the evidence you have been giving? Yes; I have had a long experience here.
14285. There are many complaints by Europeans that the Chinese are taking the furniture trade out of their hands? Yes; I know that.
14286. Do you consider that in coming here the Chinese cabinet-makers have benefited themselves or the country the most? They have benefited themselves in some degree.
14287. But would it not benefit the Europeans from whom you buy your goods? Yes; no doubt it would.
14289. With regard to the goods that are sold by auction, you say that some Chinese send goods to auction, but that is only rubbish? Yes; that is only rubbish.
14290. And those of you who make good furniture never send goods to auction at all? No; excepting when we are pushed to meet bills, and then we may send a little.
14291. But, as a rule, you never send to auction? No; never unless we are compelled to do so.
14292. And if you get a special order is it executed much better? Yes.
14293. You say that business is very dull in consequence of the competition of these cheap furniture-makers at Waterloo? Yes.
14294. How many are there in Waterloo who turn out rubbish? There are about thirty of them in Botany and Waterloo.
14295. And they all damage the good cabinet-makers of Sydney? Yes.
14296. And if the Europeans complain that they cannot compete with the Chinese they are referring to the men in Alexandria, and not to the legitimate cabinet-makers in the city? Yes; the harm would be done by the little men.
14297. What, besides the poor wood that is used, makes their furniture so cheap? Oh, it is very common furniture. They give it out to other Chinamen to make by piecework, and the polish and varnish are exceedingly cheap.
14298. So that it would be hard for you to fight against that class of labour? Yes; we cannot possibly compete with them.
14299. You say that you have twenty-five Chinese in your employ;—how much money does each man save in the course of a year? That is very hard to say. Some would save £3 or £5, and some as much as £10. The rest they would spend here.
14300. I suppose that some of them go to the gambling-houses without your knowing it? Yes; I have heard it said that they do.
14301. If gambling was stopped, would it not be very much better for all the gardeners and cabinet-makers and respectable tradesmen? Yes; it would be a benefit for everyone.

Chow Kum called in and examined through the interpreter:—

- Chow Kum.
12 Dec., 1891.
14302. Mr. Abigail.] Where do you live? In Elizabeth-street.
14303. What business do you follow? I am a carpenter, and furniture-maker.
14304. How many men do you employ? Thirty-four.
14305. And what rate of wages do you pay them? Some get 30s. a week, some 35s., and some 27s. 6d.
14306. And do you find them in food and lodging as well? Yes.
14307. What hours do they work? From daylight till dark.
14308. And what kind of food do they have? Beef, pork, fish, rice, and cabbage.
14309. Everybody has as much as they want? Yes.
14310. And how many meals have they? Three meals a day.
14311. What is the accommodation in the place? There are four or five rooms, and one very large room at the top.
14312. Is there plenty of ventilation? There are thirteen windows in the house.
14313. And are the sanitary arrangements good? Yes; it is quite a new place.
14314. Have you had any complaints from the Corporation officers? No; they all say that it is very clean.
14315. What would the same class of men that you have got receive in China for the same class of work? From 4s. to 8s. a week and their food.
14316. And comparing the food and lodging conditions here with those existing in China, which are the best? They are about the same.
14317. They would get about three meals a day, and work about the same number of hours in China? Yes; three meals a day, and about the same number of hours' work.
14318. How much do you reckon that it would take per man, in English money, to feed one man in China? It would cost about 3d. a meal.
14319. Well then, if we have been told that in China a man can get a meal of pork or fish and rice and tea for 1d., would that be untrue? Well, 3d. a day is enough for the extreme poor, but I know that these workmen pay about 9d. a day for food.
14320. Would it be possible to get a meal of rice, fish, cabbage, and tea for a penny under any circumstances? For a trifle over a penny it would.
14321. But it would be very coarse food, I suppose? Yes; very coarse. Working men would want something a little better.
14322. What class of work do you produce? They are all ordered goods. 14323.

14323. And for whom do you make them? Bradley, Newton, and Lamb, Anthony Hordern, Hall, in George-street, and formerly for Campbell Brothers. Chow Kum.
14324. And how much do you send out a week? £80 or £90 worth. 12 Dec., 1891.
14325. How much capital have you embarked in the business? Over £1,000.
14326. Are you alone in the business, or have you partners? There are three of us, all relatives, in it; and we have all equal shares.
14327. From whom do you get your material? From Allen and Walker and the Kauri Timber Company principally.
14328. Do you use any old packing-cases? No; every bit of it is new, and we go in for walnut and ash a good deal.
14329. Are you married? No.
14330. Have you any European women visiting you? No; I am a business man.
14331. But do you not believe in domestic life? If you have any money it is very good.
14332. But is it not nice to have a woman about the house? It is all very well in China, but there is nothing in it here if you have not plenty of money.
14333. Have you a wife in China? Yes.
14334. How much do you send home to her a year? Twenty pounds.
14335. Have you any family in China? Yes.
14336. Why do you not bring your wife and family here? It would be too much money.
14337. If you could bring your wife and family here without any poll-tax, would you do so? Yes.
14338. Do you indulge in gambling at all? No; I should not have time even if I had any desire. I am a business man.
14339. Would you like to see gambling put down? Yes; it is no good.
14340. I suppose you know that your countrymen indulge in it to a very large extent? Yes; I have heard that it is carried on, but I do not know anything about it.
14341. Do you smoke opium? No.
14342. Do any of your men? About five of them smoke.
14343. Have you any experience of the effects of opium upon the people who use it? They are very lazy, and have a dull grey look in their faces.
14344. Would it be possible, by administering opium to girls, to reduce them to such a state that they would not be conscious of what was being done to them? I do not think so. I never heard of it.
14345. Do you suffer at all by the competition that takes place in furniture-making? Yes, I do; and I have noticed this: that an establishment with capital can afford to wait for its money whilst others have to force sales.
14346. I suppose you are seized with the same desire as the rest of your countrymen—as soon as you can make enough money you will go back to Chira? Yes.
14347. You are not so much impressed with this country that you would like to make it your permanent home and burying place? Of course if I could not make enough money I should have to remain here.
14348. But you would like to go home? I would like first to go into a larger business and make more money, and then after that to go back to China.
14349. But is it not the desire of all Chinamen to go back to China? Yes.
14350. They do not make themselves permanent citizens of any part of the world in which their lot happens for the time being to be cast? No, all Chinamen like to go home at least once or twice to see the old people.
14351. Have you heard anything about gross immorality of Chinamen with European women in Sydney? No.
14352. Have you never heard of them down in Wexford-street entrapping little girls into their places and illusing them? As I live in Wexford-street I have seen plenty of little girls in the street, but for what purpose they meet there I cannot say.
14353. Have any of them ever come to your house? I would not allow them to come in if they did.
14354. Mr. Quong Tart.] How many Chinamen, as far as you are aware, have left their own country and come to New South Wales, and then never gone back again? I know a good many that have remained here permanently.
14355. Mr. Abigail.] Those men have no money to take them back I suppose? No.
14356. Are you a follower of Confucius? I go sometimes to the Chinese Church to hear Mr. Soo Hoo Ten, but I do not follow him in religion.
14357. Mr. Quong Tart.] And why don't those people go back to China? Because they have no money. As a general rule their money has all gone in opium-smoking and gambling, and they have become too old to do anything to make any more.
14358. How much material connected with your business do you buy from China? I buy everything in the Colony.
14359. And I suppose you have to buy a good deal of material? Yes.
14360. Supposing it is said that the Chinese buy everything from China, and take everything they make out of the Europeans back to China, would that be true? No, it is untrue. Everything is bought here even to the clothes we wear.
14361. Do you get any food from China? A little bit is bought from the Chinese stores here, but the greater part from Europeans.
14362. Well, now I want to ask you this question: If you turn over £50 or £60 a week after paying Europeans for rent and materials, how much would you save for yourself? The Europeans would get £35 out of it, and the balance would go in wages and provisions.
14363. How do you find trade now? Middling.
14364. And if trade is bad of course you have to lose by it? Yes; if trade goes down I have to stand the racket.
14365. It has been said that Europeans complain that Chinese cabinet-makers are much cheaper than Europeans;—I want to know whether that is a fact? My work will compare with the work of any European.
14366. So that you can challenge European workmen to compete with you? Some Chinamen do bad work, I know, but I am willing to place my work against any Englishman's work.
14367. Are there any Chinese cabinet-makers in Waterloo who are injuring your business? Yes; they are knocking cheap furniture up, and spoiling my business. 14368.

- Chow Kum. 14368. If they were done away with I suppose it would be a very good thing for both English and Chinese cabinet-makers generally? Yes; it would be better for us both. Country people come down to Sydney, and buy the stuff they make at the auction sales, but they only look at the outside of it, and do not see the rubbish it is made of.
14369. Have any new Chinese cabinet-makers opened this year? As far as I know, about three or four have opened this year.
14370. But they are not opening now as rapidly as they did a few years ago? No; nothing like as rapidly.
14371. And with regard to the number of hours worked a day, the Chinese have no regular hours. They work from daylight till dark? Yes.
14372. And the shorter the day the worse it is for the employer? Yes; that is so.
14373. But in case some of your workpeople are sick, do you pay them? We give them their grub, but deduct their wages.
14374. Probably, however, he would not be able to eat it? Well; that is so much the worse for him. It is there for him.
14375. If there were no gambling and no opium-smoking, it would be good for both Chinese and Europeans? Yes; very good indeed.
14376. Have you ever heard it complained that the Chinese take the young women into their houses, and teach them to smoke opium and act immorally? If they come in at all they come in of their own accord. I have heard of it; but never seen any of them in.
14377. Mr. McKillop.] Do you use much pine in making your furniture? Yes.
14378. Do you pass it off for cedar by staining it? No; if it was cedar I would tell the purchasers so.
14379. Do you belong to any secret society in China? No.
14380. You do not belong to any secret society for the purpose of sending dead bones home to China? Oh, yes; I see what you mean. I belong to the Koong Ye Tong.
14381. Is that the only one? Yes.
14382. Does that society also send old men home to China? Yes; old men who cannot work we send home.
14383. You do not leave them here to be thrown into the benevolent asylums? No.
14384. Would it not be better for you to contribute amongst yourselves for a home in which you could place the old and decrepit Chinamen living here? Yes; that would be very good, but they would like to go home to China to die.
14385. What part of China do you come from? Canton.
14386. Could you form any idea of whether this table at which you are sitting was made by a Chinaman or by an Englishman? It was made by an Englishman.
14387. How do you know that? The Chinese cabinet-makers would use that kind of wood for the table-top but the legs I see are very old and well seasoned wood.
14388. The Chinese do not use such expensive wood? No.
14389. Then, according to that, you cannot compare Chinese-made furniture with European-made furniture? If we liked to make a table as good in all respects as this is we could do so. If they liked to pay for it we could turn out a table exactly like it.
14390. Do any of the people you deal with ask you to make good furniture? Yes. I make plenty of ash furniture and get £30 or £40 for a wardrobe sometimes.
14391. Do you do any upholstery work? No.
14392. Who does that? Englishmen do that.
14393. In your place? No.
14394. Do you make the frames of chairs? No.
14395. What do they do with old men when they go back to China? Sometimes they go to live with their old wives, sometimes with their friends, and sometimes, when they have no friends, they go to their tribes, and the tribes look after them.
14396. Have they no benevolent asylums there? No.
14397. And if the tribes will not look after them they die in the street? Oh, the tribes must look after them.
14398. Is that according to law? Yes.
14399. The law prevents them neglecting the old and decrepit? Yes.
14400. Mr. Quong Tart.] If the poll-tax had not been so heavy would you have brought your wife out? Yes. Now that my business is established I would have done, but at the time the poll-tax was low I could not afford to bring her out.
14401. If there was no poll-tax a good many Chinamen would send home for their wives, would they not? Yes.

Sun War Hop called and examined:—

- Sun War Hop. 14402. Mr. Abigail.] Where do you live? In Castlereagh-street.
14403. What business do you follow? I am a cabinet-maker.
14404. How many men do you employ? Twenty-four.
14405. What wages do you pay them? £1 a week is the lowest we pay, and 36s. the highest.
14406. And you find them in food and lodging? Yes.
14407. What hours do they work? From 6 o'clock in the morning to half-past 5 o'clock at night.
14408. And have they their meal times out of that? Yes; three meals a day.
14409. How long for meals? A little over half an hour for each meal.
14410. What description of food do they get? Beef, pork, rice and cabbage.
14411. Daily? Yes.
14412. Do they have meat and fish at every meal? Sometimes they have meat, and sometimes fish; but always one or the other.
14413. What class of goods do you produce? Good furniture.
14414. And who do you supply? Anthony Hordern, Murray Bros., of Parramatta, and John Lawler, and we sell retail in the shop.
14415. About how much capital have you embarked in your business? About £780.

14416.

War Hop.
12 Dec., 1891.

14416. How much do you send out a week? About £70 or £80 worth of stuff a week.
14417. And how much do you reckon it costs per week to keep each man? About 8s. or 10s. a week.
14418. How much would it take in China to feed a man and lodge him in the same way? Between 3s. and 4s. 9d. a week.
14419. And how much in China would a man working the same number of hours earn in a week? Some would get 16s. a week and their food.
14420. What is your opinion as to the position of working people in the two countries. Are your countrymen any better off here? My own opinion is that they are better off here.
14421. I suppose that in your business you are making fair profits? If make enough to cover fair wages, I am satisfied.
14422. What do you consider fair wages for yourself? About £3 a week.
14423. Are you a married man? Yes, and I have a Chinese wife living with me and one child—a little girl.
14424. Did you pay the poll-tax for her? No; there was no poll-tax when we came out. We have been here for thirteen years.
14425. Then, having your wife here, I suppose you have no notion of saving money to go back to China? Well, I would like to make enough money to enable me to go home to see my old father and mother, and then come back again to my wife in Australia.
14426. There is a strong feeling of affection among the Chinese for their parents, is there not? Yes; we all like to see the old people.
14427. And a large number of Chinese have gone home to China for that purpose, and come back again, have they not? Yes.
14428. So that if you saved money you would not give up this country, and go back and live permanently in China? No. If I had my business here I would come back again.
14429. You think it is a very good country? Yes.
14430. Mr. McKillop.] Whom are you in mourning for? On the 20th of this month my mother died.
14431. Mr. Abigail.] Do you indulge in gambling? No.
14432. Do you smoke opium? No; that is bad.
14433. Do you know anything about your countrymen living in a state of immorality with women? Personally, I know nothing at all about it.
14434. You keep in your own home, I suppose? I never go out.
14435. Have you not heard any conversation about it? The Chinamen do not care about talking of things of that kind in front of me, because I am a straight man.
14436. Do you find competition in your own trade very keen;—do your countrymen try to cut you out? Yes; each man is looking after himself now.
14437. And, in consequence of that competition, you have had to reduce your prices? Six or seven years ago we got tip-top prices for our goods, but during the last two years we have got very low prices.
14438. Do you occasionally make cheap goods or inexpensive ones? No; all good articles.
14439. You do not use any old packing-cases? No.
14440. Do you know any of your countrymen who do use old packing-cases? Yes; two or three of them get together and do it in Alexandria.
14441. But the furniture that they make is all of a very poor character, I suppose? Yes.
14442. Are you connected with any other business? I have an interest in a business in Elizabeth-street.
14443. What business is that? A Chinese goods and grocery store.
14444. Have you anything to do with any lodging-house, or anything like that? No.
14445. Nor with any syndicate of people who run gambling-houses? No.
14446. Have you any fault to find with the laws of this country, or the way in which you have been treated? No; I like it; it is very good.
14447. You have never been interfered with by the police in any way? No, I am on friendly terms with everybody.
14448. Mr. Quong Tart.] I have known you for many years, and you are a very good and honest fellow, I want to ask you this: Is it not a fact that two or three Chinese starting by themselves as cabinet-makers have been making very inferior furniture? Yes.
14449. If good Chinese cabinet-makers were to combine against these men would it not be much better for them and for the Europeans? Yes, it would be very good indeed for both sides.
14450. In China, as a rule, they work more by the daylight than they do by the clock;—as soon as it is light they begin to work? They work a stated time, but those who are at Waterloo work all hours, even by candle-light.
14451. Do your men work on Sundays? No.
14452. Do you import anything from China? No, I buy everything here.
14453. And the clothes you wear, you buy them here too? Yes.
14454. It is not true that the Chinese bring all their clothes out here from China to work in? No, the workmen never wear those clothes. They might sleep in them, but they could not work in them.
14455. Is it not a fact that the workmen in your employ sponge their body all over, and even their feet, before they go to bed? Yes, every night they wash themselves with hot water.
14456. It has been said that a great deal of water is thrown down the sinks in the yards? Yes, that is through the amount of water they use in washing themselves.
14457. Are any of your men engaged in gambling-houses or opium-smoking? No. I say that they may go if they are bad. I would rather pay 1s. or 2s. a week more to good men.
14458. If all the Chinese acted as you do there would be less gambling in the city? If I had a child I should like to bring him up to keep away from anything of the kind.
14459. You think that a great many Chinese have become too poor to go back to China;—is that not through their own fault—because they gamble and smoke so much? Yes, entirely.
14460. We are doing our best to put a stop to opium-smoking and gambling;—can you give us any suggestion as to the best way of doing it? Moral suasion will go a very long way with the opium-smoker, but with regard to gambling I think it would be better for the Government to do something.
14461. Mr. Abigail.] Do you think that the use of opium could be made a means of betraying young women? Well, it is this way: A great deal rests with the girl herself. If you were to persuade her to take it then she would take it, but you would have to persuade her first.

- Sun

12 Dec., 1891.
14462. Yes, but what I mean is this: Is it possible to make opium a means for seducing women by rendering them unconscious? Yes, it makes them just as if they were drunk.
14463. Mr. Quong Tart.] You know that I have been doing my best for some time to get rid of gambling and opium-smoking? Yes, I know you very well; you are a very good man.
14464. Mr. McKillop.] Is it not a fact that your countrymen live upon very little? They do live upon very little.
14465. Do they live on the smell of an oil rag? Oh, no fear; they get three meals a day.
14466. Do you feed your men well? Yes, everybody likes good food.
14467. Do you pay your men weekly? Yes, every week.
14468. You do not keep any of their money in trust? No, very little; sometimes a man leaves a pound or two with me, but that is all, and I bank it for him, and he gets the interest.
14469. Do you bank it in your own name, or in his name? In my own name.
14470. How many hours a week do the men work? Over sixty hours a week.
14471. Do they work on Sunday? No.
14472. When do they start work in the morning? As soon as it is light.
14473. Well, it is light at 4 o'clock now? They would not get up at 4 o'clock; they get up about half-past 5, and knock off about half-past 5 in the evening.
14474. What time have they for meals during the day? A little more than half an hour for each meal.
14475. That is an hour altogether during the working hours? Yes.
14476. Are those the hours worked throughout the whole of the Chinese cabinet-makers' premises? Yes, that is the rule; they would not work more than that.
14477. Is it not a fact that in some of the Chinese cabinet factories men are seen polishing and sand-papering on Sundays? Not in my place, at all events.
14478. But you must have seen them doing it through the windows? No.
14479. But when they are just starting business—before they are properly on their feet—do they not do it? Yes, if they are their own masters.
14480. Have you ever occasion to dismiss any of your employees for gambling or opium-smoking, or any misconduct? Yes, sometimes, if they do not do what I tell them.
14481. Is all the work that you turn out of the very best quality? Yes.
14482. Do you not deal in second-class furniture? No, all I make is of the very best quality.
14483. Who are the Chinese who come here and open the gambling-dens—are they Hong Kong pirates, or what? They are men of this kind: If they see a thing they can bite by opening their mouths, they do it.
14484. They are what we term sharpers? Yes.
14485. Are there any Chinese informers in Sydney who speak good English, but make money by gambling? I never saw any, and never heard of any. I very seldom go out.
14486. Do you know Lee Kum and Pow Chee? I do not know Lee Kum. I know Pow Chee a little.
14487. What sort of a character is he? I do not know him well enough to express an opinion.
14488. Do you know Goldtown? I have heard his name, but that is all. I have never had any dealings with him.
14489. Do you know Long Pen? No.
14490. What part of China do you come from? I come from the big city in Canton.
14491. Do you belong to any secret society? No.
14492. Not to the Loon Ye Tong? No.
14493. Have you subscribed to any of them without being a member? No. I very often give £1 or £2 to a lame or blind old Chinaman, but that is all.
14494. What do they do with all the old Chinamen in Sydney? I do not know.
14495. Do you not subscribe to any of the societies for taking your countrymen's bones back to China? No, I do not.
14496. Is it not part of the religious duties devolving upon Chinamen to send their countrymen's bones back? Yes.
14497. How is it that a good Chinaman like you are ignores that duty? I never had anything to do with it, and never would have anything to do with it.
14498. But supposing you were to die who would send your bones back to China? When I am dead and gone I do not know what happens, so that it does not matter to me what is done with my bones.
14499. Have you got any property in China? Yes; a little rice field, and a little business at home.
14500. Are you happy and contented in this Colony? Yes; I am very comfortable here.
14501. Have you ever been to any country town here—to Narrandera or Hay? I have been to Newcastle—that is all.
14502. Are there a large number of Chinese there? There are a few.
14503. Do they all carry on a legitimate trade? It is the same there as it is in Sydney.
14504. There are plenty of gambling-places there, are there not? I never go to those kind of places, so I cannot tell you.

MONDAY, 14 DECEMBER, 1891.

Present:—

THE MAYOR OF SYDNEY (MR. ALDERMAN MANNING, J.P.), PRESIDENT.

FRANCIS ABIGAIL, Esq., J.P., VICE-PRESIDENT.

RAMSEY McKILLOP, Esq., QUONG TART, Esq.,

JOHN STUART HAWTHORNE, Esq.

Ellen ———, called and examined:—

- Ellen ———
14 Dec., 1891.
14505. President.] Where do you live? In Exeter-place, Lower George-street.
14506. How long have you resided there? Two years and a half.
14507. What age are you? I am 23 years of age.
14508. Whom do you live with? A Chinaman.
14509. Are there other Chinamen living in the house? No; there is no one else there.
14510. What rent do you pay? Eleven shillings a week.
- 14511.

Ellen ———
14 Dec., 1891.

14511. How many rooms have you? Three.
14512. Who is your landlord? Mr. Hamilton, a saddler, living in Paddington.
14513. Have you been constantly living with this Chinaman? Yes; for about two and a half years.
14514. Were you on the town before? No; I was at service. I have been with the Chinamen about three and a half years, or four years next May.
14515. When you left domestic service you went among the Chinese? Yes.
14516. How came you to do that? A friend took me to them, that is all.
14517. Had you been seduced before? Yes; in Melbourne.
14518. Were you seduced by a European? Yes.
14519. Did he seduce you under promise of marriage? Yes.
14520. And he broke his promise? Yes.
14521. And you then left Melbourne for Sydney, I suppose? I left for the country, and afterwards right through to Sydney.
14522. Where did you first associate with the Chinese? In Wexford-street.
14523. Were you in service then? Yes; I was at Captain Cuthel's, Woollahra.
14524. You say you went to the Chinese quarters with a friend of yours; that was a female friend, I suppose? Yes.
14525. What did she say to you when she took you there? She told me to go for the Chinese. I cried first and then I went.
14526. Did she promise that you would get plenty of money? Yes.
14527. Did you start with opium-smoking? No.
14528. Then after you left service you were introduced to the Chinese, and you had promiscuous intercourse with them, and then you met with this particular Chinaman, is that it? Yes; and I have been with him since.
14529. Is he a sober man? Yes.
14530. What trade does he follow? Up till about six months ago he had been engaged in gardening, but he was not strong enough for that, and he now works a vegetable business in Campbell-street.
14531. Where did he work as a gardener? At Cook's River, and he came in three times a week, on market days.
14532. Did you see other men when he was away? No; I did not exactly see other men. They used to come to my house sometimes, but very few.
14533. Generally speaking you have lived faithfully to this man? Yes. For the last six months he has been in the house altogether.
14534. Has he always treated you kindly? Yes; he has always been a very good man to me. I could not wish for a better man.
14535. He has never desired you to go with other men for money? No. He has always had constant work.
14536. Do other Chinamen visit your house? Yes; sometimes.
14537. Do they ever bring women there? No.
14538. No white people come to your house? None whatever.
14539. In point of fact, you live with this man as faithfully as if you were married to him? Yes.
14540. He earns his money now by selling vegetables? Yes.
14541. Where does he get his vegetables? He buys them in the Haymarket.
14542. Does he bring them home? No; he leaves them at the place in Campbell-street, where he has his horse and cart.
14543. Do you smoke opium? Yes; I have smoked for two and a half years.
14544. What effect has it upon you; does it render you unconscious? No.
14545. Do you smoke much? Yes; I smoke about 3s. worth a day.
14546. And you say it never makes you unconscious? No.
14547. Did it at first have that effect upon you? No; never from the first.
14548. What effect has it upon you? None, only when you are opium-sick.
14549. Does it induce pleasant dreams? No; you cannot sleep at all till you have it.
14550. Does it not excite the imagination? No.
14551. Then what delight is to be got from it? None at all; only when once you take to it you get the habit, and then you have to have it.
14552. You have a craving for it? Yes; you have got to take it.
14553. Do you smoke away from your own house? No.
14554. Does the man you are living with smoke? Yes; but he never approved of me smoking, but now that the habit is on me of course he cannot help it.
14555. If men smoke opium does it affect their power with women? Yes; it does in one way.
14556. They have not the same desire for intercourse with women? No; they do not care about women.
14557. If you were lying down on a bunk smoking opium alongside a Chinaman who was also smoking opium, the probability is that he would not care to have intercourse with you? Not if he had the opium habit he would not. The man who has the opium habit is not like another man;—he does not care for women.
14558. Are you satisfied with your husband being such an inveterate opium-smoker? I cannot help it.
14559. I suppose the opium-smoking you indulge in prevents your caring for intercourse with men? Certainly.
14560. Who lives next door to your house? A woman named Mrs. ———
14561. What is her means of living? She has one young girl living with her.
14562. What does the young girl do for a living? She knocks about for a living; but she does not take anybody to that house. She pays £1 a week.
14563. Are there many Chinese living in your street? There are not so many now. The Chinese that are living there now are nearly all vegetable men.
14564. Are they opium-smokers as a rule? No; there are very few opium-smokers in our street at all.
14565. Have they any women living with them? No; there are no women going to the vegetable men's houses at all. If they want women I suppose they go out for them.
14566. Do you know if the Chinese down there entice young girls to visit them? I have never seen them.
14567. I suppose you have had opportunities of knowing it if it were so? Yes; I have had plenty opportunities.

- Ellen — 14568. The girls who go with the Chinese, in your opinion, are mostly those who have already fallen?
Yes.
- 14 Dec., 1891. 14569. Do you know of any case where a comparatively pure girl has gone among the Chinese without having first knocked about the town? I know of girls having been seduced while in service, but not by the Chinese. I do not know of a single case of that kind.
14570. Have you always lived in the house you are now occupying since you took up with the Chinese? No; I was living with another young woman before I had my own house. I was living at No. 16, next door to Mrs. Short, about the third house from mine.
14571. When you lived with that young girl were you with the same Chinaman? Yes.
14572. What did your friend do for a living? Sometimes people came to see her. She is dead now.
14573. I suppose you know a good many young girls like yourself living with Chinamen? I know a good few.
14574. Do they lead a happy life? I have never seen a Chinaman ill-use a woman.
14575. Are they faithful to the Chinamen as a rule, or do they go in for prostitution as well? A few might.
14576. Do the Chinese turn you away when they are tired of you? I cannot say. In most cases if a Chinaman has a quarrel with a woman he is living with and she tells him to go away he will go but if he has been living with her for any length of time he will be sure to come back again.
14577. They do not abandon the women they have been living with for twelve months or two years for younger ones? I have never seen that.
14578. What age is the Chinaman you are living with? He is 38.
14579. Who had he living with him before you? He did not live with any woman before.
14580. Did he go among women at all? I suppose he went with different women, but he never had a woman constantly living with him before me.
14581. I suppose you visit your friends who live with Chinamen more or less? Yes.
14582. Are their houses clean and tidy? Yes; you always see all the Chinese women's houses clean and comfortable.
14583. And are you well fed? Oh, yes; there is always plenty to eat and drink.
14584. What food do they use? Well, the Chinese have their fashion of feeding, and the Europeans have theirs.
14585. Do you live like an ordinary white woman? Yes; and my man does, too. He would just as soon live European fashion as Chinese.
14586. You pay 11s. a week rent? Yes.
14587. What does it cost you to keep the house, outside the rent? It costs about £2 altogether. I spend more than that sometimes.
14588. Does that include what you spend in opium? Yes.
14589. So that it costs to keep your house about £2 10s. a week? Yes; from that to £2 12s. to £2 15s.
14590. Does he earn all that money? Yes; sometimes more than that. He has good customers—all the large schools.
14591. He goes out every day? Yes.
14592. Where do you buy the opium? At various stores.
14593. At what stores do you buy it? I really do not know the names exactly. There are so many different stores now.
14594. Where did you buy it last? I do not know the name—it is in Wexford-street.
14595. How many doors from the corner of Elizabeth-street? I do not know.
14596. You must tell the name? I really do not know it—they call him "Fish."
14597. Where did you buy it before? I always bought it there.
14598. Who lives next door to the place where you bought the opium? Ching War.
14599. How much do you buy at a time? Sometimes 1s. worth, and sometimes 1s. 6d. worth, and sometimes more.
14600. I suppose all your friends who smoke opium get it at the same place? No, not every one. Some of them do.
14601. And in similar quantities? No, not always. Some buy it in tins.
14602. Did you ever buy a tin? Yes.
14603. How many ounces are there in a tin? I do not know the quantity in a tin.
14604. What do you pay for it? £1.
14605. Mr. Quong Tart.] It is like a square cup? Yes; but it is not full—it is only half full.
14606. President.] Have the police ever visited your house since you went to live there? Yes; they have come there, but not for any particular purpose. They have come to ask about somebody, perhaps.
14607. Have you had visits from the inspectors of nuisances? Yes.
14608. Have you ever been fined for having your premises unclean? No.
14609. Your house is connected with the sewer, and your premises are quite clean? Yes; it is all right. The inspector came a week before the Commission came, and told me that you were coming.
14610. Who told you? The inspector of nuisances.
14611. Did you clean up your premises in consequence of that? No; my premises are always clean.
14612. Were the men in uniform who visited you? Yes.
14613. There were two of them? Yes.
14614. Is there any nuisance in your neighbourhood—I mean premises that give off bad smells as you pass them? Not that I am aware of. The inspector of nuisances is round once a fortnight, or three weeks.
14615. Is it not a fact that Lascars from the mail-steamers visit your house? No. I do not care about that class of people.
14616. Is it not a fact that they visit the houses in your neighbourhood? No; there is not a girl with the Chinese that cares about a dark fellow.
14617. Do not these Lascars go to some places in Wexford-street? I do not know about Wexford-street, but I do not think so.
14618. Have you not been in your friend's house in Wexford-street? Yes; but I never saw a dark man there yet. I have seen a dark man in Steren-street. But I do not think the Chinese will sell opium to them,
- 14619.

Ellen —

14 Dec., 1891.

14619. Do they go for women or the opium? There are no dark men after women in that place.
14620. Mr. Abigail.] How often during the day do you smoke opium? Three times.
14621. And, I suppose, when the time is approaching at which you generally take your smoke you feel that you must have it? Yes.
14622. Supposing anyone were to prevent you getting at it, what would be your feelings? I should be very bad. Sometimes it only makes you very tired.
14623. For how long after you have had your smoke does the effect remain in your system? As soon as I have a few pipes I feel all right again.
14624. How much opium does it take to put you properly under the influence for the time being? It takes 6d. worth for the time being, but I always smoke 1s. worth.
14625. That would put you properly under the influence? Yes; that would be enough until I wanted it again.
14626. Are you not in that state even partially unconscious? Not at all.
14627. Does it not do so with others? It never makes anyone unconscious.
14628. Now listen to this, and see if your experience tallies with this description of an official who visited an opium-den:—"We tried all we could to awaken two girls who were lying under the influence of opium; there was a third lying on the same stretcher, who said it was no use trying, for they could not awaken for some hours. She said she was just getting ready. She said, 'They do what they like with us while we are under the influence.' I asked her if she could not refrain from it, and she said 'No, we cannot keep away from it.' The way our women are used by those men is something beyond description." What have you to say to that? It is only nonsense. I have never seen anyone under the influence of opium that way. It will not drug you.
14629. Are you quite sure? Well, I can speak for myself. I can smoke opium all day and night too, and it will have no such effect upon me.
14630. Do you think it possible that the girls referred to here were drugged by drink? I think it is more likely that they were drugged by drink than opium.
14631. Have you never heard it stated that the Chinese induce young girls to visit their places, and that they then drug them with opium and seduce them? No; I have never heard of it. The Chinese as a rule do not care about women smoking opium. It is the only fault they find with them—the opium-smoking. The Chinese do not approve of women smoking at all.
14632. I suppose that is for the reason you have stated, that the effect of opium-smoking is to take away all desire for sexual intercourse? I suppose so. It makes a woman quite different from what she is before she smokes it.
14633. And you are quite sure it is not true that anyone could, as stated here, do what they liked with a person under the influence of opium? I am quite sure it is not true. I never heard of anything like it yet.
14634. Is it a rule that persons who smoke opium do not care for drink? Yes; as a rule they do not care for drink. It would never do for the two things to go together.
14635. Do you smoke the ashes of your opium? Yes; I save the ash and sell it.
14636. How much do you get for the ash? From 15s. to £1 per lb. It depends upon the price of opium.
14637. What do they do with this ash? They make what they call second opium of it.
14638. Do they then sell it for a less price, as opium of inferior quality? No; those heavy smokers up country buy it. They boil it and mix it with good opium to make double the quantity.
14639. That is practising imposition, is it not? No; they do not sell it in that way. It is for their own use.
14640. Do they buy a great quantity of this ash? Yes; a great deal of it is used up country.
14641. How long would you be saving £1? Sometimes two weeks, and other times three weeks, or if nobody comes in it might take a month.
14642. How much does your husband smoke? When he is working he only smokes 1s. worth a day. He has to go out with the carts, and therefore has no time to smoke in the day.
14643. Does not opium-smoking render you unfit for work? No; as soon as I have a smoke I am all right.
14644. Does it not affect your appetite? No; I can eat far better than I could before. Of course when you have the "habit" it affects your appetite, but when it is finished you can eat well enough.
14645. What is the first effect of smoking opium? Sometimes it will be twelve months before it will make you sick; that is when the habit comes on you; sometimes it will be for a few weeks.
14646. What time in the day do you smoke? At about 3 or 4 o'clock. Sometimes I may smoke at 1 or 2 o'clock.
14647. You have no settled time? Oh, yes; it all depends upon what time I go to bed. If I go to bed early I get up early, and commence to smoke sooner. If I have my last smoke at 2 o'clock in the morning, for instance, I will want one at 2 o'clock in the afternoon of the same day. I may have another between 6 and 7 in the evening, and then I do not want another smoke until night.
14648. Supposing you were to go to sleep? I do not go to sleep until I have my smoke. If I were to wake up in the night without having had it I should be worse still.
14649. In fact you are a slave to the habit? That is about it.
14650. Would it not be better for you to break yourself of the habit? It might be better for me to break off a certain amount, but if I were not to smoke I daresay I should be on the streets. I have no desire to go out now.
14651. It kills all lustful inclination? Yes.
14652. Mr. Quong Tart.] Do you not consider opium-smoking a great evil? It is in one way, I suppose. It is right enough in another way.
14653. If you once take to opium-smoking you cannot do without it? No; you must constantly take it.
14654. Do you not find, as a rule, that the Chinese who smoke opium are lazy, sluggish, and cannot do heavy work? In some cases where they are heavy smokers. My man has been a smoker for twelve years, but he is not what you would call a heavy smoker.
14655. Do you know that most of the Chinese who live on gambling are opium-smokers? Yes; there are a good few of those who gamble who are also opium-smokers. Those who are opium-smokers are a little lazy, as a rule.

- Ellen ——— 14656. Then it must be bad, is it not? It is in one way; but it keeps a person quiet.
14657. Could not you keep quiet without that? Not with me; I have been far quieter since I took to it.
- 14 Dec., 1891. 14658. You turn the day into night, do you not? I usually sleep till about 12 o'clock.
14659. When you go away to another place, what do you do? I take some yin chce with me, and when I want it, I put it in my mouth and eat it, and drink some water.
14660. Is not that very injurious? No; it is right enough for a smoker; of course it would be very bad for those who do not smoke.
14661. Do you understand how to prepare the opium? Yes; I thoroughly understand it.
14662. How came you to understand it? I learnt it myself.
14663. Is there not some difficulty in making it? None; you have only to look at someone making it.
14664. Mr. Hawthorne.] What time do you go to bed at night? Sometimes at 2 o'clock, sometimes at 3 o'clock. I am a great reader. I generally finish my smoke about half-past 1 or 2 o'clock.
14665. Do you make it a rule to have your smoke at half-past 1 or 2 o'clock? I finish about that time.
14666. I suppose your husband has to get up early to go out with the vegetables? Yes; usually he has.
14667. Then, as you are not up until 12 o'clock, he has to prepare his own meals? No; he goes to a Chinese cookshop in the morning.
14668. And you do no housework until after 12 o'clock? No.
14669. Is that the custom of females who live with the Chinese? No; it depends on what——
14670. Are there many others who keep the same late hours as yourself? Yes; a few. Some of them stop up later.
14671. Many women living with Chinese about your quarter, who are heavy smokers of opium, do not go to bed at all at night? Some of them. I know one of the young women who were here last Thursday goes to bed at 12 o'clock.
14672. Was that the tall girl——? No. She goes to bed late; sometimes between 4 and 5 in the morning.
14673. You said just now that you were a great reader? Yes.
14674. What kind of literature do you go in for? Novels.
14675. Are your parents living? My mother is living in Tasmania; my father is dead.
14676. Is your mother a woman of respectable position in society? Yes; she is of respectable position. She married again.
14677. Have you any brothers and sisters? Yes; I have one brother and three sisters.
14678. Are your sisters married? Yes.
14679. To Europeans? Yes; and all occupying respectable positions. One is in the gas-works, one has a jeweller's shop, and the other a boot-shop.
14680. Do you have any correspondence with them? No; not since I have been with the Chinese.
14681. And they know nothing about your mode of living? No.
14682. I suppose you feel ashamed to keep up a correspondence with them? I would not think of such a thing.
14683. Have you quite made up your mind to live your present life continually? No. I intend, in a few years' time, when I can get a few matters settled, to leave the Chinese, and go to see my mother; that is, if I am not married. But I think of getting married to the Chinaman I am with at the Chinese new year.
14684. Then you cannot have much idea of abandoning your present mode of life if you contemplate marriage with your present associate within a few months? No. I might go home to see mother in a few months, but I should return to him again.
14685. You have never let your people know where you are? No. They have not heard from me for six years. They must think I am dead.
14686. None of your family, except yourself, have gone in for a degraded life? No.
14687. Your fall, in the first instance, was through being seduced by a European in Melbourne? Yes. My people knew of that.
14688. And after you came to Sydney did you take up with the Chinese, simply because a female friend of yours induced you to go among them? Yes. I was a stranger in Sydney.
14689. What was your object;—was it to prevent your going on the streets as a common prostitute? No.
14690. Previous to your going among the Chinese had you gone in for prostitution? No.
14691. Where did you travel to after you left Melbourne? I went to service in the country districts. I was at Beechworth and Albury, and from there I came to Sydney. I was in a home, a religious house in Sydney.
14692. During these years of service did you conduct yourself respectably? Yes.
14693. Until you went with this girl to the Chinese quarters were you leading a virtuous life? Yes.
14694. Where did you first meet the Chinaman you first had connection with? In a European house. Chinaman was brought there.
14695. Was it a house of ill-fame? Yes.
14696. Did your female friend keep this house? No.
14697. It was a house frequented by other girls of questionable character? Yes.
14698. Did you meet anyone there at the time? No. Only the man who kept the house. The house was kept by an Englishman.
14699. Who was the woman that introduced you? She was called ———; she is living in the Church Home now.
14700. Have you been asked to go into any of these homes? Yes.
14701. Have you ever gone? I went once, about four years ago.
14702. How long did you remain there? Five months—that was before I went with the Chinaman.
14703. What did you go to the Church Home for? Because I was a stranger in Sydney. It was in the Church Home that I picked up with this woman I have spoken of.
14704. She was actually an inmate of the Home while you were there? Yes.
14705. Has it come to your knowledge that other females have become contaminated by mixing with women of that character in some of these Homes? Yes, I have heard of a good few, meeting with older people, and being led astray.
14706. How long was it after this visit of yours to the house where you had intercourse with the Chinese that you took up with the present man you are living with? About one year and six months.

14707. What kind of life were you leading during that time? I had a house of my own, and had two girls living with me. They paid me £1 a week each.
14708. Did they live by prostitution? Yes; but they brought no one to my house.
14709. Did you carry on prostitution? No.
14710. Did not any Europeans visit your house? No. I had a house in Woolloomooloo at the time.
14711. And you lived out of what these girls paid you for eighteen months? For twelve months. I was six months of the time laid up with rheumatics in my head.
14712. Did these girls bring men to your house? No; they might fetch a man to sleep all night but in no other way.
14713. You drew from them £1 a week each, for their board and lodging? Yes.
14714. So that you knew at the time that you were living on the prostitution of these girls? Yes.
14715. When you are smoking opium, how long does your smoke last as a rule? Sometimes I might smoke one hour, and sometimes two hours. If I start at 11 o'clock, I can finish altogether at half-past 1 or 2 o'clock—that is, smoking 6d.-worth of opium.
14716. You are quite certain that during the time you are smoking you are quite conscious, and know all that is going on around you? Yes, I have my senses about me just the same as I have now.
14717. If it has been asserted that a Chinaman or anyone else could take advantage of a female while she is under the influence of opium, that according to you would be untrue? It is quite untrue.
14718. And you are quite certain that if you had had your two hours' smoke of opium you would be quite capable of assenting or dissenting to any proposals that might be made to you? Yes; just the same as I am now.
14719. Who prepares your pipe? I can prepare it myself, but sometimes my husband does it for me, and sometimes I do it for him.
14720. How much does your husband give you for housekeeping purposes? He gives me £2 or £2 10s. a week, perhaps more. If he makes more he gives me more.
14721. Does it take all that to keep the house going? There is 11s. rent to pay, then there is food, and firing, and cigarettes.
14722. How much does it cost you altogether for smoke, including cigarettes? Sometimes it costs £1 10s. a week.
14723. How much of opium and of cigarettes do you smoke per day? I smoke 2s. 6d. or 3s. worth of opium and 9d. of cigarettes.
14724. How much per day does your husband smoke? He only smokes 1s. worth of opium because he only smokes at night.
14725. Then your smoking costs you something like 30s. a week, and that leaves you only £1 a week to live on, including rent? I do not eat much.
14726. Does it take your appetite away? No.
14727. Do you use chop-sticks? No; I eat like a European. My husband eats like his own countrymen in the cookshops, but when he is with me he eats like a European.
14728. Have you ever had any children? Yes; one. It is dead.
14729. Was that to the man with whom you are living? Yes.
14730. Did you never have any children previous to that? Yes; I had one in Melbourne by the European that seduced me. It is alive now, and with my sister.
14731. Had your sister any children of her own? Yes; three.
14732. And she is rearing your child? Yes.
14733. Mr. McKillop.] Do you know a girl named ———; she lived with a girl named ———? Yes; she is up country.
14734. How long is it since she left? Last Tuesday.
14735. Is she in the habit of making trips into the country? Yes.
14736. She goes through the Chinese camps? No. There is up country one man who constantly keeps her.
14737. When she comes to Sydney how long does she stop? She stops about three months.
14738. Who keeps her when she is in Sydney? The man who keeps her in Sydney is a cook.
14739. Is it not a fact that she goes on the street as a prostitute? Not to my knowledge. She might have done when the man she lives with in Sydney was not working.
14740. And what about this other girl ———? She has a man to keep her.
14741. Has she left for the country too? No.
14742. Does she intend going, do you know? I believe so.
14743. Do you know of any serious case of disease existing through women cohabiting with the Chinese? Not amongst the Chinese, to my knowledge.
14744. Have you heard of any such cases? Not lately.
14745. How long since is it that you heard of any such cases? It is a long time since I heard of a case of disease.
14746. Mr. Abigail.] Are Chinamen clean as a rule? Yes; as a rule they are very clean. And they take care that a woman is too. If she is not clean they will not live with her.
14747. Are there not a number of houses of ill-fame in Wexford-street? I do not know.
14748. Is it not a fact that there are certain houses in Exeter-place where girls take men for the purpose of sexual intercourse? Not to my knowledge. I believe there is in Wexford-street, but not in Exeter-place.
14749. You have said that opium-smoking prevents you sleeping;—if that is so, how do you get on? It prevents anyone sleeping when the habit is on them. If you go to bed, and are asleep, if it is time for you to smoke you will wake up—you cannot sleep. For instance, I go to bed at 2 o'clock, and get up at 12 o'clock next day. I cannot sleep over that time. I must get up and smoke.
14750. Do you sleep heavily for that time? No; if you came to my door and gave one knock, I could hear you.
14751. And you wake regularly when the time comes for you to have your pipe? Yes.
14752. Have you had a fairly good education? No; not very good.
14753. In what kind of service were you engaged before you took up with your present mode of life? I worked as cook, and laundress, and housemaid, and in one or two public-houses that I was in I acted as barmaid.

Ellen—
14 Dec., 1891.

- Ellen — 14754. Was Captain Cuthel's the only place you were employed in in Sydney? Yes.
 14755. Where did you meet this girl who introduced you to the Chinese? I got the situation from the Church Home, and this woman came to see me where I was employed.
 14756. And you have since found out that she was really a kind of decoy to bring respectable girls down to a state of prostitution? Yes.
 14757. I suppose there are a good many characters of the kind in Sydney? Yes; plenty of them.
 14758. Is this girl back in the Home again? I could not say; it is fully three years since I saw her there. I heard the other day that she was in the Church Home, but I have not seen her. I know she was there two years ago. She goes there and stops for years at a time. She is a good worker, and they try to keep her there.
 14759. Mr. Abigail.] Have you heard of her taking other girls besides you to this place you have told us of? I have heard of it, but I cannot say what truth there may have been in it.
 14760. When you visited this house of ill-fame did you know it was a house of that character? No; I had never been in one before.
 14761. She took you there under the pretence that this person was a friend of hers? Yes.
 14762. Was the Chinaman there when you arrived? No; the Chinaman was a friend of hers. On the second day he came in by himself. She told me to go with him.
 14763. And you did go with him? Yes; I did.
 14764. I suppose she told you it was better than hard work—that you would get plenty of money and jewellery, and so forth? Yes.
 14765. Mr. Quong Tart.] Do you know any of the Chinese informers—do you know Pow Chee? Yes; he is a schoolmaster.
 14766. Do you know Long Pen? Yes.
 14767. Is he considered to be a Chinese informer? Yes.
 14768. Mr. McKillop.] Do you know Miss ———? Yes; she lives near my place.
 14769. You have said that a person who smokes opium does not drink;—is it not a fact that she drinks heavily and smokes opium too? I cannot say.
 14770. I saw her put away half a tumbler of rum when we were there;—is it not a fact that some girls do drink heavily and smoke opium too? I cannot say. It is not so with the persons I am acquainted with.
 14771. You know I suppose that there are certain girls in the country who make quarterly or half-yearly visits to the Chinese camps in the country, for the purpose of making lots of money by prostitution? Yes, plenty of them.
 14772. Do you know whether they come down with big cheques from these trips? Yes; they sometimes come down with a pretty good sum of money.

[The witness withdrew.]

Margaret ——— called and examined:—

- Margaret — 14773. President.] Where do you reside? In Exeter-place.
 14774. How long have you resided there? Two years.
 14775. Are you living with a Chinaman? I was living with one; I am not now.
 14776. Until recently you were living with a Chinaman? Yes; with one—the father of my children.
 14777. How long had you been living with him? Five years.
 14778. What is your age now? Twenty-three.
 14779. So that when you were eighteen years of age you went to live with a Chinaman? Yes.
 14780. What were you doing before that? I was a dressmaker.
 14781. I suppose before you went to live with the Chinese you were seduced by a European? Yes.
 14782. Did you have any children by him? No.
 14783. Were you employed as a dressmaker when you were seduced? Yes.
 14784. How did you come to have intercourse with this Chinaman? I came to Sydney and got into trouble, and a young girl who knew me came to the gaol with a Chinaman, who paid the fine, and released me.
 14785. What did you get into trouble about? Through assaulting another girl.
 14786. Did you live with the Chinaman subsequently who paid your fine? No.
 14787. What did you do for him to induce him to pay your fine? Nothing; I never saw him before.
 14788. Then he paid the fine because he knew your friend, I suppose? Yes.
 14789. Did you go immediately to meet the Chinaman? I went to Lower George-street, to a place kept by Sam Fe; he was a gambler then; I do not know what he is now.
 14790. Did you then meet this Chinaman with whom you have been living? No; I went to see the other one. I stopped there a couple of days, and went away again.
 14791. Is the man you have been living with kind to you? Yes.
 14792. He treats you well? Yes; up to the last four or five months.
 14793. What are the ages of the children you have had by this man? The eldest is five years, the next will be three on the 25th February, and the youngest is twelve months.
 14794. Up to the last four or five months you say that he has been all that you could desire—how is it that you left him? I left him because I cannot agree with him. He has a bad temper and so have I.
 14795. How do you support your children? He gives me money to support my children. My sister in Balmain has one of them.
 14796. You have nothing to complain of in that respect? Nothing at all.
 14797. Is it a fact that he has objected to your going with other men? Yes.
 14798. Is not that really the cause of his quarrelling with you? No; it was through the opium we had rows.
 14799. As a matter of fact, you do go with other men when he is away, I suppose? I can get money enough to keep me without going with other men.
 14800. But you might get more, you know? I never bother about more.
 14801. Then his jealousy is unreasonable? Yes; if he sees me speaking to anyone he kicks up a row with me.
 14802. How many rooms are there in the house in which you live? Six rooms. I had two of them—one room and the kitchen. 14803.

Margaret—

14803. What rent do you pay? Seven shillings a week.
14804. Did you and the Chinaman and the children all live in the one room? No. One of the children lives at Balmáin, and I paid 10s. a week for the keep of the little one that was here with me this morning. 14 Dec., 1891.
14805. What occupation does the Chinaman follow with whom you were living? He is a cook.
14807. Where does he live? Up country, at Penrith, and other places he has been.
14808. When at Penrith how often did he come to visit you? Once a week, on Saturday night.
14809. What wages does he get? Thirty-five shillings a week.
14810. Does he give you all the money? No; he gives me £1 a week.
14811. Was that sufficient to keep you? No; I had other money.
14812. Where did you get it from? From a half-caste Chinaman, called Dick Shampoo, at Hay. I was living with him before. Sometimes he sends me £2, and sometimes £1 a week.
14812. He has given you money from time to time? Yes.
14813. Are the premises you live in clean? Ycs.
14814. Who is the landlord? A coloured man, named Young.
14815. Do the police visit the house? No.
14816. Have you seen the inspector of nuisances there? Yes.
14817. Do you smoke opium? Yes.
14818. When did you contract the habit of smoking opium? When I came out of prison I went to Lower George-street first.
14819. Is it a fact that opium-smoking will make you so unconscious that you do not know what people are doing to you? No. It has never done so to me.
14820. You always know what men are doing about you? Of course. It never made me stupid at all.
14821. When you go to smoke opium do you leave your own place for a regular opium-smoking house? Yes.
14822. And do you lie down alongside of any man that may be there? It is a female that makes it for me.
14823. Have you never laid down on one of these opium bunks where the men lie that smoke opium there? It is very seldom I see a man in the place where I smoke. The only one I have seen is the man she lived with, who works at a garden, and is very seldom there. I make it for the woman who keeps the place, and she makes it for me.
14824. You have never laid alongside a man smoking opium? I have where men have been smoking opium, but not lately.
14825. Have they ever desired to have connection with you when they have finished smoking? No.
14826. Does the habit of opium-smoking in men kill the desire for sexual intercourse? Nobody has said anything to me like that.
14827. What have you been doing for a living during the five or six months that you have been living apart from your Chinaman? I have been getting something from him for the support of his two children, and also something from my friend at Hay.
14828. Is it not a fact that you have taken to prostitution to obtain money since you left him? No.
14829. Have you never had intercourse with men since you left that Chinaman? No; none at all.
14830. Can you swear that positively? I can.
14831. You left him, did you not? Yes; but I have seen him every day.
14832. Where do you see him? In his own place in Wexford-street.
14833. Does he desire you to go back? Yes.
14834. And will you not go back? No; I will not.
14835. Do you rely upon this man in Hay keeping you? Yes.
14836. Does he send money to you regularly? Yes; he very seldom neglects to send it once a fortnight.
14837. When did you see him last? Six months ago. He has been away shearing.
14838. Does he send you this money to keep children you have had by him? No.
14839. Did you never have any children by him? No.
14840. When did you hear from him last? Last Saturday.
14842. Where was he then? At Bungagee Station, near Hay.
14843. Mr. McKillop.] Do you know ———? Yes, she is up country.
14844. When did she leave? She left last Tuesday.
14845. Used she to reside with a girl named Buckley? Yes.
14846. And was living with a Chinaman? Yes.
14847. Is it not a fact that ——— and ——— get their living by prostitution? I cannot say.
14848. You have lived close to them? Yes, but I do not know their business.
14849. How much opium do you smoke? About 2s. or 2s. 6d. worth a day.
14850. How many years have you been smoking opium? Five years.
14851. What part of the Colony are you a native of? Young.
14852. Are your parents there? Yes; that is, my mother is, but my father is dead.
14853. Have you any brothers or sisters? I have four sisters and one brother a good distance out of Young, on a station.
14854. How long is it since you have seen them? Over six years.
14855. Does your mother know the life you are leading now? No.
14856. Have you ever corresponded with your people? No.
14857. Where did you learn dressmaking? In Young.
14858. Did you come to Sydney to follow your trade as a dressmaker? No.
14859. Where were you seduced—in the same town you were born in? Yes.
14860. Did you pick up with any Chinamen in Young? No.
14861. How did you come to Sydney? I came with another young girl.
14862. Was she of loose character? Yes.
14863. Did she not entice you to Sydney? She paid my fare.
14864. Was she an old Sydney hand? Yes.
14865. How old was she? Twenty-three or twenty-four when I knew her.

14866.

- Margaret— 14866. What is her name? Ellen———; I have not seen her for four years. She left me when she brought me down here.
- 14 Dec., 1891. 14867. Where did she take you when she brought you down? We stayed at a lodging-house. She used to pay for our bed at night. Then I got into trouble for hitting a girl.
14868. Were you on the streets then? No. I was down here about a month when I went into a tobacco factory. I used to go to a dance, and I had a row with a girl, and struck her with a tumbler. For that I was fined £3, or four months.
14869. Were you drunk? No. I did not know what drink was. It was in a temper. She struck me first. A young girl named —— brought a Chinaman up in a cab, and he paid the fine.
14870. And that was the first step you took towards living with the Chinese? Yes.
14871. Did you carry on with any European while you were living with the Chinamen? When I was living with the Chinese a European would take me to a dance occasionally.
14872. Where was the dance? In Essex-street.
14873. You were never married? No.
14874. Did you have any children by the European? No.
14875. But you have had three by a Chinaman? Yes.
14876. Did he ever offer to marry you? Yes; and I refused.
14877. Do you know of any serious cases of disease being contracted by girls living with Chinamen? No.
14878. Are the Chinese clean as a rule, so far as freedom from disease is concerned? I cannot say.
14879. You can speak of those you have been in the habit of having sexual intercourse with? I have never experienced anything to the contrary.
14880. Do girls that smoke opium also drink liquor? I never saw a heavy opium-smoker drink.
14881. Are you a heavy smoker? No; I cannot say I am a heavy smoker; 2s. 6d. a day is not much.
14882. What would you consider heavy opium-smoking? 5s. worth a day would be heavy.
14883. Do you know any white girl that smokes to that extent? Yes; I have known them in different parts;—not in Exeter-place.
14884. Where do they live? I cannot tell you where they live. They go to Goulburn-street to smoke. I am only repeating what they tell me.
14885. Do you ever go to an opium-smoking den in Goulburn-street? No.
14886. And you say opium-smoking does not make you stupid? No; it does not.
14887. Is it not a fact that girls have been made stupid by smoking opium? It may be.
14888. When did you first take to smoking opium? When I came out of gaol.
14889. When you took up with the Chinaman; was it at his invitation? No; it was the girl ——
14890. Have you had a fair education;—did you attend the Public Schools? No; I attended the Catholic School in Young.
14891. Are there any Chinese informers living in Exeter-place? That is more than I know.
14892. Do you know Long Pen? No.
14893. Or Paw Chee? No.
14894. You know nobody;—is that it? I do not know them.
14895. Is it not a fact that in your street there are several houses kept for purposes of prostitution? I have never seen them.
14896. Do you not know a house of that kind where bad girls are living a little higher up, and near where Miss —— lived? I am not outside all day. I do not know what is going on in the streets.
14897. Are you living alone? No; I live with another girl in Exeter-place. There are only two of us and my little girl. The girl's husband comes in three times a week—that is, the man she is living with.
14898. Is he a Chinaman? Yes; he has a garden at Auburn.
14899. Where had you been living with the Chinaman for the last five years? In Wexford-street.
14900. Where did you pick up with the half-caste man who is now in Hay? I went to school with him at Young.
14901. Is he a native of Young? Yes.
14902. Did you have any connection with him in Young? No.
14903. Where did you next see him? In Hay.
14904. How came you to go there? I went up to see him. He sent for me; but that was after I began living with the Chinaman.
14905. After you left Young, where was the next place you saw this half-caste? In Armidale, where I went with the father of my children. I went first to Newcastle, then to other places, and finally Armidale, where I met my old school-mate, the half-caste, who had a blacksmith's shop there. I had a row with the man I was living with, and went to live with the half-caste.
14906. As his wife? Yes; but he left there and went to Hay, and I went to Tingha with my children's father. Then I left him again, and went to Young, where I stayed a fortnight, and then went back to Hay again, where the half-caste was.
14907. How long did you stay there? Two months, and then I went to Sydney.
14908. There is a large Chinese camp in Hay, is there not? Yes.
14909. About how many Chinese are there? About 400 or 500.
14910. Are there many European women there? Yes, a good few, all old hands from Sydney, and all opium-smokers. The police took a lot of them up, and those who stayed had to marry the Chinamen.
14911. How long ago is that? About eighteen months ago.
14912. And those who remained were given the option of marrying the Chinamen? Yes.
14913. In the Chinese camp at Hay were there not some horrible scenes enacted among the Chinese with white women? I did not live in the camp.
14914. Did you hear of anything of the kind? No, I did not.
14915. You did not live at the camp? No; I lived at a store.
14916. Did you live with the half-caste? Yes; we lived in two or three rooms at the back.
14917. You never had any children by him? No.
14918. When you left him there you came to Sydney? Yes. He went up country shearing, and I got out a summons against the father of my children for him to contribute to their maintenance. I have seen him every day since, and have smoked with him, and so on.
14919. You have had intercourse with him? Yes; when I got the summons out he asked me not to go against him, and he paid me for the children.

- 14919½. Has he ever ill-treated you? No.
14920. He has always been kind to you? Yes.
14921. Do you know of any cases like your own, where respectable girls have been waylaid and decoyed by girls of low and more experienced in vice, and brought down to the Chinese quarters—have any such cases as that come within your personal knowledge? No.
14922. Have you any acquaintances who have told you that their virtue has been taken away in that manner? I would not take any notice of what they say; they sometimes say things they do not really mean.
14923. Do you take regular trips up country? No.
14924. Have you never left Sydney since the last time you came down from Hay? No.
14925. What house is it where you go to smoke opium? I go to Ellen _____'s place.
14926. Do you pay her for the opium? No; the father of my children buys it for me; and I take it to her place and smoke it. She mixes it for me and I mix it for her.
14927. What do you do with the ash? Sell it. You can get from 15s. to £1 for a lb. I have seen it as high as 22s. 6d. per lb.
14928. How long does it take you to sell a pound? I could not tell you. I have never noticed. It takes a lot to weigh a pound. I never save it myself, when I smoke in my friend's house.
14929. Do you intend to pick up with this Chinaman again whom you have been living with—the father of your children? No.
14930. Do you intend to leave Sydney? Not yet awhile.
14931. Is it your intention to lead a different life? I am going to be married at Christmas.
14932. To whom? To the half-caste I was living with at Hay.
14933. Is it not possible for you to give over opium-smoking? I have tried.
14934. Did you succeed? No, there was too much of it about. When you see it, and want it, you must have it.
14935. But if you were away from these dens you would, I suppose, be able to gradually break yourself of this habit? Yes, I intend to knock it off at Christmas.
14936. Supposing you broke yourself of smoking opium, do you think you would take to drinking spirits? No; I never did drink anything much.
14937. You never had a liking for it? No.
14938. This opium-smoking has a terrible power over you when you take to it? Yes. It is very hard to knock it off, although there are Chinamen who have been smoking for twenty years and have knocked it off.
14939. Does opium-smoking have a tendency to make a person lustful? No. It makes them the other way. They have no inclination at all, when they smoke very heavy.
14940. If anybody has stated that opium-smoking has the effect of making people stupid, so that they do not know what they are doing, or what is being done to them, do you think that would be true? No. It is not true. It has never done so with me.
14941. It has not the same effect as drink? No.
14942. What is the effect on you—does it produce pleasant dreams? No. I have not experienced that.
14943. What does it produce—sickness? It does if I do not have a smoke.
14944. Does it spoil your appetite? No. I cannot eat anything at all until I smoke.
14945. How often do you smoke in the day? Twice a day.
14946. I suppose you must be regular with the pipe, otherwise it will make you sick and languid? Yes.
14947. Are there a large number of girls in that portion of the town who smoke opium? Yes a good few.
14948. Are there any white men visiting these places to smoke opium? None at all.
14949. Are there any Lascars or Coolies? No. They do not go to that end of the town at all.
14950. The Commission have seen eight or nine of them in one place in Wexford-street? I have not seen them. I do not go into any place in Wexford-street, but one. That is where I was living.
14951. Now, is it not a fact that half the houses in Wexford-street are houses of ill-fame? There are a few of them there.
14952. Do the police ever take any notice of these things down there? They are always in and out of the places.
14953. Do you visit any gambling-place? No.
14954. Have you ever gambled in your life? No.
14955. Did you ever take any chances in the pak-ah-pu lottery? Yes. I used to buy the tickets.
14956. Did you buy them to any large extent? I used to buy the 6d. tickets.
14957. Did you mark them yourself? Yes.
14958. Did you ever win anything? I won 9s. 2d. That was the most I ever won.
14959. Mr. Quong Tart.] You say a young woman first brought you down to Sydney from Young? Yes.
14960. Did she ever receive any benefit from you? No.
14961. With regard to opium-smoking, do not you think it will injure your health if you persist in it? It has never interfered with my health.
14962. You have had good opportunities of judging of the Chinese in Sydney. Do you think the best class of them are opium-smokers—say the merchants? I do not know about the merchants.
14963. Now, complaints have been made against the Chinese that they entice young girls from their homes and seduce them. Do you think from your experience that there is much truth in that? I do not believe that. The Chinese cannot make them go if they do not want to.
14964. Mr. Abigail.] You have never heard of a case where a young girl has been entrapped into a Chinese house and betrayed or seduced? No. I never heard of a case of that kind. No one could make them go if they did not want to go.
14965. Mr. Quong Tart.] When once you begin to smoke opium you must have it at a regular hour of the day, is it not so? Not exactly a regular hour, but if you use yourself to have it twice a day you look for it.
14966. Mr. Hawthorne.] Do you have regular hours of the day at which you smoke? Yes. I have lost the best part of to-day.
14967. Do you feel the effects of it? Yes.
14968. What do you do supposing you are travelling away to Newcastle or further? I will show you. [Producing a large brown pill.] I take this.
14969. Mr. Abigail.] What is that you have shown us? That is opium. [14970.]

Margaret —.

14 Dec., 1891.

- Margaret—
14 Dec., 1891.
14970. You take it in that form when you cannot get a smoke? Yes; I break it in two and crush it up small.
14971. How much is that pill worth? About 2d.
14972. Mr. Quong Tart.] If we kept you here for a long time to-day would you want to take it? Yes; that is what I brought it for.
14973. Do you not think that is a very evil habit, seeing that you cannot do without it? Everyone to their fancy.
14974. You have to take your smoke before you go to bed at night? I never go to bed at night. I do not go until the morning. I have not been to sleep yet. I got up at half-past 3 yesterday morning and have not been to bed since.
14975. Mr. Abigail.] How long could you go without sleep? I am all right as long as I have a smoke.
14976. Would it not be better to knock it off altogether? I suppose it would.
14977. Mr. Quong Tart.] How are you going to leave off opium-smoking? I suppose I must go to the doctor and get some medicine.
14978. Mr. Abigail.] I think you said you are going to get married at Christmas? Yes.
14979. Have you been in the Church Home? No.
14980. I think you have said that opium-smoking will not produce unconsciousness so that a young girl under its influence would not know what was being done to her? I have never heard of such a thing. It has never done so to me. In fact it has never taken any effect upon me at all.
14981. Except to create a craving for the drug? That is all.
14982. Have you heard that one effect of using opium is to destroy the appetite for intoxicating drinks? I have heard of cases where heavy drinkers have taken to opium, and have never thought of drinking afterwards. But some girls both smoke and drink too.
14983. You are certain that opium could not be administered to a girl as a drug to bring her into a semi-unconscious state? Yes.
14984. How long have you been opium-smoking? For five years. I kept on smoking until I acquired the habit.
14985. Had you acquired the habit before you went to live permanently with your Chinaman? No.
14986. Now, about the effect of opium hunger, does it affect the children of the woman who is a regular smoker and has acquired the habit. In other words would a child of such a mother have a desire for opium? Yes; in infancy they have the same habits as the mother. They are born with it.
14987. In giving that information you are speaking from personal knowledge of a case? I am giving you my own case.
14988. In view of that do you not think it would be worth your while to give up the habit? It is only while they are on the breast that it affects them. When I am opium sick they are sick, and as soon as I have my smoke they are all right.
14989. When they grow up does it affect them? No, only while they are on the breast.
14990. Mr. Hawthorne.] I suppose it is safe to assume that that little one of yours has not been taught the habit of smoking opium? No, she never sees me smoke.
14991. Seeing that you would not allow your child to smoke the inference is that you consider it a vicious habit? Yes, I never allow her near me when I am smoking or to see me.
14992. At what time of the day do you smoke? In the morning. Two o'clock is the earliest I go to bed.
14993. Is it customary for European women who live with Chinamen, and who smoke opium, to keep similar hours? Yes.
14994. What is the object of sitting up so late? To smoke. They get into the habit of it. They smoke so much at night that they sleep late in the day, and then they must smoke again when their time comes.
14995. The opium-smoking affects the joints of your body? Yes, particularly the first finger.
14996. Previous to taking up with that Chinaman had you been living in a state of prostitution? No.
14997. How long did you stay in Young after you were seduced? About four months.
14998. Where is the man who seduced you now? In Balmain.
14999. Do you meet him now? I have seen him.
15000. Have you spoken to him? Yes.
15001. Do you have any intercourse with him? No, he is married now.
15002. Does he know the mode of life you have gone in for? Yes.
15003. Has he ever contributed in any way towards your support since he seduced you? No.
15004. Mr. McKillop.] Did you ever tell him he was the cause of your being in your present position? Yes.
15005. What is his name? H——— J———.
15006. Up to the time of your seduction by this man had you lived a pure and virtuous life? Yes.
15007. You thought he meant to marry you? He wanted to marry me, but my mother would not let him.
15008. Was he not a respectable man? No. His father used to get into trouble, and he used to get into trouble too. My mother did not approve of it at all.
15009. Is your mother in a respectable position? Yes.
15010. Do you keep up any correspondence? None at all.
15011. Then you are to all intents and purposes an outcast? Yes, they never think of me and I never think of them.

[The witness withdrew.]

Minnie ——— called and examined:—

- Minnie ———
14 Dec., 1891.
15012. Mr. Abigail.] Where do you live? In Cambridge-street.
15013. Are you living with a Chinaman? Yes.
15014. How long have you been living with this Chinaman? About seven months. I have been about five years with them altogether.
15015. During that time how many Chinese have you lived with altogether? Two.
15016. What has been the nature of the treatment you have received from them? I have received every kindness from them.
15017. What business does the man follow whom you are living with now? He is a cook.

15018.

Minnie —
14 Dec., 1891.

15018. Does he come home daily? No; he comes home twice or three times a week.
15019. Does he supply you with what money you want for the house and for yourself? Yes.
15020. And you keep yourself faithful to him now? Yes.
15021. Does any other man visit you? No.
15022. Do you smoke opium? Not now; I used to.
15023. How long ago is it since you stopped? About ten months ago.
15024. How long had you been smoking up to that time? Very nearly three years.
15025. How much opium per day did you smoke? Three or four shillings worth.
15026. That would be considered heavy? Yes.
15027. How often did you smoke in the day? Three times.
15028. At what hours? Generally when I got up in the morning I would have a few pipes—at about 10 or 11 o'clock; the second smoke I would have at 3 or 4 o'clock in the afternoon; and then at night about an hour before I went to bed.
15029. That would be about 11 or 12 o'clock? Yes.
15030. Now, what effect has opium-smoking upon you? It is a habit; that is all.
15031. I know that it must have some effect. If a person takes grog it makes him dull or quarrelsome, as the case may be. Now, what I want to know from you is, the effect of opium;—does it make you dream, or ardently desire anything; or does it make you simply stupid and helpless? It has no more effect upon me than an ordinary smoke.
15032. That is very strange. We have been told it has a very decided effect? It might have, but I have never experienced it.
15033. Have you ever heard of it rendering a woman unconscious so that she would not know what was done to her in any way? No. And I do not think it would unless she was under the influence of drink, and then it would take effect very quickly.
15034. Do you think that if a woman took 3s. worth of opium, and she lay down, that it would so affect her that any person could take liberties with her without her knowing it? No. It has never affected me in that way. It would make you feel drowsy or sleepy quicker if one drank, but it has never affected me that way.
15035. Then if a woman has sworn that when she is under the influence of opium a man could do what he liked with her, and she would know nothing about it, that would not be correct so far as your experience is concerned? No, I would not believe it.
15036. While you were taking opium did you drink? No.
15037. Did you ever? Oh, yes; but that was before I took to opium-smoking.
15038. The opium destroys the desire for strong drink? Yes. It seems to quieten you altogether. There is no desire to go out and about, or anything, unless a person happens to be of a very lively disposition.
15039. Have you had any children? Yes, two.
15040. Are they alive? One is; nearly eight years old.
15041. Have you heard of children born of a woman who smokes opium being affected with the opium hunger? Oh, yes.
15042. Does the man you are living with smoke opium? No.
15043. Is he in favour of your smoking opium? No. I have not smoked much lately as I told you. I am taking medicine for it.
15044. What treatment have you received altogether from the Chinamen? The best of treatment.
15045. In the first instance I suppose you were seduced by a European? Yes.
15046. Have you ever heard of Chinamen entrapping or inviting virtuous European girls to their places and ruining them? No.
15047. Have you ever heard of virtuous girls being taken to the Chinese quarters by women who have already become degraded? No; I have not.
15048. If you took a heavy smoke of opium at 11 o'clock at night, how long would you sleep? Generally till 10 o'clock in the morning.
15049. Are you a light or a heavy sleeper? I am a light sleeper.
15050. Would you like to see opium done away with altogether? It is nothing to me. If it is done away with we can get medicine to cure us I suppose.
15051. Mr. Hawthorne.] What do you mean by getting medicine to cure you? Well, there is opium in many medicines.
15052. But you do not like it medicinally? I have seen it taken in water; that is in the form of pills. Generally speaking when persons get opium sick they get the stomach-ache, that is one of the effects. I have not smoked much for ten months.
15053. We have had various statements made here as to the feeling that opium-smoking induces;—what is your experience speaking generally? It gives you a drowsy sort of feeling.
15054. Does it send you off into a kind of dreamland? No; it never has me.
15055. If you were to smoke heavily would you have your senses about you the same as you have now? Yes.
15056. It never made you unconscious? No.
15057. So that any statement that may have been made either to this Commission or elsewhere, to the effect that when persons smoke opium and are under its influence they are completely at the mercy of any one who may have a design upon them, is untrue? All I can say is that I do not believe it. Of course if they drank it might have a greater effect.
15058. Did you ever try drink and opium mixed? No.
15059. You have never known it to be done? No.
15060. Supposing some respectable person went home with you this evening, and were induced to smoke opium for the first time with you, would it be possible for her (after she had smoked the opium) to be seduced against her will, do you think? No; I think not.
15061. She would have to be a consenting party? Yes.
15062. And she would be just as strong to resist after smoking the opium as before? Yes.
15063. That is your experience? Yes. I was in a Chinaman's house before I ever thought of smoking opium, and I have sat and waited while they smoked.

- Minnie — 15064. And you have never known an instance where a person has been rendered unconscious from smoking opium? No.
- 14 Dec., 1891. 15065. What induced you to go with the Chinese in the first place;—did you go of your own accord? No.
15066. Who took you among them in the first place? I went in company with other females.
15067. Were they of the prostitute order? Yes.
15068. And did you go simply as a casual visitor to the Chinese quarters in the first instance? Yes. A friend of mine asked me to go and wait for her while she smoked.
15069. Do you think it would be possible for a respectable woman to go to an opium-shop for the purpose of smoking opium and preserve her purity of character? Yes; I have seen it done.
15070. Do you know of any instance where young women have gone into these places to smoke opium without having any improper intercourse with the Chinese whatever? I know plenty of cases. It is just a business-like transaction, the same as if you went into a refreshment-room and had some refreshments.
15071. Are the girls who go to smoke in these places generally of the unfortunate class? I cannot tell that.
15072. Would you take them to be so? Yes. By their appearance I would take them to be so.
15073. Can you call to mind any respectable young person having gone into a Chinese place to smoke opium? No.
15074. Mr. Abigail.] You are a married woman I believe? Yes.
15075. How long have you been separated from your husband? Seven years.
15076. Are you living apart from him on account of his bad treatment of you? Yes, his cruelty and drunkenness.
15077. As a matter of fact did he keep you while you lived together? He did in a sort of a way, when he worked, and when he did not I had to do the best I could.
15078. He wanted you to go out and do the best you could I suppose. And since you left him you have received from the Chinese kindness which has been in great contrast to your husband's treatment of you? Certainly.
15079. Is your husband alive? Yes.
15080. Would you marry a Chinaman if he were dead? I would.
15081. You have found them altogether kind and considerate in every way? Yes.
15082. Have you had any quarrel with the man you are living with? No.
15083. Has he never struck you? No, never.
15084. And has never told you to go out and earn money on the streets? No.
15085. He supplies you with everything you want? Yes; in fact he is very kind.
15086. Mr. McKillop.] How many of you live together in that house? Two.
15087. Are there only you and the other girl? Yes.
15088. Is there any immorality carried on in connection with your occupancy of that place with this other girl? No. We live together there for company.
15089. Is it not a fact that other Chinamen than those you are supposed to be living with visit that place? Yes; certainly they do, but not for immoral purposes.
15090. In short, you are true to your man, and she is true to her man? Yes.
15091. What do they allow you a week? My fellow allows me £1 a week.
15092. What do you pay for the house? Sixteen shillings a week. I pay half the rent, and the other girl pays the other half.
15093. How many rooms are there in the house? Four rooms.
15094. Then you have the other 12s. to keep you in food? Yes.
15095. What do you do for opium? I do not smoke much—about 3d.-worth a day.
15096. You are breaking yourself of the habit? Yes.
15097. Do you drink? Very seldom. I may have a bottle of porter once in a way.
15098. Is 12s. a week enough to keep you? Yes.
15099. Do you get no money from any other source? No.
15100. Does your Chinaman buy you jewellery, and so forth? Yes.
15101. How long have you been in contact with the Chinese altogether? Six or seven years.
15102. Who was the Chinaman you lived with before? Ah Way—he has a cookshop in Campbell-street.
15103. Did you stop there with him? No.
15104. What made you leave him? Because he failed in business. We parted the best of friends. He told me he could not keep me. He was very sorry.
15105. How long were you with him? Three years.
15106. What Chinaman did you live with before him? He was the first Chinaman that I lived with.
15107. But you had intercourse with them before that? Yes.
15108. Is your husband in gaol now? I do not know.
15109. He did get a long sentence, did he not? I know nothing about him.
15110. What made you leave him? His cruelty.
15111. Did you not say to us when we were down your way that your husband got into gaol for embezzlement? No. Somebody said to me that he got into trouble.
15112. You know Mr. H——? Yes.
15113. You were in his employment at one time? Yes.
15114. How long ago was that? I forget. It was before I was married. I was married in 1879.
15115. Mr. Abigail.] What age are you? Twenty-seven.
15116. Then you were about 16 years of age when you were married? Yes.

15122. Did you first become acquainted with him when you were in Mr. H——'s employment? Yes.
15123. Did you bear him any children? Yes—two.
15124. Are they living? One is. It is out at Botany with my sister.
15125. How long were you married to him when he started his ill-treatment? About twelve months. My people were always against the marriage. I got married against their wishes. Consequently, when I went to see them afterwards he did not like it, and we were always rowing about it. 15126.

15126. Is it solely of your own resolve that you are leaving off the opium-smoking? Yes, and the man Minnie—
I am living with advised me to leave off smoking.
15127. Does he smoke? No.
15128. You say that opium-smoking does not make you unconscious, or in such a way that anybody could take liberties with you without your having the power of resistance? No.
15129. It has not the same effect as drink? No.
15130. Does it bring on sickness? If you smoke too heavy it would.
15131. Do you have a pipe in the house you are living in? Yes.
15132. Who does it belong to? It belongs to ——— 15133. Does she smoke heavily? Yes.
15134. Do you often visit the opium-smoking place where we saw you? No.
15135. What brought you there on that occasion? I was asked to go down there to get some opium.
15136. That is a regular opium-smoking den, is it not? I do not know, I never was there before.
15137. Have you been residing in Cambridge-street ever since you have been living with this man? Not all the time. I was living down in Queen-street at one time.
15138. Does your husband know of your present mode of life? I do not know—I never hear of him.
15139. What business was he in? He was a carcass butcher when I married him. He was working for Macnamara.
15140. Do your people know of the unfortunate position you are in? I do not know.
15141. Are both your parents living? No, my mother is dead.
15142. Have you any other relations? Yes.
15143. Do girls that smoke opium also take to drink? Some of them do, and some do not. They do not generally drink.
15144. Are there a number of houses of ill-fame in the locality where you live? Not that I am aware of—not in our street.
15145. Are there not a number of European girls who live with Chinamen in that locality? No, not in Cambridge-street. In Harrington-street and Gloucester-street there are.
15146. Do they live on the same terms as you and these other girls with Chinamen, or are they simply houses of ill-fame? I only know one there, and she is living respectably with a Chinaman.
15147. What is your husband by trade? He is a cook, employed on the North Shore.
15148. In a hotel? No, in a private gentleman's house.
15149. Is it not a fact that there are a number of gambling-houses there? Not that I am aware of.
15150. Do you visit any of the gambling-houses? No.
15151. Do you not buy pak-ah-pu tickets either? No.
15152. But you know what they are I suppose? Yes.
15153. Did you ever mark any of them? No.
15154. Did you go to school when you were young? Yes.
15155. Was it a public school? No.
15156. I believe you occupied a pretty good position when you were in the drapery business, did you not? Yes, I did.
15157. Were you a forewoman? No.
15158. When you separated from your husband was it force of circumstances that drove you on the streets—through not being provided for? Yes.
15159. Did you leave him, or did he leave you? He ill-treated me, and my father took me away from him.
15160. You had borne two children to him by that time? Yes, I had to leave him before, and was away for about two months; I went back again and lived with him for about eleven months; but he got worse instead of better, and I left him again for my father's home. He used to drink very heavily.
15161. Were you faithful to him all that time? Yes; I never went outside unless in his company.
15162. Did you go from your father's home on to the streets? I went to take a situation away out of Sydney, and as soon as I came back I went wrong.
15163. What part did you go to when you took this situation? I went a long way across the water.
15164. Was it not to Noumea that you went? Yes.
15165. Who engaged you to go there? I was engaged by a woman.
15166. Was it not a café you went to? No.
15167. Or a house of prostitution? No, it was a hotel. I was down there before that scandal occurred that you refer to. I remember that.
15168. How long were you in Noumea? I was there about three years ago.
15169. Did you lead a virtuous life there? Yes.
15170. Is it not a fact that a number of girls were taken away from here to Noumea for immoral purposes? Yes; I was there nine months when that happened.
15171. Who engaged you to go there? Madame T———
15172. Were they respectable people that engaged you? Very.
15173. The girls referred to were decoyed there? Yes; the house they were taken to was pulled to pieces afterwards.
15174. Were the girls brought back? Yes, most of them; there is one down there yet, I think. She was there when I left.
15175. Mr. Abigail.] What salary did you receive while you were at that place in Noumea? Twenty-five shillings a week and board.
15176. Had you good accommodation? Yes; there was another young girl engaged as housemaid, and I was barmaid, and we had one room to ourselves.
15177. Mr. McKillop.] Could you speak the language? I could.
15178. Did you learn French when you went to school? I did.
15179. How did you get this engagement? Simply enough. This Frenchman used to keep a refreshment-shop in Lower George-street, and a young girl friend of mine knew the wife. We went in to have a cup of tea one day, and she asked us to go, as they were selling out to start business there. I suddenly decided to go, and my friend went with me. The Frenchman could speak English fluently.
15180. In what part of Lower George-street was this refreshment-room? Nearly down to Circular Quay.
15181. Have you been in any religious home in Sydney? No.

- Minnie—
 14 Dec., 1891. 15182. Do you take regular trips to the country for change of air? No.
 15183. I suppose you do know of girls that take trips into the country, and visit the Chinese camps, do you not? I have heard several of them talking amongst themselves about it, but I do not know whether it was true or not.
 15184. Did you sleep well when you used to be an opium-smoker? Sometimes.
 15185. Does it interfere with your rest at night? No.
 15186. It does not deprive you of sleep? No.
 15187. Do you sleep heavy? No, I do not sleep heavy at any time.
 15188. How long were you employed in the drapery establishment that I referred to a little while ago? I was bound for two years.
 15189. What particular branch of the trade was it—dressmaking? No; millinery.
 15190. And when you were out of your time did you marry? Yes.
 15191. What was your husband's name? K—.
 15192. Do you intend to continue living with the man you are with now? Yes.
 15193. Did you ever live with a European other than your husband? No.
 15194. Mr. Quong Tart.] You know there has been a complaint against the Chinese about their encouraging or decoying young women to their places for immoral purposes. Now I want you to state whether there is any truth in that according to your experience? I never knew of an instance.
 15195. Mr. Abigail.] Then in your experience it is not correct? No.
 15196. Mr. Quong Tart.] If women go to the Chinese houses, either to smoke opium or live with the Chinese, it is their own fault, and not the fault of the Chinese? Quite so; I never knew of a single instance.
 15197. Mr. Abigail.] Do not the Chinese show a preference for European women? Some do.
 15198. Mr. Quong Tart.] Do you know of any case where the Chinese have ill-treated or been unkind to any of their women? No; I think fully half of them come to the Chinese when they have nowhere else to go.
 15199. Mr. Abigail.] Is it because the Chinese are kind to them? That is the main thing, and for the sake of a home.
 15200. In other words, if they can find one Chinaman to support them, it is better than going out night after night to seek for men? Certainly.
 15201. And they prefer one to many? Yes.
 15202. Mr. Quong Tart.] Opium has a peculiar smell, has it not? Yes.
 15203. Complaints have been made about the smell that comes from the Chinamen's places. I suppose you can detect the smell of this opium outside the door, can you not? Yes.
 15204. If you smoke it yourself you cannot smell it so readily? No; you cannot.
 15205. It is difficult to leave off smoking, and you have to do it gradually, I suppose—reducing the amount day by day? Yes.
 15206. One young woman that was here brought an opium pill with her;—is that necessary? She must be a heavy smoker.
 15207. Can you do without it? Yes; because I do not smoke much now. In fact all day I never smoke at all.
 15208. Do you not feel any desire for it? No; I take medicine.
 15209. Mr. Abigail.] When you were employed by Mr. H— were you a virtuous girl? Yes.
 15210. Do you not know where your husband is? The last I heard of him he was at Pyrmont.
 [The witness withdrew.]

 15234. In a lodging-house? It was a boarding-house.
 15235. Were they all girls staying there? There were girls and men, and married couples.
 15236. An ordinary boarding-house? Yes. I stayed there after I left service.
 15237. How came you to be associated with the Chinese—who took you to them first? A young girl—she is dead now. She took me to Queen's-place first.
 15238. What was her object in taking you there? She went to see a bloke. But I had been amongst the Chinese before that in Brisbane.

15239. How did you come to get in with the Chinamen in Brisbane? I stopped at a house in Albert-Pauline street, there.
15240. Is that a Chinese establishment? No. But Chinese used to go there.
15241. Was it a bad house—a house of assignation? Yes.
15242. You went there, and had commerce with the Chinamen? Yes.
15243. Did you pick up with any particular Chinese there? No.
15244. You went with any of them? Well, I did not knock about much with them.
15245. You allowed them to go with you for money from time to time? Yes; but I did not stop with any of them in Brisbane. When I came to Sydney I picked up with one Chinaman.
15246. How long have you lived with this one Chinaman? Nearly four years.
15247. During that time you have not been going with any other men? No.
15248. Have you had any children? I have not had any born alive.
15249. What is the name of your Chinaman? Ah Yow.
15250. What is his age? Twenty-eight.
15251. What does he do for a living? He is a cook.
15252. Where does he work? He is not in Sydney now—he has gone to China.
15253. Where did he work when he was in Sydney? He worked in a hotel.
15254. What wages did he get? Thirty shillings a week.
15255. What did he give you? He paid the rent, and bought tucker and clothes.
15256. Had you the house to yourself? Yes; I had a house of my own.
15257. What rent did you pay? Ten shillings a week. He used to make more than 30s. a week altogether. He used to sell fat, and got 10s. or 15s. for that.
15258. Who are you living with now? Another Chinaman.
15259. What is he? I do not know. He has money in the bank. He goes to Botany every Saturday. I cannot tell you what he is doing now.
15260. Is he in town every day? Every week day, barring Saturday.
15261. Do you not know that he goes to Botany to preside over a fan-tan table? I cannot say.
15262. Do you not think so; or have you never heard anything to that effect? He never told me anything.
15263. Have you not heard so? No.
15264. Then you do not know how he earns his living? He has money in the bank.
15265. Does he keep you well supplied with money? Yes; if I want pocket-money he gives it to me.
15266. Do you get as much as £5 a week from him? I do not know exactly what I get. He pays the rent and expenses of house-keeping, and if I want anything he gives me money to buy it.
15267. Do you smoke opium? Not much; I used to smoke opium, but I am knocking it off. I only use 6d.-worth a day now. I am thinking of going home to see my father in Queensland.
15268. How many people are living in the house with you? Only the other young girl and her man—he works at the North Shore.
15269. You are quite sure you do not know whether the Chinaman you are living with has a gambling-place at Botany? I do not know. I do not ask him.
15270. Does he smoke opium? No.
15271. Have you ever heard from your husband since? No.
15272. Did you run away from him? No; he ran away from me.
15273. Where is he now? I do not know. My father told me he was in Brisbane.
15274. You were married when you were about 16 years of age? Not quite 16.
15275. What was your husband's age? He was nineteen when I married him.
15276. Did you go with other men before you went with the Chinese? I lived with one white man before I went to live with the Chinamen.
15277. Did your husband see the man you lived with coming after you? No.
15278. Do you mean to tell me, after the man who was keeping you left you, that you went straight away to the Chinese quarters? I met with a couple of girls who took me down.
15279. Why did you leave the protection of the man who was keeping you after your husband left you? Because he wanted me to knock about the streets for him.
15280. Where is he now? At Newtown.
15281. You refused to do that, and left him to take up with the Chinese;—did this white man you lived with for a time ever illtreat you? No.
15282. Did you have to do with the Chinese before you left him, and give him the money you got from the Chinese? No.
15283. Then you have had to do with only two Chinamen in this Colony? I lived with another Chinaman when I went to Newcastle.
15284. When you went down to Queen's-place on the first occasion, what occurred? Nothing occurred to me. I simply went down with another girl.
15285. I mean what occurred when you went into the house—there were a number of Chinamen there I suppose? There were three men that lived in the house.
15286. Did they ask you to stay with you? No.
15287. Did you not have any connection with the Chinese when you went to Queen's-place on that occasion? No. This girl that brought me down there took me to the markets, and I picked up with a Chinaman there.
15288. Then you went down to Queen's-place on that occasion for no particular purpose? I went down with that girl who used to live with a fellow there, and she had a row with him.
15289. How long did you stay there? About twenty minutes.
15290. Did you smoke opium in Brisbane? No. I commenced when I came to Sydney.
15291. When you smoke opium now do you smoke it at home, at your own house, or do you go out? I smoke it at home.
15292. Does your husband smoke? No.
15293. Do many Chinese visit your house? No. Sometimes some of his friends may come there.
15294. When you have had your opium-smoke are you conscious of what is going on? Certainly.
15295. It does not make you unconscious so that a man could do anything with you and you not know it? No. You cannot be drugged with opium.

14 Dec., 1891.

15296.

- Pauline— 15296. Is it a fact that men who smoke opium have no desire to have any connection with women? Quite right, they do not.
- 14 Dec., 1891. 15297. Mr. Abigail.] Now I want you to describe to the Commission what is the effect of a good strong smoke of opium? It does not affect you in any way.
15298. Surely it creates some feeling. Do you know what the effect of drink is? I do not touch drink.
15299. Have you ever done so? I have taken some brandy when I was sick; but I have never taken much at any time.
15300. When a person first commences to smoke opium does it make them sick? Yes.
15301. How long does it take you to overcome the sickness? There is no actual sickness; only it makes you feel sick, something like sea-sickness. When you are accustomed to smoke you feel sick until you get your smoke.
15302. Before you are thoroughly seasoned to it will it not make you unconscious? It never made me so.
15303. Supposing it has been stated by a person who visited one of these opium-smoking houses that he saw two or three girls there, only one of whom was conscious, and that after trying to wake the other girls, on questioning the one that was awake, she explained that they were under the influence of opium, and it would be no use trying to wake them for two or three hours;—what would you say to such a statement, Well; they might have been drinking. Opium would not do that.
15304. Now listen to this, from the report of an official visitor to one of these places:—"As I understand they induce these girls in the first instance to enter these places, and then get them to smoke opium, by which they become drugged, and then the Chinese do what they like with them";—have you ever heard of anything like that? No; they would not do anything like that. If you went of your own free will, well and good; but they would not force you to go or to smoke.
15305. You do not think they would resort to any improper means of that kind? No; I know they never forced me. On the contrary, they object to me smoking.
15306. How often do you smoke? Three times a day. That is to say, I used to when I was smoking much.
15307. What did it cost you? Half-a-crown a day.
15308. What does it cost you now? It costs me 6d. a day. I have been knocking it off for three months.
15309. Do you feel better for leaving it off? Yes; a great deal better.
15310. And you would like to get away from the influence of it altogether? Yes; I do not like opium at all.
15311. You say you went to service before you went to live with the Chinamen;—did you follow any other occupation? Yes; I was with a circus.
15312. What payment did you get for that? I got £2 a week.
15313. Whose circus was it? Chiarini's.
15314. Was that in Sydney? I came to Sydney with them, and stayed here for a while.
15315. What induced you to give up that;—was that not a better mode of life than this other that you have been leading? They broke up in Sydney, and I did not want to go where they were going afterwards. They went to New Zealand.
15316. What were your duties in connection with the circus? I used to do statues with another girl.
15317. You did not enter any other circus after that? No.
15318. What treatment have you received generally from the Chinamen you have been living with? Very good treatment.
15319. I think I understood you to say that the European you lived with at Newtown told you to go out on the streets and get money? Yes; when I first went to live with him he kept me for about a month, and then he told me to go on the streets and keep him.
15320. And you objected? I did.
15321. You thought it better to have one Chinaman to live with than to go nightly on the street to solicit men? Yes.
15322. You are quite sure about the effects of opium, that it could not by any means of using it bring about that state of unconsciousness I have described? I do not think so.
15323. What infatuation is there in it that makes the women take to it? I think it is all flashness in the first place when they start to smoke.
15324. Do you smoke cigarettes? Yes.
15325. Mr. Hawthorne.] Since you took up with this man whom you are living with now, have you kept free from prostitution? Yes; I have never had anybody. In fact I have never been outside my own house, I have had such a lot of sickness.
15326. He supplies you with sufficient money to prevent you having to resort to other men? Yes.
15327. And on the whole he treats you kindly? Yes.
15328. Is your father aware that you are living with this Chinaman? No.
15329. Does he write to you? Yes. I have a stepmother, and several sisters and brothers.
15330. Are any of them aware of your present mode of life? No.
15331. You have not at any time of your life, I understand, been what is known as a common prostitute, that is, you have not walked the streets? No.
15332. Mr. Quong Tart.] How did you come to smoke opium in the first instance? I taught myself.
15333. The man you are living with is against you smoking? Yes. He lets me smoke, but he does not like me to do it. As a rule, the Chinese do not like to see any of the girls smoking.
15334. What part did you take in the circus? I used to do statues. There were three girls. One of them used to ride.
15335. What trade did the man follow who lived with you in Newtown? He was a bricklayer.
15336. Did the man you are living with at present ever ask you to go out and keep him? No; he does not care for me to go out at all. In fact I never go outside my own house.
15337. In your experience among the Chinese in Queensland and this Colony did you ever know a Chinaman to decoy a young girl, and get her to smoke opium, and then seduce her? No, I never knew one of them to do it.
15338. What sort of women come to the Chinese places as a rule? As a rule they are women who have fallen. Some of them have left their husbands. I would sooner live with a Chinaman than I would with a white man. The Chinamen know how to treat a woman.
- 15339.

15339. You are getting rid of the opium habit? Yes.
15340. Did you bring any opium with you to-day? No; I shall not want to smoke to-day until I get home.
15341. Do you think it would be a good thing to do away with opium-smoking altogether? I think it would be for the girls.
15342. Mr. Hawthorne.] You left your husband, or he left you, in Queensland? Yes, in Bundaberg; that is where I lived.
15343. How did you come to the Chinese quarters in Brisbane? We often used to go there to the shops.
15344. Mr. McKillop.] You said you stopped at Albert-street? Yes; at _____ 15345. Is not that a house of ill-fame? Yes.
15346. Do the Chinese visit there? Yes.
15347. And it was there you first had intercourse with the Chinese? I used to speak to them.
15348. Did you never go before the doctor to be examined? No.
15349. Were you not registered when you were in _____? I did not stop there that long. I was only a couple of weeks in _____ 15350. Did you come to Sydney by yourself, or under the protection of anybody? I came over with the show.
15351. With the circus? Yes.
15352. Did you apply for an appointment? No, the man who engaged me knew that I was on the stage in Brisbane.
15353. In what capacity were you on the stage? I was a ballet-girl.
15354. Then you came on to Sydney with the circus? Yes; and when they went to New Zealand I left. I then went to service in a cookshop in Pitt-street. Then I picked up with a girl who fetched me down to Queen-street.
15355. Was she a prostitute? Yes.
15356. What was her name? _____. She is dead now. She died in Maitland
15357. Used you to make quarterly or half-yearly trips through the country? No, not now.
15358. Used you formerly to take trips through the country? Not through the country. I used to go from here to Newcastle, and I went to Tamworth also.
15359. You had a man in Newcastle with whom you lived? Yes; a Chinaman.
15360. What was he? A fancy-goods man.
15361. What did you go to Tamworth for? To see a woman who is married to a Chinaman. I had known her some time.
15362. When you were in service in Pitt-street did you carry on with Europeans? No.
15363. You led a virtuous life? I was not virtuous, but I did not knock about.
15364. You did not go about the streets? No.
15365. Do you know any cases of girls getting disease from Chinamen? I do not know of any case.
15366. Is it not a fact that a lot of girls live with Chinamen in the locality you are living in, and that some of them keep common bawdy-houses? There may be: but I cannot say that, for I very seldom go outside my own door.
15367. Do you drink at all? I have taken a little, but I do not drink as the saying is.
15368. I think you said that you have been ailing lately? I have been sick this three or four months.
15369. You have never had any children born alive? No; I have never had a full-grown child.
15370. Did you ever have an operation performed on you for the purpose of procuring abortion? Never.
15372. Do they insist on the women being the same? Yes. They like cleanliness. If you are dirty they will quickly tell you so; if you have dirty clothes on, for instance.

TUESDAY, 15 DECEMBER, 1891.

Present:—

THE MAYOR OF SYDNEY (MR. ALDERMAN MANNING, J.P.), PRESIDENT.

FRANCIS ABIGAIL, Esq., VICE-PRESIDENT.

RAMSEY M'KILLOP, Esq., | QUONG TART, Esq.,
JOHN STUART HAWTHORNE, Esq.

War Hop called and examined:—

15373. President.] What are you? I am a gardener.
15374. Where is your garden? At North Shore.
15375. How many acres of land do you cultivate? Eight acres.
15376. What rent do you pay for the land? I pay £44 a year.
15377. Who is your landlord? Mr. Watson.
15378. How long have you been in occupation of the land? I have been there six years. Formerly I had a garden of Mr. Forsyth, on the North Shore.
15379. How long have you been gardening on the North Shore altogether? Thirteen years.
15380. How many have you assisting you to work the 8 acres? Six men.
15381. Are they wage men or partners sharing in the profits, whatever they may be? They are all employed by me at a weekly wage—£1 a week and found.
15382. Do you all sleep in one room? No; there are three rooms in my house, and the men sleep two in a room.
15383. Do the men work constantly from Monday morning till Saturday night? Yes.
15384. How many hours a day do they work on an average? They average 11 hours a day.
15385. What does it cost you to board your men? About 8s. a week.
15386. Of what nature is the food you give them? A little beef or pork and cabbage with rice, and sometimes a little salt fish.

War Hop
15 Dec., 1891

15387.

- War Hop. 15387. When the men knock off work on Saturday night do they come into town? No.
 15388. Do they never leave the premises? When the work is done they wash themselves and go to bed.
 15 Dec., 1891. 15389. Is it customary for Chinese workmen, such as cabinet-makers and gardeners, to perform these ablutions nightly? Yes.
 15390. It is a general custom among the Chinese? Yes.
 15391. Is it part of their religion to do that? It is partly from the teachings of our mothers in our youth.
 15392. How do you fertilise your land? We use bone-dust and horse-dung.
 15393. Do you use human excreta? No.
 15394. What becomes of the excreta on your premises? We use it about the fruit-trees.
 15395. How much land have you sown in fruit-trees? A little over 1 acre.
 15396. Have you got any orange-trees there? No; I have apples and peaches.
 15397. Do any women visit your camp? No.
 15398. Do any of your men smoke opium on the premises? No.
 15399. Have you any objection to their smoking opium? I would not like them to smoke opium.
 15400. When they leave your premises to come to town do they not smoke opium in the dens where it is carried on? That I cannot say.
 15401. If your men did make a practice of smoking opium, would you consider them as efficient as workmen? No. They would not be fit for work, and I would not have them.
 15402. Have you amassed a considerable sum of money during your thirteen years labour in Australia? No; we have not had very good seasons. I have saved a little over £100.
 15403. Is that independently of your stock? Yes.
 15404. How many horses and carts have you got? Only one horse and cart.
 15405. Have you got any relations in Lower George-street? No; I have no relations in Sydney at all, and I am always on my garden. One of my men comes into town with the cart.
 15406. What objection have you to human manure for fertilising the land? It is not as good as bone-dust and horse-dung; but it is far better for fruit.
 15407. Is it not a good forcing manure for vegetables—lettuce, for instance? It is good for lettuce.
 15408. Do you not know that your countrymen use it pretty largely for such vegetables? I do not know whether they do or not; I know I do not in my garden.
 15409. What quantity of bone-dust do you use in a year? Fifteen or 16 tons.
 15410. How much a ton do you pay? £5 a ton.
 15411. Is all the land you have got—18 acres—under cultivation? Yes.
 15412. Then you fertilise it to the extent of about 2 tons of bone-dust per acre per year? Yes; in addition to horse-dung.
 15413. Do you use much horse-dung? We use four loads of horse-dung every week.
 15414. That would be twenty-five loads of horse-dung per acre per year? Yes.
 15415. That is an enormous amount of fertilising material;—are you quite sure about your quantities? Yes. I have gone rather under than over the mark.
 15416. What do you pay a load for horse manure? Sometimes we get it for nothing—for carting it away; sometimes we pay 2s. a load.
 15417. Do you know Cheang Ah Tick? Yes.
 15418. Has he not a market-garden or orchard at North Shore? Yes.
 15419. How many acres has he under cultivation? About twenty.
 15420. Has he any interest in gardens about Waterloo or Botany? I do not know that.
 15421. Have you any interest in Waterloo or Botany gardens? No.
 15422. Have you ever employed white men about your gardens? No.
 15423. Does Cheang Ah Tick ever employ white people? No; all Chinamen.
 15424. Does he import the Chinamen? No; he engages them here.
 15425. Do you know what wages Cheang Ah Tick pays his Chinamen that work for him? No, I do not.
 15426. Is it not a fact that a Chinaman can easily be obtained for 10s. a week and board? You could get an old man for that, or a cripple, but not a good man.
 15427. Is the ruling rate what you pay—£1 a week and board? Yes.
 15428. Mr. McKillop.] Are you sure that you do not use human excreta or urine for manuring your land sown in vegetables? Yes, I am quite sure.
 15429. Where do you say your garden is? It is between North Sydney and North Willoughby.
 15430. How many gardens are there on the North Shore? There are about thirty gardens there.
 15431. Do any of these gardens use human excreta or urine for manure? I do not know.
 15432. Are you the sole proprietor of your garden? Yes.
 15433. What are your yearly profits? So far we have been working at a loss. We have a lease of twelve years. For the first five years we do not expect to make much, as it takes time to clear and cultivate the land. But afterwards we shall make it.
 15434. Do you mean to say it has taken you five years to get your garden to perfection? Quite true. We have made no money for five years.
 15435. What I ask is, does it take five years to bring a vegetable garden to perfection? It would take five years to get a vegetable garden like this one is now. But we could have stuff to sell in twelve months.
 15436. Is your orchard separate from the vegetable garden? It is divided from the vegetables.
 15437. Do you not grow vegetables in between? We grow pumpkins, water-melons, and pie-melons.
 15438. You have stated that you are working the garden at a loss;—who pays that loss? We run an account with the man who supplies us with provisions. He holds security for what we owe over the plant.
 15439. What rent do you pay for the 8 acres? £44 a year.
 15440. Is that the whole extent of your leasehold? Yes.
 15441. And you have got a lease for twelve years. How many men work at the garden besides yourself? Six men besides myself.
 15442. And you pay all these men at a weekly wage? Yes.
 15443. All the profits go to you? Yes. If I make any profit I receive it, and if any losses I have to pay them.
 15444. How long have you been losing money? Four years.

15445. Have you got a good banking account? No.
15446. You stated to the President that you had £100 to the good? Yes.
15447. Then have you not been drawing from your banking account to pay for your losses? That £100 is what I have made since I have been in the Colony; I have not touched that yet.
15448. You are in debt to the various storekeepers you say? Yes.
15449. Then they do not know anything about the £100, I suppose? It is in China. I sent it home.
15450. Are there any Chinese gardens in close proximity to your garden? A few.
15451. Are they large gardens? No; they are little ones.
15452. Have you seen them using human manure or urine? No.
15453. Is it not a fact that you do use this human manure, after reducing it to a weak state, to sprinkle over the vegetables? No; I am quite certain I do not use it at all—neither I nor my men.
15454. Have you ever visited the gardens in Waterloo or Botany? No.
15455. Now, do you not know, with your thirteen years' experience, that many of your countrymen use this human manure and urine for the purpose of fertilising their gardens? I have heard that it has been used.
15456. Do you consider the use of it detrimental to the vegetables? Not having used it I cannot say.
15457. Have you never used it in your own country? No; I was not a gardener at home. I have taken to gardening since I came out here.
15458. Are you in partnership with any business in the city? No.
15459. Is it not a fact that you have an interest in some gambling-places in Goulburn-street? No.
15460. But you visit them? No.
15461. Do you believe in gambling? No; it is no good.
15462. Do you approve of opium-smoking? No; it is no good.
15463. Are you a married man? I have a wife in China.
15464. Does not a white woman visit you every week. Do not white women go to the gardens at all? Only the friends that come on Sunday to look at the gardens. The daughters of the landlord come to the gardens on Sunday sometimes.
15465. Would you like to bring your wife out here from China? It would be very good, but it would be too expensive to bring her out here, especially as I am not making much money where I am.
15466. Have you been thirteen years following the occupation of a gardener? Yes.
15467. Is your garden the largest in North Willoughby? No.
15468. Have you many fruit-trees in your orchard? One acre of fruit.
15469. If you are suffering a loss all the time, would it not be far better to give it up? I am bound to it—I have a lease of the ground.
15470. Cannot you get a purchaser for it? No.
15471. Have you ever put it in the market for sale? No; but I would be very willing to get rid of it if anyone would take it off my hands.
15472. How is it you are making no profit, seeing that those who are running vegetable gardens in Waterloo and Botany are making a very fair thing out of it? You will find that plenty of them are making no money. A good many of them have lost a lot of capital.
15473. Do you sell your vegetables cheaper than the Europeans? No. The English and Chinese all sell the same price at the markets.
15474. Would it not be a good thing if you could come to some kind of compact with the European gardeners, so as to get a fair return for the trouble and expense you are put to? Yes.
15475. Have the Europeans ever been approached on the subject? No.
15476. Do you consider it would be advisable to approach them? Yes.
15477. I asked that question because you have stated that you have been losing money for the last five years, and it would be in your interest, and that of the other gardeners in the community, to come to some arrangements, so that you would all get a better return for your outlay and labour, and make the general public pay for your losses? That would be a very good thing.

Quin Young called and examined:—

15478. President.] Where do you reside? At Rushcutters' Bay.
15479. Do you carry on a market-garden there? Yes.
15480. How many acres do you cultivate? About 9 acres.
15481. Who is your landlord? Mr. Cooper, I think.
15482. What rent do you pay for the 9 acres? I pay £80 a quarter.
15483. Your garden is near the bridge at Rushcutters' Bay, is it not? Yes.
15484. How long have you been there? About seven years.
15485. How many men do you employ? I have about nine men working for me.
15486. How much a week do you pay them? Some of them I pay 18s. and some £1 a week.
15487. And you board them, I suppose? Yes.
15488. How long have you been in this Colony? I have been in Sydney about nine years.
15489. And how long have you been in Australia altogether? Eighteen years.
15490. Had you any capital when you came here first? No.
15491. And you have worked hard ever since? Yes.
15492. How many hours a day do the men work in your garden? They do not go by the hours so much. They work from daylight until dark. About this time of the year they would work from thirteen to fourteen hours a day.
15493. They average from ten to fourteen hours a day? Yes.
15494. What do you feed them on? Rice and meat, beef, fish, and other things.
15495. What does it cost you per week to feed one of your men, on the average? From 10s. to 12s. a week.
15496. How many rooms are there in the house in which your men sleep? I think four rooms.
15497. How many men sleep in one room? Some four or five sleep in one big room. In the smaller rooms two sleep.
15498. Do they smoke opium there? No, not in my garden.

Quin Young.
15 Dec., 1891.

- Quin Young. 15499. Have you an objection to men who smoke opium? I do not like it.
 15500. Is it because it affects their ability to work? Yes; I do not think they are fit to work if they 15 Dec., 1891. smoke opium.
 15501. Do you allow gambling in your garden? No.
 15502. When your men have finished their work, do they stop in the house? Yes. They have to be up at daylight.
 15503. When did you first start business in Sydney? It is about nine years this Christmas.
 15504. What wages did you pay when you first started business? About 14s. a week.
 15505. And now you have to pay 18s. or £1 a week? Yes.
 15506. How is it you have to pay more now? Because we cannot get the men to work. There are not so many Chinese now.
 15507. Is that by reason of the operation of the poll-tax? I think so.
 15508. Do you know anything about the wages your countrymen get at cabinet-making? No; I do not know anything about that.
 15509. How do you dispose of the products of your garden—do you send it down to market? No; I supply customers in Sydney.
 15510. Do you supply the large hotels? Some of them.
 15511. You do not send your vegetables to market, but get your hawkers to take it direct to your customers. How many of such hawkers have you employed? I have two horses and carts, and I have a shop in Castlereagh-street.
 15512. You do not send your stuff to the markets in town much? No.
 15513. What hotels do you supply? The "Grosvenor," the "Australia," "Potty's," the "Royal," the "Metropolitan," the Union Club, the Australian Club, and I used to supply the Reform Club.
 15514. You send your vegetables direct from the garden every morning to those places? Yes.
 15515. Do you know any other of your countrymen who have the same kind of business as yourself? I know a lot, but they have not so large a business as mine.
 15516. Do you know if there are many European market-gardeners? I know some.
 15517. Within 5 miles of Sydney, I mean? I cannot say that. About nine years ago there used to be a lot, but not now.
 15518. There are not so many now as there used to be within a radius of 5 miles of Sydney? No.
 15519. Do your men work on Sundays? Sometimes; not often.
 15520. They do not pursue their ordinary daily work on Sunday? No; they only get ready for Monday morning.
 15521. I suppose they water the garden on Sunday? Yes; in the morning.
 15522. And in the evening they get the vegetables ready to send to the market the next day? In the morning they do that. Sometimes in the afternoon on Sundays they put a little water on them.
 15523. As a matter of fact your men do not work of Sundays except for an hour or two doing what you consider to be necessary work for the garden, that is, watering and getting ready for the next day's market? Yes, that is all.
 15524. Do you pay any overtime to your men? No; not to my countrymen.
 15525. Are all of your men on daily wages? No; I have a good many partners in the garden. They share in the profits.
 15526. Do you pay any of your men by piece-work? No.
 15527. Do you pay them regularly every week or month? Sometimes I pay them by the year, and if they want any money during the year they come and get it. Sometimes they get it every week.
 15528. Is there not an arrangement among the Chinese gardeners by which they fix a price for the vegetables they sell? No; there is nothing like that.
 15529. The market prices are regulated by the demand? Yes.
 15530. Can you tell me how many of your countrymen are employed in and around Sydney as market gardeners? I cannot tell; but I know there are a good many.
 15531. Do you think there are a thousand—including Waterloo? Yes; there are at least a thousand, I should say.
 15532. You have 9 acres of land and about nine men employed; that is a man to the acre;—do all other gardeners average a man to the acre? Some of them do not.
 15533. Is that about the average? Yes.
 15534. What acreage do you take up as a rule, or what would you consider a good holding;—have many of your countrymen more than 9 acres? Yes; a good many have more than 20 acres.
 15535. What rent do your countrymen pay at Waterloo? They get their land very cheap. I pay more than any of them. Some of the gardens out Waterloo way now are held very cheap. But gardeners cannot make much now; wages are too high.
 15536. In cases where Chinamen have had to give up their gardens because they could not pay the rent, and the gardens have been allowed to go to ruin, have other Chinamen taken those gardens up? In some cases.
 15537. Supposing one of your people abandon a garden because the rent is too high, would another of your countrymen come in and take it up at the old rent? No.
 15538. Is that because of a compact among the Chinese not to come into competition with one another in this way? No.
 15539. Do the Chinese send many vegetables from the country, this side of Bathurst, especially such places as Penrith? Yes; they send some from Bathurst and Orange.
 15540. What vegetables do they send down? Cabbages chiefly, and pumpkins in the season.
 15541. Do they send down any potatoes? No.
 15542. On the southern line—from Goulburn, for instance, would there be much sent down? Yes; a good deal from Goulburn.
 15543. The same class of vegetables, I suppose, but chiefly cabbages? Yes; but sometimes they are sent up from here.
 15544. Do you know anything about the vegetable trade from Melbourne? Yes, I know something.
 15545. What comes from Melbourne? Cauliflower chiefly.
 15546. Are they all grown by Chinese? No; some are grown by Chinese, but the most are grown by Englishmen. 15547.

Quin Young,
15 Dec., 1891.

15547. What sort of manure do you use? Stable manure.
 15548. Do you use any bone-dust? Sometimes.
 15549. How much a year do you use? Not so much now. Perhaps 4 or 5 tons a year.
 15550. You use a lot of horse dung? Yes.
 15551. Do you use human excreta or urine? No.
 15552. What do you do with the human waste from your own establishment? Take it away and bury it in the ground.
 15553. Is not that wasteful? I am too near the people that pass to use it for manure for the garden.
 15554. Otherwise you would regard it as very good manure, I suppose? It is very good manure. In Melbourne the people use it.
 15555. I suppose if you used the human waste you could smell it from the road? Yes; you could smell it a half-a-mile off.
 15556. Mr. Abigail.] How many partners have you? I have four partners.
 15557. Are they included in these nine men you have spoken of? Yes.
 15558. Then you have your partners and five wage men? Yes.
 15559. And have they all been with you for nine years? Yes.
 15560. Have you found it profitable work? Sometimes there is not much profit. The rent is too high.
 15561. You have said that you pay more rent than any of the other gardeners;—how is that? Because the gardens are so near to Sydney.
 15562. Is it not because the soil is very rich? Yes; the ground is very good too.
 15563. About how much profit do you make per year among the four of you? We cannot make much; about £50 a year each.
 15564. That is not more than you are paying the men who are working for you? No.
 15565. Were you a gardener in China? No.
 15566. What would men such as you employ as gardeners receive as wages in China? Not much. Not more than 4s. or 5s. a month.
 15567. What would it cost to keep a man in China the same as you keep your men here? Food is very cheap there. They could be fed for about 3d. a day.
 15568. Could you feed the same as you feed them here for that? Yes.
 15569. Then it costs you four times as much to feed a man here as it would in China? Yes.
 15570. And the wage you give them here is twenty times as great as you would pay in China? Yes.
 15571. Are you a married man? Yes; my wife is in China.
 15572. Would you bring your wife here if the poll-tax were taken off? Yes.
 15573. Have you any family? I have one boy. I may say I am naturalised in Victoria. I was naturalised eleven years ago.
 15574. Mr. Hawthorne.] How long have you been out here? Eighteen years.
 15575. How long have you been in New South Wales? Nine years.
 15576. You stated just now, in answer to Mr. Abigail, that you would bring your wife out here only for the poll-tax? Yes.
 15577. But the poll-tax was not always on? No; but before that I could not afford it. I had no money.
 15578. How is it that you have made all your money since the poll-tax was put on? Well, sometimes I have been a little lucky, you know.
 15579. I understood you to say just now that you only made £50 a year profit? I was then referring to the garden. I have made money in my business outside of that.
 15580. Mr. Abigail.] You have not seen your wife for eighteen years? No.
 15581. And you have not had a European wife here during that time? No.
 15582. What other business have you in Sydney? Only supplying vegetables.
 15583. Are you not a member of any syndicate owning any kind of property or business in Sydney? No.
 15584. Have you any interest in any garden besides the one you have mentioned? Yes; I have an interest in one in Guildford. There are 10 acres.
 15585. How many people are employed on it? Five men.
 15586. How do you pay them? They are paid 18s. and £1 a week.
 15587. What is done with the produce of the garden? It is sent down to me.
 15588. Then you do not grow all the vegetables necessary to supply your customers at the Rushcutters' Bay garden? No; I could not grow it in four or five gardens.
 15589. You must buy some also? Yes.
 15590. Then, in buying and selling you make a profit;—is it not a mistake to say that you only make £50 a year profit? I have told you that is only out of the garden. Sometimes I make £300 a year, and sometimes £400 or £500 a year.
 15591. What do you make it out of? My business.
 15592. Well, what is your business? I have also a poultry-farm.
 15593. Where is it? At Kogarah.
 15594. What is the extent of it? It is a very big one—about 50 acres.
 15595. How many people have you employed on that? Five.
 15596. How much do you pay them? I pay them 10s. a week there.
 15597. Do they have the run of the poultry? Yes.
 15598. They have the right to kill and eat the poultry;—is that included in the bill of fare? Yes; they can take what they want.
 15599. Have you got the poultry-farm and the garden at Guildford to yourself? In the poultry-farm I have a partner. The Guildford place is my own. I have sunk £300 in the poultry-farm.
 15600. Out of what did you make the £300 that you sunk in the poultry-farm? Out of the vegetable business.
 15601. Have you any other business now? No.
 15602. Are you saving up for the purpose of getting money enough to go home to China? If I save money I will go home.
 15603. About how much money would you think sufficient for you to go home with? I cannot be satisfied yet.

- Quin Young. 15604. You must have some notion as to what sum would suffice you. Supposing you had £1,000 would you go home with that? I would not now.
- 15 Dec., 1891. 15605. Are you going to stop here? I want to make more.
15606. Do not you think you have a right to send for your wife and bring her here, now that you have become a citizen of the country? It would take a lot of trouble to bring her here.
15607. Comparing the condition of your men here with the condition of the same class of men in your country, which country would you say is the best? This country is the best.
15608. You have no doubt about that? No.
15609. Have you any fault to find with the laws of this country? No.
15610. Are you well treated under the laws? Yes.
15611. Do you ever visit the gambling-houses? No.
15612. Have you seen your countrymen opium-smoking? I have seen them sometimes.
15613. Do you know anything about the effects of opium-smoking upon people who indulge in it? I do not. I have not much time to visit these people. I do most of my business with the Europeans.
15614. Mr. Quong Tart.] You have some of the best customers in Sydney? Yes. I am very well satisfied with my customers in Sydney.
15615. You sell superior goods? Yes. If I did not I should lose my customers. But I have never lost a customer since I came to Sydney.
15616. The goods you serve your customers with have nothing to do with the partnership in Rushcutters' Bay? No; this is my own business.
15617. The vegetables you supply to these places you buy from the garden at Rushcutters' Bay? Yes and I keep regular accounts with all the gardens to see how I stand.
15618. You employ five Chinese? Yes.
15619. How long have they been in your employ? A good while. Some of the men go away perhaps in about twelve months, but my partners never go away.
15620. When your Chinese workmen leave you what do they do? Sometimes they go to work on another garden and sometimes they go home.
15621. Have you ever been charged by European gardeners with underselling them? No.
15622. You say you work from twelve to sixteen hours a day;—what price, wholesale, do you sell the cabbages from Rushcutters' Bay? From 6d. to 3s. per dozen.
15623. Now, if you worked eight hours a day on the garden, what price could you sell cabbages at? It would depend upon the market price.
15624. But assuming that the law compelled you to work eight hours a day what price could you sell cabbages at then? I should have to charge 1s. each for them.
15625. Mr. Hawthorne.] If that be so, how is it that we used to get vegetables at a less price than that before the Chinese came? Of course it would depend upon the seasons.
15626. Do you think Europeans could grow cabbages with a very dry season? I do not think so.
15627. Can the Chinese do so? Yes. They like it. They carry the water three times a day. The Europeans will not do that.
15628. Mr. Abigail.] The Chinese put more labour into the work than the Europeans will do? Yes. They are used to it in China.
15629. Mr. Quong Tart.] The Europeans complain that the Chinese gardeners work on Sunday;—is that true, and if so, what kind of work do they do? They wash their shirts, and do everything of that kind.
15630. Do they do much gardening? No, not much gardening. My men do not.
[The witness withdrew.]

Thomas Augustus Smith called and examined:—

- Mr. T. A. Smith. 15631. Mr. Abigail.] You are an alderman of the borough of Botany, Mr. Smith? Yes.
- 15 Dec., 1891. 15632. What business do you carry on? I am a market-gardener.
15633. What is the extent of your garden? Ten acres.
15634. How many men have you employed on it? Three.
15635. Are they Europeans? Two of them are Europeans and one is a Chinese.
15636. What wages do you pay? The Chinese I pay 26s. a week.
15637. Do you also keep him in board? No.
15638. And what do you pay the Europeans? They get 18s. a week and their food.
15639. Do the Chinese perform the same class of work as the Europeans? Yes; equally so, I should say, from what I have seen during five years.
15640. What hours do they generally work? If they work for a European like myself they work from 6 to 6 o'clock, and no longer. The only meal they have during working hours is between 11-30 and half-past 1 o'clock.
15641. What class of vegetables do you produce, Mr. Smith? Cabbages, cauliflowers, cucumbers, carrots, and so on.
15642. Have you any customers that you supply in the city of Sydney? Not in the city of Sydney.
15643. Do you find it a profitable business? Yes; I have done so since I have taken it in hand, and I have been at gardening thirty-four years and a half.
15644. Have you found any difficulty arising from the keen competition of Chinese vegetable growers? Slightly; not to any considerable extent.
15645. You have not had much cause to complain? No; not as yet.
15646. In raising your vegetables do you use the same manure as the Chinese, namely, animal manure? No; they use human manure very largely; I use horse manure.
15647. Are you in a position to tell us whether the component parts of human manure are more injurious to vegetables than other animal manure? I do not know that it is. If it is dug into the ground it should not be. In that case the soil will take up all the component parts before the vegetables can receive it.
15648. You do not think typhoid fever could be transmitted to human beings by vegetables grown or fertilised by this manure? No. It has been extensively used in parts of Botany, and I have never known any case of typhoid fever in that place yet, and I have been there thirty-seven years.
15649. Have you known many vegetable gardens to be given up by Europeans because they could not make them pay? No; but I have known them to sell out to Chinese for the purpose of making a profit.
- 15650.

15650. Not because they could not work them? No; merely as a matter of profit to themselves. I might have sold out to profit myself, because I was offered the opportunity, but I would not accept it.
15651. You could make it pay? Yes. At the same time I have no occasion to work now. I have sufficient now. I do not say that it is altogether the ground that has produced my independence. It is other things; but I could have gained sufficient from that.
15652. So far as you are concerned your garden has proved profitable, and you can work it profitably now? Yes.
15653. Do your men work on Sunday, Mr. Smith? No.
15654. Do the Chinese gardeners work on Sunday? Yes; they all do in that neighbourhood. I may state that some three or four years ago they were working on the road on Sunday—making a road from the main road to their premises—and I drew the policeman's attention to them, the consequence of which was that they were fined for so doing.
15655. Mr. Hawthorne.] I suppose they were making these by-roads on the Sunday simply so that they would lose no time on the week day? That was their idea undoubtedly.
15656. They have no respect for Sunday? No, it would appear not. They knock off work at any hour about our neighbourhood, and get up their loads of produce on Sunday night.
15657. You say you have only one Chinaman at work in your place. Do the Europeans work the same hours as the Chinamen? They have their half hour for breakfast, and one hour at dinner-time.
15658. Which do you find the more industrious class of workmen, the Europeans or Chinese? I must say that the Chinaman is more industrious and attentive to his work. He does not go away drinking or anything of that kind.
15659. In other words I suppose you can place more reliance upon the Chinaman as a workman than you can upon a European? Yes.
15660. If you find the Chinese so much better as workmen than the Europeans how is it that you have confined yourself to one Chinaman? The reason is that my wife likes to have some Europeans about the place. There are other things to do in connection with the place which the Chinamen do not care about doing—work about the house.
15661. Are there many other gardeners in the district besides yourself? There are Mr. Hamlin and Mr. Hudson, no others that I know of.
15662. Were all the gardens now occupied by Chinese in existence and worked by Europeans previous to the Chinese going there? Yes.
15663. What is the cause of the Europeans thus supplanted by the Chinese;—is it that the Chinese are gradually working the Europeans out of the market, by more zealous work, or that the Europeans are getting tired of gardening? I think some of them have got tired of gardening, and some of them have retired from it altogether—that is, the aged men.
15664. In the case of a dry season do you insist upon your men adopting the same method of watering the plants as the Chinese gardeners have? No they cannot carry out the process the same as the Chinese; if they use anything in that way it is a yoke, not a stick.
15665. When you take your vegetables to market do you find that there is a greater demand for European than Chinese-grown vegetables? I do not think so. Some people will ask for them, but it is hard to say which they do get after all.
15666. You come into town three times a week? Yes.
15667. When the greengrocers come to ask for vegetables do they show any preference for European-grown vegetables at all? Some of them do.
15668. How do you regulate the prices—are they uniform as a rule? No. We regulate our own prices to a large extent.
15669. Supposing that you are in No. 1 stall of the markets, and in No. 2 and No. 3 stalls you have a Chinese cart on either side of you, do you endeavour to ascertain the price the Chinamen are going to charge, so as to regulate yours by that standard, or do you name a price of your own? No. Sometimes we inquire what they intend to ask, and then if we think fit we can raise our price above it.
15670. Then supposing you ask 5s. a dozen for cabbages, and the Chinese ask the same, would you find the customers patronise you in preference to the Chinese? No. I have seen them sometimes buy more freely from the Chinamen.
15671. You are, I suppose, a pretty good judge of vegetables? Yes, I ought to be.
15672. Generally speaking, how do European-grown vegetables compare with those grown by the Chinese? It all depends upon the ground. They use what is called a "soup," and where this is used, particularly in wet weather, or when there has been a dewy night, the vegetables decay very soon.
15673. Could you go up to a cart-load of vegetables and pick out those which have been forced in their growth? Yes, I could.
15674. Do you think they are as beneficial to the human frame as those grown more naturally? No; I do not think so; because it is not natural for them to grow so fast. For instance, cucumbers that are grown in a hot-house are not nearly so good as those which have been grown in the proper season under natural conditions.
15675. Have you noticed an offensive smell coming from Chinese vegetables? No.
15676. Do you think it possible to force cabbages as the Chinese do their vegetables, without their showing evidences of the manure used in the forcing process? I have not found anything of the kind yet, and I have cut some thousands of their vegetables.
15677. Do you think it contrary to the laws of nature that whatever manure is used, it should show itself in the stalk of the cabbage? I think it is impossible if the manure is used in the ground as it should be, and as I believe they do. It must decompose before the vegetable can absorb it.
15678. Take it for granted that I went to-day, intending to make a living, and took up 10 acres of land at Botany, could I rely upon that as being likely to support me in twelve months from now, by diligent work? Not in twelve months from now if it was new land. It would be impossible with new land.
15679. Say I took up a few acres of bush land in Botany, how long would it be before that land was ready for cultivation? It would be twelve months before any vegetables could come to the market from it.
15680. Mr. Abigail.] You evidently do not think it is possible to arrive at that in six months. I may tell you that it has been stated to us here that within six months vegetables have been grown from virgin soil in a flourishing condition? With new land I have never heard of such a thing.

Mr.
T. A. Smith.
15 Dec., 1891.

- Mr. T. A. Smith.
15 Dec., 1891.
15681. Do you know a garden at the tram terminus at Botany? Yes.
15682. Do you know that that land was brought under cultivation, and vegetables brought to market from it within six months? That was old land. The ground had been worked for many years before. It had been thoroughly tilled.
15683. If the Chinaman who owns that land now, and who has tilled, has stated that he brought the land to its present state of perfection in six months, would he be stating what is contrary to fact, do you think? They could not do it in those swamps. The ground would be all sour.
15684. Could it not be effected with the aid of manure? No; you could not sweeten the ground in six months with all the manure you could put in it.
15685. Do you use any other kind but horse manure? No.
15686. You do not use any of the refuse from the boiling-down establishment? No.
15687. I suppose you have seen the methods employed by some of these Chinese gardeners? Yes; they have liquid manure in pots. A filthy smell arises from this, in the pits and tubs round the pig places.
15688. What is the reason the Europeans have such an aversion to using that particular kind of manure, which is so much used by the Chinese? I cannot say what the reason is.
15689. Is it because they cannot stand the smell, do you think? Some of them could stand anything.
15690. Does your council never raise any objection to the nuisance arising from these Chinese places from which the unpleasant smells arise such as you have described? We have an inspector to go round. I called attention to it last meeting night, and the inspector will go round in a fortnight to inspect the Chinese dwellings.
15691. Is it the intention of the council to condemn the practice of keeping these open pits of manure? Yes.
15692. You might direct his attention to the sanitary condition of the residences while you are about it? Yes.
15693. Mr. Quong Tart.] You say some Chinese offered to buy your garden? Yes.
15694. Were you offered a liberal sum? Yes; a fair sum.
15695. Then if other Europeans like yourself like to stick to their gardens they could make a good living out of them? That is what I maintain—if they had not sold out their places they could be there now doing well. It was not the Chinese drove them away—they sold their places for profit.
15696. How many Europeans receive rent from Chinamen at Botany do you think? There is Mr. Richard Hill, and Mr. George Hill, Mr. Lobb, Mr. Britchinghome, Mr. Wright, and Mrs. Whesker. In Mr. Hill's place there is a great mob of them.
15697. What rent do they receive do you know? Mr. Lobb receives £1 a week. Mr. Wright has 10 acres which are under cultivation by Chinese; they only pay 10s. a week.
15698. If the Chinese were to clear out of Botany altogether do you think many Europeans would take up the land for the purpose of going into the pursuit of gardening? They might. There were a good many Europeans there before the Chinese came and bought them out.
15699. Did most of the Chinese who now occupy gardens in Botany purchase from Europeans? Yes, principally, although they have opened some new land.
15700. Have you ever known of cabbage being sent over from Victoria? Yes.
15701. How do they compete with the local producers, sending all that way? I do not know. But they do it.
15702. Are those Chinese-grown cabbages that come from Victoria? Some of them. It is not always the case.
15703. I suppose you have heard of Chinese gardeners using human manure and urine? Yes; I have heard of it.
15704. They sprinkle it over the vegetables;—do you think it is injurious to the health of consumers of such vegetables? Used in that way—sprinkling it over the vegetables—I should think it would be.
15705. You have seen the large earthen-jars in which they make water? Yes; I have seen them make a hole in the side of a plant, and pour the liquid with a pot or mug, and then cover it over again. I have heard of it being sprinkled over the plants, but have not seen it.
15706. Do you think cabbages grown by Europeans are more solid and substantial than the Chinese-grown cabbages? There should be no difference if the plant is grown with manure, and given proper time to mature. It is the forcing of the growth that injures the plant.
15707. And that practice is largely carried out by the Chinese, I believe? Yes, always.
15708. Are there a number of European gardeners that dispose of their vegetables in the markets? There may be one hundred European gardeners.
15709. Then they are on the increase? Yes.
15710. Twelve months ago there were not so many? No; there were then about sixty.
15711. Can you suggest any reason for the increase? The only reason I can suggest is that the Chinese leave them, and the Europeans have to take their own gardens up. Some of them have had to, because they could not let the ground to anybody else.
15712. The heavy poll-tax has the effect of preventing fresh Chinamen from coming in to take up new ground? There can be no doubt about that.
15713. Do the Chinese go in for much fruit-growing? Not at Botany. They cannot grow fruit there—it is too close to the sea.
15714. Do they grow fruit in other places? Yes, a great many of them have oranges and apples at the markets.
15715. Do you think they grow them themselves? I do not know whether they are employed as workers on the place where they are grown, or whether they grow them themselves.
15716. How many European gardens are there at Botany? Three—Mr. Hamlyn's, Mr. Hudson's, and Mr. Stevens', jun., a working gardener.
15717. Do any of the European gardeners there employ Chinese? Mr. Searle, the florist, does.
15718. How many does he employ? Five of them.
15719. Does Mr. Hamlyn or Mr. Stevens? Mr. Stevens does not; Mr. Hamlyn does sometimes, when he requires extra work done.
15720. Is it not possible that some compact could be arrived at between the Europeans and Chinese, so as to enable them to sell their vegetables at a profit? I do not see how they could attain that.

15721. If a Chinese market gardener has stated here that he has been losing money for the last five years, do you think that is a reasonable statement in view of your experience? I cannot say, because I do not know whether there is much dependence to be placed upon them. I never had much dealings with them.

Mr.
T. A. Smith,
15 Dec., 1891.

15722. As a practical gardener, do you think it credible that a man with 8 acres of land, paying a rent of only £44 a year, and employing six Chinamen besides himself, could have been losing money for the last four years? I think it impossible that he could lose money all that time, unless he had a bank at his back, and they would not allow him to go on so far.

15723. You consider it would be impossible that a man could go on losing for four or five years under those conditions? Yes. I may state that I was told of a case in which some Chinese at Mittagong paid £300 to go into a garden of 11 acres of land, and paid 25s. a week rent, and in five years they cleared off the £300, besides having paid the rent, and bought one of the partners out. Certainly they had some good seasons, as you may imagine, when they got £25 a ton for potatoes.

15724. Mr. McKillop.] The last four or five years the seasons have not been so very bad? This one has not been so bad.

15725. Do you use bone-dust? Yes; it is a good fertiliser.

15726. Are the Chinese in the habit of using large quantities of bone-dust? Yes.

15727. Do they use any guano out there? No; it is too expensive now.

15728. You say you pay your European workmen 18s. a week, and find them, and the Chinaman 26s. a week, without board? Yes.

15729. Are the Europeans young men? One is about 26 years of age, and the other is a middle-aged man.

15730. They have been engaged at the work for some time, I suppose? Yes; they are experienced gardeners.

15731. President.] I understood you to say that the European gardeners have nothing to fear from the competition of the Chinese, or words to that effect, is that so? Yes; I have never cause to fear it.

15732. And it is your opinion, arrived at after very careful thought, that the cry that the Chinese drive the white men out of that particular avocation, is not warranted by your experience? Yes; I am of that opinion.

15733. Do you know anything about the Chinese cabinet-makers? No; I know nothing about them.

15734. Mr. Quong Tart.] If you were compelled to work eight hours a day on your garden, could you sell your cabbages as cheap as you do now? No.

[The witness withdrew.]

Ah Covey called and examined:—

15735. President.] Where do you live? At Rose Bay.

15736. What are you? A market gardener.

15737. How many acres of land do you cultivate? Five acres.

15738. Who is your landlord? Mr. Henry Cooper.

15739. What rent do you pay? £50 a year.

15740. How many men have you working for you? Five.

15741. What wages do you pay them? £1 a week, and their keep.

15742. What does their keep cost you per week? About 10s.

15743. What do you feed them on? Beef, rice, fish; sometimes oysters, and other things.

15744. How many hours do they work? From daylight to dark.

15745. Do you work on Sundays? No.

15746. Not to water the vegetables? Yes, for that.

15747. Do not you take up the vegetables on Sundays to be ready for the market? No.

15748. What kind of manure do you use? Horse dung from the 'bus Company.

15749. Do not you use human manure or urine? No.

15750. Do not you use it in liquid form to sprinkle over the vegetables? No.

15751. Not for lettuce? No; nothing but horse dung.

15752. How many years have you been in this country? Twenty years.

15753. How long have you been on the garden? About eight years.

15754. What garden were you in before? I had a garden in Wollongong.

15755. Have you any partner in the garden you have now? No.

15756. The five men working for you are on a weekly wage? Yes.

15757. Does the garden pay you well? No. Everything is selling too cheap.

15758. Have you been losing money? Yes.

15759. Where do you get the money to pay for your losses? Some of the Chinese merchants trust me. I book everything; and when I have a good season I pay them back.

15760. How many bad seasons have you had? Last year was a bad season, and this year was a bad season; too much wet weather.

15761. You like the dry weather? Yes; I like the dry weather best.

15762. The market price goes up? Yes.

15763. Which are the best class of vegetables, Chinese or Europeans? I think they are all the same.

15764. Have you any fruit-trees in your place? No.

15765. Are you married? Yes.

15766. Where were you married? In Sydney.

15767. Where do you live? On the garden—my wife lives with me.

15768. How long have you been married? Seven years.

15769. Have you got any children? No.

15770. Are any of your men on the garden married? No.

15771. Do any white women go out to see them? No.

15772. Would you allow it? No.

15773. Do any of your men smoke opium? No.

15774. Would you have a man working for you who smoked opium? No.

15775. Why? Because he would not be able to do his work.

15776. Do you approve of fan-tan playing? No; it is no good.

15777.

Ah Covey.
15 Dec., 1891.

- Ah Covey. 15777. Do they go in for pak-ah-pu tickets? I do not think so; I do not see much of my countrymen.
 15778. You keep to yourself? Yes.
 15779. And knock about with the white men out there? Yes.
 15780. Are there many Chinese gardens round about Sydney now? Yes, a good few.
 15781. Have not a lot of them given up? About eighty-five have given up.
 15782. Since when? I cannot tell you the time—but I think about two or three years altogether.
 15783. Are the men who have given up gardening still in the Colony? Yes; they go to look for other jobs, to work for wages.
 15784. Have you been to Botany or Waterloo? At one time—about ten years ago.
 15785. Have you not been there since? No.
 15786. Do you know if some of your countrymen at Waterloo and Botany use human manure and urine? I know what you mean, but I have never seen it.
 15787. What is the best manure? I think the best manure is horse dung and bone-dust.
 [The witness withdrew.]

Lee Hing Loong called and examined:—

- Leo Hing Loong. 15788. President.] Where do you reside? At North Willoughby.
 15789. Are you a market-gardener? Yes.
 15790. How many acres have you got? Ten acres.
 15791. What rent do you pay? Seventy pounds a year.
 15792. Who is your landlord? Mr. Forsyth.
 15793. How many men have you got working for you? Ten altogether—six shareholders and four wage men.
 15794. What wages do you pay the men? One pound a week and their keep.
 15795. What does it cost to keep your men per head per week? About 8s. per man.
 15796. How long have you been cultivating that garden? About ten years.
 15797. Have you made much money out of the garden? I made profit for three years, and lost for three years—about equal. I would give it up only I have a good landlord.
 15798. What do you feed your men on? Fish, beef, pork and vegetables, and rice.
 15799. How many hours a day do you and your men work? We work from daylight until dark. In the middle of the day we do not work, because it would damage the plants, so we work later at night; we average about ten hours.
 15800. Is it a fact that a number of women visit your garden from time to time? No; my landlord is very careful. He would not allow anything of that kind.
 15801. Do they play fan-tan there? No.
 15802. Or smoke opium? No.
 15803. Where do you sell your vegetables? At the markets. I send them across in a cart.
 15804. Do you cross in a punt? Yes.
 15805. You send all your vegetables to the market? Yes.
 15806. How do you fertilise your garden? We use manure.
 15807. Human manure? No; I do not use that.
 15808. Is not that as good as other kinds? No; it will not do.
 15809. Mr. Abigail.] It is not because you have heard that the people who buy your vegetables would not do so if they thought you used human manure? I do not know about that, I do not use it. All I use is bone-dust.
 15810. Were you a gardener in China? No. I was a farmer.
 15811. What would be the wages in China of such men as you employ here? They would be very low; the men are better off here.
 15812. How much would it cost to keep a man in China? About 4d. a day.
 15813. You have no doubt you are much better off here than you would be in China? No.
 15814. Are you a married man? Yes.
 15815. Have you got your wife with you? No; she is in China.
 15816. Have you not had a European wife here? No.
 15817. Do you ever visit any of the gambling-houses in Lower George-street, or other parts of Sydney? No; I have too much work to do.
 [The witness withdrew.]

WEDNESDAY, 16 DECEMBER, 1891.

Present:—

THE MAYOR OF SYDNEY (MR. ALDERMAN MANNING, J.P.), PRESIDENT.

FRANCIS ABIGAIL, Esq., J.P., VICE-PRESIDENT.

RAMSEY MCKILLOP, Esq., | QUONG TART, Esq.,

JOHN STUART HAWTHORNE, Esq.

Mr. Kenneth McKenzie called and examined:—

- Mr. K. McKenzie. 15818. Mr. Abigail.] Where do you live? At 236, Pitt-street.
 15819. And what business do you carry on? I have a furniture warehouse.
 15820. You have been in that line of business for many years, have you not? In conjunction with my father I have. We have been living about there since 1847.

15822.

Mr.
K. McKenzie.
16 Dec., 1891.

15822. Do you know, as a matter of fact, that most of the large sellers of furniture buy articles from the Chinese to retail to the public? Well, as a matter of fact, how could I know a thing like that; I could not know it unless I actually saw that Chinese make the goods and take them there themselves?

15823. Exactly, that may be; but have you heard it said that most of the large furniture sellers do buy goods from the Chinese? Yes, I have heard it; and I have seen Chinese make goods in their warehouses.

15824. Can you tell us what is the class of goods the Chinese are in the habit of making, are they really goods of first-class quality? No, I do not think that you can call any of the Chinese work first class, not even their best. As a practical man I would not call it first class. I am speaking now, of course, of Chinese-made goods in comparison with European-made goods. Of course there are degrees in the quality of Chinese-made furniture. Some make a better class of goods than others.

15825. Would this inferiority that you speak of in Chinese-made goods arise through their putting them together in a more speedy and slipshod manner, or in the fact that they use a poorer class of material? Their system in doing the work is altogether different from that of European cabinet-makers. It cannot possibly be as strong as European furniture because they put it together in an entirely different way.

15826. Have you heard of them making furniture out of packing-cases and old timber of that kind for example? Oh, yes; I have seen furniture such as kitchen tables and dressers, at any rate, made out of packing-cases. I have seen this kind of stuff in the auction marts, and in other places, as I have been going through the streets.

15828. Have you any knowledge as to the particular class of customers who purchase goods of that kind? I do not think they are limited to any particular class. All classes, I believe, purchase Chinese-made goods occasionally. Of course the general run of persons who purchase from the Chinese are dealers who sell to country people, and so on; but, as a matter of fact, I have seen many people in the middle walks of life purchasing Chinese-made furniture.

15829. Do you think that the buyer understands that it is Chinese-made furniture that he is purchasing? Well, I can hardly say; I do not think that the people who sell that class of furniture want to let their customers know that it is Chinese-made furniture—not as a rule.

15830. Do you think it would be a wise provision in the law if we were to make the Chinese stamp all the furniture they make. You know that in London all articles are stamped? Well, I can hardly answer that question—experience will be able to teach us how it works.

15831. In London, for example, a piece of furniture if made in Germany would have to be stamped as having been made there, and thus when you go into a shop in England to buy any description of article whatever, you know exactly where it has been made, whether in England, in Scotland, or on the Continent? Well, it might be a good thing; judging from what you have just said, I should think it would be. At any rate it would show the people what they were getting, and if they chose to buy Chinese-made furniture, they would buy it at their own risk.

15832. You think that at present many people buy Chinese furniture without being told, and without suspecting that it is Chinese made? Yes, I think so; I am quite sure that many people have bought Chinese-made furniture because they have been told that it was not Chinese-made, and that they have afterwards found out to their sorrow that it was.

15833. Is there much European-made furniture in Sydney? I think there is a tendency among the bigger shops to make a better class of furniture. There are several German firms, for example, in the neighbourhood of the Golden Grove Estate, who make some very good furniture, quite equal to the very best English furniture.

15834. And do they employ German mechanics? They employ mechanics of all nationality, except Chinese. I know Scotchmen working there, and one man who is of Scotch parents and American born, and I know one man who is a native of New Zealand, working there also.

15835. Do you know anything about the wages that European journeymen get in Sydney? I think about 9s. for eight hours.

15836. That is considered a good wage? A man who was employed by my father and myself for fourteen years is now working at Vader Shaw's, out at the Golden Grove Estate. I was speaking to him the other day, and he told me that sometimes he worked day-work, and sometimes piece-work. He said that he sometimes had to work very hard there, but he is a really good tradesman; you could not put him wrong in our business.

15837. Then you think there is a tendency to improvement in the trade as far as European furniture is concerned? I think there is now a tendency to manufacture a better class of goods, and amongst the better class of people to buy a better kind of furniture, but I do not think that that is at all noticeable amongst the poorer class.

15839. Have you heard any very strong complaints made by the European furniture trade as to the competition they suffer from at the hands of the Chinese? You are referring, I presume, to other people who are in our trade?

15840. Yes. To other European furniture-makers. Have you heard any of the mechanics, for example, say they could not get a living in consequence of the large amount of Chinese competition they suffer from? Yes; I have heard the mechanics complain about this. I have heard them say that owing to the competition of the Chinese there is not the same amount of work for the Europeans to do.

15841. That applies, of course, to those engaged in making the commoner class of furniture? I do not mean absolutely bad furniture, but the cheaper class of furniture.

15843.

- Mr. K. McKenzie.
16 Dec., 1891.
15843. Have you seen the men working there and been through their sleeping accommodation? Well, I have seen them working there; they have pretty fair shops there now; but, as a rule, their sleeping accommodation would not suit Europeans. They do not seem to like air to get in anywhere. There is a terrible lack of ventilation about their places.
15844. Quite so. They look upon ventilation as an enemy, do they not? Yes, the first thing Sue Hing Long does when I go into his place is to open the window for me.
15845. You are not an employer of labour at the present time, are you? Yes, I keep a couple of young fellows on, and sometimes I have three working for me.
15846. But that, I suppose, is not so much in connection with your furniture-making business as your furniture-selling business? I make a little furniture up if I have order work just to keep the young fellows employed; but in that sort of work I consider that if I get my money back I am very lucky.
15847. But if you were compelled by force of circumstances to confine your labours to furniture-making altogether, how then? I do not think that I should be able to pay my rent. I think that I should snuff out, to use a vulgarism.
15848. Is that result contributed to by the Chinese who, as you say, make a cheaper class of furniture? I think so. And by these time-payment places also. It is right in the hands of the trade—this Chinese-made furniture.
15849. They sell things, I suppose, at a very small profit? Oh! I think so, sometimes; though at other times they like a fair profit. The Chinese are just like other trades-people who hold on as long as they can for a good price, if they have a little capital.
15850. Do you know the wages that are paid by the Chinese? Well I have heard it said that in some of the better class shops that men get as much as 36s. a week.
15851. Yes, from £1 to 36s. a week, and in addition to that they are found, and they reckon that their keep is worth from 8s. to 10s. per week, so that that would bring the wages of the best workmen up to 46s. a week, and that is pretty well equal to a European wage in the same trade? Yes; but I should hardly think that their living cost as much as you say it does.
- 15851½. Well, they live fairly well; I am sure of that, judging from what I have seen? Yes, I know they do; they have ducks, and pork, and fish.
15853. We have heard that they do not make chairs;—how is that? Because they have no show in making them against the imported or cheap Austrian and American chairs. That is the reason, I think. That has killed chair-making amongst the Europeans, except chairs made in cheap suites, but the making of chairs for ordinary use has been killed altogether in Sydney. Some years ago a furniture-maker named Mr. Arnold used to make cane chairs for my father. He worked at home, and used to bring in three dozen chairs once a month and we could get rid of them. Now there is no such thing.
14854. But you say that a number of chairs are made for suites? Yes, sometimes two, or three, or four in a suite, according to the price.
15855. And then I suppose leather-covered dining-room chairs are made in Sydney also? Yes; but I do not think they are made much by the Chinese. I do not think they make any chairs at all.
15856. No. As a matter of fact, we have visited many of their places and did not find a chair in the course of manufacture in any of them, and it was suggested to me that the reason was because a chair requires more ingenuity in the making? No; as a matter of fact there were Chinese-made chairs here thirty-five or forty years ago; I remember distinctly seeing Chinese-made chairs on the Rocks thirty-five years ago. The reason why the Chinese do not make chairs now is this, I think, that in chair-making a great deal of work is done by machinery, they are cut with a machine saw and can be almost put together from the wood, and you do not see the Chinese troubling much about machinery. You never see such a thing even as a hand morticing machine amongst the implements in a Chinese factory. They do everything by hand.
15857. When did the revival in the European furniture-making trade begin? I have seen a marked improvement in the trade during the last four or five years, I think.
15858. Do you mean to say that the general state of the furniture trade in Sydney at the present time is flourishing? I do not think so.
15859. President.] In your business do you suffer more now from the importation of cheap furniture from Europe than you do from the local competition of the Chinese? Well, I have said that the shop business is a thing I do not trouble much about; I do not do much of a shop trade. My trade consists in jobbing and in the little ordered work that I get.
15860. Yes, that is at present, but in years past, when your father was in business with you on the opposite side of the street, you did a good deal of furniture manufacturing? Yes; we manufactured a good bit then.
15861. Well, I am speaking of those days, say, twelve years ago, make a comparison of this kind. How do you account for your losing that retail business that you had then and that you have not got now; is it by reason of the importation of cheap furniture from America or Europe, or by the competition of the Chinese? I think it is principally brought about by the time-payment system.
15862. Well, it is carried on by the importers of European furniture, is it not;—what kind of furniture is it they sell on time-payment? Well, the cheaper class of furniture, and a great deal of Chinese-made furniture.
15863. Then it is about equal in proportion, is it? Yes, I should think so.
15864. Of course the time-payment system has nothing really to do with it. The time-payment man sells furniture that is the product of Chinese factories as well as furniture that is imported from Europe or America? Yes, I think so.
15865. Were there not a number of furniture shops in Pitt-street, doing a fairly thriving business ten or twelve years ago? Well, not so recently as that; fifteen or twenty years ago there were a number of shops in Pitt-street doing a cheap retail trade.
15866. I should think it was about fourteen years ago if my recollection serves me right. The bulk of the shops in Pitt-street lived by manufacturing, did they not? Yes; my father and I had a good deal of it.

15867. You know a man called Brierly, Pitt-street;—he had a number of men working for him up to fourteen years ago, how many should you think there were in his employ? I cannot tell you exactly.
15868. Well, but you can give a rough guess—had he ten men working for him then? I cannot say, but I do not think so.
15869. My own impression is that he had quite ten—had he eight do you think? I do not think so; if he ever kept five it would be the outside.
15870. What kind of work did he turn out? Principally chairs, and that work has fallen off.
15871. As to the revival that is taking place, you say that the Chinese are not makers of superior furniture, so that any revival that has occurred in the better class of furniture is not to be attributed to the poll-tax upon the Chinese, or anything of that kind, but perhaps to the enterprise of the importer? Yes, I should think so.
15872. So that as a matter of fact what you have told us has nothing to do with the making of furniture by the Chinese? Exactly.
15874. How do you account for it that they could not make a first-class article, although they were asked to do it, offered a sufficient sum of money, and honestly tried to do it? Well, as I have already explained, it is because the Chinese have a different system of doing the work.
15875. What is that system; explain to us if you will the difference between it and the European system of workmanship? Well, I am not a cabinet-maker, I am an upholsterer, although I have been amongst the wood-work for some time. I notice that in making drawers instead of dove-tailing the blades in they frequently nail them in and sometimes they tenon them in. We have what we call runners for the drawers. They are little runners for the drawers to run upon, but the Chinese instead of putting them in, will run a slight piece of $\frac{1}{2}$ -inch wood right through, and nail a piece of wood underneath to carry them. The result of all this is that there is no stability in their work.
15876. Is that in order more speedily to get through the work, or is it that they have not been taught cabinet-making so scientifically as Europeans? Well, as the Chinese are very patient and painstaking workmen, I think the latter is the answer. They work upon a different system, and have not the knowledge that Europeans have.
15877. Do you think there are as many European cabinet-makers in Sydney to-day as there were fifteen years ago? I hardly think so; that is not following their trade as cabinet-makers.
15878. And do you think that is attributable to the number of Chinese manufacturers there are in the neighbourhood of the metropolis? No doubt it is probably owing to that, and probably owing to the large amount of cheap furniture imported from Europe. I should say, however, that the principal cause is the competition of Chinese cabinet-makers.
15879. Then you do not think we have as much to fear from furniture brought from abroad as we have to fear from the local manufacturing of furniture by the Chinese who work upon a less scientific principle and turn out a poorer class of furniture? Well, I am not quite sure, I think it is about six of one and half-a-dozen of the other.
15880. But I understood you just now when I asked you whether the falling off in the European furniture trade of Sydney was attributable to imported furniture or to the making of furniture by the Chinese, to say that you considered the principal cause of the falling off in the manufacture of European-made furniture was owing to the Chinese; now you say that it is about six of one and half-a-dozen of the other? Well, I should certainly say that the local Chinese manufacturers are the principal cause of the falling off in the European trade.
15881. If it were possible for us to suppress the manufacture of Colonial-made furniture by the Chinese, do you think that the European cabinet-makers residing in the Colony would suffer as much from the importation of European furniture as they suffer now from locally made Chinese furniture and imported furniture together. Supposing I am a cabinet-maker looking out for a job, and that I have to compete with the Chinese who make furniture locally of a very cheap description, would I be as likely to suffer as much from the imported furniture made in Europe as I would from the Chinese-made furniture turned out of the factories here? I think you would suffer more from the Chinese-made furniture in the Colony—that is my opinion.
15882. You have had a look at the Chinese-made furniture that goes to such places as Harris and Ackman's, and you have also had a chance of seeing the imported European furniture—would you mind telling us how they compare? The imported furniture, as a rule, has a more showy look than the other, but the inferior kinds of imported furniture are not much better than the furniture made locally by the Chinese.
15883. Is the imported furniture any better than that made locally by the Chinese? Well, it is not much better at any rate. There is, however, another class of furniture sold by Harris and Ackman, and imported by D. H. Davis; that is a better kind of furniture. Then again, there is a third kind of furniture imported by Cowlshaw Brothers. That is more finished in appearance than the Chinese-made furniture, but it is still of a very inferior kind.
15884. It would not stand comparison with the furniture made by Europeans in the Colony? It will not stand comparison with furniture fairly made by Europeans in the Colony.
15885. Did you ever hear of a Chinaman importing Chinese wood to New South Wales? No; I never did.
15886. All the stuff they use in connection with the business they buy in New South Wales, do they not? They may not get it in Sydney; some of it they certainly do, but they also use imported wood; whether they import it themselves or buy it here I cannot say.
15887. Are the German makers large importers of wood and machinery for furniture making? I do not think so. I think their machinery is dear, and they work up the furniture from the rough wood; but I have not been into any of their places, so I cannot say positively.

[The witness then withdrew.]

Mr.

Mr.
K. McKenzie.
16 Dec., 1891.

Mr. Edgar Cutler, called and examined :—

Mr.
E. Cutler.
16 Dec., 1891.

15888. President.] What are you? A cabinet-maker.
15889. Where do you work? At Anthony Hordern's.
15890. How long have you been working there? Two years.
15891. Where were you employed before—I mean were you employed generally at your trade in Sydney? Yes, for the past eight years I have been pretty well engaged in various shops in the city.
15892. Were you apprenticed here? No, I was apprenticed in Victoria.
15893. And you have been working since you left Victoria in the neighbourhood of Sydney? Yes.
15895. What is the average wage earned by a Chinese cabinet-maker? I would not like to be positive as to the average wage earned by the average Chinaman in the shops about Sydney, although I have no doubt you would be able to get it from the chief clerk in the Government Statistician's office, to whom I have given a great deal of information. By striking an average of the figures from a number of shops you would get a very fair idea of the wages commonly earned by Chinamen. I would not like to give you the figures myself because they were given to me in confidence.
15896. Well, we have no wish, I am sure, to lead you into a breach of confidence, but I do not see how you could be doing any harm if you would give us the average rate of wages paid to the Chinese cabinet-makers? From 25s. to 35s. a week, I think.
15897. And then they have to keep themselves? Oh, the shops have different systems. In some of the shops the men are boarded and lodged, in others they have to find themselves.
15898. You are referring to the Chinese, I believe? Yes.
15899. President.] Do you mean that at the present time the Chinese cabinet-makers are paid 35s. a week in addition to their keep? Oh, they are not kept in addition to that; they have to pay for their board and lodging out of their wages.
15900. Mr. McKillop.] Then the Chinese manufacturers have been on the decrease during the last twelve months;—is that so? Yes. The larger ones are on the decrease; but the journeymen, as they are falling out of their time, are forming co-operative workshops for themselves in a small way, and consequently the number of workshops is decreasing very slowly.
15901. Has there been any increase in European workshops during the last twelve months? Not during the last twelve months that I know of; but during the last five years the trade has made very fair progress.
15902. Do you know the average number of hours that the Chinese work? Taking one with another, I should say that the average would be about ten hours a day—that is, taking the good with the bad furniture-making places.
15903. First of all, take the good Chinese furniture factories? Well, there are two kinds of men working in those places.
15904. Take the shops that turn out what is called first-class work;—what is the number of hours the men work there? I would not make a definite statement as to that, but I should say that, striking an average, it amounts to ten hours a day. Then, it should not be forgotten, that in some of the shops they work on Sundays.
15905. But, on the average, taking the large places with the small places, they work ten hours a day, do you think? Yes.
15907. Then, taking it on the whole, the Chinese-made furniture is inferior to the really-made European furniture? Yes.
15908. Which is the most injurious to you—the manufacture by the Chinese of very common, second-class, or first-class furniture? The manufacture of the common and the second-class furniture is the most injurious.
15909. To the European manufacturers? Yes; that is to the European workmen. The Chinese cabinet-makers do not go in for the first-class work to anything like the extent that they go in for the second and third-class work. You see the second and third-class work can be done by the average Chinese workman, but he cannot do the best.
15910. Do you know whether Chinese-made goods are sold in the shops in the city? Yes, Chinese-made furniture is sold in nine out of ten of the shops in the city. Of course the people in the shops will not admit that themselves. Indeed they will very often tell you that it is made in their own factory, when there is no factory at all in the case.
15911. Are Anthony Hordern & Sons great purchasers of Chinese-made furniture? That is a question that I must decline to answer. I am employed in Hordern's factory myself, and it would not be right for me to divulge any of the information I gain as a worker there. I would, however, state that during the last year a furniture factory has been started at Redfern by the firm, and that in that factory there are at present 125 Europeans employed. That factory has been started since last Anniversary Day.
15912. Well we have it in evidence from Chinese witnesses in the furniture-making trade that hitherto Horderns' have purchased largely from them, and some of the witnesses have said that they purchase from them at the present time. Can you swear that that is untrue? No, I cannot swear that they do not.
15913. Will you give us the names of the firms that purchase largely from the Chinese? I would rather name the firms that do not deal with the Chinese.
15914. We would like to deal with the firms that do as well as with those who do not purchase from the Chinese? Well; if I give you the names of those who to my knowledge do not deal with the Chinese you can draw your own conclusions with regard to the rest.
- 15915.

15915. Very well, let us have the names of those firms who buy exclusively from Europeans? Mr. McKenzie who has just been before the Commission as a witness, does not deal with the Chinese. Lawson—when the old gent had the business—did not; Norton, of Hunter-street, does nothing with them; and buy exclusively from Europeans. Those are the only firms that I know of that do not deal with the Chinese furniture-makers.

Mr.
E. Cutler.
16 Dec., 1891.

15916. Is piece-work practised by the Chinese, and if so, how is that? At the present time piece-work is carried on extensively in the Chinese workshops. Indeed since the system of apprenticeship has begun to die out most of their trade is done by piece-work. As a matter of fact we have known instances in which the Chinese workmen have actually struck for piece-work. I am speaking of cabinet-makers now. I will not say anything of the polishers and turners.

15917. Does piece-work do much harm to the Europeans? Yes; it must cut the throats of both the Chinese themselves and the Europeans too. More than that, if the Chinese disagree in price they remit the question in dispute to an arbitrator and his award is never gainsaid.

15918. Are they bound amongst themselves to accept the decision of the judge? Well, we know of very few cases indeed in which it has been disputed.

15919. That is a very good feature of the Chinese life, is it not? Yes, it is; and I may say generally that there is more freedom amongst the Chinese towards their employers than there is amongst Europeans. The Chinese mechanics will speak to their employers, and discuss a question in dispute with them in the shop.

15920. Mr. Abigail.] Do you mean that at present the Chinese have more freedom in settling disputes, or avoiding strikes, than Europeans? Well, I say this: that they go to their employers more freely than we should; but that has all come about since the Chinese Restriction Act came into force.

15921. Then that Act has been a great advantage to the community generally, and particularly to the people who have to compete against them? Yes.

15922. Mr. McKillop.] Is any preference shown by any of the shopkeepers for Chinese-made furniture? Yes.

15924. You mean that the buyers are bribed for the purpose of inducing them to purchase Chinese-made goods? Yes; that is it.

15926. And that is why the Chinese sell so much furniture, is it? Well, there is also another reason. The Chinese goods being cheaper, and a commission being given to the salesmen in the town, there are more goods turned over, and the salesmen get a better commission. Then a good many of the managers of the different departments have no knowledge of cabinet-work, and by giving the order to the Chinese they do away with the worry and trouble that they would have if they had a factory of their own.

15927. Do the Chinese monopolise the trade in the inland towns? More so than they do in the city. Certainly that is the case in places like Newcastle, Goulburn, Bathurst, or Maitland. At such places there is a larger percentage of Chinese to the number of Europeans than there is in Sydney.

15928. Mr. Hawthorne.] Engaged in the making of furniture? Yes, in furniture-making. In fact, if a cabinet-maker goes to work at a place like Newcastle or Goulburn he has to do a bit of fencing, or undertaking, or anything else that comes along.

15929. Do you know that from practical experience? I do know it from practical experience.

15930. Do you know of any large Chinese manufacturer of furniture in Maitland, for example? I have never been in Maitland. I was speaking of small towns generally.

15931. Are you not aware that in Maitland there are two or three large European manufacturers of furniture? Has that been the case in later years?

15932. Yes—Norman, Hyam, and White, of Morpeth, have an extensive place? Well, two or three men were the largest number that I ever knew to work there.

15933. Do you know that he has an immense lot of machinery? Not for cabinet-making.

15935. Do the people who purchase furniture for their own homes like the Chinese-made article? No; I am sure that the Europeans, as a rule, would prefer to have the European-made article. Stamping the furniture is the only thing to benefit people in the trade.

15936. What branches of the trade do they injure most? Cabinet-making and French-polishing. They do a little turning and carving, but only for their own work-shops.

15937. Do large numbers of the Chinese furniture-manufacturers make their men work on Sundays? No, not such a number as there used to be. It is on the decrease.

15938. Have any prosecutions taken place? In one or two cases.

15939. And were they convicted? Very slight fines were imposed.

15940. Under an old Act, I suppose? Yes.

15941. Do any Europeans work for Chinese? Well, only where pit-saws are used.

15942. But no Europeans are employed as journeymen cabinet-makers? Not that I know of.

15943. Do the Chinese use machinery to any extent? Machinery is only used in Ah Toy's, I think. He has some there, I believe.

15944. The rest is all hand-work? Yes.

15945. The Chinese are all imitators, are they not? Yes.

15946. How many European workshops are there in Sydney and the suburbs to the best of your knowledge? Well, what do you call workshops?

15947.

Mr.
E. Cutler.
16 Dec., 1891.

15947. I am referring to places employing five men and upwards? Well, there are many places that send their work outside to be made up. In many places a few men only are kept in the shops to do the upholstery and French-polishing as they import the frames from home. I do not think that there is above a dozen decent workshops in the city owned by Europeans.

15948. Do you think that the importation of European-made furniture is more detrimental to the European tradesmen here than the furniture locally made by the Chinese? Well, as there are two classes of men in the trade, it is looked at from different standpoints. A man who makes a first-class article does not fear Chinese competition, and he would like to be protected from the importation of European-made furniture from abroad, whereas a man who is less skilful has more cause to fear Chinese competition. For my own part I should say that the Chinese are the most injurious to the local European workman.

15949. Is it all first-class furniture that is imported? Well, it is supposed to be; but some of the stuff that comes out is very shoddy. If you put a tax upon the material used in the business of course it falls upon us, for we only use the best imported timbers, and the Chinamen use Colonial wood, and, consequently, escape the duty.

15950. Have the Chinese furniture factories begun to decrease as a result of the Chinese Restriction Act? Yes; the larger places anyway have begun to decrease. There are less men actually employed.

15951. Do the Chinese go in much for upholstery? No; there has only been one place in which the Chinese have done any work in upholstery.

15952. Examine the tables we are sitting at, and tell us whether it is, in your opinion, a Chinese or a European-made article? The turning is evidently not Chinese, and I do not think any part of it is.

15953. You think it is a European-made table? Yes.

15954. Is it a locally-made table? Yes.

15955. Mr. Abigail.] You have said that prior to the Chinese Restriction Act being passed men were brought here under contract from China at a very low rate of pay? They were.

15956. But the passing of the Act stopped that sort of thing? Yes.

15957. So that, as a matter of fact, benefit arose from that legislation? Yes; it was a distinct source of benefit to us.

15958. And, as a result of the passing of the Act, the Chinamen employed in furniture-making have decreased, and the Europeans locally employed in the same trade have increased? Well, there has been a slight decrease on the one side and a slight increase on the other, but it has not been very great in either case.

15959. You stated that buyers in some establishments are bribed by the Chinese to induce them to purchase Chinese-made furniture. As a matter of fact, do you not think that the proprietor of an establishment would soon find out something of that kind. It seems to me that he could not help hearing all about it if the purchasers of the furniture were not satisfied with the goods when they got them into their homes, and that being so, is it likely that he will allow any buyers to continue to buy articles that his customers would not take, or having taken, were dissatisfied with? I stated at the same time that many of these men have been discharged for that very reason; and as a matter of fact I am pleased to say that it is not done to the same extent now as it was. I know an instance in which a gentleman came to a good firm in the town, and ordered almost a complete house of furniture; one of the conditions being that it was to be English-made furniture. The buyer, however, wanted to make a little money out of it himself, went to the Chinese for it, and it was delivered direct. It happened, however, that the purchaser knew more about the matter than most people; and upon seeing the furniture, recognised at once that it was not European made; so that he went to the firm who received that order, and lodged a complaint, the consequence being that the buyer was dismissed.

15960-1. You are Secretary to the Cabinet-makers' Union? Yes.

15962. So you have a good knowledge of men in the trade, I suppose? Yes, I think I have.

15963. Does your Society include cabinet-makers in other parts of the Colony amongst its members? We have no branches to our Society outside the metropolis, but we have a system of federation throughout the other colonies.

15964. So you are not in a position to say what the wages of workmen in Goulburn, Bathurst, or Maitland, or other inland towns are? I cannot tell you exactly what the wages are, but I know that they are not so good as they are here.

15965. What rate of wages do Europeans earn? I think the average wage of cabinet-makers is about £2 14s., that is as near as I can get at it.

15966. Are they kept constantly at work, or do they make much lost time? I am striking an average in my answer to all these questions.

15967. Then that would be the average, including lost time? No; that is the average weekly wage for actual working-time.

15968. Are they put on half-time on any occasions? The majority of the men work about nine months out of the twelve, but of course there are some men who are never out of employment. On the other hand there are some men who are never in.

15969. But the majority of the men you say have constant employment for nine months out of the twelve at a weekly wage of about £2 14s.? Yes.

15970. Are there many complaints now about the competition of the Chinese amongst the men themselves? Well, there is not much agitation going on at present for the simple reason that we have dropped the question until such time as we can get something like a stamping of Chinese Furniture Bill passed by Parliament.

15971. Do you think that if a law was passed for stamping Chinese-made furniture, it would largely remove any cause of complaint that you may have at present? Oh, yes; I think there is no doubt about it.

15972. Then following out that line of argument do you think that the sellers of Chinese-made furniture in the various shops make no representation to the retail purchasers as to who makes the furniture;—they do not say to them, this is a Chinese bed-room suite, or this is a Chinese-made table? No, they lead them to believe that whatever furniture they sell is either European or imported.

15973. I can quite believe that. As a matter of fact I was told the same thing myself in a large retail establishment here, upon one occasion when I was examining a suite that I had actually seen in a Chinese furniture factory? Yes, anyone who keeps their eyes open can detect the deception.

15974. And you think that if the public were made aware of the fact that certain articles were made in the Chinese furniture factories they would very generally cease to purchase those articles and demand in preference articles made by European hands? Yes, I think so.

15975. Is there a very wide difference in the case of European and Chinese-made furniture? We as Europeans are compelled to turn out a better article for the same amount of money, and yet our work is sold by the retail establishments at an increase upon Chinese-made furniture.

15976. Then competition makes you sell upon unfair conditions? Yes, very unfair conditions.

15977. Can you tell us about how many European furniture mechanics there are employed in Sydney. How many have you got upon your books? Are you referring to any one particular branch, or the whole of the branches?

15978. I am referring to the whole of the branches? Well, if you take the polishers and turners into consideration they are working for and the joiners, the number of European cabinet-makers in the city and suburbs would be somewhere about 160.

15979. Is that all? Yes.

15980. Do you know how many Chinese are employed in your trade? I could give you the number if I had my statistics to hand, but I cannot from memory.

15981. Do you think there are 1,000? No, I do not think there are so many as that. I have all these returns down in black and white, and could give you correct information if I had my papers.

15982. Do you know whether the Chinese are in the habit of forming societies amongst themselves to keep up the rate of wages? No, I do not know that.

15984. I should like an answer to it, it could certainly do no harm? Well, the fact that there were two prosecutions against Chinese cabinet-makers in Waterloo quite recently, for working on Sundays, proves the statement, and I have actually seen work going on on Sundays at a place in Devonshire-street myself; of course I am only referring to quiet work like polishing and sand-papering that makes no noise.

15985. But do you know whether any Sunday work has been going on, say, during the last fortnight or three weeks in any of these factories? No; I cannot speak of a time so recently as all that.

15986. Mr. Abigail.] Can you give us the dates of the convictions for Sunday working to which you have just referred? Well, as a matter of fact, it was a person outside our own trade, who had a great respect for the Sabbath, who reported the matter to us in the hope that we should take action. It was reported to us at one of our meetings when I was present.

15987. Mr. Quong Tart.] Now with regard to the Chinese competition of which you complained. There are a number of tradesmen of different kinds in Sydney are there not? Yes.

15988. And how many suffer from competition with the Chinese? Well there are gardeners, florists, and cabinet-makers all suffering more or less from Chinese competition.

15989. They suffer more than the men in any other trade do they? Well we suffer badly enough, but I think the gardeners suffer more than anybody else. Then of course the Chinese cuts the joiners but the joiners do not know it.

15990. Do you know of any instances in which they have taken any contracts for joinery work? I know a case in which they did the shop fitting for two shops in George-street.

15991. Have you ever heard of any of the Chinese cabinet-makers complaining about their own countrymen making an inferior kind of furniture out of old packing cases and so on? Well I do not associate with the Chinese to that extent as to know all the details of their trade, but as a matter of fact the Chinese are compelled now to produce a better class of furniture than they did formerly.

15992. How is that? Because the shop-keepers are compelling them to produce a better article.

15993. You say that the Chinese used to import tradesmen from China; do you know what kind of an arrangement that was under? Well we have inquired into the matter, and from information we have received it appears that they (the new chums) work for four or five years in order to pay back to their employers the expense to which they were put in bringing them out. That of course was previous to passing the Chinese Restriction Act. There was only £10 poll-tax at that time. Mind you they got a certain wage besides their keep, but the percentage of it was deducted for the purpose of clearing off the debt.

15994. Supposing a man was brought out in that way, and apprenticed for three years to an employer, what would he get in the way of wages? I know of cases in which the men only got 5s. a week for the first year, in addition to their keep. Of course some men were more active than others, and better able to learn.

15997. But suppose they would;—suppose they came and said, "We, like you, want to make a better living than we are doing, and the only way by which we can do that is by charging a higher rate for our labour; will you agree with us to fix a certain price at which we shall both sell certain articles to the shops;—how would that be? No; you could never get it to work. There is always a class that would stand aloof from it, and gradually bring the general run of prices down.

15998. Well, now how do other trades get along;—how have they been prospering lately—trades in which there is no Chinese competition at all—are they more prosperous than your trade is; do they ever complain that the rate of wages is going down, and that they cannot make a living? I should hardly like to give evidence before the Commission on matters outside my own trade. I came here to speak about matters with which I was naturally very familiar, and my opinion on questions outside the cabinet-making making would be based to a large extent on hearsay. Of course people in other trades have their times of slackness and their busy times just as we have ours; but this is what I particularly want to emphasise, that even during our busy times our living costs us more than the Chinese pay for theirs, and yet we have to work at the same price, and it is certainly not fair.

15999. You say that the Chinamen are cutting their own throats;—surely they are fools to do that? Well, the very fact that Anthony Hordern has started this factory at Redfern, and put a lot of machinery into it must give the Chinese a knock. They are selling their furniture to other firms at a cheaper rate than they did before.

16000. As far as I can understand it, your trade is very bad just now? Yes; it has not been so bad for the last eight years as it is now.

16001. Still you have less Chinese competition now than you have had before;—surely if that Chinese competition is the cause of the want of prosperity in your trade, it ought to be gradually improving, and if that is not the cause, can you tell me what is? Well, I have my own private opinion of course.

16002. You say that there are fewer Chinese workshops now than there were formerly, and that the Chinese employed in them are getting better wages than they did, which must place their competition upon a fairer basis, and yet your trade is falling off? Yes; every shop in the town, with the exception of three, is working half-hand, and those who have got the whole of their hands at work are only working from 9 o'clock in the morning till 4 o'clock in the afternoon.

16003. You say that the Chinese work is not so good as the English work;—how is that? There is not the stability in Chinese work that there is in European work; and although Europeans do not season their timber as well as they should, the Chinese are still worse in ———

16004. In chests of drawers and so on, the timber should be dry, I suppose, and the Chinese places being so small they have not enough room to dry it? Yes.

16005. And that would make a great deal of difference in the article when complete? Yes, it would make all the difference in the world.

16006. Mr. Hawthorne.] Do you ever hear of customers coming in to a shop asking particularly to be supplied with European-made furniture? Yes; and in going out to work I have been asked as an employe of the firm the question,—“Is this a Chinese or European made article?” when I have known very well that it has come out of a Chinese factory. Of course, under those circumstances, a man must make an excuse of some kind. All I could say was that I was working in another room and did not know much about it, or something of that kind. One dare not say that it was made by a Chinaman; it would be more than his place was worth.

16007. Do you think that if a customer came into a retail shop and paid £3 10s. for a Chinese made article, and at the same time was told that it was a Chinese-made article, and £3 15s. or £4 for a European-made article, and, of course, told it was a European-made article, that he would prefer to pay the difference and buy the latter? Oh, if a purchaser knew which was the Chinese-made article and which was the European I am positive that in the majority of cases, particularly among the working classes, they would go for the more expensive article, and pay the difference willingly.

16008. I want to see whether the people who give orders to Chinese for furniture give them because the retail purchaser demands Chinese goods, or simply because they can get more profit out of them. You are of opinion that the public generally would prefer to see European-made furniture exposed for sale even if they had to pay slightly more for it? I am positive, with my experience of the European population of this country that seventeen out of twenty would rather have European goods than Chinese, although they had to pay a little more for them. After all the goods are not so much more expensive when they are made by Europeans, and everybody knows that there is better wood in them, better workmanship, and more durability.

16009. Supposing there were two tables like this one exposed for sale, and you were the salesman, and were asked the price of this table, and said, “This is £3 10s., but that one is £4 10s., being made by a European cabinet-maker,” your customers would want to know what was the reason of such difference in the price would they not, and you would have to say that it arose from the fact that one table was made by a Chinaman and the other by a European;—now what answer would you usually get from the customer who comes in to buy the furniture? Well, you are assuming a case that could really never happen, because a shopkeeper would never admit that either of them was a Chinese-made article, and anyhow there would not be the difference in price that you imagine.

16010. Then from what you have said we understand that all the shops in Sydney, with the exception of a few that you have mentioned, are trading under false pretences? Yes.

16011. In other words, that they are selling Chinese goods and telling their customers that they are European? Yes, that is so, and I am prepared to prove it.

16012. And you think that if Parliament was to pass a measure compelling all furniture made by the Chinese to be stamped it would lead to the sale of a great deal more European furniture? I have no doubt about it.

THURSDAY, 17 DECEMBER, 1891.

Present:—

THE MAYOR OF SYDNEY (MR. ALDERMAN MANNING, J.P.), PRESIDENT.

FRANCIS ABIGAIL, Esq., J.P., VICE-PRESIDENT.

RAMSEY McKILLOP, Esq.,

QUONG TART, Esq.,

JOHN STUART HAWTHORNE, Esq.

Mr. William Arthur Holman called and examined:—

Mr.
W.A. Holman.
17 Dec., 1891.

16013. Mr. Abigail.] What business do you follow? I am a cabinet-maker.

16014. Are you an employer of labour or are you a journeyman? I am a journeyman.

16015. Who are you employed by? I am at present out of employment.

16016. Is your trade slack in Sydney? Yes; the trade is suffering from depression just now, and has been for some time.

16017. Can you offer an opinion as to whether the Chinese furniture-makers have had anything to do with the depression of trade—is it caused by the keen competition carried on? I should presume that has something to do with it, though I do not know personally; I have never worked in a Chinese shop.

16018. Do you know that European furniture-manufacturing in Sydney has developed considerably during the last three or four years? I should think so. There has been an extensive importation of improved machinery by many of the Sydney firms lately. This has increased their power very largely, and the result is that there is now very much more furniture being made by Europeans than formerly.

16019. Do you know anything about the rate of wages paid to Chinese furniture-makers? Not by personal experience. I can only give you the ideas current among European cabinet-makers.

16020. What are those ideas? The general idea is that the Chinese work under very unsatisfactory conditions, to say the least, very frequently sleeping on the premises where they work, and living at a very low standard of comfort indeed. The general rate of wages is, I should say, about 30s. a week, although I cannot speak with authority, as I have said, not having worked among them.

16021. What is the general rate of wages paid to the European cabinet-makers? I may state that the European cabinet-makers are generally engaged on "piece-work." Where a man is employed by the hour he will get from 1s. to 1s. 3d. per hour, and he will have to find his tools as well.

16022. Then, at eight hours a day, he would get £2 8s. per week. Have you ever heard that the Chinese cabinet-makers in the Sydney establishments get 36s. a week and their keep? No; I was not aware of that.

16023. Would you consider that a low rate of pay? No. I should consider that very satisfactory.

16024. What firms have you worked for in Sydney? I have worked for Verdy & Co., of Darlington, the biggest firm in Sydney; for Dickenson, of Kent-street; and also the Co-operative Furniture Company of Darlington.

16025. Do these firms employ any considerable number of hands? The Messrs. Verdy ordinarily employ about forty-five hands all told, I should say; that is the largest firm in Sydney of the class.

16026. Do they pay the rate of wages you have mentioned? Yes; and more in some cases.

16027. Is the eight-hour principle carried out in the firms you have mentioned? Yes. I may repeat that the rate of pay for cabinet-making is generally calculated on the system of piece-work. We are very rarely paid by the hour; it is only done in special cases where, for some particular reason, it is not easy to put a price upon the job.

16028. What has been the general effect of the increase in the local manufacture of furniture by European firms, has it been to check the importation of furniture from other countries, or is it simply taking the place of Chinese-made furniture? I cannot tell you whether the importations have decreased: the general idea among members of the trade is that they have not. The general impression is that quantity of furniture made by the Chinese has fallen off considerably, and that its place has been taken by European-made furniture in the production of which machinery has been employed. The European firms have been thereby enabled to compete with the Chinese in the intermediate or better class of goods. In fact I have heard it stated by Mr. Kellian, one of the partners of Messrs Verdy & Co., that the firm can now beat the Chinese in the particular line which it deals in.

16029. Do you possess any knowledge that would be of service to the Commission in deciding how to correct any evils that may exist in the system carried on by the Chinese? I think the most important thing to do would be to insist upon the observance of better sanitary regulations, and prevent the workmen sleeping on the premises they work in during the day; another suggestion to which a good deal of importance is attached by many people is that all Chinese-made furniture should be stamped with a brand by which it could be easily distinguished as of Chinese manufacture.

16030. Do you think in that case the public would not buy it as readily as they do? Well, there can be no doubt that a prejudice does exist against such furniture to a very large extent.

16031. Do you think the firms for whom the Chinese make this furniture sell it to the public without telling them it is made by the Chinese? Yes.

16032. They lead people to believe that it is imported, or made by Europeans? That is done certainly. Then again, there are certain articles sold which are partly of Chinese and partly of European manufacture the European parts being fitted on to the parts made by the Chinese, to aid in the deception.

16033. And you think all kinds of impositions might be avoided by causing the furniture to be stamped? Yes.

16034. When you speak of compelling the observance of better sanitary regulations, I suppose you do not mean your remarks on that head to apply to large Chinese establishments, where they have proper accommodation, not only for carrying on the work, but also for sleeping, in the matter of ventilation, for instance? I would suggest that such places should be regularly inspected, and care taken that sufficient accommodation was provided in all cases.

16035. You think that a measure of the nature of a Factory Act applied to all these places would result in a better state of things? Certainly.

16036. It would bring them on more equal terms with the Europeans? Yes.

16037. And thereby reduce their power of absorbing the trade as they do at the present time? Individually I cannot say that they do absorb the trade. I have no doubt that a result of adopting some such suggestions as I have thrown out would be to increase the Chinese wages, and to bring them more on a footing with the European workman, and so on.

16038. Have you ever heard that the Chinese workmen enjoy on a larger measure of freedom in approaching their employers—where grievances exist, for example—than the Europeans have in your trade? I cannot say I have heard that. I have heard that the condition of the Chinese workers has improved very considerably since the Chinese Restriction became a law of the land, for the simple reason that they themselves have been saved from the competition of other Chinese who would otherwise have come here from China.

16039. The Restriction Act has prevented men being brought here under contract at a low rate of wages? Certainly. The result has been to improve their condition, and give them better wages in many instances.

16040. Mr. McKillop.] Is the Chinese work generally of an inferior class? They chiefly do an inferior class of work; and such as they do of a middling class is done much more clumsily than the English work. To anyone in the trade the distinction between European and Chinese work is most marked. You can tell it at once. The only way in which a man might be deceived is where they put European additions in the more conspicuous parts of the article—such as a wash-stand, or dressing-table—as I have already stated, to aid the deception.

Mr. W.A.
Holman.
17 Dec., 1891

- Mr. W. A. Holman.
17 Dec., 1891.
16041. What particular class of furniture do the Chinese chiefly make? They make bedroom furniture mostly, such as wash-stands, dressing-tables, and wardrobes. They very rarely venture on the manufacture of drawing-room or dining-room furniture.
16042. Is it not a fact that they turn out some of what is called first-class work, in the shape of wardrobes, book-cases, and so on? Yes; they turn out that class of work; but it always bears evidence of inferior execution, and a general want of finish.
16043. As a rule they are great imitators are they not? Yes; they are supposed to copy European designs.
16044. Do you know if the Chinese go in for the manufacture of chairs? I never heard of it.
16045. Do the European firms here go in for that class of manufacture? Yes; the co-operative company, in Darlington, are chiefly chair-makers.
16046. What kind of chairs? Chairs for bed-room suites, and other sorts, known by various names in the trade—dining and drawing-room chairs.
16047. In which class of goods do you find the Chinese competition most injurious to your trade—the common class or the better class? It is only in the second class the European establishments would feel the competition, for the simple reason that they do not manufacture the lowest class of goods.
16048. Do you visit the factories of the Chinese cabinet-makers? No; I have never been inside them.
16049. Do you know if, in the manufacture of the inferior class of furniture, they use old packing-cases? I know such things are done frequently. Inferior material can be used and made to look well.
16050. Is it done by Europeans, do you know? I have never known it to be done in Sydney, but it is done in the East End of London very largely.
16051. You have said, I think, that Chinese made goods are sold as of European manufacture? Yes.
16052. Has it been asserted by the auctioneers that the Chinese goods they sell are European, when the question has been asked? I cannot say that; but I know that Chinese goods are sold by them, and there is a tacit assumption that they are of European make, although they are not labelled as such.
16053. And that is why you think they should be marked or stamped, so that people would know what they were buying, and they could then please themselves? Yes.
16054. Do you know whether the Chinese work on the piece-work principle at all? I cannot say. I have no reliable information on that point; but I believe they generally work for a weekly wage.
16055. Is there any preference shown by shop buyers for Chinese-made goods; and, if so, why? That is a rather delicate question. In some cases shop buyers do give a preference where they can to the Chinese manufacturers. For what reason I cannot say. One hears remarks passed in the trade that the buyers receive commissions from the Chinese manufacturers.
16056. That being in the nature of a bribe? It would be a matter of business I suppose between the manufacturer and the buyer.
16057. Do you know if the Chinese monopolise the trade in the inland districts? I have not visited the inland towns as a workman, and cannot speak from experience.
16058. What branches of your trade are most affected by Chinese competition? They chiefly affect those who make bedroom suites, and furniture of the second grade.
16059. Do you know whether any European journeymen work for the Chinese in their shops? I have never heard of a case of the kind. I do not think it is at all frequent. The average European workman would not be likely to work in a Chinaman's shop I think.
16060. I suppose some of the largest firms in Sydney are large buyers of Chinese furniture? Undoubtedly.
16061. And the principal auctioneers I suppose? Yes; you may say practically all the retail firms in Sydney buy of the Chinese.
16062. Which do you think injures your trade most—the large importations of English manufactured furniture or the local competition of Chinese manufacturers in your trade? I am inclined to think that the importations do most injury to the trade now, although but for the Chinese Restriction Act I have no doubt that it would be the other way about, that is to say, a steady influx of Chinese cabinet-makers swelling the ranks of those already here would, in that case, do most harm; but this has been prevented by the imposition of the poll-tax.
16063. The Chinese competition has decreased since the Restriction Act was passed? Yes; I have no doubt it has.
16064. And the European trade is on the increase? To a slight extent I think it is. I do not say as to the number of factories; but the turn-out is certainly larger.
16065. Can you give us an idea of the number of furniture factories in Sydney? Of those which are of any consequence, using machinery, I should say, roughly speaking, there are about a dozen in Sydney.
16066. Have you any idea of the number of Chinese factories? No, I have not.
16067. Do you know if the Chinese use machinery in their work? Very rarely; practically none I should say. They may occasionally buy mouldings and such things made by machinery, but I do not think they use it themselves.
16068. Do you know the number of hours the Chinese journeymen cabinet-makers work? Not from personal experience; but the general idea is that they work about ten hours a day.
16069. Have you ever noticed them working on Sundays? No.
16070. Has it been asserted that they do work on Sunday? Oh! yes; that has been asserted certainly. I know from personal observation that they work late into the evening.
16071. At that rate they would work over ten hours a day? Yes. I have seen them working at 8 or 9 o'clock in the evening.
16072. And when you said ten hours you gave that as the average? That is the generally accepted idea among the European members of the trade.
16073. Do the Chinese go in for upholstering? Very little, I believe.
16074. They confine themselves almost exclusively to cabinet-making and polishing? Yes.
16075. Do any of them follow the occupation of house carpenters? Very little I should say; I have only seen one so engaged.
16076. Was he engaged on a building? On a verandah.
16077. Was it a Chinese building? No; it was a building in Elizabeth-street, belonging to a European; I noticed it in passing, and it struck me as a somewhat remarkable fact at the time.
16078. Mr. Quong Tart.] With regard to the Chinese cabinet-makers sleeping on the premises where they work, do you know what sort of a room they have? I have no doubt the nature of the accommodation varies; but in many cases I believe they sleep in bunks ranged round the walls of the workshops.

16079. Your view is that if the Chinese workmen were made to sleep under proper conditions in all cases, having the same accommodation as Europeans, their wages would be to that extent higher; as at present it costs the employer nothing, where the men sleep on the premises; and if the employer had to pay a higher wage in that way he would have to get a better price for his article before he could compete with the European manufacturer? That is my view. Mr. W. A.
Holman.
17 Dec., 1891.

16080. Supposing a law were made to direct that a certain space should be allowed to each person for sleeping accommodation, and so forth, do you think that would be satisfactory? Yes; that would be a very desirable regulation.

16081. Even if there were no Restriction Act in existence, a law of that kind would bring about a better state of things? I think it would be very difficult to enforce such a law if there were an unlimited number of Chinese coming into the Colony, owing to their habits in China being so widely different.

16082. But they must abide by the law or stand the risk of punishment. Supposing they were Germans or Italians, it would be the same? Yes; if they could be discovered, but I think it would be a difficult matter with large numbers of fresh arrivals every month, or thereabouts.

16083. With regard to the Chinese made goods, you say they are sold cheaper than the European goods? Yes; to the wholesale houses.

16084. Who receives the benefit of the cheap production? I presume the large firms in Sydney.

16085. So that the Chinese themselves are cutting their own throats, as the saying is? I would not put it in that way. They are contented with a lower return for their labour, and thereby secure custom.

16087. The Chinese workman who receives 36s. a week, would cost his employer at the rate of 6s. a week for food, and nothing for lodging, when he sleeps in the workshop, so that would be £2 2s. a week, as against the £3 or £3 5s. paid to the European workman. Your idea is that if a law were put in force compelling them to provide a certain sleeping space, the Chinese employer would be compelled to pay a higher rate of wage? Yes.

16088. Do you think the employment of machinery is likely to bring down the price of labour for European made furniture? It has not done so as yet. Incidentally it has improved their wages, because while they get the old scale of prices, at piece-work, some of the work is done by machinery for them; that is to say, they get the benefit of the work done by machinery for them, and in many cases no reduction in prices has been made since the machinery was introduced.

16089. Do you know to what extent, if at all, the Chinese market-gardeners interfere with the Europeans in the same occupation? I do not know whether they do much harm to the Europeans in that trade. I know that the European market-gardeners object to the competition of the Chinese, but how much cause they have I cannot say.

16090. You have heard of the disease called "scurvy;" I understand it used to be prevalent in the hospitals and asylums here at one time;—do you know what causes that? Living on salt fish generally, and having insufficient vegetables.

16091. Do you know if it is a fact that since the Chinese came here the disease has disappeared altogether? I cannot answer that. I have not been here long enough to know.

16092. Do you know any other trade in which the Chinese compete with the Europeans? I do not know of any other productive trade in which they compete. They are largely engaged as dealers, and hawkers, and sellers of small commodities.

16093. Do they not engage in fruit-growing and fishing? They sell fruit, and fish too I believe, but whether they grow the one or catch the other I cannot say.

16094. You think it is principally as cabinet-makers and market-gardeners that they compete with the Europeans? Yes; chiefly those two callings. I do not know of any others that are affected to any degree by the Chinese.

16095. Do you know whether the Chinese cabinet-makers have increased or decreased in number during the last twelve months? I think there has been a slight decrease; for the simple reason that a number of Chinese have been going back to China, and no fresh ones have been admitted, or at most a very few, so that there has been I should say a decrease of some hundreds in the number of Chinese in the Colony during the year.

16096. It is stated that in a number of Chinese cabinet-makers' establishments there is plenty of goods in stock and no market for them;—do you know the cause of that? There has been a remarkable depression in our own trade during the last four or five months; what the cause of it may be I cannot say at all; the unsettled state of political affairs may have contributed to it in some degree. The European manufacturers are in the same position, many of them, as you state, making large quantities, of stock and being unable to get rid of it.

16097. With regard to the mode of living, your idea is that efficient sanitary laws should be put in force to embrace all conditions of people, no matter of what nationality? Yes. I should like to see the Chinese cabinet-makers living in small houses of their own as Europeans do. It seems to me the only way in which to deal with the question is to raise the standard of comfort. I do not think there is much bitterness of feeling between the respective races now, although it may have been thought necessary to deter them from coming in, owing to their keen cheap labour competition with the Europeans.

16098. But you think with the use of the machinery which is being imported the European manufacturer can compete with the Chinese? I think there is no doubt about it; as I have said I have it on the authority of a gentleman in the trade who is well qualified to speak.

16099. Mr. Hawthorne.] How long have you been in this Colony? A little over three years.

16100. You learnt your business at home? Yes, in London.

16101. How long were you apprenticed to the cabinet-making? Three years.

16102. Is that the usual time for apprentices to serve at the trade at home? I may say it is not usual for apprentices to be bound in the trade. I was not bound formerly, although that was an agreement between my parents and my employers that I was to stay the three years.

16103. It is not now usual to bind apprentices in the ordinary way, that is to have the indentures signed by the contracting parties? Not in London at all events.

16104.

- Mr. W. A. Holman.
17 Dec., 1891.
16104. You spent three years in the house where you started to learn the business? Yes.
16105. At the end of that time did you begin as a journeyman? No, as an improver.
16106. How long did you serve as an improver? Two years.
16107. What rate of pay did you get during that time? As an apprentice the first six months is served for nothing; the second six months, 1½d. an hour is given, and following that, half-yearly increases of ½d. an hour, until it amounts to 3½d. an hour, when the apprenticeship is finished.
16108. And what are the wages of an improver? They gradually rise up to 6½d. or 7d. an hour.
16109. How many hours do they work? As an apprentice, ten hours, and as an improver, nine hours.
16110. Did you work as a journeyman in England? No.
16111. What firm did you first work for here? For Verich & Co., a German firm, on the Darlington Road.
16112. How many years have they been established there? Not more than eight years, I should think.
16113. Are there any other German firms on a large scale in the city? Yes, there are other German firms on a fairly large scale—Messrs. Vader & Co., and Mr. Like.
16114. How many hands does the first-mentioned firm employ? About fifteen or twenty.
16115. And the last? About the same number, or perhaps a few less.
16116. Do these firms confine themselves to any particular branch of the trade, or do they do general cabinet-making? They do general cabinet-making in every case.
16117. Of what nationality are the workmen principally in these places? They are principally Englishmen and a few Germans or Danes, and Australian natives.
16118. They do not limit themselves to the nationality of the firm? Not in the slightest.
16120. Do they classify them on piece-work at all? No; there is a price for every article.
16122. Have you ever tried to ascertain what a Chinaman is allowed for making a similar article? No.
16123. What would be the price of an English chest of drawers similar to what you have just described—what would they get for making it? That question I cannot answer, for this reason: that the English articles they sell out here would be made in the East End of London, and I only worked in a West End shop, where they do only the very first-class work. I believe most of the furniture imported here is made from the East End.
16124. Mr. Abigail.] Does that remark regarding the West End apply to Tottenham Court Road;—is that not a considerable place for exportation? There is very little made in Tottenham Court Road—they are generally sellers there.
16125. Do you know how the Chinese workmanship compares with that of the European? The Chinese workmanship is sound, but it is characterised by extreme clumsiness and want of finish. There is a marked distinction between Chinese-made furniture and English-made.
16126. Mr. Hawthorne.] Could you pick out Chinese-made articles from others in a number offered for sale in any of the auction rooms in town? Yes; I should be right in about nine cases out of every twelve, I think.
16127. But how is it, if there is something so marked in a style of the furniture made by the Chinese as compared with English workmanship that you would err to the extent of 33 per cent. in judging between them? For this reason, that in some cases one portion of the article is made by Chinese and another by European labour, and the portion which is made by Europeans is screwed on by the seller himself, or men whom he employs for the purpose. This gives the article the appearance at a casual glance of European manufacture.
16128. Is it customary that a Chinaman should be allowed to make certain parts of furniture, the Europeans being called upon to furnish the remainder? Yes; the wholesale houses would say, "We want so many tops for dressing-tables, or parts for wardrobes," and no questions would be asked. The other portions would be made by Chinamen, and they would be fitted together on the premises of the firm selling them.
16129. Is no objection made by European workmen to making certain portions of furniture for this purpose? I have never heard of objections being raised.
16130. Supposing you were in a workshop to-day among a number of men, and an order came in for a great number of tops, and you imagined that these tops were to be put on structures made to receive them by the Chinese, would there be no objection raised? Not at present. I do not think so.
16131. Is there not a good deal of feeling against the Chinese on the part of European cabinet-makers? In some cases there is a bitter prejudice against them, but I do not think that is nearly so intense now as it has been, because the Europeans are beginning to see now that they cannot compete against them.
16132. Supposing a law were passed compelling the branding of all Chinese-made furniture, so that it could be readily distinguished by the public in the shops where it was offered for sale with other furniture, do you think that would have the effect of increasing the demand for European-made furniture? I think so, because there undoubtedly is a prejudice against Chinese-made furniture; and if people could know with certainty that it was Chinese-made furniture, they would in a great many cases, I believe, demand the European manufacture instead. The Chinese furniture is not sold more cheaply to the general public than European-made furniture, so far as I am aware.
16133. Is there an opinion prevalent among European cabinet-makers that the depression of trade is owing to the presence here of Chinese cheap labour? Certainly there are a number of European cabinet-makers who attribute the slackness of trade to the presence of the Chinese; but personally I should be inclined to ascribe it to the general depression.
16134. Have you known any instances of European cabinet-makers engaging themselves to Chinese manufacturing firms? No; I never heard of such a thing.
16135. Have you ever heard of an instance of Chinese furniture-makers in Sydney either directly or indirectly employing European cabinet-makers? No.
16136. Mr. Quong Tart.] How is it they do not make Austrian chairs in this country? They have not the necessary plant, I suppose, and I believe the process is a secret.
- 16137.

16137. Mr. Hawthorne.] Do you think the trade has as much or more to fear from the importation of cheap European-made furniture as from the presence here of Chinese manufacturers of furniture? I do not think the importations would have as much effect as the presence of cheap labour in the community.

Mr. W. A. Holman.
17 Dec., 1891.

[The witness withdrew.]

Mr. Richard Seymour re-called, and examined:—

16138. Mr. Abigail.] When you were first before this Commission as a witness, Mr. Seymour, you stated that as a rule, the Chinese residences were, as a rule, in a good sanitary condition? I did.

Mr. R. Seymour.
17 Dec., 1891.

16139. The Commission has since made an inspection, and they have also a report from the Medical Officer to the Board of Health on certain places, among them Han Kee's in Lower George-street. There is a cellar there, with five cupboards, where people sleep, and when we visited that place it was simply in a frightful state. Did you visit that particular place? We did, sir; and when we visited it it was perfectly clean.

16140. Then we visited a place in Queen-street, where there are eight two-roomed houses, and we found that there was no closet for any of those eight houses; that they had to go to another street; and we found these places in a frightfully dirty and insanitary condition? They have closets, but they are away a little distance from the buildings, and all together.

16141. The residents say they have no closets at all? They have. There is a regular row of cottages there, which were put up under my instructions; and they also have locks and keys.

16142. We then went to Goulburn-street, and visited several places where they had closed in the yard space and made kitchens of them, and the cooking was being carried on within a foot of the closet. The Mayor was with us at the time, and he expressed the opinion that the state of things we saw was a disgrace to the city;—have you seen those places? I have; and I know what you state to be the fact.

16143. We bring this matter under your notice in this way in order that you may take whatever steps you may think necessary. We next visited Robertson's-lane, and that large Chinese boarding-house there. We found that in a deplorable state. On that also we have a report from the Medical Officer to the Board of Health, Dr. Thomson, and he describes the water-closet accommodation there as being in a filthy and generally disgraceful state, and altogether opposed to the sanitary regulations of the City Council? Whenever I visited that place the yards were thoroughly whitewashed every day, and the closets were clean enough for anybody to sit upon. What Dr. Thomson saw when he was there of course I do not know.

16144. The report says:—"The closets were quite dark, and so constructed as to be indescribable—I mean as regards woodwork, &c.; in this respect they were altogether improper, wet, filthy, and offensive. The pans were of a very old and discarded pattern; they were supplied with an insufficient stream of water by a plug-valve in a barrel, which was supplied from the main by a ball-cock. There were two such closets, and along them was an urinal, in the floor of which there was a little gully, with a water-tap over it. All these fittings are improperly placed, of improper construction or form, and improperly connected to the sewers." Have you any remark to make upon that? When I first took this place in hand the vegetables of the Chinese hawkers were lying on the ground where the men slept. I told them they must erect a stand not less than 3 feet from the ground all round, and another, and then another, till all the vegetables were off the floor. That was done; and I have seen the place scrubbed and whitewashed, and the water-closets whitewashed every month, and sometimes once a week. The pans were perfectly clean whenever I inspected the place. Of course there is always a certain smell about them, as the Chinese stand upon the seats, and the water goes on the floor, and the smell complained of is caused by urine and the opium.

16145. Mr. Abigail.] Reverting to those places where the residents have enclosed the yards so as to increase the house accommodation, have you no power to interfere with that? No; that is in the department of the building surveyor, under the Building Act.

16146. President.] Supposing the closet arrangements generally were not up to the latest inventions or requirements in such matters, would you have the power, seeing that these matters are now regulated by the Water and Sewerage Board, to order the substitution of other fittings in place of the old ones? Decidedly not.

16147. Therefore, as far as Dr. Thomson's complaint about the improper construction of fittings and so forth is concerned, you would have no authority to act? No authority at all.

16148. Mr. Abigail.] Could you make any complaint to anyone? Yes; to Mr. Smail, the chief engineer of the Sewerage Board, and I have made repeated references to him on these matters.

16149. Have the Board inspectors? They have a host of them.

16150. Mr. Abigail.] Has the city building surveyor power to act in regard to these matters? He has power to bring anything before the City Improvement Board, and they may inspect the place and order it to be removed.

16151. President.] That is if it was dilapidated? Yes; otherwise they would have no power.

16152. As a matter of fact, the Improvement Board have no power to interfere in regard to matter of sanitation? No.

16153. Mr. Abigail.] With regard to those eight houses in Queen-street, how far were the closets off the houses? They were formerly near the houses, but as they were directly connected with places underneath, I had them removed, and these places built some little distance away, where there is a passage built for them. They are now about 6 yards away from the houses.

16154. Now, Mr. Seymour, I want to ask you a question or two with reference to the evidence you gave before the Common Lodging-house Inquiry Committee some years ago. In giving your evidence upon the effects of opium-smoking, you stated that girls were drugged by the Chinamen, and so on;—have you any personal knowledge of the effect of opium? I have seen it.

16155. Supposing I were to tell you that evidence has been given that it is impossible to drug a girl with opium? It is simply nonsense. I will give you the very evidence which I gave the Committee you have referred to. [The witness draws a rough diagram to illustrate his statement.] On the table was a lamp in the centre, and a girl lying on either side. One was awake; the other had let the pipe drop from her lips, and was asleep: I asked the one who was awake if the other girl was under the influence of opium, and

Mr. R. Seymour. and she said "Yes." I asked how long it would be before she awakened, and she replied, "Two or three hours. I thought I would like to test the effects of opium, and I therefore remained with Mr. David Robertson. I said, "We will try to waken her," and I pinched her repeatedly on the legs and on the bottom, but she never stirred; and the other girl said, "You can pinch there for the next few hours, for she is under the influence of opium." And so I found.

17 Dec., 1891.

16156. Do you think the girl you pinched was under the influence of drink? No, I am certain she was not.

16157. You did not smell anything like the fumes of drink? No. She was under the influence of opium.

16158. Did you see the other girl, the second one, go off? I did.

16159. And were the symptoms in her case the same? The symptoms were exactly the same. The pipe drops from the mouth, and they go off. I have seen them sit in a chair where there has been no room to lie down, and when the opium has taken effect they have fallen off the chair.

16160. Mr. Hawthorne.] What would you think of a number of opium-smokers, who have been smoking opium for years,—stating that they never knew an instance when the smoking of opium had rendered a person unconscious or unable to know what was going on around them, or to resist anyone interfering with them? I should say they were stating a deliberate falsehood. I have proved it.

16161. Mr. Abigail.] As a matter of fact you saw during that investigation you have spoken of Chinamen using girls for their own purposes while they were under the influence of opium? I did in a house in Cambridge-street. There was a little red-headed girl there.

[The witness withdrew.]

MONDAY, 21 DECEMBER, 1891.

Present:—

THE MAYOR OF SYDNEY (MR. ALDERMAN MANNING, J.P.), PRESIDENT.

FRANCIS ABIGAIL, Esq., J.P., VICE-PRESIDENT.

RAMSEY MCKILLOP, Esq., | QUONG TART, Esq.,
JOHN STUART HAWTHORNE, Esq.

Mrs. Sims called and examined:—

Mrs. Sims. 16162. Mr. Abigail.] What position do you occupy, Mrs. Sims? I am matron of the Church Home.

21 Dec., 1891. 16163. How long have you held that position? Nearly eighteen months.

16164. How many inmates of the Home are there? At present there are 23; we have had during the year over 40.

16165. And they go in and out of the institution I suppose? They stay their stipulated time. The first time they go in they stay for three months; the second time, six months.

16166. Is that by compulsion? Moral suasion. They sign an agreement before they are admitted that they will stay for three months.

16167. What are the class of people you accommodate? Well, it is an inebriates home.

16168. Have you not frequently given asylum to young women of immoral character and loose life? Yes, certainly.

16169. Do you remember having an inmate of your Home by the name of N—J—? I think some time ago—before my time—she was there.

16170. Do you know whether she has been in the institution several times? I could not tell you without reference to the record book, which shows when they come in and go out. I think she has been there two or three times.

16171. Has it ever come under your notice that while this woman has been in the Home she has spoken to other girls there, and induced them to go away with her to the Chinese places? No; I have never heard of anything like that.

16172. Have you never heard of any of the inmates of that establishment exercising an influence of that kind over girls, that is, for immoral purposes? Yes.

16173. You have heard of that? Yes; and there have been one or two brought away from improper houses, where there have been Chinese.

16174. Brought to the Home from these places? Yes, brought to the Home.

16175. Has it ever been brought under the notice of the committee of management? Oh, yes. A report is submitted to them every week. I may say that the committee meet every week, and at this meeting a short report is given of what has transpired with regard to new inmates, as far as I am able to ascertain. But they are very seldom truthful.

16176. Did your committee ever take any action affecting these girls who acted as decoys to the others in the institution? No; I think not. You see, they have to go simply upon what these girls say. I may mention one case that we had from Bathurst—a young girl of only 14 years of age. Dean Marriott took a great interest in the girl, and tried very hard to induce her to leave her mother, who was certainly a very shocking character, but without effect. We have ladies doing mission work in connection with the Home, and when the missionary went to the house in which this girl was found, she was discovered with a Chinaman there. It was the mother, I suppose, trying to get her living in that dreadful way. The girl was very young, and we took her away, and had her with us for several months.

16177. Did your committee never represent to the police that they could have proceeded against the young girl under the Industrial Schools Act, and have her taken to the Shaftesbury School, or some such institution? Yes; but they take no notice, and this was a special case from Bathurst. The ladies there took a great interest in trying to save the girl, and had been in communication with the Rev. Mr. Tress, our secretary.

16178. In this case the mother of this girl was trying to make a portion of the means of her livelihood by the prostitution of her daughter? So I was told.

16179. Have you had any other cases of girls as young as that? Yes; we had another young girl 15 years of age.

16180. Pardon me one moment;—did it ever come to your knowledge that a Chinaman was the cause of that girl's downfall in the first instance? I do not know that. Mrs. Sims.
16181. Now, about this other girl, of 15 years of age? This girl was taken out of a brothel in, I think, Campbell-street, where there were Chinese. The police know all about that. The people of this girl are in Brisbane, and there is a clergyman there who has taken a great interest in a little sister of hers. She has no mother. I wrote to Mr. Stonerigg, in Brisbane, about this girl, who had led a shocking life. She was barely 16 years of age. The police arrested her, in the house of a Mrs. ———, one of the worst places in Surry Hills. She afterwards told me that there was a Chinaman there, and that Mrs. ——— really got her living by trafficking with these girls. 21 Dec., 1891.
16182. Have you had other girls who have been associated with Chinese in your institution? Yes; but they have left.
16183. Have you any record of girls that have been redeemed through your establishment? No. We send so many into the country. In fact we do our best to get them away from their old habits and associations.
16184. Then you do not know how many have gone back to their old course of life? No. Those who leave the town occasionally write, and seem to be doing pretty well. Last year I sent two girls into the country, and one of them married very well indeed. Those who go away do far better than those who get situations here, because they get right away from the scenes of old temptations. Of course there are exceptions to the rule. There was one very superior girl, who would not lead a life like I have been describing, but who nevertheless could not do any good for herself, whom we got some very good people to take in hand, and she is doing exceedingly well.
16185. Did it ever come under your notice that the first betrayal of these girls was traceable to Chinamen? Yes; I think so.
16186. You have heard of it? Yes. That little girl, ———, who was living with Mrs. ———, told me that there was a Chinaman living there, and used to entice young girls. This young girl that I speak of is a very attractive little creature. Hers is a wasted life, indeed.
16187. Did you ever hear that opium was an agent in the betrayal of these girls? Oh, yes; I have heard them say that they do smoke opium.
16188. Have you ever inquired of them the effects of opium-smoking? Yes; I have always been interested in this work very deeply. They say it has quite an opposite effect from drink. It makes them almost lifeless and stupid.
16189. That is what I want to ascertain;—what you have just now stated is from their own admission to you? Yes.
16190. I asked you that question because we have been told by several young women who have used opium that it has no such effect; on the other hand we have evidence that the effect is to render them semi-unconscious and powerless to resist any one who may interfere with them? I quite believe the latter from what they have told me. They have also told me that the "craving" is very great—much greater than in the case of drink, and that when they get the opium habit it is far more difficult to give up. It never excites them. But they feel to want it, to get into a state of oblivion or something like it.
16191. Mr. McKillop.] A perfectly languid state? Yes.
16192. Mr. Abigail.] Are you satisfied with the result of your eighteen months' work in the Church Home? Yes; on the whole I think it has been satisfactory.
16193. Do you know of many cases where the inmates have acted treacherously by inducing other girls to go back to their old courses? I think sometimes bad influence is brought to bear by some of the inmates, and then when their time comes they clique together as it were. In fact, so dangerous is this power of association felt to be that some of the girls who wish to do good will themselves beg to be sent to the country.
16194. When you know that girls have acted in that traitorous way do you still admit them a second and third time? No; if there is a bad record of them in that way they are not admitted.
16195. Mr. McKillop.] Do you know a girl by the name of ———? Yes; she I believe, is an opium-smoker.
16196. We have had information here that she has been the means of decoying young girls from the institution for immoral purposes;—do you know anything of that? No; I may say there are two ———, one Mary and the other the one we call Sid. ———. The other one is an older woman a good deal, and of bad character. She kept an improper house herself in Goulburn-street.
16197. According to the evidence this ——— I asked you about was the means of taking a young girl out of respectable employment and bringing her down to one of these Chinese dens;—I suppose that must have been the elder one? Yes; I dare say. Sid. ——— drinks, but she is one of the best-behaved women when she is in the Home.
16198. According to the evidence of the young woman in question she was an inmate of the Church Home when this woman ——— was there, and she describes her as one of the hardest workers there, and in fact that on that account the authorities tried to keep her? Yes.
16199. But that when she got outside she seemed to lose all control of herself and acted as a sort of decoy? Yes; I quite believe that.
16200. Do you know of any other girls who have had the same experience as the one I have mentioned? No; I do not think so. Sid. ——— has been there for twelve or eighteen months at a time.
16201. Is she of the unfortunate class? Yes; she was also in the "House of the Good Samaritan" for some time. She came the other day and asked for admission to the Home. There was no record against her except that when she was in before she was entrusted to go out to make some small purchases for washing and came back intoxicated, that being her unfortunate liability; otherwise there was no bad record of her. She had never escaped or tried to get away; so she was admitted.
16202. You tolerate all their weaknesses until they are beyond redemption? Yes. It is like a home of mercy. We know they will fall again, and again perhaps. But it is never too late as I tell them, although I do believe when once they begin to indulge in opium it is perfectly hopeless. They seem to suffer from almost complete loss of moral and physical power.
16203. Mr. Abigail.] Can you tell how many of the girls in the Home have acquired the habit of opium-smoking? I cannot tell you that. They do not have it there.
16204. Mr. McKillop.] Have you heard that there are recognised "decoys" whose business it is to procure young girls for purposes of prostitution? Yes. I cannot tell you who they are. But I have no doubt about

about it whatever. I know of one case, of a woman who stayed almost two years in the Home—a superior sort of person; and I know she has tried to decoy others who have left the Home. I have not been able to discover her whereabouts. Only the other day I received a slight intimation. I know she has kept a house of ill-fame, and three or four girls who have been in the Home and subsequently done well in situations found for them, have eventually found their way there. She has I believe a place somewhere in Devonshire-street. I believe she used to smoke opium. Her name is _____.

16205. From your experience in dealing with these young girls you consider that the opium habit has a more injurious effect than if they took to intoxicating drink? It is harder for them to give up.

16206. They become perfect slaves to it? Yes. I have known cases where we have had them come in perhaps intoxicated, and when after a week perhaps they have become all right again, the craving has been so great that they have come and begged to be let out. When it has been pointed out that they have signed for three months and that it is not in my power to deal with such an application until the committee meet again, they have tried in every way to get out. Then snuff is a thing which these unfortunate creatures take a great quantity of. The other day a woman was grinding up something, and on making inquiry I found that it was an old clay pipe she had found, and she was grinding that up for snuff because she could not get the proper thing.

16207. Prostitution is a good deal on the increase I suppose? Yes, I think it is, particularly amongst the very young.

16208. Surry Hills and about that neighbourhood appears to be a regular hot-bed for that sort of thing? Yes. It is truly a horrible place. We have a young girl who had been in one of those places. She is respectably connected. She showed me a letter from her friends in New Zealand. This girl is not 17 years of age yet, and she was a mother at 15. I do not think the police are as a rule sufficiently vigilant. I have had to make a complaint in consequence of three of the worst characters in the neighbourhood assembling night after night under the windows of the Church Home, and making use of the most obscene language, and calling out to the women where they should go to, naming a certain house. The disturbance made by these half-drunken women and men of the lowest type used to wake us up at night.

16209. Mr. Abigail.] Were any of these young women? Yes. There is one quite young—only 17 years of age. That little one that I have spoken of was with them one night, with an older woman, one of a most notorious character. I mentioned the circumstance to the committee. It was something dreadful the way in which these women used to go on, between 3 and 4 o'clock in the morning, calling out to the women in the Home by their names. The committee set a detective to work, and since then we have had peace. These women were only doing that to induce those inside to go to their houses; they called out where they were living in fact.

16210. Mr. McKillop.] So as to give them their address? Certainly. One of them sang out, "Girls and women, I am close by here in Riley-street."

16211. Have any of these girls escaped from your Home? Yes. They have escaped.

16211½. They have occasionally got over the wall? Yes. When the craving comes on they will get desperate.

16212. And also through the overtures made by these women you have been speaking of? Yes. We cannot keep them over their time, and suppose they do not go before they can go to these places then. If they are bent upon it. Sometimes they will not go to the country.

16212½. In the Home, of course, they are always well treated? Yes; and they have the best of food. There is no stint of food, and everything is abundant and wholesome. It is also cooked for them.

16213. What work or duties do the inmates perform? They perform laundry work. It would never do to keep forty women idle.

16214. President.] I suppose it would be easier to keep forty men in order? It would be easier to deal with a hundred men I tell them.

16215. Mr. McKillop.] Do you find them a great trouble to keep in order? I do not find them troublesome when I am in the house.

16216. Some of the older women are unruly I suppose? No; I think the younger ones are the worst.

16217. I suppose they feel their position more keenly when they come to their senses than the older ones? Yes. We had another young girl, an orphan, without any friends in Sydney, whom we got a situation with some Christian people at Wollongong, who treated her like a daughter. In fact everything possible was done for her. But the result was not encouraging. Whether she had been corresponding with some of her old companions I do not know; but she suddenly got dissatisfied—Wollongong did not agree with her, and she left after staying six months. She was given an excellent character by the people with whom she had been living. They said they could not have had a better servant; yet that same girl is now living in a dreadful way in Sussex-street. She is only 17 years of age.

16218. Are you in the habit of asking the inmates of your Home their nationality when they are admitted? Yes; always, and their history.

16219. Are they principally girls of Australian birth? A great number of them are.

16220. Are the majority of Australian? Well, I will not say the majority; I think it is about half and half. We have one Chinese half-caste there. She is an inveterate smoker; if she can get the means to indulge in it, and I have been told an opium-smoker too.

16221. Mr. Abigail.] She smokes cigarettes, I suppose? No; if she can get a clay pipe, that is what she likes. I do not think anything so refined as a cigarette would satisfy them.

16222. Have you heard at anytime that the Chinese are, in the first place, responsible for the downfall of these girls by employing decoys to bring respectable young girls to their place? No, I cannot say I have heard that.

16223. Have you heard on the other hand that these girls have been decoyed for the purpose of enabling the women who keep these places to receive the money which the Chinamen will give them? Oh, yes, those who keep the houses. That Mrs. _____ is one of them. I think that woman ought to be hunted out of Sydney—she has decoyed so many girls.

16224. Can you give us her address? I am not quite certain. I think I have got it at home. It is somewhere in Goulburn-street. The police know her well.

16225. Can you forward the address of this woman to Sydney? Yes. I would do anything to bring about her expulsion from Sydney. When three of the young girls were being taken to Mr. Hargrave's Church, which is close to the Home (I was absent at the time, my place being supplied by the sub-matron) the

- they bolted, and two of them I know were in houses where there were Chinese. One of them was taken up at last Quarter Sessions, and was sentenced to 12 months. She is under 16 years of age.
16226. Do you know of any other notorious brothel-keeper or procuress like this woman Mrs. ———? Mrs. Sims.
21 Dec., 1891.
- Yes, there was another woman in Campbell-street.
16227. How long has your Home been in existence? About six years I think.
16228. How long have you been in charge of it? I have been in charge about eighteen months.
16229. You have no children there? No, only women.
16230. Mr. Hawthorne.] How do you know the police took no notice of what you stated about the young woman that ran away? They never troubled themselves.
16231. Are you quite sure? They said they could not find them. But I found out for myself.
16232. Did the committee bring the matter before Mr. Fosbery? I do not think they did.
16233. Do you think it fair to charge the police with neglect of duty, when your committee did not think proper to communicate with the head of the police department on the subject? They ought to have done it certainly.
16234. Did you make any complaint to the police themselves in regard to it? No. But I went to the Darlington Station two or three times and gave a description of the ages and appearances of the girls.
16235. Did you see Inspector Bremner there? I do not know the officer by name.
16236. A stout, fair-whiskered man? No. He was a tall sickly-looking man that I saw.
16237. Did they make a record of it? Yes.
16238. Did they evince any interest in the matter? I do not think so.
16239. Have you had occasion, either before or since the case you have mentioned, to report to the police anything in connection with the desertion of any of the girls from your institution? Oh yes. But I think only on one occasion did they arrest a woman for us. It was just before the three girls went away that I have spoken of, in the case of a notorious character who cleared out, and I laid an information against her to have her arrested.
16240. You know the woman ———? Yes.
16241. Is she in the Home at present? No, she is in Murdoch's Home in Paddington. I think the authorities ought to weed out that place.
16242. How is that Home you speak of managed or maintained? They, that is, Mr. and Mrs. Murdoch, get their living by laundry work; they do nothing else.
16243. Are they people of known respectability? I know nothing of them except what the women have told me, who have been there. This ——— is a good worker. She was two years in our Home and nearly two years with the Sisters of the Good Samaritan.
16244. Is she a Roman Catholic? Yes.
16245. She has taken turn about, between the Roman Catholic Institution and the Church Home, which I take to be Church of England, is it not? Yes. But our Home is open to all, of whatever denomination.
16246. The same remark applies to the Home of the Good Samaritan, does it not? I dare say. I have often asked them how it is, because they must carry on the rules, although there is no proselytising.
16247. So that in your Home the Roman Catholic inmates have to conform to the Church of England rules and attend the service, though they may not actually join in it? Yes.
16248. And the same thing applies I suppose in the Home of the Good Samaritan? Yes, I suppose so. The Sisters say they need not follow the service, but still they have to be there.
16249. You have said that Murdoch's Home in Paddington is a place that ought to be put down? Yes.
16250. What is your special objection to that place? I do not think it is carried on with due regard for the welfare of the unfortunates who frequently find their way there. I can mention a case that occurred the other day: I saw that she had been taken up by the police and was remanded. Her mother was very anxious about her. I sent a lady missionary to find her—she found her in Mrs. Murdoch's—with a message from her mother. She came half intoxicated. I said, "I am very sorry to see you like this; you know the promise you made to your mother." I may say that her mother had sent me a complete outfit for her, and asked me to send her back home for Christmas. She said she would not give her mother the expense of her journey, and would take a situation for a few weeks (this was in November), and save the money to go home. I thought it was a very commendable thing, so I got her a situation, but she did not keep it more than ten days, and she went straight to Murdoch's, where the missionary had found her. I asked her if she did not think she was ungrateful, to come to the Church Home when she was in trouble and then to go to that place. The reply was, that the food they got there was inferior, and the place was dirty, but that Mrs. Murdoch allowed them to get as much drink as they liked. This, of course, they could not get in the Church Home.
16251. Generally speaking, she complained of the place? Yes.
16252. And the only attraction in the place for herself and other girls of the fallen order was that Mrs. Murdoch, the keeper of this Home, allowed them to have as much drink as they liked? Yes.
16253. What age is this woman you have been speaking of? About 22. I asked her, "Why not go to the sisters?"—She is a Roman Catholic—and she said, "Oh, no; I cannot go and shut myself up there."
16254. With regard to this woman ——— whom you have had in the Home, have you known of any instances where she has enticed some of the younger inmates of the Home to go away? Not of my own personal knowledge, but I know that she kept an improper house and have known several that lived with her, girls who have been in the Home.
16255. Is it not dangerous to allow women of that stamp to make use of the institution—dangerous, I mean, to the younger inmates of the institution who may be desirous of reforming their lives? I have never had that idea of ——— that she would entice young girls to go into or resume evil courses.
16256. Would you be surprised to learn that a witness before this Commission, and who had been in your Home for some months a few years ago, attributed her downfall to the fact that she was induced to leave her situation by this woman (———), and go to live amongst the Chinese on the Rocks? I should be surprised. I have never heard anything of the kind. But I know there are two ———. One of them is a very bad character; she is called Polly or Mary ———.
16257. Were they both in your institution at the same time? No.
16258. What stamp of woman is this other one? A dreadful looking woman.
16259. How long is it since this one was in the institution? A long time ago—before my time; but I think her name is in the books.

- Mrs. Sims. 16260. Who preceded you? Mrs. Pool.
 21 Dec., 1891 16261. Do you allow the inmates of the Home to mix together indiscriminately, the vile with the apparently innocent? Yes; the accommodation is not large enough to enable us to classify them.
 16262. Do you think the Home is well adapted for the purposes which it aims to carry out? No; and I know the committee do not think so; but they have no funds to provide additional accommodation. Those who work in it feel its unsuitability for the purpose. It is not large enough, and therefore we cannot classify the inmates.
 16263. Have you ever suggested to the committee the desirability of endeavouring, by some means or other, to remove to larger quarters, so that you might be able to classify the inmates? Yes; and they fully recognise it; but, as I have said, the necessary funds are wanting.
 16264. Do you not think, in conducting an institution of that kind, that the cure is worse than the evil, in bringing young females of tender years to a place like that, and placing them day and night with old and depraved women? Certainly there is great danger; but my experience in the Home is that the young ones are as bad as, or worse than, the old ones.
 16265. How often do your committee publish a report? Once a year.
 16266. Has it appeared in your report that the committee are anxious to secure funds for better premises? Yes.
 16267. Has it been set forth to the public and the subscribers? I think all the subscribers knew about it; but the Home has been worked so very quietly that many people do not know of its existence. In fact there are not many subscribers. The Church of England people form a wealthy community, and they should certainly respond.
 16268. Do the committee of management visit the Home regularly? Yes; every Tuesday; and several ladies go amongst the women in the rooms. They know everything, even to the smallest trifle, that goes on.
 16269. During the eighteen months you have presided over the Church Home have you met with many cases of young women who have been in the habit of living with the Chinese in the city? Yes; I have mentioned one or two.
 16270. Have there been only two cases? There were two, perhaps three; but I am positive about two.
 16271. Do you find that—the association with the Chinese—to be a danger to the morals of the young women with whom you have to deal? Yes; and I may say that I find there is very little hope of permanent reformation of girls who once take up with the Chinese and frequent their dens. Because wherever they may be we find that they generally go back to that life again. In the case of this — whom I took from the police court, when we got outside several disreputable-looking women came round her; but I cleared them off, and got the girl into a cab. The magistrate told me that if I was going to send her away to Brisbane, where she has friends, not to let it be known here that she was going, as the Chinese in Sydney would communicate with their friends there the intelligence.
 16272. Have these girls ever told you what is the reason they find their way back to the Chinese when once they have been cohabiting with them; is it because the Chinese give them more money than the Europeans? Yes, I think it is that.
 16273. Have you ever found that it is on account of opium-smoking? I think it is the two combined. They say the Chinese are kinder, and give them what they want, and more money; and, of course, they begin to smoke opium.
 16274. When these girls who have been accustomed to opium-smoking are admitted to the Home do they suffer much? The craving sometimes is very great. At first I did not know what it was. They become restless, cross, ill-tempered. When they first come to the Home it is a week before they are put to any work, and are allowed to remain quiet in their beds if they liked. If they feel inclined to come to meals, well and good; if not, it is sent up to them. When they come down to work they get restless and uneasy. One of them said to me on one occasion, "You have no idea what the craving is."
 16275. Does this craving for opium seem even greater than the craving for drink on the part of inebriates? They say it is. Their food they cannot look at, the craving is so great. They want something to soothe them. The opium, they say, makes them stupid—paralyses them, as it were, and it is harder to give up.
 16276. Have you found that the girls who have indulged in opium-smoking previous to entering the house are also drunkards, or the reverse? They take both.
 16277. You think one accompanies the other? If they cannot get opium they take drink.
 16278. And if they could get the opium? Then they would be satisfied with that.
 16279. It removes the craving for drink? Yes.
 16280. Speaking as an observer in your official position, which do you think the greater evil, opium-smoking or the indulgence in strong drink on the part of females? I think one is as bad as the other.
 16281. Which would you feel most confident of being able to permanently cure? Drink, I should say.
 16282. You would have less hope of curing a confirmed opium-smoker than one given to drink? Yes.
 16283. Mr. Quong Tart.] How many women have been admitted to the institution during your time? From thirty-eight to forty on an average. In the winter months there are more; it is then too cold to sleep out in the parks. In the summer months they go to the different laundries; in the winter they have not the work to do.
 16284. Of what ages are the inmates generally? From fifteen years and upwards. When they are first admitted they sign to stay for three months, after their admission has been approved of by the committee.
 16285. Do the committee ever decide not to admit them? In some cases, but not often.
 16286. The object of the institution is to try to reform them? Yes.
 16287. But some of them are too far gone, I suppose? Yes; I am afraid that is the case sometimes.
 16288. Do you know how many of these girls have been found in the Chinamen's places? I cannot tell you, but recently there have been three.
 16289. That is during eighteen months? Yes.
 16290. How many have been found in European places of bad repute? A great number I fancy. I cannot tell you that. Of course they do not all come from improper houses; some of them have fallen through drink.
 16291. Referring to the two girls who were found in the Chinese quarters, I suppose you do not know whether they were virtuous before they went to the Chinese places? I do not.

16292. Of what nationality were the young girls that were found with the Chinese? They were natives, I think. I do not know whether this little girl I speak of was born in Queensland. I know her people are in Brisbane; she ran away from there. I asked her if she was acquainted with the Chinese there, and she said no, that it was at Mrs. ——— house that she first became acquainted with a Chinaman. Her mother died, and her father placed her with some people who were very strict; she did not like the restraint, and ran away to Sydney.

16293. And was the first place she stopped at Mrs. ———? Yes. The police arrested her there.

16294. Regarding the opium, do you think it would be a good thing to stop its importation into the Colony? I think they ought to, certainly. I lived twelve years in India, and that is the most iniquitous thing there. They get so awfully demoralised, they cannot shake it off.

16295. Have you any watchmen to keep the inmates from clearing out? No; they never give us any trouble, except when they quarrel among themselves. I find more trouble with the young girls who have had money in their possession, and money to dress; they feel the restraint.

16296. With regard to Murdoch's establishment, you say it is a laundry and is also a home for these women? Yes; they are simply kept there.

16297. No pay? No; but there are facilities for getting drink.

16298. Mr. McKillop.] What is the name of the laundry? Murdoch's Home. I certainly think that is a place which ought to be looked after.

16299. I suppose it is purely and simply a sweating-den? I think so. They have told me over and over again it is a dreadful place. I know nothing of Mrs. Murdoch but what I have heard from the women, who have told me that she supplied them with beer sometimes, and let them get out at all hours of the day.

[The witness withdrew.]

Mr. Quong Tart examined:—

16300. Mr. Abigail.] You carry on business in various parts of the city, Mr. Tart? Yes.

16301. How long have you been in this Colony? About thirty years.

16302. You have a very intimate knowledge of what is being done in the way of Chinese gambling and opium-smoking in this city? Yes, a fair knowledge.

16303. Now, I want to ask you, Mr. Tart, are you connected in any way, either directly or indirectly, with gambling in the city or any part of the Colony? Not to the extent of a farthing.

16304. You are quite sure of that? I am certain.

16305. Have you any close relatives who are connected with any of these gambling-dens, or carrying them on? No, certainly not.

16306. So that if anyone has said that you have a number of relatives who are running gambling-shops, and that you share in the profits, that would be untrue? That is untrue.

16307. It has been stated in two or three quarters that you have a number of relatives who are carrying on gambling business, and that in fact you receive a share of the profits; that you are simply humbugging the Commission and the public by your seeming attempts to put down gambling;—and you now declare that statements of that kind are absolutely without any foundation? Yes; I should very much like to bring those persons who have made such statements to the proof.

16308. Mr. Hawthorne.] Having heard that such statements have been made against you, as a Royal Commissioner, would you like, in justice to yourself, and in the interests of the public generally, that the person or persons who have made charges against you of having an interest in gambling-houses should be brought before the Commission for examination? Yes; that is my wish.

16309. You know Long Pen? Yes.

16310. And you heard him make a statement before the Commission that your relatives were mixed up in gambling? No.

16311. You know Mr. Gouldtown? Yes.

16312. Mr. McKillop.] I wish to examine you on the opium question. As a man of experience in regard to opium-smoking on the part of your countrymen, do you think it a fact the use of opium in this way by men or women in the first stage causes them to be drugged or to lose their senses? I do not think it makes them senseless—it makes them half-stupid. But when once they acquire the habit, and get thoroughly used to it, they must smoke at the stated hours during the morning, afternoon, and night, whenever it is that they have accustomed themselves to it. Then, if you stop them smoking, they will feel desperate enough to do anything; in fact they would run a knife through you. They get into a dreadful state, vomiting, and tears running from their eyes. Then when they have a smoke they feel better, and after they have taken a certain quantity they feel like half-sleepy or dozey.

16313. Are they powerless? Yes; that is what I have learnt from opium-smokers. In China there are very strict laws with regard to the opium traffic; in fact the Government will not allow the people to grow the poppy, from which opium is produced. When I was in China I made inquiries on this subject, and in answer to questions which I put as to the reason for this strict prohibition of the growth of the poppy, I was told that the Government regarded the traffic in opium as a great evil—that if they once allowed the poppy to be grown the result would be to injure and destroy the Chinese right and left, and stop all useful industries, such as rice-growing. It would, in fact, be a national calamity. Indeed, they feel hopeful that some day they will be able to make arrangements with England to stop the importation of opium by paying down a lump sum.

16314. I suppose you have had experience in different Colonies in Australia? No. All my life nearly has been spent in New South Wales.

16315. Have you lived in Victoria? No, only visited.

16316. Do you know from any authority whether opium-smoking is indulged in to a larger extent by Europeans in Victoria or New South Wales?

16317. Do you know any reason why that is so? Only that the Chinese perhaps come more intimately into relations with the Europeans in Victoria.

16318. I suppose on account of the extent of gold-diggings in Victoria the Europeans see more of the Chinese, and get into their quarters, and thus learn to smoke opium? Yes, I think so.

16319. You are quite sure that the percentage of Europeans who smoke opium is much larger in Victoria than in New South Wales? Yes, a great deal larger. Some years ago Inspector Brennan and I went round on a visit of inspection, and we saw a great deal worse than can be seen in Sydney—50 per cent. worse.

16320. Men and women smokers? Mostly women.

16321.

Mrs. Sims.
21 Dec., 1891,

Mr.
Quong Tart.
21 Dec., 1891.

Mr.
Quong Tart
21 Dec., 1891

16321. Did you go through the towns of New South Wales? Yes; I went through Narrandera, Albury, Wagga Wagga, Hay, Deniliquin, and Urana.
16322. And do you think it is a fact that it is because of first taking to opium-smoking that these girls are found living permanently in the Chinese quarters? Yes. In fact any Chinese living with a woman would try all he knew to induce her to stop smoking.
16323. Why is that—because she gets useless or indifferent to sexual intercourse? Yes. It gradually wears them away, so that they are no good for anything.
16324. And, therefore, you are of opinion that the Government ought to adopt stringent measures to check the evil, by preventing the importation of opium to the Colony? Except for medicinal purposes.
16325. You think it is bad for the young life of the Colony? Yes. If it is one part good it is a thousand parts bad. But I must say this, that I think it is unjust on the part of the Government, after allowing the importation of opium, and charging an import duty upon it, not to allow the Chinese to sell it. No Chinese in this Colony could hold a license under the present Act. They have to take out a diploma of some kind.
16327. However, you are of opinion that some stringent measure should be adopted for checking the large importation of opium into the Colony? Yes.
16328. Are you aware whether there is a large amount of smuggling going on among the Chinese? I cannot say that. I have not taken any interest in the Chinese trade whatever.
16329. President.] You swear positively that you are not associated with the Chinese bankers in the city, who provide means of gambling for your countrymen? Yes. I have not the slightest connection with them in any way whatever.
16330. Is it a fact that you have at any time assisted your countrymen to smuggle in opium? No, certainly not.
16331. And you are not part-proprietor of any of these gambling-dens? No.
16332. Mr. Hawthorne.] You know Mr. Ung Quay? Yes.
16333. He was examined before this Commission? Yes.
16334. What is he? He is a merchant, and was agent for Gibbs, Bright, & Co.
16335. Is he agent for Gibbs, Bright, & Co. now? No. I think he has given that up.
16336. Is he a man that stands in good esteem amongst the better class of Chinese? He used to stand very well with the merchants, but he does not now.
16337. What is the reason that he has fallen in the esteem of the respectable Chinese in the city? Probably because his connections may not have been straightforward.
16338. At Question 4226 Mr. Ung Quay is reported to have said, in answer to a question I put to him as to whether he was opposed to gambling, "Yes, and at the time I told you of it I did all I could, so far as giving information to the Quarter Sessions about the gamblers; then some of Mr. Quong Tart's relatives acted for the other side, and one or two storekeepers who had worked with me worked together with Quong Tart's relatives, and I gave it up. Most of these gamblers are Mr. Quong Tart's relatives." Now, is that true or untrue? It is untrue.
16339. You have no relatives engaged in gambling? None whatever.
16340. The persons whom Mr. Ung Quay speaks of as being your relatives are simply persons who come from the same part of China as yourself? Yes.
16341. They are no blood relations of any kind? No.
16342. Have you heard it stated that Mr. Ung Quay has himself been identified with some of these gambling-dens? Yes, I have.
16343. You heard a witness before this Commission state that Mr. Ung Quay was connected with some of these gambling-dens? Yes.
16344. And also that he did it quietly, and did not want it to be known that he was connected with them, and frequently went in at night to some of these places? Yes.
16345. Do you remember our visiting one of the Chinese gambling-dens in the city, and seeing amongst a number of other Chinese pictures one in which Mr. Ung Quay was taken in a group? Yes. That was in a noted gambling-house.
16346. It has been distinctly stated that Mr. Ung Quay has an interest in certain of these gambling-houses, sharing as a partner? Yes.
16347. He does not allow his name to appear, of course? No; he is too cute for that. He is very clever.
16348. He is a man of considerable ability and a good deal of cunning? Yes.
16349. Do you think it was connections like this, among other things, coming to the knowledge of his countrymen in the city, that caused him to forfeit the good name that he previously had with the better class of Chinese? Yes.
16350. Does your knowledge of the Chinese merchants in the city lead you to think that they have done their very best to suppress gambling and opium-smoking? Yes. I believe they do their best; but they are afraid to act very openly, because it is dangerous.
16351. They are afraid to show their hands in consequence of the danger they incur from the opposition of the Chinese who do indulge in opium-smoking and gambling? Yes.
16352. In fact the same thing applies to you in a sense, so far as the attitude of a section of the Chinese is concerned; that is to say, your presence on this Commission, acting as a Commissioner appointed by the Government, has caused a considerable amount of ill-feeling to be exhibited towards yourself by the Chinese engaged in gambling? Yes; a very great amount of ill-feeling. I have heard that one Chinaman said that he would split me up in four pieces if he could get hold of me, for acting on the Commission.
16353. In accepting a seat on this Commission you were simply actuated by a desire to suppress the vices alleged to exist among a section of your countrymen in this Colony? Yes.
16354. I believe you have published a pamphlet on the opium question, and have worked for years to try and suppress that evil, besides doing your best to stamp out gambling? Yes; and I have spent my own money in it.

[The witness resumed his seat at the Board.]

TUESDAY,

TUESDAY, 22 DECEMBER, 1891.

Present:—

THE MAYOR OF SYDNEY (MR. ALDERMAN MANNING, J.P.), PRESIDENT.

FRANCIS ABIGAIL, Esq., J.P., VICE-PRESIDENT.

RAMSEY MCKILLOP, Esq., | QUONG TART, Esq.,
JOHN STUART HAWTHORNE, Esq.

Mr. Michael Daley called and examined:—

16355. President.] You are a stevedore, Mr. Daley? Yes.
16356. And you employ a large number of men? Yes, from 200 to 300 a week.
16357. Mr. McKillop.] Generally, you have been in the habit of employing a large number of men during the time you have been stevedoring? Yes.
16358. You have lived in Lower George-street for a considerable length of time have you not? Yes; I have been there all my lifetime—I do not think I have been more than a couple of miles away.
16359. In your opinion has the number of Chinese gambling-dens increased during the years you have been in the locality? Yes, it has considerably.
16360. You have every week paid large sums of money away as wages have you not? Yes. I have paid as much as £7 to one man in a week.
16361. And in the aggregate you have paid a few hundreds away in the week? Last week I paid £400.
16362. Do you know from personal observation that many of these men, who work hard all the week, and probably have earned a liberal wage, have spent the whole of their earnings in the gambling-dens run by Chinamen, and that they have then come to you for a small loan? Yes.
16363. I would like you to inform the Commission of the number of instances that have come under your personal observation? I cannot enumerate the number, because it was a weekly occurrence at one time, and since this Commission started it has eased off a bit. But it used to be very prevalent. They would come back to me, and say, "Lend us £1 to take home to the old woman, to get something to eat for to-morrow." I would say, "Why, how is this; it is only three or four hours ago since you got £4 or £5?" Some of these men make good money, at 1s. 6d. an hour. Their answer generally would be, "Oh, I have been up at the chows, and I am cleared out," and I would reply to them, "You must be a fool."
16364. You have been applied to in that way times out of number? It has occurred a great number of times. I was constantly preaching to them about it. But it was no use. One or two of them would occasionally get a big lift at gambling. I have known one man to get £30 or £40 from the Chinamen.
16365. They have won it at play? Yes; and that induces them to try their luck again.
16366. Do they frequently win like that? No; very seldom.
16367. It is only a kind of a draw? Yes; I should judge so. I only went into one of these places on one occasion. I was very busy. It was before the strike, and I was told that I could get some men if I went into one of Long's buildings on the right hand-side of George-street going up. I found the place full.
16368. How long have you been employing labour as a stevedore? I have been all my life employing labour, and as a stevedore I should say about seven or eight years.
16369. And this gambling practice has been carried on ———? More or less all the time.
16370. Has it been increasing in your opinion lately? The men do not come to me for money now.
16371. Did they do so up to a few months ago? It has not occurred since the strike. In fact at last I would not lend them any money, because I thought it was a sin for them to be going there.
16372. Are you of opinion that the large amount of gambling that has been practised at that end of the city could have been prevented by the police if a proper system of supervision had been adopted? I think so.
16373. There would have been nothing to prevent them? Well, I cannot say what they might have been able to do, but I think if the police had made more raids they would not have been able to carry on so openly; at least I think they would not have done so. At the same time I must say that the police have difficult job there. For instance, I could not have gone into the place I did if I had not been taken by a man who knew the place. It is very difficult to enter these places to discover what is going on.

Mr.
M. Daley.
22 Dec., 1891.

Mr. S. Sloan called and examined:—

16374. President.] What are you? I am a working gardener.
16375. Mr. Abigail.] You are secretary to the Gardeners' Union, I believe? Yes.
16376. And therefore you are in possession of a considerable amount of information with reference to the employment of Chinese for gardening purposes in Sydney? Yes.
16377. Well, the Commissioners would like you to supply, in your own way, whatever information you have, and which may be useful to us in dealing with this question of the employment of the Chinese? Concerning the employment of Chinese in nurseries a number of things were brought before me, which were considered fully at the meetings of the Union, and we got the fullest information from those who were employed on the nurseries.
16378. What did that information consist of;—can you give us the total number of Chinese employed, and who employ them? Messrs. Pearce employ eighteen altogether—eight at Randwick, and ten at Gosford.
16379. All Chinamen? Yes; those I have mentioned are all Chinamen. He has Europeans as well. Mr. Searl employs thirteen—that is, eight at Botany, and five between the Petersham and Ashfield nurseries.
16380. Up to what date was Mr. Searl employing that number of Chinamen? Up to about a month ago.
16381. Are they still employed in Searl's nursery, do you know? I cannot speak for the present moment; but I know up to a month ago they were. Mr. Edwin Pearce, who keeps an orchard at Seven Hills, has fifteen Chinamen there.
16382. Can you rely upon your informants in these cases? Yes; I could give you the names of members of the Union who have given the information.
16383. Are there any other cases? Yes, but they are smaller ones.
16384. Those are the principal ones that you have investigated? Yes.
16385. Do you know anything about the wages paid to the Chinese? I do not know the wages exactly, but I know it is small; they work such long hours.

Mr. S. Sloan.
22 Dec., 1891.

16386.

- Mr. S. Sloan.
22 Dec., 1891.
16386. Do you think the employment of Chinese in this way injures or interferes with the employment of Europeans? Certainly.
16387. Supposing it has been stated here that the Chinese working in these gardens receive remuneration equal to what the Europeans receive, what would you say to that? I do not believe it is true, because our informants had to leave Searl's and Pearce's through the employment of Chinese—particularly the latter.
16388. Mr. Hawthorne.] What did your informant say he had to leave for? Mr. Pearce told him he could get Chinese at a cheaper rate of wage; and this man I speak of is a professional gardener.
16389. Would these men—your informants—be prepared to come before this Commission and make the same statements here? Yes; this man would come, if you could get him, but he is away in the country now. He had to go because he could not get employment in Sydney.
16390. You are quite positive as to the number of men employed in Searl's and Pearce's gardens? Yes.
16391. Have you taken the trouble, since a month ago, to ascertain whether they have dismissed any of their Chinese workmen or not? I took the trouble last night to see our vice-president, who gave us some information about Pearce's, and also about Searl's, and he is quite prepared to prove that the Chinese are there yet, or the great majority of them.
16392. That the numbers you have stated here are still in the employ of those firms? Yes.
16393. Then if either of these men have stated here that a very much smaller number of Chinese are in their employ than what you have given us, are we to take it that their statements are untrue? They are incorrect, certainly. We can supply the Commission with information as to the numbers by several men of our Union.
16394. Are any members of your Union working for either of these firms? No.
16395. Do your rules prevent any of your Union men working in the same garden with Chinese workmen? No; the rules do not prevent them.
16396. Then how is it that none of your Union are working for these particular firms? They are working in private places—some of them go on the job from one place to another.
16397. Mr. Abigail.] Where the men of your Union are now employed there are no Chinese kept? No.
16398. Mr. McKillop.] Mr. Pearce has the largest interest in that class of gardening, has he not? Yes.
16399. And yet he has complied with your request to discharge the Chinese labour? Yes. Mr. Searle refused to comply.
16400. And you mean to say that they employ them in the orchard too? Yes.
16401. To any considerable extent? Mr. Pearce, at Seven Hills, employs fifteen.
16402. Has he anything to do with Pearce the florists? No. He has nothing to do with Pearce, of King-street. He is principally in the fruit-growing line in Seven Hills.
16403. Is he the largest employer of Chinese labour among the gardeners? No; Mr. Pearce the florist is the largest; he employs eighteen.
16404. The Chinese go in for the vegetable line principally? Yes; they have outdone us in that line, because of the hours they work. They work from day-light till dark, between sixteen and eighteen hours a day, and a half day on Sunday.
16405. Do they usually work on a Sunday? Oh! yes; it is a customary thing.
16406. Mr. Hawthorne.] Do you call watering the plants working on Sunday? Yes.
16407. Mr. McKillop.] Do not the Europeans water their plants on a Sunday? No, except in the hot-houses.
16408. Mr. Hawthorne.] Do you think now, that it is not quite as sinful in the eyes of man or God watering inside a glass-house as outside in the open? Well there might be from a religious point of view.
16409. Mr. McKillop.] Your statement is that the Chinese water their gardens up to mid-day on Sunday? Yes.
16410. And you say the Europeans do it in the hot-houses? Not up to midday in the hot-houses. In the evening they have a half hour in the hot-houses.
16411. It does not matter whether it is half an hour or two hours—the principle is the same, do you not see that? No, I cannot see that, because in one case it is doing it for a living, and in the other it is not. What we complain of is the hours they work on week days, and the cheap way they live, all of which enables them to compete unfairly with the Europeans at the same calling.
16412. Do you know the wages that are paid to the Chinese as a rule? No; it is very hard to find out.
16413. You have only the statement of the man himself, or the employer? Yes.
16414. Can you say if the European vegetable-gardens are on the increase or decrease in Sydney? I should say they are on decrease, except where private gentlemen may have their own vegetable gardens. There are very few market-gardens about now; I think there are only three at Botany at the present time.
16415. I suppose a large number of the members of your Union are market-gardeners? Yes, there are several, and they had to give it best.
16416. You are of opinion that market-gardening is on the decrease among the Europeans? Yes.
16417. Is it owing to the keen competition they meet with? Yes; by the Chinese.
16418. Have you ever done any market-gardening yourself? No.
16419. Have you any experience in market-gardening at all? No; except in private gentlemen's gardens.
16420. Do you know whether the Chinese force their vegetables? Yes, they do that, I know.
16421. Do you know from your own personal knowledge whether they use human manure or urine for their vegetables? At one place I did see them use it. It was at Bondi, at a Chinese garden near the Park there. They earthed the vegetables up, and put it in the drills, at the roots. They kept the stuff in casks.
16422. Did you see them sprinkle it over the vegetables? No. I have heard that that is done, but I cannot say of my own personal experience.
16423. Do you know whether European gardeners are in the habit of putting human manure or urine at the roots of their vegetables? I cannot say. I would not like to use it unless I buried it in the ground.
16424. Is it merely a matter of sentiment, or is horse-dung as nasty as human manure? I would work the manure into the ground, and use plenty of water in any case.
16425. To decompose it? Yes.

Mr.
S. Sloan.
22 Dec., 1891.

16426. Mr. Hawthorne.] Is your knowledge of the use of human manure by the Chinese confined to what you saw at Bondi? Yes; that was some years ago. I was working near there, and used to go down to them for vegetables. I used to see them working in the garden.

16427. Are they competing in the floral line? Yes.

16428. The Chinese are not good nurserymen, as a rule, are they? No; they are not. They want to get the idea of it.

16429. Are you of opinion that when they do understand the industry they will compete with the European labourers as they do now in market-gardening? Yes. They will work the Europeans out, because the employers will be inclined to get them for cheapness.

16430. Mr. Searl has two places—one at Ashfield, and the other at Petersham;—supposing he has said that he had not any at one of these places, would it be true? No. I can supply evidence that will contradict it.

16431. Positive proof? Yes.

16432. You said a little while ago that the Europeans could not compete with the Chinese labourers, because of the number of hours they work, and the cheapness of their living;—does it take so much more to keep a European than a Chinese? They live very much cheaper. A European could not live like a Chinese.

16433. Would you be surprised to learn that some of these men have been living on poultry? I think they live mostly on rice. They do not live according to European ways at all.

16434. Are you sure they do not live as richly? Yes; I am quite sure of that. It does not take the same amount of money to keep a Chinese as it does to keep a European.

16435. Mr. Quong Tart.] How much does it cost a European for food per week? Between 10s. and £1 per week.

16436. Mr. Abigail.] I gather from what you said a short time ago that you do not know of your own knowledge how many Chinese Mr. Searl employs? No. I only know from information I have received from members of the Union.

16437. Mr. McKillop.] Will you be good enough to forward to the Secretary of the Commission the exact number of Chinese employed by the gentlemen referred to? I will give the names of those who can give you the information.

16438. You said just now that it would cost something like 15s. or £1 per week to keep a European in food;—now, supposing they went in for boarding themselves on a garden, the same way as the Chinese do, what would it cost them that way per man? About 8s. a week.

16439. What are the usual wages paid to Europeans working on the various gardens? Some single men get from 25s. to 30s. a week. It is more often £1 a week and found. The general rate for married men is £2 5s. a week.

16440. Do experienced gardeners get a higher rate? Some get £2 10s.; that is the highest.

16441. Mr. Abigail.] Do you know of any cases where Europeans have formed themselves into syndicates to work market-gardens? No.

16442. Have you heard of Chinamen doing that? No.

16443. Have you ever heard of (say) seven or eight of them taking a garden at Botany, 9 acres of land, and after paying all expenses, each one making at the rate of £60 or £70 profit out of it? No.

16444. Do you think it possible for Europeans to work land on the same principle, and make similar profit out of it? That I cannot say. They might.

16445. Can you tell us why the Europeans do not go more extensively into market-gardening? It is because of the keen competition of the Chinese. They sell cheaper.

16446. Do you know Mr. Alderman Smith, of Botany, a market-gardener? No.

16447. Would you be surprised to learn that he has worked his garden in competition with the Chinese gardeners there, and has made it profitable? Yes, I would be surprised.

16448. You do not think it possible for Europeans to work against Chinamen and make any profit? No; I do not think they would make much.

16450. Mr. Abigail.] Then you think if the Chinese were sent away out of the Colony, and were thus prevented from competing at your trade, the European market-gardeners would get into work again? Yes.

16451. Would not the result of that be to greatly increase the price of vegetables they would produce? I do not think so.

16452. Mr. McKillop.] Do you think the competition would be as keen amongst the European sellers? Yes; one will keep the other down.

16453. Mr. Quong Tart.] How many Europeans are employed in nurseries altogether to your knowledge? I cannot give you the exact number. We have on the books of the Association about seventy names, but they would not all be employed in the nurseries.

16454. How many hours per day do they work? Eight hours. Some of them work longer. I think ten hours is the average for a working day.

16455. Is it hard work in the garden? No; not unless the ground is new.

16456. When once the ground is in good working order it is not difficult? No. The working is the principal work then.

16457. If your plants want watering on a Sunday you have to give them water, or they would be killed, would they not? I think if you give them a good watering on Saturday they will last then till Monday morning.

16458. Supposing the plant was a delicate one? You would not plant them in the summer, which is the dry season. You would plant them in the proper season.

16459. It has been stated here that European gardens have increased lately, but you say it is the other way about? I have never heard of it, and I do not think it is likely either.

16460.

- Mr. S. Sloan. 16460. Do you know of any Chinese having left their gardens this year because they could not make them pay? I have not heard of it.
- 22 Dec., 1891. 16461. Do you think there is any truth in a statement that Europeans have bought Chinese market-gardeners out? I cannot say.
16462. If the Chinese work the same hours as the Europeans and live in the same way, you would have no objection to them;—is that the case? Yes. If they work and live according to what we do, then we shall have no objection to them, and will fairly compete with them.
- [The witness withdrew.]

Mr. John Keane called and examined:—

- Mr. J. Keane. 16463. President.] You are engaged in stevedoring? Yes.
- 22 Dec., 1891. 16464. And have been, together with your company, so engaged for many years? Yes.
16465. You employ a large number of men? We do.
16466. What wages do these men usually receive;—they work by piece-work largely, do they not? Working at the coal it is sometimes piece-work and sometimes by the hour. At general cargo, either loading or discharging ships, it is all by the hour, and they earn on an average from 30s. to 2 guineas a week. That is about the general average. Some of the coal men earn more. I am taking it right through, the good with the bad. Some of the men earn more, and some do not earn that much.
16467. Has it ever come to your knowledge that many of these men have visited the Chinese gambling-dens and lost all their earnings? Yes.
16468. Have they ever come to you immediately afterwards, asking for loans of money to get food for their homes? Yes; they have.
16469. Did they tell you at the time what had become of their money? On some occasions they did, and on others they did not, but their wives have on many occasions drawn attention to the fact.
16470. Do you think that the existence of these Chinese gambling-places in Lower George-street has been a great evil to these men, and a source of great hardship to their wives and families? I do not believe in that view at all. If the men did not go there I do not think the Chinese would ask them to. I know one case of a man who was a winch-driver on board the "Duckenfield," and had some few hundred pounds in the bank. Well he never rested content unless he was in these places. He won occasionally, and then lost, till at length he lost all his money.
16471. Then do you not think the fact of these Chinese gambling-dens existing in the city is a standing danger to these men? It is a danger, no doubt. The temptation is there.
16472. Would you like to see it suppressed? Yes; and I would assist to suppress it as far as lies in my power.
16473. Mr. McKillop.] You were born in that district, were you not? I was.
16474. Have you noticed whether the gambling-dens have been on the increase or the decrease during the last five years in that quarter? I think it has been on the increase since those houses were built between Queen's-place and Felton and Nocks. These places are all but one gambling-houses. I have seen men rushing there at meal-hours and at other times to buy tickets.
16475. That is, pak-ah-pu lottery-tickets? Yes.
16476. The question I asked was this: whether, during the last five years, the gambling-dens have been on the increase down there? And my answer is, that since these houses have been built there they have increased to that extent.
16477. These have been added to those that were in existence there before? Yes. It is more than five years since they were built.
16478. Is it not a fact—I think you answered a question of the kind from Mr. Abigail, but I wish to repeat it—that you have known men to spend the whole of their week's earnings in these dens, and sometimes very large amounts? It is a fact. I remember that on one occasion I paid a man £6 1s. 6d. between 12 o'clock and 2—these are the hours in which I pay—and I left my Company's office to go to my home. I had not got more than 200 yards on my way, I think, when that man came up to me to borrow £3. He had lost all his money. This was less than one hour and a half from the time I paid him.
16479. Did he tell you where he lost his money? Not then. His excuse for borrowing then was that he had a good chance to buy a watch and chain cheap.
16480. From whom did you learn the truth? From his wife and brother. He also borrowed £2 from his brother, and lost it in the fan-tan shop.
16482. Do you think if the police exercised greater precautions in this matter that the evil might be checked to a very low extent, or perhaps altogether? No; I cannot agree with that altogether. I do not think the police could keep the men away from those places. For instance, as I have noticed, when they see a policeman coming up or down, passing one of these shops, they will walk away, but as soon as his back is turned they get "the office" and they are back again. In fact I have seen the police put them out of the shops, but it is no good. I think the present law ought to be repealed and a new Act introduced to meet the case. The penalty should be more severe, I think, and I would give the police power to prosecute if the house was known to be a gambling-house, without all the trouble that they are put to at present.
16483. Is it a fact within your knowledge that a large amount of immorality is carried on between the Chinese and European women and girls down there? There is a certain amount of immorality carried on, but the women are prostitutes. I do not remember having heard of any Chinaman having been had up for any offences on women, such as the Mount Rennie outrage.
16484. Mr. Abigail.] Have you heard of the Chinese entrapping young girls for the purpose of seducing them? No.
16485. Mr. McKillop.] If a clergyman has stated that there have been serious cases of immorality of the kind I have indicated in the Chinese quarters down there, would that be correct? Well, I would not contradict a clergyman. What I say is that I have never heard of any serious cases like the Mount Rennie affair. I have never been inside the places.
16486. You have never made strict inquiry? No.

16487-8. On the other hand, the clergymen may do so on their visits to these places? Yes.
 16489. And you are firmly of opinion that to suppress the Chinese gambling evil a more stringent law should be brought into operation? Yes; or if the Unions would make a rule the same as they did when the coal-lumpers stopped their wives from dealing with the Chinese—if they were to introduce a rule to fine heavily those who went to the gambling-dens, or to expel them from the Union, that would do a great deal of good.

Mr.
 J. Keane.
 22 Dec., 1891.

[The witness withdrew.]

The Mother Superior (Good Samaritan Convent) called and examined:—

16490. President.] You are the Mother Superior of the Good Samaritan Convent? Yes.
 16491. And you have in your care a number of women who have gone astray in life? Yes.
 16492. The Commission want to obtain from you any information you can give with regard to any such women who have gone astray in connection with the Chinese. Can you afford us any information on that point? I really cannot.
 16493. You do not know whether any of the women under your care, in your reformatory, have ever lived with Chinamen in this city? No; we never ask any questions regarding their former lives. If they speak of it we generally stop them. We only require that they shall behave themselves whilst they are there.
 16494. Then you are not in a position to say anything with regard to the past lives of the inmates of your institution? No.
 16495. Have you ever experienced any betrayal of the interests of your institution by reason of women going out of it, and enticing others to follow them, with a view of leading vicious lives either with the Chinese or anyone else? Some have come in and enticed others away at different times.
 16496. Have you known the inmates of your institution to be enticed away by people from outside—by persons who procure women for immoral purposes? I do not think so; the only way has been for others to obtain admission and induce some of those already in the institution to leave, perhaps in a few weeks' time.
 16497. Have there been many such cases? No.
 16498. How many inmates of your institution are there? Sixty at present.
 16499. Have you got any information on the main point stated by me with regard to the Chinese? Sometimes when the women have got angry with each other I have heard them reproach one another about the Chinese; but we always stop it if we can.
 16500. Do you make any visits outside among the immoral women, with a view to reclaiming them? No; not as a rule. They come themselves if they come at all.
 16501. Are all the inmates of your institution fallen women? Yes; but in a good many instances it is more from drink than anything else.
 16502. With regard to the inducements that are held out by the women who come into your institution to entice others to follow them, do you know what these inducements are? No. Of course they do all that very secretly.
 16503. Do you know whether any of the inmates of your institution are addicted to opium-smoking? Not to my knowledge.
 16504. You have not experienced any inconvenience in the management of the institution by reason of a desire on the part of the women to get away, in order that they may indulge in opium-smoking? No; I have never heard it mentioned. They would like tobacco if they could get it; but we do not allow it.
 16505. What work do they do in your establishment? Laundrywork and needlework of all kinds.
 16506. Where is your establishment situated? Pitt-street south.
 16507. Do you know anything about the institution of Cook's River? Yes; that belongs to us.
 16508. You have a number of women there? Yes, over fifty.
 16509. Do they also do laundry-work? Yes; they have a steam-laundry.
 16510. Is it within your knowledge that women are enticed away from these also? I have not heard of it.
 16511. Can you tell me what enticements are held out to the women who leave your establishment? I cannot. It is between themselves, and they take good care not to let us know what it is.
 16512. When they come to your establishment do they agree to stop for a certain time? Yes; they must stay two years. And if they behave themselves during that time they have a situation procured for them and an outfit given them.
 16513. Do they stay as a rule? A good many of them do.
 16514. Do you lock them up at night—that is, are they practically in prison? We lock the dormitory at night.
 16515. Have they any means of escape in the day-time? If the doors are open they may slip out.
 16516. Do they do so? Sometimes; that is the way they escape. Of course if they do not wish to remain and say so we give them their clothes and let them go.
 16517. Is your institution successful in reclaiming many of these women? It is.
 16518. How many for instance;—you have sixty there now you say—I will take forty of them—have forty of them been there twelve months? Some of them have been there many years.
 16519. That practically is a proof of success? Yes; some of them remain for life.
 16520. Do you find people collecting outside your establishment at night with a view of enticing the women away? No.
 16521. You have never found any inconvenience of that kind? In years gone by there was once or twice.
 16522. But you have now nothing to complain of with regard to the conduct of the public outside at all? No.
 16523. You have no experience of what are called procuresses attending with a view to getting the women to go away? No; they never have any chance of seeing them.
 16524. It has been alleged as to some institutions of the kind that a certain class of women go to these places in order to induce the girls to go away and from the control of the management and back to their careers of vice;—but you have never experienced anything of that kind? No.
 16525. Mr. Hawthorne.] Do you know of a woman named _____? Yes.
 16526. What kind of a woman have you found her ordinarily? In some ways very good. But she was very fond of drink.

The Mother
 Superior, &c.
 22 Dec., 1891

- The Mother Superior, &c.
22 Dec., 1891.
16527. Have you found her coming to your institution for a few weeks, and then going off to some other institution, and enticing young girls to go away with her, and then led them astray? No; the others would be as bad as herself. She was in our house before, and we took her in again to give her another trial. She remained for twelve months, and then she and another girl went out one morning. I can scarcely call her a girl; she was 30 years of age.
16528. Do you find, as a rule, that these women go about from one of these homes to another? Some of them do.
16529. Have you heard of Murdoch's Home at Paddington? Yes; I have heard of the place. They seem to be very good people. But they allow the women to go out.
16530. Have you heard also that they supply them with whatever drink they require? No; but I have heard that they could do things unknown to the persons conducting it.
16531. Do you make it a rule in your establishment that the inmates shall attend the religious services held there? Yes; but as regards those of other denominations it is simply because if they did not they might get into mischief while the others were occupied. If they object to attend the service, we say there is a Protestant refuge next door, and they can go in there if they wish. This ——— had not been in the institution for years until lately, when she came and begged for another trial. As I have said she remained six months, and then went out, taking another woman with her, and I gave the Sisters strict instructions that she was never to be admitted again.
16532. Do you find among the women who seek admission to your institution any who are addicted to opium-smoking? I never knew but one case. She was a peculiar looking person, and one of the attendants said to me that she thought she smoked opium outside. She was almost stupid.

[The witness withdrew.]

WEDNESDAY, 23 DECEMBER, 1891.

Present:—

THE MAYOR OF SYDNEY (MR. ALDERMAN MANNING, J.P.), PRESIDENT.

FRANCIS ABIGAIL, Esq., J.P., VICE-PRESIDENT.

QUONG TART, Esq., | JOHN STUART HAWTHORNE, Esq.,
RAMSEY McKILLOP, Esq.

Maud ——— called and examined:—

- Maud ———
23 Dec., 1891.
16533. President.] What is your name? Maud ———.
16534. Where do you live? In ——— street, Sydney.
16535. Are you married? No; I am not married.
16536. Are you living with any man? Yes.
16537. Is he a European or a Chinese? He is a Chinese.
16538. How long have you been living with him? I have been living with him four years altogether.
16539. Have you any children? I have one English child.
16540. That child, of course, is illegitimate? Yes.
16541. I suppose that when you were seduced marriage was promised you? I decline to answer that question.
16542. Well, if you will not answer the questions that the Commission put to you we shall have to continue the legal proceedings against you, and that we shall be sorry to do. I would not at all wish to press any question unnecessarily, but if you will allow me to recommend you, I would advise you to answer that question? No; I will not answer it.
16543. What is your reason for declining to answer it? I do not see what reason you have for asking me such a question.
16544. Well, that is a matter for the Commission. If you positively decline to answer the question I shall have to ask you to withdraw. [The witness withdrew accordingly, and, after some minutes' consideration, signified her willingness to answer the question, and was readmitted.]
16545. The question that I put to you was this: "Were you not seduced under promise of marriage"? Yes.
16546. And after the child was born you were, I suppose, in a measure deserted, and left to fight the battle of life by yourself? Yes.
16547. And was it then that you became connected with the Chinese? Yes.
16548. Did you go straight away to the Chinese then, or did you lead a public life? I went straight to the Chinese then.
16549. Mr. Abigail.] Where did that event happen—where did you meet with the Chinese first? In Goulburn.
16550. After the birth of the child? Yes.
16551. And ever since that event you have been with them? Yes.
16552. What age are you? I am turned 23, and going on for 24.
16553. And how long have you been living with Chinese? About four years.
16554. And how old is the child? She is going on for 5 years of age.
16555. Have you ever received any support in any way from the father of the child? Never.
16556. Have you seen him since? I have seen him twice since the child was born, but she was only about 3 months old when I last saw her.
16557. And you never took any proceedings against him? No.
16558. Have you been with the one Chinaman all the time? Well, no; not exactly with the one. I have lived with two different Chinamen during the four years that I have referred to.
16559. What is the treatment of the man that you are now living with? Very good; he treats me very well; better than any Englishman would do.
16560. But, of course, your experience of Englishmen is confined to the man who ruined you and then left you, is it not? No; I have had experience with other Englishmen.
16561. And their conduct does not compare favourably with the treatment you are now receiving from the Chinamen with whom you are living? No.
16562. You have a comfortable little home I know because I visited it with the Commission? Yes.
16563. And you get all you require in the way of money? Yes. 16564.

Maud —
 23 Dec., 1891.

16564. Does the man with whom you are living ever ill-treat you in any way? No, never.
16565. Does he never strike you? No.
16566. Nor quarrel with you? No.
16567. You have pretty much your own way do you not? Yes; well he tries to please me, and I try to please him.
16568. Do you smoke opium? No.
16569. Did you never smoke opium? No.
16570. Are you quite sure of that? Yes.
16571. Does your husband? No.
16572. Do you know anything of the action of opium upon those who use it? No, I do not.
16573. And you are quite sure that you do not smoke opium yourself? Yes.
16574. Have you ever led a life of prostitution in Sydney? In Sydney, no.
16575. But you have in the country? Yes.
16576. Your family live at Goulburn? Yes.
16577. You have sisters have you not? Yes.
16578. How many? I have four sisters.
16579. How are they all living? They are all married.
16580. Are none of them living with Chinamen? No.
16581. They are living with Europeans? Yes, they are married to Europeans.
16582. Comfortably married? Yes.
16583. What is the name of the man you are living with? Geo. Ah Poy.
16584. What business does he follow? He is a storekeeper.
16585. He is not connected with any gambling establishment? Not that I know of.
16586. Has he anything to do with any vegetable gardens? No.
16587. He is simply a storekeeper? He is in a store in George-street.
16588. What was your reason for refusing to attend as a witness before the Commission when you received such frequent notice to do so? Because every other Chinaman's woman was not called.
16589. But did you not know that a number had been called? Yes, I knew that a number had been called.
16590. And did not you threaten that you would not attend? Yes, I said that I would not attend without being forced, and I did not.
16591. Your reason then was that you desired every other Chinese kept woman to be called before the Commission? Yes.
16592. About how many of them are there? Well there are a great number down at that end of the city.
16593. Do you know their names and addresses? Yes, I know of them, but I do not want to tell of others.
16594. You say, at all events, that there are a great number of European women living with Chinamen down at that end of the city? Yes; but not exactly living with them.
16595. I am coming to that;—they associate with them;—they go to their houses for immoral purposes? Well, I do not know that they go there for immoral purposes, but I have seen them in their houses a great deal.
16596. Young women? Yes, young women and old ones.
16597. Do you know whether any of them are married to Europeans? Yes; some of them are.
16598. But you do not know for what purpose they visit the houses of Chinamen? I do not know.
16599. Do you know whether they go there for the purpose of smoking opium? Well, I have seen them smoking opium there.
16600. Do not you think it is for immoral purposes that these women visit the Chinamen's places;—what other reason could they have for going there? Yes, I think it is for immoral purposes.
16601. You have not seen it, so cannot be sure, but that is the natural conclusion that one would arrive at? Yes.
16602. You do not know anything about the effects of opium upon those who use it, do you? No.
16603. And you have never smoked opium yourself? No.
16604. Mr. Hawthorne.] It has reached the ears of the Commission that you stated that the reason why you would not come to give evidence before them was that you expected to have a number of disgusting questions asked of you;—what females who have been before the Commission as witnesses told you that? Mary Ann —.
16605. As a matter of fact she was not examined? Well, she came to my place and told me that.
16606. Did Pauline — state that a number of disgusting questions had been put to her? Well, it was she who told the young women I allude to.
16607. Did she tell you what the questions were, or simply leave it to your imagination? No; she told me what they were.
16608. I do not think that any member of the Commission put any question to a witness that he did not think in the interests of decency could be put down in black and white. May I ask you to repeat what she told you that these questions were? She told me that they asked her who was the first man she went with, whether it was in doors or out of doors, whether he was a black man or a white man, whether when she went to bed the Chinamen made her wash herself or not, whether they insisted upon her wearing clean linen, and so on.
16609. That is quite untrue. Did you happen to be out of Sydney at all last week? No.
16610. President.] You were apprehended in Sydney then? Yes.
16611. When was that? This morning.
16612. Mr. Hawthorne.] Who circulated the rumour that you had gone to Goulburn? That was an old woman who was doing my work for me.
16613. Did she act as servant for you? Well, she did my washing for me; but she was so dirty that I had to send her away.
16614. Is she living with a Chinaman? Yes, I think so.
16615. Then you did not go away at all for the purpose of avoiding the Commission? No.
16616. Did you go into seclusion? Yes.
16617. Did you hear it said that you had gone away into the country? Well, I heard it said.

- Maud —. 16618. You received all the notices to attend as a witness before the Commission, did you not? Yes.
- 23 Dec., 1891. 16619. Did your husband stand in the way of your coming? Well, he said that unless all the other Chinamen's women were called I ought not to come, but if they were called I might come.
16620. How many European women are there living among Chinamen in your district? I cannot say; but there are a great many,
16621. Would there be fifty? Yes; I suppose there would be about fifty.
16622. Do you think there would be a hundred? No; I should not think there are so many—probably about fifty. I should not think that there would be more.
16623. Are they living with Chinamen? No, not continually.
16624. Do they keep houses to which Chinamen go? Yes.
16625. Are the Chinamen who go to their houses market-gardeners, and so on? Yes.
16626. Where did you first meet the Chinaman with whom you are living—in Sydney? No, in Goulburn.
16627. Are there many Chinamen in Goulburn? No.
16628. You say that you have four sisters? Yes.
16629. Are they all living respectably? Yes.
16630. None of them living with Chinamen? No.
16631. Are you quite sure? Yes. I had a sister who was once living with a Chinaman, but she is married to a European now.
16632. Is he in Sydney or in the country? In the country at present.
16633. Since you took up with the man with whom you are living at present have you, so far as he is concerned, lived a proper life? Yes.
- 16633½. You have not in any way allowed any freedom to be made with you by other Chinamen? No other Chinaman ever enters our house. My husband would not allow it.
16634. And then the same remark applies to Europeans; you do not cohabit in any way with Europeans? No.
16635. You have not done so since you lived with your present husband? No.
16636. So that anything stated to the contrary would be untrue? Yes.
16637. I may as well tell you that statements have reached us about your mode of living, and I am sure that the Commission would like them either proved or disproved. You stated previously that you never smoked opium. Recalling the fact that you are on oath, will you think the matter over, and tell us whether or not you ever have smoked opium? No; I have not.
16638. Never in your life? No.
16639. And your husband is not an opium-smoker? No.
16640. Is your husband employed by some of the Chinese merchants? Yes; I think he has a share in the business.
16641. What firm is he in? I do not know the name of the firm, but it is 199, George-street.
16642. What kind of business do they carry on? They have a store there.
16643. Is it a general store? Yes.
16644. Are you quite sure that they have nothing to do with gambling? I believe not; but, as a matter of fact I have never been in the place.
16645. Where is the English child that you had? My mother has it. She has had it off and on ever since its birth.
16646. Do you send anything to your mother for the support of the child? My husband allows me 10s. a week for it.
16647. Are your parents in a respectable position? Yes.
16648. And are they aware that you are living with a Chinaman in Sydney? No; they think I am living with the child's father. I never told them that he had deserted me.
16649. Was the child's father in a respectable position? Yes; he was a brickmaker. He was a bit fast, however.
16650. Does he ever come near you? No; I have never seen him since some time before the birth of the child.
16651. Then, I suppose the great aversion you had to coming before the Commission arose from the fear that your parents might get an idea where you were living? Yes.
16652. It was not that you were afraid of disgusting questions being asked? Well, of course, I did not know what the questions would be.
16653. Mr. McKillop.] Are there not a number of opium-smoking dens in your part of the city? Yes.
16654. Does not Paulina ——— smoke a great deal? Well, I never saw her smoking.
16655. Does she not come to your house? Yes.
16656. You are positive that none of your sisters at the present time are living with Chinamen? No.
16657. Is there not a possibility of the Chinaman with whom you are living now marrying you? Well, he would marry me if I wished it.
16658. Have you any objection to being married to him? No; I have no objection.
16659. What has become of the woman who was living in your house? Well, I sent her away because she was too dirty to have in the house.
16660. Is it not a fact that she advised you not to attend the Commission? No; she never advised me on the matter at all.
16661. When did you get rid of her? Well, I sent her away on Friday, but she left some of her things there.
16662. After you had been seduced how did you come to go with the Chinamen? Well, I went to the wife of a Chinaman who was living in Goulburn, and a Chinaman who was stopping there offered to keep me if I liked, but as I did not like to live with him in Goulburn he took me up the country.
16663. Mr. Quong Tart.] In the course of your four years life amongst the Chinese have you ever heard of any Chinaman attempting to seduce young women by making them presents of jewellery and so on? No.
16664. Is it true that Chinamen decoy women? No; it is absolutely untrue I am sure. They say too that the Chinamen induce girls to smoke opium, but that is untrue also. Chinamen are strongly opposed to their women smoking opium. My husband is strongly against it.
16665. What is the effect of smoking opium? Well, they become unconscious.
16666. Mr. Hawthorne.] Is it a fact that when they are under the influence of opium they would not be

- be able to resist anything that was done to them? No, I do not think it is a fact. I have seen a great many women in the country districts smoking opium; but I never saw anything of that kind.
16667. Mr. Quong Tart.] It is the proper thing to smoke opium through a pipe? Yes.
16668. But if they swallowed the opium raw, through not being able to make a pipe, it would drug them? Yes.
16669. For instance, if a young woman who did not understand how to make a pipe took the opium in through her mouth to stop the craving it would make her unconscious? Yes.
16670. Have you ever heard of any cases in which old women who have been living with the Chinese for a number of years have induced young women to go to live with them? Yes. I have seen women who have been living with Chinamen inducing girls to go and live with them.
16671. Have they been virtuous girls who have been decoyed in that way? No, they have not been virtuous girls. They have been bad girls.
16672. How did the Englishman with whom you say you once lived treat you? He treated me very well, but not so well as the Chinaman.
16673. Mr. McKillop.] How did the sister you have referred to get in touch with the Chinese? Well, she came with me.
16674. Did you ask her? Well, she ran away from home with me.
16675. Is it not a fact that you induced her to go? She came to Sydney with me when I was about to be confined with my child, and when I returned to Goulburn she said that she would not leave me; she would come with me.
16676. Mr. Abigail.] Have you any objection now to the questions that the Commission has put to you? No.
16677. You do not go away feeling that you have been subjected to improper questions? No.

Maud—
23 Dec., 1891

THURSDAY, 24 DECEMBER, 1891.

Present:—

The MAYOR OF SYDNEY (MR. ALDERMAN MANNING, J.P.), PRESIDENT.

FRANCIS ABIGAIL, Esq., J.P., VICE-PRESIDENT.

RAMSEY MCKILLOP, Esq., | QUONG TART, Esq.,
JOHN STUART HAWTHORNE, Esq.

Mr. William Wong Goldtown recalled and further examined:—

16678. Mr. Abigail.] We have called upon you to give a little additional evidence upon a matter affecting Mr. Quong Tart. It has come to our knowledge that you are instituting legal proceedings in reference to the game of pak-ah-pu;—you are taking action against some bank for not paying money over, I believe? Yes, I am.
16679. Well, I may say that it is at Mr. Quong Tart's special request that we have recalled you on this occasion. Mr. Quong Tart wishes the Commission to ask you if in the course of those proceedings you have made any statement to the solicitor who is acting on your behalf, or to any other person, to the effect that his relatives are connected with any of the gambling establishments in Sydney, or anywhere else? No; I never said anything to that effect to anybody.
16680. You never said to anybody that Mr. Quong Tart or his relatives are connected with gambling? No; I never said anything of the kind.
16681. And you never repeated a statement to anybody else to that effect? No.
16682. Mr. McKillop.] Do you know whether Mr. Quong Tart or any of his relatives are connected with any Chinese gambling institution? I do not know that either he or any of his relatives are.
16683. What do you mean by "relatives"? Relatives, according to my meaning, are his kinsmen.
16684. Do you mean by relatives persons coming from the same village, or from the same part of the country? No; I mean those belonging to the same family, whether near or distant members of it.
16685. The relationship to which you refer is entirely of a family character? Yes.
16686. Then, if it has been said that either Mr. Quong Tart or his relatives are connected with gambling it is mere idle rumour? Well, I do not know who is Mr. Quong Tart's relative. Of course I know that his surname or family name is Moy, and I know that Moy Ping's family name is Moy, but I do not know whether he is any relation to Mr. Quong Tart.
16687. Is there any more reason to suppose that he is than that one person of the name of Smith is a relative of any other person who happens to be called Smith? There was probably a relationship originally, although it may have been a hundred years ago.
16688. Have you heard this matter talked about amongst the Chinese? No.
16689. All that you can say to give the slightest colour to the charge that Mr. Quong Tart's relatives are connected with gambling is that Moy Ping's surname happens to be the same as his? Yes; that is all.
16690. Mr. Abigail.] As a matter of fact, you do not know of your own knowledge of any person connected by blood with Mr. Quong Tart, who is connected with gambling? No; I do not.
16691. Mr. McKillop.] Is there not a great deal of rumour going about the effect of which is to disparage Mr. Quong Tart's character, by associating his name with participation in some of the gambling-dens of the city? There is a rumour of the kind going about. Some people charge Mr. Quong Tart, and say he is interested in gambling, and so on.
16692. Who are they who make these charges? It is only a general rumour.
16693. Are you of opinion that it is because Mr. Quong Tart occupies a seat on this Commission, and because he is known to be so much averse to opium and the pernicious system of Chinese gambling, that this charge has been got up against him by interested individuals? That is my impression. It is the same in my own case—charges have been made against me too.
16694. And I believe you are about taking action with regard to a certain lottery business? Yes.
16695. You will probably be looked upon as one of the worst in the world on that account? It may be.
16696. Mr. Quong Tart.] You know Robert Wong Lee Kum? Yes.
16697. You are Wong, too, are you not? Yes.

Mr. W. W.
Goldtown.
4 Dec., 1891

16698.

- Mr. W. W. Goldtown.
24 Dec., 1891.
16698. Are you in any way related? No; we do not even come from the same district. I may explain to the Commission. In China we generally put the surname in front of the Christian name. Wong is my surname, and Goldtown is my individual name, so that William Goldtown Wong would be the proper way according to the English mode.
16699. Now, I want you to pay particular attention to this: It has been stated that you have said that I shared with a number of gambling-houses, the owners of which were my cousins or relations;—did you ever say that to anybody? No; I never said such a thing as that to anybody.
16700. Not to any European? No.
16701. Mr. Abigail.] Nor to any Chinaman? No. Because I know he is against gambling and opium-smoking—I can see what he has been doing in that connection for myself.
16702. You are satisfied of his sincerity? Yes.
16703. Mr. Quong Tart.] Supposing I bring a number of the leading merchants of Sydney, where I have lived twenty years, to testify to my character, what do you think they would say on that point? I think everybody would say that you are not a gambler.
16704. Did you hear any remark in Goulburn-street about my being connected with gambling? I heard it not only in Goulburn-street, but generally. Some of our people have met me at different times and said, "People are saying that Mr. Quong Tart is also interested in gambling," and so on.
16705. What class of men were they who asked you that? Generally of the hawker class—only common people.
16706. Why I asked you was this: That while some of those who had spoken against me were not worth my taking notice of, when I heard your name mentioned among the number I thought it was high time to satisfy my brother-Commissioners on the point. But you say that you never made any remark of the kind? No; I can only say that I have never had any reason to suspect that you have been connected with gambling, and I have never said anything of the kind. Also, I am quite satisfied that you are sincere in carrying out your views in putting a stop to the gambling.
16707. Do you know of a new pak-ah-pu bank being opened on the Botany Road? Yes; since I came back from Queensland there is a new one.
16708. Has Hip War anything to do with that? No; Hip War does not do anything like that. I live at his place.
16709. The party who is fitting up that bank has said that he is employed by Hip War, and that he is getting £20 for doing it? Perhaps Hip War may have sent for the carpenters to do it, but I am quite positive that he is not interested in the gambling. He is a storekeeper, and like myself he does things for the people who cannot contract themselves. If somebody came to me and asked me to get a carpenter for him to do a certain thing I would do so.

[The witness withdrew.]

FRIDAY, 28 DECEMBER, 1891.

Present:—

THE MAYOR OF SYDNEY (MR. ALDERMAN MANNING, J.P.), PRESIDENT.

QUONG TART, Esq., | J. S. HAWTHORNE, Esq.

Mr. J. Armstrong recalled, and examined:—

- Mr. J. Armstrong.
28 Dec., 1891.
16710. President.] Mr. Inspector Atwill was examined at very great length before this Commission, and in the course of his examination he stated that he had received an anonymous letter, to which I want to draw your attention. The letter is as follows:—

Dear Sir,

Sydney, 2 August, 1891.

As a lover of fair play I consider it my bounden duty to apprise you of a conversation I incidentally heard between Armstrong and Nock, at the last named's shop, two or three days ago. As you will see by the tenor of the following conversation between these two gentlemen, a regular "cabal" is in force to annihilate you. Armstrong said to Nock, "Buchanan and Christensen are showing the white feather; they are frightened of Atwill; Atwill has been talking to Christensen, so Christensen says, and he seems frightened to take any prominent part in the League in future." Armstrong said, "Look here, Nock, you and I must do the dirty work; it will not do to trust the others, they might come it on us; we must move heaven and earth to remove that old wretch Atwill; if not, he will be worse to us than the Chinese pest; we have all the Members for West Sydney on our side, and they will do anything we ask them, so that surely the influence they will fetch to bear on Parkes will remove him. In fact," Armstrong continues, "I would sooner see Atwill removed than the Chinamen." Armstrong, who seemed to be the moving spirit, then said, "We must try and bribe some of the loafers that frequent the fan-tan shops to swear they have seen the Chinamen give Atwill and his subordinates money at different times. You know, Nock, a pound or two would go a long way with that class of persons." To the foregoing Nock generally replied in the affirmative, and one time he said, "I will stick to whatever you consider best, Jack." Pressure of time caused me to leave the shop, after I had made my purchases, although when I left the shop they were still discussing the subject. I have done my duty. Beware of these gentlemen, or they will be your downfall.

AMICUS.

Now I have read the letter, and I want to ask you two or three questions upon it? Very well; but in the first place I entirely repudiate having any conversation with Mr. Nock in my shop on the Chinese question at all.

16711. It does not say in Nock's shop. It says in your shop? I have never had any conversation in Nock's or my own shop about this matter.

16712. Is it quite true then, as related in this letter, that you had a conversation in Mr. Nock's shop on the subject of Mr. Atwill? I do not remember that the conversation had relation to him—his name may have come up.

16713. In any conversation of the kind I suppose his name would almost necessarily come up? No, for this reason: so far as I am concerned I have always held that Inspector Atwill has done his duty in the district, so far as my knowledge goes.

16714. Is it not true that you had any conversation with Mr. Nock in his shop with regard to the Anti-Chinese League business, and to Mr. Atwill's prejudice? Not on my part.

16715. You have not said anything in Mr. Nock's shop at any time that would hurt Inspector Atwill's reputation? No; decidedly not.

16716. Did you say to Mr. Nock on any occasion that Mr. Buchanan and Mr. Christensen were showing the white feather because they were frightened of Mr. Atwill? Never.

16717. Did Christensen ever express fear of Atwill to you? No; on the contrary he took a more active part in the League than was required.

16718. Then that is not true? No.

16719. You did not say this: "Look here, Nock, you and I must do the dirty work. It will not do to trust the others; they might come in on us. We must move heaven and earth to remove that old wretch Atwill; if not he will be worse to us than the Chinese pest?" No; on the contrary, I have always spoken in terms of the greatest respect of Mr. Atwill.

16720. Then that is utterly untrue? Yes.

16721. Did you say to Nock: "We have all the Members for West Sydney on our side, and they will do anything we ask them, so that surely the influence they will fetch to bear on Parkes, will remove him,"—That is Mr. Atwill? No; as a matter of fact I did not know whether the Members for West Sydney had the power with Sir Henry Parkes or not.

16722. And did you never say that you would sooner see Mr. Atwill removed than the Chinamen? No; never.

16723. And you never said this, I suppose: "We must try and bribe some of the loafers that frequent the fan-tan shops to swear that they have seen the Chinamen give Atwill and his subordinates money at different times"? No.

16724. Or that, "a pound or two would go a long way with that class of persons"? No; I will swear I never said that.

16725. And Nock did not say to any proposals made by you: "I will stick to whatever you consider best, Jack"? Never to me.

16726. That is all I have to ask you. The reason I brought you here to-day was to give you an opportunity of vindicating your own character in connection with this letter.

16727. Mr. Hawthorne.] In answer to the President, you said that you considered Mr. Atwill had done his duty in that district;—are you quite positive on that point? I was speaking of my own personal feeling towards him.

16728. Do you think he has done his duty as inspector of police in charge of that district? To a certain extent, yes; and on the other hand no. I think there has been a certain amount of negligence, but I do not say that Mr. Atwill is blamable for that. I think perhaps he has done his duty as far as an inspector of police can. But he says he has not enough power.

16729. You are President of the Anti-Chinese Gambling League? I am.

16730. You have just stated that Inspector Atwill has done his duty so far as an inspector of police could under the circumstances. Now, I want you to suggest some amendment of the law which, in your opinion, would enable Inspector Atwill to improve on his past conduct? I think I gave that fully the first time I was examined. It is unfair to ask me that question again. Because I might be led into making some observation that would clash with what I said the first time.

16731. President.] You are not entitled to discuss the propriety of the question. Mr. Hawthorne is quite within his powers in cross-examining you on your former evidence. The answers you give to questions put to you should be fixed on your mind, and have a permanent residence there. I may point out now, however, for your own good, that what is said here is all being taken down, and the objections you raise to answering the questions put to you really detract from the value of your former evidence.

16732. Mr. Hawthorne.] The President put very clearly the different points in the letter to you, and I understand you to say that you are of opinion that as the law is at the present time Inspector Atwill did the utmost in his power to suppress Chinese gambling? I never said that. I said that I believed an inspector of police he did his duty fairly well, and I believe he has done so.

16733. President.] Where did you hold the meetings of the Anti-Chinese Gambling League? At Buchanan's, "Fortune of War Hotel."

16734. There were not more than a dozen meetings altogether were there? I cannot tell you how many.

16735. Were you present at all the meetings? No. I was sick when two of the meetings were held I think.

16736. Did not the members of the League continue in their attendance at the hotel after the League meetings were over? Some did, and the others did not.

16737. Did you stop too? I may have done.

16738. Was there any drunkenness on the part of the members of the League? No, not to my knowledge; some of them did not drink at all.

16739. Did any of the members of the League ever get into a state of excitement through drink? None, except perhaps one.

16740. I think you had better tell us what you know without hesitation, because I am simply giving you an opportunity of answering things that have been said concerning you? Of me?

16741. Of the League generally. I am not going to allow you to judge of the propriety of the questions I put to you. I want to know if members of the League, after they formally closed their meetings, were in the habit of remaining at the hotel, and occasionally getting into a beastly state of intoxication? No. After the meeting was closed there was generally an adjournment to the bar by those who remained. Some may have remained longer than I did. Others went back to their business I suppose. I never saw any intoxication.

16742. Mr. Hawthorne.] It was customary was it not for the members of your League, after the general business of the meeting was over, to adjourn into an upstairs parlour, where some of the members of the League would call for drinks? No. It would be just the opposite. That is, the meeting room is upstairs, and they would go down to the lower bar.

16743. Will you swear that you never stopped there drinking after 11 o'clock? Myself personally, do you mean?

16744. Yes, yourself personally; be particular on that point, please? I am not prepared to swear that I never had a drink in Buchanan's after 11 o'clock.

16745. It was at Buchanan's you held the meetings? Yes.

16746. And you are not prepared to swear that you, in company with other members of the League, had not a drink at Buchanan's after 11 o'clock at night? If it was merely a question of the League I should say we had; but if it is a question for the Licensing Commissioners I should say no.

16747.

Mr. J.
Arnstrong.
28 Dec., 1891.

Mr. J.
Armstrong.
28 Dec., 1891.

16747. You are not before the Licensing Bench just now; you are before a Royal Commission appointed to deal with the question of Chinese gambling, &c.;—now what is your answer to that question? Yes; we had drinks before and after 11 o'clock.

16748. President.] It is the custom? Yes.

16749. Do you remember Mr. T. M. Davis being at one of the meetings of the League? Yes.

16750. Did he remain that night after 11 o'clock? That I cannot remember.

16751. You are not sure on that point? No.

16752. Will you swear that you never saw a member of the League so intoxicated in the room while you were having these refreshments that he vomited while he was sitting in his chair? I will swear I never saw him.

16753. It might have occurred after you left? No; I do not think it could possibly have done so, because I was the last one to leave the meeting-room.

16754. I am speaking about a time after the ordinary business had been gone through—in the public-house parlour? I never saw it.

16755. I suppose it could have taken place without your knowing it? Of course in any public-house it might have occurred.

16756. You have left the others there when you left? Yes; besides the meeting-room was open to anyone that liked to attend.

16757. Was it not a customary thing for the members of the League to sit after closing hours at Buchanan's Hotel? Not to my knowledge.

16758. Have you not on several occasions been let out of the back way? No; I have not on any occasion.

16759. Will you swear that you have not been let out at the side door as late as half-past 12 o'clock in the morning? I never have.

16760. What is the latest hour you can remember? About 20 minutes or half-past 11 o'clock.

16761. Have you ever seen any members of the League behind you at that hour? No; not at half-past 11 o'clock.

16762. Will you swear that you were never later than half-past 11 o'clock in Buchanan's hotel? I will not take an oath on that. But I will swear to the best of my knowledge that I have not been in the house after half-past 11 o'clock.

16763. Say until 12 o'clock? I will swear definitely I was never inside the house at 12 o'clock at night.

16764. Have you ever seen any members of the League in a state of partial intoxication there, either during the meeting or afterwards? Well, there is a case of one member who might have been on one or two occasions, but it is very difficult sometimes to tell whether a man is intoxicated or merely excited.

16765. You are now referring to Mr. Christensen? Yes.

16766. President.] Now, with regard to Inspector Atwill, and the way in which he has discharged his duties, can you suggest in what way the inspector could better have discharged the duties of his office, if as you say he has given you complete satisfaction? I did not say that exactly. I think by a system of harassing these shops he might have been able to close them.

16767. By that I suppose you mean by making raids? No; by having a policeman outside each shop door.

16768. How many policemen would it require to do that? I think in my last evidence I stated that as there were 33 shops it would require 33 policemen.

16769. One to every two shops was your suggestion? Yes; where they are in a block.

16770. But they are not in blocks? In most cases they are.

16771. Well, say that one to every two shops would be necessary—that would mean sixteen extra policemen to be on duty between 7 o'clock in the evening, and 10 or 11 o'clock at night;—that is your idea I understand of the way in which Inspector Atwill could have grappled with this violation of the law? I did not say he had the power to do it.

16772. We will assume, for the sake of argument, that he has the power;—your idea is that the evil is to be cured by an accession of the police force down there, to be used in the manner you have stated? Yes.

16773. How long have you been living in Lower George-street? Altogether I have been living in the neighbourhood for about twelve years.

16774. During that twelve years have the police ever carried out that system of harassing which you think it would be well for the inspector to introduce? Not to my knowledge.

16775. I suppose there are a greater number of gambling-shops in Lower George-street now than there were ten years ago? Yes; to the best of my belief there is.

16776. Mr. Quong Tart.] How often did your League hold meetings? I think we used to meet fortnightly.

16777. How many members of the League were there? The number on the roll is sixty-three.

16778. About how many of that number would turn up at the meeting? About twenty-five would be a fairly good meeting.

16779. Your place is close by the hotel, and as soon as the meeting was over I suppose you would go home? Yes.

16780. And therefore you could not see what was going on after hours? No; but I may say that the house is too close to the police station to do much business after hours.

Witness.] There is a matter I should like to bring before the Commission, in reference to some of the evidence which has been already given here. This morning a person named Mrs. Ah Toy made a statement to the effect that her husband had perjured himself in giving evidence before this Commission.

16781. President.] Is that the cabinet-maker's wife of that name? Yes; I am just giving you the information as it was given to me.

16782. Do you know what was the particular act of perjury? That I do not know. I thought it right to acquaint you with the fact as it was given to me.

[The witness withdrew.]

TUESDAY, 29 DECEMBER, 1891.

Present:—

THE MAYOR OF SYDNEY (MR. ALDERMAN MANNING, J.P.), PRESIDENT.

FRANCIS ABIGAIL, Esq., J.P., VICE-PRESIDENT.

QUONG TART, Esq.,

JOHN STUART HAWTHORNE, Esq.

Mr. Atwill recalled and examined:—

16783. President.] In your evidence before this Commission, Mr. Atwill, you produced a letter signed "Amicus," and dated 2nd of August, 1891? Yes. Mr. Atwill.
16784. How did you receive that letter? I received it through the post. 29 Dec., 1891.
16785. Have you been able to trace the author of it at all? No.
16786. Have you made any effort to find out? Yes. I have had my suspicions, but I have not been able to get any further than that, and if my suspicions are well grounded it is by no means a common individual who wrote it.
16787. Do you think your suspicions are well grounded? Well, I cannot say that, and yet I cannot get away from the feeling.
16788. Then you have no solid grounds for your suspicion? None at all.
16789. And you have not made any inquiry? No.
16790. Did you speak to the person you suspected of having written the letter? I did.
16791. What did you tell him? I told him I had received a letter from an unknown friend. He did not make much of a reply.
16792. Did you tell him the purport of the letter? Yes.
16793. But he did not confess to the ownership? No.
16794. Have you got the envelope in which the letter was enclosed? Yes.
16795. Have you got it with you? No; it is in the safe with the letter.
16796. Did you look to see at what particular office the letter was posted? No. I will forward you the envelope.
16797. What position in society does this person occupy that you suspect of having sent you this letter? I cannot tell you that—I would not like to.
16798. Is he a trustworthy person? I should take him to be a very respectable person.
16799. Is he the kind of person that would be likely to practise a hoax upon you? I do not think so.
16800. What is the name of this person whom you suspect? I cannot tell you that. I could not, on mere suspicion, give you the name.
16801. You have an objection to say whom you suspect? I cannot say. It is a mere suspicion, after all, and I have no right to mention it scarcely.
16802. Mr. Abigail.] Have you any knowledge of the time when ex-Inspector Anderson had charge of that district—No. 4 Division? I was at the Mint then.
16803. You know, of course, that he was down there? Yes.
16804. Do you know if there were a number of Chinese gambling-dens then in Lower George-street? I knew very little about it then. He took charge of that division after Mr. Steel.
16805. Did you ever hear that, by very energetic action on the part of Inspector Anderson and his officers the gambling that was carried on in that district at that time was successfully rooted out? I do not believe there is a syllable of truth in it. All the energy in the world would not be sufficient to keep the Chinese from gambling under the present law. But I think there was very little gambling done then. I may say that I was the first officer to make a raid in Lower George-street.
16806. Do you not believe that vigilant and energetic action on the part of the police constantly would have the effect of checking the evil? If I had men enough to place one at every door we could not stop it entirely as the law stands: I have gone into these places, perhaps two or three of them, where people have been buying pak-ah-pu tickets, and have turned them out, in order to make them ashamed of themselves before the public. But it has had no effect. I have gone in again, and then these people, who get to know the law, have said, "What do you mean by coming in and turning us out?" and they are quite right, for we really have no power. They say in almost as many words, "You have no right to interfere with us." We are not backed up by the law, and we are really going outside the law by taking such action. If the law was made to provide that the purchaser of the pak-ah-pu tickets were amenable equally with the seller, and give the police power to arrest persons found in these houses playing fan-tan on sight matters would be different.
16807. Is there any direct connection between fan-tan and pak-ah-pu? There is no connection between the two as regards the law, but there is a connection when it comes to the administration of the law. For example, if a house is full of people buying tickets, which we have not the legal power to prevent, there is nothing to hinder others from pressing in, and passing through to play fan-tan without our being aware of it. If there was a law to reach these pak-ah-pu players—buyers and sellers—we could better deal with the fan-tan gamblers.
16808. The police complaint is that the law is so faulty that they are powerless to interfere with the sale of pak-ah-pu tickets? Yes.
16809. Then as regards fan-tan, if you find a number of them playing? We cannot go to find them without a warrant, and cannot get there, as I have before explained to you, without breaking in.
16810. But your men do go in occasionally and see them playing fan-tan? As a rule they will not let the police see them play fan-tan while Europeans are present. Of course I cannot say what my men may have seen occasionally; but a law to prevent them selling pak-ah-pu tickets, or rather make it a punishable offence, one step in advance would be gained at once.
16811. And with reference to fan-tan, would you make those found in the reputed gambling-houses prove that they were not there for an unlawful purpose? Yes; because we know very well that if they go for any legitimate business they will transact it in the shop. Business is not done in the back room. That is where they gamble; and I would also make it an offence to bolt their doors the way they do.
16813. And would you give the police power of entering a suspected house? Yes; I would give any non-commissioned officer authority to enter any place where he has reason to believe a breach of the law is being committed, so that he can go in, without breaking into the place the same as he has to do now,

- Mr. Atwill. with fifteen or twenty men to surround the place. To do this I have to deprive other parts of the town of protection, perhaps for several hours, and all to catch a few poor wharf-labourers and larrikins gambling.
29 Dec., 1891.
16814. How many men have you attached to No. 4 Division? I think about seventy-six. My division includes Balmain and Manly, as well as the northern end of the city.
- 16814½. How many of those men are available for street-duty? I cannot tell you exactly. I have men in various directions—some on duty at the Colonial Secretary's Office for instance, and the Lands Office.
16815. Give us a general idea? Out of the seventy-six I have mentioned, I have eighteen men in Balmain; five in Manly; two at the Colonial Secretary's Office; two at the Lands Office; one at the Library; five at the Station; and four at the Police Court.
16816. How many men are on duty at a time? During the day-reliefs I cannot turn out more than five men on the city portion of my division. At 10 o'clock I turn out about eight men for the night.
- 16816½. How many from 6 o'clock to 10? We never have more than five on day-duty on the relief.
16817. Have you any idea how many thousands of people there are in your division? There are I think about 22,000 in Balmain alone.
16818. Take West Sydney? I do not know how many miles of streets we have. But of course we are very short-handed. Hence the difficulty of dealing with these Chinese gambling-houses under present circumstances. Take Saturday night for example; it is a very serious matter for an officer who is responsible for the life and property of his division, to remove his men from their beats to get into one of these wretched houses, and then, as I have said, to catch only a few wharf-labourers and larrikins. I have never had a more disagreeable duty in my experience—a man trying to enter these places and breaking people's property in doing so.
16819. Is that the reason that raids have been made so seldom? No. The Chinese watch us very closely. I may mention that there is an exaggerated idea abroad about the extent of gambling that goes on down there—by gambling, I mean fan-tan. It is the pak-ah-pu-ticket-selling that makes the people believe there is so much gambling going on—they see them going in to buy the tickets. As a matter of fact, since the strike the people have been too poor to gamble; they have as much as they can do many of them to keep a bit of clothes on their back, and as much food as will keep them alive. There was more gambling on the night of the raid at Moy Ping's place than there had been for three years previously, and I determined to make a raid that night come what may. But I should say that the police could not have done it by themselves. Only for the service rendered by good friends that night I could not have succeeded. All the talk about the crow-bars, and so on, was simple nonsense. No living man outside knew of my intention 10 minutes before I made that raid.
16820. There is a strong impression on the public mind that the police could do a good deal more than they do in this matter? I know there is. But I think those who know me best will say that I have never been slow to put down evil-doing either on the part of Chinamen or anyone else.
16821. It is your opinion that under the present state of the law more could not be done than what has been done by the police to check the evil? That is my opinion. We have not the slightest power, as I have pointed out. It ought to be an offence for any person to bolt their doors against the police. The police would not go in to do any harm, and if they saw nothing wrong going on they would go out again.
16822. Supposing you saw some individuals going into one of these places, and you knew they were going to buy pak-ah-pu tickets or to play fan-tan, you could not, even if your knowledge were perfect, arrest them without a warrant? No.
16823. Then at the present time so far as fan-tan is concerned, when any of your men enter one of these places, and interfere with the people who are playing fan-tan, without a warrant, they are acting without the law? Yes. They might oust them, but they could not bring them to the station. They have no authority whatever without they are armed with a warrant, although they might see it.
16824. Supposing the people found there resisted the police interference? They might stop there, and if the police arrested them they would be doing an illegal thing.
16825. Then you believe that power should be given the police to enter and arrest the persons found in these places without the necessity of a warrant? Yes, on sight. If that were done, and the seller and buyer of the pak-ah-pu tickets made amenable, I can promise you there would be no fan-tan played there within six weeks of such a law being passed.
16826. Do you think if the men on that beat from Bridge-street to the Argyle-cut paid visits of inspection frequently during each night to the gambling-houses there, that would have the effect of checking if not stopping the evil? I do not think so. I believe they would not take the slightest notice of a member of the police, unless they thought he had a warrant in his pocket.
16827. Mr. Quong Tart.] Is there much gambling going on now? No; there is scarcely any at present.
16828. What has caused the falling off, in your opinion? I do not know. Perhaps the fact of this Commission may have had some effect upon them.
16829. You have not sufficient police in your division, I understand, for you to deal with the evil? I do not think an increase in the strength of the police force would have the effect of stopping it. We want a new law.
16830. Mr. Hawthorne.] Suppose you stationed a man at every door? It would be no use unless they had each a warrant.
16831. The Chinese engaged in these pursuits, I suppose, understand the powers of the police as well as the police do themselves? Yes, and they are better advised than one-half of the people in Sydney. Even when I turn the people out of these pak-ah-pu places, I know I am doing an illegal act, though, of course, with good intentions.
16832. What is the largest number of men you have ever had on duty on the Lower George-street beat at one time? I never have a stronger body than six to turn out on day-duty on relief. I have never more than two men in George-street, between Hunter-street and the Mariners' Church, at one time.
16833. How many on duty on Saturday nights? Only two men from Hunter-street to the Mariners' Church.
16834. How many men have you in the whole of the district from 2 o'clock in the afternoon of Saturday, till 12 o'clock at night—on each relief, I mean? The boundary of No. 4 runs along the wharfs to Macquarie-street, and ends on the northern side of Margaret-street. There are five men on that ground, sometimes, on a relief. One of these is in George-street, from Hunter-street to the Mariners' Church; and on Saturday night, if I can manage it, I have two together there, in case one might be overpowered.
16835. How many, at most, have you on duty in the whole of that district on Saturday night? Not more than six at any time. I have some more between 10 and 6 o'clock in the morning. I might have eight men then. All the available men are divided equally between the day and night reliefs. The day reliefs reliefs are cut up into two; but the night reliefs do it all at once; so that the day reliefs added together would be as strong as the night reliefs, but they are divided in the day into two reliefs of five each, if none of the men are on the sick list.

Mr. Atwill.
29 Dec., 1891.

16836. Now about Mr. Anderson's evidence, what was the reason that Inspector Anderson was able to make such a Garden of Eden kind of place of Lower George-street, so far as the Chinese gambling-houses there are concerned, in his time? I do not know. Mr. Anderson, on his own showing, might make a Garden of Eden of any place, perhaps.

16837. Do you think there was anything like as much gambling down there while Mr. Anderson had charge of the district as there has been since you took charge of it? I do not believe there was one-tenth of the amount.

16838. Chinese gambling has increased in proportion with the development of European gambling? Quite so.
16839. You think, I suppose, that if Inspector Anderson had charge of the district as you have had it—with the large number of gambling-houses carrying on—for some time past, he would have been just as powerless to check it as you have been? Yes.

16840. At question 11806 Mr. Abigail asks:—"Are we to conclude that these constant visitations had the effect of stamping the Chinese gambling out?" and Mr. Anderson answers, "Yes, it had";—now, would that also apply to you just now; that if you and your men introduced a system of constant visitations to these places, that would have the effect of stamping them out? Never; nothing that we could do has ever had the effect of lessening the number of these places by one. We have routed them and carried their tables away; but they have been at it again in the same house before the fine has been paid at the police court.

16841. Now, with regard to the suggestions you have made for dealing with this evil of Chinese gambling, Mr. Atwill, do you not think that the law should be made to apply to Tattersall's Club or any of the more respectable European gambling-places? Yes; and very properly, too.

16842. It should be made applicable to Europeans as well as Chinese, in fact? Yes; let it reach everywhere.

16843. Do you find the same difficulty with the European places as the Chinese? Well, it is very rarely that Europeans give themselves up to that sort of thing in the same manner.

16844. With regard to the Chinese gambling, at any rate you feel that you have done all in your power, as inspector of that district, to suppress the evil? Yes; I know I have done so, and I therefore do not care what anybody may think. It has caused me many an uneasy hour. Of this I am satisfied, that under the present law it will never be put down.

16845. Have you encountered any of the members of the Anti-Chinese Gambling League since you were here before? Yes; Mr. Armstrong came to me last night, and said he thought I would have told him that I had received an anonymous letter in which he was charged with taking part against me.

16846. Did he tell you whom he suspected? Yes.

16847. Is he identical with the person you suspect? Not at all. The person I had my suspicions of is far more respectable.

16848. The person you have suspected is a person you would not be likely to be brought into contact with in the discharge of your police duty? No; I would never come across him in police duty.

16849. And he would have no object in sending the letter to you such as to curry favour with you? He never wanted a favour of me in his life, nor have I from him.

16850. Is Mr. Armstrong right in his conjecture do you think, or are you more likely to be right? I am more likely to be right. In fact I think he is completely wrong.

16851. Did you tell him whom you suspected? Not at all.

16852. The President yesterday in questioning Mr. Armstrong took the leading points of the letter, and put them to him for acceptance or rejection, and in every point Mr. Armstrong gave the statements contained in the letter the most emphatic denial? He did so last night to me; but I asked him if he would also deny that people had been closeted in his back room discussing this matter, and that people in his own house had said they were preparing something for the Commission.

16853. Did he make any reference to Mrs. Ah Toy being anxious to come up and say that her husband had perjured himself before the Commission? No.

16854. Have you heard that Mrs. Ah Toy was prepared to contradict the whole of the statements which her husband made before the Commission? No; I have heard nothing of the kind.

[The witness withdrew.]

WEDNESDAY, 30 DECEMBER, 1891.

Present:—

THE MAYOR OF SYDNEY (ALDERMAN MANNING, J.P.), PRESIDENT.]

FRANCIS ABIGAIL, Esq., J.P., VICE-PRESIDENT,

QUONG TART, Esq.,

JOHN STUART HAWTHORNE, Esq.

Mr. Thomas Nock recalled and further examined:—

16854. President.] You are very much interested in a certain letter, I believe? What I want is to know what the letter is about.

16855. Well, I will read it to you. The letter is as follows:—

Dear sir,

As a lover of fair play, I consider it my bounden duty to apprise you of a conversation I incidentally heard between Armstrong and Nock, at the last-named's shop, two or three days ago. As you will see by the tenor of the following conversation between those two gentlemen, a regular "cabal" is in force to annihilate you. Armstrong said to Nock, "Buchanan and Christensen are showing the white feather. They are frightened of Atwill. Atwill has been talking to Christensen, so Christensen says, and he seems frightened to take any prominent part in the League in future." Armstrong said, "Look here, Nock, you and I must do the dirty work. It will not do to trust the others. They might come it on us. We must move heaven and earth to remove that old wretch Atwill. If not, he will be worse to us than the Chinese pest. We have all the Members for West Sydney on our side, and they will do anything we ask them, so that surely the influence they will fetch to bear on Parkes will remove him." "In fact," Armstrong continues, "I would sooner see Atwill removed than the Chinamen." Armstrong, who seemed to be the moving spirit, then said, "We must try and bribe some of the loafers that frequent the fan-tan shops to swear they have seen the Chinamen give Atwill and his subordinates money

Mr.
T. Nock.
30 Dec., 1891.

Sydney, 2 August, 1891.

Mr. T. Nock. money at different times. You know, Nock, a pound or two would go a long way with that class of persons." To the foregoing Nock generally replied in the affirmative; and one time he said, "I will stick to whatever you consider best, Jack." Pressure of time caused me to leave the shop (after I had made my purchases), although when I left the shop they were still discussing the subject. I have done my duty. Beware of these gentlemen, or they will be your downfall.

30 Dec., 1891.

AMICUS.

I suppose you want to deny that? It needs no denial from me. It is all false—it is a fabrication. Mr. Armstrong has from the first been opposed to interfering with the police, and has ruled me out of order several times when I have wished to charge them with neglect of duty. The idea that I should talk about a matter of this kind in the presence of three or four persons is really too absurd.

16856-7. You not only did not have any conversation with Armstrong on this matter in the presence of several people but you did not have any conversation with him to this effect at all? No.

16858. Was it part of your policy to have Inspector Atwill removed? No, sir. I think it is hard that so much authority should be put into the hands of so ignorant a man.

16859. Well, then, I should imagine that under those circumstances you are disposed to think that his removal would be in the public interest? I certainly think so.

16860. Have you not argued that way at the meetings of the Anti-Chinese Gambling League? No; I never suggested his removal at any of the meetings of the League.

16861. You never said at any meetings of the League that owing to his ignorance and incapacity you thought that his removal would be an advantage? No.

16862. But at the same time you believe him to be ignorant and incapable? I know him to be ignorant, for nobody but an ignorant man would do the biassed things that he does.

16863. You are now making a speech; a man may be biassed without being ignorant? No; a man who can only see one way must be ignorant.

16864. What you allude to might arise from incapacity and a dishonest discharge of duty? Well, I say that he must be ignorant, if he would act in that way so openly.

16865. Mr. Hawthorne.] But what test have you got of his ignorance. Do you speak of it from a scholarly stand point or as an idle assertion? I do not make the charge as an idle assertion. I say that the way in which he has carried out his duties in Lower George-street show that he must be ignorant of what his duty is.

16866. President.] In what respect has he failed to carry out his duty through ignorance? If he says that he cannot suppress the Chinese gambling-houses, and gives you no reason for it, I say that it must be through ignorance.

16867. I have asked you a clear question and you ought to be able to give me a clear answer? He says that he is not capable of doing it.

16868. Do you say that he is not capable of doing it? He says he is not.

16869. In what way has he failed to discharge his duty as inspector of that division. I want to get something definite if I can against Inspector Atwill? It would be necessary for me to go into other matters than those affecting the question of Chinese gambling then.

16870. I do not care what matters you go into. All I ask is that you will point out some particular in which he has shown himself to be ignorant of his duty? I do not want to oppose Inspector Atwill. I only want to oppose the system that would allow a man to go on as he has been going on since I have been down there.

16871. I will repeat the question: In what way has Inspector Atwill shown that he is ignorant of his duties. What sins of omission or of commission has he been guilty of through ignorance of his duties? Personally, I say, that a man must be ignorant of his duty who allows these sort of things to exist, and does not have it removed.

16872. That is so indefinite. What sort of "things" do you refer to? The Chinese gambling, which the very existence of the Commission has helped to reduce. Why could not Inspector Atwill have put it down before?

16873. I want some definite charge against Inspector Atwill? Well, I am not going to be the only one to bring the charge against him.

16874. Supposing you were put in Inspector Atwill's place to-morrow, and you were, as you say you are, fully aware of the evil, what steps would you take to suppress it? I should have made raids oftener than he has done, and have had no difficulty in doing it. When a raid is going to be made a number of constables are told off to watch the house, and they may be seen from early morning walking up and down in front of the place and asking questions, so that the gamblers know what is going on and clear out. There would have been no difficulty if Inspector Atwill had entered into co-operation in the matter with some of the other officers and they had made these raids conjointly.

16875. Do you know what the state of the law is on these matters? No; but I have known men to be sent to gaol several times when a raid has been made.

16876. Do you know what steps are necessary to make a successful raid? I say that it is not necessary to make a special raid. You can harass them as the Commission has harassed them. This Commission has reduced the evil. There is no getting away from that.

16877. Then you would suggest that the police should make constant visitations to the houses of the gamblers? Yes.

16878. Do you know that a warrant is necessary in order to enable them to do that? I have heard that Inspector Atwill has carried a warrant for each gambling-house about in his pocket until they have become pretty well worn out.

16879. Do you know that the Chinese can turn the police out of their gambling-houses if they enter them without warrants? I did not know that. I am surprised at that because I have, since the Commission has been started, seen the European gambler turned out by the police.

16880. Apart from that altogether, in order to carry out the system of visitation suggested by you, would it not be necessary to augment the policemen in the district? No; we only want a few strange policemen—men who would not be known in the neighbourhood.

16881. Are you not aware that the Chinese gamblers post sentinels outside their places to watch the people who pass into the shops, and others to scrutinise them still more closely as they go into the fan-tan rooms? Well, it would be a very difficult thing to scrutinise them as I have seen as many as twenty-five persons going in, one after another.

16882. But they might have been going in to buy pak-ah-pu tickets and not to play fan-tan at all? Oh; I know they went in to play fan-tan because I saw them passing through the shop to the room behind, and the man locking the door behind them.

16883. Can you swear that the Chinese door-keeper did not know them? No. I could not swear that.

16884. If they were habitués of the place of course they would be known? Probably some of them would be known, but not all, I should think.

16885. Would they not stop people whom they do not know from going in? I have seen a great many people passing along the street stopped by touts for the gambling-houses and asked to go in and play fan-tan, and it would be a matter of impossibility for the Chinamen to know them. They were often evidently strangers to the places, and when the tout has asked them in to play fan-tan, I have heard them ask the tout what is fan-tan.

16886. The probability is that if I went down there I should go with somebody who was an habitué of the place? Yes, you might do that, but I am perfectly sure that the Chinese do not know all the people who go inside their places to play fan-tan.

16887. Has your trade improved since the diminution in the evil of Chinese gambling? No, it has not.

16888. Has it not been affected by the diminution in gambling? No; it seems that that end of the town has been permanently affected by the mere presence of the Chinese there in such large numbers. People avoid Lower George-street on that account. Our lady customers say that they will not come down there.

16889. If the shops that are occupied now by Chinese gamblers were occupied by ordinary Chinese dealers who do not gamble, there would be really the same objection on the part of a number of people to going down there? Oh, there is not the trade for the Chinese dealers in such numbers.

16890. They could sell groceries and cheap tobacco could they not? No; they could not live there. There are two or three Chinamen down there, men of standing and character, who get all the trade.

16891. Supposing then that all the shops were occupied by Europeans, is it a quarter of the town that ladies would frequent for choice. Do not you think that the neighbourhood is not suitable for a promenade for ladies and gentlemen going backwards and forwards to the steamers? It always was until this thing increased to the extent that it did. We always had really good people passing along there.

16892. I am rather surprised to hear you say that. I should think that if I were going to North Shore or Manly, as a matter of convenience, I should go along Pitt-street? Well I do not know, a great many of the top people in the town went down there at one time.

16893. In the course of evidence, Mr. Nock, it has been alleged that the A.C.G. League met at a certain hotel, and that their meetings were not very long, but that they continued in conversation after the meetings in either that room or other rooms, and indulged pretty freely in drink, and that as a consequence some of the members of the League occasionally became intoxicated and talked in a very excited manner. It was also said that they used to stay in the hotel until considerably after 11 o'clock, and sometimes until after 12. Evidence to that effect was volunteered, and I think it is only right that you should have a chance of denying it? In the thirty-two years of my life I do not think that I have taken more than twenty drinks, and many members of the League, particularly Mr. Swinburne, Mr. Chuckley, and Mr. Johnson, and dozens of others are actually teetotallers.

16894. Did you say dozens of others? Yes.

16895. Why, how many members were there in the League? Sixty odd.

16896. How many members used to attend the meetings of the League? Two or three dozen.

16897. Did any of the members ever get drunk? Yes; unfortunately Mr. ——— is given a little that way. I used to leave the hotel before 10 o'clock to get my steamer.

16898. Mr. Hawthorne.] Will you swear that you have not been in the "Fortune of War Hotel" as late as 11:30 p.m.? I will swear it on oath, and bring my wife to prove it and the steamer people also.

16899. Will you swear that the other members of the League were not there at that time? I could not swear that. The meetings terminated at 9:30 or 10 o'clock and the latest boat I caught was 10:25.

16900. Would you be surprised to hear that some of them were there until after 12? Well, I should say that if ——— was there they would perhaps have difficulty in getting rid of him.

[The witness withdrew.]

Sir,

194 and 196 George-street, Sydney, 5 January, 1892.

In the course of my interview the other day I was at a loss to precisely explain what I meant as regards the ignorance, &c., of the inspector. What I meant to convey was that he and others are ignorant of the great responsibility they are under, also of the gross injustice they mete out to those who may be without the necessary "influence" to protect them, and happening to notice the enclosed report in the Daily Telegraph of this day, in which it appears from the statement of a magistrate that a constable allowed himself to be talked over by a solicitor without thinking of the oath he had undertaken to do his duty, I send it to you as it in some measure explains what I mean, and I understand a more lengthy report appears in the Star evening paper of last night.

There is an undercurrent rumour in this neighbourhood (from conversations reported from the police) of what is to be dealt out to those who have taken a prominent part in this agitation after the Commission is over.

Trusting that you will lay this matter before your brother Commissioners,

Yours, &c.,
THOS. NOCK.

The President, Chinese Gambling Inquiry Commission.

[Paragraph in Daily Telegraph, referred to.]

SOLICITORS AND THE POLICE.

A CONVERSATION between a policeman and a solicitor engaged in a case heard at the Water Police Court yesterday morning was subsequently referred to by Mr. Addison, S.M. The case in question was one in which a man named Albert Stapleton was charged with using indecent language and assaulting Constable Arthur. The defending solicitor pleaded that his client should be leniently dealt with, saying that the constable could speak for the respectability of the accused. In reply to a question by Mr. Addison the constable said that he had only spoken to the father about the case outside the court. He, however, afterwards admitted having had a few words with the solicitor. Mr. Addison stated that he had overheard the whole conversation between the solicitor and the constable just below his window, and considered that the matter should be reported to the Inspector-General of Police. Fines of 20s., or one month, on the first, and 20s., or 21 days on the second, count were inflicted.

THURSDAY,

THURSDAY, 31 DECEMBER, 1891.

Present:—

FRANCIS ABIGAIL, Esq., J.P., VICE-PRESIDENT.

QUONG TART, Esq.,

JOHN STUART HAWTHORNE, Esq.

Mrs. Ah Toy called in and examined:—

Mrs.
Ah Toy.
31 Dec., 1891.

16901. Mr. Abigail.] What is your Christian name? Nora.
16902. And you are the wife of —? Ah Toy, cabinet-maker, 192, Lower George-street. He is the gentleman who gave evidence not very long ago.
16903. How long have you been the wife of Ah Toy? Twenty-seven years last Boxing Day.
16904. Have you any family? Well, I have one daughter.
16905. Do you know anything about your husband's business? Yes.
16906. Do you know how he carries it on? Yes.
16907. Do you know anything about the sales that he effects? Yes, I do.
16908. Do you know anything about any sale that he made to Inspector Atwill? Yes, I do.
16909. Tell us what you know about it? I know that he sold a book-case to Inspector Atwill and that the inspector paid for it.
16910. Are you sure of that? Yes, I am quite sure. He paid seven sovereigns for it. I would not tell a lie.
16911. Do you know anything about the evidence Ah Toy gave here? No.
16912. Did he not tell you what he said before the Commission? No. Him! He would not tell me anything. He locked my clothes up so that I could not come here to-day.
16913. Was he afraid of your coming here? Yes. That shows he was afraid. He was afraid that I should say he is no good.
16914. Oh! He is no good, is he? No; he is a bad man.
16915. How is he a bad man. Does he not give you sufficient food and clothing? No, he does not give me sufficient clothing nor anything else.
16916. Is it not your fault? No, it is his.
16917. Is he not afraid that you would spend your money in drink? No. I do not come here to give any evidence of that kind. I have been brought up a lady, although I have got no clothes here to-day.
16918. Have you stated to anyone that the evidence that your husband gave before the Commission is all false, and that he perjured himself? Yes; I said that he was no good.
16919. Have you ever told anybody that he perjured himself in the evidence that he gave? No, I have not.
16920. Have you ever told anybody that when he said he was paid for the cabinet by Inspector Atwill, he told a lie? No, I have not. I can swear to it. He was paid for it because I was the lady who was paid the money.
16921. Have you ever told anybody that he swore falsely? No.
16922. Do you know any man in Lower George-street called Armstrong? Yes; I know Armstrong, the chemist.
16923. Did you ever say in Armstrong's presence that Ah Toy swore falsely about the cabinet? No.
16924. Did you ever say to Armstrong that Inspector Atwill never paid for that book-case? No. Never; I could not have said so. I received the money.
16925. But your husband has sworn that the amount paid for it was £5? Then he told a falsehood.
16926. How is that? Because he got his £7 for it.
16927. And he told a falsehood when he said that he only got £5? Yes, he told a falsehood.
16928. Do you know whether your husband is connected with any gambling-establishments? Yes; he is connected with them.
16929. How is he connected with them? He is as big an old gambler as anybody else.
16930. Is that a fact? Yes; it is a fact. I will tell the truth. He is no good.
16931. But when you say that he is connected with some of the gambling-establishments, do you mean that he receives a portion of the profits? No; I do not think that he gets anything out of them, but he gambles himself, I know it; I swear it; and it is me that ought to know.
16932. You are sure that you are not influenced by strong feelings against him in saying that? No; there is no question of strong feelings against him, because he is as big a gambler as anybody down Lower George-street.
16933. Then, if your husband has said that he does not gamble, and does not countenance gambling in any way, that would not be true? No, it would not be true.
16934. Do you know which gambling-place your husband visits when he plays? Yes, I do.
16935. Can you tell us? Yes; it is Moy Ping's—that is the place.
16936. And he loses money there, does he? Yes; certainly he does.
16937. And if he has stated in evidence before the Commission that he does not gamble, and does not countenance it in any way, that would not be true? No. He tells stories. He locked up my clothes to-day so that I could not come here and say things against him.
16938. Does Ah Toy smoke opium? Yes, he does.
16939. Do you? No, I do not.
16940. Can you tell us what is the effect of smoking opium upon him. Does it render him unconscious? It is a very bad thing to smoke opium. It is worse than drinking.
16941. When he has a good smoke does it send him off to sleep? Yes; he gets stupid, but he drinks pretty much too.
16942. Would it take much to wake him. Would they have to pull him about? Yes; that is the effect of it.
16943. How long is he unconscious? It may be for a quarter of an hour, or it may be for half an hour.
16944. You think that opium-smoking is a bit worse than drinking? Yes; I wish that Mr. Quong Tart had put it away long ago.
16945. Do you know about any young women smoking opium? No, I do not.
16946. Do any ever visit your house? No.
16947. Do any of your husband's countrymen come to your house to smoke? Oh, no; we do not keep an opium-house. He goes somewhere else when he wants to smoke.
- 16948.

16948. Does he go away from home to smoke opium because you are opposed to it? Yes, he does.
16949. And you would object to him smoking, even to make him comfortable, would you? Oh, yes, I should object to it very strongly.
16950. Suppose he determined to smoke, what would you do? I would have to do the best thing I could.
16951. I will tell you now in plain terms why we brought you here. A witness stated that Mr. Ah Toy's wife was willing to come here and swear that her husband had perjured himself before the Commissioners? Yes, but who was it that said so.
16952. It was Mr. Armstrong? What! Armstrong of the chemist's shop.
16953. No, Jack Armstrong, the tobacconist and hairdresser? I do not know the gentleman.
16954. Inspector Atwill has been charged with receiving a book-case from your husband? No; he paid for it.
16955. And your husband came before the Commission and swore on oath that he paid for it? Yes; he did pay for it.
16956. Inspector Atwill has also come here, and sworn on oath that he paid for it? Yes; that is quite true.
16957. But another gentleman came here and said that you would swear that it was a lie? I never said that to anybody, and Inspector Atwill did pay for it as a gentleman. I came here to tell the truth.
16958. Mr. Quong Tart.] You say that Ah Toy treats you very badly? So he does.
16959. What is the cause of it? Because he is no good.
16960. Why does he treat you in that way; I always understood that you and he lived together very happily? Yes, we did live happily, but we do not now.
16961. How long is it ago since you became unhappy? It is about a couple of years ago.
16962. Mr. Abigail.] Mr. Quong Tart wants to know why you live unhappily;—what is the cause of the change? Well, I do not know; I cannot tell you.
16963. Have any Europeans come to your place during the week to speak about the Commission? No, they have not. Nobody except the officers of the Commission, who came for me in a cab this morning.
16964. You do not know what your husband has said? I know he tells lies.
16965. Did he tell you? No he never spoke to me or told me anything. He never tells me anything.
16966. So that if anybody had said to you that your husband perjured himself it would be untrue? I did not say that my husband perjured himself.
16967. Mr. Hawthorne.] Why was your husband so strongly opposed to your coming here this afternoon? Well he locked my clothes up now.
16968. Have you had any conversation with him as to what you would say? No, I had not. My father was a Postmaster-General of this country once.
16969. What objection had your husband to your coming here to-day;—had you previously any conversation with him about the matter? No, only we have got an Englishman, a turner, working for us, and when he saw the gentleman come in the cab for me this morning he said to my husband, "They are sending for your wife from the Commission, and she is going to say something bad about you."
16970. Has he ever locked up your clothes before? No, only this morning.
16971. How did you come to say that you believed your husband had perjured himself before the Commission? I never said such a thing.
16972. You must have conversed with someone about Ah Toy's evidence before the Commission? No; I do not know what he said and what he did not say.
16973. Have you never had any conversation with anyone about the work of the Commission? No; I never discussed it with anybody.
16974. Have you got any children? Yes, I have a grown-up daughter. She is a lady.
16975. Have you had any conversation with your daughter about the Commission? No; my daughter would not speak to the Chinaman. She is a lady.
16976. But have you not mentioned the work of this Commission to her? No, she is a lady. I would not speak to her about it.
16977. Has she never had a chat with Ah Toy about it? No; Ah Toy is not her father. She is a lady. She belongs to a good family.
16978. Are you quite positive in regard to the payment for the book-case, that the money was handed to you? Yes; it was paid to me in Ah Toy's office—seven sovereigns.
16979. And Inspector Atwill paid the money himself? He did.
16980. Well, supposing that Inspector Atwill and your husband both said it was £5? Oh! no, it was £7.
16981. Mr. Quong Tart.] How long ago is it? Just one year ago.
16982. Mr. Hawthorne.] But you might possibly be mistaken about the amount? Oh! but I know it, because I was the woman who took the money.
16983. But if you knew that Inspector Atwill held a receipt for £5 instead of £7, would you not admit that you were mistaken? Well, my husband said that he would give it to him cheap.
16984. Mr. Quong Tart.] Did you ever hear that I was connected with any gambling-places? No. I know you were a gentleman every day of your life.
16985. You never heard anybody hinting such a thing, did you? No, you have nothing to do with gambling-houses, Mr. Quong Tart.
16986. Mr. Hawthorne.] Did any of the policemen ever speak to you about the book-case? No, I never spoke to a policeman; they are no good.
16987. Did Mr. Atwill ever speak to you about it? No; he is a gentleman.
16988. Your husband was asked if he received the money in gold, and he said "No, in notes?" Then, he tells a story.
16989. And you are quite positive that you were there when the money was paid? Yes.
16990. Can you write? Yes; but I will not write unless you pay for a cab for me, to take me home on Christmas eve.
16991. Then you could have written that receipt? Yes, I could; but I sent it on to Tom for him to write the receipt for me. My husband said that the superintendent, when he got a new wife, bought some furniture from him.
16992. Do you know that the receipt that Mr. Nock made out for Inspector Atwill was for £5? Yes, it was for £5.
16993. How did that come about? I do not know how it came about.

Mrs.
Ah Toy.

31 Dec., 1891.

- Mrs. Ah Toy.
31 Dec., 1891.
16994. Mr. Quong Tart.] What hour of the day did Mr. Atwill pay you the money? It was in the afternoon, about half-past 3 o'clock.
16995. Was anybody else there besides you and your husband? Yes; there was me and my husband and the cart-man.
16996. What is the carter's name? I can remember the name of the cart-man, although my husband could not when he came up to the Town Hall. It is Mr. Flaherty.
16997. Mr. Hawthorne.] Was it immediately after Flaherty came back that Mr. Atwill paid the money for the book-case? No; he paid for it before it went up to his residence.
16998. And the carter was in George-street when he paid you the money? Of course, he was in George-street. He was in my office.
16999. You are quite sure of that? I am quite sure. I tell no stories. He came from Woollahra.
17000. Does Flaherty live in Woollahra? Yes, he lives there.
17001. And you remember the incident quite clearly? Yes, I certainly do.
17002. You are not confusing it with any other transaction? Oh, dear no.
17003. You are quite clear that it was a sale to Inspector Atwill? Yes.
17004. And that Flaherty was there at the time he paid the money? Yes.
17005. And that the money was paid in sovereigns? Yes, in seven yellow sovereigns.
17006. Mr. Quong Tart.] You have a good memory? Yes.
17007. You remember that this incident took place twelve months ago and at 3:30 in the afternoon? Yes.
17008. Can you remember what you did yesterday afternoon at 3:30? I was washing in the washing-tub.
17009. Mr. Abigail.] You are quite sure that you never told anybody that your husband perjured himself? I am quite sure. I am certain of it.

THE MAYOR OF SYDNEY (MR. ALDERMAN MANNING, J.P.), PRESIDENT.

FRANCIS ABIGAIL, Esq., J.P., VICE-PRESIDENT.

QUONG TART, Esq.,

| JOHN STUART HAWTHORNE, Esq.

Mr. Thos. Nock recalled and examined:—

- Mr. T. Nock.
7 Jan., 1892.
17010. Mr. Abigail.] We understand that you desire to make a statement, Mr. Nock, upon some matter relating to the inquiry which the Commission have been conducting? Yes. It is this:—Mrs. Buchanan, the wife of the landlord of the "Fortune of War Hotel," Lower George-street, the house in which the Anti-Chinese Gambling League used to hold its meetings, sent word to me yesterday that she would like to see me. I went down and saw her, and she said to me that Constable O'Sullivan was in the hotel the night before, and asked to see her. When she saw him, she looked at him and said, "What do you want?" He replied, "I would like to have a word or two with you." They were standing in the bar at the time, and she said, "Well you had better have it here." There were two other persons in the bar—one of them was her son, and the other was Mr. Jones. Constable O'Sullivan then said to her, "Do you remember my having a glass of beer here?" She said, "No, I do not." "Don't you remember," he said, "that I came in here in plain clothes, one day, with two other men." After thinking the matter over she said, "Yes, I do." "Well," he said, "the next morning Inspector Atwill said to me, 'Did you go into the 'Fortune of War Hotel' and have a drink there?' And the constable said he did. 'Well for two pins,' replied the inspector, 'I would remove you.'" After that he (the constable) got his removal and in consequence resigned. Constable O'Sullivan told Mrs. Buchanan that in order that she might know how the house was being treated by Inspector Atwill, and what she might expect in future from the police. He said, "You know that your house is being boycotted by the police." She said, "Are you prepared to swear to the statement just made?" He said, "I have come here for that purpose." Mr. Buchanan is away, and consequently she came to tell me about the matter. And I can say this, knowing the way that we, that is, some of us, have been boycotted by the police down there, if all reports are true, we shall have to suffer more severely in the future.
17011. Mr. Hawthorne.] Was Constable O'Sullivan on duty at the time he went into the hotel for the beer? No; he was off duty, and in plain clothes.
17012. So that he went in simply in his capacity as an ordinary citizen? Yes. I may say that Armstrong also told me that after he had the anonymous letter read to him here he made it his business to go and see the inspector, and had a conversation with him; and, so far as I could understand, the inspector wanted to know the names of the men who still got tobacco from him.
17013. Are you aware if Armstrong has been before the Commission since he saw Mr. Atwill? No. I know he has not. I went there to see him, and he was engaged in his business and could not leave. He told me that he had called to Inspector Atwill's mind that he had met him for months since the Commission had been in existence, as one friend would meet another; and he said he did not think it was a manly thing for him (Atwill) to meet him as a friend whilst he possessed in his safe a letter in which I and he were charged with conspiring to take away his living.
17014. Mr. Abigail.] I think the best thing will be for Mrs. Buchanan to move the complaint you have stated to us to the Inspector-General. Let it be written clearly out, and let her certify to it as correct? You mean a sort of affidavit?
17015. Yes. I think if you do that it will lead to an investigation? My only object in coming here is to show you what we have suffered by way of the boycott, and what we are likely to suffer in the future.
17016. Well, you know human nature is the same all over the world, and when the police are made aware of the fact that they have been charged with receiving bribes and neglecting their duty, they would be something more than human if they did not show a little feeling.
17017. And it would take a great power of self-control in them to avoid showing it. I am not saying they do so, you understand; that is what you say, and I am pointing out that it is not unnatural? Then you will remember that you pooh-poohed the idea when I told you that I stood up as a citizen without protection, and now you say the police would not be human if they did not retaliate. 17018.

17018. Mr. Hawthorne.] I do not think Inspector Atwill would so far forget himself as to complain to one of his men, when he was performing his duty as an ordinary citizen, on account of making a purchase whether of beer or anything else? If you are quite satisfied on that point, Mr. Hawthorne, it is quite unnecessary for me to say anything more.

Mr.
T. Nock.
7 Jan., 1892.

17019. You did not let me finish my sentence. I say this: That if Inspector Atwill did say as you state, to Mr. O'Sullivan—because, bear in mind, he was not Constable O'Sullivan at the time, being off duty, and in plain clothes—if he did that, then he acted not only unjustly but contrary to his position as an Inspector of Police; but I think, as a matter of fact, he would have too much caution to do anything of the kind? Well, I am quite satisfied with Mrs. Buchanan's statement, I will take my risk.

17020. Has Inspector Atwill annoyed you in any way since you gave your evidence here? No; nor yet have those two constables of whom I complained.

17021. Does not that show that their conduct has improved then? It shows that what I said was true. I speak as a business man. Whilst Inspector Atwill is protected by the State, I have to struggle for my living.

17022. Mr. Quong Tart.] According to what you say, Inspector Atwill removed Constable O'Sullivan for no other reason than that he went into the "Fortune of War Hotel" to have a glass of beer when he was not on duty? Yes; he had him removed because he went into a house that was boycotted by the police on account of the meetings of the Anti-Chinese Gambling League having been held there. My house is boycotted, Armstrong's is boycotted, and Swinburne's is boycotted.

16023. Mr. Abigail.] You do what I have suggested and you will find that something will come of it? I wish I had as much faith in the Inspector-General as you have; I may state that, as a probable result of it being known that the Commission is going to be stopped, gambling is beginning again in Lower George-street. In fact, it was being carried on at top speed again on Saturday.

17024. Mr. Quong Tart.] Can you name the place where gambling was being carried on on Saturday night? All the places near my shop at any rate. I can see it on every side. We have traitors in our camp, no doubt, and that was the result of Armstrong being foolish enough to leave the meetings open to everybody—the friends of the police and everybody else.

17025. Mr. Hawthorne.] You get the credit for being the originator of the League, I think? But I was not, and Armstrong was not. The men who sent for me to join were Christensen and Buchanan.

[The witness withdrew.]

FRIDAY, 22 JANUARY, 1892.

Present:—

THE MAYOR OF SYDNEY (MR. ALDERMAN MANNING, J.P.), PRESIDENT.

FRANCIS ABIGAIL, Esq., J.P., VICE-PRESIDENT.

RAMSEY MCKILLOP, Esq., | QUONG TART, Esq.,
JOHN STUART HAWTHORNE, Esq.

Mr. S. Sloan, recalled and examined:—

17026. Mr. Abigail.] We have called you, Mr. Sloan, in consequence of a paragraph which appeared in the Australian Star, purporting to give an account of what took place at a meeting of the Gardeners' Society, on Tuesday, 19 January—for the purpose of electing officers, I believe? Yes.

Mr.
S. Sloan.
22 Jan., 1892.

17027. You were present? Yes.

17028. By this account you were elected secretary? Yes.

17029. This account purports to give a description of some remarks made against the Chinese Gambling Commission for, as alleged, refusing to receive certain evidence from some of the officers of your Society in refutation of that tendered by other witnesses examined before the Commission; and it appears to have been stated that a letter had been sent by one of your officers to the Commission, asking to be examined, and that no notice was taken of it. Now, can you give any information to sustain that statement? I would like to explain. The reporter was not there at the time, and I do not know how any such statement got out. He was, I know, talking to Mr. Flower, the late president, outside the building. Whether he got any information from him, on which he based that statement, I cannot say. But I know the statement is not correct. What I stated to the meeting was that after the report appeared in the Star on that Tuesday week, stating that the Commission had ceased to exist, and that a report would soon be sent in, I went to Parliament House and saw Mr. McGowen and urged him to ask Mr. Dibbs, the Premier, to extend the Commission. That was the statement.

17030. Then, as a matter of fact, you made no communication to the Commission asking it to hear further evidence. Whatever statement you did make, was made to Mr. McGowen urging him to get the Commission extended for the purpose of giving this Commission other information you wished to furnish? Yes.

17031. So, as a matter of fact, whoever gave this information, you do not know that it is correct, and you were not in any way responsible for it? No.

17032. The report says here "Sometime before the Commission ceased to sit, the secretary saw one of the Commission's officers and told him the Society wanted to bring further evidence in refutation of that tendered by certain witnesses who, it was further alleged, had altogether misrepresented some very important facts. But you, being the secretary of the Society, state that you never made any communication of that kind, and that this report is therefore incorrect? Yes, that is the case.

17033. Do you remember me telling you, when you were before the Commission on a former occasion, that we should be only too glad for you to furnish the fullest information to the Commission in your own way? Yes; I remember that quite well.

17034. You have no fault whatever to find with the mode in which the Commission examined you? No.

17035. And you make no complaint of being curtailed in any way in your examination? No; none whatever. I may state that there are three members of the Union who are fully conversant with the whole question as regards Messrs. Searl and Pearce; in fact it was from them that I got the information for the evidence which I gave before the Commission; and they are in a position to give important evidence.

Mr. .
S. Sloan.
22 Jan., 1892.

17036. Mr. McKillop.] Have you anything to add to the evidence you gave here some few weeks back—or do you know of a rumour having got abroad that Mr. Searl had perjured himself, or anything to that effect, with regard to the number of Chinese employed by him? From the members of the Union who know all the facts of the case, I am given to understand that he employs a number of Chinese, as I stated in my evidence more than once.

17037. Have you anything to add to your evidence? No.

17038. Who are the persons you refer to as being fully conversant with the employment of Chinese in large numbers by any of these nursery-men? I refer to the president, vice-president, and treasurer of the Society.

17039. Will they be here to-night? I have not seen them since the secretary communicated with me last night; but I expect that they should be here.

17040. What was the nature of the discussion that took place at the meeting of your Society relative to the Royal Commission;—were any statements made by the president, vice-president, or treasurer that would be of benefit to be incorporated in our report? I am given to understand that they have evidence to give which would be of benefit to the Society and also to the Commission.

17041. What is the nature of the evidence, do you know? The evidence, I understand, is as to the number of Chinese employed, their mode of living, and the injury they do us in the gardening line. One of those whom I refer to has been a market-gardener himself, and had to give it up in consequence of the Chinese.

17042. He had to give up in consequence of the Chinese competition? Yes.

17043. What district was he in? Botany.

17044. What is his name? Mr. Lines. He is our president now; he is employed at a private gentleman's place at Ashfield. He knows thoroughly how they carry on the market-gardens.

17045. Is Mr. Flowers acquainted with many of the grievances that your Association is said to labour under? Yes. He is pretty well acquainted with it. So is Mr. Williamson, and other members.

17046. Are you aware that the Commission summoned Mr. Flowers yesterday to attend the Commission and that he distinctly refused to do so; and also stated to one of the officers of this Commission who took the summons to him, that he knew practically nothing, and could tender no evidence to the Commission? I was not aware of that. I understood him to state on Tuesday night that he knew a lot. Whether it is true or not I cannot say.

17047. I may say that I informed my colleagues of the interview I had with yourself and Mr. Flowers on Monday night, and the Commission, in order to do justice to all concerned and sift this matter to the bottom, decided to call this meeting at night, though at some inconvenience to the members, in order to give you and the persons you refer to an opportunity of attending and giving any additional evidence you might wish to tender. What are the names of the three officers you have mentioned? Mr. Mew, Mr. Lines, and Mr. Rose—they are well acquainted with the whole question.

17048. Have you been employed in any garden where Chinese worked? No.

17049. Has your Society been represented on the Trades and Labour Council? Yes; the late representative was Mr. W. H. Flowers, brother to Mr. F. Flowers. We have not elected another yet.

17050. Mr. Abigail.] Now I wish to examine you further on this report. It says "the secretary was given to understand that the evidence which the Union had to offer would be called, but up to the time of the Commission concluding its inquiries, no intimation was received by the members that their evidence was required. One or two spoke of the extreme gravity of the matter, and the determination seemed to be pretty unanimously resolved upon that the Society would not fall to sleep in its efforts to discover the why and wherefore of this conduct of the Commission." Was there anything of that kind stated at the meeting? Not that I am aware of.

17051. You were present? Yes. I never heard such a statement made. When I made the statement, which I did make to the meeting, the reporter was not present.

17052. Mr. Hawthorne.] Do you generally have reporters at your meeting? Generally they come in later in the evening, when the meeting is over.

17053. Was the reporter of the Australian Star present at your meeting on the night in question? He came in late, after I made the statement.

17054. Who supplied him with the information for his report? I cannot say.

17055. Would he not come to you, as secretary of the Society? The only thing I gave him was a list of the officers elected.

17056. You gave him no other information whatever? No.

17057. Was there any grumbling among the members generally about the evidence given by Mr. Searl, or anyone else before the Commission? No.

17059. Did these members who professed to have a lot of information to give on the question, state to the meeting what was the nature of the evidence they had to give the Commission? Not on last Tuesday night.

17060. In what capacity are these three men employed who were so anxious to give evidence before this Commission before it closed? One of them, Mr. Mew, the vice-president, does gardening by the day, another, Mr. Lines, is employed at a gentleman's place at Ashfield, and Mr. Rose is similarly employed.

17061. They are employed by some gentleman in the suburbs? Yes.

17062. You have no idea yourself as to the character of the evidence they wished to give? No. I cannot give you any idea whatever, further than that I know it affected the question of the number of Chinese employed by Messrs. Searl and Pearce.

17063. But you are certain that no one—not even excluding yourself—said anything that would lead a listener to imagine that this Commission shut out evidence that ought to have been admitted? No.

17064. You are quite clear on that point? Yes.

17065. And you yourself as a witness before this Commission can state truthfully that the Commission has not hampered you in any way, but tried to obtain from you, for the purposes of its report, all the evidence you could give with regard to the Chinese question? Certainly.

17066. Did you not state in answer to Mr. Abigail a little while ago that you thought Mr. Flowers had a conversation with a reporter for the Star at the table at the meeting of your Society? The reporter was talking to Mr. Flowers across the table, and he was also talking to him outside the building; but whether he got it from him I could not say.

Mr.
S. Sloan.
22 Jan., 1892.

17067. Mr. McKillop.] Did you supply the information to the Secretary of this Commission as promised by you at the time you gave evidence here before? I gave the names of certain witnesses when I was here.

17068. But you said something else;—I think it was with reference to the exact number of Chinese employed in the nurseries? I gave what I knew of the number of Chinese employed at the time.

17069. How many Chinese does Mr. Searl employ? I think I said either ten or thirteen; but I cannot be positive as to that just now.

[The witness withdrew.]

Mr. John Lines, called and examined:—

17070. President.] Are you the President of the Gardeners' Union? Yes; that is since the last meeting. I am at present, President.

Mr.
J. Lines.
22 Jan., 1892.

17071. And you were elected when? Last Tuesday night.

17072. What office did you hold before? No office.

17073. Were you a private member? Yes.

17074. You took a deep interest in the affairs of the Union however? Yes.

17075. I do not know whether you saw an article, or more correctly, a series of paragraphs about the Commission in the Australian Star newspaper? Yes; I saw them.

17076. I have a copy of that paper before me now, and will traverse the main points in it. Some little discussion took place, it says, "anent the alleged refusal of the Royal Commission to hear evidence tendered by the members of the Union. Was there a discussion of that kind? No, there was no discussion on the point at all. While the business of the meeting went on, a couple of the members of the Union had a conversation with the young lad who was reporting for the Star; but I was in the chair, and what was said between them I could not say. I do not think, however, that that report is at all correct. The refusal came from Mr. Dibbs, not as far as I am aware, from the Commission. Mr. Dibbs said that he was damned if he would re-open the Commission.

17077. But was that part of the proceedings of the meeting over which you presided? Well, I was in the chair at that time.

17078. What I want to know is this—whether that was the subject of discussion? You see I am traversing these paragraphs. What I want to know first is, whether there was any such discussion as is here described in the ordinary and proper conduct of the meeting over which you presided? The Secretary of the Union brought up a report that he had seen Mr. McGowen, M.P., and one or two of the other Labour members, as to whether the Commission could be re-opened for the purpose of taking our evidence. Mr. McGowen asked Mr. Dibbs about it, and the reply was that he would be damned if he would re-open it.

17079. Pardon me. You can stop at that point. I want to know this now—whether it is true that "some little discussion took place anent the alleged refusal of the Royal Commission on Chinese Gambling to hear certain evidence offered to that body by the members of the Union?" There was not the slightest complaint of that kind.

17080. Very well; that is the point that I wanted evidence upon, and you have put in evidence what took place between the reporters and one or two members of your Union, and you have also put in evidence what took place between your Secretary and Mr. McGowen, M.P., and what Mr. Dibbs said in reply about the matter? Yes.

17081. The paragraph from the Australian Star continues:—"It was stated that some time before the Commission ceased to sit the Secretary saw one of the Commission's officers and told him that the Society wished to bring forward evidence in refutation of that tendered by certain witnesses, who, it was further alleged, had altogether misrepresented some very important facts." Now I want to know whether it was said that any officer of this Commission had been informed that some of you gentlemen wanted to be examined, or re-examined, and that he refused to have you examined? Well, it seems to me that that was a private conversation between Mr. Flowers and the reporter of the Star.

17082. But, as a matter of fact, you being in the chair, that was no part of the proceedings of your meeting? It was simply a private conversation that took place, while the meeting was going on, between Mr. Flowers and the young lad who represented the Australian Star, at the meeting.

17083. Very well; then the paragraph goes on to say. "The Secretary was given to understand that the evidence that the Union have to offer would be called, but up to the time of the Commission concluding its inquiries no intimation was received by the members that their evidence would be required." Was the Secretary of your Union given to understand anything of the kind, and was any public reference made such as is here recorded; that is to say, that certain witnesses have tendered evidence, that it was understood that they would be called by arrangement with our Secretary or any member of our Commission, but that they had not been called. Was that publicly stated at your meeting? No; I will not say that.

17084. It was not publicly stated there. I want to go a step further. Is it true within your knowledge independently of that meeting that such a set of facts really occurred? No; I cannot say so.

17085. But you can say positively that it was not so, cannot you? I can say the names of possible witnesses were sent in to the Secretary of this Commission, but that there was any promise to call them I cannot say; in fact, no secretary could give such a promise.

17086. But you do say that the names of certain gents connected with your Union who desired to be examined, and whom it was important should be examined, were given to our Secretary? Yes.

17087. What were those names? There was mine for one, Mr. Mew's (our Vice-President), and Mr. Rose (our treasurer).

17088. And who gave the names to our Secretary? Mr. Sloan.

17089. And have you read Mr. Sloan's evidence? No.

17090. Were you present at a deputation that waited upon me? No.

17091.

- Mr. J. Lines.
22 Jan., 1892.
17091. But you know that there was such a deputation? Yes. It was principally in connection with the furniture trades.
17092. Did not the deputation cover the whole of the ground that you would be inclined to travel over with regard to the effect of Chinese as against European labour, both in gardening and in furniture-making? Well, if you will allow me to explain, we have heard of such contradictory statements being given in evidence before you. How those reports got about, of course, I cannot tell.
17093. But I want to take you back to the deputation that waited upon me as Mayor. You have seen the reports of the deputation. You know what wide boundaries it had—how comprehensive it was in its complaints. Did not the deputation travel over the whole of the ground that you would travel over to-night if I examined you on the general effects of Chinese competition upon market-gardening and furniture-making? Well, yes; I have no doubt but that it did.
17094. You have not read Mr. Sloan's evidence? No.
17095. Do you not think the evidence given by Mr. Sloan in the course of examination would very largely comprehend the evidence that you yourself would feel inclined to give? Well, the evidence that I should have given would have been entirely with regard to the market-gardeners of Botany—a district that I do not think Mr. Sloan knows at all intimately.
17096. You are at liberty to state now any views that you have with regard to the market-gardening as carried on by Europeans or Chinese at Botany? Well, but if the Commission has closed its evidence, there is no need for it.
17097. That is a question for us to determine. As a matter of fact, we are sitting now in order to get your views upon the matter? Well, the only thing is that the European gardeners are now entirely knocked out in market-gardening, and they soon will be in the nursery trade too. European buyers take Chinese instead of European things. Ten years ago you would not find a Chinese market-gardener in Botany, and now you would not find more than one European market-garden there.
17098. Is not the competition you dread so much, competition in the cultivation of vegetables only? Yes.
17099. Well, have you anything that you absolutely know to speak of upon the question because I may tell you that we have ample evidence on the point. There is nothing new. It is just what it has been for years. The only thing is that the Chinese are getting a tighter grip all the time.
17100. Can you suggest any means by which the European market-gardeners can be delivered from this competition of which you speak? Only the expulsion of the Chinese.
17101. That is rather a radical cure is it not;—do not you think that the Chinese Restriction Laws are enough in themselves in the course of time to accomplish all that you hope for? From what I hear only one Chinaman has paid the increased poll-tax and they are leaving at the rate of hundreds a year; yet the number does not diminish at all. I do not think you would find any fewer here to-day than you would have done three years ago.
17102. Would you be surprised to learn that the Census returns show a diminution at the rate of something like 700 a year? Yes, I should be very surprised.
17103. But you would bow to the returns of the Census collector, would you not? Yes, I certainly would.
17104. And do you not think that the gradual operation of the Chinese Restriction Laws would, in the course of time, effect the desired end? Yes, if they were strictly carried out and there was no over-the-border slipping in.
17105. Well, have you any figures to show that the Chinese population is not decreasing? No, I have not.
17106. It is a mere supposition of yours? Yes.
17107. Is there anything more that you would like to add with regard to the Chinese competition in your trade, anything I mean that you have not said to-night and that has not been said by other witnesses? No, I think that is really what interests gardeners.
17108. Well, I might inform you that the whole of that ground has been already covered. The only thing is that none of the other witnesses have even hinted at what has been said by you—that there is an illegal Chinese immigration or an evasion of the poll-tax, and the only new point that you make is that you would advocate the utter expulsion of Chinese? Yes.
17109. You think that the situation is so grave so far as your fellow-traders are concerned as to warrant such an extreme step as expulsion? Yes; though I would not advocate it only for the sake of the men in our Union, but for all engaged in the furniture trades and the produce trade generally.
17110. You deliberately recommend the total expulsion of Chinese? Yes.
17111. Supposing they had paid the poll-tax would you recommend the repayment to them of that £100? Certainly. I would be fair to all men.
17112. Then it amounts to this: That you would recommend the Government to subsidise the Chinese for leaving the Colony? No, it would not be subsidising them, because you would find that so few of them have paid the £100.
17113. And the men who had come in before the £100 poll-tax was instituted you would expel without any compensation? I would pay their passage back to their own country, and if they had any property here I would give them the opportunity of selling it.
17114. Is it your opinion that that would result beneficially to the country? Yes.
17115. And do you think that one of the results would be that vegetables and produce of all kinds would be procurable as easily as they are now, particularly in those arid districts where few white men cultivate vegetables. Do you think it would be desirable in the interest of the European population in those parts of the country that I have in my mind that the Chinese should be expelled? Provided that the Chinese would keep to market-gardening it would be all very well; but they will not keep to it. They are continually taking up other trades. You remember four years ago, when there was a great agitation against the Chinese. At that time there was so much in the paper about them that I thought it would be a good thing to start a green-grocery business. But what I found was this: That European women preferred to buy their vegetables from Chinamen for the sake of beating them down. They would say, "how much for a cabbage, John?" He would tell them that it was 4d. "Well, I will give you 3d." they would say, and of course he would say, "Well, then, missie, take it." That sort of thing seems to go down better with European women than for an Englishman to say "3d." and stick to it.
17116. Generally, then the paragraph that I have referred to in the Australian Star is not true in detail? No.
17117. Neither your Union nor any of its members have been treated with any discourtesy by the Commission, you think? No, certainly not. Our only complaint was that the Commission had been stopped by the Colonial Secretary.

17118. And what was your grievance from that point of view? Simply that we thought we could give some information which might be valuable.

17119. What was the information you thought you could have given? Well, you had Mr. Sparkes, from Botany, had you not.

17120. Yes. What of that? Well, he gave you some information as a market-gardener and there is no market-gardener of that name in Botany.

17121. It was Alderman Sparkes who gave evidence before the Commission? He is a joiner and works in Sydney.

17122. And what statement made by him do you wish to traverse? That he is a market-gardener.

17123. He may have been a market-gardener at one time? No, he never was a market-gardener.

17124. But supposing that we asked him for information about the Chinese market-gardeners down there simply in his own capacity as Mayor of Botany? Well, if he had had reliable information it would have been all right.

17125. You evidently take exception to some of Mr. Sparkes' evidence. Will you kindly tell the Commission what part of it you object to? I do not know what his evidence is at all.

17126. Then, if you do not know what his evidence is, why did you want the Premier to extend the Commission in order to give you a chance of contradicting it? What I objected to was this: I heard that Mr. Sparkes had said "I am a market-gardener and am doing just as well as when the Chinese came to the Colony."

17127. Mr. Abigail.] Do you not think that you are confusing Alderman Sparkes with Alderman Smith, the Mayor of North Botany, who is a market-gardener? Perhaps so.

17128. President.] Then I will take Mr. Smith's evidence. Would you have desired that the Commission should be extended in order to give you an opportunity of rebutting that? No, it was evidently a mistake on the part of the person who gave me the information. They misquoted Mr. Sparkes' evidence.

17129. Then you confess that one of the reasons why you desired the Commission to be extended was the result of a mistake? Yes.

17130. Was there any other reason why you wanted its extension? Yes; Mr. Searl is said to have sworn that he did not employ any Chinamen now.

17131. He did not, as a matter of fact, swear that at all. Supposing he admitted that he had altogether five Chinamen in his employ, would you swear that that was wrong—would you swear that he had eighteen? No, I certainly would not.

17132. You are not prepared to traverse Mr. Searl's evidence at all, then? No, I am not.

17133. And you are quite satisfied with the truthfulness of it, if he stated that he had four or five? Yes, quite so.

17134. Will you let me abandon all that, and ask you one or two questions? What are you by trade, Mr. Lines? I am a gardener, and am at present on the Parramatta Road, at Ashfield, in the employ of Mr. Wilson, the manager of the Bank of New Zealand.

17135. You are in charge of his grounds? Yes.

17136. Would you mind telling the Commission what remuneration you get? I get 30s. a week, and live in the house.

17137. That would be equal to about £2 10s. a week if you had to find yourself? Yes.

17138. And how many hours do you work? From 7 o'clock in the morning until 5 at night.

17139. How many working hours does that give you, after deducting meal times? Eight hours a day.

17140. Are there any occasions upon which you work more than eight hours a day? Yes, there are. There are times when it suits me to work a little longer, in order to get my work done.

17141. There are times when it is found necessary in gardening to work rather earlier in the morning than usual? Well, it is more often necessary to work late at night.

17142. At all events it is necessary for you, occasionally, to vary your hours? Yes, I do not think that a good gardener should value his time.

17143. I wanted to know if you had not to work sometimes other hours than from 7 o'clock in the morning until 5 o'clock at night? Well, I do not "have" to do it, but I choose to do it if it is very hot weather.

17144. Have you any knowledge of any Chinaman employed similarly to yourself? Well, I can tell you what the foreman of a large nursery-man told me—that you can ask the Chinese to work early and late and they are always willing to do it, no matter whether on Sundays or week days.

17145. Did he tell you what their hours were? From six in the morning till six at night.

17146. That would be about 10 hours a day? Yes.

17147. Did he tell you what wages he paid them? One, 25s.; another, 28s.; and another, 30s. a week.

17148. And who keeps the Chinese? They keep themselves.

17149. What would European gardeners of corresponding capacity get if they were employed by the same men? They could not do it under 2 guineas, if they had to keep themselves.

17150. So the difference is about 10s. a week? Well, it is usual where Europeans are employed that they are boarded and lodged and they get from 15s. to £1 according to their ability.

17151. The European gardener's rate of wages for the same class of work would be from 15s. to £1 a week and board and lodging additional? Yes.

17152. In your own case you put your board and lodging down as worth about £1 a week? Yes.

17153. Then it would be a fair thing to value the board and lodging of these Chinamen at £1 a week or less? Well, 4s. a week would keep a Chinaman, this foreman told me.

17154. He told you that these Chinamen could be kept at the rate of 4s. a week? He told me that they could keep themselves for 4s. a week.

17155. I am not speaking about what they could keep themselves for. I am speaking of the value of their board and lodging supposing they were kept on European diet? Well, I suppose it would cost as much as it would cost to keep a European, that is, supposing they would eat the food.

17156. Well, do you know any of the market-gardeners at Botany who employ Chinese? Yes.

17157. Can you tell me what wages they pay them? Between 26s. and 28s. a week.

17158. And what would a European get? Between 15s. and £1 a week and his keep.

17159. What would you value the board of a European at—15s. a week? Well, I should question if they lived in the house whether it would cost as much as that.

17160.

Mr.
J. Lines.
22 Jan., 1892.

- Mr. J. Lines.
22 Jan., 1892.
17160. So that, calculating their board and lodging at the maximum, it would bring their wages to somewhere about 30s. or 35s. a week? Yes, about that.
17161. Do the Europeans give more work for their service of eight hours a day than the Chinese do for their service of ten hours a day? I believe they do.
17162. I mean this—do they during the eight hours which constitutes their day's work do more than the Chinese in the ten hours that constitutes their day's work? I should hardly like to answer that question. It is difficult to say exactly. I know that the Chinese are plodding workers. They are slow but they are steady and keep on at the same jog trot from morning till night.
17163. I suppose the rate of wages you have quoted obtains all round the city—at North Shore as well as elsewhere? Yes.
17164. Do you know anything about the question of manuring the gardens at Botany? Well, I know what it used to be some years ago for they all had liquid manure with which to water their cabbages.
17165. Would you use that? Certainly not.
17166. Why? Because it is too forcing for the vegetables and bad for the health of the consumers.
17167. Have you studied the chemistry of the question at all? Well, I have studied it in the old country. I have relations who are farmers there and they have all gone back to the old farm-yard system.
17168. How long is it since you were in England? I was at home close on three years, and was living the whole of that time on a farm. I came back last Queen's Birthday.
17169. What did your relations raise on their farm? Wheat, oats, barley, and so on.
17170. They did not produce cabbages or lettuces? No.
17171. They did not use human excrement on that farm? No.
17172. And you are decidedly averse to using that kind of manure on vegetable-gardens? Yes.
17173. And you understand the question scientifically? Well, I was with Mr. Frank Smith at Botany for a great many years looking after his vegetable-garden.
17174. What is the difference between the chemical properties of human excrement and stable manure? I suppose there would be a great deal more ammonia from human excrement than from stable manure.
17175. Would you reject a manure because there was too much ammonia in it? Well, for growing cabbages and lettuces, and so on, I should decidedly object to human excreta, that is if I had to eat it, and no doubt the Chinese would do the same.
17176. Mr. McKillop.] How long is it since you had a vegetable-garden of your own? I never had one of my own. I was in the employment of Mr. Frank Smith.
17177. You stated some time ago that the only way of getting over the difficulty with the Chinese would be to clear the Colony of all Chinamen. Do you mean that to apply to respectable Chinese merchants and so on, or only to those who come into competition with the working-classes? It would be impossible to draw the line.
17178. Would it be correct if Mr. Searl said that he only employed one Chinaman? No.
17179. How many does he employ? Three.
17180. Then his evidence is quite correct, because he said that although he had only one Chinaman in his employ, just then, he intended to employ two more again, and considered three would be his average number. Did he ever employ any at Ashfield? Not that I am aware of.
17181. Would you be surprised to hear that evidence has been tendered before the Commission to the effect that, owing to the increase of the poll-tax, the number employed in Chinese furniture-making has been on the decrease? Well, if that has been stated in evidence, I suppose it must be so.
17182. And would you be surprised to hear that it has been stated before us that, for similar reasons, Chinamen are leaving their gardens, and returning in large numbers to their own country? I do not see any of them going away.
17183. Are you aware that we have had evidence tendered by Alderman Smith, of North Botany, to the effect that several gardens that were worked by Chinamen in the neighbourhood had been given up and were now in a deserted state? I have not heard of any such thing taking place.
17184. Is the competition very keen amongst the Chinamen themselves? Well, I should not think so. I think they are too loving a race to compete with each other. You never see any of them fall out on the road.
17185. Do you know anything of the habits of the Chinese in other parts of the Colony? No, I only know about Botany, and having been there so long I know a good deal about the race there.
17186. Do any of the nursery men but Searl, to your knowledge, employ Chinamen? I know that Searl does, and I know that Pearce does. Tresseder used to, but he has now given his Chinamen up.
17187. What is the complement of Europeans employed at Searl's nursery at Botany? Only one, and a carter who takes the things into town.
17188. Are you aware that it is by reason of the heavy rents that they are willing to pay to the landlords that the Chinese get hold of land that ought to be in the hands of Europeans? Yes, I believe that is so.
17189. And it is through the amount of energy displayed by the Chinese and the long hours that they work that the keenness of the competition with Europeans arises? Yes.
17190. Did it ever come under your observation when you were employed by Mr. Frank Smith, of Botany, that the Chinese worked on Sundays? Yes, they always work on Sundays.
17191. I know that they work on Sundays. The question is whether they work all day on Sundays? Oh, no; I do not know that they do that.
17192. Does not a European gardener insist upon his men working on Sundays? Well, I think he would rather do what working it was necessary to do on Sundays himself than call upon his men to do it.
17193. Would you be surprised to hear that it has been said here that human excrement is used by European as well as Chinese vegetable-gardeners, only that instead of being put over the vegetables it is put by them at their roots? Yes, I should be surprised to hear that.
17194. Do you know any instance in which European gardeners have used human manure. No.
17195. Not a single instance. Nor one in which they have used urine? No, it would not do to use urine unless it was very heavily adulterated with water.
17196. Do you know that it is used? No.
17197. But you know that the Chinese use it? No. If they do it would have to be very greatly diluted. How do they get hold of it?
17198. Well, we may tell you that they do use it. They store it in large jars in different parts of their gardens? Now that I come to think of it, I remember hearing some years ago that those jars were used for that purpose. I never saw the urine used. I only saw the jars there.

Mr. Joseph Rose called and examined :—

17199. President.] What are you, Mr. Rose? I am a gardener.
 17199½. You are treasurer of the Gardeners' Union? Yes.
 17200. How long have you occupied that position? Six months.
 17201. Did you see a report of the last meeting of your Society which appeared in the Star newspaper? No.
 17202. Did you hear anything about it? Not until to-night.
 17203. I want to ask you some questions on that report; but, in the first place, I suppose you were present at that meeting? I was.
 17204. It is stated that some discussion took place anent the alleged refusal of the Commission to receive certain evidence;—did any such discussion take place at that meeting? There was a discussion, but not in that sense of the word.
 17205. The report says :—“It was stated that some time before the Commission ceased to sit the secretary saw one of the Commission's officers and told him that the Society wished to bring forward evidence in refutation of that tendered by certain witnesses, who, it was further alleged, had altogether misrepresented some very important facts”;—was that stated at the meeting publicly? Yes; that is at the meeting privately.
 17206. The report also says :—“The Society was given to understand that the evidence which the Union had to offer would be called, but up to the time of the Commission concluding its inquiries no intimation was received by the members that their evidence was required”;—did the secretary state that publicly at the meeting? He stated that the Commission was being closed without calling this evidence.
 17207. Did the secretary state that he was given to understand that the evidence which the Union had to offer would be called? Yes, he did.
 17208. Did one or two of those present speak of “the extreme gravity of the matter, and the determination seemed to be pretty unanimously resolved upon that the Society would not fall to sleep in its efforts to discover the why and wherefore of this conduct of the Commission”;—was that said publicly? Yes, it was.
 17209. Are you aware that the secretary has no record of this at all, either in his books or memory, so far as it being said in open meetings is concerned? I am not aware of that.
 17210. And the President says the same thing—that is, they both repudiate this report as being untrue;—was the reporter present at the meeting when it began? No; not when it began. He came in afterwards.
 17211. Who did he get the information from? I cannot say.
 17212. He did not get it from you? No.
 17213. Were you there during the whole of the meeting? I was. There were two reporters there; one from the Evening News and one from the Star. The latter came in just after the meeting.
 17214. Do you know whom he interviewed after the meeting? I saw him talking to Mr. Flowers.
 17215. Is Mr. Flowers authorised to give the minutes of the meetings to the Press? No.
 17216. He has no authority at all to give such information? No.
 17217. He is not an executive officer? He ceased to be an officer on Tuesday night. Mr. Lines was in the chair when the Star reporter was there.
 17218. Now, I want you to think whether some of these statements which you believe to have been made at the meeting were not made privately between the members as matters of gossip as it were, and not the subject of discussion? Well, it was privately said, because Mr. Flowers said to the reporter of the Evening News that he hoped anything he was saying would not be reported.
 17219. Mr. M'Killop.] Did he make that statement in open meeting of the Society? Yes.
 17220. The statement as reported in the paper? No. I think the Evening News reporter was there.
 17221. Did Mr. Flowers at any time when you were sitting as a meeting speak in a strain such as was reported in the Star, that the Commission had treated the members of the Society in anyway but a proper manner? If you will allow me I will quote the few words Mr. Flowers used. He said he thought it was a shame that this Commission which was formed by the late Government should be shut up by the incoming Government, when there was more important evidence to give; that it was not fair to all sides.
 17222. Then he actually condemned the Government for curtailing the time of the Commission, and not giving an opportunity to members of your union to give evidence? Yes, that is correct.
 17223. President.] Did Mr. Flowers say what was the important evidence they had to give? No.
 17224. Do you know? No. I understood there were two other persons to give evidence, but I do not know what it was about.
 17225. Nothing was said to the effect that this Commission had treated your secretary in a discourteous manner? No, nothing was said about that at all.
 17226. Mr. Hawthorne.] Was there a feeling among the members of your Society that this Commission was trying to shut out evidence from your Society that would rebut what was previously said by witnesses examined before the Commission? Nothing of that kind was expressed whatever.

[The witness withdrew.]

Mr. Isaac Mew called and examined :—

17227. President.] You are Vice-President of the Gardeners' Union, Mr. Mew? Yes.
 17228. How long have you occupied that position? For eighteen months; since the formation of the Society.
 17229. You had a meeting of the Society last week? Yes; on Tuesday.
 17230. Were you present at that meeting? I was.
 17231. Did you read a report of that meeting, which appeared in the Australian Star? Yes; to-night I read it when I entered the hall.
 17232. I want to ask you some questions concerning that report; just follow me as I read the paragraphs. In the first place it is stated that some little discussion took place anent the alleged refusal of the Royal Commission on Chinese gambling to receive certain evidence from members of your Society. Now, as a matter of fact, was that publicly discussed at the meeting in question? No; certainly not.
 17233. The next paragraph states, “Some time before the Commission ceased to sit the secretary saw one of the Commission officers, and told him that the Society wished to bring forward evidence in refutation of that tendered by certain witnesses who, it was further alleged, had altogether misrepresented some very important facts”;—was that stated at the meeting publicly? No.
 17234. Also that “the secretary was given to understand that the evidence which the Union had to offer would be called, but up to the time of the Commission concluding its inquiry no intimation was received by the members of the Society that their evidence was required”;—was that the subject of discussion at the meeting? No.

Mr.
J. Rose.
22 Jan., 1892.

Mr.
I. Mew.
22 Jan., 1892.

17235.

- Mr. I. Mew. 17235. Did one or two members of the Union speak of "the extreme gravity of the matter?" Yes; I did.
- 22 Jan., 1892. 17236. Now, I want you to give me the substance of your observations on that occasion? The secretary reported that the Commission had closed its inquiry, and that he had taken steps to bring the matter before the Premier in order that the Commission might take our evidence before it finally closed its sittings, and that if it was finally closed in reality to ask the Premier to re-open it again. I spoke in support of the secretary's action in the matter, complimenting him on what he had done; and I further said that the extreme gravity of the case would warrant the president and secretary still using their best endeavours to induce the Premier to allow the Commission an extension of time so that we might give our evidence.
17237. Now, will you tell me in what respect you considered the matter of extreme gravity? In this way: It appeared to me—and that was the remark I made—that the Commission having been appointed by a Government that had just retired from office, the new Government should not have so speedily closed the Commission, when there was evidence to be tendered that would be favourable to our side of the question, and that such evidence should have been received before the inquiry was concluded. We were under the impression that such evidence had been shut out, though not purposely, so far as the Commission was concerned.
17238. That is by reason of the Commission expiring at this stage? Yes.
17239. Now, supposing the Commission had been extended, what particular evidence would you have desired to lay before us? My evidence was specially relative to the point that has been before our Union lately, bearing upon the Chinese being employed in nurseries, which has only taken place within the last two or three years.
17240. Then one of your reasons for wishing to appear before the Commission was in order to establish the fact that European workmen were being driven out of the nurseries by the employment of the Chinese? Yes.
17241. Is there any other reason in your mind for re-opening the Commission, or is that the sole reason? That was the principal reason. Personally, I am totally opposed to the Chinese. I think they are an undesirable people to form part of the community. So far as I can see, there does not appear to be any sympathy between them and us.
17242. Are you not aware that a deputation waited upon me, and brought before this Commission representatives of the Gardener's Union, and some of the cabinet-makers of the city with that object in view, and in fact traversed the whole of the ground that you could possibly traverse on the subject? I was aware that a deputation from our Union waited upon your Worship bearing upon the subject, but I thought that further evidence might be adduced to give still greater strength to our view of the question, particularly with regard to our own trade in connection with the employment of Chinese in the nurseries.
17243. You were under the impression then, that we did not examine some of the members of your Union upon that subject? Not exactly that; but we thought that the additional evidence to be forthcoming, might be worthy of your attention.
17244. But you do not know whether such evidence would be merely a reiteration of that already given? I was not certain.
17245. Well, I may tell you that in my opinion the whole question has been pretty well traversed, not only as regards your trade, but as to the furniture trade, and as to the habits and customs of the Chinese generally. You are aware that for some time past there has been a Chinese Restriction Act in force in this Colony, and that the evils you complain of must necessarily diminish under the operation of such a law? Yes; I am quite aware of the existence of that law. But we have frequently had representations made of Chinese coming here from different parts of this extensive continent, and in that way evading the Restriction Act.
17246. Have you any direct evidence to offer with respect to the evasion of the poll-tax by the Chinese? Only that some have been convicted.
17247. That we all know, and that the law has been upheld in these cases? Yes.
17248. I suppose as a matter of fact we may take it that your Union is perfectly satisfied with the treatment of the Commission so far as it has gone? Yes; we have not the slightest complaint to make of the Commission.
17249. Do you endorse in any way the paragraph I read to you with regard to the Commission? No; it is altogether incorrect. My remarks dealt entirely with the Premier, and I expressed the opinion that instead of suddenly winding up the Commission in the way he did greater care should have been bestowed to give us an opportunity of being heard, especially as the secretary informed us that my name and the names of others had been handed in over a month ago, stating that we would like to give evidence before the Commission.
17250. It is quite true that when the secretary of your Society was under examination here he did give in some names; and of course we had a mass of evidence of one kind and another when the Commission's labours were brought to a close—but in my opinion we had sufficient evidence before us to enable us to come to a conclusion, and when you read the report you will find that regard has been had to all matters that you have feared may have escaped attention.
17251. Mr. Abigail.] You have stated that you are opposed to the Chinese becoming a portion of this community;—have you thought out any scheme by which we could cure the evil of their presence in the community? Well, I was delighted when the Restriction Act was introduced, but I think the matter of sufficient gravity to go further than that. I would be favourable to giving them a fair time to quit the country altogether. I would not expel them straight away. I think, at any rate, they should have at least five years' notice. They should be given a sufficient time to wind up their affairs, so that their interests would be considered in connection with investments made in the country.
17252. Do you not know that they are leaving the country very fast as it is? I read that twelve months ago they were leaving rapidly, but since then I believe the exodus has been much slower.
17253. Then you do not know that during the last few years their numbers in the Colony have been reduced by thousands? No; I was not aware that they were leaving the country so rapidly as that.
17254. I may inform you that it is so, and the statistics will prove it? That, of course, alters the case to some extent.

[The witness withdrew.]

DEPUTATION TO THE MAYOR OF SYDNEY.

A DEPUTATION introduced by Mr. Ninian Melville, M.P., and Mr. S. E. Lees, M.P., and comprising Messrs. Cutler, Beard, and Saunders, representing the United Furniture Trades Society, and Mr. Sloane, representing the Gardeners' Union, waited upon the Mayor of Sydney (Mr. Alderman Mauning, J.P.), on the December, for the purpose of directing his attention to the conditions under which the European cabinet-makers and gardeners of Sydney and the neighbourhood were obliged to compete with the Chinese. As the question was of interest to the Chinese Gambling Inquiry Commission, the Mayor invited the attendance of the members of the Commission.

Mr. Lees, M.P., said: I have much pleasure in introducing this deputation to you, Mr. Mayor. They have some matters to bring before you, and if you will hear what Mr. Cutler has to say, he will explain the question from the cabinet-makers' point of view.

Mr. Melville, M.P.: I would like, Mr. Mayor, to say this, that it is well known what anxiety I have evinced, and what action I have taken in this matter for years past; and, in the interest of common humanity, apart from political feelings, I would impress upon you the necessity for taking such as these gentlemen will represent to you as advisable. I regret that we have in our midst a class of persons who, by their mode of living, have made themselves so objectionable, persons who take such license that, whilst we believe in absolute freedom for every human being, yet, for the protection of the community at large, it is necessary to place some restriction upon them, and these gentlemen are of opinion that the Municipal Council of Sydney might put certain by-laws in force that would conduce very much to their relief as industrious tradesmen.

The Mayor.] I understand that this deputation waits upon me in my capacity as Mayor of the City, and it is within their knowledge that I am also President of the Royal Commission appointed to take into consideration various matters in connection with the Chinese, and particularly to take into consideration the moral, social, and sanitary conditions under which they live in Sydney and its neighbourhood. I presumed that the deputation desired to wait upon me as Mayor, but I thought it well, seeing that I had associated with me, under the Seal of the Queen, some gentlemen appointed to make this inquiry, that they should be present, although, perhaps, they will not be called upon to speak, they will be glad to listen to any observations that you, gentlemen, have to make.

Mr. Cutler.] As a representative of the United Furniture Trades Society, and almost a native of the city, I regret that the circumstances of Chinese competition compel me to work in such a manner as I have to do for my living. We are not here to complain that the officers of the Council do not do their duty. We have come to ask you, sir, as Mayor, to see whether there are not some by-laws, which it would be possible to put in force to make the Chinese live as they should live. We are given to understand that there is a by-law in existence that would reach this class of persons, but that it has not yet received the sanction of Parliament. Whether that is so however, I do not know.

The Mayor.] You must definitely state what condition of Chinese life you are complaining of. I take it that you are now alluding to overcrowding.

Mr. Cutler.] To overcrowding and insanitation.

The Mayor.] You had better separate the two. At any rate you are now speaking on the question of overcrowding.

Mr. Cutler.] In the first place they are overcrowded. There is no getting away from it. We are not going to make any charge about any street or house, but anyone who goes through Goulburn-street, Wexford-street, or other parts of the city will admit at once that the Chinese do overcrowd. Leprosy has arisen in many cases in the Chinese quarters. In several instances the cabinet-makers eat, live, and sleep in their work-shops. The vegetable hawkers have the vegetables that they sell to Europeans stored in the places where they sleep. There are something like 262 Chinese boarding-houses in the city, and gentlemen who are well capable of forming an opinion say that these places are overcrowded and very dirty. I have not been through very many myself, but from those I have been through I should say that they are none too clean. Another complaint we wish to make about them is that they work on a Sunday. On Sundays they are engaged in sand-papering, and polishing, and other descriptions of work that make no row. We thought that the City Council was the proper authority to appeal to in the first instance, and if our appeal to you is successful we shall then go to the suburban councils. I have spoken on the matter to the Mayor of Botany who is a fellow-worker at our trade, and he has asked me to bring it before the suburban municipalities; and I do not see why the City Council should not deal with it also. I know that the Nuisance-Inspector often comes to my place, and I do not see why the houses of the Chinese, who do not pay as much to the revenue as I do, should not quite as carefully inspected. There are many who say that, as they are taxed when first they come to the Colony, we are very unfair to ask that they be further harassed; but if you knew the extent to which cabinet-makers are suffering from them in the way of unfair competition you would not be surprised. On our books there are something like eighty-five out of work, and yet the shops are full of Chinese furniture. We therefore appeal, in the first instance, to the City Council to do what they can to make the people live on similar lines to ourselves. If they only did that, it would render their competition much fairer and more reasonable.

Mr. Sloane.] On behalf of the gardeners who are very seriously affected by the Chinese, I should like to say that we have a very hard job to compete against them. They work from daylight in the morning until dark at night, and half a day on Sunday. In the vegetable line, therefore, we are completely done out of it. They have already taken the trade out of our hands, and now they are making inroads on the business of the florists. I can state as a fact that there are 225 Chinese lodging-houses in the city at the present time, and that they are insanitary and overcrowded.

Mr. Saunders.] I cannot add much to what our Secretary has already said about Chinese work in furniture line. It has been said that the Chinese are employed in making only the commonest kind of furniture, and that therefore, the injury they do is very slight indeed, but that is a very erroneous conception; as the better class of work is done by contract, when they have no contracts in hand, the large firms which have a good deal of machinery are almost idle, because the Chinese do the commoner class of work which they might otherwise do. The evil, as affecting the European furniture makers, is really of a most serious nature.

The Mayor.] What class of furniture do you say that the Chinese, by monopolising, take from you? Mr. Saunders: The commonest class chiefly—ordinary wash-stands, dressing-tables, and so on.

The Mayor.] Well, I think it was fortunate that when you laid this question before me the gentlemen who have been commissioned with me to inquire into the whole question of the Chinese in Sydney and its suburbs, their manners and customs, should have been present. Some of the things that you complain of have been brought under our notice already. We have made our inspection of many of the Chinese habitations in the city and suburbs, and, as Mr. Abigail will tell you, I have already taken some action in regard to them. There is no doubt but that a very close inspection will be necessary to insure proper sanitation among the Chinese habitations of the city and suburbs. I have seen myself that they have adopted the plan of building in the yards connected with their houses, and converting it into a temporary kitchen. Indeed, they go so far as to cook their food on a roaring fire right alongside their closets; and, of course, in consequence of that a serious nuisance arises in the premises. Closely affected with the question of sanitation is the manner in which the Chinese herd together in such numbers in their houses. Now, I would like to say, with regard to that question, that there is no Common Lodging-house Act in existence, but I am quite sure that there should be, and that legislation should be passed at once affecting not only the habitations of the Chinese, but also the habitations of Europeans, when those habitations are used as common lodging-houses. So that you will see that, as far as the lodgement of the Chinese is concerned, I am entirely with you, but I am utterly powerless in the matter. As far as the sanitary question is concerned the Council can do something, and will do it without delay; but that will not effect what you want. You will require something in the form of legislation to make all these foreigners amongst us live a proper and healthy life—a life such as our native population are accustomed to lead, and a life such as every man whom God made should lead. This custom of herding together—so many in one room, is greatly to be deplored, and the Chinese are the greatest sinners in that respect. They are utterly heedless of ventilation and comfort; and it must be a great hardship upon Australian workmen to have to compete with men living under such conditions. I know also that they have a custom of introducing into their crowded houses the vegetables that are subsequently hawked about the city for sale amongst Europeans, but that also is a custom that I am powerless to deal with.

Mr. Lees.] The deputation probably know that all this gardening is done outside the city.

The Mayor.] The City Council has under consideration a new charter for the City of Sydney, and the whole of the detail of the Bill has already been agreed upon. There are only a few more questions to consider in connection with it and then it will be sent on to Parliament. We have undertaken to make large laws for every conceivable thing, and when the measure is passed we shall be able to give the very relief that you seek and that we are not able to give you now, that is with regard to the question of overcrowding. Of course, with regard to the questions of Sunday work, the general hours of work and so on, a body like the City Council cannot be expected to deal with that. They will have to be covered by legislation. Already Parliament is considering a Bill to reduce the hours of labour, but it is quite impossible for me to hold out any hope of our being entrusted with such a power. The scope of the Chinese Gambling Inquiry Commission is so wide however, that it will embrace in its report the whole of the questions that you have brought forward to-day; and, at the end of the next year, I hope that the Council will have the power of dealing with the overcrowding of which you complain.

Mr. Lees.] On behalf of the deputation I thank you, Mr. Mayor, for the courtesy you have shown. Of course with regard to the question of Sunday working nothing can be done by your Council.

The Mayor.] I may tell you that in the course of our investigation we have been informed that the Chinese do not work on Sundays to any extent. Of course you say that they do.

Mr. Carter.] Yes.

The Mayor.] Then I think the police could assist you there. Do not you know that the police have raided the Chinese gardeners at Waterloo and punished them for Sunday working? However, that is a matter upon which you had better communicate to the Inspector-General.

Mr. Sloane.] We do not complain about the Chinese alone, but also about the Italians.

The Mayor.] Yes. I used the word foreigners in my reply because I had the Italians as well as the Chinese in my mind.

[The deputation then withdrew.]

VISITS OF INSPECTION.

Chinese residences, &c., visited by the Commission in George-street North and neighbourhood, on August 27.

No. 40, Little Essex-street—A Chinese boarding-house in which there were forty bunks, all of them occupying an absurdly small space and divided by matchwood partitions from each other. A cellar beneath was occupied by a Chinaman and a European woman. The entire premises, considered by the Commission unfit for human habitation were immediately condemned for destruction by the Mayor.

Sun Sam Kee's.—Notorious gambling-house in George-street North. Five Europeans caught playing fan-tan.

The Commission also visited Chinese quarters in Hanson's Buildings, Queen-street and Queen's-place.

Chinese residences, &c., in Goulburn-street and neighbourhood, visited by the Commission, on 29th August, 1891.

Several houses were inspected in Goulburn-street East and West, Pitt-street, Campbell-street, Wexford-street, Robertson's-lane, Sussex-street, and Victoria-place. A few Chinamen were discovered in the act of smoking opium, but whilst gambling implements were found in many of the houses no games were seen in progress. A boarding-house known as Robertson's coach factory in Robertson's-lane, and now occupied by Chinamen, is described in the report of a subsequent inspection.

Chinese residences in Lower George-street visited by the Commission on Tuesday, 24 November, 1891.

Messrs. On Chong & Co.—An exceedingly well-kept house.

No. 179, Bow Sing Tong.—Front premises occupied as a medicine shop, but no medicine in stock; fan-tan table in room behind, from which a narrow passage gives access to three other houses; a store-room, a bed-room, reeking with dampness, devoid of ventilation, and containing two beds, also a W.C. and a lottery-bank; as clean as such premises could well be.

Sun Sam Kee.—Strongly barricaded doors between front shop and rear rooms, containing fan-tan tables; exit through three doors to Queen-street; escape across the roof in various directions for gamblers in case of surprise. The entire house presents the appearance of a rabbit warren; upstairs windows strongly barred; premises clean.

Han Kee.—Cookshop, boarding-house, and gambling-den; eight boarders in the house at present. There have been as many as twenty-five; five box-like bedrooms about 8 feet square walled off like dungeons from the cellar, which is itself dark and unventilated except for a door leading into a court-yard, closed when the Commission were there. Three of these bedrooms are each occupied by a Chinaman, who pays 2s. a week for the accommodation and finds himself. Upstairs a European was found smoking opium in company with a Chinaman. The proprietor admitted selling about £4 worth of opium per week. He has been carrying on an illicit trade in opium for twenty years. The down-stairs bedrooms are utterly unfit for human occupation. House fairly clean.

Pun Nun.—Cookshop, boarding-house and gambling-den. Here the Commissioners saw the account books, implements, &c., of five gambling syndicates. Premises barred and barricaded to frustrate police supervision; apparently clean. Notice in front shop, "5. (marks pak-ah-pu) 1s.; 6. 9s.; 7. £3 15s.; 8. £21; 9. £37 10s.; 10. £75 10s.

Chinese residences in the neighbourhood of Wexford-street, visited by the Commission on the 25th November, 1891.

No. 29, Stephen-street.—Twelve Chinamen inside several of them smoking opium.

No. 25, Stephen-street.—Occupied by a white girl and a Chinaman named Ah Hung; four Chinamen smoking opium in a room up stairs; rent 8s. a week.

No. 3, Exeter-place.—Adelaide ——— found on a couch in company with a Chinaman for whom she was preparing opium.

Nos. 12, 16, 20, Exeter-place.—Houses kept by European women for Chinamen; clean and even tastefully furnished.

No. 44, Campbell-street—Tee Chin—This place is filthy and contains thirty beds; the premises are old, dirty, and dilapidated, and smell bad. Fit only for condemnation. In this place in a locked room the Commissioners found a lottery-bank in full swing; rent, £4 a week.

No. 36, Campbell-street.—Gong War—A large three-story place, fairly clean; 15 lodgers who pay 2s. a week and 8d. per meal. Smell from kitchen very bad; rent, £1 11s. per week.

No. 10 and 12, Robertson's-lane.—Lodging-houses; clean; from 6 to 10 boarders regularly stay here; beds 6d. per night. Gambling-tables in both houses. Robertson's-lane.

Robertson's-lane.—Sun Kwun Fong—A large lodging-house, previously visited by the Commission at night; by daylight it presented a filthy appearance. Beds were found in the following numbers in various rooms:—1st partition, 8 beds; 2nd partition, 9 beds; 3rd partition, 4 beds; 4th partition, 5 beds; 5th partition, 6 beds; 6th partition, 4 beds; 7th partition, 3 beds; 8th partition, 3 beds; 42 beds in all. Opium-smoking was carried on in one of these apartments.

No. 427, Pitt-street South.—Fook On—Cook-shop and lodging-house; clean, papered, and white-washed; rent, £1 a week.

Chinese residences, &c., in Retreat-street and neighbourhood of Alexandria, visited by Commissioners on Thursday, November 26th.

- (1) A number of Chinamen at fan-tan; money (a few shillings) on the table; opium-smoking; premises clean.
- (2) Fan-tan table; opium-smoking; rent, 15s. a week.
- (3) Fan-tan table; opium-smoking; fairly clean.
- (4) Lottery-bank, with bales of Pak-ah-pu tickets, imported from China; fairly clean.
- (5) Fan-tan table; opium-smoking; fairly clean.
- (6) A terrace of one-story houses, at present untenanted, but which have been in the occupation of Chinamen, all in a shockingly dilapidated condition.
- (7) Chinese store, well stocked, and very clean.
- (8) Caught a number of Chinamen in the act of playing fan-tan; £2 7s. 6d. on the table; lottery-bank upstairs; opium-smoking. Chung Lum, landlord; clean.
- (9) Fan-tan den; lottery-bank; opium-smoking; fairly clean.
- (10) Fan-tan; lottery-bank, and opium-den.
- (11) Fan-tan; lottery-bank, and opium-den.

Huts at the end of Retreat-street.—The Commission visited and inspected the interior of twenty-five huts at the further end of Retreat-street, all occupied by Chinamen. The tenants, some of whom are rag-gatherers, others cabinet-makers, vegetable hawkers, and market gardeners, pay weekly rentals of from 1s. 6d. to 5s. per week. The accommodation provided by these shanties beggars description. All of them are constructed of wood; many consist of one compartment only; some are devoid of any kind of flooring; in others, small bedrooms have been partitioned off from the rest of the ill-covered space, and the bedrooms thus constructed are in most cases quite innocent of ventilation. Fruit and vegetables were, in several instances, found on the floor of the rooms in which the occupants eat, smoke, and sleep, and, here and there, heaps of produce stored in that fashion were not even protected by any sort of covering. The upper portion of the interior of these shanties was festooned with cobwebs. Viewed as a whole, the nest of huts bear more resemblance to an Arab town on the outskirts of an Egyptian city than to anything in Australia to which it would be possible to compare it.

A large Chinese store and butcher's shop, in Botany Road, inspected by the Commission, bore a striking contrast to the habitations referred to above.

Residences, &c., in Goulburn-street visited by the Commission on November 27th, 1891:—

No. 50. Sun Tong Chong.—A Chinese cookshop and lodging-house. The shop is fairly clean, but the yard was covered with iron, and in a space of about 10 feet x 12 feet were the kitchen and w.-c. The whole of the cooking is done in this enclosure, and the odour arising therefrom was far from pleasant. In this house was found a fan-tan table and an agency for lottery. Sleeping accommodation bad; rent, £2 5s. per week.

No. 52. Sun Chong Kee.—Premises similar to above, only the space used for the kitchen was smaller. Here were found about thirteen Chinamen having their meals and an elderly European opium-smoker. In this house also there was a fan-tan table and a lottery agency. Upstairs several badly-ventilated and ill-smelling rooms used for casual opium-smokers. Rent, £2 10s.

Four small tenements down the lane between Nos. 54 and 56, Goulburn-street.—In each place (with the exception of one) there were rows of beds used for casual opium-smokers. The houses were fairly clean, but bore the unmistakable odour of opium. In one place an habitual English opium-smoker was interrogated by the President, and in the course of conversation he stated that he had been a smoker since he was 11 years of age, and had acquired the habit amongst the Chinese in Adelaide. In an upstairs attic the Vice-President interrogated (through the interpreter) an inveterate smoker, who acknowledged that he used as much as 18s. worth of opium per week; his calling was that of a vegetable hawker, and the whole of his earnings went in opium. The next premises were occupied by a Chinese vegetable hawker, whose place was scrupulously clean and neat. He stated that he made a very fair living. He had cohabited for over two years with a white woman who had left him, but still pays him weekly visits. No gambling in either of these houses.

No. 56. Goon Hing.—A celebrated gambling-house. In the front portion was the usual lottery agency, and in a small compartment adjoining the shop were two filthy opium-beds. Fan-tan table in an underground cellar; kitchen clean; sleeping apartments upstairs containing in all sixteen beds.

No. 58. Sun Quong Hing.—A clean general store, well ventilated.

No. 60. A Chinese gambling-house.—Lottery agency in front, fan-tan table in rear. The yard was covered-in with iron; the kitchen and w.-c. enclosed together. Two rooms upstairs reeking with opium, and lying upon the beds were six Chinamen in different states of stupefaction. One room was locked; the President requested that it should be opened; occupants said that it was only a writing-room; upon being opened it was found to be a lottery-bank in readiness for operations.

No. 62. A house similar to the last.—Lottery agency in front, fan-tan table at back. Sanitary arrangements bad. This house had an exit by two or three means at the back, and was strongly barricaded in and out with thick pieces of timber and iron bars. Upstairs several dirty rooms with opium utensils.

No. 411. Hop Lee, in Pitt-street, near the corner of Goulburn-street.—A large two-storey house. Lottery in front, fan-tan table at back. Large yard, fairly clean: kitchen; upstairs lodging department fairly clean. Over the door leading into the gambling-room, in bold English capitals the word "Private."

No. 68.

No. 68, Goulburn-street—A large two-storey place. No gambling; clean yard, and kitchen detached. Fair accommodation for lodgers upstairs.

No. 89. Lee On—Gambling-house.

No. 93, Goulburn-street—Fan-tan and pak-ah-pu. Lottery bank being drawn when Commission visited the house; several Chinamen smoking opium. Cabinet-maker's shop at the rear of the premises.

No. 87. Boarding-house. Fan-tan, pak-ah-pu, and opium den. Four boarders in the house at present. Premises clean.

No. 89. Boarding-house. Fan-tan, pak-ah-pu, and opium den. Boarders in the house; accommodation for many more; clean.

No. 91. Fan-tan and opium den. Sanitation fair.

No. 79. Chinese store, of which the proprietor is a Salvation Army captain. House well kept.

No. 77. Chinese store, well stocked, and in good order.

No. 69. Boarding-house. Opium smoked with apparent freedom; clean.

No. 51. Fan-tan and pak-ah-pu played here.

Chinese Gardens, &c., visited by Commission at Botany on December the 1st.

Sang Lee and party—This firm, comprising seven partners with equal shares, lease 25 acres from Mr. Wallace at a yearly rental of £150. The land is situated beyond the Sir Joseph Banks Hotel. Nine acres are under cultivation; the rest is uncleared. The men commence work at 5 o'clock in the morning and work on till dark. Five men are employed in the actual work of gardening and two are engaged in carting the vegetables to market. They are all gardeners from their youth upwards. They stated that it takes three months to get the virgin bush into arable condition, and in another three months it will yield good crops of vegetables. After paying all expenses each partner appropriates between £60 and £70 as his share of the profits on one year's labour. House accommodation poor and only moderately clean.

Loo Low and parties—Forty acres under cultivation leased from Mr. Geo. Hill for a term of ten years, without rental for the first five years and at an annual rental of £300 for the balance of the term. The lease has three years yet to run. The Chinamen cultivating this land are divided into five parties, each party occupying a dwelling erected by the landowner, the rent of which is included in the terms of the lease. The men begin work at 4 o'clock in the morning and continue until 7 and occasionally 8 and 9 o'clock at night. Those go to the market who can speak English best. Credit given to a few regular customers to the extent of £2 or £3 per week. Each partner saves about £1 a week. The dwellings, though fairly respectable structures, are ill ventilated and neither clean nor tidy in their internal arrangements. In one or two instances the stables were only partially partitioned off from the living and sleeping rooms. Offal, smelling very offensively, and tubs containing human urine in close proximity to the house.

Loo Hope and party (including six partners and one employé)—Lease 7 acres from Mr. Geddes. The lease is for ten years and has five years yet to run. The yearly rental is £70. Each partner saves about £30 a year. In this instance the tubs of urine were only a few feet away from the kitchen window which chanced to be almost the only open window seen by the Commission in any of these dwellings. Generally the utmost ingenuity is exhibited in the exclusion of air from any apartment and particularly from the bedrooms.

Yee Lee—This man keeps a Chinese boarding-house in the Botany Road, patronised chiefly by vegetable gardeners. The Commission were surprised to discover a lottery bank in the course of construction in a room hired for the purpose by Hip War, a well-to-do storekeeper at Alexandria, who, in apparent good faith had previously assured them that he was in no way connected with gambling.

Chinese residences in Cambridge, Harrington, and Queen Streets, and the Suez Canal, visited by the Commission on December 2nd.

No. 26, Cambridge-street—Kept by two European women, Paulina — and Minnie —, for Chinamen. House fairly clean.

No. 19, Harrington-street—Kept by a European woman, Maud —, for a Chinamen. House clean.

No. 9, Suez Canal—Rent, 12s. 6d. a week, considered by the Commission to be excessive. House clean, but in a shocking state of repair. Mrs. Ah Hong resides here with her husband.

—Suez Canal—Kept by Mrs. Ah Dye for her husband, a Chinaman. This and the adjoining property is in a dilapidated condition.

No. 46, Harrington-street—An opium den and lottery agency. The opium is sold by Ah Chee, who deals illegally in small quantities.

Nos. 1, 2, 3, and 4, Queen-street—Inhabited principally by Chinese hawkers. The drains are in the kitchens, and there is no water laid on, and no w.c. (Described in the report of Dr. Ashburton Thompson.)

Nos. 11, 12, 13, and 14, Queen-street—Inhabited by Chinese hawkers, &c. No means for depositing the slops, no water laid on, and no w.c. (Described in the report of Dr. Ashburton Thompson.)

No. 5, Queen-street—A Chinese family comprising a husband, two wives (Chinese women), and four children reside here.

Chinese cabinet-makers visited by the Commission on Thursday, December 3rd.

Sung Lung Shing, Elizabeth-street—The firm comprises three brothers, and employs twenty-two men, who receive from £1 to 25s. a week, and work ten hours a day. The employés live on the premises, and the sleeping apartments are clean and healthy. No opium smoking or gambling.

CHINESE GAMBLING COMMISSION.

APPENDIX.

A.

Houses occupied by Chinese in Lower George-street, and the nature of the occupations and pursuits of the tenants.

No. 126. Tee Sang Loong & Co., wholesale and retail Chinese importers.—This is a very old-established firm, having head-quarters in Hong-Kong, and are in good repute with both English and Chinese; very respectable. One resident partner here, named Wee Koah.

Exeter Place.

Nos. 16, 18, 20, 22, Chinese brothels, informers, and very bad characters—Chinamen.

Robert Wong Lee Kum.—This man is greatly feared among the Chinamen. On several occasions he has had the police put upon the gambling, notably last year. In consequence of his not being successful in getting a bribe, he laid information against several of the proprietors of the lottery bank, and was successful in getting them fined and convicted. He resides in Wexford-street; Sang Shing is his partner. He is also a Salvationist.

Long Pen, residing in Foster-street, with a coloured woman.—This man has a very bad name amongst Chinese of all classes as an informer and extortioner of money.—This man is Hong Shang. This man is a disturber.

Cheang Show, residing at No. 20 Foster-street. This man lives by extortion and informing; is well known to the police; and has a very bad ill-kept house; this man is Hong Shang.

Low Fat.—This man is at present in Melbourne.

Lin Man, Wexford-street; Song Moon, Lower George-street.—These two men generally work together.

Lin Man, some little time ago, was successful in getting a Chinese gardener at Cook's River fined heavily for supposed sly-grog selling. It appears that the gardeners there state he was seen coming quickly from their place of residence, and then some little time after returned with a constable who searched the premises and found the grog; the Chinese state he placed it there. He is Hong Shang.

Soong Moon, last year, brought a charge against Goon Ping & Co., of Goulburn-street, for sly-grog selling, but the case fell through. This man bears a very bad character; is not known to do anything for a living, but lives by fraud; and he is Hong Shang.

Chas. Bennet, — Brown. — Two European tailors. — These men are heavy opium-smokers, informers, and gamblers. They successfully informed upon three Chinese firms in July last for selling opium without license. The Chinese were fined £5 in each case, out of which they received half the fine. They live at Waterloo, but can be found when required.

Societies.—Koong Yee Tong. This is an association with a present fixed fund at interest of about £2,000. The directors or leading men are Way Kee, Kong Hing Chong, merchants, Lower George-street.

This society is formed and has for its objects the exhumation of all Chinese' bones that may be lying in the Colony. These bones are taken up at different intervals and are carefully cleaned and packed, and are shipped home to the different relatives in China. The directorate changes every year. The subscription is £1. Every Chinaman, whether a resident or new arrival, must pay this, and while the funds are sufficient to carry on operations no further call is made.

Loong Yee Tong, or mutual defence association as against own people and Europeans. This society has two objects. First, a fund of several hundreds of pounds is believed to stand in the name of Way Kee, Lower George-street, and is to be used when directions are given by the leading head men as follows:—For protection against the law in cases where arrests are made by the police of gamblers to pay fines (if small), solicitors' expenses, interpreters' expenses, and to engage witnesses if necessary, or should the gambler prefer going to gaol in place of paying the fine, the sum of £1 per week is paid to him when he comes out as wages. Or in other cases where trouble arises with Europeans, and should the Chinaman be sent to gaol for a long sentence, then money is sent to his relatives in China, and a sum put by for him when released. In extreme cases when the law steps in and capital punishment is the penalty, the following sums are apportioned, viz.:—Should a Chinaman kill a European in self-defence, £100 to his relatives, and his bones sent home free. Should a Chinaman be killed by a European, £200 to his relatives, and his bones sent back free.

The other object for which this association is formed is to keep a supply of coffins ever ready upon each China Mail Boat, in case of the death of a Chinaman at sea, his body will not be thrown overboard, but can be encased in the coffin and carried home to his native land, or if coming on to Sydney, will be landed here. How the funds for this are collected are as follows, viz.: In every gambling-house in the city the bankers or croupiers lay aside from 1d. to 2d. in the 1s. commission out of the winnings of each game, so that the amounts at the week are pretty considerable. The present fund stands at from £450 to £500. Should funds be short then every man registered is levied 5s. per head.

Ki Tong, or society to judge justly between one Chinaman and another.—This company is formed of the leading, learned, and business Chinese, who meet together to settle disputes or claims of one Chinaman and another. Their verdict goes by majority, and their decisions are always final.

Lottery-banks.—There are at present about fifteen of them with a capital of £300 each in Goulburn and Wexford-streets alone. The shareholders are in all cases the proprietors of the gambling-houses. The funds are generally kept at one of the merchants places.

The proprietor is a very shrewd, keen business man. Has his Chinese wife and children upon the premises. This building used to be E. and R. Bradford's old foundry. The proprietor has it upon a long lease at a pretty high rental, the proprietor himself smokes opium very heavily, and also permits it to a great extent amongst his men. The sleeping accommodation for the men is not to be commended, and the place is worth a visit.

No.

No. 307. Toy Lee.—A very extensive board and lodging house; also stables. This place is much frequented by the gardeners, and is always pretty full. At one time it belonged to Moy Ping's father who sold out; no gambling at present in the shape of fan-tan, only lottery.

They do a very extensive business in exporting to China old lead, brass, copper, horse-shoes, and glass. This property also belongs to Lord Sherbroke.

No. 338. Quong Yee Chong.—A very large cookshop and eating-house. Chiefly accommodates gardeners and hawkers. Does a very good trade, but the place inside and outside is kept very filthy. One of the partners Ah See has two Chinese wives and children, but keeps them in a private house in Queen-street. The place is worth a visit. He is a very superior scholar in Chinese, and is also a very good English scholar, speaking and writing fluently.

Nos. 340-342.—Two private houses accommodating market gardeners. Ventilation is very bad and terribly overcrowded.

No. 332. Tah Sing.—This house, though outwardly bearing the semblance of a general store and having a few articles of English and Chinese merchandise, is, in fact, the head centre of the Goulburn-street and Wexford-street gambling fraternity; it is from this place all instructions are issued and other business transacted when trouble arises in this quarter of the city. This firm are agents for fifteen lottery banks as well as being bankers for the fan-tan proprietors. Here the money is lodged and kept, and drawn upon for gambling purposes during the day and night. Although no fan-tan is actually carried on here, the place is crowded day and night by Europeans of all degrees, eagerly producing lottery tickets, and waiting for results. This place was convicted about two years ago, and were fined £50 at the lower Courts; they appealed to the Supreme Court, but the conviction was sustained. This proceeding cost them an immense amount of money, but it all came out of the funds gathered for defence purposes. The principal partner is Yuan Tah, who has his two Chinese wives and children living on the rocks in great style. He is also senior partner in the large cabinet-factory of Yee War & Co., of Pymont, and is a man who would stand at nothing, the other partner in Tah Sing's is Ah Sing, a sharp cunning customer. This place is carried on by one man named Chow Kum. He employs about forty hands, does an extensive trade, and sends a great deal of stuff to the auction-rooms. He lives with a very disreputable young Englishwoman, who smokes opium to a great degree. This Chow Kum is one of the greatest rascals in the country, always has been, and now is largely connected with lottery banks and fan-tan houses, in which he has several shares. He has been known to win large sums at lottery and fan-tan. He is a well-known figure at the gaming-tables at night. At one time this man won a large sum at lottery (about twelve months ago) which saved him from the Bankruptcy Court. This man is one of the head men of the secret society, and is known to have taken an active part in several of their movements. He is a man of violent temper, and is greatly feared by the Chinamen, for one reason, and that is, he comes from a village in Cantar reputed to be fighting men, and as there are at present in the Chinamen, nearly a hundred of these men who come from the same village as himself, they (that is, this party, of whom he is head, and always consulted first) are greatly feared. To the Chairman and Members of the Chinese Gambling Enquiry Commission,—

Gentlemen,—

Inspector of Nuisances Office, Sydney, 22 September, 1891.

I have the honor to transmit for your information the accompanying returns, showing:

- 1st. The number and condition of Chinese dwellings, shops, &c., within the City of Sydney at the present date.
- 2nd. The number and names of Chinamen who have been prosecuted by the City Council from the year 1873 to 24 July, 1891, including also one case for the year 1870.

With regard to the former, it will be seen that in point of cleanliness there is now a marked difference in the state of the dwellings from that which obtained a few years back. They now, with but a few exceptions, will bear a very favourable comparison with, in fact are much cleaner than, many of those of the lower class of Europeans. This improvement may be attributed to a systematic monthly inspection and enforcement of sanitary regulations.

There is, however, a great deal of overcrowding in the sleeping apartments of the Chinese, and, where a number of them are employed and sleep on the premises—a fact which, from a moral and sanitary point of view, is most objectionable and prejudicial to health—notwithstanding the general cleanliness of the premises.

The continued gambling propensities of the Chinese is shown by the number of gambling-houses recorded, and marked in the returns by a red line, which are frequented by a large number of Chinamen and Europeans, and are located principally in George-street North, and in portions of Goulburn, Campbell, and Wexford Streets.

The gross immorality, as practised by a number of Chinese in past years, by the keeping of brothels, &c., has, in a great measure, been on the decrease. The only houses of this kind to my knowledge are to be found in Wexford-street, with which I cannot legally and officially interfere.

The baneful habit of smoking opium, however, prevails, and probably will be continued until special legal enactments for its suppression are made and enforced.

The return of prosecutions of Chinese at the Central and Water Police Courts, during the periods stated therein, show the amount of fines and costs inflicted are as follows, viz., Central Police Court, £396 13s. 6d.; Water Police Court, £633 6s.; total, £1,029 19s. 6d. A large majority of the offences being filth on premises; such cases, however, of late, have decreased in number owing to the vigilance exercised by the City Council as before mentioned.

I have, &c.,
R. SEYMOUR,
Inspector of Nuisances

CHINESE Prosecutions at the Water Police Court, Sydney.

R. SEYMOUR,

Inspector of Nuisances.

The Inspector-General of Police, Sydney.

Sir, Police Department, Superintendent's Office, Metropolitan District, 21 September, 1891.

I have the honor to submit herewith returns containing the information asked for by the Chinese Gambling Inquiry Commission, so far as the records of this Department will supply it.

After due inquiry, I found that, to furnish accurate returns from city and suburban stations, it would not be possible to go further back than the year 1880. The returns, therefore, cover a period of eleven years and eight months.

In dealing with the number of persons proceeded against for gambling, it has been deemed advisable to compile two returns—tables 1 and 1A. The one contains particulars of cases in which the offenders were apprehended, and the other of cases in which proceedings were by summons.

The reason for this distinction will be obvious. Where persons are apprehended, full particulars as to age, nationality, degree of education, &c., are recorded; but where a summons issues, the offender not being at any time in custody, no such information is obtainable; hence table 1 supplies fuller details than table 1A.

The statistical records of the Police Department are kept on the system laid down by the Government Statistician, with a view to supply to him annually the information he requires.

I forward herewith blank forms of the annual returns furnished to him, from the headings of which it will be seen that the police records do not contain some of the information necessary to reply fully to the queries of the Commission. For instance—the nature of the penalty in each case, reason for discharge, place in which offence was committed, police office in which case was dealt with, nature of gambling, occupation and general circumstances of persons apprehended—cannot be ascertained.

With regard to table 1A, the annual returns show only the total number of cases in which the police have proceeded by summons; but I have caused the officers to go carefully through the records since 1880, and obtained accurate particulars as to how the cases were disposed of.

The action of the police in dealing with gambling has not been of a spasmodic nature, and it has not been customary to make periodical raids. The procedure has been, that where from careful police observation, or where statements of informers have been abundantly confirmed by police inquiry and surveillance, it has been found that habitual gambling is carried on at any place, an information is sworn, and a warrant to search the premises applied for; and should it transpire that gambling is in fact being carried on, all persons present are arrested, and gaming instruments, &c., seized.

Hence, as a rule, a considerable number of persons are arrested at one time, giving the matter the semblance of a raid; but these occurrences are not such in any sense, being the only mode of procedure open to the police under existing laws.

In reference to the return of Chinese residents, every care has been exercised to have it as accurate and complete as possible; but as the Chinese themselves had to a great extent to be relied upon for the information sought, it may not be so authentic as the other returns. In compiling it, it was considered better to commence at the most northern portion of the Metropolitan District—Manly—and follow contiguously through to Kogarah.

An index has been provided for facility of reference to any particular locality.

It will be noticed that according to census, as per table 2, a larger number of Chinese appears to be resident in Sydney and suburbs than this return shows; but this is largely owing to the fact that the Government Statistician includes Ryde and Hunter's Hill in the suburban area, both of which places are outside the Metropolitan Police District.

I have, &c.,
G. READ,
Superintendent.

R. SEYMOUR,
Inspector of Nuisances.

Letter from Mr. Thomas Nock.

194 and 196 George-street, Sydney, 20 November, 1891.

Sir, In the course of my examination before your Commission on Wednesday last, you remarked that my evidence had not been substantiated in all cases. I would therefore like to state that, though such may be the case, it does not necessarily follow that my statements are not true and cannot be substantiated, for if I myself had had the slightest idea of the punishment my telling the truth has imposed upon our firm, I should have hesitated to have come forward in the way I did. Having seen many of the witnesses who have given evidence, I find that in some cases they have withheld facts which would have borne me out, and they have explained to me that the power held by the police through the "sacredness" attached to a constable's oath in Court, and they being without influence and liable to be arrested at any moment on a false charge (such as the recent sailor's case), has prevented them from divulging all they knew, and I must say my sympathies are with them.

As regards this Chinese gambling business and other forms of gambling, I still say that if the police did their duty (as in some cases they are now doing), the evil would soon be stamped out, and injustices on other people as in the case of the tenants in this neighbourhood by increased rents on their leases, combined with loss of trade by money going into illegitimate channels, would in a great measure be reduced.

Now sir, I would ask you the question, who will recoup us our loss, say, even the excessive rent paid to the landlord which is indeed no small item during the last ten years? During the passing of the Chinese Restriction Act, we, who are sufferers by the loss of the genuine Chinese trade to the extent of £500 per annum, knowing that the stoppage of the immigration was for the good of the public generally, made no complaint, although such stoppage has caused those Chinese who still remain to be independent and consequently seeing their opportunity, take up "fan-tan" as an easy mode of living well without any hard work, for those merchants who at one time did their business through encouraging immigration, now employ these men who are left to carry on this gambling business. I would instance the case of my neighbour (who is a cabinet-maker, carrying on a legitimate business), he having frequent quarrels with his men; upon my inquiring the cause he informed me that as no more Chinamen were coming into the country, his men were lazy and independent, and on being remonstrated with, they have told him they could get an easier living by assisting at one of these "fan-tan" shops, and in fact, some of them have left him to do so, making those still remaining working for him demand increased rates of pay, and knowing his position, do less work.

The "boycott" placed upon our establishment by the Chinese (who form a considerable portion of the population down here) and the police whose interest in this neighbourhood is very great, has nearly ruined our business, and we who had hoped for speedy relief, find that we are simply punished for taking the steps we did.

Trusting that this letter will be attached to my evidence given before you.

I am, &c.,
THOMAS NOCK.

The President, Chinese Gambling Inquiry Commission.

(SECOND SESSION.)

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.

NEW SOUTH WALES.

SUPPRESSION OF GAMBLING.

(PETITION FROM GEORGE BROWN, PRESIDENT OF THE NEW SOUTH WALES AND QUEENSLAND WESLEYAN CONFERENCE.)Received by the Legislative Assembly, 10 September, 1891.

To the Honorable the Speaker and Members of the Legislative Assembly of New South Wales.

Your Petitioners, representing the Ministers of the Wesleyan Methodist Church in Sydney and Suburbs, in meeting assembled, viewing with the utmost concern the alarming growth of the practice of betting and gambling in the Colony of New South Wales,—

HUMBLY SHOWETH:—

That recent investigations disclose the following painful facts, viz. :—

- (a) That the Post and Telegraph Offices of this Colony are extensively used by professional gamblers with a view to advertising consultation sweeps and other forms of gambling.
- (b) That an enormous amount of money is every week paid into the numerous totalisators of this city by mere youths—junior clerks, shop assistants, and the like—who are known to be in the receipt of but small wages.
- (c) That to a large and rapidly increasing extent women and young shop-girls are found to be investors in these betting concerns.
- (d) That so called syndicates of mere boys—in many cases school-boys—are constantly being formed for the purpose of providing money wherewith to carry on this pernicious habit of gambling.

That your Petitioners, deeply impressed with the gravity of this matter as affecting the future moral and social welfare of this Colony, respectfully prays the attention of your Honorable House to the whole subject of betting and gambling as now carried on amongst us, with a view to the immediate passing of an Act of Parliament that shall deal in an effective manner with this evil.

And your Petitioners, as in duty bound, will ever pray, &c., &c.

(SECOND SESSION.)

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.

NEW SOUTH WALES.

SUPPRESSION OF GAMBLING.

(PETITION FROM WILLIAM G. TAYLOR, CHAIRMAN OF A MEETING OF THE SOCIAL REFORM LEAGUE, HELD IN THE CENTENARY HALL, SYDNEY.)

Received by the Legislative Assembly, 23 September, 1891.

To the Honorable the Speaker and Members of the Legislative Assembly of New South Wales, in Parliament assembled.

Your Petitioners, in public meeting assembled,—

HUMBLY SHOWETH:—

1. That, having in view the moral and social well-being of this community, regard with the utmost feelings of alarm the rapid and wide-spread growth of the habit of betting and gambling in this Colony.

2. That large numbers of the youth of both sexes are being influenced by professional gamblers to invest large sums of money in consultation sweeps, and through the offices of the numerous totalisators in operation in the city and suburbs of Sydney.

3. That, as shown by a Return presented to Parliament at a recent Session, our public post-offices are being used to a large extent by professional gamblers for the carrying out of their purposes.

4. That, as has been clearly shown by recent disclosures made in the public press, the greater portion of the totalisators now in operation are known to be gambling-dens of the worst kind.

Your Petitioners therefore humbly pray that at the earliest possible date your Honorable House will pass into law an Anti-gambling Act that shall deal in a trenchant and effective manner with an evil that your Petitioners feel to be undermining the foundations of our national strength.

And your Petitioners, as in duty bound, ever pray.

WM. G. TAYLOR,
Chairman.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.

NEW SOUTH WALES.

SUPPRESSION OF GAMBLING.

(PETITION FROM CERTAIN MEMBERS OF THE COMMITTEE APPOINTED BY THE CONGREGATIONAL UNION, PRAYING THE HOUSE TO PASS AN ACT THAT SHALL DEAL IN AN EFFECTIVE MANNER WITH THIS EVIL.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be printed, 14 October, 1891.

To the Honorable the Speaker and the Honorable Members of the Legislative Assembly of New South Wales, in Parliament assembled.

The humble Petition of the undersigned members of the committee appointed by the Congregational Union, to deal with matters relating to Temperance and Morality,—

RESPECTFULLY SHOWETH:—

1. That recent investigations have made evident that the Post Office of the Colony is most improperly and extensively used in promoting consultation sweeps and other forms of gambling.

2. That immense sums of money are being paid into the numerous totalisators in the city, not only by the adult population, but by young lads, shop-girls, and mere boys, some of them children still at school.

3. That the existence of such a state of things cannot but have a deplorable and incalculable influence for evil on the future of the Colony, both socially and morally.

Your Petitioners would therefore respectfully pray your Honorable House to consider the whole subject of betting and gambling, and at the earliest possible opportunity to pass an Act that will deal in an effective manner with the evil.

And your Petitioners, as in duty bound, will ever pray.

(SECOND SESSION.)

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.
NEW SOUTH WALES.

SUPPRESSION OF GAMBLING.

(PETITION FROM P. J. STEPHEN, MINISTER, AND CERTAIN MEMBERS AND ADHERENTS OF THE BALMAIN WESLEYAN CENTRAL MISSION IN FAVOUR OF.)

Received by the Legislative Assembly, 24 November, 1891.

To the Honorable the Speaker and Members of the Legislative Assembly of New South Wales.

Your Petitioners representing the Members and the Adherents of the Balmain Wesleyan Central Mission, assembled in the Balmain Town Hall, viewing with utmost alarm the rapid growth of the practice of betting and gambling in the Colony,—

HUMBLY SHOWETH:—

That recent investigations disclose the following facts.

1. That the Post and Telegraph Offices of this Colony are extensively used by professional gamblers for the purpose of advertising consultation sweeps and other forms of gambling.
2. That enormous sums of money are paid into the various totalisators of the city by mere youths who in many instances are known to be in receipt of small wages.
3. That many cases are known where syndicates of women, and in some instances school-boys, are formed for the purpose of investing money in the gambling concerns of the city.
4. That race meetings and other sporting events have been multiplied to an abnormal extent and have become great sources of temptation, especially to the youth of the Colony.

Your Petitioners deeply solicitous for the welfare of their country and dreading the moral and economic effects of the gambling practices which obtain among us, humbly pray that the attention of your Honorable House may be given to the whole question of betting and gambling in New South Wales with a view to some effective legislation on the matter.

And as in duty bound your Petitioners will ever pray, &c., &c.

Signed on behalf of the abovementioned parties.

P. J. STEPHEN,
Minister.

Question.

- (7.) GEORGE-STREET FRUIT MARKET :—DR. ROSS asked THE COLONIAL SECRETARY,—
- (1.) To whom does the land belong on which the George-street fruit market is situated; the area of the same; and how was it originally obtained?
 - (2.) If to the Corporation of Sydney, in what way did they become possessed of the property, when, and on what terms?
 - (3.) By whom were the buildings originally erected, and at what cost?
 - (4.) The number of stall-holders, the amount of fees, rents, and rates received annually by the Corporation for the same?
 - (5.) How much is the Corporation at present receiving in the shape of fees, rents, and Municipal rates for the same?
 - (6.) Is the Government aware that many of the stall-holders have suffered serious losses in their business through the pulling down of these buildings, and is it the intention of the Government to compensate them for the same?
 - (7.) Is it true that 15 feet of this reserve has lately been granted to the Corporation at Druiitt-street; if so, at whose request, by whom and by what authority?
 - (8.) Will the Government see that steps are taken to have a plebiscite of the residents or rate-payers of the city taken in regard to the future use of this central and valuable site?

Answer.

- (1.) To the Municipal Council of Sydney; area, 1 acre and $9\frac{1}{2}$ perches, more or less; by deed of grant.
- (2.) By deed of grant, dated 4th November, 1846. (Copy attached.)
- (3.) By the City Council; no record of cost.
- (4.) In 1890, before portion was pulled down, 69 stall-holders; fees, rents, &c., for that year, £8,540 14s.; no Municipal rates levied on premises.
- (5.) For the year ending 31st December, 1891, fees, rents, &c., £4,551 10s. 9d.; no Municipal rates.
- (6.) The Municipal Council is not aware of any case where stall-holders have suffered serious losses through the pulling down of portion of the building.
- (7.) 15 feet of the old Central Police Court site has been granted to the Corporation for the purpose of widening the roadway of Druiitt-street, at their request, by the present Government.
- (8.) This is a matter, I think, should be determined by the Government, and not by a plebiscite.

No. 1.

Dr. Samuelson to The Secretary for Lands.

Dear Sir,

Bourke, 31 August, 1891.

In accordance with the “Rabbit Act of 1890,” I beg to request you to allow me a license to keep rabbits in cages and similar enclosures.

I am anxious to make certain observations upon the life history of the animal, and whilst thus engaged to test upon them the therapeutic action of certain drugs.

I am, &c.,
GERALD SAMUELSON, M.B., C.M., &c.

In view of the object for which the license is required, it is thought that the application should in the first instance be referred to the Board of Health for report as to whether any objections exist to the issue of the license, and, if not, whether in view of the Animals Infectious Diseases Act any special conditions should be inserted therein.—H.T., 2/9/91; F.H.W. (per U.S.), 2/9/91.

Approved.—J.N.B., 3/9/91. The Secretary to the Board of Health, B.C., 4/9/91.

Read. Meeting of the Board of Health held this day, 9/9/91. Board of Health sees no objection to the issue of the license, and does not consider any special condition necessary.—EDMUND SAGER, Secretary. The Under Secretary for Lands.—E.S., B.C., 10/9/91.

No. 2.

Dr. Samuelson to Dr. MacLaurin.

Dear Sir,

Bourke, 31 August, 1891.

I have applied to the Minister for Lands for permission to keep live rabbits with the object of studying their life history, re their destruction, and also whilst so employed of making observations as to the use of certain hypodermic injections of therapeutic substances.

Would you kindly put me into the way of acquiring a license thus to experiment? I shall require merely to give infections with usual precautions, and to kill for purposes of post-mortem research.

I am, &c.,

GERALD S. SAMUELSON, M.B., C.M.

Acknowledged.—E.S., 10/9/91.

No. 3.

Office Memorandum.

THE Board of Health having no objection, it is recommended that a license under the 41st section of the Act be issued to Dr. G. S. Samuelson, authorising him to keep live rabbits on his premises at Bourke, subject to the following conditions:—

1. That the number of live rabbits kept in pursuance of the license shall at no time exceed thirty.
2. That the cage or similar enclosure in which rabbits are confined shall at all times be open to the inspection of Mr. J. Mallon, Rabbit Inspector at Bourke, or any other officer of the Department of Lands appointed for the purpose.
3. That the carcasses of all rabbits which die shall be destroyed by fire.
4. The license shall not be transferred, and may at any time be withdrawn.
5. The license shall not permit of live rabbits being kept at any place other than that mentioned above.

Before the issue of the license Dr. Samuelson should be called upon to remit the license fee prescribed by the regulations, and Inspector Mallon should be instructed to report as to the suitability of the premises in which it is proposed to confine the rabbits.

H.T., 14/9/91.

F.H.W., 14/9/91.

Submitted for approval.—W.H., 15/9/91. Approved.—J.N.B., 16/9/91. Dr. Samuelson asked to remit fee, and Inspector Mallon instructed to inspect.—W.R.S., 19/9/91. It is recommended that the inspector be called upon to furnish the report required without any further delay.—H.T., 7/10/91. F.H.W., 7/10/91. Approved.—W.H., 8/10/91. Inspector Mallon asked.—W.R.S., 10/10/91.

No. 4.

The Under Secretary for Lands to Dr. Samuelson.

Sir,

Department of Lands, Sydney, 19 September, 1891.

With reference to your application of the 31st ultimo for a license to keep live rabbits for the purpose of making certain observations upon the life history of those animals, and of testing the therapeutic action of certain drugs upon them, I have the honor to inform you that the Secretary for Lands has approved of the issue of a license, provided that Mr. Rabbit-Inspector Mallon, who has been instructed to make an inspection and report of the premises where the rabbits are to be kept in confinement is satisfied as to their suitability for the purpose intended.

I may add that a fee of 10s. is payable upon the issue of all licenses under the 41st section of the "Rabbit Act of 1890," and that upon the receipt of that amount and of a favourable report from Mr. Inspector Mallon, the necessary permit will be forwarded to your address.

I have, &c.,

W. HOUSTON,

Under Secretary

(Per F.H.W.)

No. 5.

I have the honor to acknowledge receipt of letters marked R. No. 91-863, of 19th ultimo and 10th instant, re permission for Dr. Samuelson, of this town, to keep live rabbits in enclosure, and in reply thereto beg to state Dr. Samuelson has erected and completed within the yard in Mitchell-street, attached to his residence, an enclosure about 30 feet long by 12 feet wide, which, in my opinion, is now thoroughly secure for the purpose intended, the same being throughout secured by wire-netting (under ground and above) of the proper size. Dr. Samuelson has also paid me the sum of 10s. enclosed herein as a license fee, of which I know nothing.

Department of Lands, Sydney, 27 October, 1891.

In compliance with the request expressed in your communication of the 31st August last, I have the honor to enclose herewith a license under the 41st section of "Rabbit Act of 1890," authorising you to keep live rabbits on your premises situated in Mitchell-street, Bourke.

(Form 3.)

Rabbit Act of 1890—Regulation No. 11.—License to keep rabbits.

SUBJECT to the provisions of the "Rabbit Act of 1890," and to the conditions hereinafter specified, Gerald S. Samuelson, M.B., C.M., of Mitchell-street, Bourke, is hereby licensed to keep live rabbits for the period beginning the 27th day of October, 1891, and ending the 27th day of October, 1892.

CONDITIONS.

1. That the number of live rabbits kept in pursuance of this license shall at no time exceed thirty.
2. That the cage, or similar enclosure, in which all rabbits are confined shall at all times be open to the inspection of Mr. J. Mallon, Rabbit Inspector, at Bourke, or of any other officer of the Department of Lands appointed for the purpose.
3. That the carcasses of all rabbits which die shall be destroyed by fire.
4. This license is not transferable, and may at any time be withdrawn.
5. This license does not permit of live rabbits being kept at any place other than that mentioned above (Mitchell-street, Bourke.)

Given under my hand this 23rd day of October, 1891.

JAMES N. BRUNKER,
Minister for Lands.

No. 8.

Extract from the Western Herald, 28th October, 1891.

"In connection with this matter it will be interesting to the public to learn something of the progress of the experiments initiated by Dr. Samuelson, of this town. Ten days ago he inoculated a guinea-pig with certain virus. This pig, with others, was kept in an enclosure in which several rabbits were also kept. In three days the inoculated guinea-pig died, and this was followed on two consecutive days by the deaths of two more guinea-pigs; followed again, on two consecutive days, by the death of two rabbits. The doctor has every reason to believe that the virus he is using will prove effective, but he still has a good deal of work in front of him. He has to find out whether the virus will work as effectively outside an enclosure as within it, and also as to whether it will be dangerous to other animals, such as dogs and all kinds of stock. This takes time and money, and it is our opinion that the pastoralists of the district should, in a practical way, assist the doctor to bring his experiments to a successful issue."

Dr. Samuelson simply holds a permit under the 41st section of the Rabbit Act, authorising him to keep live rabbits, and not being the holder of a license under the 7th section of the Animals Infectious Diseases Act, it appears to me that by carrying out the experiments herein referred to he is guilty of a misdemeanour, and is liable to imprisonment or a fine. Under the circumstances it is recommended that Dr. Samuelson's attention be drawn to the 11th section of the Animals Infectious Diseases Act, and that he be informed that unless the necessary licenses are at once applied for, and obtained, steps will have to be taken to give effect to the penal clauses of the Act in question.—H.T., 30/10/91, F.H.W., 2/11/91.

Submitted for approval.—W.H., 3/11/91. Approved.—H.C., 16/11/91. Attention invited and informed.—W.R.S., 19/11/91.

The Under Secretary for Lands to Dr. Samuelson.

Sir,

Department of Lands, Sydney, 19 November, 1891.

The attention of the department having been directed to an article in the Western Herald, of the 28th ultimo, describing the progress of some experiments initiated by you for the inoculation of animals with the virus of a certain disease, I have the honor, by direction of the Secretary for Lands, to invite your attention to the 11th section of the Animals Infectious Diseases Act, and to inform you that as you simply hold a permit to keep live rabbits, and are not the holder of any license under the above-named Act, steps will be taken to give effect to the penal clauses thereof, unless the necessary licenses are at once applied for and obtained.

No. 10.

Dr. Samuelson to The Under Secretary for Lands.

Dear Sir,

Bourke, 20 November, 1891.

I regret that my ignorance of the matter to which you refer in yours of the 19th instant, has led me into error.

I have conducted no experiment for about a fortnight. My preliminary researches met with sufficient success to warrant the continuation of my investigations, which latter I am anxious to do.

I am unable to procure here a copy of the Animals Infectious Diseases Act, so can in the meanwhile apply for a license, but in this letter. Would you kindly send me a copy of the above Act, for whether its perusal is or is not necessary to the procuring of a permit, I would like by such means to prevent any further error on my part.

I am, &c.,

GERALD S. SAMUELSON.

A copy of the Act may perhaps be forwarded to Dr. Samuelson, and in drawing his attention to sections 6 and 7, he might be asked to state specifically the nature of the license he requires, and to supply such information as may be necessary for the preparation thereof.—H.T., 23/11/91.

Yes.—F.H.W. (per U.S.), 24/11/91. Dr. Samuelson, with copy of Act.—W.R.S., 26/11/91.

Sir,

Department of Lands, Sydney, 26 November, 1891.

I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your communication of the 20th instant, and in pursuance of your request herewith forward a copy of the Animals Infectious Diseases Act for your guidance and information.

I take this opportunity of directing your attention to the 6th and 7th sections of the Act, and of requesting you to be so good as to state specifically the nature of the license that you require, and to supply such other information as may be necessary for its preparation.

No. 12.

Dr. Samuelson to The Under Secretary for Lands.

Dear Sir,

Bourke, 28 November, 1891.

Re R. 91-1,212, I beg to acknowledge your favour and enclosure of the 26th instant.

I hold a license (R. 91-1,076), to keep rabbits in an enclosure which has been approved of by the District Inspector, Mr. Mallon.

Beyond researches re the destruction of rabbits, I wish to experiment by cultivation and inoculation with certain disease germs and micro-organisms with a view to acquiring further knowledge as to their causation, means of prevention and spread, and micro-organisms. I believe with a combination of some of them I have killed through one inoculation several animals, the disease produced being contagious only in its strictest sense, but not infectious or capable of passing "through infection" through air, food, or water.

I beg, therefore, that a license may be extended to me that I may cultivate in my laboratory in glass tubes the germs of tubercle, gonorrhœa, septicæmia, and syphilis, also that I may inoculate rabbits, guinea-pigs, rats, dogs, and sheep with any or all of the above named diseases, provided that no animal, inoculated or otherwise, shall be removed from the enclosure save temporarily into my laboratory, and then to be immediately returned to the enclosure, and that all carcasses of animals that have been in the enclosure shall be treated with according to section 5 of the Act.

As a matter of convenience I should be obliged if you would substitute in my rabbit license "that the carcasses, &c. * * * by burning or boiling" vice "that the carcasses, &c. * * * by fire," in condition 3.

I am, &c.,

GERALD S. SAMUELSON, M.B.,C.M.

It is recommended that this application be referred to the Board of Health for consideration and report.—H.T., 1/12/91, F.H.W., 2/12/91, W.H. Approved.—H.C., 3/12/91. The Secretary to the Board of Health.—H.T. (pro U.S.), B.C., 3/12/91.

The Secretary, Board of Health to The Under Secretary for Lands.

Sir, Board of Health Office, 127, Macquarie-street, Sydney, 10 December, 1891.

Referring to your B.C. of the 3rd instant, forwarding application from Dr. Samuelson, of Bourke, for license under the Animals Infectious Diseases Act, to keep and propagate the germs of tubercle, gonorrhœa, septicœmia, and syphilis, and inoculate rabbits, guinea-pigs, rats, dogs, and sheep, with any or all of the same, I have to inform you that after consideration the matter was postponed in order that the Board might be furnished with further information as to the extent of Dr. Samuelson's premises, and the means of isolating animals when infected, and this information is now being obtained through the Police Magistrate of the district.

I have, &c.,
EDMUND SAGER,
Secretary.

No. 14.

The Secretary, Board of Health to The Under Secretary for Lands.

Board of Health Office, 127, Macquarie-street, Sydney, 24 December, 1891.

THE Board of Health is of opinion that licenses under sections 6 and 7 should not be granted to Dr. Samuelson of Bourke, as his premises are not sufficiently isolated, and he does not possess the means of burning the bodies of infected animals, or by other methods ensuring that disease may not spread.

The Board desires to call attention to the fact that in Dr. Samuelson's letter of 31st August, he requested to be allowed to keep rabbits only to study their life history and the therapeutic action of certain drugs, and that his later application is not in consonance with this request.

EDMUND SAGER,
Secretary.

For the reasons herein stated it is recommended that the license under the Animals Infectious Diseases Act be not granted, and with the object of preventing any possible breach of the Act in question it is further recommended that the licenses under the "Rabbit Act of 1890" be withdrawn, and that Inspector Mallon be instructed to see that the live rabbits at present in the possession of Dr. Samuelson are at once destroyed.—H.T., 31/12/91, F.H.W., 4/1/92.

For approval of the course of action recommended.—W.H., 12/1/92. Approved.—H.C., 12/1/92. Dr. Samuelson informed, and Inspector Mallon instructed.—W.R.S., 14/1/92.

[Enclosure.]

Sir,

Court-house, Bourke, 16 December, 1891.

In attention to your letter of the 10th instant, I have made an inspection of the premises in which Dr. Samuelson, of this town, proposes to use the germs of tubercle, &c., in experimenting on the destruction of rabbits.

The premises are situated within the town of Bourke on the north side of Mitchell-street, the most popular street in Bourke, having a frontage to that street of 30 feet and a depth of about 88 feet; the first 44 feet is occupied as a residence and garden by the doctor and his wife, the back part being partly devoted to the rabbit experiments—on the east side of the allotment is a butcher's shop, and on the west side is a chemist's shop, and other shops and residence thickly packed on each side.

There is no separate laboratory; it is proposed to use the laboratory in connection with the surgery and consulting-room—a small room about 8 ft. x 12 ft.

The means of isolating animals after infection are—an enclosure 30 ft. x 10 ft. by 6 ft. high, fenced with wire-netting $\frac{3}{4}$ in. mesh, open at the top and floored with the same wire.

There is no furnace for the disposal of dead bodies or other infected substances; but it is proposed to boil and bury carefully.

I think it would be objectionable to permit Dr. Samuelson to carry on his experiments in any part of the town of Bourke, more particularly in the place he at present contemplates.

Dr. Samuelson has about twenty rabbits in the enclosure above mentioned.

I have, &c.,
J. Mc. A. KING, P.M.

Sir,

Bourke, 9 January, 1892.

Re R. 91-1,212, in pursuance of the subject matter of the above quoted letter, I have the honor to inform you that I have written to the Board of Health, under date 31st ult., asking what I must do to gain its recommendation to the Lands Department that a license should be granted me under the Animals Infectious Diseases Act, I have an answer (92-24), bearing date 7th inst., informing me that the Board of Health cannot inform me upon this matter.

May I then request of you to advise me what arrangements you would deem ample and satisfactory, that I may adopt them and so secure a license.

In view of the decision arrived at by the Minister to withdraw the license under the 41st section of the Rabbit Act that had been granted to Dr. Samuelson authorising him to keep live rabbits on his premises at Bourke, I am directed by the Secretary for Lands to request that you will be so good as to see that the live rabbits at present in Dr. Samuelson's possession are at once destroyed.

(13.) APPLICATION OF DR. G. S. SAMUELSON FOR LICENSE TO EXPERIMENT ON RABBITS—MR. WADDELL asked THE SECRETARY FOR LANDS,—Will he have any objection to lay upon the Table of this House a copy of all papers in connection with the application of Dr. G. S. Samuelson, of Bourke, for a license to make experiments on rabbits with infectious diseases?

Answer.

Mr. Lyne answered,—There will be no objection if the papers are moved for in the ordinary manner.

No. 18.
Office Memo.

Dr. Samuelson's application for license under the Animals Infectious Diseases Act. THE Board of Health declined to recommend the issue of licenses to Dr. Samuelson on the grounds that his premises were not sufficiently isolated, and that he did not possess the means of burning the bodies of infected animals, or by other methods ensuring that disease would not spread, but it may be that even these requirements were satisfied, other objections might be raised against a compliance with the applications.

It seems to me a matter requiring the most careful consideration whether, in view of the fact that any supervision which the Government could exercise over the operations would be almost nominal, it would be expedient, under any conditions, to grant licenses to inoculate domestic animals with the germs of such diseases as tuberculosis and syphilis in a township where the sanitary conditions are such as exist at Bourke. In any case it is quite certain that the work would have to be carried out in some locality more remote from population, and that a furnace would have to be erected to provide for the cremation of the carcasses of infected animals.

However, the department must be dependent to a very great extent upon the advice tendered by the Board of Health, and for that reason it is submitted the papers be referred to that body, with a request that a report may be supplied upon the question raised by Dr. Samuelson.

In returning you herewith your papers (92-67 R) respecting the issue of licenses under the Animals Infectious Diseases Act, and relating more especially to the case of Dr. G. S. Samuelson, of Bourke, I have the honor, by direction, to inform you that the Board does not think it advisable to lay down any general regulations on this subject, but that every application should be dealt with separately and on its individual merits, and after most careful consideration of the special circumstances, localities, and surroundings.

I also beg to forward you further papers received from Dr. Samuelson since my communication of the 24th ultimo.

Sir, Bourke, 9 January, 1892.

Re 92-24, I have the honor to acknowledge the above communication from your Board.

Can you give me any information upon the matter, directly or through your local inspector?

Would you also inform me as to the reasons for your non-satisfaction with my present arrangements, and also whether the Board's recommendation has been extended to a gentleman who is conducting similar experiments within the Sydney municipal area?

I have, &c.,

Secretary, Board of Health.

Dear Sir, Bourke, New South Wales, 31 December, 1891.

Would you kindly indicate to me what arrangements you would require me to make to procure your recommendation to the Lands Department that a license should be issued me under the Animals Infectious Diseases Act to keep rabbits and to inoculate them with certain cultures.

I may point out that neither the Board, the Lands Department, the Act quoted above, nor the Inspector, Mr. C. Mac. King, have tendered me any information upon this matter.

So far I have learnt only what will not satisfy the Board of Health.

No. 1.

Gazette Notice.[From Government Gazette of 6th September, 1837.]

Colonial Secretary's Office, Sydney, 6 September, 1837

His Excellency the Governor is pleased to direct that each candidate for employment as an assistant surveyor in this Colony shall, previously to appointment, appear before a Board, consisting of the Commanding Royal Engineer, the King's Astronomer in New South Wales, the Surveyor or Deputy Surveyor-General, to be examined as to his knowledge of the theory and practice of land-surveying. If found only qualified for employment, the Board will grant him a certificate accordingly, upon which he will obtain a provisional appointment from the Governor, to be confirmed in six months, if, after that probation, he be recommended by the head of his Department.

By His Excellency's command,
E. DEAS-THOMSON.

No. 2.
Gazette Notice.

[From Government Gazette of 13th February, 1844.]

Colonial Secretary's Office, Sydney, 12 February, 1844.

HIS Excellency the Governor having had under consideration the necessity of reducing the expenses of the Department of the Surveyor-General, and at the same time of affording to public bodies, as well as private individuals, the means of obtaining at their own expense surveys of land and reports on disputed boundaries, which, if previously authorised by the Government, will be received as official; as, also, projects for the opening of new roads, or for the execution of any other kind of public work, has been pleased to appoint the undermentioned officers of the Surveyor-General's Department to be licensed surveyors in the following districts:—

1. Mr. Surveyor G. B. White—North, Hunter River.
2. Mr. Assistant-Surveyor J. J. Galloway—Hume, county of Cumberland.
3. Mr. Assistant-Surveyor J. Larmer—South, county of Murray, &c.
4. Mr. Assistant-Surveyor W. R. Davidson—West, county of Bathurst, &c.
5. Mr. Assistant-Surveyor J. V. Gorman—Port Macquarie.
6. Mr. Assistant-Surveyor J. Burke—Illawarra.
7. Mr. Surveyor H. C. Barnsley—Brisbane Water.
8. Mr. Assistant-Surveyor W. Shone—Hassan's Walls.
9. Mr. Assistant-Surveyor F. M'Cabe—Twofold Bay and Monera Plains.
10. Mr. Assistant-Surveyor W. W. Darke—Sydney.

These officers are authorised to act as surveyors or agents for private individuals, and every facility will be afforded them in so doing by the various Departments of Government. Applications for the purchase or occupation of land may also be made through them, though the Government will reserve to itself, as at present, the discretion of acting or not on such applications.

His Excellency has also been pleased to appoint the above officers to be Commissioners of Crown Lands, for the purpose of acting within their respective districts.

The limits of their districts will hereafter be more distinctly announced.

By His Excellency's command,
E. DEAS-THOMSON.

No. 3.

Copy of Circular issued to Licensed Surveyors.

Sir,

Surveyor-General's Office, Sydney, 17 August, 1868.

Annexed is a copy of an extract of a minute of the honorable the Minister for Lands. I consider this decision of sufficient importance to warrant my making it the subject of a circular, as it implies that any transgression for which a licensed surveyor would formerly have ceased to be employed will now carry with it the cancellation of his license.

I have, &c.,

P. F. ADAMS,
Surveyor-General.

Extract from Minute.

"I WOULD draw the attention of the Surveyor-General to the necessity for defining the conditions on which surveyors are licensed, by explaining distinctly to each gentleman on receiving his license that the Government reserves the power to cancel such license, provided his surveys are not executed in a proper manner; or if he be in any way guilty of conduct unbecoming a Government officer;—for although licensed surveyors are not salaried officers, they work under Government sanction, and I consider the Government are, to a considerable extent, responsible to the public for their proper conduct.

J.B.W.,
17 July."

No. 4.

Office Memorandum.

[Immediate.]

At the request of the honorable the Minister for Lands, I have the honor to convey to him the following information relative to the appointment of licensed surveyors.

Previous to the 23rd November, 1863, the appointment was notified in the Gazette, as per form "A," annexed, and the surveyor was generally apprised by letter, not always of the same form, a copy of that which was commonly adopted is annexed, and marked "B." It is supposed that several surveyors received merely a verbal notification of appointment. No rule in this respect appears to have been followed.

A copy of the memorandum, dated the 20th March, 1848, referred to in the Gazette notice is also hereto annexed, and marked "C."

Subsequently to the 23rd November, 1863, a certificate of qualification has been, and is now, given to every licensed surveyor appointed, and also a separate certificate for those licensed as surveyors under the Real Property Act; the latter is conditional upon the person so appointed "continuing to be a licensed surveyor."

Copies of these certificates, on parchment, are annexed; also a copy of the usual notification of appointment, marked "D," which has been used of late years (since 23rd November, 1863), and which contains no reference to the Colonial Secretary's memorandum, dated 20th March, 1848, above referred to. Information of appointment as licensed surveyor is now conveyed by letter in form E wherein reference is made to a minute which in some measure defines the conditions on which a license is held, of which a printed copy is annexed.

LICENSED SURVEYORS.

Colonial Secretary's Office, Sydney, 3 May, 1855.

His Excellency the Governor-General directs it to be notified, with reference to the notice from this office of the 20th March, 1848, respecting licensed surveyors that Mr. William J. Tress has been appointed to act as a licensed surveyor.

By His Excellency's Command,
C. D. RIDDELL.

[Enclosure B.]

Sir,

Surveyor-General's Office, Sydney, 31 May, 1855.

I have to call your attention to the notice published in the Government Gazette, of the 24th ultimo, wherein your appointment to act as a licensed surveyor, is notified by desire of His Excellency the Governor-General, and to forward to you the copy of a memorandum respecting the mode of marking the boundaries of lands measured; also a copy of a circular showing the customary phraseology and mode of completing descriptions; a copy of the scale of fees, and some forms of licensed surveyors' accounts.

You will receive from me instructions for whatever measurements may be required, and I have to request as the delay of returning any imperfect documents would be considerable that you will be very particular in furnishing all surveys, descriptions, and accounts, in as perfect a form as possible.

Should you have occasion to visit Sydney, every information you may require will be afforded you in the office and by a reference to the maps and documents in the drawing-rooms, you may inform yourself of the manner of sending in your work.

You will observe that the plans are to be drawn on foolscap, if they are not too large, and that each description is to be on a separate half-sheet, and the three documents, viz., the letter of transmission, the plan and the description are all to bear the same date, and refer to each other. You will, moreover, observe that in your correspondence every distinct matter must be made the subject of a separate letter. A copy of a circular memorandum on this subject is herewith enclosed for your guidance.

I am, &c.,

T. S. MITCHELL.

LICENSED SURVEYORS.

Colonial Secretary's Office, Sydney, 20 March, 1848.

His Excellency the Governor has been pleased to appoint the following gentlemen to be licensed surveyors in the respective counties mentioned in lieu of all former appointments to that office, namely:—

1. Mr. John Frederick Mann, St. Vincent, Argyle, and Murray.
2. Mr. John Nicholson, Bathurst, Roxburgh, Westmoreland, and Georgiana.
3. Mr. Samuel C. Dalgetty, Northumberland, Cook, and Hunter.
4. Mr. Major E. L. Burrowes, Gloucester, Durham, and Brisbane.
5. Mr. John A. Edwards, Wellington, Phillips, and Bligh.

These officers, like the former, are appointed for the purpose of being employed by the Government on such work as may be necessary as well as to afford to public bodies and private individuals, the means of obtaining at their own expense surveys of land and reports on disputed boundaries, &c., which if previously authorised by the Government, will be received as official.

They are likewise authorised to act as surveyors or agents for private individuals, and facility will be afforded to them in so doing by the various Departments of the Government.

Applications for the purchase or occupation of land may also be made through him, though the Government will reserve to itself as at present the discretion of acting or not on such applications.

It is also to be understood that although generally confined to the counties named, yet that every licensed surveyor is competent to act in any part of the territory by His Excellency's command.

Attorney-General's Opinion.

Attorney-General, respecting employment of Licensed Surveyors.

In all cases where persons who have obtained certificates as licensed surveyors have shown that their surveys are no longer to be relied on, and cannot be accepted by the Surveyor-General as accurate, steps ought to be taken to inform the public of these facts.

I think that the least invidious mode of doing this would be by the publication at such periods as might be thought necessary from time to time of the names of all licensed surveyors whose surveys will from the date of publication be received and considered by the Government.

The Registrar-General to The Principal Under Secretary.

Registrar-General's Department, Land Titles Office,

Sir,

Sydney, 30 August, 1883.

I have received the accompanying memo. from the Principal Draftsman in the Land Titles Office, drawing my attention to serious difficulties arising from defective surveys. I would respectfully urge that immediate steps be taken by the Survey Department to remedy the evils complained of, and beg to suggest that this memo. be forwarded for the consideration of the Minister for Lands.

I have, &c.,

Registrar-General.

The attention of the Survey Department might be drawn to this matter.—C.W., 6/10/83. Approved.—A.S., 8/10/83. The Under Secretary for Lands.—C.W., B.C., 11-12/10/83. The Surveyor-General.—C.O., 19/10/83.

[Enclosure.]

Memo. for Registrar-General from Principal Draftsman, Land Titles Branch.

30 August, 1883.

I AM constantly troubled with complaints from licensed surveyors under the Real Property Act with regard to subdivisions of land under the said Act. I am at liberty to mention the names of the following gentlemen so licensed, viz. :—Messrs. Mann, Dawson, Binsted, Herborn, Bullock, Loxton, Acheson, Schleicher, and Stephen, who complain, and justly, I think, that architects, draftsmen, and unlicensed surveyors prepare subdivisions of land for the Department, and that plans of those subdivisions are certified to—comply with the provisions of said Act—by surveyors holding a license, but who have been dismissed from, or whose work is not recognised by, the Survey Department.

I have already drawn attention to this matter in a memo. to the Registrar-General, dated 10th November, 1881, which was as follows :—“Some years ago the standard of examination for licensed surveyors was very much lower than it now is; in fact, was of such an easy character that it enabled many surveyors to pass then who now would have no chance of doing so. Having obtained a license, they had but to apply to the Surveyor-General for one under the Real Property Act, which, as a matter of course, and without question, was granted at once. Subsequently, many of these surveyors were employed by the Survey Department, and as their want of the necessary qualifications became apparent the Surveyor-General ceased to employ them, and surveys made by them after that were not recognised by officers of his Department. They, however, although virtually dismissed for incompetency or other failings, still held their licenses. The effect now is that upon the strength of the one held under the Real Property Act, the public employ and pay them to make most important subdivisions for this office of land under the Act. The Registrar-General and Surveyor-General have no control over them, and apparently on this account we have surveys made of the most loose and incorrect description, and by surveyors who have proved themselves to be quite unfitted to hold a license.

No one will question the necessity of having work of the best description obtainable done for the Land Titles Office. The subdivisions deposited are plans of record which have to last for all time, and in the future, as the thousands of allotments delineated on them become built upon, they will be, for purposes of reference, invaluable. I would beg to suggest, for the consideration of the Registrar-General, whether it would not be desirable to appeal to the honorable the Colonial Secretary that powers— which I am led to believe do not now exist—may be conferred on the Surveyor-General, to enable him either to suspend or wholly cancel licenses under the Real Property Act upon satisfactory representations being made to him by the Registrar-General of the systematic bad work of a licensed surveyor. If the profession knew that he had this power I am satisfied it would have a very salutary effect, and would also enable the Registrar-General to insist upon having surveys made for this Department up to the required standard.

Perhaps the honorable the Colonial Secretary may be pleased to have these papers forwarded through the honorable the Minister for Lands to the Surveyor-General for his report. I am satisfied that that officer will cordially agree with me that surveyors holding licenses under the Real Property Act who from various causes are not employed by him should be under some restraint when making surveys for the Land Titles Office. He has the granting of these licenses, and he, I think, should have the powers conferred upon him embodied in the above.”

I think I have now done all that it is possible for me to do for the present, and would advise that this correspondence be forwarded to the honorable the Minister for Lands for his consideration.

ROBT. M. PEARSON,

Principal Draftsman.

No. 7.
The Surveyor-General to The Under Secretary for Lands.

Sir,

Surveyor-General's Office, Sydney, 29 April, 1884.

I concur with Mr. Pearson that under existing arrangements, and without direct communication, the delay consequent on passing ordinary surveys under Real Property Act through this office for examination and verification would not be satisfactory, even if surveyors possessing the necessary qualifications were available at the rates now ruling, and it appears to me that there is no intermediate course between the present practice and the New Zealand system, under which the professional branch of the Lands Transfer and Survey Departments are one.

I only offered, as a suggestion for overcoming a serious difficulty, the rejection of plans irregularly signed. It is not for me to argue the point.

I concur with Mr. Pearson's recommendation of extending the period of renewal of licenses from one to two years, and recommend for the consideration of the Secretary for Lands that all licenses issued in future be limited to that period, and be made to expire on the 31st December of the year following that in which such license had been granted.

As to any difficulty which may occur in consequence of the expiry of a license which is not to be renewed, I think the difficulty would be met by adding to the license a foot-note to the effect that “Government being in no way liable for inconvenience which may follow the expiry and non-renewal of a license, the holder of this license, if desirous of renewing the same is advised to make application to the Surveyor-General at least three months before its expiry.”

A general cancellation of all existing licenses with a view to reissue or refusal would meet the difficulty, but I do not advise it, unless the Registrar-General is made equally responsible with myself in dealing with questions arising; and would further, before action, our joint reports be approved by the Minister under whom we may be each employed for the following reason :—If questions of renewal or refusal of licenses depend solely upon my report, I anticipate objections from those who have been removed from employment in this Department on the ground of their case being pre-judged to their disadvantage.

I have, &c.,

P. F. ADAMS.

In

In the case of the licensed surveyors whose work is not recognised by this Department, the course suggested in 1871 by Sir James Martin, when Attorney-General, would meet all requirements. Mr. Wisdom, the late Attorney-General, also advised in the matter. There can be no doubt that the Surveyor-General has power to cancel the licenses issued by him under the Real Property Act, and the only question to be determined in reference to that power is as to the form in which it should be exercised. As to the form of declaration to be made by the surveyor certifying to the plans, that should, I think, be met by alteration of the form now used. Submitted.—C.O., 13/6/84.

I thoroughly agree with the desirability of securing accuracy in the surveys for the Real Property Office, as well as for this Department, and I would be glad to give a decision that would bring about so desirable a result, but I can only gather from these papers general statements, which would not justify me in directing any course which would have the effect of withdrawing any license or authority from surveyors without their having an opportunity of being heard. Therefore, before I can deal with the matter, specific charges should be made in each case respectively. It appears to me that the opinion given by Sir James Martin should be followed with regard to this Department when any action of the character is necessary, and with reference to licenses issued under the Real Property Act the Surveyor-General has authority for sufficient cause shown to recommend their cancellation.—J.S.F., 23/6/84.

Surveyor-General.—G.H.S., 23/6/84. The Secretary and Cashier, 24/6/84. Noted and resubmitted for instructions.—J.R.L., 26/6/84.

The above minute does not touch upon the question of limitation of future licenses. It is proposed to limit them to two years. Does this meet with approval?—P. F. ADAMS, 1/7/84. The Under Secretary for Lands.

Resubmitted.—C.O., 5/7/84. I do not think that it would be wise to issue licenses for any specified period. When it may be necessary to take action in any case it may be submitted.—J.S.F., 21/7/84. Surveyor-General.—G.H.S., 12/7/84. Observed. The Registrar-General is more interested in this decision.—P.F.A. Returned to the Under Secretary for Lands, with a recommendation that these papers be transmitted to the Registrar-General for perusal.—P. F. ADAMS, Surveyor-General's Office, 1/8/84. The Under Secretary for Lands. The Registrar-General.—C.O., B.C., 5/8/84. To be returned. The Principal Draftsman.—H.A., 6/8/84.

The decision of the honorable Minister for Lands in relation to the withdrawal of licenses is a very unfortunate one for this Department. It, in fact, perpetuates indefinitely the evils we have been so long suffering under from licensed surveyors under the Real Property Act, whose conscience with regard to declarations is of a most elastic character. I had strong hopes that my memo. dated 28th February, 1884, would have made it clear how necessary it was to have licensed surveyors under some control. With regard to those holding licenses under the Act, at present they are subjected to none. The recommendations made by me in the above report and embodied in Surveyor-General's letter dated 29th April, 1884, would, I am convinced, have improved the standard of work at once, and got rid of the lying declarations with which we are now troubled. As an instance of the value to be attached to them, I beg to refer to a further report of mine forwarded to the honorable Colonial Secretary on the 9th August last, No. 84-872, in which, only by accident I have been able to name two licensed surveyors who made a declaration "that, under their immediate supervision" they had surveyed the same piece of land, neither of whom, it appeared, were ever on the ground. As the Survey Department will not help me to prevent such frauds, I see no way else to get rid of the difficulty but to advise that a sum of money be placed on the Estimates for 1885 for fees to be paid to one or two of the best of the surveyors licensed under the Act to make check surveys with report as may be required, then should the report be a bad one we may hope, on its being forwarded to the Lands Department, some steps will be taken to deal promptly with the surveyor.—R.M.P., 12/3/84. The Under Secretary for Lands. E. G. WARD, Registrar-General, B.C., 12/8/84.

In the two cases referred to, the surveyors have been called on to show cause, &c.—P.F.A., 30/9/84, 1/10/84. The Under Secretary for Lands. The Secretary and Cashier.—30/9/84. Has the case herein referred to been received? If not inquire at the Colonial Secretary's Department with a view to its being obtained.—C.O., 18/8/84. Herewith.—G.H.S., 20/8/84. There is no difficulty in dealing with cases of the character now brought under notice and separately submitted.—C.O., 20/8/84. Seen.—J.S.F., 3/9/84. Surveyor-General.—G.H.S., 3/9/84.

No. 8.

The Under Secretary for Lands to The Registrar-General.

THE within papers are referred to the Registrar-General for his information as to the action now being taken as regards the two surveyors specially reported by him.

C.O., B.C., 14/10/84. The principal Draftsman may see the papers.—H.J., 14/10/84. When may we hope to hear of the result?—R.M.P., 4/11/84. The Under Secretary for Lands.—H.Y. NEWCOMBE, Deputy Registrar-General, B.C., 4/11/84. Referred to the Surveyor General.—C.O., 13/11/84. Returned to the Registrar-General in accordance with Mr. Pearson's request.—F.H.W. (for the Under Secretary), Department of Lands, B.C., 24/12/84. To be returned.—E.G.W., 29/12/84. Returned to the Under Secretary for Lands.—H.S., D.R.G., B.C., 8/1/85. The decision of the honorable the Minister for Lands anxiously looked for by this Department.—R.M.P., 8/1/85. Submitted.—C.O., 13/1/85.

The Surveyor-General appears to be unable to deal with the individual cases brought forward, I therefore adopt a course that I would have preferred to have avoided, and request the Surveyor-General to cancel the whole of the existing licenses to surveyors under the Real Property Act, and issue fresh licenses to such surveyors as he may deem competent, and the licenses should be issued for a stated period as he in his discretion may deem competent, and the licenses should be issued for a stated period as he in his discretion may think advisable not exceeding two years.—J.S.F., 13/1/85.

Land Titles Office, Registrar-General's Department, Sydney, 23 December, 1884.

Dear Sir,

Certain papers were returned to you a short time since from this Department, having reference to bad work by surveyors licensed under the Real Property Act. When in Melbourne recently before the Royal Commission sitting in the Lands Titles Office, I was asked by the Chairman if any steps had been taken in Sydney with regard to surveyors who abused their licenses. I stated that twice I had written fully to the honorable the Colonial Secretary making strong complaints upon this very matter. The Chairman wished me to obtain copies of these letters and send them to him. Will you be good enough, therefore, to have the above papers returned to the Registrar-General for a few days that I may have the before-mentioned letters copied.

Yours, &c.,

ROBERT M. PEARSON.

The Surveyor-General to The Under Secretary for Lands.

Surveyor-General's Office, Sydney, 21 January, 1885.

In order that effect may be given to the decision of the Secretary for Lands, of the 13th instant, I would suggest that a notice appear in the Gazette announcing the intention of the Government to recall or cancel all licenses under section 100 of the Real Property Act.

Such cancellation to take effect on the 30th June next.

Surveyors not in the permanent employment of the Crown who may be desirous of having licenses renewed be requested to lodge their applications with the Surveyor-General not later than the 30th April next.

It is necessary, in the interests of both the public and the surveyors, that sufficient notice be given, in order that outstanding surveys in their hands may be completed.

As soon as possible after the 1st July a notice should appear in the Gazette informing the public as to the surveyors whose licenses have been renewed.

That the first renewals should only extend to the end of the year 1886, and subsequent renewals two years.

In dealing with applications for renewals the co-operation of the Registrar-General and his officers should be secured, otherwise I shall still be under the same difficulty which I now experience in reference to complaints arising in that Department.

I do not anticipate any further difficulty in dealing with the matter if the principles above advocated are adopted.

In pursuance of the direction of the Secretary for Lands, dated 13th ultimo, all licenses at present in force under the 100th section of the Real Property Act will be cancelled on the 30th June next. In accordance with the decision on min. 85-5,189, I have had the enclosed précis in re licenses to survey, prepared, and recommend that it be forwarded for the information of the Crown Law Officer, with a view to his opinion on the following points being obtained for the guidance of the Registrar-General and myself, in the consideration of applications for renewals of licenses to survey under the Real Property Act.

- (1) Licenses to survey under the Real Property Act and ordinary licenses (vide forms herewith marked "A" and "B") being concurrent. Can the former license ("A") be cancelled by itself without the cancellation of the latter ("B")?
- (2) As to the power to cancel ordinary licenses to survey (form "B"), the opinion of Attorney-General Martin is not conclusive, and that of Mr. Attorney-General Wisdom being in error, as regards the appointment of licensed surveyors by the Governor and Executive Council, leaves the question still in doubt.

- (3) If surveyors holding the present license to survey under the Real Property Act ignore the notice to send in their licenses, has the Registrar-General power to refuse to accept work sent in to the Real Property Office by them?

I have the honor to return herewith the papers which were forwarded to me under B.C., 15/6/85, respecting licenses to surveyors, and to state that I have submitted the matter to Mr. Attorney-General Dalley, a copy of whose advising thereon is sent herewith.

COPY opinion of the Honorable the Attorney-General re application for a new license to survey under the Real Property Act.

I CANNOT discover any statutable authority under which the Surveyor-General was empowered to issue the special license which purports to have been issued in conformity with the provisions of 26 Vic. No. 9. By the proviso to section 100 of this Act no one is permitted to practice as a surveyor unless he is specially licensed under the provisions of the Act by the Surveyor-General.

But no power is given to the Surveyor-General to issue this license for the period which is provided in the license itself, that is, so long as the licensee shall be a licensed surveyor.

It appears to me consequently that so much of the license as provides for the period is ultra vires. The certificate issued to a licensed surveyor is based upon the fact that at the time of its issue the surveyor had proved his qualifications, which I presume embraced both his ability and character. It could never have been contemplated that if from any causes the former became diminished, as, for example, from indulgence in bad habits, or from impaired intellect, or that his character became untrustworthy, he was still to exercise his powers as a licensed surveyor.

With this view I am of opinion that the license may be revoked, which authorises practice as a surveyor under the provisions of the Real Property Act. I have seen Sir James Martin's opinion, and I am quite in agreement with his view as to the course he suggests being the least invidious. But the opinion, as far as I can gather, does not meet precisely what is now required.

Perhaps the best course to be pursued would be to publish a list of the names of those persons who are now alone authorised by the Surveyor-General.

This action should be accompanied by the issue of a special license to such persons.

By the adoption of this course the licenses issued to persons whose names did not appear in the list would cease to operate

License under the Real Property Act, Section 100—Recommending Fee.

23 November, 1891.

THE time is approaching for issuing the licenses to survey under the Real Property Act for next year, and I would bring under consideration the question of charging a fee for this license which is issued annually, and in support thereof I would adduce the following reasons:—

The issue of this license involves expenditure, viz., for inquiry, clerical work, and printing, also in respect of examination of surveys effected by those whose competency may not be known. I cannot state the amount, but in the course of a year the value of service so rendered might amount to £50, and this would be irrespective of my own attention thereto appropriated.

Many

Many surveyors who have acquired this license in former years seek its renewal annually, frequently regarding it merely as an honorary distinction. I think in such cases there can be no hardship in requiring payment of a fee, and to those who are not inclined to pay there is no deprivation of importance. To the surveyors engaged in business the payment of a fee would not be felt as an irksome charge.

The number of surveyors who were licensed last year is 228, and assuming that 200 are desirous of holding the license for the next year, a fund will be erected which will be sufficient to meet all probable incidental expenses.

There has been considerable service rendered in the past in connection with this license, the value of which may be partly recouped in course of time by imposing a fee.

There is nothing whatever in the Real Property Act against the charging of such a fee. I think it is legitimate and desirable to impose it, and I would recommend that the license fee be fixed at one guinea.

Subject to approval of this proposal, I would beg to point out that there is sufficient time now to notify the alteration in practice to the surveyors concerned, with a view to imposing the fee for next year, and I would beg to submit the matter for early consideration.

Shorthand Notes of Deputation.

12 January, 1892.

A DEPUTATION, representing the Institution of Surveyors of New South Wales, and introduced by the Honorable W. H. Pigott, M.L.C., waited upon the Minister for Lands, the Hon. Henry Copeland, on Friday, 8th January, 1892, with reference to the fee of one guinea charged by the Department for the reissue of licenses to survey under the Real Property Act, which hitherto were issued without any such fee. There were present, amongst others, Messrs. C. C. Bullock, W. H. Cardew, E. Herborn, C. B. Dawson, A. T. Schleicher, A. E. Harris, A. W. Love, E. J. H. Knapp, R. H. Cambage, S. J. Pullitzer, J. F. Loxton, J. J. Haycroft, S. Chatfield, G. Clark, and T. F. Furber, (Secretary.)

Mr. Pigott, in introducing the deputation, said that when the Real Property Act came into force certain surveyors were granted licenses, which were issued for life "during good behaviour." Some time ago they were called upon to send in their certificates, presumably for the purpose of having an amended form prepared. They subsequently found that the new certificates only held good for a limited period, and that they had to pay a fee of one guinea for them.

This charge, they contended, was both illegal, and in this he concurred, and unjust.

Mr. C. C. Bullock, in apologising for the unavoidable absence of the President of the Institution, referred at some length to the course of procedure followed in the case of gentlemen desirous of becoming licensed surveyors. In the first place he had to serve a period of three years with some authorised surveyor, and obtain a certificate; then he had to send in an application to the Surveyor-General, accompanied by a fee of £5, requesting to be examined for a certificate. If he passed he was then recommended to the Minister for Lands for appointment, and his name was, in the ordinary course, published in the Government Gazette.

The conditions under which the certificate was eventually granted were contained in a Ministerial minute (which he read). The certificates issued prior to 1885, distinctly stated that they should hold good until the person to whom it was granted should be guilty of conduct unbecoming a Government Officer. Since then a change had been made, it having been thought that these licenses should be taken away; but instead of the whole of the certificates being cancelled they were withdrawn, on the understanding that those who had not committed any malpractice should have them returned.

On 9th December, 1890, Surveyor-General wrote to say that the licenses were to be revised, and, later, that it would be unnecessary to make application for renewal, as they would be supplied where advisable, without such request. On 3rd December, 1891, however, they were notified that the Minister for Lands had approved of the charge of a fee of £1 1s. on each license, and that it would be necessary to make application for renewals. To this the institution which they represented, objected.

They urged that it was illegal and unjust to charge anything whatever; the Department had neither right nor warrant to charge as they did to auctioneers, &c., where the fee was sanctioned by Act of Parliament. If the Government thought it a desirable imposition, the Institution of Surveyors thought it equally that they should be given a chance of protesting. What could be the object of such a charge?

Mr. Copeland: The object is to cover the expense of the issue of the licenses.

Mr. Bullock: At any rate, it was breaking faith with those surveyors who had held licenses for several years. The surveyors understood that the fund created by these fees was to go towards checking the work done, but surely the public should bear that cost. He hoped that the Minister would see his way to issue the licenses in the old way this year, and then appoint a Commission to inquire into the whole question.

The Minister, in reply, said that he had looked into the whole matter previously, and he was quite sure that no amount of argument would be likely now to influence his judgment. He might state at once that he was opposed to the deputation altogether, and he did not think this was a matter which should have agitated an institution like theirs to the extent that it appeared to have. There were other persons in the community who had to pay for licenses besides surveyors; in fact he thought it an advantage to the institution to make this charge rather than a disadvantage.

A surveyor, after passing his examination, paid a fee and obtained a certificate to practice under the Real Property Act, but this reissue of licenses every year was intended as a means of bringing them up periodically to be, as it were, "rebranded." A man might be a good surveyor for one year or for ten, but the time might come when his character might not bear close investigation, and his work might fall off in efficiency. As to the charge, he supposed it would not do more than pay the expense of issuing the license. He believed in everybody paying a quid pro quo for services rendered, and he did not see why a number of gentlemen [like those present, who had a sort of monopoly of surveying should be exempt from a charge because they did enjoy the monopoly. That they received a benefit from these licenses was evident from the fact that they were a guarantee to the public that those who held them were efficient and competent. He understood that there were a number of gentlemen who took out these licenses who did not practice,—who merely obtained them because they were the "pure merino" brand without any intention of practising, and simply to maintain their position in the institution. With reference to the licenses which had been called in, he had read the whole of the papers on the subject, as well as Sir James Martin's and Mr. Dalley's opinion thereon. They were both clear that the original licenses referred to were ultra vires. Originally, having obtained a license, a man was a licensed surveyor as long as he lived, notwithstanding that he might be decrepit or even intemperate or incompetent; but as Sir James Martin pointed out, these documents were illegal and should be recalled. In Mr. Dalley's opinion as well as Sir James Martin's, the least invidious way of getting over the difficulty was to issue new licenses annually, and he (the Minister) agreed with this opinion.

As to the legality of the charge, he thought it was quite within the powers of any Act of Parliament to frame regulations for carrying it into effect. In this Act there was no specified power given to make regulations, but he took it for granted that any Act was passed with the express intention of being put into force, and so long as the regulations were not opposed to the spirit of the Act, they were not necessarily ultra vires.

Mr. Pigott: You cannot impose a penalty unless by Act of Parliament.

Mr. Copeland: Just so; but the charge was not a penalty.

Mr. Cardew: Under the 100th section of the Act licensed surveyors are told to consider themselves "agents and advisers of the Crown," and they have to supply certain information to the Crown free of cost.

Mr.

Mr. Copeland: You are not charged this guinea because that duty is imposed upon you, it is charged to cover the cost of issuing the annual licenses.

Mr. Cardew: What guarantee have we that it will not be two guineas next year?

Mr. Copeland: You have no absolute guarantee that it will not be fifty or 100 guineas. Instead of raising an objection to the charge of one guinea he should imagine it would be more to their interest to charge even 100 guineas. It would create more of a monopoly. There was no question as to the legality of the charge. The point was simply whether they should have the use of the Department free of cost, or whether they should contribute the paltry sum of one guinea each per annum. He was sorry, however, that he could not accede to their request, but it was only asking them to pay for benefits received.

Mr. Bullock suggested that the licenses be issued provisionally until the question had been fully ventilated. This would leave it an open question.

Mr. Copeland did not wish to leave it an open matter. He was quite satisfied—they might call it firmness or stubbornness, whichever they liked—and he had no hesitation in saying that he was not likely to change his views.

Mr. Bullock said in that case he would refuse to pay the fee and withdraw from the Institution. They would be unworthy of the Institution if they consented to the charge.

Mr. Copeland: Very well, gentlemen, it rests entirely with yourselves. If you do not pay the fee you will not be gazetted, that is all.

Memo. by The Registrar-General.

Licensed Surveyors under the Real Property Act.

Memorandum.

Sydney, 12 January, 1892.

The public press of the 9th and 11th instant has, by reports of a deputation of the Surveyors' Institute to the Minister for Lands on the 8th idem, by editorial notes and by published letters, drawn general attention to the question of the annual licensing of surveyors under the Real Property Act, and to the proposed license fees for the current year.

In submitting the following remarks for consideration of the Honorable the Colonial Secretary, it will be readily accepted that there is here no assumption of questioning the decision of the Minister of Lands, or of traversing the legality of his action in the matter.

The sole object (a duty plainly resting upon me) is to suggest to the Minister, under whose control the Registrar-General's department is placed, what difficulties may possibly arise in administering the Real Property Act if the present position of the Secretary for Lands and the Institute should remain unchanged.

I may premise that for years past the licenses approved by a Board, consisting of the Surveyor-General (latterly Chief Surveyor) and the Registrar-General, have been annually reviewed, the Board formally passing those surveyors against whom no charge of misconduct or default of professional duty has been presented.

The cases of those specially brought under the cognisance of the Board were inquired into, and if it were considered that the proved circumstances warranted, the names of defaulting surveyors struck from the list for the ensuing year.

Until the year 1886 the form of license ran:—"Do you hereby specially license as a surveyor under the provisions of the Real Property Act of 1862, so long as he shall be a licensed surveyor and no longer."

These licenses, with few exceptions, were withdrawn by order in 1885.

From 1886 the license has been limited in time.

The foregoing system represents the practical outcome of the provision made in the last paragraph of the 100th section of the Act.

The limitation of the period of the license was, I am given to understand, regarded as within the power of the Surveyor-General, by reason of affirmatory opinions given by Attorneys-General Martin and Dalley.

Granted that plans of sub-divisions, prepared by surveyors holding certificates of competency, and licensed to survey under the Lands Department, but not gazetted under the Real Property Act for the year 1892, should be presented for deposit under the 100th clause, any course of action, under present conditions, would appear to be readily challengeable.

With the unmistakable position of the Minister for Lands, pointing to his conviction that the non-gazetting of surveyors for 1892 would bar the right to the practice of their profession under the Real Property Act, this Department, in the absence of authoritative direction—might well hesitate as to the proper course to pursue.

On the one hand, the surveyor protesting his right, notwithstanding the enforced withdrawal of his license, "so long as he shall be a licensed surveyor," to attest and deposit plans; on the other, the published dictum of the Minister for Lands, that such a surveyor, being ungazetted for the year 1892, is not competent to act.

The acceptance of the plans, either as a matter of expediency, or from any other controlling cause, might possibly be construed into the assumption on the part of this Department of a position overtly antagonistic to the public utterance of a Minister; while, if the opposite course were followed and persisted in, there can be no question that serious dislocation of the private land and financial business of the country, and consequent public dissatisfaction must ensue.

In the event of a refusal to accept such plans, there can be but little doubt that the Registrar-General would have to face an application to the Supreme Court for a mandamus to compel him to recognise the surveyor under the Act, and to receive the plans proposed to be deposited.

I do not profess to suggest what the result of such an application would be, but I venture to express the hope that the several untoward contingencies here referred to may be avoided, and with that view alone, I submit the matter for the consideration of the Honorable the Colonial Secretary.

CHARLES PINHEY,

R.G.
To

To be placed with other papers. To be copied ready for laying on the Table on Wednesday next.—H.C., 23/1/92.

My Honorable Colleague the Colonial Secretary having handed me the within minute, I have gone carefully through the papers with a view to eliciting whether any real or substantial objections in the public interests either had arisen, or were likely to arise through the action of this Department with reference to charging a fee of 21s. to cover the cost of reissuing annual licenses to specially licensed surveyors to practice under the Real Property Act, and I have no hesitation in saying that in my opinion the surveyors have no real cause to feel aggrieved, nor do I think that any serious inconveniences are likely to arise either to the Registrar-General's Department or to the public. In fact, I am in all seriousness much surprised to find that a number of gentlemen of mature age, I allude to the surveyors, should have shown such a childish and petulant disposition in dealing with a departmental matter of such little consequence to themselves. For the information of my honorable colleague, I may point out that out of the whole number of surveyors originally licensed for "So long as he shall be a licensed surveyor," only eight (8) of such licenses were not returned to this Department some six years ago when the system of issuing annual licenses was instituted. For last year 230 annual licenses were issued, but without fee. For this year already there have been sixty-five applications by gentlemen who have paid the fee of one guinea to cover cost to the Department, of which ten are resident or practising in Sydney. I therefore do not anticipate that anyone will be necessarily inconvenienced in their land transfer arrangements for lack of competent surveyors to do the work, especially when we know that land transfers are somewhat at a low ebb just now. For the information of the public, however, it is my intention to publish in the Press the names of those gentlemen who have responded to the public interests by acceding to the departmental view on this question, so that these seeking such services will have no difficulty in finding duly qualified officers to do their work. I would also point out that there can scarcely be much hesitation as to the course to be adopted with reference to the paragraphs in his minute which I have marked A and B. The 100th section of the Real Property Act is clear and specific—"Provided that no person shall be permitted to practise as a surveyor under the provisions of this Act unless specially licensed for that purpose by the Surveyor-General." It would seem to me that under this provision, should any legal course be resorted to by the surveyors, the Surveyor-General, and not the Registrar-General, would probably be the officer against whom the mandamus would be. It has now become a question whether this Department, or the remainder of the surveyors, should retire from the position each have taken. I may say here that as the question in dispute did not originate with me, but was approved of without a great deal of consideration, I should personally not have the slightest hesitation in giving way to the surveyors, did I think that the public would be benefitted by so doing. On the other hand, I am more convinced than before that the course adopted was the right one, believing, as I do, in the policy that every individual or section of the community should pay for services received. This can no more be correctly classed as a tax than a postage stamp can be called a tax on letter-writing. It is simply a charge for clerical services rendered necessary by the Real Property Act, and which surveyors are not compelled to pay unless they wish to obtain the special privilege of practising under this particular Act, which they can only obtain by acquiring a special license for that purpose. I would further draw my honorable colleague's attention to the frivolous objections which have been raised by the surveyors, both through letters in the Press, and personally at the deputation. Some have urged that it (the license fee) would degrade them to the level of cabmen or hawkers. I have yet to learn that there is anything degrading either in these avocations or any other legitimate occupation. Others thought they would be degraded to the level of auctioneers, at which the auctioneers who provide so much of the work for the surveyors must feel highly flattered. Others, Mr. Charles Brown, to wit have endeavoured (vide Daily Telegraph of 15th instant) to make the public believe that the system of annually licensing was something new, whereas this has been the practice of the Department for the last five years, and the only innovation is the charging of one guinea for a diploma, which is a warrant for their being allowed to practise in this most particular and most remunerative class of professional work. Each surveyor has to pay £5 5s. when he obtains his original license as a licensed surveyor, and I fail to see why he should not pay a smaller fee for this annual license, which this Department, in the interests of the public, some six years ago deemed it necessary to enforce.—H.C., 18/1/92.

(SECOND SESSION.)

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.

NEW SOUTH WALES.

SILK CULTURE.(CORRESPONDENCE RESPECTING ITALIAN SETTLEMENT AT THE RICHMOND RIVER, KNOWN AS
"NEW ITALY.")Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be printed, 18 November, 1891.Minute of The Colonial Secretary.Subject:—Silk Culture.

Colonial Secretary's Office, Sydney, 10 January, 1891.

It has been represented by Mr. Reginald Champ, who has taken considerable interest in the silk culture, that if some assistance could be rendered to the Italians in what is termed "New Italy" that a new industry in the cultivation of silk might spring up, which would ultimately prove self-supporting.

In view of this the Government would be willing to assist such of them as are "bona fide" settlers, who would undertake the cultivation of the mulberry tree and the rearing of the silkworm, providing them with seed and silkworm eggs, and even advancing them small sums of money, which would have to be repaid, and for which, of course, they would have to pay interest, but in no sense whatever is such assistance to be looked upon as permanent Government support or construed into a kind of Government institution.

Mr. Champ is authorized to proceed to the Clarence district for the purpose of inquiring and ascertaining to what extent the Italians are willing to avail themselves of this assistance. An advance may be made to him of £50 to enable him to pay his expenses while carrying out his inquiries, for which he must necessarily render an account.

It is also desirable that a quantity of seed may be obtained from England through the Agent-General, say 300 kilogrammes of the white mulberry.

HENRY PARKES.

The Principal Under Secretary to Mr. R. Champ.

Sir,

Colonial Secretary's Office, Sydney, 10 January, 1891.

I am directed by the Colonial Secretary to request that you will proceed to New Italy, on the Richmond River, and make enquiries, with a view to ascertain the number of inhabitants who are willing and able to undertake sericulture in that district, and also to what extent they will require assistance, and fully report on your visit.

I have, &c.,

CRITCHETT WALKER,

Principal Under Secretary.

The Principal Under Secretary to The Under Secretary for Finance and Trade.

Sir,

Colonial Secretary's Office, Sydney, 10 January, 1891.

I am directed to state that the Colonial Secretary has approved of Mr. Reginald Champ, who is proceeding to New Italy in the Northern district, for the purpose of procuring information regarding sericulture, being granted the sum of £50 to meet expenses, and to request that you will invite the Colonial Treasurer to have the goodness to cause the amount to be paid from the Advance Account, pending the passing of a vote by Parliament.

I have, &c.,

CRITCHETT WALKER,

Principal Under Secretary.

The Colonial Secretary to The Agent-General.

Sir, Colonial Secretary's Office, Sydney, 12 January, 1891.
 I have the honor to request that you will be so good as to obtain from Messrs. Henry Zweifel & Co., 60 New Broad-street, London, E.C., and forward to Sydney, 300 kilogrammes of the best white mulberry seed, 150 to be of the Morus Alba and the remainder of the Moretti, the cost of which will be about 6 francs per kilogramme; and to state that the Colonial Treasurer has been invited to cause the sum of £36 5s. to be remitted to you for the purpose.

I have, &c.,
 (For the Colonial Secretary)
 CRITCHETT WALKER,
 Principal Under Secretary.

The Principal Under Secretary to The Under Secretary for Finance and Trade.

Sir, Colonial Secretary's Office, Sydney, 12 January, 1891.
 I am directed by the Colonial Secretary to state that the Agent-General has been instructed to obtain from Messrs. Henry Zweifel & Co., 60 New Broad-street, London, E.C., and forward to Sydney, 300 kilogrammes of the best white mulberry seed, and to request that you will invite the Colonial Treasurer to have the goodness to cause the sum of £36 5s. to be remitted to Sir Saul Samuel to defray the cost thereof out of the Advance Fund, pending a vote by Parliament.

I have, &c.,
 CRITCHETT WALKER,
 Principal Under Secretary.

Mr. R. Champ to The Colonial Secretary.

Sir, 72 Newtown Road, Sydney, 28 January, 1891.
 In accordance with your instructions, dated the 10th instant, I have the honor to inform you that I proceeded on that date to New Italy, Coy. Richmond, and have thoroughly inspected the selections taken up by the Italians there, and interviewed the Italians themselves, with the view of ascertaining the suitability of the land for sericulture, and the willingness and capability of the selectors to undertake this culture, also finding out the amount of monetary assistance they need to enable them to stay on the land and properly attend to the work.

As I stated in a report, dated the 24th October last [laid on the table of Legislative Assembly 26/11/90], relating to a former and briefer visit to this settlement in company with the Director-General of Forests, the soil and climate are undoubtedly very suitable to the growth of the mulberry tree and rearing of the silk-worm.

On a closer and more detailed inspection I can confidently confirm this opinion, but at the same time would point out that the swamps and lower lands would have to be carefully avoided when planting, and the numberless ridges of which the country principally consists, alone utilised for this purpose, in order that no disaster might occur from the floods which have been so prevalent in this country the last few years.

As regards the Italians themselves I have interviewed all, and find that with very few exceptions the whole of them are desirous and capable of undertaking the industry, they having had more or less experience of it in their own country.

These people having expressed a wish to formally thank you for the proffered help to establish this industry in their midst, I enclose a letter to this effect which I wrote at their dictation.

I give on another sheet a list of those selectors, and the number of their families who are anxious to start sericulture, also the respective number of their selections, and the area of land each is able to plant this year.

The capability of each selector and the individual assistance needed of course varies considerably, and in proportion to the size of families, amount of cleared land they have, appliances wanted, &c., &c., but they inform me that to avoid leaving their selections the greater part of the year to earn wages for the general maintenance of themselves and families, as they are at present compelled to do, they would all require some monetary assistance. The sums that they have mentioned to me as being approximately the amounts they would require to carry them over the ensuing twelve months vary from £20 to £100, some of the larger amounts including the purchase of a horse and plough, or other appliances, in order that they may properly and expeditiously prepare the land, and being for those of larger families, or who are otherwise able to cultivate and produce more.

For two years, which time must be expected to elapse before any return can be anticipated, the advances needed would be necessarily double, but I presume the money for the second year would form a supplementary advance.

Totalling up these various amounts the sum that would be needed for the whole during the first year would be about £1,500.

I have informed them that the repayment by them of this money can be spread over a number of years (interest at a moderate rate being charged) in order that they may be fairly started in the industry, telling them in fact that the repayment will be made as easy as possible for them.

I would suggest here that perhaps similar terms might be made for the refunding of this money as are made for the payment of selected land.

The above sum of money would of course have to be divided up and advanced to them in proportion to the amount of work in connection with sericulture they would undertake and properly carry out, and also according to the circumstances under which they are placed.

The

The areas of land I have noted against the different names in the attached list represent the quantity of land they have now ready for planting. In this total area of 68½ acres a large number of cuttings can be closely planted and a quantity of seed sown—in fact, I suggest planting the cuttings about 5,000 to the acre, making a total, exclusive of seed-beds, of some 300,000 young trees, if all goes well.

Whilst these cuttings are rooting and growing the men can be clearing and preparing similar areas of land ready for transplanting the superfluous rooted trees on the following year, and can continue to do this each successive year, as the trees grow and become large, thinning them out and enlarging the plantations until the proper number of trees per acre is obtained.

The above number of trees is about the number I suggested in my former report might be cultivated in New Italy for a start, and, as I then pointed out, should be capable of rearing silkworms and producing cocoons in about two years to the value of some £2,500 per crop; and as at least three crops may be expected, the total yield may be estimated at a value of £7,500 in six months, or spread over the year, and exclusive of what they might produce from other sources during the balance of the year, an average of nearly £4 per week per family. After this period the productive capacity of the trees largely increases annually.

When, however, I state that most of the Italians have informed me that they would be amply satisfied if they obtained as soon as this £1 per week from sericulture, some saying as low as 10s. 6d., in order that they may be able to stop at home and cultivate their farms, it will be clearly seen what a boon the introduction of the industry would be to them if successfully carried on, even if my estimates were reduced by 50 per cent., and I have already made a low calculation both in production and price.

In addition to planting cuttings, and in order to, if possible, make an early start in the cocoon-raising, if only in a small way, I have suggested to the Italians—and they all agree with me as to its advantage—that as large a quantity as possible of the mulberry-seed be sown this autumn, so that a supply of trees may be assured in the event of the cuttings not turning out satisfactorily; and further, if the seed be good and germinate well, the seed-beds by next spring will have produced a large quantity of superfluous seedlings, which will be good silkworm food, and, according to the quantity there may be, a like proportion of silkworms may be at once raised, and a small beginning made.

I would respectfully suggest that if my proposals are approved as early a decision as possible may be made, as there is already little enough time to prepare the ground by the autumn, besides which a number of the Italians will shortly be compelled to seek work again and leave their farms for reasons explained above.

I have, &c.,

The Honorable Sir Henry Parkes, G.C.M.G., Colonial Secretary, Sydney,—

Sir,

New Italy, 18 January, 1891.

We, the undersigned Italian settlers, residing on our selections in New Italy, have the honor of hereby most respectfully thanking you for the offer of assistance made to us by Mr. Reginald Champ, on behalf of the Government, to enable us to start the culture of silk on our land.

We all desire and are most willing to undertake this industry, and are confident that we can successfully carry it on.

We shall be only too glad to avail ourselves of the proffered help, consisting of the free supply to us of white mulberry-tree cuttings and seed, and silkworm grain, and small advances of money being made to us to help us to stay upon the ground and properly attend to the plantations we make.

Mr. Champ has taken full particulars of our different capabilities and individual needs, and we pray you will see fit to help us to the extent he will suggest, in which case we undertake to do our utmost to successfully introduce the industry, and thus in some measure show our gratitude for your help.

Telegram from Mr. R. Champ to The Colonial Secretary.

South Woodburn, 5 March, 1891.

NUMBER of Italians informed me obliged to immediately leave land to seek work. Edward Jones, Lismore, Police Magistrate for district. REGINALD CHAMP.

Mr. R. Champ to The Principal Under Secretary.

Sir,

Sydney, 3 February, 1891.

Referring to the instructions contained in your letter dated 10th instant, I have to inform you that my report upon my visit to New Italy, and the information I have gained regarding the Italian residents, is now before the Colonial Secretary, and I beg to enclose a voucher for fifty guineas as a charge for my services thus rendered.

I am, &c.,

Fifty guineas submitted and recommended for approval.—C. W., 3/2/91. Approved.—H.P., 3/2/91

Mr. R. Champ to The Colonial Secretary.

Sericulture and New Italy.

Sir,

South Woodburn, 6 March, 1891.

I have the honor to inform you that, in accordance with your instructions, I arrived here on the 26th ultimo, and have since visited and informed all the Italians of New Italy that the Government is willing to give them the help asked for to enable them to start sericulture.

They are already beginning to clear and prepare land for planting, but a number of them are much in need of the promised assistance, and must immediately leave to seek work unless they get it.

As I have already intimated, in order to ensure the success of the project, it is very necessary that all those who wish to take up the industry should reside upon their selections and devote their time to the proper cultivation (in the first instance) of the mulberry-tree.

Considering the matter to be urgent, I took the liberty of telegraphing a few words to you, yesterday, to this effect, also giving the name of the Police Magistrate of the district, Mr. Ed. Jones, of Lismore, as the nearest responsible man to New Italy.

One of the Italians informs me that there are a few more of the survivors of the Marquis du Ray's expedition living near Liverpool, N.S.W., who would undoubtedly be glad to take up the industry of sericulture had they the opportunity.

I shall be glad to know whether you would wish them to have the same advantages and assistance for the development of this industry as are being given to their fellow-countrymen in this district.

The names, as given to me, are:—Antonio Belotti, Gioiologo Tomc, Henricho Acidentale, Salvatore Panasinisi, and Antonio Felletti, all with large families. It is needless for me to state that it will be to the advantage of the project for as many people as possible to now take up the industry.

I have, &c.,

REGINALD CHAMP.

It

It is proposed to advance to these poor settlers small sums of money, to be repaid by them when they get a return from their silk industry; but before granting any monetary assistance the Crown Solicitor would, perhaps, kindly draw up a formal guarantee or bond to be used in each case where such assistance is to be granted.—C.W., B.C., 20/3/91.

Mr. R. Champ to The Colonial Secretary.

Sericulture at New Italy.

Sir, South Woodburn, 20 March, 1891.

I have the honor to confirm my letter of the 6th instant, to which I have received no reply to date.

I would again respectfully urge that the promised monetary assistance for the Italians be despatched with as little delay as possible, for many, if not all, greatly need it.

The whole of the people are working hard on their selections preparing land for mulberry planting instead of looking out for work in other parts of the country as heretofore, and of course any small debts incurred by them for stores, &c., are upon the strength of the promised help.

Independently of this several families are considerably handicapped in their sericultural work by the want of agricultural implements which they are unable to procure without the above aid.

Unless other arrangements have been made, I would suggest that the money be distributed to them on application to myself, in small amounts as they require it, in preference to lump sums being given to them, the maximum amount of £100 mentioned in my report of the 28th January to be given to any individual, being of course always observed.

Each applicant to sign a receipt, upon which is stated the purpose for, and the terms upon which the money is advanced, and binding the recipient to undertake the proper cultivation of a certain area of land for the purpose of mulberry tree-planting and subsequent production of silk cocoons, and properly attending to the same under my direction.

Such receipts might be printed and forwarded to me upon the despatch of the money, with instructions for me to act accordingly.

I have, &c.,

Sir, Department of Lands, Sydney, 7 April, 1891.

In reply to your letter of the 26th ultimo, applying for the Departmental papers in connection with "New Italy," at South Woodburn, set apart for sericulture, I have the honor to inform you that there does not appear to be any record in this Department of correspondence in respect to this matter; but I enclose herewith, for your information, a Schedule showing conditional purchases standing in the names of Italians who it is thought are survivors of the Marquis du Ray's expedition.

I have the honor to state that I have received from the Department of Lands all the particulars necessary to enable me to take security on the selections at New Italy.

I enclose these particulars, and shall now be glad if you will return them to me with the previous instructions and any further directions you may wish to give to me.

Sericulture at New Italy.

Sir,

South Woodburn, 8 April, 1891.

I have the honor to confirm my letters of the 6th and 20th ultimo, to which I have received no reply up to time of writing.

The Italians are continuing busily to prepare their land for planting the mulberry tree, but are still much in want of the money promised. There are already one or two instances of the men undertaking other work in order to earn sufficient to keep them, and I fear others will be compelled to follow, unless the advances for them quickly arrive.

I need not again point out the importance of all undertaking this industry to demonstrate its worth. I should be glad if a telegram could be sent me, stating when this money may be expected, in order that I may show it to those concerned to re-assure them.

A great deal of interest is being taken, by the surrounding farmers, in the proposed introduction of this industry into the district, and a number are applying to me for cuttings and seed. I enclose the written applications I have received to date, and shall be glad to know whether I may promise them the material applied for, if available?

I have informed them that at present I have only authority to deal with the Italians:

I should strongly recommend that any of the farmers in the neighbourhood be supplied, if possible, as it will all be to the advantage of the project.

I believe there will be enough cuttings and seed available for all.

I have, &c.,
REGINALD CHAMP.

[Enclosures.]

Sir,

Swan Bay, Richmond River, 24 March, 1891.

Being the owner of several hundred acres of land joining New Italy, and desirous of giving silk-growing a trial, I would be obliged if you could spare me, say 1,000 mulberry cuttings, and a small quantity of mulberry seed. I would also ask you to inspect my land, that you might select the most suitable site for the planting of the mulberry.

Yours, &c.,

Mr. R. Champ.

HENRY W. WILLIAMS.

Dear Sir,

North Woodburn, 3 April, 1891.

Hearing that the residents of New Italy are having considerable assistance from the Government in the cultivation of silk, and having myself a large quantity of suitable land in proximity, I should be glad if you would let me have some white mulberry cuttings—say 1,000—and a quantity of seed, feeling anxious to make a try in the industry.

Yours, &c.,

R. Champ, Esq., South Woodburn.

ALEXANDER MESTON.

Sir,

Sir, Breakie, near New Italy, 4 April, 1891.
 I have 300 acres of land adjoining the Italian settlement, the greater part of which, I believe, is suitable for the growth of the mulberry-tree; and hearing of your efforts to establish the silk industry in this district, I would like to render some slight assistance by planting a few trees if you could spare me (say) 500 for a beginning.
 Yours, &c.,
 P.S.—Please let me have a small quantity of seed.—T.F. THOS. FLETT.
 Mr. R. Champ, Silk Expert.

Dear Sir, Richmond Hill, Bungawalbin, 6 April, 1891.
 Understanding that silk culture is to be established at New Italy, and that cuttings and seed of the white mulberry are to be supplied to persons desirous of planting, I beg to make application for about 500 cuttings, and also a few pounds of seed.
 I am, &c.,
 Mr. Champ. JOSEPH PURSEY.

Dear Sir, S. Woodburn, 6 April, 1891.
 Understanding that the Government is encouraging the introduction of the growth of silk in the district, especially amongst the Italians, and having a large area of land myself in the neighbourhood of New Italy, which will no doubt be suitable for the growing of the mulberry-tree, I shall be much obliged if you will let me have some cuttings and seed when distributing them. Say 1,000 cuttings, in order that I may take a part in this new industry.

Yours, &c.
 R. Champ, Esquire, South Woodburn. JAMES BETTERRIDGE.

Telegram from Mr. R. Champ to The Principal Under Secretary.

South Woodburn, 14 April, 1891.
 REFERRING my letter, dated Wednesday last, kindly endeavour send me telegram therein mentioned regarding advance for Italians. Urgent.
 REGINALD CHAMP.

This matter is still with the Crown Solicitor.—C.W., 17/4/91.

Telegram from Mr. R. Champ to The Principal Under Secretary.

South Woodburn, 18 April, 1891.
 UNLESS I hear from you to the contrary shall sail Tuesday for Sydney in order to offer my assistance to arrange for advances for Italians about which I have no news and which they now urgently need.
 REGINALD CHAMP.

Mr. R. Champ to The Principal Under Secretary.

Sir, Sydney, 27 April, 1891.
 By the present I beg to refer to the work undertaken by myself, at the request of the Government, in connection with the introduction of sericulture amongst the Italians of New Italy, and some of the neighbouring farmers on the Richmond River.

In October last I visited the district and Italian settlement, in company with the Director-General of Forests, and fully reported upon the adaptability of the country and people to the industry, at the same time giving approximative figures of the returns, &c., that might be expected.

In December last I was instructed to visit Adelaide, S.A., to contract with Dr. Cleland of that city, for a supply of silk-worm grain, and made very satisfactory arrangements with him to this end, also arranging for a large supply of mulberry-tree cuttings from the same source.

At this period I got Mr. Geo. Thorne, of Castle Hill, New South Wales, to consent to supply a similar quantity of grain and cuttings.

In January of this year I was again sent to New Italy for the purpose of ascertaining the exact individual requirements of the Italian settlers, both monetary and in cuttings and seed, and I also more minutely inspected their land as to its suitability for the purpose, and examined the people regarding their knowledge of sericulture and willingness to undertake the industry.

My report upon the information gained was duly laid before the Premier.

The Government having consented to try the scheme upon the lines I proposed I was again despatched to New Italy on the 24th February last to assist the Italians to carry out the preliminary operations connected therewith.

On the 6th and 20th ultimo, and the 8th instant, I briefly reported from the district the progress being made, enclosing in my letter of the 20th ultimo some applications from some of the surrounding farmers for cuttings and seed, all of whom are anxious to also start this culture. Many others are taking great interest in the matter, and will undoubtedly undertake the industry, but up to the time of my leaving, those sent were the only applications received in writing.

In addition to superintending the selection and preparing of land by the Italians, extending altogether over a considerable area, I inspected at the request of the abovementioned farmers their different farms, finding in every case the "high" and "ridgy" ground most suitable for the introduction of sericulture.

The Italians have in most cases now prepared their land for planting, and only await the promised aid and trees to further carry on operations.

Since the end of January last I have received no remuneration for my services, and I now therefore beg to enclose a voucher for £125, being three months salary at the rate of £500 per annum, and I am willing to continue my duties in regard to the introduction of this industry into the Richmond River district or other parts of the Colony, on payment to me by the Government of this same salary (£500) per annum, plus the usual travelling expenses.
 I have, &c.,

REGINALD CHAMP.

Mr. R. Champ asks that he may be paid at the rate of £500 and travelling expenses. Account for salary herewith submitted at that rate for £125.—C.W., 30/4/91. Approved.—H.P., 30/4/91.

Mr.

Mr. R. Champ to The Colonial Secretary.

Sir,

Sydney, 30 April, 1891.

I have the honor to inform you that I visited yesterday in the neighbourhood of Liverpool some Italian families, belonging to the same expedition (Marquis de Ray's) as those of New Italy, on the Richmond River, who want to undertake sericulture, and have the same facilities for so doing as their countrymen in the north.

The district and its suitability for orchards, vineyards, &c., are well known, and the land would do admirably for the mulberry-tree.

The silk-worm would also thrive well, for very good silk has already been produced experimentally in the vicinity of Parramatta.

Three or four of the older Italians (men and women) inform me that they have been engaged in their own country at sericulture for the greater part of their lives, and thoroughly understand it in all its branches.

I enclose statement showing requirements, &c.

I have, &c.,

REGINALD CHAMP.

I have consulted with the Treasurer on the proposal to turn to practical advantage the experience and special training of the Italian residents at "New Italy," in the production of silk as a permanent industry. Hitherto all attempts at silk cultivation have been futile, from the want of practical knowledge. These Italians, with their wives and children, appear to be the very persons to prosecute the project to a success, and to permanently establish the industry as a profitable undertaking. They have been visited both by the Director-General of Forests and by Mr. Champ (a gentleman having an intimate knowledge of the silk trade as well as of the latest methods of silk cultivation), and every means has been adopted to ascertain the trustworthiness and general character of the persons whom it is proposed to assist in following this industry. The Attorney-General has prepared a draft bond [A. B.] for the persons who receive assistance to execute for the repayment of the advances. Under these conditions, and directing that the utmost care and precaution be exercised for the protection of the Government, I approve of the schedule of advances submitted by Mr. Champ, exclusive of the residents near Liverpool.—H.P., 5/5/91.

Enclosure [A B.]

Know all men by these presents that I, _____ of _____ in the Colony of New South Wales, am held and firmly bound unto Her Most Gracious Majesty Queen Victoria in the penal sum of _____ sterling, to be paid to Her said Majesty, Her heirs, or successors, for which payment, well and truly to be made, I bind myself, my heirs, executors, and administrators, firmly by these presents.

Sealed with my seal: Dated the _____ day of _____, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and ninety-one.

Now the condition of the above written bond and obligation is such that if the above bounden _____ his heirs, executors, or administrators, shall pay to Her said Majesty, Her heirs, or successors, the sum of _____ on or before the _____ day of _____ in the year one thousand eight hundred and ninety _____ (or on demand), together with interest thereon at the rate of _____ per cent. per annum (such interest to commence and be computed from the day of the date of the above written bond and obligation), then the above written bond and obligation shall be void, otherwise the same shall remain in full force and virtue.

T. Ewing, Esq., M.P., to The Principal Under Secretary.

Dear Sir, _____ Parliament House, 5 May, 1891.
Maybe Mr. Champ could report on this matter. I trust that Mr. McMullen may be met if possible. Yours, &c.,

Dear Sir, _____ Pimlico North, 1 May, 1891.
I see that the Government (Colonial Secretary's Department) are distributing seeds and cuttings of the white mulberry and eggs of the silkworm to the Italians at New Italy, and others who would experiment with them. Perhaps you would get them to send me some if they have not been all distributed. I am, &c.,

Crown Solicitor's Office, Sydney, 9 May, 1891.

Pursuant to instructions I have had prepared and now have the honor to forward herewith forms of bond to be taken from settlers at New Italy to whom advances are to be made to enable them to carry on the silk industry.

I would suggest that the particulars appropriate to each case be filled in the schedule from the list with the papers, and that the bond be executed under seal, and in duplicate, one copy to be retained by your Department, and the other forwarded to the Department of Lands.

It will be necessary that one of such copies be stamped within one month of its execution with a £1 stamp, the cost of which should be borne by the obligor.

I forward a specimen copy as a guide in carrying out the above directions.

BOND to secure advances for the encouragement of sericulture at "New Italy."

WILLIAMS,
Crown Solicitor.

Mr. R. Champ to The Principal Under Secretary.

Sericulture.

Sir,

Sydney, 21 May, 1891.

I returned from Adelaide to-day after arranging for the transport to this Colony of white mulberry cuttings and trees for distribution at New Italy by the Government.

I beg to report that I have been very successful in my errand.

Cuttings.

The South Australian Forest Department will send over, as soon as the trees from which they are to be taken will permit, about 100,000 cuttings.

Trees.

Also from 1,500 to 2,000 young rooted trees. I am pleased to have been able to obtain the latter, as they will be most valuable in hastening the introduction of the industry, even if only on a small scale. In fact I intend to try and make an experiment on the spot (New Italy) with these trees next spring, should they yield to the extent I anticipate, and permit a small picking of leaves to be obtained so early.

I can in this case procure the needful small quantity of silk-worm grain.

Cost.

Both cuttings and trees are to be supplied free of charge, excepting of course the cost of carriage and packing, which will be trifling compared with their value.

The above quantity of trees, &c., is below the number required by the Italians and surrounding farmers, but will be augmented by a supply from Mr. George Thorne, Castle Hill, N.S.W. The Director General of Forests takes the bulk of these for rooting in the Government nursery at Gosford, to be transplanted next year.

I hope also to obtain a further hundred or so of trees from this source, which will be sent direct to New Italy.

The parent trees will yield still larger quantities of cuttings next year, as they are being specially pollarded this year for this end.

I have, &c.,

REGINALD CHAMP.

Sericulture—Mulberry Trees for New Italy.

Sir,

Sydney, 29th May, 1891.

I beg to report having visited yesterday Mr. George Thorne, of Castle Hill, who is supplying the Department with a number of white mulberry trees and cuttings, gratis, as in the case of those coming from South Australia (referred to in my report of the 21st inst.), excepting cost of carriage, &c.

This gentleman will be able to supply about 400 young trees and a large number of cuttings, possibly 75,000 to 100,000.

I have arranged for the former to go direct to New Italy, whilst the bulk of the latter are to be taken by the Director-General of Forests in the first instance.

I have, &c.,

REGINALD CHAMP.

The Principal Under Secretary to Mr. R. Champ.

Sir,

Colonial Secretary's Office, Sydney 6 June, 1891.

Referring to your letter of the 30th April last, submitting a statement showing the number of persons at New Italy, Richmond River, who have applied for assistance to enable them to carry on the work of sericulture, also the amounts required to be advanced to them for such purposes, I am directed to inform you that the Colonial Secretary approves of the schedule of advances submitted by you, provided that the utmost care and precaution is exercised for the protection of the Government, and to request that you will be good enough to have the bonds which were handed to you duly signed by the respective claimants and returned to this Office, so that the arrangements for payment of such advances may be completed.

I have, &c.,

CRITCHETT WALKER,

Principal Under Secretary.

The Principal Under Secretary to Mr. R. Champ.

Sir,

Colonial Secretary's Office, Sydney, 9 June, 1891.

I am directed by the Colonial Secretary to transmit herewith for any remarks which you may be pleased to offer a letter from Mr. Thomas Ewing, forwarding an application for seeds and cuttings of the white mulberry, and eggs of the silkworm.

Bonds for Signature.

Sir,

Woodburn, Richmond River, 12 June, 1891.

I telegraphed to you on the 9th instant, stating that I had obtained signatures to the majority of the bonds, and asked for instructions. I have since received your letter dated the 6th instant.

Bonds Signed.

In accordance therewith, I now beg to enclose twenty-one bonds duly signed and witnessed.

Bonds Unsigned.

Those men who have not yet signed are either temporarily away, or are inaccessible at present, owing to the extremely bad state of the roads. As, however, opportunity permits, I shall obtain their signatures and forward their bonds to you.

Instalments Wanted.

I enclose schedule of the first instalments on account of advances, required by those who have signed, amounting in all to £250, and as they are very much in need of these small sums, shall be glad if the cheques can be sent up without delay. It will be observed that all those who have signed do not at once apply for their advances. This is, I think, evidence of their honesty and integrity, for they are loath to unnecessarily involve themselves, and only want to borrow the money as they absolutely need it, and for carrying on work in hand.

Handing over the Money.

As I understand the cheques are to be given out in conjunction with the police, and that Mr. Casey, stationed at Grafton, has been mentioned for this duty, I would point out that this gentleman is not the officer for the district in which is New Italy, but that Sub-Inspector Dennis Carroll, at Lismore, is, and that it would be more convenient for all concerned if the latter could be employed.

"Sericulture."

Sir,

Woodburn, Richmond River, 15 June, 1891.

I have to acknowledge the receipt of your letter, returned herewith, dated the 9th instant, with enclosures.

I consider, and have always maintained, that the more bona fide people who now undertake the industry of sericulture in the Colony the better will its value be demonstrated, and therefore recommend that the applicant mentioned in your letter be supplied with the material he wants, provided there be sufficient after supplying the Italians.

North Pimlico, the residence of the applicant, is situate on the Lower Richmond, in the same district as New Italy.

If approved, I can supply him from the stock to be shortly sent up here, together with the other farmers, whose names and applications of a similar nature I submitted in a letter dated the 8th April last.

I now append a revised list of all these farmers for approval. If sanctioned, I will see that they get the cuttings this year if possible. I enclose the last application received.

I have, &c.,

REGINALD CHAMP.

FARMERS in neighbourhood of New Italy who have applied for mulberry cuttings and seed:—

W. H. Williams, Swan Bay; Thomas Flett, near New Italy; Alexander Meston, Woodburn; Joseph Pursey, Bungawalbin; James Betteridge, Woodburn; Thomas Watson, Bolton Flat, New Italy; W. B. M'Mullen, Pimlico North; A. Bashford, Llangothlin.

I propose to give them from 500 to 4,000 cuttings each if stock will bear it, also some seed when it arrives.

Sir,

Colonial Secretary's Office, Sydney, 3 July, 1891.

In reply to your letter of the 19th ultimo, submitting a schedule of advances, amounting to £273, to be made to the Italian residents of New Italy to assist them in the industry of sericulture, I am directed by the Colonial Secretary to inform you, that the Inspector-General of Police has been invited to cause payment of the amount in question (for which a cheque has been forwarded to him) by the Police authorities acting in conjunction with you, and to request that you will be good enough to obtain the necessary acknowledgment on the bonds forwarded herewith, and the abstract to be duly receipted.

2. In compliance with your request I am desired to forward under separate cover the bonds, duly translated in Italian, for the information of the parties interested.

I have, &c.,

The Principal Under Secretary to The Inspector-General of Police.

Sir,

Colonial Secretary's Office, Sydney, 3 July, 1891.

Mr. Reginald Champ, of Woodburn, having been appointed to advise the Italian residents of New Italy, Richmond River, in carrying on the industry of sericulture, and the Government having decided to render assistance to them by advancing money from time to time under certain conditions, I am directed by the Colonial Secretary to enclose a cheque for £273, which is to be paid to the persons mentioned in the accompanying voucher in the amounts set opposite their respective names, and to request that you will be good enough to cause payment to be made by the police authorities to act in conjunction with Mr. Champ, who has been instructed to obtain the necessary receipt from each claimant.

Sericulture.

Woodburn, 6 July, 1891.

The erection of a model "Magnannerie" or silk-worm house at "New Italy" would greatly assist the operations being carried out by the Government to introduce the above industry into the district by practically demonstrating the capabilities of the land in regard to this matter, both to the Italians and surrounding farmers.

I have previously pointed out the importance of having these buildings properly erected to ensure good results, though they may be of the cheapest material. The favourable climate here, compared with that of European silk-producing countries, allows of a much more simple and economical building being utilised.

I beg to submit herewith a rough plan, drawn out by myself, of the building I think would be best suited for the purpose. [Plan separate.]

The characteristic features are:—

1. The material is nearly all obtainable on the ground.
2. The walls of mud and rough hewn timber supports, which will largely avoid variations of temperature, and are very durable.
3. Fine gauze-covered windows or openings, which will ventilate, and at the same time modulate the light of the room.
4. A system of double-swinging trays for the worms to feed upon, which almost automatically ventilate the insects in sultry weather, and, from their slight connection with the building, minimise the chances of any vermin, ants, &c., gaining access to the trays.
5. Duplicate trays, which enable the cleansing to be done with little labour and despatch.
6. At the end of the silk season the trays and supports are all easily removed, and the shed can be used for storage and other ordinary purposes of the farm.

I estimate the cost of erecting this building to be not more than £70 or £80, of which, of course, labour would be the largest item.

I beg therefore to respectfully recommend that the erection of such a building be approved.

In another letter of this date I apply for the granting of a site.

Sir,

Woodburn, 21 July, 1891.

Herewith I beg to hand you fourteen bonds, with payments acknowledged on the fly-leaves, amounting in all to £273, as instructed in your letter dated 3rd instant.

Payments were made in conjunction with the police authorities, to whom have been handed the abstracts duly received.

2. I have received and distributed the bonds translated into Italian.

3. I should much like to have, if feasible, copies of instructions in planting printed and forwarded, mentioned in my letter dated 12th ultimo, in order to distribute them as early as possible, as I have already distributed some trees and cuttings, and am shortly expecting the final consignment from South Australia of cuttings. When these have arrived and been distributed I shall report the result.

Sir,

Woodburn, 3 August, 1891.

I beg to enclose statement of this year's distribution of mulberry trees and cuttings to the settlers at New Italy and some of the surrounding farmers.

The number falls far short of that ultimately wanted, but is all that was available this year.

Next season larger quantities may be obtained, which added to the trees being propagated by the Forest Department at Gosford State Nursery, will, I hope, make up the desired quantity.

In addition the seed ordered from Europe has yet to arrive and be distributed.

In the meantime land is being prepared for planting next season.

Sericulture.

Sir,

Woodburn, 10 August, 1891.

Referring to my letter and statement of the 3rd instant, I beg to inform you that the mulberry trees and cuttings therein mentioned have been satisfactorily planted.

Those first planted are already "shooting," which even now demonstrates the favourable climate of the district.

Should the applications for a building and land made in my letters of the 6th ultimo be approved, I think, judging from the growth of the common mulberry and other fruit trees in New Italy, that a practical start in cocoon-raising may be made in about eighteen months time.

I would again point out the necessity of erecting the "magnannerie," for, in making a beginning the product of the whole of the young trees distributed would be needed to feed even a comparatively small quantity of silkworm grain, which could be done at a central "house" such as I have suggested.

Otherwise any individual supply of leaves will not, of course, be sufficient to produce anything tangible for a longer period.

As the trees are multiplied and mature, and become more productive, each settler can build his own "magnannerie" after this model, and work independently.

 MR. CHARLES BRADY'S SERVICES IN CONNECTION WITH SERICULTURE.

 REPORT.

THE SELECT COMMITTEE of the Legislative Assembly, appointed on 21st December, 1891,—“with power to send for persons and papers to inquire into and report upon the services rendered to the Colony in connection with sericulture by Charles Brady,”—have agreed to the following Report:—

Your Committee, having examined the witnesses named in the list,* See list, page 5. whose evidence will be found appended hereto, find:—

1. That Mr. Charles Brady has rendered some service to the Colony by his pioneer efforts in the direction of sericulture.
2. That Mr. Brady has failed to make the industry of sericulture of commercial benefit to the Colony.
3. That the evidence taken serves to show that it would be premature, with our limited population, for the Government to embark in the industry of sericulture.

Your Committee are of opinion that there are no papers to prove that Mr. Brady has any legal claim on the Government for pecuniary consideration.

THOMAS ROSE,
Chairman.

MINUTES OF EVIDENCE

TAKEN BEFORE

THE SELECT COMMITTEE

ON THE

CLAIM OF MR. CHARLES BRADY.

THURSDAY, 11 FEBRUARY, 1892.

Present:—

MR. BARNES, | MR. G. D. CLARK,
T. ROSE, ESQ., IN THE CHAIR.

Walter Scott Campbell called in, sworn, and examined:—

1. Chairman.] What are you? Chief Draftsman in the Department of Mines.
2. In your official capacity you are acquainted with what has been done in the Colony in regard to the question of sericulture? Yes. I was instructed by the late Secretary for Mines and Agriculture, Mr. Sydney Smith, to make a report on Mr. Brady's farm, and to ascertain what he required. He made some claim on the Government. I happened to be in the neighbourhood at the time, and I received a telegram from the Minister asking me to proceed to Mr. Brady's place and ascertain what he really wanted.
3. How long ago was that? Last October twelve months.
4. What was the result of your visit? The result was that I furnished the following report:—

Mr. W. S.
Campbell.
11 Feb., 1892.

Sir,

Department of Mines, 2nd November, 1889.

In accordance with instructions by telegraph received when on leave of absence at the Richmond River, I proceeded on the 18th of last month to the Tweed River to obtain information respecting Mr. Brady's sericultural establishment, and matter connected with the reserve for silk culture, and I have the honor most respectfully to report.

I have carefully read through all papers, pamphlets, and other printed documents that I can obtain with respect to Mr. Brady's connection with the silk industry in N. S. Wales, and his occupation of the silk reserve in question, in order to enable me to form an opinion as to whether any promise was ever made, by any Government, that the land reserved for silk culture would be granted to Mr. Brady. I append copies of some of the most important papers in connection with the subject, as well as copies of Mr. Brady's petition to the Legislative Assembly, and correspondence printed by order of the Assembly.

In the year 1870, Mr. Brady was empowered to select 1,280 acres of land, to be reserved, and afterwards to be leased to him, in the vicinity of Curl Curl, near Manly Beach, for the purpose of establishing the silk industry, but the land not being suitable, Mr. Brady selected 1,280 acres on the north arm of the Tweed River. To this Mr. Secretary Robertson objected, and would not approve of more than 640 acres being set apart; however, on the 5th December, 1872, Mr. Secretary Farnell allowed the 1,280 acres on the Tweed River, selected by Mr. Brady, to be set apart and leased at a nominal rent. In April, 1875, a petition was sent to the Minister for Lands from "free-selectors, landholders, and inhabitants of the Tweed River," praying that the reserve of 1,280 acres "should no longer be permitted to retard the progress of settlement and improvement on the river, and that it may be at once revoked and the land thrown open to selection." In May, 1876, Mr. Brady forwarded a petition to the Legislative Assembly, and this I respectfully beg the Minister will read; and in July of the same year the committee of the Society for the promotion of the growth of silk made a request to Mr. Secretary Robertson that the 1,280 acres should be granted to Mr. Brady, but this request was declined.

After Mr. Brady had built a house, planted a number of varieties of mulberries, and made improvements, it was found that he had mistaken the boundaries of the silk reserve, and had effected his improvements on an adjoining village reserve, and Mr. Secretary Baker decided that "every consideration that is possible should be shown to Mr. Brady in regard to this matter. Perhaps a portion of the reserve on which are his improvements might be cancelled and a special lease be granted to him of such part, or the whole reserve be cancelled and the area be included in the special area he now has." Under this decision Mr. Brady was permitted a special lease, and then allowed to purchase 104 acres in virtue of improvements.

Mr.

Mr. W. S.
Campbell.
11 Feb., 1892.

Mr. Brady's special lease of the 1,250 acres lapsed by the effluxion of time, and he was not permitted to renew it in consequence of nothing having been done on the land. He then applied for a special lease of a part, 200 acres, but this application was not entertained in consequence of a report from Mr. District Surveyor Donaldson, based upon a report from Mr. Surveyor Johnson. Mr. Donaldson said, "No improvements were made on the land nor anything done with it . . . Mr. Johnson also reports that no other landholder in the district has engaged in sericulture, or has any intention of doing so, so far as he can ascertain. The granting of the lease would be against the wishes of the people of the district generally, and a petition was forwarded in April, 1875, protesting against the lease to Mr. Brady of reserve 186 acres. As the effect that all that has been done to encourage this industry by granting the leases before mentioned to Mr. Brady, and afterwards permitting him to purchase 104 acres in virtue of improvements made whilst under special lease, has not been favourable, there being only himself engaged in it, and as he has only an area of 10 acres, out of about 70 which are suitable, devoted to the purpose in connection with sericulture, I am of opinion that it is not desirable in the public interests to grant him a lease of 200 acres which he applies for, or any further lease for the purpose." As Mr. Donaldson has made use of the petition in support of his report, I think it only proper to invite attention to letters from some of the persons who signed the petition, and especially to one from the Hon. E. A. T. Pery, who says, "On consideration I have long come to the conclusion that the petition in question was malevolent in the extreme, and was started for private and spiteful motives. It has also come to my knowledge that other residents of the Tweed regret ever having signed the same."

There can be no doubt that many of the settlers have, until recently, considered sericulture a paltry industry, suitable only for little children, and could not realise its importance, and they doubtless have thought that the setting apart of a large area of land for the establishment of the silk industry to be ridiculous in the extreme. There are always great difficulties to be overcome in introducing industries, and I may mention that of sugar-growing. For years and years the late Mr. Scott, of Brisbane Water, advocated this industry and introduced sugar-cane, but without the slightest effect, until it was taken in hand at last by the Colonial Sugar Refining Company; and it is now proved to be very successful and remunerative to the farmers under contract to the Company, and also apparently to the Company, who are increasing their mills on the Richmond and Clarence Rivers. For his advocacy and experiments on behalf of that industry Mr. Scott was awarded a pension by the Government.

I respectfully beg to state that I can find no trace of any promise having been made, by any Government, that an area of land should be granted to Mr. Brady, and I conclude that if any such promise was made by Sir Chas. Cowper, or any member of a Government, that it must have been made personally. (See Mr. Brady's Petition.)

The magnificent silkworms belonging to Mr. Brady I saw at a most opportune time; they were in the most perfect state of health, very hardy, and were quite undisturbed by a heavy thunderstorm which occurred during my visit. I feel quite sure that they have no trace whatever of any of the virulent diseases which are so fatal in other countries. They are thoroughly acclimatised, and the dozen distinct "Australian Races," the remains of 200 distinct varieties, are the result of years of patient labour, great expense, and extreme care in breeding and selecting, and must no doubt be of great value. At one time, before the European diseases were successfully checked, Mr. Brady obtained as much as £3 3s. per ounce for his healthy eggs (or grain) in France.

There are many varieties of mulberries growing in the plantation with great luxuriance and vigour, so much so that during one season when a considerable quantity of food was required some of the trees were pruned back four times, and produced four crops of leaves, a most severe trial.

There can be no doubt that the climate of the Tweed, and also of other districts to the south, is admirably adapted to the growth of the mulberry, which would grow wild, and successfully compete with the indigenous brush timber just as the edible passion-fruit, the Sida retusa and the Lantana do.

I beg now to invite particular attention to Mr. Brady's perfected system of artificial hybernation, by which a daily succession of silkworms can be hatched throughout the year. Dr. Bennett, writing in 1870, said, "The well-known operations of Mr. Brady in the Colony have already caused considerable attention to be directed to Australia; and the very remarkable system originated by that gentleman, and carried on from time to time during several years under the observation of this Society (acclimatisation) of producing a succession of daily broods and crops of silk during a great part of our long season is highly encouraging. This very important fact, so honorable, and, if rightly understood, so calculated to do good to the Colony, was thus commented on by Mr. Dickens, President of the Silk Supply Association of London, at a public meeting held at Coventry—"The fact of producing silk day by day was most wonderful, and was what was not done in any other part of the world," and Mr. Chadwick, M.P., at the same meeting, took occasion to say in reference to this Australian plan, "The daily production exhibited an improvement in the production of silk which would be as important a fact as ever occurred in the silk trade."

"When I first engaged in this enterprise," wrote Mr. Brady to the Colonial Secretary in 1870, "I own I myself entertained some misgiving about the cost of labour. It was this very circumstance which set me to work to contrive means to obviate what might prove a serious obstacle to a commercial success in silk-growing in these colonies, and I devised the plan of multiplying the number of crops obtainable in a single season. In every country besides this the most valuable worms (being annual only) give but one brood or crop a year, and this happening at the most unsettled and precarious period is attended with great risk, and frequently with serious expenses and casualties, it occurred to me to profit by our long season of clear weather, repeatedly to take advantage of our opportunities for providing sustenance during many months continuously for the worms, and by managing to have worms to consume the food at such times as the many different varieties of mulberry are severally in perfection. This is done by employing cold and moisture as well as warmth in the preservation and management of the grain, and also by having many varieties of mulberry silkworms adapted by their nature to thrive on the different varieties of food-plant. To thoroughly carry out my plan, I imported at great expense mulberry plants of every country, the quality of which at all (sic) gave hopes of obtaining useful sorts; and I also, at even much greater cost, and after many and repeated failures, succeeded in introducing and rearing in this Colony and in Queensland all the most celebrated and choicest breeds of silkworms from every silk-growing country. A large number of these have, after years of severe labour and close attention, become acclimatised, and many important races, under the influence of careful as well as special treatment, prolonged through several generations, have become freed from the taint of disease, and are now healthy." To arrange this system of "daily succession," one whole year of preparation is required.

Another important system has been perfected by Mr. Brady. During the period of "graining," as it is termed, that is, when the silkworm moths emerge from their cocoons, extraordinary care and attention are necessary with regard to the coupling of the moths, &c., &c., and the work is most severe on the attendants; but by Mr. Brady's system all this severe work can be avoided.

The importance of the system of "daily succession" in a climate where the mulberry succeeds so admirably cannot be over-estimated, for where one crop of silk will not pay, ten or a dozen or more would pay very handsomely; for instance, where one family could produce by one crop say £20 worth of silk under the annual system, it could, under Mr. Brady's system, produce ten times the quantity of silk without difficulty, or say £200 worth. Thus the value of artificial hybernation becomes apparent.

I have no doubt whatever that if sericulture were taken in hand properly by a sufficient number of intelligent settlers, to establish the industry and place it on a commercial footing, its ultimate importance could not be over-estimated, and might become equal to that of our wool. The industry could be divided into the raising of eggs or grain, the rearing of worms for silk only, and the growing of mulberries for food.

Mr. Brady informed me that he is now making arrangements to leave the Colony when he has secured his stock of grain, which will be ready in a month or so; that he decided to do so some years ago, but owing to the severe sickness of Mrs. Brady, who could not be moved (Mrs. Brady is now dead), he was prevented; and that he has received overtures from other countries to give instruction in sericulture. If his knowledge is lost to the Colony, it would, in my opinion, be a national loss, and I therefore respectfully beg to recommend that arrangements may be made as soon as possible to retain his services, and that he be offered a salary or retaining fee to give a thorough course of instruction in sericulture, embracing his systems of "artificial hybernation" and "graining" to intelligent persons. And for this purpose a school of sericulture be established on the reserve (if it be decided that this cannot be granted to Mr. Brady); and I also beg to submit that Mr. Brady be paid for his stock of worms (or the use of these) and for his mulberries, for it would take some years to provide sufficient food for even a small number of silkworms. I also beg to suggest that the value of the silkworms and mulberries should be determined by persons skilled in sericulture—one to be appointed by Mr. Brady and one by the Government; and I beg to suggest the names of Mr. Thorne, of Castle Hill, who is, I believe, a most skilful sericulturist, or Mr. J. T. Hobbs, C.P.S., of Casino, who I know is an expert in these matters.

I do not think that up to the present time any settler in the Tweed River district has attempted sericulture; but I met an intelligent farmer, one who had signed the petition against Mr. Brady (which he deeply regrets). He is greatly concerned at Mr. Brady's intended departure from the district, and is most anxious that he should remain. He informed me that some of the farmers were at last beginning to see that there was something in Mr. Brady's silk culture after all; that he felt sure that many of the farmers would cultivate the mulberry largely if Mr. Brady remained, for they were awakening up to the fact that they must take up something besides the growing of cane and corn, especially those settlers who have selected land on the uplands and mountains back from the river where cane cannot be grown with profit.

I beg most respectfully to add that Mr. Brady fully believes that a direct promise was made that the reserve for silk culture would be granted to him, to compensate him for his heavy expenses in introducing or creating perfectly healthy races of silkworms, and many varieties of mulberries; and that he has been living on year after year fully believing that the promise would be fulfilled.

In the meantime I beg to recommend that the reserve may be retained, because it is probable that it will be subdivided and sold, as a design for subdivision has already been made.

The Hon. the Minister for Mines.

Correspondence on silk culture.

5. Mr. G. D. Clark.] In addition to what is contained in your report, have you any special knowledge with regard to silk culture in other parts of the world? No; I have merely taken the subject up myself as a little hobby, and as a boy would—that is all. I have a pretty good idea of what silkworms are, and what they should be.

6. I believe you have given a considerable amount of attention to this question, and also that of agriculture? Yes; all my life I have been mixed up with it—ever since childhood.

7. And you really think, as stated in your report, that it would be advisable to take such steps as would test the value of Mr. Brady's recommendations or opinions on this question, or at any rate provide for the diffusion of information on the subject? Yes, most decidedly I do. I think it would be a very important industry; but it is no use undertaking it in a small way. It must be done on a large scale, and the difficulty is for people to grow enough food for the silkworms. It is no use pottering with it—it must be done at once on a pretty large scale.

8. Could you give the Committee any information, and experience gained, since you furnished your report to the Minister two years ago;—could you, for instance, make any definite recommendation as to the best means to be adopted to establish this industry? You might have noticed that I say in my report that I do not think one crop would pay at all, and I am positive that it would not. Unless this system of Mr. Brady's is brought into existence, I do not think the industry is worth taking up at all. That is my experience of silk-growing in these colonies; and Mrs. Neal, on the Murray, tried it, and several other people tried it, but they never had sufficient food to begin with. They began on too large a scale at first, and then they had no food to keep the worms. But in tropical climates the mulberries grow like weeds, and you can always keep a crop, and they do not cast their leaves as they do down here. In some parts they are not deciduous; so that you always have food, and you can keep on year after year. Mr. Brady has several varieties of the mulberry—some fit for one purpose, some fit for another.

9. And you really think that the special information acquired by Mr. Brady from a study of this question during a long series of years should, by some method or other, become the property of the Colony? Most undoubtedly I think so. I have, of course, only an interest in the question as one of the people. My anxiety is to see agriculture attain to something better than it is, and to see various branches of it encouraged. The farmers stick to one or two crops only. When any disaster occurs to a single crop, they are done altogether; and I think that as far as possible other branches of the industry should be encouraged.

10. Mr. Barnes.] Do you think that in regard to climate and other conditions that the Tweed River is well adapted for sericulture? Yes, it is admirably adapted. Mr. Brady's worms are most magnificent specimens—in fact, he puts them outside, and the rain can go on them, and it does not seem to injure them at all. They are very hardy, showing that the climate is admirably adapted to their growth.

11. And you believe it to be possible to obtain ten crops a year? I am certain of it. I had a long conversation with Dr. Bennett, and he told me there was no doubt about it—that Mr. Brady had succeeded in doing it.

12. You are aware of course that to most persons who have had anything to do with silkworms the statement seems incredulous? Yes; but it is a fact. There is an old publication in which Dr. Bennett has made a report to that effect. I do not think there is the slightest doubt about it, because it was done here twenty years ago.

13. Chairman.] Is this the only part of the world where it has ever been done? Yes. It has been attempted in other countries, I believe, some trials having been made; but they have never been successful.

14. Mr. Barnes.] You can find no trace whatever of a promise having been made to Mr. Brady? I can find no evidence at all.

15. And there are no papers missing—you have had access to them all? Yes; I am positive I have all the papers. My report is the result of a very careful investigation of the whole matter.

16. Do these worms produce a crop of better quality than the worms in other countries? Yes; it is admirable silk. These are some of the cocoons (produced). You will see what splendid silk it is. The Government are trying to establish the industry amongst the Italians at New Italy, between the Richmond and the Clarence. Mr. Brady has about 10 acres of land devoted to this purpose on which he grows about eighteen or twenty varieties. That land is his own property. Some varieties are better for silk, and other varieties are better for grain, and so on. Then, again, some varieties suit different climates. It would be no use for instance planting a variety of the mulberries that does well up on the north down on the dry plains. Mr. Brady seems to have tested them very thoroughly, and got to know what is the best according to the peculiar conditions. He has the whole thing at his finger-ends as far as I can understand. I have here all the papers in the Department on the subject, which I will leave for reference by the Committee.

James Fry called in, sworn, and examined :—

- Mr. J. Fry.
11 Feb., 1892.
17. Chairman.] Where do you live? At Blacktown.
18. Have you had any experience in sericulture? Yes; for a number of years I took a great deal of interest in it. I have not done so during the last few years.
19. In this Colony? Yes, at Blacktown. I have got thousands of mulberry-trees there now which are in a state of neglect.
20. You were good enough to send me the other day a report of the evidence on the subject which you were prepared to give to the Committee;—will you hand in that report to be attached as an appendix to your evidence? Yes. [Appendix A.]
21. You say you have a large number of mulberry-trees at Blacktown? I had.
22. Did you make money out of the transaction? Not a bit.
23. You lost? No, I do not say that. The thing could not come to any head at all.
24. How was that? I do not believe in anything being obtained from sericulture except after years. The trees must reach a certain age. What I did at Blacktown was more in the way of experiment than anything else. I had rearings year after year, but it was only on a small scale. I did not produce anything for export that was worth mentioning.
25. Then your experience so far is this, that you have not proved whether or not mulberry-trees will pay? Certainly I have not proved it.
26. You only experimented for pleasure more than for pecuniary profit? All I got out of it in ten years was this: I sold 500 trees to go to New Zealand at £8 per 100 one winter. The following winter I sold 1,000 trees for New Zealand at £8 per 100. On another occasion I sold 17 ounces of my silk-worm eggs at £1 per ounce. You may call that a loss, because it did not pay me for the labour.
27. How many years do you estimate it would take before you got back any return? Eight years, as I have stated in my report. I believe it would be eight years before you could get any appreciable return. It is not enough to simply have the leaves and feed the worms. That is right enough so far as it goes. The worms will live and thrive, but they do not produce the silk in quantities. I have proved by experiment, and it is also the opinion of Italian authorities, that in the early years of mulberry-trees there is far more nutritive than silky matter in the leaf. The silky matter is a liquid resin. I have tested this matter, as I say, by practical experiment. I have taken worms of the same breed, and I have reared them in two distinct lots—one on two trees that were matured—old English mulberry-trees that were in the ground before my time—and the other lot I have reared on trees of my own planting. In the case of those reared on the mature trees the worms began to spin on the twenty-ninth day from the hatching, which was very good. The others that came out from their eggs on the same day did not begin to spin until from the thirty-fourth till the thirty-seventh day. Not only that, but the cocoons in the one case weighed 289 to the pound, and in the other case 350, 400, 450, and even up to 500 to the pound. Consequently there was so much more silk in the first lot than in the second.
28. From the old trees? Yes. The trees must have a certain maturity before any practical and commercial good can be obtained from them. This is a very important point, because there is a tendency to think that after a year or two the silk can be got for export. It is nothing of the kind. The worms will thrive and lay eggs, but when you come to weigh their cocoons you find the result is not satisfactory. In India, where they train the worms on young trees a year or two old, they take 3,000 cocoons to a single pound weight in some cases. The Italian standard is 240 cocoons to a pound, and that is fine work. So that it comes to this, that it costs far more to grow bad silk than it does to grow good silk. The good silk is reared in less time and with less labour.
29. Mr. G. D. Clark.] You know Mr. Brady very well, I suppose? I do.
30. Do you understand the new process he is trying to bring into operation, whereby, in spite of the higher wages and other conditions, he thinks he can make the industry a payable one in this Colony? Yes. I had a good deal of conversation with Mr. Brady on that very point in former years, and I consider that his discovery—for it was a discovery on his part—was something wonderful, namely, that he could bring out silkworm eggs to hatch at will; that he could have them out on the day he wanted—looking forward, as the case might be. That is a most wonderful thing. It was something astounding when it was first mentioned. In Europe sometimes the peculiarity of a season is such that the worms have hatched out the eggs before the mulberry shoots have come, and the worms have consequently died. They have met this difficulty in Europe by taking leaves of the previous season, drying them and powdering them up and keeping them in jars, so that in case the worms come out before the mulberry shoots they can be fed on this powdered leaf of the previous year. Of course all that would be done away with if you could bring your worms out at will. In my own small way I have had two rearings in a season, and Mr. Brady has given me the eggs when I wanted them. In the ordinary course the eggs would have hatched out in September, but I did not want them until November or December, and Mr. Brady has given them to me at the exact time when I required them. He has said to me, “If you have those eggs now you will find that in about a fortnight’s time the worms will hatch out,” and I have found it to be so. This was a very great discovery.
31. Chairman.] And they have not discovered anything like that in Europe? No; not to the best of my knowledge.
32. Does Mr. Brady monopolise the secret still. Is he the only one in the world who is acquainted with this process? I do not know that there is much secret about it; it is a matter of science or skill. He has a monopoly of the skill.
33. In being able to bring that about? Yes. I believe it has got to be mentioned in Europe, but beyond that I do not know.
34. You have not heard of any other case? No.
35. Mr. G. D. Clark.] I believe you were a member of the committee appointed some years ago with a view to the promotion of silk culture? Yes.
36. Did you hear of any definite promise being made by the late Sir John Robertson to Mr. Brady? I heard of no promise being made. I was a member of that committee. I went to Mr. Secretary Robertson with other gentlemen, including Mr. T. S. Mort and Mr. James Manning, whom I remember specially. I have been unable to find any newspaper report of that meeting. I used to keep these things posted in a book, but I have not been able to find this report. I cannot recollect therefore specifically what was said, but I remember this, that when we came out from the interview Mr. T. S. Mort expressed strong strong disappointment that Sir John Robertson did not seem favourable to Mr. Brady having the land given to him, and Mr. James Manning also expressed disappointment.

Mr. J. Fry.

11 Feb., 1892.

37. From your own experiments, do you think it is possible, if the information acquired by Mr. Brady were put into practical effect, that sericulture could be made a profitable industry in this country? I do. I have not lost my faith in it at all. I have not been actively engaged in it because I am getting into years, and for private and domestic reasons I wanted to move nearer town. I have not lost my faith in it, but it must be gone about in the right way. You must have a superabundance of trees all over the country in suitable parts before anything can be done. I have no faith whatever in the system of putting in the cuttings and feeding the worms a year or so afterwards.

38. Chairman.] You think it will take eight years? Yes. I have said in my memorandum that I do not think the industry could be brought into operation until the beginning of next century.

39. Mr. G. D. Clark.] Do you know anything of the northern rivers? No; I have never been there.

40. Do you know any parts of the Colony which, in your opinion, are specially suited for the growth of mulberries? No; my acquaintance with the country is too limited.

41. Chairman.] Have they not very cheap labour in connection with the production of silk? Yes, they have. On this point I may say that Dandolo, the great Italian authority, who revived the silk business when it was in a bad way in Italy at the beginning of this century, gives in his book two account sales of silk which he had sold and leaves which he had bought. From these account sales I took out every item of labour and multiplied it by 5, and I said, "Suppose this labour had been five times the amount, there would still be a profit on the silk after the man had bought the leaves." To my mind the labour difficulty is no difficulty. One season I resolved that I should do everything myself and have no assistance. From the getting up in the morning until the last feed at night I did everything. I collected the leaves from my ground, I fed the worms, I cleaned them, and did everything. Then it simply became a matter of arithmetic. If one man can attend to so many thousand silkworms, ten men can attend to ten times the number or more, because division of labour would materially help. I know it became perfectly clear to my own mind that the labour difficulty was no difficulty.

42. If we establish this industry we shall have to export the product and compete against cheap labour in the open market;—do you think we could afford to pay a man £2 10s. a week to produce silk and compete in a foreign market? I do not think so. I do not think at the first blush that you could afford to pay every man occupied in the industry 50s. a week.

43. Could you give us an idea as to what would pay;—could you pay a man 35s a week? Dandolo in his book says that to rear 5 oz. of silkworm eggs requires labour equal to that of one man for 100 days.

44. Is it not your opinion that while you could afford to pay one foreman the great bulk of the work would have to be done by boys and girls? No, that is not my opinion. I distinctly based my calculations some years ago on adult labour.

45. But only poorly paid? The wages in Italy being 1s. a day, multiply that by 5 and it will give 5s. a day here, or 30s. a week. I would say 30s. without hesitation.

46. A great many people seem to think that silk culture can only be made payable by the employment of boys and girls? I know that is a prevalent idea; but I have given the result of calculations I made on the subject some years ago.

47. Mr. Barnes.] You think then that sericulture could be made a payable industry in the Colony? Yes.

48. From what you say I conclude that you think that the trees should be grown in different parts of the Colony so that the silkworms should be provided with food continuously, that when the leaves failed at one place you could procure them at another place? Not for that reason. I would have them fixed in different parts of the Colony to form a sort of nucleus to attract the people to begin with while they were growing. If those trees are not carefully cultured no good will result. Dandolo says distinctly that if the trees are not cared for during the first eight or ten years a man will not get from 1,000 trees at the end of that time what he will get from 200 trees at the end of six years.

49. You feel confident I suppose that Mr. Brady can produce eight or ten crops of worms a year? Theoretically so—it all depends upon the food.

50. You believe he can do it? Yes, I believe in the working of that plan, and I believe further that you could so prune trees as to have your crops of leaves coming on at the time you wanted them, so that you could keep your labour more continuously at work. At the present time, when there is only one rearing, in a year, you have six or seven weeks occupied, and what are the men to do the rest of the time; whereas if you could have different plantations so that as soon as one was done the other would begin, and so on, you could keep your men continuously at work.

51. Chairman.] And you think that we could compete against France, for instance, with our raw silk? Certainly. I believe there are possibilities about the production of silk that you do not dream of now.

52. Mr. G. D. Clark.] In France they get but one crop during the year? Yes, that is all.

53. Can you give us any opinion as to the reason of Mr. Brady's failure so far to make sericulture a commercial success? I suppose he has been hampered for one thing. And then he is a peculiar man. That is to say, if the country had treated him well I believe the country would have got immense benefit out of him, but as far as I understand he has been very badly used. I may mention a matter in this connection that has just occurred to me. The great French Exhibition was held in 1878. On a part of the ground a building was to be erected specially for the exhibition of insects useful to man. Amongst these insects of course were silkworms, which were to be exhibited in all stages. Mr. Brady at that time was in communication with me, and he said, "Why, this will be a rendezvous for all the men interested in silk, for capitalists and workmen from all parts of the Continent, and all the visitors attending that great Exhibition in Paris who are interested in silk will be found hanging about that particular part of the building." It was then proposed that Mr. Brady should be sent Home specially to represent the Colony in the matter of sericulture. Mr. Fitzpatrick, who was then Colonial Secretary, at first objected, saying that Mr. Combes had been appointed to represent the Colony, and as an expense of several thousand pounds would be involved he could not think of appointing a second Commissioner. I pointed out in answer to this that the whole expense of Mr. Brady's trip would not exceed £600, including his passage home and back and his expenses, as he would not go with a view of having a jollification or of making money out of the country; and I dwelt upon the fact that he would be brought in contact with all the capitalists and workmen connected with the silk industry, and

Mr. J. Fry. a great advantage would result to the Colony. Mr. Fitzpatrick then said that in that view he would decidedly support the proposal, and that if Mr. George Day, who was a member of the Committee, would bring it forward in the House, he would support it. It was at the fag end of the session, and the night when it was brought on there was a count-out.

1 Feb., 1892.

54. Do you think Mr. Brady would do any good if the Colony sent him to represent it at the Chicago Exhibition with regard to sericulture? I do not think there would be the same opportunities at Chicago as there were at the Paris Exhibition of meeting persons practically engaged in the silk industry. The Colony lost a great opportunity when Mr. Brady was not sent to the Paris Exhibition of 1878. Mr. Brady formed a plan of this sort. My wife made some muslin bags for the purpose, and Mr. Brady said, "I will take a quantity of my silkworm eggs with me, and I will go to the French growers and say, 'Here are some Australian silkworm eggs. I want you to give these out to the growers over the country gratis on condition that they will keep the rearing of that little lot separate from their other rearings, and report the result to the Minister of Agriculture.'"

William Richardson called in, sworn, and examined:—

Mr. W. Richardson.

11 Feb., 1892.

55. Chairman.] What is your profession? I am a commission agent in Sydney.

56. What experience have you had in connection with sericulture? If you mean practical experience, none.

57. What is your acquaintance with the subject theoretically or from reading? I have had my attention drawn towards sericulture for many years past, and particularly since the Wealth and Industrial Exhibition, of which I was chairman, was held in Prince Alfred Park in 1884. Mr. Brady had a large exhibit there of cocoons and grain, and also some coffee and other products grown in the northern part of the Colony.

58. In how many years from the planting of the trees do you think sericulture could be made commercially payable? Mr. Griffith, British Consul in Asia Minor, exerted himself to re-establish the silk industry in that country, which had become absolutely destroyed, and he took about the same interest in the matter that Mr. Brady has taken here for the last thirty years. Mr. Griffith managed to get the industry pretty well under weigh in about eight years. But it takes some years before the mulberry-tree is in its best form for yielding silk—in fact, it appears to me that half the silk comes from the tree as well as from the insect, and unless the tree has age you cannot get the best results from the worms, however good they may be; so that it would take some years, probably eight, before the industry would be at its best, and after that the older the trees the better.

59. And you think that both in regard to climate and soil New South Wales is suitable for the production of silk? I think so. I do not know from my reading of any place as suitable. For instance, my reading teaches me this fact, that in older countries the slightest insanitary condition, such as our children commonly allow their worms to get into, would create a disease. Here it has not done so. Therefore I take it that the climate is pre-eminently adapted for the culture of this insect.

60. Then there are diseases in France and the other countries of Europe which at times completely sweep away the mulberry? Yes; I have the figures here, which are marvellous. In France they were nearly 100 years in the first instance trying to get the industry, and utterly failed. Then great efforts were made by Henri Quatre and his Prime Minister, who in fact compelled the land-owners to plant mulberry-trees. The culture of the mulberry and the rearing of silkworms in France commenced in an amateur way in Languedoc in the 13th Century. Historians mention that some noblemen were only beginning to study the habits of the silkworm at Dapping that year, with a view of promoting the silk industry on their own estates. In 1521, Milanese artisans were invited to Nismes to teach the French peasant how to manage the mulberry-trees, and to treat the silkworms, and harvest their silk. This effort was enthusiastically encouraged by King Henri Quatre. The first tree then planted still survives. Louis XIV also encouraged silk production, as did Napoleon. I recently saw in the newspaper Industries, published in London, of date 25th December, 1891, a paragraph under the heading of "Agricultural Budget of France," in which the Paris correspondent said: "The Chamber of Deputies have voted, among other items: Aids to agriculture, £75,000; prizes for silk cultivation, £180,000." That will give some idea of the efforts on behalf of the industry in France. Notwithstanding the money and the energy expended in creating and fostering the silk industry in France, owing to disease among the worms, the industry declined to the following extent:—

Year.	Kilogrammes* of cocoons.
In 1854 there were produced	21,500,000
" 1855 " " " " " " " " " " " "	19,800,000
" 1856 " " " " " " " " " " " "	7,500,000
and progressively.
In 1863 the produce declined to	6,500,000
" 1864 " " " " " " " " " " " "	6,000,000
" 1865 " " " " " " " " " " " "	4,000,000

* A kilogramme is 2·205 lb. avoirdupois.

The progress of the silk industry in France may be shown by the following results of the silk harvest in that country:—

Year.	Kilogrammes of cocoons.
1821	10,000,000
1831	14,000,000
1841	17,000,000
1846	21,000,000
1853	26,000,000

The value of the crop of cocoons in France, in 1853, was 130,000,000 francs, or £5,145,833. Had a similar increase been maintained up to 1887, the value of the crop of that year would have reached 1,000,000,000 francs, or £39,583,333.

61. Do you consider that Mr. Brady has any legal claim upon the Government for compensation for services performed? Yes, I do.

62.

Mr. W.
Richardson.
11 Feb., 1892.

62. Legal claim? Yes.

63. Upon what grounds? I have read the reports of meetings, and in hunting up the matter I saw a speech of the late Mr. T. H. Mort. I know something about this, because I was a friend and constant visitor of Dr. William Brooks, at that time a Member of the House, and who took an active interest in the matter.

64. That is hardly sufficiently specific. Have you seen any writing, or anything binding on the Government? I have seen the published report of a deputation that waited upon the Government. Mr. T. S. Mort said promises had been made of a grant of land and a sum of £500. That was in 1870.

65. Are you aware whether the late Sir John Robertson, on behalf of the Government, ever promised to give Mr. Brady a free selection, or a certain area of land? I saw once that Sir John Robertson thought that Mr. Brady had got something of the sort. Mr. Cowper was the Premier. Mr. Brady was about to leave the country and take his stock with him. He had got a healthy stock that was simply invaluable, and he had a breed of worms that are now lost to the world, which is a great calamity. He was about to leave the country, and Mr. Mort upbraided him with being unpatriotic, telling him that he ought not, under the circumstances, to take away what would prove a source of national employment and national wealth. Mr. Brady said, "Well, with me it is a commercial speculation." I then, with a number of others, interested myself in the matter. There was at the time an Acclimatisation Society actively engaged in this and many other branches of agriculture, trying to give information to the public. Acting under this pressure Mr. Brady remained in the Colony. Mr. Mort was a great enthusiast, and persuaded him to stay. What was promised him was a grant of land, and on the basis of that a silk reserve was set apart on the Tweed.

66. Can you call to mind any instance in New South Wales where the State has subsidised an individual specially for introducing a new industry? Yes.

67. Will you name the instance? There was the case of Mr. Scott and the sugar industry. A Select Committee sat, and, although I do not remember the amount, there was a vote of the House in recognition of Mr. Scott's services.

68. When that subsidy was paid to Mr. Scott, had the industry proved payable? No; it could not be said to be any more payable than sericulture is to-day. It was strongly opposed by numbers of people, who declared that the labour difficulty would defeat any attempt of the kind. Mr. Scott wrote on the subject of sugar for years and years, and experimented on his own farm at Brisbane Water, as Mr. Brady did, and he distributed cuttings of the cane gratuitously all over the Colony, as Mr. Brady has distributed his silkworm grain.

69. In reference to the sugar industry, do you consider that it was Mr. Scott's efforts that made that industry a success, or the duty imposed on the article by the Government? It never would have been a success without the aid of the duty, because that made up the difference. Without that aid it hardly could have been established, because of the early preliminary difficulties. For instance, Mr. Scott produced 70 tons of sugar under Government aid at Rawlings Plains in 1823, and fifty years rolled by during which he was writing, teaching, and experimenting and distributing his cane, and yet during that time there was no practical result.

70. To put it shortly, the Government had to go to the aid of the industry before the sugar-cane was made payable? They did not go to the aid of Mr. Scott directly, but they put on a duty, and under that duty capitalists embarked in the growth of sugar, and commenced to erect mills, which were all failures. It ruined almost everybody. Everyone failed in the beginning. I have been on the spot on the Manning where sugar-mills utterly failed. They could not granulate the sugar, and did not know how to treat it. Earlier in the history of the Colony, John Macarthur had an estate of 10,000 acres at Camden given him for successfully introducing sheep into the Colony. Those sheep were not even his own property. If history is correct, they were given to him by the King. He only brought them here, and he was not the only man who brought sheep here. But Mr. Brady travelled the world for his worms. He stands unique. There is no man with his knowledge; there is no man who, like him, gave a lifetime to the study of a thing so paltry, as it appears to outsiders, as a worm.

71. Are there any other instances that you know of where the State has subsidised an individual under such circumstances;—have you heard about the introduction of alpacas to this country—do you know if the individual who brought them here was subsidised? I do not remember.

72. Is there any other instance? There is that of gold. Rewards were given for the discovery of gold, a matter in which the difficulty involved was not so great as in the cure of disease in worms.

73. Then the three instances you give are those of gold, sugar, and sheep? Yes; I might say that in his evidence when being examined in Mr. Scott's matter, Dr. Lang laid it down as an acknowledged principle that those who originate forms of industry that prove valuable to the State should have their services recognised in some way or other.

74. Mr. Barnes.] You have obtained your knowledge of this subject from reading, I understand—you know nothing of it practically? I have read extensively on the subject of late years. It is a matter with which you become infatuated.

75. You think that sericulture could be made payable in the Colony? Yes. Finding from my early reading that the countries in which the industry existed were those with large populations where wages were low, I concluded that the industry belonged to such countries. But after reading about the habits of the worms, and what can be done with them, and the great importance, as pointed out by Consul Griffith, of having the very highest intelligence that can be procured, that popular fallacy has been eradicated from my mind. Mr. Griffith lays it down that the persons employed cannot be too intelligent and too reliable. I may mention here that only as recently as 1867 the coffee-planters of Ceylon refused to believe that tea could be produced in that country. They said that the labour difficulty was too great, and they did not want to bother with it, and would have nothing to do with. When disease smote the coffee plantations of Ceylon and the planters were ruined—and you will remember that the failure of the Oriental Bank arose from that cause—the planters were obliged to turn their attention to the cultivation of tea, and Ceylon is now going to challenge China for supremacy in tea production. I think we may have the same experience here in regard to silk. People at first have a natural objection to a thing they do not understand. My reading in regard to these worms shows me that men will work all day, and almost fall down exhausted before they will leave the insects. But as far as the culture of silk has gone in this country, we know that children forget to feed the insects for two days, and of course such want of attention

Mr. W.
Richardson.
11 Feb., 1892.

attention is fatal. The very highest intelligence requires to be constantly given to the process. If this is done you can increase the cocoons in size from being little bits of toys like the top of my finger until they become beautiful things like these (Cocoons shown).

76. Do you think, considering the price of labour in this Colony, we should be able to compete against the cheap-labour countries? Yes, I think so; because the natural conditions in regard to climate are so suitable, and in addition to that, Mr. Brady by his method can control the birth of his worms. According to all the books you read—and I was reading the last year's report of the Bureau of Agriculture in America—they do not understand this—that is, retarding the birth of the worm, so as to bring them out to be handled. Under this system men can be employed all the months of the year, instead of there being a rush of six or seven weeks, and then the harvest is over. Month after month throughout the year there will be regular employment for the highest intelligence on the part of both man and woman. In Asia Minor the work is largely done by families. Under Mr. Griffith the whole family—father, mother, and children—are employed. But there they have only one season and one crop. There is a rush, and then it is done with; but under Mr. Brady's method you never run out of food, for you can retard the birth of the worms until your mulberry leaves are ready. In China they sell bales of mulberry leaves as we sell hay. The industry there is largely divided into two parts. Some men grow mulberries for food only. There are millions of trees growing, and the babel of noise on the part of persons selling these leaves is very great. The leaves are sold there as we sell fruit here. Then there are Chinamen who never grow a leaf, but produce the worms and the grain. You can carry on the business as a whole, or you can divide it into three sections—the production of grain, the production of cocoons, and the growth of the leaf. You can do this, or you can combine the whole three operations on one farm in the hands of one family.

77. You think that something should be done to retain the services of Mr. Brady in the Colony? I think he is the most valuable citizen the country has. It took the French nation, who are naturally quick and intelligent, 100 years to establish this industry, and then it had to be done under compulsion. I think the Government should establish a Silk Department or silk school, as has been done in Philadelphia and New York. I notice from recent statistics that in America the Congress every year votes a large sum in the shape of bonuses to these silk schools, which are for the purpose of teaching the people. In a few years they hope in America to be able to produce sufficient raw material to keep all their factories going. They have now—or they had ten years ago—36,000 hands employed in the silk factories, and with the assistance given in the shape of bonuses and the establishment of schools it is hoped that the American people will produce in a few years sufficient silk to enable them to cease importing the article. They import now about £5,000,000 of silk as raw material. The conditions in America are equal to ours. If not better, they are equal, and if they can succeed there we should be able to do so here. The real difficulty is to get our people to understand that these worms with which we have been playing for the last twenty years are really valuable in a commercial sense. And this can only be done, in my opinion, with the assistance of the State, which cannot be given to the best advantage unless Mr. Brady's services are utilised. Mr. Brady's position is unique in the world. He has made a discovery in regard to silkworms which even Pasteur knows nothing about.

78. Mr. G. D. Clark.] Can you give us any idea of the present value of silk production in France? I do not think I have the statistics for last year.

79. At any rate, they can only produce one crop a year in France? That is all.

80. And we can produce quite a number? There is no limit to what we can do except as to the food, and, of course, you know that in this climate there need be no limit to the growing of mulberry-trees. They will grow anywhere.

81. Chairman.] In some districts—as for instance at Crookwell—I believe they are killed by the frost? There are mulberry-trees that will stand the frost.

82. Mr. G. D. Clark.] Have you any knowledge of the northern rivers? I have been to most of them—as far north as the Clarence.

83. Do you think that the climate in that part of the country is suitable in every way for the production of the mulberry? Yes, the whole of the coast district is suitable. As for the frost, it is considered in some parts of India an advantage, as it enables the worms to keep up their stamina. A colder temperature is an advantage sometimes for silk-egg production, as otherwise there would be a danger of producing a weak worm, and high uplands would be suitable as breeding-places. There is no part of this Colony where silkworms could not be successfully produced.

84. Do you think that the comparative failure so far, commercially, of the undertaking on the part of Mr. Brady has been owing to the want of encouragement he has received from the Government? I think that is as clear as anything can be. He has all along got promises, and nothing else. For the last twenty months I have seen him weekly, and I know that he has been subjected to continual disappointments. He has always been told, "The matter shall be dealt with," or, "We intend to go into this thing." But changes of Government, all-night sittings, and the overwork of Ministers have prevented anything from being done, and you know how difficult it is to get a matter through a Government department. I saw his splendid worms that are now dead. The remains of them are in my house. I never saw a man so agonised in my life as Mr. Brady was when he saw them vainly holding up their heads for food. He took them to the late Minister and showed him the worms dying, but the Minister said, "What can I do?"

85. Chairman.] Could he not get mulberry leaves with which to feed them? No.

86. Why could he not;—how could the Minister help to feed them? He could have gone home to the Richmond, but he had not got his business done. His interviews with the Government were put off from day to day and week to week.

87. Mr. G. D. Clark.] Could you suggest anything definite to guide the Committee in any recommendations it might make with a view to starting this industry? I have sketched out an idea of what I think would be fair. I consider that Mr. Brady, after having for years written to the Press on this subject, lectured upon it, and distributed his eggs, has utterly failed to enthruse the people or to induce them to take any practical steps. Everything that is possible has been done in the shape of lecturing, exhibiting the cocoons, and efforts of that kind, and nothing would be gained by trying again. The only way to get over the difficulty and to induce men to encourage any new enterprise is for the Government to start a department. They should establish a department of sericulture and a silk school. In such a case Mr. Brady's services would be invaluable invaluable. He can cure a disease in a worm, a thing which even Pasteur is unable to do, and his knowledge with regard to holding back the birth of worms would also be of wonderful utility. In fact, the efforts of such a man practically directed would be a national blessing. The English Government gave Mr. Brennan £200,000 for a torpedo. Now here is an industry that will be greater than the wool industry in a few years, say thirty years, and for that reason I think the Government ought to recognise Mr. Brady's services. He has devoted a lifetime to the discovery of the new methods which he has succeeded in introducing, and he has done this at his own cost, unaided by the Government. It is not common honesty that he should be asked to divulge this valuable information and give it away to the State.

88. You have no interest in this question beyond a natural interest evoked by reading and studying and the patriotism you naturally feel;—you have no pecuniary interest? I have no pecuniary interest direct or indirect.

Mr. W.
Richardson.

TUESDAY, 16 FEBRUARY, 1892.

Present:—

MR. BARNES, | MR. G. D. CLARK,
MR. EWING.

T. ROSE, ESQ., IN THE CHAIR.

Charles Brady sworn and examined:—

89. Chairman.] Will you make a statement to the Committee giving an outline of your services in connection with sericulture in New South Wales? My work began in the year 1862, and the particulars of my services in connection with sericulture are set forth in a petition which I presented to the Legislative Assembly in May, 1876. I have that document with me, and it explains what I did prior to 1876. It states as follows:—

Mr. C. Brady.
16 Feb., 1892.

That your Petitioner has for many years devoted himself to establish in Australia, and particularly in the Colony of New South Wales, the production of silk and of silkworm grain as industrial pursuits new and valuable to the Colony.

That although mulberry silkworms of various kinds had previously been introduced into this and into other Colonies, no one, before he so devoted himself, had succeeded in establishing this industry as a productive occupation on the soil of Australia.

That the continued failure after many attempts to do so, either by public bodies or by private individuals, pointed clearly to the necessity of systematic and earnest studies, and of a series of rigid investigations, to ascertain and demonstrate the conditions under which success would be accomplished. And further, following up the knowledge and experience gained, to apply ascertained means and acquired stock to the end desired, namely, the ready raising of silk by ordinary people as a common crop in Australia.

That, previous to the operations of your Petitioner, the continued existence in Australia of any valuable races of mulberry silkworms was unheard of, and no indigenous mulberry silkworm has its habitat in any part of the Southern hemisphere.

That before the year 1851, in Europe as well as in Asia, the rearing of silkworms, although they were always subject to various and complicated diseases, was not more risky than the raising of other stock and productions dependent on soil and season, but was regarded as at least equally sure, and at the same time the most profitable of all agricultural pursuits, and still is so regarded if only sound grain be obtainable—in other words, reliable brood stock, silkworm seed or eggs of approved varieties, races, or breeds.

That about and after the year named disease of a special and peculiar nature began to attack the mulberry silkworm, and spreading with extraordinary rapidity soon destroyed all the old-established and finest races on all the entire continent of Europe. That the disease still exists in an aggravated form, and has extended to every other silk-growing country in the world.

That, except the races of China and Japan (which, however, are known to be infected), greatly inferior to those of Europe, all the best, most useful, and most valuable varieties and breeds of mulberry silkworms in every country are nearly, if not absolutely, extinct, and that for all practical purposes the famous races of Europe, which yielded annually many millions of pounds sterling in value, are absolutely lost.

That, as one consequence of the disease referred to, European rearers of silkworms have been for years past, and are still necessitated to procure from elsewhere silkworm grain of such inferior kinds as only are now procurable, and which serve as a makeshift—that the whole silk industry in Europe has been disorganised—and the labour material of millions of people reduced to a very low condition both as to quantity and quality.

That it seems impossible to overstate the extent of the market for raw silk or for silkworm cocoons; the demand for silk in all civilised countries appears more than likely to outrun for many years the world's present powers of supply.

That after much inquiry, study, and reflection, deeply impressed with the premises, and seeing in strong faith the noble opportunity for an earnest endeavour to render not only the highest service to the several important nations in Europe, but at the same time to enormously enhance the prosperity of Australia, your Petitioner, in the year 1865, abandoned all other thoughts and occupations, and resolutely devoted himself to bring together materials from Home and foreign sources wherever procurable, to study, to inquire into, and to search out cause and effect, to experiment, and to practise, to work up—to master—the whole subject in all its details and its bearings.

That in his own mind the self-imposed task and aim of your Petitioner was to rehabilitate one of the greatest and most profitable industries of the old world by a judicious application of the natural resources of a new, a virgin, and unquestionably healthy and fertile land. Also to implant the same in Australia by giving information and results of study, personal assistance, and by “free distribution of any quantity of acclimatised silkworms, or silkworms' eggs, of any variety and races or species which I might possess, that might be needful to spread the culture throughout the Colony.”

90. The facts so far show that you have been in the Colony since 1862, and you came to Sydney with the view of rehabilitating this industry? Yes.

91. And one of the services rendered by you was that you produced a superior character of silkworm? Yes, and I did a number of other things besides. In the petition just referred to I proceed to say:

That in the very beginning, and as part only of his difficulties to overcome at starting, it was by reason that no sound stock of even a single one of any of the many old kinds of valuable mulberry silkworms was procurable in Europe, or in Asia, or indeed anywhere, essential to obtain from all countries (their native sources) the best they had, such as actually existed, even though severely diseased, and to endeavour, by a long persistent course of investigation, experiment, and practice, to free the best or indeed any varieties of breeds from the devastating and fatal disease which then as well as now rendered silk husbandry in Europe, with the old races peculiar to their several countries or districts, an impossibility.

In 1870 I had over 200 different varieties of silkworms which I had introduced from other parts of the world, and which had never been brought here before. I have a number of specimens here by which I desire to illustrate to the Committee the improvement effected in the character of the silkworm. I may say that at the time I first put these specimens together, forty of the different varieties of the silkworms were alive and

Mr. C. Brady. in actual rearing. These show the cocoons produced in the Colony by the healthy silkworms, successors of the diseased silkworms imported by me about nine years previously. It therefore took me from seven to nine years to produce the healthy silkworms, such as I now exhibit, and to eradicate the disease and make the worms healthy.

16 Feb., 1892.

92. How has the country benefited by what you did prior to 1875? It benefited by my time, my labour, and my expenses in procuring the silkworms, eradicating the disease, and developing a healthy insect, so that anybody could start with healthy material.

93. Has anybody taken advantage of your experience, and has it given the country any practical result? No, not to my knowledge.

94. Then up to the present time all your experience has been thrown away? It has simply been destroyed, owing to want of faith.

95. That is to say, that the public have had no confidence in the industry, and have done nothing? That is so.

96. What about Mrs. Bladen Neil, of Corowa? Knowing what I was doing, Mrs. Neil began to study silkworms.

97. Mr. Ewing.] In what year did she begin? She must have begun about 1873 or 1874.

98. Chairman.] Did she begin in consequence of your having started the work? Yes, entirely so. I had made it easy for anyone to take it up.

99. You were the pioneer of the silkworm industry? Yes; there is no doubt about that. I distributed silkworms to a number of persons.

100. To how many people did you distribute them? I could not say, but to anyone who required them.

101. You have not refused anybody? I refused to supply them to people who had not the food with which to rear them. If persons showed me that they had the mulberries with which to feed and rear the silkworms I gave them the means to begin, and gave them healthy instead of diseased stock. The idea is often put forward that a silkworm is only a silkworm, and that it does not signify whether it is good, bad, or indifferent. Some people refuse to distinguish any difference in quality. I desire by reference to the cocoons on the table to explain the value of one silkworm as compared with another. On the cardboard are two rows of cocoons, with some others in the centre. The cocoons on the one side are small in size, and represent the types of the original insects found in the Colony. The silk from one of these is about 1 grain to each worm. On the other side of the cardboard are cocoons much larger in size, and producing five, ten, or twenty times as much silk, with almost the same amount of labour and expense in feeding and so forth. The yield in one case would be at least ten times greater than in the other, which would make a considerable difference between profit and loss. Besides its superiority in quantity, the larger or improved cocoon is three or four times of greater value in respect to quality.

102. Mr. Barnes.] And there is the same amount of labour in each case? Exactly; except that in dealing with the more highly-organised creature a little more care and attention is necessary than in dealing with the rougher creature, which could, to some extent, take care of itself. The higher the breed the more care and intelligence is required. And still more is greater intelligence and knowledge necessary in distinguishing the particular variety of mulberry suited to a particular kind of silkworm. This latter was a work to which I gave considerable attention, and I had to pursue it with the disadvantage of having to deal with a diseased worm in the first instance. Perhaps I may as well explain what I mean by a diseased worm. All through Europe a new disease broke out, and precisely at those places where the highest qualities were produced. The French bred too much from the same soil. They refined too much, and instead of caring for the physical strength of the creature, they merely looked to the production of the finest cocoon. If they had studied, as we have done here, and while at the same time producing a superior cocoon, had produced a reliable and healthy worm, they would not have got the disease. But they went on breeding the same insect on the same soil with the same food over and over again until at last it was completely worn out. When I took the matter in hand I thought that in a new country, with new conditions and virgin soil, and a far superior climate, I might, without injuring the quality of the silkworm, develop increased physical vigour. That I have attained this object I think is sufficiently shown by the specimens produced. Among these are what are called out-door worms. These are some that I brought out here, thinking that with such a vast extent of country it would be very hard if I could not find something in our own indigenous timber which would serve to propagate these insects. The result is shown here. There are millions a year sterling in value produced by most of these, and particularly by the one called the Ailantus. This is the worm that produced the silk used in manufacturing the old-fashioned silk pocket-handkerchief called the Bandana. There is another of these out-door silkworms whose food is obtained from the castor oil tree. I succeeded in domesticating the Ailantus until it became quite tame and would clamber about me. The moth of the Ailantus is now a denizen of the bush of Australia, without being cared for by anybody. Another, which is a very near relation to that, feeds, as I have said, on the castor oil which exists in the country as a weed. I was not so successful in domesticating this insect, but if you can master it, it is more profitable than the Ailantus. These matters made a considerable noise at the time, and I received a great many inquiries about the silkworms. The Government, of which I think Sir Henry Parkes was a member, asked me to write a pamphlet giving an account of the Ailantus moth, which I did. The pamphlet was printed and distributed, and had some effect in inclining people's minds to the subject, because I devoted two or three pages to an explanation of the nature of the silkworm. I should like to show the Committee also two specimens of raw silk. [Silk shown.] It is true raw silk, and the first ever made in this part of the world. It was made by my own hands on my own premises from the worm shown as the "Queensland" worm among the specimens produced. I cannot remember accurately when this silk was produced.

103. Chairman.] How much silk have you made altogether in this country? I could not give you an idea.

104. A hundredweight? Yes; many hundredweights.

105. What did you do with that silk? I did not dispose of it commercially. It was the result of my various successful attempts to demonstrate that silk could be produced in the Colony. Each one of the fibres is made up of several cocoons. The raw silk is therefore a manufactured article. Considerable skill and a particular kind of machine are necessary.

106. You have never embarked in this industry with the idea of making it a financial success? Yes, undoubtedly I did, and I should have made it a financial success if it had not been for the persuasions of the Government of the day.

107. In what respect did the Government prevent you from making it a success? I can best answer Mr. C. Brady, that by quoting from my petition, already referred to, which says:—

That after many failures, and much exhaustion of mind and body and of means from the strain of long-continued exertion and expense, and much privation and injury to the health of his family as well as his own, your Petitioner had about the year 1870 so far succeeded as to have in his possession a very considerable collection of the finest silkworms in existence, healthy and fully acclimatised in the Colony.

That his long trial, his efforts, and procedure were observed by many persons, and his success witnessed by gentlemen who perceived and appreciated the importance of his labours.

I further go on to say—

That results secured by your Petitioner in a comparatively short time (he having been able to raise sufficient grain for export early in 1870) were thought to give promise of a great future for the country. That in consideration of the wishes and representations of gentlemen who regarded the work done by and the stock acquired by your Petitioner as the materials, till then unattainable, for the development of a new and most important staple, and especially in deference to the suggestions of Mr. Thomas Sutcliffe Mort, Dr. George Bennett, and other well-known colonists, who had for years been cognisant of his labours, your Petitioner was induced to forego his intention to export his produce to Europe or California, and by its disposal abroad recoup part of his outlay.

108. Mr. Barnes.] You intended to take your stock and go to California? No; I intended to export it, that being a favourable time to catch the market. Mr. Mort met me in the street, and asked me what I was going to do. I said, "I have my first crop, and I am going to send it Home." He got a little angry with me;—perhaps I spoke sharply myself—and he insisted on it that I had no business to send them away. My petition goes on to say—

Moved by Mr. Mort's earnest entreaty not to let the Colony lose the advantages of the possession and extension of the healthy grain within the Colony, coupled with the positive and repeated assurances of the Colonial Secretary, Mr. Cowper, both to Mr. Mort and to himself, that your Petitioner's interests should not be prejudiced, he was induced to retain his stock in the Colony and to enter into negotiations with the Government.

109. Mr. Ewing.] Through Mr. Mort? Mr. Mort proposed that.

110. Mr. Barnes.] Mr. Mort's interference prevented you sending your stock away when you might have made money by it? Exactly.

111. Mr. Ewing.] And you connect that action with the Government? I then go on to say—

Public comments on these negotiations and their unsatisfactory conclusion, indicating that they were not clearly understood, your Petitioner had occasion to show their true nature in a statement which was printed as follows: "In the beginning of last year (January, 1870) I had just completed the rearing of a considerable number of my best kind of silkworms, the stock of which I had raised year after year with extreme care and labour. They were several of the finest races peculiar to Europe, and the most valuable of any in existence. I had for a lengthened period lavished every care to render them free from disease, and to give them so sound a condition of strength as well as health that they might not only be a reliable source for other silk-growers in the colonies, but form the foundation of an export of eggs (silkworm grain) from the Australian Colonies to those countries in Europe where their value would be understood. In January, 1870, notwithstanding the impediments of a severe illness from overwork, which had prostrated me for several weeks at the most critical period of the rearing, I had a large quantity of grain, and as my illness was mainly caused by exhaustion from too long and too unremitting attention by night as well as by day, I naturally thought that though the crop had been materially lessened in amount by the failure of my health, I ought to apply it to the relief of my exchequer, and also, if possible, to procure personal assistance to relieve me in future in some degree from the risk of over-exertion.

112. Chairman.] The matter you are reading is somewhat extraneous, and does not answer my question. In what respect did the Government stop you from making this industry a success? I think you will see as I proceed—

Meeting with Mr. Mort, I asked his advice about verifying the nature of the stock and entry for export, so that I might in any eventuality be entitled to any honor or advantages which might be awarded to the first to make such an export. Mr. Mort did not quite at first comprehend the necessities of my position, and with rather more warmth than I relished reproached me with my want of patriotism. I could only reply that it was no matter of patriotism, but simply of paying my debts, and that if I did not use the proceeds of my work to discharge my obligations I should be more fairly open to reproach, as I had no other means left. After some mutual explanations Mr. Mort insisted it was a case for the Government to act in, for if the stock which had cost so much time, labour, and expense to introduce, and which was unique in its character, was sent out of the country, in all probability I should go with it, and the Colony would never have such a chance again. I rejoined that that consideration ought not now to influence me to incur the peril of delay, and express my want of faith in anything to come from the Government. Mr. Mort combated my reluctance, and proposed to be the medium of communication, and also to make it, as far as it could be done with propriety, a personal one to carry some arrangement through. The school plan was mooted and others, and on Mr. Mort's personal assurance that I might rely on something being done to justify my keeping the stock in the Colony, I relinquished the idea of parting with my produce to be realised in Europe or California. Had I sent the grain forward I have good reason to know I should have had in due course returns to the amount of several hundreds, probably not far short of £1,000. Mr. Mort without any avoidable delay represented the matter to the Colonial Secretary, and I was invited to see Mr. Cowper in person. To my great surprise Mr. Cowper entered warmly into the expediency of an arrangement with me, and agreed, if his colleagues should assent, to place £500 at once at my disposal, upon my undertaking to retain the stock in the Colony, and to continue operations so as to make an export of value and yet secure enough of the best breeds of silkworms for the benefit of the public. All the then members of the Cabinet but one approved of this arrangement, but as the one objected the whole negotiation fell through, and I was left to get on as well as I could. The season for export from here had passed during this futile treaty. I had declined other plans which would have given me a personal income as well as interest in my earnings, and I found myself with a quantity of many valuable kinds of worms, with quite inadequate provision to rear them.

113. First of all, you say that Mr. Mort was mainly instrumental in preventing you from exporting your silkworms? Yes.

114. In the next place, did Mr. Mort bind the Government, or did he only promise you that he would use his influence with the Government? He proposed to bring the matter before the Government, he being a gentleman of recognised position.

115. Did Mr. Cowper on behalf of the Government of the day propose to subsidise you? In as distinct a manner as possible Mr. Cowper said, "How much would serve you?" "Well," I said, "£500 will do me for a while." "Will you," Mr. Cowper said, "keep your stock here if I give you £500." I said, "Yes, I am willing to do that." He said, "I am quite prepared to give you the £500; when will you be in town again?" and I said, "I can come in at any time." Mr. Cowper said, "Well, if you come in next time you are in town I will give you a cheque for £500."

116. Mr. Ewing.] He promised you that? Yes; the promise was as direct as language could make it. He asked me when I should be in town again, and I said I could come in any day he wished.

117. Chairman.] What position did Mr. Cowper occupy at that time? He was Colonial Secretary.

118. And did you come into town next day for the £500? No, not on the next day. I think our conversation took place on the Monday, and I came into town, as far as I remember, on the Thursday.

- Mr. G. Brady: 119. You came in on Thursday for the £500? Yes.
120. Did you see Mr. Cowper? I did.
- 16 Feb., 1892. 121. What did he say? He said, "You have come for that cheque?" and I said, "Yes." He said, "Well, it is all right. Everybody agrees to it except Mr. Forster. I wish you would just go and have a word or two with him. It will be all right, it is a mere formal thing." I demurred to this, but Mr. Cowper said, "His office is only a few steps off; surely you can go there"; and as he pressed me I consented to see Mr. Forster. When I saw Mr. Forster, and told him about it, he said, "Well, now, Brady, I do not want to hurt your feelings. Cowper sent you to me. He had no business to send you to me. He could only have done so for one purpose, and that is that he does not intend to do it."
122. Mr. Ewing.] Had you anything in writing from Mr. Cowper? No. It was all done by word of mouth. Mr. Forster said, "It is just like him; it is Cowper all over. He sent you to me, so that I should refuse, and I am not going to refuse you. He can do it. There is no occasion to ask me or anybody else. He is Premier, and he can do it or leave it alone, as he likes. I will not interfere." I went back to Mr. Cowper and told him, and he said, "It is only his cross temper. It will be all right. Come in again in a day or two, and it will be all right." I did come in. I think I must have seen him once or twice afterwards, but I saw very clearly he did not intend to do it, and he did not do it.
123. How long a time elapsed between the promise of the £500 and the certainty that you were not going to get anything? I should think not more than two or three weeks.
124. You would not export the silkworms because you thought you would get the £500;—when you knew that you were not going to get the £500, why did you not export them? There was no steamer to take them.
125. How long would you have had to wait for another steamer? In all probability another month.
126. The promise of the £500 threw you out of your reckoning for some weeks? Yes; it destroyed the chance of a market in Europe.
127. Do you think that seven weeks would have made such a difference in the market in Europe? In those days the market in Europe was limited to one month—February, I think. If you were not prepared with your grain then you could not sell it in Europe. In those days they had no notion of hibernation.
128. At that time there was a great disease among silkworms in Europe, and the worms were very inferior, why could you not have sent them Home next year? Next year they were all dead.
129. Do you consider that you have any legal claim on the Government? Yes.
130. On what ground? On the ground of breach of faith.
131. But Mr. Cowper did not promise you on behalf of the Government? Yes; he spoke on behalf of the Government.
132. Have you got any official communication on the subject? No; nothing in writing. It was merely by word of mouth. He told me that if I came he would give me the cheque.
133. Have you any witnesses who heard him say so? There is only the statement by Mr. Mort.
134. Did you ever have a promise from the Government subsequent to that? Yes; another promise from the Government was made some years afterwards by Mr. Secretary Robertson in reference to some land.
135. He was Secretary for Lands then, I suppose? Yes. That was done more particularly through the silk committee. They negotiated that.
136. Was that promise kept? No; the Government shirked it. They offered me a lease of the land for five years, which they called a gift, and I would not accept it, and I refused to lay out any money in making improvements on the land. It was called the silk reserve. I would not consent unless I had some security for the improvements I should put on the land.
137. Then I understand you do not propose to deal with that aspect of the case—with what the Government did or did not do in connection with the Tweed? I wish to explain with regard to the Tweed matter. I was not only ill myself, but my wife, whose labour was equal to my own, by the long delay and so on, fell ill also, and I could not leave the country on account of the condition of her health. This lasted for a number of years, and when she died I prepared to quit the country altogether. But I took ill myself afterwards, a reaction having set in, and I was laid up. When I recovered from that illness one of my neighbours, one of the pioneers of the district who had known me for a number of years who had recently been married, came to introduce his wife to me. When they arrived I happened to be engaged in delivering some goods. I was selling off and getting rid of everything I could. I did this with the object of leaving the country. My friend, who had been accustomed to visit me, on noticing that the silkworms had gone was very much vexed, and eventually took his leave. A couple of days afterwards I got a letter from him in which he said that he believed I never had any real intention of leaving the country—that he had spoken to some of the other neighbours, and they thought they would apply to some of the Members for the district to see if something could not be done to induce me to stay, and he sent me a copy of the letter which he wrote to the Members. The date of his letter was July, 1879.
138. I want to go further back than that. Do you consider that the Government misled you in connection with your operations on the Tweed? Yes, distinctly.
139. In what year did you go to the Tweed? In 1871 or 1872.
140. What then were the distinct promises made to you by the Government? That I should have 1,280 acres of land. I was asked what would be necessary. That was a distinct promise.
141. Is there any way of proving that there was such a distinct promise? This promise, as far as I can make out, was never reduced to writing. I have asked to have the documents produced, but they have not been produced.
142. You believe that there are documents in existence which have been kept back? Yes.
143. And you believe that if the whole of the papers were produced there would be something that would go to prove your case? Yes.
144. You believe that the Government have not given us the whole of the papers? Quite so. There should be amongst the papers some minute made in consequence of an interview between myself and Mr. Secretary Robertson, at which Mr. Adam, the Chief Draftsman, was a witness. I have asked that Mr. Adam should be called, but I understand he writes to say he can give no evidence.
145. You say that you were distinctly given to understand by word of mouth—though you have nothing yourself to prove it—that you were to get 1,280 acres of land? Yes.

146. What did the Government do? They made this reserve, which they called a silk reserve, and they gave me a nominal hold of it to the extent of a five years' lease. Mr. Secretary Robertson said to Mr. Adam, as near as I can recollect, "The Government want to assist Mr. Brady in this matter. The only way to do it is by Bill. The Government cannot grant anything more than a lease. We will give the lease as a preliminary step, and I will bring in a Bill to ask the House to sanction the giving of the land."
147. This was all by word of mouth—you had nothing to prove it? No. That is why I want the evidence of Mr. Adam. It not being in his Department, Mr. Adam must have explained it to somebody else in the office, because I got a letter, and that letter is in print. That shows there was something done, and I wish to get the evidence of Mr. Adam on this point.
148. Mr. Ewing.] You say you were given to understand by the Government that you would get 1,280 acres of land? Yes.
149. What did the Government do? The Government gave me a letter authorising me to go into occupation, and I asked repeatedly to have the engagement of the Minister carried out, and a Bill brought into Parliament, so that it could say whether or not it would sanction the land being given to me.
150. The Government gave you to understand that you would get 1,280 acres of land;—what did they do. They gave you the right to purchase—what? They did not give me the right to purchase.
151. Did they not give you 100 acres? No; they never gave me an inch.
152. They allowed you to buy as an improvement purchase? The land I have there now I got by paying ready money.
153. £1 5s. per acre? Yes; I paid that cash down for the land.
154. They allowed you to buy it as an improvement purchase? Yes.
155. 100 acres not on the silk reserve? No.
156. That is all you have to say in regard to the Tweed speculation? Yes.
157. In regard to the shortcomings of the Government, you say that in consequence of their action you lost the sale of your stock in what appeared to you to be a good market, and in relation to the Tweed land you suffered a loss of 1,280 acres? Yes.
158. Can you tell us what benefit you have been to the country in regard to this matter? I think that is fully set out in the petition from which I have quoted. I may say, also, that by word of mouth and by writing I have given information during all these years to any persons who sought it from me.
159. The injury that has been inflicted upon you has been in consequence of the non-fulfilment of a large number of promises that were never put in writing? Yes.
160. And the benefit you have done to the country consists in this, that you have been able to produce a better silkworm than had ever been produced before, and you have shown people who desired the information how sericulture could be carried out? Yes.
161. But really there has been nothing done? Yes; there has been a great deal done, because the work has been in actual view for a great number of years. Any person who wanted to see it could do so. I made no secret of the work, and my place was open to any visitor. Before I left Sydney to go to the north I wrote inviting all the Members of the House to come down to Curl Curl to see the silkworms in actual rearing, and inspect all that was being done. I invited the House formally, but only one gentleman came—Dr. Brook.
162. Mr. G. D. Clark.] Did you have possession of the 1,280 acres of land at the Tweed for the full term of five years? All I did with that land was this: in consequence of the necessity of having a larger scope for my operations I explored the land, which was dense brush, and I selected eight or nine places where I could have plantations and separate establishments for what I considered the choicest and most profitable worms.
163. The land was really in your possession for the five years? Well, I was authorised to occupy it, and I refused to lay out a shilling upon it until I had got some security for the improvements. I wrote to that effect, and no notice was taken of my communication. I wanted some guarantee that if I laid out not only my own money but also the money of my friends—because to make use of that land would have meant the expenditure of a few thousand pounds—the improvements would be secured to me. I was not inclined to expend money upon improvements under a five years' lease which was not renewable.
164. I understand, then, that you declined to lay out any money on this land because you had not got security of tenure, and the Government cancelled the lease, or allowed it to run out at the end of five years because you had not made these improvements? Exactly; that is the dispute between us. I would not incur any expense, and the country has lost the benefit of the operations that I would have carried on.
165. Mr. Barnes.] Did the piece of land which you purchased under the improvement clause adjoin the silk reserve? Yes.
166. Mr. Ewing.] I believe the block of 100 acres fronts the north arm of the Tweed River, and the reserve of 1,280 acres lies a distance of three-quarters of a mile back from the river? Yes. It is mountain land, and I selected it partly on account of the climate, and partly because it was out of the way of any interference.
167. Mr. G. D. Clark.] Have you at any time attempted to form a company to place this silk upon the market? No; I have always had an aversion to joint stock companies.
168. Has the silk been exhibited at any of the great Exhibitions? Yes, it has been exhibited at all of the great Exhibitions, and there have been records of it of rather a remarkable character, and particularly in regard to the exhibit at the Indian and Colonial Exhibitions.

Mr. C. Brady.

WEDNESDAY, 24 FEBRUARY, 1892.

Present:—

MR. G. D. CLARK,		MR. HOLBOROW,
MR. EWING,		MR. KELLY.
T. ROSE, ESQ., IN THE CHAIR.

Harrie Wood, Esq., called in, sworn, and examined:—

- Harrie Wood, Esq.
24 Feb., 1892.
169. Chairman.] What are you? Under Secretary for Mines and Agriculture.
170. Have you any papers in the office in connection with sericulture? None, except those which were produced by Mr. Campbell.
171. Do you know anything about Mr. Brady's claim for compensation? I know that Mr. Brady made a claim for somewhere about 1,280 acres of land, which he said were promised him by the Government some long time back. At that time I had charge of the Occupation of Crown Lands, and his claim had to be dealt with by me in that way. But so far as I can recollect, we could never find any trace or any written promise of the land.
172. Is there any further information which you could give the Committee? No, except that from time to time we had the matter before us, and the question was as to whether there was any advantage to the Colony to be gained by encouraging Mr. Brady's project. We were advised on one side that sericulture would not pay, on account of the high rate of wages in this Colony—that it was only in countries where cheap labour could be got where sericulture could pay; and, on the other hand, we were informed that Mr. Brady had some process of hibernation not known to anyone else in the Colony, or possibly elsewhere, which, if practised, would make the industry profitable.
173. The Department have never tested Mr. Brady's invention? Well, we could not, for this reason—that I think he would not make his process known unless he got either this grant of land, or something he would consider equivalent.
174. Mr. G. D. Clark.] Mr. Brady says that a definite promise of £500 was made to him by Mr. Cowper, and he thinks there should be some minute in reference to it in the office? That was before I came to the Colony. I could find no record amongst the papers of any promise in writing, either of land or any other reward.
175. Mr. Brady was put in possession of the 1,280 acres of land for a period of five years, was he not? Yes, I think so—he was allowed to occupy it.
176. He says that he could not raise the money to go on with the business in consequence of the insecurity of tenure? Yes.
177. And the Government, at the end of the five years, refused him any further occupation of the land, on the ground that he had not done anything? Yes. Those are the facts as shown by the papers, as far as I recollect.

Henry C. L. Anderson, Esq., called in, sworn, and examined:—

- H. C. L. Anderson, Esq.
24 Feb., 1892.
178. Chairman.] What position do you hold in the Government service? I am Director-General of Agriculture.
179. Can you give us any information as to the claims of Mr. Brady in connection with cultivation of silkworms? I have read all the papers in the possession of the Department. I read them two years ago.
180. Did you come across any paper in reference to the Government promising a certain acreage of land or a sum of money? No; I have never seen such a paper.
181. What is your idea of the cultivation of the silkworm in this Colony—do you think it could be made a profitable industry? No, I do not. I do not think that under our labour conditions it could possibly be made to pay. Mr. Brady's papers were brought before me about two years ago. At the request of Mr. Sydney Smith, then Minister for Mines and Agriculture, I read them over with remarkable care, because it was a matter of supporting this industry, and I made full inquiries. I found, for instance that in Queensland they offered a large bonus for the first quantity of silk that was made, and the bonus was actually won, but there was never another atom of silk made. That was disheartening to begin with. As our botanist happened to have been manager of the Acclimatisation Society's gardens in Brisbane, he had a good deal of knowledge about the matter, and he spoke very discouragingly of it. He said the labour difficulty was the obstacle. At the same time a Pole named Danitzueski wrote to the Department and proposed that he should start a sericultural farm. I had an interview with him, and he gave me clearly to understand that he could not possibly do it unless he had children and women to work it. He said that an indispensable requisite would be to have the labour of children and women. I asked him what wages he could afford to give men for their work, and he said he reckoned 5s. a day would be ample wages.
182. And their board and lodging? No. I pointed out that he would not get Englishmen to work for that in this Colony. He said no, he did not expect to, but he would have it done by Italians; and he was prepared then with a gang of Italians to go and start at once on a mulberry plantation which actually existed.
183. Mr. Kelly.] Was that in this Colony? Yes. On the A.A. Company's estate, in the Newcastle district, there is actually a mulberry plantation existing, and he was ready to start there and then if we would give him any encouragement. I discussed the matter fully with Mr. Sydney Smith, who said, "It will never do to countenance such a thing if he is going to get any Italians or foreigners. He will never get Englishmen to work, and he must pay low wages to women and children." Danitzueski said he must have children constantly labouring, and I pointed out that he could not have them except at holiday-times, under the Public Instruction Act. He left it very clear in my mind that it could not possibly be made to pay. He was quite prepared to admit that it could not be made to pay under our labour conditions. At the same time Mr. Brady asked us to make some proposal to him by which he might carry on his place at the Tweed River. I may say that Mr. Smith, the then Minister, was anxious to do so, and therefore asked me to go into the matter very fully. The result was that we asked Mr. Brady to make a definite proposal to us. I could not suggest a way by which we could help him. He then made a suggestion that he should be engaged by the Government to look after this place at a fixed salary of £250 a year—that was his own property. That paper is with the batch of papers I sent down. I am only speaking now from memory. The Minister would not hear of that at all. He said at once, "The thing is not to be thought of for one instant." That was the only proposal made by Mr. Brady to us. I then asked Mr. Brady if he could possibly help me by producing some silk he had made. I said, "Now, if you could produce 1 cwt. of silk I think I could do something for you. Give us a balance-sheet, and show us what the silk costs, and I think we can make out a good case for you." He said that had nothing to do with it. He would not hear of that at all; he would not show me any silk. In fact, he said it was not his business to make silk; his business was to rear the worms, and to make the splendid breed of seed or grain he had. We could get no definite information. The old gentleman was always flying off at a tangent—he would not stick to one thing. I said to him, "Put it down in writing, and give us a plain statement of what you have done in the way of making silk—not rearing eggs at all; show the Minister it will pay, and I am sure the Government will be most friendly disposed." But he never did anything of that sort. He referred me to the Town and Country Journal of fourteen years ago, and also to other papers, but I could never find one line in all these papers about actually making silk. They all referred to the rearing of a splendid breed of worms which Mr. Brady had grown.

H. C. L.
Anderson,
Esq.
24 Feb., 1892.

184. Mr. G. D. Clark.] You are aware that Mr. Brady claims to have overcome the labour difficulty by the numerous crops that could be obtained during the year by his process of hybernation? Yes. I understood that he could produce more than one crop in a year, which must be a great boon.

185. Chairman.] Did you understand that he could produce fifty crops in a year? No.

186. Or twelve crops? No. I did not see the place, and did not study the subject from that point of view.

187. Do you think that if this were true it would influence the labour question? No; it would make more labour, and the more labour you need the worse will be the trouble.

188. The hybernation process then will not counteract the difficulty of dear labour, in your opinion? I cannot see that it will. Of course, I have not studied the matter from the position of an expert. I have only studied it as the Head of a Department going over the papers in order to give the Minister the best possible advice.

189. Do you think that the increased output consequent on the more numerous crops by Mr. Brady's process would involve a corresponding increase in the amount of labour? I should understand so, and from what was shown by Danitzueski especially.

190. And therefore the result would be just the same? Yes. I may mention that Mr. Reginald Champ, who, I believe, is engaged by the Government up on the Richmond River, also came to see me.

191. Mr. Ewing.] Do you know anything about his engagement, and what he is doing? I have no idea at all.

192. Is he under you? No.

193. Whom is he under? The Director-General of Forests, I understand—under the Colonial Secretary's Department. I think he has nobody supervising him. He came to see me, and we went into the matter fully. I asked him to produce a balance-sheet. He did. The very first sight of it was enough to show me, as a practical man, that it was bunkum. He put down so many acres of land cleared on the Richmond River at £5 an acre. That was the value of the land and the clearing. I said, "Mr. Champ, you will never get land at that price in New South Wales. You might probably get it at that price without the clearing, but with the clearing you could not possibly get it." That was the first item. Then there was an item for labour which I knew was under-stated. I knew it would not be possible to attend to 100 acres with the small amount of labour he proposed. Then there was an item for manager's wages—his own—£500 a year. That struck me as being very excessive. He said at once that it was no use discussing anything more with me, that I did not look at it in the right way, and he went to another Department. I showed the proposal to the Minister, and he simply laughed at it.

194. You place sericulture in the same category as you do all the small cultures—you think our population is not pressing enough on the resources of the country to demand that this sort of thing should be undertaken in a general way? That is what I think.

195. You feel that we are so differently situated to Italy and other older countries where there is an enormous supply of cheap labour that we could not possibly compete? Yes. The labour used in those countries is that of females and children, and that would never be tolerated here.

196. I think there is no doubt whatever that at one time the Italians and French had a bad time with their eggs, and the eggs here were very good—that is quite possible in a new field? Yes; we escaped that disease.

197. I think the French paid about £17,000,000 at one time to get new eggs, and under those circumstances the cultivation of worms might be a very profitable thing, but you could not expect that to happen again? Well, the rearing of eggs in itself is a very small industry. I would like to add one remark. Mr. Brady suggested a scheme by which young women should be sent up to learn the industry. He referred specially to young women, as, after a little conversation with me, he thought that probably very few young men would go in for it. It would be too limited for them. He therefore suggested young women, and I think he has made a written suggestion to that effect in some of the papers—that he would take charge of these young women, and superintend them and educate them. Of course you could not tell until you tried it whether or not that would be a success, but, as far as I could judge, young women would not offer to go up there and learn an industry like that pure and simple. But Mr. Brady offered to superintend all that, if the Government would pay him £250 a year. I asked him what he would do for the £250—superintend his own property and his estate. He said no, he would manage these young women, and teach them the industry, and he said he could get scores of them.

198. Mr. Kelly.] Would the fostering of this industry tend to bring about cheap labour? Under the conditions at the Tweed River, I should say that it would never pay without cheap labour.

199. Mr. Ewing.] You say it could not exist without it? No, it could not on the Tweed River. I only give this opinion for what it is worth. I gave the subject a good deal of thought at the time, because Mr. Sydney Smith himself was anxious about it, and it struck me as being a likely way to bring kudos to our Department, and I studied it for about a month at night-time. It struck me that the industry might be worked in connection with some of our large farms, as a subsidiary industry. It must be a subsidiary industry in connection with others, or under peculiar conditions, but it could not be managed in an out-of-the-way place like the Tweed River, where labour is scarce, and where it is masculine labour.

200. You place this amongst the small cultures for which the time has not come? Subsidiary cultures.

The

H. C. L. Anderson, Esq.
24 Feb., 1892.

The time has not come, except in densely-populated centres. At our horticultural stations we might undertake it in a small way. Dr. Cleeland, of South Australia, has given a great deal of attention to it, and he has made silk—which we have not really done in New South Wales—and he has sent the silk Home and sold it and obtained excellent returns; but he does not profess for an instant that it pays.

201. Does he say that it does not pay? I understood him to say that it must be worked in with something else to make it pay, and that women must do a good deal of the light work at low wages. He has done it as a hobby, and done it very well too.

202. Mr. G. D. Clark.] In the papers which have come under your observation, have you seen anything approaching a definite promise to Mr. Brady of either money or land as compensation for the work he has done? No. I have specially looked for that. Mr. Sydney Smith asked me specially to look for that. I went all through the papers very carefully myself, and subsequently my chief clerk went through them, and there is no promise whatever amongst those papers.

John George Cohen called in, sworn, and examined:—

Mr. J. G. Cohen.
24 Feb., 1892.

203. Chairman.] What is your official position? I am Clerk of Records in the Colonial Secretary's Office.

204. Have you any papers in connection with the claim of Mr. Brady for compensation? I have two letters from Mr. Brady—the one dated 31st October, and the other the 10th November, 1890, addressed to Sir Henry Parkes, Colonial Secretary, relating to silk culture.

205. Are those the only two papers? Yes.

206. You distinctly say that you have no papers recognising a pecuniary claim on the Department on the part of Mr. Brady? These are the only papers I can trace that have been recorded.

John Shedden Adam called in, sworn, and examined:—

Mr. J. S. Adam.
24 Feb., 1892.

207. Chairman.] I believe you at one time held a position in the Government service? Yes; I was formerly chief draftsman in the Surveyor-General's Office.

208. I understand that you are acquainted with Mr. Brady, and that some years ago, as a member of the silk committee, you took some interest in Mr. Brady's efforts towards making the production of silk a profitable commercial industry in this Colony? No; I was never a member of any committee on that subject.

209. Did you take any interest in the project? No.

210. You took no interest in it at all? My only acquaintance with Mr. Brady that I can recollect at this distance of time was that I was residing in Lime-street at Mrs. Thomson's house, around which there were a number of ailantus trees. Mr. Thomson had given Mr. Brady permission to feed his worms on these trees, and during my tenancy there of fifteen months he used to come and look after his worms and gather the cocoons, and so on.

211. Do you know whether Mr. Brady has any pecuniary claim on the Government? I am not aware.

212. Is there any other information you can give the Committee? There is nothing that I can recollect.

Mr. Brady used to come to the office sometimes. I knew his face when I met him just now, but I could not have told who he was unless I had been informed. But after such a long period of time, not being in very good health, my memory is not so good as it was. After such a long distance of time—I retired from the office sixteen years ago—one cannot remember all the things that transpired in the hurry of official life.

213. Mr. G. D. Clark.] Do you remember being present at any interview between Mr. Brady and Mr. Cowper, who was then Premier, in regard to this matter? No; I have no recollection of it—there might have been such an interview.

214. Mr. Ewing.] Mr. Brady is strongly of the impression that at some period or other distinct promises were made to him by the Minister for Lands, acting for his chief, the Colonial Secretary, but we can find no documentary evidence of the fact. Mr. Brady informs the Committee that at one of these interviews you were present, and received some instructions, which would be strongly confirmatory of his position, in regard to a grant of land;—have you any recollection of anything of the kind? I have no recollection of it. It might have been so, but it has quite faded from my memory.

215. There would be records, would there not? There would be records, certainly.

216. Such an important matter, dealing with the public estate, could not have been only by word of mouth? The late Surveyor-General, Mr. Adams, would have been there to have been made aware of it.

217. The departmental routine makes it absolutely imperative that it should be in writing, does it not? Yes; it would have been noted on the maps too.

218. Chairman.] Do you recollect an occasion when you were called up by Mr. Secretary Robertson to his room to take some directions about some land for Mr. Brady? I do not recollect. But it is quite possible that such a thing may have occurred, and that it has faded from my mind. I have no doubt there are hundreds of occasions like that, and I have no recollection of them now.

219. Mr. Holborow.] If the Secretary for Lands called you in and gave you instructions of that nature, you would at once make a note of it when you got back to your office? Certainly.

220. There would be sure to be some record of it? Yes.

221. Chairman.] Do you remember giving any order on the subject to anyone else? No. If such instructions had been given to me I should probably have instructed the draftsman who had charge of that particular duty at the time, and of the particular map in question, to act. There would be a record of it; he would note the official record on the map—the number of the paper, and so on—so that it might be referred to.

222. Mr. Kelly.] Is there any possibility of obtaining those records? I think so.

223. Where are they to be obtained? From the Colonial Secretary's Office.

224. Chairman.] Can you remember having any interview at all with Mr. Secretary Robertson in connection with Mr. Brady's project? No, I cannot remember having any interview.

Robert Dudley Adams called in, sworn, and examined:—

Mr. R. D. Adams.
24 Feb., 1892.

225. Chairman.] Will you tell the Committee what you know with regard to the silkworm industry and Mr. Brady's connection with it? As many of you know, the late Mr. T. S. Mort was a man who exerted himself himself to forward any industry he possibly could. I had great influence in London in those days, and Mr. Mort used, generally speaking, to come and see me, and I used often to help to work matters with him. Amongst others, Mr. Brady came to see him, and he came to me about it, and he said, "What do you think of this?" At first I was opposed to the idea. I said, "Where is your labour to come from?" He said, "See Brady and talk it over." When Mr. Brady explained that he had a method of regulating the hatching of the grain so that it could be kept back or pushed forward, I at once saw that there was some money in it, and I said to Mr. Mort, "Suppose you and I go and see Cowper." I knew Mr. Cowper intimately. Mr. Cowper listened to us, and said yes, he thought the project ought to be considered, and he promised a vote. He said, "Well, if I can by any means arrange to get the Government to pass a vote, I should like to put £500 on the Estimates for it." I cannot remember if he did do so, but my recollection is quite strong that he promised he would do so. My old friend, the late Sir John Robertson, was then becoming a prominent man, and I went and saw him about it. Mr. Mort was very good that way. He would go out of his way to serve anybody, although his time was so terribly taken up. I forget now whom we saw after that. Then the matter seemed to drift for some years, and I can only remember forming one of a deputation in the year 1876 from the fact that my partner died in that year, which fixed the date in my memory. Mr. Secretary Robertson rather pooh-poohed the proposal; in fact, he had not thought about the matter much. He took the same ground at first that I did, and said, "How the deuce is it going to pay?" When I explained what Mr. Brady had said, "Well, can Brady prove it?" I said, "That is what he wants to do. He wants to be in a position to prove it; and under all the circumstances it is surely worth while to give him a chance of proving it." I do not remember the exact result of the deputation now. I remember that I met Mr. Secretary Robertson some time afterwards with regard to other matters, and I went fully into this subject with him, and he said, "Look here, Adams, I believe Brady is an imposter, but for all that I will do something for him. I will see that he gets a show, anyhow." At that time I had a lot of business and domestic troubles, and other people's affairs got out of my mind. As a matter of fact the matter pretty well dropped, except that Mr. Brady called to see me occasionally, and Mr. Mort and myself kept the matter up in a sort of desultory way. I remember that we waited, I think, on Mr. John Bowie Wilson, though I cannot be sure. I know that Mr. Secretary Robertson told me personally, "I think the fellow is a humbug, but for all that he shall have a show." Those were his words.

Mr.
R. D. Adams.
24 Feb., 1892.

226. Do you remember if Mr. Secretary Robertson showed you any papers? I do not remember that.
227. Mr. Ewing.] It was all by word of mouth? It was all by word of mouth so far as I was concerned.
228. Chairman.] To the best of your knowledge, has Mr. Brady any claim on the Government? He certainly has got a claim in honor. How far he has got a business claim is another thing. Mr. Cowper promised that he would have £500; Mr. Secretary Robertson said that he would have a show; and Mr. Bowie Wilson said something to the same effect. I know Mr. Secretary Robertson said, "Give him a grant of land—that will be the best plan. Give him some land."

WEDNESDAY, 2 MARCH, 1892.

Present:—

MR. G. D. CLARK, | MR. HOLBOROW,
MR EWING.

T. ROSE, ESQ., IN THE CHAIR.

Arthur Fry called in, sworn, and examined:—

229. Chairman.] Can you give the Committee any information as to whether Mr. Brady is entitled to compensation for his services in connection with sericulture? I am not in a position to give any information on that point.
230. Can you substantiate any of Mr. Brady's claims for compensation? No, I am not aware that I can.
231. Mr. Holborow.] Do you know whether a promise was ever made by the Government to give Mr. Brady compensation either in money or in land? I have here a report, cut from the Cumberland Mercury, of a deputation which waited upon Sir John Robertson in which a promise is alluded to. [Appendix C.]
232. Do you know anything about any official papers? No.

Mr.
A. Fry.
2 Mar., 1892.

John W. Ellis called in, sworn, and examined:—

233. Chairman.] I believe you were formerly engaged in the Survey Office? Yes.
234. Do you know anything about any papers bearing on Mr. Brady's claim for compensation? I know there were some papers in reference to an application by Mr. Brady for some land for silkworm culture. The Surveyor-General dealt with the matter so far as to have a report made, but if there was anything further done it would have been transacted in the Occupation of Lands branch.
235. Do you know whether the Government of the day recognised Mr. Brady's claim at any time? That I could not say unless I saw the papers; it is more than twenty years ago.
236. You have no recollection of any papers bearing on the question of compensation to Mr. Brady? No; I do not know anything about compensation.
237. Mr. Holborow.] We want to know whether the Government made a promise to Mr. Brady, either in land or money? That I could not say.
238. You have no recollection of any promise being made? Not the slightest.
239. Mr. G. D. Clark.] Did you at any time hear of a promise of £500 having been made? No.
240. You know that Mr. Brady was in occupation of 1,280 acres of land at the Tweed? I could not even answer that question, because I was not connected with the Occupation of Lands Department, where all applications of that kind were dealt with.
241. So that you cannot speak positively, either from documentary evidence or otherwise, as to whether Mr. Brady had a claim against the Government, or whether a promise was made, either in the shape of money or land? No, I certainly cannot.

I believe the papers were sent to the Forest Branch, and then from the Forest Department to the Mines Department, by whom they were furnished to the Committee.

244. Do you know of any papers binding the Government to give Mr. Brady compensation, either in money or land? No, I do not. Among the papers is a minute by Mr. Secretary Robertson, in 1870, in reference to an interview with Mr. Brady. This is the paper. It is a letter from Mr. Brady, dated the 12th September, 1870, asking for an appointment with Mr. Secretary Robertson, and attached are the following minutes :—

245. Mr. Ewing.] Is there any record of the letter written to Mr. Brady in pursuance of the minute “Inform by letter, and then await selection”? There is a letter written on the 21st November, 1870, from the Mines Department, as follows :—

Referring to your letter of the 4th instant on the subject of the production of silk in this Colony, I am directed by the Secretary for Lands to inform you that the Government have approved of the arrangements made by Mr. Secretary Robertson with you, under which you are empowered to select (to be afterwards leased to you) 1,280 acres of land in the vicinity of Curl Curl, near Manly.

247. Can you give us any definite information with reference to papers in support of the claim of Mr. Brady for compensation? I have no definite information with reference to papers.

248. Do you know of any papers binding on the Government with reference to giving Mr. Brady compensation for his services in connection with sericulture? No.

249. Have you any knowledge as to the Government having made a promise to Mr. Brady? No, I have no personal knowledge of any such promise. As a representative of the Sydney Morning Herald, about twenty years ago, I attended some meetings on the subject of sericulture at which Mr. Mort and others were present, and at which reference was made to Mr. Brady's services.

CLAIMS OF MR. CHARLES BRADY.

APPENDIX.

A.

[To Evidence of James Fry, 11 February, 1892.]

Memoranda re a public meeting in 1874. Observations by Mr. James Fry, Sunnyholt, Blacktown.

FROM report in T. & C. Journal, 20/6/74, Mr. T. S. Mort said, at my house, Mr. Parkes (Colonial Secretary) “promised, what I suppose business of another kind has prevented him from performing, to introduce into Parliament a Bill having for its aim and object something of the scheme that we had tried in earlier days.” This referred to a scheme proposed “in Cowper's time” that Government should attempt to start the silk industry (which Mr. Mort held to be “entirely a Government matter”) by engaging Mr. Brady at £300 per annum and travelling expenses, to furnish materials, disseminate instruction, and superintend plantations.

Hon. S. D. Gordon “thought the Government should be urged to make a grant of the land that is now under a lease for five years.”

Mr. G. Thorne, who seconded resolution appointing a deputation to wait upon the Colonial Secretary, said :—“The Government might well be asked to make a grant of this land, and otherwise to promote the silk industry.”

Mr. Prince “suggested that the grant should be made to trustees on behalf of the Colony.”

Mr. Brady said “the Government had promised to bring in a Bill to give him a Parliamentary title to the land he occupied.” The meeting closed by arranging that Government should be appealed to “to aid Mr. Brady, leaving the way in which that aid should be afforded to be determined hereafter.”

From report in T. & C. Journal (or) of interview with Mr. Parkes (Colonial Secretary) :—“Something was done to promote his (Brady's) views six or seven years ago. More recently, a short time ago, he proposed to get a piece of land. That was given him wherever he chose to take it. (Mr. Mort : A lease for five years.) But still it was available for all his purposes.”

In view of the general subject, I submit the following from Dandolo, the great Italian authority :—“If the proprietor does not attentively watch the plantation of the mulberry-trees and their culture, particularly during the eight or ten first years, he will not receive from 1,000 trees the quantity of leaves which an able agriculturist will get from 200 mulberry-trees at the end of six years.” (D. held that the sixth year should be the first year for stripping the leaves.) “The above observation,” he continues, “deserves the strictest attention, for it is the basis of all lasting advantages in this valuable industry.”

Perhaps also, in view of the general subject, and of Mr. Brady's peculiar faculty and efforts as known at that time to Mr. Mort and others, I may take the liberty to quote from a letter I wrote in the S. Mail (11 Dec., 1874) :—“I find in Tomlinson's ‘Cyclopædia of the Useful Arts,’ in the appendix published as recently as 1863, the following very startling statement :—At one time an ounce of silkworm eggs yielded 140 lb. of silk. By gradual diminution the quantity came to be 100, 80, 50, 30, 20, down to 14 lb. in 1856. And now I believe the average yield is reckoned as something under the 10 lb. of silk per ounce of eggs.”

The higher figures here given seem almost beyond belief; though, upon the estimate of Dandolo, a most painstaking observer, six worms at the period when preparing to spin, or, in other words, six living bags of the liquid silk, should weigh an ounce ; and this, supposing all the hatching to be reared within, say, 10 per cent., gives a total weight which allows a large margin for evaporation and weight of the chrysalids over and above 140 lb. Disregarding, however, the extreme figures, what if it be given to Australia to commence a scale, in which as it stretches far away into the future the above figures should come to be in the reverse order ! The possibility of treating the worm in Australia for "systematic improvement," and aiming at results not now even dreamt of in Europe !

The possibility could only begin to be, in my judgment, with the opening year of the next century. Nor even so soon, unless the country, through its Government, set to work at once in downright earnest. First is required, to the exclusion of all that would distract attention from this as the fundamental sine qua non, the existence of mulberry leaves on a scale so vast as to be unimagined, except by those who are familiar with the details of the industry. Second, that the trees bearing these leaves shall have attained to a certain age. It is a demonstrated fact that the proportion of resinous or seric matter to the saccharine or nutritive matter in a mulberry-leaf is much less when the tree is young than when the tree has grown older. My suggestion is : That the Government should very carefully select suitable spots in many different localities over the Colony for planting in each a reserve of 30 acres with young mulberry, of approved kinds, according to soil and climatic conditions. That these trees be not touched, except by the expert in charge of their culture, for eight years. That, a considerable time before the eighth year, it be publicly announced, and made well known, that tenders will then be received for the leasing of these mulberry reserves, collectively or separately.

It is obvious that the Government expert would need to give much time to the superintendence of the plantations in their early years. And as commercial silk-growing is as much an art as an agricultural industry, the rest of his time would be fully occupied in other preparatory work.

It is thought, if the localities be wisely chosen, that the plantation would operate as a nucleus to attract settlers. That each settler would give a portion of his holding to mulberry-trees, and of his time to silkworm-rearing, by way of experiment, and to get his hand in. The number thus interested in the eight years might grow into hundreds. But it is also probable that the display of these masses of leaf, appealing direct to the eye, would stir up capital to ask : Can this vast, almost boundless, profusion of leaves be profitably transmuted into a new staple for export ? If it can, of which there is little question among those who have studied the supposed cost of labour difficulty, and found how unreal it is, private enterprise on a large scale would provide the necessary gear and plant for gathering in the crop economically, according to the latest approved scientific methods.

Could this kindly be laid before the Premier ? We should be glad if Mr. Ednie Brown could be asked to report as soon as possible. He could discuss the matter in detail with Mr. Brady, whose address is care of B. B. Nicoll, Esq., M.P.

Sir,

With reference to the interview of the Members for the Richmond electorate with you yesterday in regard to silk-culture, I would wish that any assistance desired from me might be rendered if possible in a way to avoid my becoming a salaried servant of the Government.

Should you be pleased to accept my services, and I be allowed to afford them without my doing so at my own expense or to my own loss, I would gladly maintain in the Colony a stud stock of mulberry silkworms for the use of the Government, and also supply sets of various mulberry plants suitable for propagation in different localities. My advice and experience, together with provision of healthy brood stock, the outcome of twenty years' acclimatisation, would probably be useful to such gentlemen as would be charged with the work of organising operations until the staff should be enabled to dispense with assistance.

Should the Government decide upon taking practical measures to permanently establish the production of silk on a commercial scale as a staple industry in the Colony, I venture respectfully to recommend as a first step thereto that all operations be placed under the control of the Director-General of Forests, and the growth extensively of the mulberry in many widely-separated localities. This, economically, would largely benefit the State, and at the same time as well a great many people whose occupations are of the soil.

Besides a large number of our own countrymen and women, who, I believe, would eagerly seize the opportunity of getting instruction (hitherto beyond their reach), there is also in this Colony a considerable number of Italians and other foreigners with whom the industry in Europe has been more or less familiar or traditional, but who have neither the means nor opportunity to obtain local knowledge and local experience essential to success in this new and, to them, strange country. Some of these people might be placed in a position to work under guidance to a good purpose while plantations are being formed and growing.

The Honorable Sir Henry Parkes, Colonial Secretary.

I have, &c.,

CHARLES BRADY.

Sir,

I find it expedient to supplement my letter of 31st October by requesting your early attention so far as regards securing (if required for the use of the Government) before too late a succession of the Autony yearly silkworms.

In May, 1889, in reply to the Honorable Minister for Mines, through Mr. Ewing M.P., what I would propose or desire re silk-culture, I made certain representations—and later on, as I had had no answer for several months, I announced my intention not to incur further expenses, and to leave—the season's rearing was therefore not commenced as usual at end of July—in fact, not until about six weeks later, when Mr. Perry, M.P., wrote me stating that the Minister had at last promised to send an officer to report. Upon this notification and his suggestion, I began rearing again, and hatched day after day, so that when Mr. Campbell arrived in October there were numbers of worms of various races in several stages of growth for his inspection, which he viewed.

In December, 1889, hearing nothing further of his report, I wrote to Mr. Campbell, asking him to request the Honorable the Minister to acquaint me with his intentions so far as I might be personally concerned. To this I had no reply except an oral statement by the Director of Agriculture, about the end of March, 1890, to Mr. Ewing, to effect that my place (Autony) was "too near Queensland."

Being in Sydney in August last on other business, at the instance of Mr. Nicoll, M.P., who, as well as the other Members for the district, was very desirous the season should not be wholly lost, and my property perish through official indifference, I had several interviews with Mr. Sydney Smith, who, after much delay, on 14th October, professed his inability to deal with the matter.

If my stock is to be utilized, prompt proceeding is now necessary. I should be pleased if you would grant me an interview, or appoint some one to confer with me.

The Honorable Sir Henry Parkes, Colonial Secretary.

[To Evidence of Arthur Fry, 2 March, 1892.][From Cumberland Mercury, Parramatta, Saturday, 22 July, 1876.]

SERICULTURE.

A DEPUTATION, consisting of Messrs. T. Mort, Powell, Calvert, G. Thorne, J. Manning, and J. Fry, waited upon the Hon. Colonial Secretary, on Thursday, 20th instant, for the purpose of asking him to take such steps as might be necessary to enable Parliament to make a free grant to Mr. Chas. Brady, sericulturist, of 1,280 acres of land at the Tweed River, as a recognition of the services rendered by him to cause of silk-culture in this Colony.

Mr. Mort said that the principal grounds on which the request was based were the importance of Mr. Brady's methods of (1st) hibernating the grain, and (2nd) hybridising the races of worms. These were points to which he had been the first to introduce to the world; and as instancing their importance he might mention that at a meeting held in England lately the chairman had said that Mr. Brady had rendered a great service to the world by his discovery of hibernation, by which means the grain could be kept sound until it was required for hatching, when the food was fit, instead of as heretofore, having the worms hatched out at wrong seasons, before the leaf was ready. Hybridisation had been very successful in the Colony, and some very fine descriptions of worms had been reared and cocoons obtained, notably the Queensland briff, which Mr. Brady produced, and the silk from which had received very great attention at Home. Mr. Brady had laboured long and earnestly, and it was thought that the free grant of the land asked for would be only a reasonable recognition of his services, and would enable him to carry on his operations to the further benefit of the Colony.

Mr. Thorne thought that, taking into consideration that worms could not be fed without large plantations of trees being made, the Government should give every encouragement to the people in different parts of the Colony to plant such plantations. He suggested that a bonus should be given to the grower of a certain number of mulberry-trees of, say, three years old. Mulberry-trees were very hardy, as had been uncontestedly shown during the late drought, and once planted were of permanent utility; and by encouraging this industry the Government would see a result in largely-increased exports from New South Wales in the course of a few years.

Mr. Robertson recollected a Mr. Bate growing silkworms largely in Sydney about fifty years ago. He reared worms and produced silk, and Mr. Robertson believed that the Government granted him some land. The newspapers commented favourably on this great new industry, and there was some fuss in England about it too; but it came to nothing. The Government had also granted land for growing cotton, which industry also came to grief. Mr. Brady had already considerable advantages afforded him in being allowed to choose some of the best land of the Colony and occupy it without rent for nearly ten years.

Mr. Mort believed that the lease was only for five years, which time had not yet expired.

Mr. Robertson said it was much more than five years ago. It was when Mr. Wilson and Sir James Martin were in office. However, he had got the land subject to certain conditions—as to planting trees, &c. Had these conditions been carried out? But if they had been performed, the land could only be granted by an Act of Parliament; and before the Government could bring in a Bill to that effect they would require to be satisfied that the conditions had been so far performed on Mr. Brady's part. He knew that Mr. Brady had planted some mulberries there, but how many? they might be a great distance apart; it was easy to cover ground in that way. It was advisable before the Government took any move to look into the matter of the promises, and see whether they were certain or implied. However, he knew very well that Mr. Brady had spent both time and money, and he thought that the Parliament would not be inclined to deal illiberally with a gentleman who had been the first to commence this industry, and who had so much as Mr. Brady was said to have done to forward the cause of silk-culture. He (Mr. Robertson) knew from personal experience that a difficulty anent the silkworms was that they hatched out frequently before the mulberry leaves were ready for them, on which occasions he had had to feed them on lettuce leaves.

Mr. Mort reminded Mr. Robertson that the discovery of hibernating the worms until the leaf was ready obviated that difficulty; and Mr. Brady had carried the system out with such care and exactitude that grain sent Home by him had hatched out just three days within the time calculated upon. Mr. Mort drew attention to the fact that some years ago Mr. Brady had undoubtedly received promises from Mr. Cowper, which had not yet been fulfilled. And he had strongly advised Mr. Brady, in the assurance that these promises would be fulfilled, to keep back some grain then in his possession, and which he intended to send to Europe, so that the Colony might have the benefit of it. This Mr. Brady did; and he had in consequence suffered great loss. He repeated that Mr. Brady's claims were based, not on having planted trees, but on his discovery of hibernation, which was of value to the whole world; and which was not merely a crude idea, but a scientific fact recognised by the Silk Association at Home.

Mr. Fry mentioned two facts which spoke for themselves. The first had been mentioned in Mr. Brady's petition to Parliament a short time ago, namely—"That he had, for one thousand consecutive days, summer and winter, brought worms out, and had produced leaf to feed them with." The other fact was that last October twelve months the Victorian Sericultural Co. had sent Home a large quantity of grain, which would, in the natural course of events, have hatched out in the heat of summer when there were no leaves; but being hibernated in accordance with Mr. Brady's process, was kept all that summer and through the following winter, and in the spring, just three days from the time mentioned, four millions of worms came out. At last accounts the operations were going on very successfully, and it was estimated that those worms would produce about £2,000 worth of cocoons. And if it had not been for Mr. Brady's discovery every one of those worms and their product of silk would have been lost.

Mr. Calvert instanced, as an evidence of the quality of Mr. Brady's grain, that he had sent Home some time ago 300 ounces, which had realised £1 an ounce, and he had letters certifying to its superiority and healthy condition. That was only on a small scale, but Mr. Brady was cramped for want of means. If this industry were well carried out, and made of national interest, it would be a source of untold wealth to the Colony.

In reply to a suggestion that selectors should be informed by circular that mulberry-trees should be reckoned as improvements, Mr. Robertson said they were already recognised as such; and he did not consider it the business of the Government to issue such circulars.

After a few remarks, Mr. Robertson said that if those interested would put their wishes definitely on paper he would be glad to give such assistance as the circumstances warranted.

The deputation then withdrew.

SUNDAY LABOUR.

(PETITION FROM CERTAIN HOUSEHOLDERS AND CITIZENS OF NEWCASTLE, PRAYING THE HOUSE NOT TO ASSENT TO ANY MEASURE THAT WILL LEGALIZE SUNDAY LABOUR.)

Received by the Legislative Assembly, 8 March, 1892.

The Honorable the Legislative Assembly of New South Wales, in Parliament assembled.

The Petition of the Householders and Citizens of the City of Newcastle, New South Wales,—
HUMBLY SHOWETH :—

1. That your Petitioners are firmly persuaded that the preservation of Sunday as a day of rest from labour is essential for the highest well-being of this and of every community.

2. That your Petitioners believe that the Sunday laws of this Colony conserve the rights of all classes in this respect and curb individual selfishness and greed of gain, to the great advantage of the community.

3. That your Petitioners submit that no class in the community has shown any good or valid reason for altering the law.

4. That your Petitioners have learned that an attempt is being made to frustrate the efforts of the police of this city in enforcing the closing of shops in the city on a Sunday, which they have done in the case of some, kept chiefly by a class of foreigners who settle among us, and who have come from parts where the Sunday is almost wholly set aside, and who thus, as aliens, produce far from a healthy morality in this community.

Your Petitioners therefore pray that your Honourable House will see fit to withhold your assent to any measure which will interfere with the sacredness of the Sunday, and legalize Sunday labour.

And your Petitioners, as in duty bound, will ever pray.

Question.

2. MR. DANGAR ASKED THE COLONIAL SECRETARY,—

(1.) What number of shops and other business places were observed by the police on duty in the respective Metropolitan Police Districts of the city and suburbs to be open for the transaction of usual trade within the hours from 3 to 5 p.m. and 8 to 9 p.m. on Sunday the 14th February?

(2.) What were the respective businesses carried on, stating in how many cases more than one business was being prosecuted?

(3.) (a) How many prosecutions were instituted against such persons; (b) under what Act were such prosecutions instituted; (c) what was the result of such prosecutions?

Answer.

REPORT forwarded for the Colonial Secretary's information.

It is a very wide question what latitude should be permitted in the sale of light refreshments on Sundays; I am strongly of opinion that legislation is desirable to set the question at rest.

TYPHOID FEVER IN SYDNEY AND SUBURBS.

(FROM 1876 TO 1890.)

AND CERTAIN PARTICULARS RESPECTING OTHER INFECTIOUS DISEASES.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be printed, 29 July, 1891.

The Secretary to the Board of Health to The Principal Under Secretary.

Sir,

Board of Health Office, 127, Macquarie-street, Sydney, 21 May, 1891.

I have the honor, by direction of the Board of Health, to forward you the enclosed paper on the prevalence and mortality of Typhoid Fever in the City of Sydney and Suburbs during last fifteen years, and certain particulars respecting other infectious diseases, which has been prepared from the records in this Office for the information of the Colonial Secretary.

I have, &c.,

EDMUND SAGER,

Secretary.

[Enclosure.]

Typhoid fever in the City of Sydney and its Suburbs from 1876 to 1890, and certain particulars respecting other Infectious Diseases.

THE accompanying tables, which have been carefully prepared for the information of the Colonial Secretary, contain certain interesting facts with reference to the prevalence and mortality of typhoid fever in the city of Sydney and suburbs during the last fifteen years, and are a continuation of returns previously furnished, completed to the 31st December last. In addition to the usual tables, a return is given respecting measles, scarlet fever, and diphtheria.

In table I a statement is given of the number of deaths in each month of the ten years ending 31st December, 1885, together with the ratio calculated per 100,000 of the population, as estimated on the 30th June in each year. From this it will be seen that during the decennial period—1876 to 1885—there was a very large increase in the mortality from this disease, viz., from 46·07 per 100,000 in 1876 to 102·17 in 1885.

Table II gives a similar statement for 1886, 1887, 1888, 1889, and 1890. From this it will be seen that the mortality from typhoid fever has of late undergone considerable diminution; thus in 1886 the rate per 100,000 was 90·90; in 1887 it was 58·11; in 1888 it was 51·42; in 1889 it was 55·77; and in 1890 it was 36·66.

The Board have pleasure in drawing attention to the fact that only 143 persons died from typhoid fever in the city of Sydney and its suburbs during the year 1890, being equal to a death rate of 36·66 per 100,000 of the population, which is the smallest for the fifteen years, now under review.

Table III, which contains a return of the number of cases of typhoid fever admitted to the metropolitan hospitals of Sydney, and of the number of deaths which have occurred in these institutions during 1886, 1887, 1888, 1889, and 1890. From these figures it will be seen that 455 cases were admitted, which is considerably below the number of any of the previous four years. Sixty-six of these cases terminated fatally, making a death-rate of 14·50 per cent. on the admissions, which is higher than any of the preceding three years. This appears to indicate that while the disease was not so prevalent in 1890 it was of a severer form. The very decided diminution in the number of cases of typhoid fever would appear to be due primarily to the wet season, which washed out and cleaned street gutters, drains, and other foul places. The extension of the Prospect Water Supply to several of the suburbs, and the new sewerage scheme which is now in use in the city and some suburban districts, have both, and in a very considerable degree, tended to lessen the causes which lead to the production of typhoid, whilst last, but by no means least, the strict administration of the Dairies Supervision Act has had a share in the satisfactory result.

Table

Table IV shows the number of persons suffering from typhoid fever who were admitted to the metropolitan hospitals from the city of Sydney and suburbs during the twelve months ending December 31st, 1890, arranged according to the localities from which they were removed, together with a calculation of the ratio of cases per each 10,000 of the population.

Table V shows the deaths which took place in the hospitals among the cases mentioned in the previous table; in this it has not been deemed necessary to calculate the ratio per 10,000.

From these returns it will be seen that the total cases admitted from the metropolis was 429, or 11·00 per 10,000 of the population, as against 808 cases, or 21·56 per 10,000 for the year 1889. The eastern district (comprising Paddington, Randwick, Waverley, and Woollahra) have supplied by far the largest number, viz., 79, giving a ratio of 18·03 per 10,000 of the population. On the 6th of August last the Board forwarded a report to the Colonial Secretary, on an outbreak of typhoid fever at Waverley and Randwick, which showed that in these districts alone 59 cases of typhoid fever could be traced as being due to the neglect of a local authority in carrying out the instructions of the Board of Health as to the administration of the Dairies Supervision Act.

Table VI gives certain information respecting the prevalence of measles, scarlet fever, and diphtheria. Owing to the absence of any provision for the notification and registration of infectious diseases (the necessity for which becomes yearly more apparent) no data exist on which the full and complete information, desirable in the interest of the public health, can be compiled. The Board has at its disposal only the returns of admissions to hospitals, courteously furnished by the authorities of the Metropolitan hospitals, and the statistics of death supplied by the Registrar-General. From these it appears that whilst the incidence of measles and scarlet fever has been very light during the year, diphtheria is becoming increasingly prevalent, and that the number of cases occurring in the suburbs is very much greater in proportion to the population than in the City of Sydney. It has not escaped the attention of the Board that as the disease is one which chiefly attacks children, comparatively few of whom are resident in the city, a larger proportion of cases might be expected in the suburbs, but this will not account for the disparity in proportion, and the Board is of opinion that in defective sewerage and water service, the building on areas naturally unhealthy or made so by garbage tips, and other departure from sanitary laws, the cause of the disproportion is to be found. The total number of cases admitted to the hospitals was 64, and of these 30 died, being a death-rate of nearly 50 per cent. The number of deaths outside the hospital was 91, and assuming that the death rate was about the same as the cases taken to hospital, there must have been some 250 persons attacked with the disease during the year 1890 in the City of Sydney and suburbs. The necessity of some special hospital provision for the more severe cases of this very fatal and infectious disease has forced itself upon the attention of the Board. The milder cases and those in the early stage can be sent to the Coast Hospital, but the journey is too long and perilous for severe cases, and the only special provision for these at present is a small ward in the Children's Hospital, the accommodation in which is inadequate to meet the increasing number of severe cases.

By order,

EDMUND SAGER,

Secretary to the Board of Health.

Sydney, 20 May, 1891.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.
NEW SOUTH WALES.

TYPHOID FEVER IN SYDNEY AND SUBURBS.

(FROM 1876 TO 1891.)

AND CERTAIN PARTICULARS RESPECTING OTHER INFECTIOUS DISEASES.

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be printed, 23 March, 1892.

The Secretary to the Board of Health to The Principal Under Secretary.

Sir, Board of Health Office, 127, Macquarie-street, Sydney, 11th February, 1892.

I have the honor, by direction of the Board of Health, to forward you the enclosed paper on the occurrence of Typhoid Fever and the mortality therefrom in the City of Sydney and Suburbs during the last sixteen years, and certain particulars respecting other infectious diseases, prepared from the records in this office for the information of the Colonial Secretary.

I have, &c.,

EDMUND SAGER,
Secretary.

[Enclosure.]

Typhoid fever in the City of Sydney and its Suburbs from 1876 to 1891, and certain particulars respecting other Infectious Diseases.

THE accompanying tables, which have been carefully prepared for the information of the Colonial Secretary, contain certain interesting facts with reference to the prevalence and mortality of typhoid fever in the city of Sydney and suburbs during the last sixteen years, and are a continuation of returns previously furnished, completed to the 31st December last. In addition to the usual tables, a return is given respecting measles, scarlet fever, and diphtheria.

In table I a statement is given of the number of deaths in each month of the ten years ending 31st December, 1885, together with the ratio calculated per 100,000 of the population, as estimated on the 30th June in each year. From this it will be seen that during the decennial period—1876 to 1885—there was a very large increase in the mortality from this disease, viz., from 46·07 per 100,000 in 1876 to 102·17 in 1885.

Table II gives a similar statement for 1886 to 1891. From this it will be seen that the mortality from typhoid fever has of late undergone considerable diminution, having gradually decreased from 90·90 per 100,000 in 1886, to 28·17 for 1891, which is by far the lowest for any of the sixteen years now under review, and is attributable in no slight degree to the operation of the Dairies Supervision Act.

Table III, which contains a return of the number of cases of typhoid fever admitted to the metropolitan hospitals of Sydney, and of the number of deaths that have occurred in these institutions during 1886, 1887, 1888, 1889, 1890, and 1891. From these figures it will be seen that during 1891 only 290 cases were admitted, which is considerably below the number of any of the previous years. Forty-four of these cases terminated fatally, making a death-rate of 15·17 per cent. on the admissions, this being higher than any of the preceding four years.

Table IV shows the number of persons suffering from typhoid fever who were admitted to the metropolitan hospitals from the city of Sydney and suburbs during the twelve months ending December 31st, 1891, arranged according to the localities from which they were removed, together with a calculation of the ratio of cases per each 10,000 of the population.

Table V shows the deaths which took place in the hospitals among the cases mentioned in the previous table; in this it has not been deemed necessary to calculate the ratio per 10,000.

From

From these returns it will be seen that the total cases admitted from the metropolis was 276, or 7·13 per 10,000 of the population, as against 429 cases, or 11·00 per 10,000, for the year 1890.

Table VI gives certain particulars respecting the prevalence of certain other infectious diseases. The Board would again draw attention to the increasing prevalence of diphtheria in the Metropolitan District, no less than 181 deaths having been recorded, as against 121 in the previous year, being an increase of about 50 per cent..

The Board regrets that, in the absence of any provision for the notification and registration of infectious diseases, it is not in a position to furnish more definite or detailed information.

By order,

EDMUND SAGER,

Secretary to the Board of Health.

Sydney, 10th January, 1892.

NEW SOUTH WALES.

VACCINATION.

(REPORT FOR 1891.)

Presented to Parliament by Command.

The Medical Adviser to the Government to The Colonial Secretary.

Sir,

Sydney, 7th March, 1892.

I do myself the honor to forward, for the information of the Colonial Secretary, the Annual Returns of Vaccinations performed during the year 1891 by the Government Vaccinators in New South Wales, together with an additional vaccination return for the year 1890.

The returns for 1891 show that 1,582 vaccinations were performed during the year, of which 1,567 were successful. Of the total number, 531 were performed in Sydney and its suburbs, and 1,036 in country districts. It will be seen from the returns that vaccination was only performed in 13 country districts; in 92 districts in which there are Government Vaccinators no vaccinations have been reported, and it is presumed that none have been performed.

Of the successful cases, the patients in 236 were under 1 year, in 532 between 1 and 5 years, in 515 between 5 and 10 years, and in 284 upwards of 10 years of age. The unsuccessful cases were 15 or '94 per cent of the total number. (See Return No. 2.)

The additional vaccination return for 1890 shows that in that year 85 successful vaccinations were performed, and this number has been added to those in the return already published for that year, so as to render it complete. (See Return No. 1.)

The number of births registered in the colony during 1891 was 39,567, and the vaccinations give a percentage of 3·96 on this number. In addition to vaccinations performed by Government Vaccinators a number are performed by private practitioners, but of these no returns are submitted. There is reason, however, to believe that these cases would not add very materially to the percentage above given.

I have, &c.,

F. NORTON MANNING, M.D.,
Medical Adviser to the Government.

RETURN (No. 1) showing the number of Births during the past thirty-one years, and the number of Vaccinations performed by Government Vaccinators during the same period.

Newcastle Pilot.	1 ... 1	12 16	This vessel arrived at Newcastle on 6th April, 1891, and was quarantined by the Port Health Officer, Dr. Williamson, in consequence of a death on board on 7th March, reasonably supposed to have been caused by small-pox. The Superintendent and two Officers (Nickles and Hannah) boarded the vessel at Newcastle on 7th April (9 a.m.), and at once commenced to disinfect by placing all parts of the ship under fumigation for eight consecutive hours, with all the articles (other than those in present use by crew, pilot, and passenger) openly exposed to the sulphur fumes, all apertures being closed during fumigation. After this, all persons divested themselves of their wearing apparel, and clothed with disinfected articles. These articles then underwent a similar process. All articles not previously dealt with were soaked in a solution of corrosive sublimate for two hours, and then washed, with the exception of such articles of wearing apparel which would be destroyed by that process. All such articles were fumigated for seven hours under sulphur. Disinfection was completed by 3 p.m. on the 8th instant. During the vessel's detention two of the crew were suffering from venereal; pilot, passenger, and remainder of crew were in good health. Memo.—Guayacan, s.s., left Newcastle on 7th April at 10 p.m., and dropped anchor at Spring Cove, Quarantine Station, at 9 a.m. 8th April. No one allowed to land with the exception of the Superintendent, who at once divested himself of his clothing (which was immediately placed under sulphur), bathed, and reclothed with noninfected goods. The pilot, passenger, crew, and two Quarantine Officers performed quarantine on board ship.

Had 200 tons stone ballast, and 30 tons sand and gravel ballast. This could not be discharged in Quarantine as it would endanger safety of vessel. Captain allowed to proceed to Sydney with vessel on promising not to remove ballast without special permission of the Board of Health. Quarantine Officer Nickels went with ship to Sydney.

Small-pox on board during voyage; one death at sea.	European..	28		28	..	At 8 a.m., 30th August, the Assistant Health Officer reported that the ship "Mount Stewart" would shortly arrive in quarantine, to be dealt with as an infected vessel, having had several cases of small-pox on board during the voyage. At 9 a.m. the waters between the shore and the boundary buoy were placed under quarantine, and the yellow flag hoisted on "Faraway." The ship dropped anchor in Spring Cove at 9.35 a.m., when the Superintendent at once boarded and obtained particulars of sickness during voyage. At 1.45 p.m., same day, Dr. Paton, Government Medical Officer, boarded the vessel and examined every one, and offered vaccination or revaccination to each individual, but only eight persons accepted, and were at once operated upon. Captain Smith reported:—"1st case.—William Curran, A.B., age, 40; fell ill on 28th May, complaining of sore throat and pains, eruptions appeared on the face and arms on 1st June, when he was isolated in deck house, on 6th June rash appeared all over his body, and he was low and feverish, he took food until 16th June, and had no vomiting; Curran died on 13th June, and was at once buried, all effects, clothing, and bedding of deceased were at same time thrown overboard; immediately on death the corpse turned a dark bluish color. 2nd case.—James Tait, A.B., age, 25; fell ill on 15th June, complaining of pains and sore throat, a very slight eruption appeared on 21st June, when he was isolated, he took food as usual, and resumed duty on 29th June. 3rd case.—John McLeod, A.B., age, 25; on 17th June complained of pains in head and body and sore throat, isolated same day, eruption appeared on 21st June, on face and body, when he was at once isolated, resumed duty on 2nd June. 4th case.—Angus M'ivor, A.B., age, 25, on 17th June complained of pains in head and body and sore throat, isolated same day; eruption appeared 21st June on face and body, a day or two afterwards eruption appeared all over his body; all scabs had disappeared on 20th July, when he was convalescent, and resumed duty, he is slightly pitted. 5th case.—Hugh Muir, A.B., age, 41; ill on 19th July; no eruptions; convalescent and at duty on 21st July. Note.—All clothing of Nos 2, 3, 4, and 5, worn during illness were thrown overboard, and new supplied from slop chest." Captain states that quarters occupied by patients were treated daily with chloride of lime and carbolic acid, on 13th June, after Curran's death, 2 lb. of sulphur were burned in isolation quarters. Disinfection of ship, &c.—All parts of the vessel, including ship's holds, were placed under sulphur, with articles of clothing, bedding, &c., openly exposed to the sulphur fumes for twelve consecutive hours. All hatches, portholes, and other apertures were kept closed during that period. As soon as fumigation was completed, all persons on board divested themselves of their wearing apparel and then clothed with the articles which had undergone fumigation. All such divested clothing was then subjected to the same operation as the others. All parts of the vessel were then thoroughly cleansed, above and below decks, with a solution of corrosive sublimate. All bilge water pumped out and bilges disinfected with corrosive sublimate. All beds and bedding used by the men, during their illness on the voyage, were destroyed by fire on board the ship. The effects of all persons on board, after fumigation, were then sent on shore and disinfected in Lyons's patent disinfectant, by dry and moist heat, at a temperature of 250°. Afterwards all articles were returned to the ship and then thoroughly cleansed by washing. No one allowed to land from ship during quarantine. Quarantine Officer Hay remained on board during the whole of the quarantine period (21 days). The Superintendent visited the vessel twice daily, changing his clothing on each occasion. September 21, 3.40 p.m.—Dr. Paton, Government Medical Officer, examined the twenty eight (28) souls on board, and certified that they were all in good health. On 22nd September the vessel and crew were released at daylight by order of the Board of Health. The master of the ship, after leaving, was presented with the usual certificate
