(SECOND SESSION.)

NEW SOUTH WALES.

DEPARTMENT OF MINES.

(ANNUAL REPORT OF THE STOCK AND BRANDS BRANCH.)

Presented to Parliament by Command.

THE HONORABLE SYDNEY SMITH, ESQ., M.P., MINISTER FOR MINES AND AGRICULTURE.

Sir,

In submitting the valuable and interesting Report of the Chief Inspector of Stock, I have to express regret that it has not been made available for distribution at an earlier date, but the pressure of work in the Government Printing Office has been so great that a proof of the Report has only just been received. However, it is to be hoped that the information contained in the preliminary Report published on the 31st January last will, to some extent, have satisfied the requirements of the public.

I have, &c.,

HARRIE WOOD,

Under Secretary.

Department of Mines,

Sydney, 24th July, 1891.

The Chief Inspector of Stock to The Under Secretary for Mines.

Sir, Department of Mines, Stock Branch, Sydney, 1 May, 1891.

On the 31st January last I submitted a Progress Report for the year ending 31st December, 1890, giving the approximate number of the horses, cattle, and sheep then in the Colony; and I have now the honor to submit for your consideration my complete Report for that year on the working of this Branch, which is as usual based very much upon Inspectors' estimates—owners still showing very little inclination to furnish data. It will be seen that the actual number of cattle and sheep in this Report exceed those in the Progress Report, while the number of horses is slightly less.

I have, &c.,
ALEX. BRUCE,
Chief Inspector of Stock.

I.—INSPECTORS AND THEIR WORK.

1. The Inspectors.

There are now forty-eight inspectors, having charge of sixty-three Sheep Districts.

2. The Inspections made.

The inspections made during the year were as follows:—

Of Stock	20,571
„ Reserves	4,520
„ Pounds	371
„ Dogs	1,458
„ Pigs	1,717
Under Pastures and Stock Protection Act	5,260
Under Public Watering-places Act	1,266
Total	35,163

This would give an average of 732 inspections made by each of the forty-eight inspectors, and is an increase of 84 inspections on last year.

3. Horses, Cattle, and Sheep inspected.

Horses.—The number of horses inspected during the year was 98,511 by forty-seven inspectors.

Cattle.—The number of cattle inspected during the year was 1,299,878.

Sheep.—The number of sheep inspected during the year was 28,378,925. This is an increase on last year's inspections of horses, 7,675; of cattle, 275,535; and of sheep, 175,588.

4. Inspections at Homebush Sale-yards.

During the year bi-weekly visits to the Homebush yards have been made, with the view to inspecting the stock yarded. The total number of stock submitted to auction was as follows:—Cattle, 93,406 head; sheep, 1,634,330, or a weekly average of 1,796 cattle and 31,429 sheep, being an increase of 69 cattle and 1,137 sheep on the weekly average, as compared with previous year. These inspections are called for not only for the prevention of disease but also to check stock stealing, and with that view the inspector sees that the brands and marks of the stock correspond with those in the permits or travelling statements accompanying the stock, which are collected and filed in this office for future reference, should, as it at times happens, inquiry be made with respect to stock suspected of being stolen.

5. Distance travelled by Inspectors during the year on duty.

The total number of miles travelled by forty-eight inspectors was 187,798, or an average of 3,912 each per annum, being a decrease of 47 miles for each inspector as compared with the previous year.

6. Prosecutions and Convictions.

The prosecutions instituted during the past year were as follows:—

Under Sheep Act	70
„ Imported Stock Act...
„ Brands Act	7
„ Pastures Act... ..	200
„ Public Watering-places Act	22
„ Impounding Act	4
Total	305

This shows a decrease in the number of prosecutions for the year. The decrease was under the Sheep, Imported Stock, and Public Watering-places Acts. There was an increase under the Brands, Pastures, Impounding, and Slaughtering Acts, as compared with those of the previous year.

The number of convictions were:—

Under Sheep Act	65
„ Imported Stock Act...
„ Brands Act	6
„ Pastures Act... ..	160
„ Public Watering-places Act	11
„ Impounding Act	4
Total	248

II.—

II.—HORSES.

1. The Number.

The number of horses in the Colony during the thirty years previous to and including 1890 was as follows:—

Year.	No.	Year.	No.	Year.	No.
1861	251,497	1871	337,597	1881	398,577
1862	233,220	1872	304,100	1882	328,026
1863	273,389	1873	328,408	1883	326,964
1864	262,554	1874	334,462	1884	337,172
1865	284,567	1875	357,697	1885	344,697

1867	278,437	1877	328,150	1887	390,609
1868	280,201	1878	336,468	1888	411,368
1869	280,818	1879	360,038	1889	430,777
1870	280,304	1880	395,984	1890	444,163

This shows an increase of 13,386 during the year, and is due principally to an increase in the number of breeders, good season, introduction, settlement, and to the returns being more complete.

The number of horses in each Sheep District will be found in Appendix A.

2. The different Breeds.

Draught.—The numbers returned under this head are—Ordinary, 123,069 ; thoroughbred, 21,094 ; total, 144,163.

Light Harness.—The number returned as ordinary is 98,443 ; thoroughbred, 15,494 ; total, 113,937.

Saddle.—The number of ordinary is given as 158,963 ; thoroughbred, 27,100 ; total, 186,063.

3. Horses introduced.

From other districts.—The number of stud horses introduced was 199, and stud mares, 326 ; ordinary mares, 3,227 ; and horses, 3,795.

From other Colonies.—The number introduced by sea was—Stud horses and mares, 76 ; and ordinary horses and mares, 203.

The number introduced overland was 36 stud mares and 102 stud horses ; and ordinary, 2,300 mares and 2,963 horses.

From England and other Countries.—The number introduced under this head was 21. For particulars see Appendix B.

4. Horses fit for sale.

The numbers returned as being fit for market during the coming year are 23,875 draught ; 24,262 light harness ; and 34,835 saddle.

Of this number it is estimated that 21,341 are suited for the India and China markets.

The number of horses exported during the year was 4,698.

5. Improvement.

In forty-six districts the horses are said to be improving. The principal reasons given are—Introduction of superior stud horses, breeding from good mares, more attention to the rules of breeding, and better prices obtainable ; and in fourteen districts there is no improvement. In three districts they are deteriorating,—the reasons given being too much light blood introduced, breeding from weedy mares for racing purposes.

6. Diseases in Horses.

This year has been unusually free from epizootic diseases in horses.

Anthrax was reported in two districts.

Australian Stringhalt occurred in two districts.

Strangles.—Has during the year been of a mild character, and has been reported in fourteen districts.

Prurigo.—Continues to give trouble in seven districts. Cleanliness of the horse's body and washing with caustic soda and water— $\frac{1}{2}$ oz. to a pint of water—are said to give good results. A full account of this disease appeared in the report for 1889.

Influenza.—In the end of the year a rather severe outbreak of this disease, vulgarly known as Pink-Eye in horses, occurred in Sydney and the suburbs, and very few of the stables escaped. Where the ailment was taken in time and the horses properly treated and cared for there were few or no deaths ; but where the horses were worked after they were attacked, or where the proper treatment was not adopted, or the horses were neglected, there were a good many losses. The disease will be found fully described and its treatment given by Mr. Government Veterinarian Stanley under Appendix C.

7. Losses in Horses through Accidents, &c.

The losses in horses from wire in chaff and other accidents, as reported, amount to 1,734.

8. Wild Horses.

The number of wild horses in the Colony is estimated at 4,490, which shows an increase on the previous year of 260.

9. Tax on Entire Horses.

A large majority of owners are still in favour of a special tax being placed on entires.

III.—CATTLE.

1. Number.

The returns of cattle in the Colony during the thirty years ending 31st December, 1890, stand as follows:—

Year.	No.	Year.	No.
1862	2,620,383	1877	2,746,385
1863	2,032,522	1878	2,771,583
1864	1,924,119	1879	2,914,210
1865	1,961,905	1880	2,580,040
1866	1,771,809	1881	2,597,348
1867	1,728,427	1882	1,859,985
1868	1,761,411	1883	1,640,753
1869	1,795,904	1884	1,425,130
1870	2,195,096	1885	1,317,315
1871	2,014,888	1886	1,367,844
1872	2,287,660	1887	1,575,487
1873	3,794,327	1888	1,622,907
1874	2,856,699	1889	1,741,592
1875	3,134,086	1890	1,909,009

This shows an increase during the year of 167,417, and a decrease as compared with the decennia 1 year 1880 of 671,031.

The number of cattle in the several Sheep Districts will be found in Appendix A.

The number of cattle introduced from the other Colonies was 517,371, and the number exported from this Colony was 146,427.

2. Different Breeds.

Shorthorns.—The number of pure-bred and stud Shorthorns is estimated at 55,345; and ordinary, 688,293; total, 743,638.

Hereford.—Pure and stud, 31,543; ordinary, 210,226; total, 241,769.

Devon.—Pure and stud, 12,166; ordinary, 64,438; total, 76,604.

Black-pollled.—Pure and stud, 1,180; ordinary, 1,311; total, 2,491.

Ayrshire.—Pure and stud, 3,935; ordinary, 8,024; total, 11,959.

Alderneys.—Pure and stud, 1,529; ordinary, 2,047; total, 3,576.

Holstein.—Pure and stud, 6.

Buffalo.—Pure and stud, 10.

Brittany.—Pure and stud, 100.

Crosses.—First crosses, 7,635; ordinary, 821,221; total, 828,856. The crosses are estimated as follows:—Shorthorn and Hereford, 281,819; Shorthorn and Devon, 105,774; Hereford and Devon, 53,430; Shorthorn and Black-pollled, 9,069; Ayrshire and Shorthorn, 24,223; Jersey and Shorthorn, 2,471; the balance, 352,070, being unrecognisable.

There is a comparatively large increase in the milking breeds of cattle. This arises through many of our cattle-owners in the coast districts having turned their attention to dairying instead of fattening for market; and it is believed that this change will continue and increase.

3. Cattle introduced.

From other Districts.—Stud bulls, 334; stud cows, 543; total, 877; ordinary cattle, 101,872.

From other Colonies by Sea.—Stud bulls, 29; stud cows, 216; total, 245.

Overland.—Stud bulls, 134; stud cows, 225; ordinary cattle, 516,767; total, 517,126.

From Countries outside the Australian Colonies.—Bulls, 6; cows, 10; total, 16. Of these 8 were Shorthorn and 8 Devon. For particulars see Appendix D.

4. Increase and Decrease of Cattle.

In forty-five districts the cattle are reported to be increasing, for which the following reasons are given—(1.) The good season and natural causes. (2.) Increase in number of owners. (3.) Considerable numbers of store cattle have been introduced from Queensland. (4.) More owners have taken to breeding cattle, and are stocking-up their runs, cattle having become good property of late. In the remaining districts they are decreasing on account of large sales, owners not breeding or stocking-up, and changing for sheep.

5. The "Cast" of Fat and Store Cattle.

The estimated "cast" of fat cattle to be sent to market during the coming year is 342,238, and store cattle, 206,056. From fourteen districts the fat cattle are principally sent to Melbourne; from two districts they are principally sent to Adelaide and Tasmania; and the remaining districts supply the markets of Sydney, Maitland, Mudgee, Bathurst, Orange, Goulburn, Tamworth, and Albury. The principal markets for store cattle are Muswellbrook, Maitland, Goulburn, Wagga Wagga, and Wodonga.

6. How kept.

The number of cattle kept wholly in paddocks is returned as 1,486,357; on open runs, 252,254; and the balance, 170,398, are depastured both ways.

7. Improvement and Deterioration.

In thirty-nine districts the cattle are said to be improving; in twenty-one districts they are stationary; and in three districts deteriorating. The principal reasons given for the improvement are—introduction of good stud stock; more attention and care in selection; also, in culling and keeping in paddocks. The reason given for deterioration is inattention to breeding, many owners breeding from all sorts without respect to breed or quality.

8. Their Diseases and Ailments.

Pleuro-Pneumonia.—In thirty-five districts, on 219 runs, the cattle were reported as affected with pleuro-pneumonia; and in twenty-eight districts the cattle are reported as being free from that disease.

In thirty-one of the infected districts the disease is attributed to introduction of cattle and contact with infected travelling-stock from Queensland, and in the remaining four infected districts the cause is unknown.

Inoculation was tried on 202 holdings in twenty-nine districts, and in every case with satisfactory results—the disease leaving the herds without further loss.

The number of owners in favour of inoculation is given as 8,293; against, 729; undecided, 2,072; and 9,268 opinions not known.

The number of owners in favour of compulsory inoculation in the case of infected herds is given as 7,050; against it, 1,737; undecided, 2,046; and 9,529 opinions not known.

Of the opinion expressed, this shows a very large majority of owners in favour of the compulsory inoculation of all herds in which the disease appears; and it is hoped that legislation in this direction will soon be obtained.

Cultivation of Virus.—No further attempt has been made by the department in the cultivation of virus, as the matter has again been taken up by Mons. Loir, at the instance of the Queensland Government, and he is dealing with it in a comprehensive and exhaustive manner, the Government of this Colony having granted him the use of the laboratory, on Rodd Island, to carry out his experiments.

A report of the work he has done in searching for the microbe of pleuro-pneumonia, and the result he has attained, as well as an account of the new and important discovery made by M. Laquerriere, of the Pasteur Institute, Paris—that freezing does not affect the vitality of the microbe organ of that disease—will be found in Appendix E to this report.

Tuberculosis.—In the present state of the law inspectors of stock have not power to interfere with cattle affected with tuberculosis, but their meat can be seized and destroyed by the Inspectors of slaughter-houses. In order, however, to as far as possible prevent diseased animals from being killed for human food, inspectors from this department attend the sales at Homebush and Maitland, and if there are any cattle which are diseased they point them out to the police who see that they are not killed for human food. During the year forty-seven animals have been dealt with in this way at Homebush, but although the action thus taken prevents diseased animals which are offered in the sale-yards in Sydney and Maitland from being slaughtered for food, there is little or no surveillance elsewhere, and many cattle affected with tuberculosis and cancer are no doubt killed for food. It is very desirable, therefore, that the inspectors of stock should, wherever tuberculosis or cancerous animals are found, have power to condemn and order their destruction.

Mr. Alderman Playfair recently moved in this direction, in the City Council, and it is to be hoped that the measure which he proposed should be framed, will soon be brought before Parliament and passed into law.

Cumberland Disease.—From six districts the number of cattle reported to have died from this form of anthrax is 593, being 89 less than the previous year.

Symptomatic Anthrax or Blackleg is reported to have carried off 430 head in eight districts, being a decrease of 352 on the previous year.

Cancer.—Cattle to the number of 1,291 are reported from twenty-four districts to have died of tubercular swellings in the throat, being a decrease of 706 on the previous year.

Red Water.—From one district 30 deaths are recorded. The disease is prevalent in certain localities in the coast country.

Ophthalmia occasionally assumes an epidemic form, and the losses are in some cases considerable. From eleven districts 490 deaths are recorded from this cause.

Blaine has not been reported this year.

IV.—SHEEP.

1. The number.

The number of sheep in the Colony during the thirty years ending 31st December, 1890, stands as follows:—

1861	6,119,169	1876	25,269,755

1875	25,353,924	1890	55,986,431

The number of sheep in the several Sheep Districts will be found in Appendix A.

Increase and Decrease.

This shows an increase for the whole Colony of 5,879,663. The increase in this instance was greatest in the central portions of the Colony and less in the eastern and north-eastern, with an actual decrease in the south-western districts, through rabbits and grass-hoppers.

The number of sheep imported during the year was 598,077 and the number exported was 2,973,232, being an increase in the exports over the imports of 2,375,155 sheep.

3. Sheep introduced and imported.

(1.) Australian.

(1.) From other districts in this Colony—Stud, 6,969; ordinary, 2,383,490; total, 2,390,459.

(2.) Overland from other Colonies—Stud, 4,378; ordinary, 590,005; total, 594,383.

(3.) By sea from other Australian Colonies—During the year 3,443 stud sheep have been introduced from the other Australian Colonies by sea; of these 3,036 arrived by special ship, and in charge of the owner, and were, under the Regulations of 31st July last, admitted without quarantine or dressing, while 407 which arrived previous to that date, or which have been imported since that date, but did not arrive by special steamer, nor in charge of the owner or his servants, received one or more dippings.

The prohibition still exists against the importation of sheep from Western Australia and New Zealand, as neither of these Colonies can yet be declared free from scab.

(2.) Foreign.

(4.) From England and Countries and Colonies other than Australian—222 stud sheep have been introduced, subject to a quarantine of 90 days and three dressings.

All these sheep, both Australian and Foreign, after being taken inland, were examined by the inspectors for the districts into which they went, and reported to be in good health and free from infection.

For the particulars as to description of sheep introduced and imported, and their breeders or importers, see Appendix F.

4. Long-woolled and cross-bred Sheep.

Amongst the long-woolled sheep the Lincoln is said in a large majority of the districts to give the best returns in wool and in weight of mutton, the cross-bred sheep being second.

The number of these sheep is far below what it ought to be, for there are large tracts of country in the Colony well adapted for long-woolled and cross-bred sheep, and there is no doubt but that where the land will carry them they pay much better under proper management than the ordinary merino, while now, with the prospect of a large surplus of fat sheep and heavy shipments of frozen mutton, there is every inducement to owners with suitable country to put their older ewes to Leicester, Lincoln, and Shropshire Down rams.

The wool of the cross brings about as good a price as the merino per pound, is very saleable and the butchers prefer the cross-bred sheep, which are, of course, heavier, and bring more money.

Some eight or ten years ago there was a much larger proportion of long-woolled and cross-bred sheep in the Colony, but they were so troublesome to keep with the style of fence then so common that the majority of owners replaced them by the merino.

I understand that in New Zealand, where the sheep are principally cross-breeds, they have good 7-wire fences, which with say three interlacings of fine wire between each set of posts, make a thoroughly effective fences, even for long-woolled and cross-bred sheep. It has been proposed to effect the same object by a couple of lines of barbed wire. This might perhaps answer, but I think the interlacing is better than barbed wire.

5. The "Cast" of Fat and Store Sheep.

The annual "cast" of fat sheep for the ensuing season is estimated at 6,454,480, and store sheep 8,080,480.

6. How Sheep are kept.

Paddocked	54,188,395
Shepherded	1,181,127
Both ways	616,909
									<hr/> 55,986,431

7. Condition of the Flocks.

In forty-four districts the sheep are said to be improving, the principal reasons given being—more attention to breeding, paddocking, introduction of high-class rams and ewes, more careful classing and culling, and good seasons.

In thirteen districts they are said to be stationary, and in six districts they are deteriorating. The reasons given are—Effects of bad seasons, breeding from inferior ewes, bad management, bad selection of rams, and purchase of stores.

8. Lambing.

The general average for the whole of the Colony of the paddocked sheep is returned by inspectors at 71½ per cent., and shepherded sheep at 64¼ per cent. In twenty-four districts the lambing was high, in twenty-eight districts medium to fair, and in ten districts very low. The reason given for the high percentage is the favourable season and good condition of ewes, runs not overstocked, while the fair and low percentages are attributable to wet and cold seasons during lambing, poverty of ewes, want of feed and water, worms, numbers of lambs having perished through heavy rains and floods, and flocks harassed by dogs.

From returns received it appears that the lambing takes place in 22 districts during autumn, in 5 districts during winter, in 11 districts during spring, in 5 districts during autumn and spring, in 2 districts during winter and spring, and in 6 districts during autumn and winter.

The paddocked sheep show a higher percentage than the shepherded sheep by 6½ per cent.

9. The Clip.

Average per sheep.

Lambs.—The number of lambs shorn in the grease was 9,285,871; the number washed, 33,521; total lambs shorn, 9,319,392.

Sheep.—The number of sheep shorn in the grease was 40,935,736; creek-washed, 1,271,712; and scoured, 580,794.

The average weights of the clip are estimated as follows:—

	Lambs.		Sheep.
	lb.	oz.	lb.	oz.
Grease	1	14 $\frac{1}{4}$	5	11 $\frac{3}{4}$
Creek-washed	1	7 $\frac{1}{2}$	3	2
Scoured	3	4 $\frac{1}{2}$

Total Clip.

The total clip in the Colony for the year 1890, according to the number of sheep, would be 40,935,736 shorn in the grease, average clip, 5 lb. 11 $\frac{3}{4}$ oz. per sheep = 234,740,862 lb.; 1,271,712 sheep, creek-washed, average clip, 3 lb. 2oz. per sheep = 3,974,100 lb.; 580,794 sheep scoured, average clip 3 lb. 4 $\frac{1}{2}$ oz. = 1,905,730 lb. Lambs—9,285,871 lambs shorn in the grease, average clip, 1 lb. 14 $\frac{1}{4}$ oz. per lamb = 17,556,099 lb.; 33,521 lambs washed, average clip per lamb, 1 lb. 7 $\frac{1}{2}$ oz. = 51,329 lb.; total clip, 258,228,120 lb., or an increase of 26,825,553 lb. on last year's clip, and is accounted for by a greater number of sheep having been shorn in the grease this year than in 1889, and the favourable season.

Condition of clip.

In twelve districts the clip is reported as sound and containing a plentiful supply of yolk; in seventeen districts weak, and containing only a small amount of yolk; and in thirty-four districts very weak, owing to absence of yolk. On the whole the clip was clean, but in a few districts the value of the wool was affected by grass-seed and burrs.

Exportation of Clip.

The clip grown in the Colony of New South Wales is shipped principally to England, America, France, and Germany, and considerable portions of it is so from the ports of the three neighbouring Colonies, as well as from Sydney and Newcastle. The portions of our clip thus shipped from the other Colonies is often mistaken as the produce of those Colonies, more particularly for that of Victoria and South Australia.

The following is an estimate of the clip sent to Sydney, and also the proportion sent across the Borders and to Melbourne, Adelaide, and Brisbane for the years 1889 and 1890:—

Port of Shipment.	1889.			1890.
	Greasy.	Washed.	Total.	Greasy.	Washed.	Total.
	lb.	lb.	lb.
Sydney	161,240,577	3,101,814	164,342,391	187,400,915	3,701,744	191,102,659
Melbourne	54,265,699	1,519,199	55,784,898	54,046,533	884,208	54,930,741
Adelaide	9,470,909	1,481,528	10,952,437	10,219,179	1,314,847	11,534,026
Brisbane	306,251	16,590	322,841	630,334	30,360	660,694
	225,283,436	6,119,131	231,402,567	252,296,961	5,931,159	258,228,120

This shows an increase in the quantity of wool shipped during the year from the Ports of Sydney and Newcastle of 26,760,268 lb., as compared with that shipped in 1889.

Classing the Clip.

In thirty-four districts the clip is reported as having been well classed. In the other districts it is not considered to have been so, the reasons being, owners do not think it pays, want of convenience, sheds not large enough to warrant expense, and the difficulty of obtaining competent wool-sorters.

Wool-presses.

A great number of different kinds of presses are used; those most in favour are Ferrier's Patent and Williams' and Robinson's; rack screw and pinion presses are used. There is still room for improvement in the mode of pressing, especially by the owners of small clips.

Woolpacks.

The woolpacks used are mostly Calcutta and Dundee, of various sizes, from 4 ft. 6 in. x 2 ft. 2 in. to 5 ft. 3 in., and the weight from 10 to 12 lb.

On forty-nine stations the wool is dumped before leaving.

10. Sheep-brands and Marks.

Ear-marking.

In most districts the system of ear-marking sheep is properly carried out, and may now be said to be approved by all the Boards.

Tattoo-marking.

This system of marking is mostly used by owners of stud-sheep, not as yet to any great extent in the case of ordinary flock sheep, but where tried it has been found to be a good preventive to sheep-stealing.

V.—DISEASES IN SHEEP.

1. Scab.

The flocks in this Colony and in the Colonies of Queensland, Victoria, South Australia, and Tasmania are free from scab. It exists, but to a very slight extent, in New Zealand and Western Australia, and it is hoped that these Colonies will soon be declared clean. The importation of sheep into this Colony from New Zealand and Western Australia is prohibited.

2. Anthrax.

It will be seen by the Report, in the Form of Appendix G, on the Vaccination of Sheep with Pasteur's Vaccine of Anthrax for Cumberland Disease, that this treatment was tried on a large number of sheep—nearly 200,000—and, considering all the circumstances of the case, with very fair results.

3. Foot-rot.

In thirty-six districts the sheep have been more or less affected with foot-rot during the year, the reasons given being wet season, running on low rich pasture, and contagion. The principal remedies tried were careful paring, butyr of antimony and bluestone, bluestone and kerosene, arsenic, arsenic and lime, blue vitriol, sulphate of copper, carbolic acid, and nitric acid—with satisfactory results. Of these, bluestone and butyr of antimony have been most effective for hand-dressing, and arsenic in troughs. For proportions of mixtures, see Government Veterinarian's report hereto as Appendix H.

4. Fluke.

In seventeen districts the sheep were affected with fluke, through wet seasons, depasturing on low swampy ground, unsound country, and rank pasture. The remedies used were salt, tar, and turps, sulphate of iron, and Liverpool salt and sulphur, with good results; but the best course where it can be followed is to remove the sheep to salt bush country, and where that cannot be done, to keep the country free from surface water by means of drains run with a plough and helped with a spade.

5. Parasitic Worms.

In thirty-seven districts the sheep are reported as having been infested with worms to an extent of (say) 18 per cent. The wide extent of the outbreak is attributable to the frequent summer rains following upon a wet winter, which lessened the nutrition in the pasture, and lowered the stamina of the sheep, while at the same time the moisture and heat tended to an enormous development and increase of the worms. A brief statement of the worms with which the sheep were infested and the remedies used will be found in Appendix I.

VI.—PIGS.

The number of pigs in the Colony, as returned at 31st December, 1890, is 284,223, being an increase of 46,947, as compared with the returns for the previous year.

From the other Colonies 12 have been introduced by sea.

Foreign pigs are prohibited.

The number of pigs exported from Port of Sydney was 670.

Diseases in Pigs.

No disease whatever has been reported amongst pigs.

I would again call attention to the fact that the number of pigs in the Colony is very far short of what it ought to be, and our selectors and farmers will not be able to turn their holdings to anything like the account they ought to do until they go very much more extensively into the breeding and fattening of pigs, for nothing can pay them so well, if they keep the best kinds, provide suitable runs for the breeding sows and young pigs, and grow the proper food for fattening them.

Well-bred pigs are very scarce in all the Colonies, and the prohibition now in force against their importation from England should be withdrawn as soon as it is safe to do so, and the other Colonies agree to that course. By latest accounts we learn that swine fever is decreasing in England.

VII.—DOGS.

Twenty-five foreign dogs, i.e., dogs from England, America, France, Germany, and other places outside the Australasian Colonies, passed through quarantine during the year—exclusive of eighty-seven ships' dogs which were quarantined (on board vessels and at Quarantine Station) during the stay of vessels in port—and 464 Colonial dogs were introduced at the port of Sydney.

179 dogs were inspected prior to exportation.

Diseases in Dogs.

Rabies is still reported as prevalent in Europe, and in London and in some other parts of England the regulations requiring dogs to be muzzled were, during the dangerous months of the year, strictly enforced, with most satisfactory results. Very few cases now occurring there.

Rigorous quarantine regulations are absolutely necessary to prevent the introduction of this disease into these Colonies.

Pasteur's method of treatment of hydrophobia continues in favour, and patients from almost every part of the world are sent to his Institute for treatment. (See Appendix J.)

VIII.—TRAVELLING STOCK.

1. Trespass on Reserves.

In twenty-three districts the driftways and reserves for travelling stock are reported as having been trespassed upon, more or less, by neighbouring lessees' and selectors' stock. In nineteen districts stripping of the reserves of pasture arises through their being leased to the owners of the run through which they pass. In twenty-one districts they are reported as being entirely free from trespass. Inspectors suggest, in order to enable them to exercise proper supervision over these reserves, that the boundaries should be properly marked, and I am glad to be able to state that a commencement is shortly about to be made at this most necessary work.

2. Grass on Reserves and Driftways.

In two districts the inspectors report that there is not sufficient grass on the reserves and driftways in their districts to enable fat stock to reach market in good condition, through reserves being included in run-holder's lease; in twelve districts that there is only sufficient in good seasons; and in forty-nine districts that, as a rule there is, except in times of drought, sufficient grass on these reservations.

From eleven districts it is reported that sheep to the number of 887,824 have passed through during the year in search of grass and water. From two districts the number of loafing sheep is given at 87,000.

3. New Roads for Travelling Stock.

In thirteen districts new roads are required for travelling stock, and in fifty districts no new droving roads are recommended.

4. New Reserves for Travelling Stock.

In fifteen districts new reserves and alterations of existing ones for travelling stock are required. In forty-eight districts there are sufficient reserves; but in a good many cases these reserves are now being curtailed in a way that will, I fear, be injurious to the stock traffic.

5. New Wells, Tanks, or Dams.

In twenty-four districts the inspectors report that new wells, tanks, or dams should be constructed by the Government at places which they indicate.

6. Travelling charges for Stock.

In eleven districts cash and bonds have been given for travelling charges on stock, the total amounting to £1,351 4s. 9d., most of which has been refunded to date on appeal to the Boards.

7. Laws relating to Travelling.

In all the districts the inspectors report that the provisions of the amended Sheep Acts relating to travelling stock are working fairly well, but are at times evaded, and should be amended.

IX.—REGISTRATION OF HORSE AND CATTLE BRANDS.

1. Brands registered.

The number of horse and cattle brands registered up to 31st December, 1890, was 64,291. The number of brands registered during the year 1890 was—Horse brands (alone), 384; cattle brands (alone), 480; and horse and cattle brands, 1,637; making a total of 2,501.

This shows an increase of 77 in the total number of brands registered during the year as compared with 1889, and is accounted for by increased settlement. There is an increase in the number of brands transferred, while there is a large decrease in the number of brands cancelled, and addresses changed.

2. Brands transferred.

The brands recorded during the year 1890 as transferred were Horse brands, 14; cattle brands, 20; horse and cattle brands, 105; total, 139.

3. Brands cancelled.

The brands cancelled (horse and cattle) in 1890 were 162.

4. Addresses changed.

The number of addresses of owners changed in 1890 was 84.

5. Compliance with the Act.

In all the districts the provisions relating to registration and the other requirements of the Act are reported as being duly carried out.

6. Benefits of the Act.

The inspectors, in alluding to the benefits of the Act, report that it prevents duffing, stock-stealing, facilitates identification, assists in recovering lost stock, and otherwise is a great convenience and protection to stock-owners.

X.—POUNDS.

1. Number and Inspection.

There are 410 pounds in the Colony, some of which are at present closed for want of poundkeepers. The whole of the pounds are inspected periodically by the various inspectors of stock.

2. State of Yards.

Thirty-two of the pound-yards are reported to be old; several require renewing, being unfit for the safe custody of stock; and the remainder are said to be in a fair and good condition.

3. Keeping and Depasturing Pound Stock.

The provision made for the proper sustenance of impounded stock, according to the reports received, is satisfactory. As a rule poundkeepers have now paddocks for the stock.

4. Management of Pounds.

The poundkeepers are reported to be performing their duties, upon the whole, in a satisfactory manner, and the appointment of inspectors of stock as inspectors of pounds has had a very beneficial effect.

XI.—NOXIOUS ANIMALS.

1. The Districts in which the Pastures and Stock Protection Act is in force.

The Act has been brought into operation in all the districts, and during the year work has been done to the extent shown in Appendices L and M.

2. Receipts and Expenditure under the Act.

The amount of assessment paid by stock-owners during the year 1889 was £33,257 0s. 3d., and the amount expended £50,525 14s. 3d. The amount of assessment paid by stock-owners in 1890 was £33,649 0s. 11d., and the amount expended £39,663 11s. 6d., the difference being accounted for by the subsidy granted by the Government to the Boards, and large amount to credit of some of the Boards at commencement of the year. Three districts are reported to be in debt to the amount of £492 3s. 7d.

In eight districts full rates were levied, in forty-five districts less than full rates, while in ten districts no rates whatever were levied.

During the year the bonuses paid by the Boards for scalps ranged as follows:—For kangaroos, from 1d. to 1s.; wallaroo, 1d. to 1s.; wallaby, from 1d. to 1s.; paddymelon, from 1d. to 3d.; hares, from 2d. to 1s.; kangaroo rats, 2d. to 6d.; native dogs, from 10s. to 60s.; pups, 5s. to 10s.; bilbees, 2s. 6d.; opossum, 1d.; wild pigs, 6d. and 1s.; eagle-hawks, 2s. to 7s. 6d.; emus, 1d. to 1s.; and crows, 2d. and 6d.

3. Estimated number of Noxious Animals.

The aggregate of the returns by inspectors of the estimated number of noxious animals in their districts shows that there are supposed to be 1,067,104 kangaroos, 2,602,002 wallabies, 26,850 native dogs, 3,134,665 hares, and 7,880 wild pigs in the Colony.

4. Increase and decrease.

Kangaroos are reported to be increasing in fifteen districts, wallabies in ten districts, native dogs in eleven districts, hares in twenty-two districts, and wild pigs in five districts. In twenty-three districts kangaroos are reported to be decreasing, wallabies and native dogs in twenty-one districts, hares in two districts, wild pigs in one district, and in the remaining districts they are said to be stationary.

5. Number destroyed.

The number of kangaroos destroyed during the past year was 175,755; of kangaroo rats, 92,014; of wallabies, 506,137; of bandicoots, 997; of paddymelons, 2,844; of wild pigs, 5,292; of hares, 397,439; of native dogs, 9,955; of opossums, 11,169; of bilbees, 82; of eagle-hawks, 2,429; of crows, 9,149; and of emus, 383.

6. Steps taken for their destruction.

In the majority of the districts hunting with dogs, drives, shooting, and trapping have been adopted with satisfactory results. In forty districts poison has been used with fair to best results, for dogs, and from six districts it is reported that the results have not been satisfactory, the dogs being too cunning.

7. Amendments suggested in the Act.

Owners are desirous that the Amended Stock and Pastures Bill speedily become law; and they suggest that all owners of stock, irrespective of number, should be liable to an assessment, as also owners of 5 acres of land and over; that farmers and owners of orchards and vineyards should pay to the fund; that hares be included in the list of noxious animals; that the Boards be empowered to cope with the rabbit nuisance; that the Government should grant larger subsidy; that uniform rates be levied; that the rate of bonus be the same throughout the Colony; that all returns of stock be made on the same day; that adjoining Boards assimilate bonuses; and that the provisions of the Act re defaulting Boards be strictly enforced.

8. Losses from Tame and Native Dogs.

The losses in stock for the past year from the ravages of native dogs are estimated at 79,898 sheep, valued at £29,096, and from tame dogs, 57,653 sheep, valued at £24,606, making the loss from tame and native dogs together, £53,702.

XII.—COMMONS.

1. Number and extent.

The number of Commons in the Colony is 270, with an average extent of about 2,000 acres each.

2. Number of Commoners, Stock, &c.

The average number of Commoners to each Common is estimated at 135, and the average number of stock kept on each Common at 250.

In twenty-six districts some of the Commons are reported to be used for other purposes than that of grazing Commoners' stock.

XIII.—MISCELLANEOUS.

1. Artificial Grasses.

In twenty districts artificial grasses have been sown for pasture during the year to a small extent, in nine districts to a large extent, and in remaining districts none; the most successful being lucerne, prairie, and rye.

2. Number and Division of Runs.

The number open or unenclosed runs in the Colony is 7,197; the number enclosed is 33,605; the number partially subdivided is 12,209; and the number properly subdivided is 21,775.

3. Improvements, Fencing, Dams, Tanks, and Wells.

The number of miles of fencing throughout the Colony is estimated at 1,478,818, at an average cost of (say) £42 14s. per mile, amounting to £63,173,784.

The number of dams used for stock purposes is estimated at 30,590, at an average cost of (say) £99 7s.; number of tanks, 30,953; average cost of each, £195 11s.; and the number of wells used is estimated at 3,599, at an average cost of £199 8s. each.

Cost of fencing, £63,173,784; cost of dams, £3,038,664; cost of tanks, £6,053,034; cost of wells, £716,604; making a total of £72,982,086, as representing the amount expended by way of improvements, &c.

4. Plants and Weeds.

(1.) Prevalence.

In ten districts trefoil burr grows to a considerable extent, in twenty-four districts to a very large extent, in eleven districts to a slight extent, and in eighteen districts there is none reported.

In twenty districts variegated thistle is reported to a slight extent, in fifteen to a very large extent, in fourteen to a considerable extent, and fourteen districts are reported as free from it.

In seventeen districts black thistle is reported to a slight extent, in eighteen to a very great extent, in fifteen to a considerable extent, and thirteen districts are reported to be free from it.

In twenty-one districts the land is reported as being infested to a very large extent with Bathurst burr, in twenty-three districts to a considerable extent, in twelve districts to a slight extent, and in seven districts the land is not infested.

In fourteen districts other noxious weeds grow to a slight extent, in seventeen districts to a very large extent, in twenty-one districts to a considerable extent, and in eleven districts there is none reported.

Darling-pea and Roley-poley are reported to be growing in a few districts.

(2.) Legislation for Noxious Weeds.

Legislation is urgently required for dealing with noxious weeds and plants, more especially the Bathurst burr, the prevalence of which is inflicting very serious loss on travelling stock.

(3.) Cost of clearing Commons, Reserves, &c., of Weeds.

The cost of clearing the Commons of noxious weeds throughout the Colony is estimated by inspectors at £258,504; the police paddocks, £11,733; the travelling stock reserves, £234,700; and the droving roads at £253,397; amounting in all to (say) £758,334.

5. Examination of intending Applicants for appointment of Inspector.

During the past year two examinations were held by the Stock Board of Examiners. The following table shows the result:—

Date of Examination.	Number of Candidates.	Names of successful Candidates.	Nature of Certificate issued.
March 24 1890.	9	J. W. M'Kellar	2nd class.
		J. W. Chanter	"
		G. W. Lee	"
		H. E. Palmer	"
July 28	6	J. A. T. Rochfort	"
		W. A. Trevarthen	"

It will be seen that fifteen candidates presented themselves for examination, and that six were successful in obtaining second-class certificates.

6. The Stock and Pastures Bill.

It is hoped that the Government business will, in the coming Session of Parliament, admit of this measure, which is so urgently required, being passed.

7. The Chilled Meat Trade.

I am glad to be able to report that a commencement will, in the course of the next few months, be made at this trade. [Particulars in Appendix K.]

APPENDIX C.

INFLUENZA IN HORSES.

The Government Veterinarian to The Chief Inspector of Stock.

Department of Mines, Stock Branch, 20 January, 1891.

I HAVE the honor to report that the present horse sickness is Epidemic Influenza, chiefly of the hepatic form, called bilious fever. It has often been seen in Melbourne, Adelaide, Brisbane, and Sydney, and has been described by veterinary writers in all parts of the world, as long as veterinary literature has existed, under a variety of names, intended to convey the writers opinion of its pathology, derived from the prevailing symptoms of the affection, such as "rheumatic influenza," "hepatic influenza," "enteritic influenza," "epizootic pneumonia," "epizootic cellulitis," and the more recent and absurd Americanism, "pink eye." The last is ridiculous, because the natural healthy colour of the conjunctiva of the horse's eye is pink, and in this particular disease the conjunctiva is far more frequently of an orange red colour, i.e., jaundiced; sometimes it is crimson, as the disease progresses becoming a dirty brown, and even slate colour, but it is never pink until health is restored.

Character.—It is a contagious equine fever due to germinal matter invading the system, producing disastrous changes in the blood, which interfere with nutrition, excite congestion, and occasionally inflammation of important organs or tissues.

Cause.—The germs of this disease are always lurking about, and epidemics are due to exceptional climatic changes that have a lowering effect on the health of horses, and at the same time favour the vitality of the disease germs.

The worst cases are amongst hard-working horses in overcrowded sheds, with bad sanitary surroundings; next come fat horses, and the least susceptible are horses that are in good working condition, cleanly kept, and well cared for; if such have the disease at all it is in a mild form, and they speedily recover.

Symptoms.—In the onset loss of appetité, drowsy headache, pain in the limbs, general weakness; in many cases the eyelids are swollen, tears trickle down the face; there may be discharge from the nostrils, and occasionally coughing; the eye will be found scarlet and orange colour, the tongue furred, breath offensive, the heart beats feebly but quick, the pulse is small and weak, the dung is soft, and the urine high-coloured; there is a general rise of the bodily temperature.

As the disease progresses the symptoms will depend on its course, which is very variable, as the numerous names given to the disease indicate. The vital forces in many cases overcome the toxic effects and excrete the poison from the system; it is to assist this process that we have recourse to treatment.

The Treatment.—This should consist of rest, pure air, shelter from sun, rain, or wind, bran mash, and cut green food with drachm doses of chlorate of potash, carbonate of ammonia, or nitrate of potash given in the drinking water; if the case has been taken early enough, and the surroundings are good, the fever will abate, and recovery be complete in a very few days.

Unfortunately many horses are worked at the commencement of the illness, then they are completely knocked up, and they present a variety of bad symptoms, owing to the mischief being located in individual organs, such as those of respiration, or the bowels, liver, spleen, lymphatic glands, or cerebro-spinal system. The location can only be diagnosed by the educated veterinarian, and every case should be treated to suit the nature and stage of the illness; dropsical swellings are a favourable indication, but time and patience must be allowed for recovery. No case is cured until the horse is playful at exercise.

I would caution owners to beware of amateur veterinary advice, as far more harm is done by ignorant treatment than by the disease. To illustrate my meaning, a horse with this sickness often has an anxious countenance, dilated nostrils, rapidly panting flanks due to acute pain, which may be owing to congested liver, laminitis, or other obscure complication, but the charlatan says he has got it on the lungs, and proceeds to torture the poor brute by blistering his sides, bleeding, setoning, &c. Such treatment as bleeding, blistering, or purging is very antiquated and erroneous. Thirty years ago I wrote a prize essay on this subject, proving the fallacy of the depletive treatment then in practice. I advocated alkalies, stimulants, then tonics; this line of treatment is now usually adopted, and has proved most successful.

My advice is to employ the best qualified veterinary surgeon available, and to see the poor animal has a good nurse, with pure air, cleanliness, rest, and comfort. It is cruel to turn sick horses out to shift for themselves. My thanks are due to my veterinary friends and others, who have courteously shown me suffering animals, and have given every information; and I can assure you there is no cause for alarm where judicious skill is properly applied in controlling the disease.

APPENDIX E.

PLEURO-PNEUMONIA.

Report of M. Loir—Cultivation of Virus.

THE following is a translation of the report of M. Loir, by Mr. H. S. Dutton, assistant to Professor Pasteur, to the Queensland Government:—

“The Hon. Sir S. W. Griffith, K.C.M.G., &c., Chief Secretary of Queensland,— “Sir,—At the request of the Government of Queensland I commenced, on 10th of December last, for a period of three months, which was to be extended, if necessary, a series of experiments on the subject of the preservation of the virus of pleuro-pneumonia, and of the cultivation of the microbe of that disease.

“I have now the honor to submit to you a preliminary report on these experiments, which I venture to hope will be of interest to owners of stock. If I have not up to the present completely succeeded in preserving a strong virus I have every hope of succeeding in so doing.

“Without entering, for the present, into the details of the experiments which I made, I have the honor to lay before you their results, and the conclusions at which I have arrived.

“1. The virus of the lung of an animal suffering from pleuro-pneumonia inoculated behind the shoulder of a calf from five to six months old has always proved virulent, and has always caused a large œdema. In a case of large œdema I have found, on making a post-mortem examination, certain portions of the lung diseased with red hepatitis.

“The liquid extracted from the pleural cavity has not always proved so constantly virulent.

“3. The liquid taken from the œdema has been found to be virulent after three successive transitions through calves; but, in order to always obtain this result, it is, I believe, necessary to briskly break the cells of the œdema with a hammer, in the manner indicated by Dr. Germont and myself two years ago in our report to the Queensland Pleuro-pneumonia Board, so as to not only allow the virus to run out more easily, but also to have in the liquid some of the solid particles, which, I believe, contain more of the virulent elements than the liquid.

“4. I have found some microbes. In the lung I have been able each time to isolate two different microbes. The one is, judging from its physiological characteristics, very closely allied to the Straphylococcus ovyogenes aurens, so far as I am able to ascertain. The other, a small bacillus, develops very readily in solid media; in broth it shows a growth twenty-four hours after its inoculation therein. These growths give no results when inoculated in guinea-pigs and rabbits.

“5. The growth, if preserved for ten days and then inoculated behind the shoulder of the calf, gives rise to no reactionary symptoms, and yet conserves its vitality, for, if placed in broth, it develops a growth in twenty-four hours. The same growth inoculated at an earlier stage—that is to say, after twenty-four hours' cultivation—behind the shoulder of a calf, gives rise to an œdema similar to the ordinary œdema produced by the inoculation of pleuro-pneumonia virus behind the shoulder, but this œdema has never been as large, and has never caused death. The liquid taken from this œdema, when inoculated in broth, has produced no growth, so that in this respect its effects are similar to those of the ordinary liquid taken from the œdema of pleuro-pneumonia.

“6. I have discovered this particular microbe in two lungs procured from animals which had succumbed to the disease.

“7. In different cases I have found it in the heart blood of calves that had died after inoculation behind the shoulder, and which displayed a large œdema at the spot of inoculation. The post-mortems were performed on these calves a few hours after they had succumbed to the effects of the disease.

“8. On one occasion, after putting a large quantity of pulp, obtained from the spleen of a calf which had died with an œdema, in broth, I had a very well-defined growth of the same microbes.

“9. Having inoculated a very young calf behind the shoulder with lung virus, I did not obtain a large œdema, but, nevertheless, the animal died in the twenty days with the synovities of the articulations. Having inoculated in broth the liquid taken from the articulation of one of the forelegs, I obtained the growth of the abovementioned microbe.

10. “A calf inoculated with a growth of the microbe which had been preserved for ten days, and which had no œdema, subsequently inoculated with lung virus, developed a large œdema, which could have been utilised for inoculations in the bush. This calf does not, therefore, appear to have been protected by the inoculation of a growth of the microbe ten days old.

“Another calf inoculated with a growth of the microbe twenty-four hours old had an œdema, but did not succumb; inoculated afresh with lung virus behind the shoulder and on the opposite side, it showed no sign of illness, so that it appears to have been protected by a more recent growth of the microbe.

“11. From a calf with a large œdema I was able to extract in a Pasteur tube (pipette) about half a pint of virus. I kept this large quantity of virus in good condition for twenty-three days, and after the expiration of this period the virus used for inoculation was found virulent.

“12. I have been able to send on several occasions to Queensland and in New South Wales full tubes containing sufficient virus to inoculate 200 or 300 animals in the tail. The tubes which I sent thus are similar to those which I use for sending anthrax vaccine up country in.

“This preliminary report will prove to you, I hope, that further researches are necessary to arrive at the certainty that the microbe I have now in hand has or has not any connection with pleuro-pneumonia. I have consequently the honor to ask you to authorise me to continue my experiments. I must add that, adopting the suggestion I have just received from the Institute Pasteur of Paris, which follows with the greatest interest these experiments, I am desirous of trying the process for the preservation by freezing of pleuro-pneumonia virus, published by my friend, M. Laquerrière, a process which I had the honor, a few days ago, to lay before Mr. Gordon, Chief Inspector of Stock. If, in effect, these experiments are confirmed, it will be easy to have a small room in the different towns up country in which refrigerating chambers exist, and to preserve in these places pleuro-pneumonia lungs. When a squatter wishes to obtain virus it will then be easy to send him a sterilised tube containing a small portion of frozen lung, and with this tube he can inoculate on his station a calf behind the shoulder, in accordance with M. Pasteur's process, and in three weeks this calf will produce a large œdema, in which he will find sufficient matter to inoculate at the tail a large mob of cattle. It would even perhaps be possible to forward the virus in large quantities, for it will always be easy to preserve by freezing a large quantity of lung collected when cattle are being slaughtered in slaughter-yards. It will be necessary to see by experience whether this process would not prove simpler than to keep up small stations, as is done since Dr. Germont and I studied the question in Queensland, for the purpose of always having a calf inoculated behind the shoulder, a process which demands a careful and experienced person to keep the station in activity."

Experiments in Paris with Frozen Lung.

The following is an account of experiments made in Paris at M. Loir's request by M. Laquerrière:—
 "The lung from a pleuro beast, collected at the slaughter-house on the 23rd April, 1890, was brought in a cold room at about 20 deg. Fahrenheit. This lung when congelated was like a hard lump, friable, and not going into decomposition. Then on the 12th of June we tried (Professor Pouchet and I) a first experiment to see if the virulence was preserved into this lung after congelation. Some glass tubes and corks were first sterilised. Small pieces of lung taken aseptically were introduced into these tubes, where they slowly thawed at the ordinary temperature. In leaving the congelated state the pulmonary tissue turns into a pretty red colour, and a bright red liquid runs from it, formed by the serosity mixed with a large quantity of blood corpuscles. This serosity was inoculated within two hours to twenty-seven cattle in a dairy in which four cattle had just been sacrificed in consequence of pleuro through the Contagious Disease Act. Eight other cattle in the same place were inoculated comparatively with the serosity from the lung of a cow which was just killed. Here follows the result of these inoculations. From the 10th to the 15th day after the operations such inflammatory symptoms as heat, pain, and stoppage, show themselves at the point of inoculation. These symptoms have, perhaps, been generally a little less marked on the beast inoculated with the fresh lymph, and more on five of the cattle inoculated with the congelated serosity, the swelling came right up to the tail, without taking the same off. Since the 12th June we have had a great many experiments with the serosity of the same congelated lung every time a part of the lung was cut in the freezing-room and put into sterilised tubes. The serosity so obtained was used as follows:—1. The same day. 2. After some days, but in keeping the tubes in a cold place in the dark. These experiments began on the 2nd June, 1889, and were continued until the 14th June, 1890, and we are in a position now to give the following conclusions:—1. A pleuro lung has kept its virulence for more than a year. 2. The inoculations made with the serosity of this frozen lung, newly collected, gave the positive result in the generality of cases. 3. The inoculations made comparatively on cattle with this serosity of a lung from a pleuro beast recently killed gave about the same result; however the effects seem to be more energetic with the frozen lung. 4. Inoculations made with tubes containing a piece of frozen lung and kept for some days, for a month and even more, gave a positive result. Nevertheless these results were less certain in proportion as the liquid was becoming older. 5. The lung submitted to the freezing process seems now, after fifteen months, in the same condition as it was on the first day."

APPENDIX G.

VACCINATION OF SHEEP FOR ANTHRAX.

DURING the past year 193,098 sheep were vaccinated in various districts of the Colony with Pasteur's Vaccine of Anthrax, but the result has not been so satisfactory as could have been wished. Still there is no reason to doubt the efficacy of the treatment, and I believe, notwithstanding that the operation has not been successful in every case, the experience of the past season's vaccination will lead those owners who are unfortunately subject to periodical visitations of this fatal disease, to see that they have now the means at hand to reduce their losses to a minimum.

Cause of Partial Failure.

Many reasons are of course put forward as to the cause of the failure of the vaccination in the cases where deaths have taken place after the operation, and among others the following are the most likely :—

1. It has been thought by some that the vaccine was not sufficiently strong when it left the laboratory.

This cannot be the case as all the vaccine is carefully tested before despatch to the country.

2. It might have lost its potency in transit—(1) through exposure to too great heat; (2) through exposure to too much light.

It is more than probable, considering the season of the year when part of the vaccination was done and the impossibility of protecting the vaccine from heat during its conveyance by coach, that the want of success is at least in some cases attributable to either of these causes, or perhaps to both.

3. It might have lost its efficacy during the operation by exposure to the light, air, and heat.

Although Mr. Devlin no doubt took the greatest care while vaccinating the failure to some extent might possibly be attributable to this cause.

4. The vaccine might not have been powerful enough considering the terribly infected state of the land on which the sheep were running, i.e., it might not have been so in the face of the fact that the ground was saturated with the germs of anthrax, no attempt having been made in by-gone years to burn the carcasses of sheep which died of the disease.

It would seem from this that when the sheep are depastured in very badly infested paddocks they should receive more than two vaccinations; but as a rule it would not be necessary to vaccinate oftener than twice until it is seen whether that is sufficient. Then if the sheep should commence to die they could be operated upon again until the mortality ceases, and, as M. Loir is prepared to revaccinate in every case where the operation is unsuccessful at the first attempt, I strongly advise owners to adopt this course, especially as the experience of those owners who adopted it is that it stopped the disease.

5. Both Mons. Loir and Mr. Devlin, and almost every one of the owners, attribute the losses to operating in hot weather, when there was not only a risk of the potency of the vaccine being destroyed but also the danger of vaccinating sheep infected with the disease, and in which the disease was incubating, inasmuch as by that time the sheep in infested country would, in many cases, be then dying from the disease.

M. Loir has decided to not vaccinate again in hot weather; only during the period between (say) the end of May and the middle of September.

When it is considered that this is the first time vaccination for anthrax has been tried on a large scale in Australia—that the operation was carried out, in some cases at what is evidently the wrong season of the year—that the vaccine had to be conveyed considerable distances by coach and buggy—and that, in some cases, the sheep were dying at the time they were vaccinated—while, as pointed out, the runs on which some of them were kept were, so to speak, saturated with the virus of anthrax,—I think it will be allowed that the treatment has, upon the whole, under the circumstances, proved satisfactory, especially as it is believed that the experience gained will enable M. Loir to be much more successful in future.

APPENDIX H.

FOOT-ROT IN SHEEP.

By Edward Stanley, F.R.C.V.S., Government Veterinarian.

THE past season having been such as to cause a considerable increase in foot-rot amongst sheep, the following exhaustive paper on this important subject has been prepared by Mr. Stanley, at the request of the Chief Inspector of Stock :—

There is good authority for stating the disease is contagious, but it is so only when several conditions, such as the nature of the disease, unhealthy season, and a favourable locality, occur together, all favouring the propagation of the malady. At such times the products from diseased feet have produced the disease by contact with healthy feet, or by inoculation.

There are other forms of the disease that are not contagious, and these occur most frequently. They may originate from injuries to the feet, occurring when they are weakened by prolonged wet weather, causing overgrowth and softening of the hoofs.

Professor Brown describes the structural alteration as :—

“Mechanical derangement of the hoof, and the introduction of gritty particles into the canals or into accidental fissures.”

“Irritation of the internal membrane, causing excessive secretion of epithelial cells with serous exudation, associated with increased vascularity and sensibility.”

The

The symptoms are lameness, usually in one foot, but may be in more. The foot is hot; the skin becomes inflamed between the digits; it is swollen, moist, and exudes a purulent fluid. The hoof gets undermined by the inflammation, and gradually becomes loosened from the sensitive tissues on which it grows. A looser texture of horn takes its place, and assumes a fungoid character, which grows beneath the detached hoof. Into this fungoid tissue dirt penetrates, aggravating the disease, and preventing the process of healing.

Treatment for Foot-rot.

The disease in its malignant forms, and especially when neglected in the early stages, is difficult to cure, being very slow in its progress, as many weeks are required before new hoof can grow over and protect the sensitive tissues.

Therefore the objects of treatment are to arrest the growth of fungus and to promote a healthy action in the hoof-secreting surfaces. Having done this, nature will provide a hard crust sufficient to enable the sheep to get about until the new hoof has grown and so completed the cure.

As the disease is under some conditions contagious it is advisable not to allow the affected sheep to mix with the healthy, and the attendant dressing the feet should be careful to avoid conveying the disease by contaminated hands or instruments. These should be frequently disinfected in a watery solution of carbolic acid made of a strength one of acid to twenty of water.

The very lame sheep should be culled and marked, and kept in a hospital paddock, where they can be hand-dressed two or three times a week.

To prepare the feet for dressing, overgrown hoofs should be cut into proper shape by hoof shears and knife; all the loose and diseased horn should be cut away, as it harbours dirt and prevents access of dressing; but at the same time avoid cutting into the blood, as the careless use of the knife is likely to increase the growth of the troublesome fungus. Carefully remove all dirt, maggots, &c.; then apply a strong caustic to destroy the fungus growth, so as to prepare the way for future healing applications.

There are several caustics that answer the purpose, but, as they all destroy all the tissues, much care is required in their use. The following are recommended:—Veterinarians use a red hot iron to destroy the fungus, and it is the best when judiciously used. As substitutes, hydrochloric acid, nitric acid, sulphuric acid, have their advocates, but they cannot be safely used without more or less injury to the healthy sensitive tissues.

Butyr of Antimony.—With an equal quantity of tincture of myrrh is a favorite remedy, applied with a flat-stick once or twice a week until the fungus is checked. A safer remedy in unskilled hands is a very strong solution of sulphate of copper (bluestone), one part to four of water, used once or twice.

Tar.—Stockholm or American tar is sold by ship chandlers. It is obtained by distillation from wood, and possesses powerful healing properties, so that it is frequently used with other drugs for foot-rot. It is very important not to confuse this with coal-tar, because coal-tar burns the feet, and will destroy sound hoofs, therefore it is not recommended.

The following healing dressings, are any of them suitable to be used after the caustics have cleansed the feet. They may be used once a week, or more frequently if necessary, being applied with a bit of rag tied on a stick. It is not a good practice to bind the foot up with rags:—

Stockholm tar	1 lb.
Melted fat	2 oz.
Sulphuric acid	1 oz.
or
Stockholm tar	20 parts.
Carbolic acid	1 part.
or
Stockholm tar	4 parts.
Bluestone finely powdered	1 part.
or
Oil of tar	10 parts.
Carbolic acid	1 part.
Olive oil	1 part.

After a few applications of either of the above dressing, the following powder may be sprinkled on the sores daily:—

Powdered chalk	4 oz.
Armenian bole	1 "
Charcoal	1 "
Alum	$\frac{1}{2}$ "
Sulphate of zinc	$\frac{1}{2}$ "

Fresh slacked lime, sprinkled on a bare dry surface, is a convenient form of dressing, as the sheep can walk in it and so save the trouble of application by hand. As it is not always necessary to use strong dressings the carbolic solutions, being disinfectants, known as Jey's Fluid, Little's and MacDougall's Dips, are of great service. The strength must be regulated as required at the time. As it sometimes happens in large flocks of sheep that the disease has escaped observation in its early stages it becomes necessary to treat large numbers, and to do so expeditiously to save expense. For this purpose shallow baths or troughs are used, and the sheep pass through them. In a general way this is all very well, but some care is, nevertheless, necessary. A sheep with a bad foot will go through the bath on three sound feet, and not dress the lame one. Others jump and rush through so quickly that the dressing scarcely touches them, and unless the loose horn and dirt has been removed from the feet the dressing will be unsatisfactory. The dressings are often so strong that they do harm to sound feet, make the hoofs brittle, arrest the natural sebaceous excretions round the top of the feet, burn the healthy skin, and do more harm than good by making healthy feet inflamed and tender, when they are more likely to contract the contagion of foot-rot. Therefore it is best to cull the lame sheep and treat them separately.

The

The following dressings are recommended for use in the baths or troughs. A strong dressing should only be used once, to be followed by more dilute dressings, as the circumstances may require.

Arsenic.—Arsenic is a favourite remedy, but it is very insoluble in water, therefore it is necessary to add potash and to boil the liquid a few minutes, using it when cold. Care should be taken to prevent its boiling over. It is made as follows:—

Arsenic	1 oz.
Water	1 gallon.

Soda is sometimes substituted for potash, but it is not recommended as it increases the brittleness and injures the skin of the sound feet. After using arsenical dressing sheep should be kept on bare ground sufficiently long to allow the excess of dressing to drain off the feet, otherwise there is danger of poisoning the herbage and killing the sheep.

Sulphate of copper, 1 or 2 lb. dissolved in each gallon of cold water, or bichloride of mercury, 1 or 2 oz. dissolved in each gallon of cold water, will assist recovery if the sheep are put on battens or bare clear ground for a few hours after each dressing. A repetition of mild dressings is more likely to cure than one severe application of a strong character.

APPENDIX I.

THE WORMS INFESTING THE SHEEP AND THE REMEDIES USED.

I.—KINDS OF WORMS.

THE most common, as well as the most injurious, kinds of worms with which the sheep have been infested are:—

- The "Thread," Stomach Worm (Strongylus Contortus).
- The "Tape," Intestinal Worm (Tenia Expansa).
- The Lung Worm (Filaria Bronchialis).

II.—THE REMEDIES.

1. For Stomach and Intestinal Worms.

(1.) The Arsenic Drench.

The proper dose is (say) 2 grains arsenic to a grown sheep, 1 $\frac{2}{3}$ grain to a weaner, and 1 to 1 $\frac{1}{3}$ grain to a lamb.

Arsenic, 1 oz. avoirdupois... }	Boil slowly for half-an-hour until the arsenic is all dissolved; then add water to make mixture up to 1 $\frac{1}{2}$ gallons. Let it settle, and pour clear liquid quietly off, and bury sediment.
Washing soda, 2 oz. „ ... }
Water, $\frac{1}{2}$ gallon }

This will drench 240 grown sheep Dose: 1 fluid ounce.

or,
With water added to make 2 gallons of mixture it will drench 320 weaners ... Do or,

With water added to make 2 $\frac{1}{2}$ gallons of mixture it will drench 440 lambs ... Do

The greatest care and exactness should be exercised in preparing the drench. The arsenic should be ordered in packages which do not require breaking or reweighing, and the quantity used should be checked with number of sheep to be drenched. The mixture should be frequently shaken up while drenching.

This drench, which has been by far the most generally used, has been found to be very effective for stomach and intestinal worms.

(2.) Turpentine Drenches.

Turps and Milk.—1 oz. Turps, 2 oz. Milk.

Turps, Linseed Oil, and Gruel.—1 oz. each Turps, Oil, and Gruel.
Ingredients to be thoroughly mixed.

Dose: For grown sheep, 3 oz.; for weaners, 2 oz.; and for lambs, 1 $\frac{1}{2}$ oz. If the sheep are weak the dose to be reduced.

These drenches have also been found to be very effective, when repeated, for stomach and intestinal worms.

N.B.—The best modes of preparing and administering these drenches are given here, and at greater length in the Agricultural Gazette of New South Wales, Vol. II, Part 2, pages 95 to 99.

The drenches prepared by Mr. Pottie, V.S., Sydney, and Mr. Weaver, Armidale, are also reported to be effective for these worms.

2. For Lung Worm.

(1.) The Turpentine Drenches.

These drenches, of the proportions given above for stomach and intestinal worms, administered three times at intervals of ten days, are recommended by Mr. Government Veterinarian Stanley, F.R.C.V.S., for lung worm, and have proved very effective.

The drench prepared by Mr. Pottie has been reported as effective for this worm, as also in some cases that of Messrs. Hayward and Tomlinson.

Directions for giving the Arsenic and Turpentine Drenches.—The sheep should be yarded the evening before the morning on which the drenches are to be given. They must be so on an empty stomach, and they must be kept away from food and water for three hours at least after they are drenched. Fumigation and Intratracheal Injection have also been tried, and it is said with considerable success for lung worm.

These operations are described in the same Agricultural Gazette, pages 99 and 100, but more fully in Professor Steel's Work on Diseases in Sheep, which sheep-owners would do well to procure.

III.—

III.—PREVENTIVE MEASURES.

1. General.

(1.) Avoid Overstocking.

It is the opinion of those best qualified to judge that the spread of the worm-pest is largely attributable to overstocking and the consequent eating out of the most nutritious plants and grasses. Overstocking, therefore, should for this, as well as for other important reasons, be avoided.

(2.) A strict watch should be kept.

A strict watch should be kept in a drooping summer season like the present, and if the young sheep show the least signs of ill-health (if they are not thriving as they ought) one of the most unthrifty should be killed, and a close and thorough search made for worms.

2. Licks for Sheep.

(1.) Salt.

The best authorities hold that, apart from the question of preventing the attacks of parasites, it pays the owner well to give his sheep all the salt they will take, for it helps to keep the sheep in vigorous health, and he gets a good return in more and better mutton, and more and sounder wool.

Although this is the case there is no doubt but that the sheep get a great deal too little salt, for, even where salt is given the allowance is often very short, and a good deal of it is wasted for the want of proper troughs and protection from the weather.

Then, again, some owners give no salt whatever, from the mistaken idea that the pasture on their holdings is of a saline nature, which renders salt unnecessary. This may have been the case in former years, but it is not so now, the pasture in many cases having deteriorated. The best course, therefore, is to try the sheep with salt, and, if it is found that they will take it, then they should have an ample supply of all the rock salt they will take, with occasional licks of Liverpool salt. The aim should be to find such a lick as will save the trouble and expense of drenching; and there is no doubt but that Liverpool salt is the best vehicle for vermifuges as well as being otherwise very beneficial as a lick.

(2.) Sulphate of iron and salt.

Half a hundredweight of sulphur of iron finely powdered and mixed well with 1 ton of Liverpool (i.e., crushed), salt to be given in weather-protected troughs, constantly available to the sheep, in country at all subject to worms or fluke, and to be given in even sound country, other than the true salt-bush, when the season is such as likely to cause an outbreak of worms.

(3.) Turpentine and salt.

Mix thoroughly 1 pint of turpentine to from 28 lb. to 56 lb. Liverpool salt, according to condition and age of sheep; spread thinly in weather-protected troughs, and give every five or six weeks to the extent (say) $1\frac{1}{2}$ oz. to 2 oz. per sheep in country where the sheep are liable to worms or fluke, and less frequently in country other than salt bush.

(4.) Burning off the old pasture.

One of the best means of combating the worm pest and all other parasites, and destroying their eggs, is to burn the pasture. This practice is also beneficial in other important respects—it destroys the germs of disease and improves the pasture.

For all these reasons the practice should, where practicable, be systematically carried out; and it would be so oftener if there were less overstocking, and if timely and effective precautions were taken to keep the fires within bounds.

It will be readily seen that if lambing ewes could be put on burnt feed, not only would the flow of milk be better but the pasture would be comparatively free from the worms with which the young lambs are so liable to be infested.

If burnt feed could not be got it would, if practicable, do good to put the ewes on ground where ewes and lambs had not for some time been.

(5.) Surface and under draining.

Surface-draining is very necessary in all the "upland" districts, and also in a great deal of the other comparatively saltless portions of the Colony; and as this can be done at a moderate expense—by running plough furrows, and helping here and there with the spade—the practice should not be neglected; for in country of that description surface water allowed to remain is certain to become breeding-places for the worms and other parasites, besides inducing foot-rot.

This is especially the case with ground over which water from springs spreads. It should be led straight to the creek by means of a shallow surface-drain; and where the surroundings are soft and boggy under-draining should be tried.

This can be done in a cheap and effective way by placing two straight saplings, 8 or 9 inches thick, 3 or 4 inches apart, in the bottom of the drain; then putting a third on the top to keep the other two apart and form an eye, and then filling up with scrub or brush over the saplings, and earth on the top of that.

APPENDIX J.

PAPER BY MONS. LOIR ON HYDROPHOBIA AND ITS TREATMENT BY PASTEUR.

Pasteur Institute of Australia, 1 May, 1891.

HYDROPHOBIA is a contagious disease which does not develop itself spontaneously, but always comes from the bite of an affected animal. Both men and animals may be affected with this disease, and men generally are so through being bitten by dogs or cats. The period of incubation—the time which elapses between the bite and the development of the disease—is very variable, and at times protracted; but death occurs in a few days after the symptoms are noticed. The result of careful observations shows that in 100 of the cases in which the bite has been followed by infection eighty have disclosed themselves in two months, and the remaining twenty cases within six months. The incubation sometimes, but very rarely, extends extends beyond six months; and a very few cases have been known even after eleven months. Out of 100 cases of bites by mad animals about seventeen are followed by death. M. Pasteur having found that the virus of hydrophobia is in the nervous system, and that by inoculating the virus in contact with the nervous system it always gives a positive result, that is to say, death, he adopted a special method by which he was able to protect dogs against the disease and make them impervious to hydrophobia. He had done this to about fifty dogs when, in 1886, a boy of 10 years old, who had been bitten all over the body, was brought to his laboratory, and as Professors Vulpian and Grancher who were consulted by M. Pasteur were of opinion that the boy was devoted to death they approved the trial on him of the method which was so efficacious for dogs; this was five years ago, and the boy is still alive. Since that time a great many people bitten by mad dogs have come to Paris to be treated, and the results are very satisfactory; for while the death rate before the treatment where people were bitten by mad dogs was 17%, it has in the case of people who were bitten and treated at the Pasteur Institute been as follows:—

Year.	No. of people treated.	Death rate.
1886	2,157	1·02
1887	1,513	0·79
1888	1,374	0·50
1889	1,533	0·26
	6,577	0·70

Since 1887 the treatment is not only adopted in Paris but also in Austria, Russia, and Italy. This is the reason why fewer people now come to Paris for treatment. Number of people treated since 1886:—French, 6,350; English, 308; German, 37; Austrian, 84; Belgian, 230; Brazilian, 10; Egyptian, 6; Spanish, 227; American, 28; Grecian, 43; Dutch, 28; Italian, 155; Indian, 7; Moor, 1; Portuguese, 116; Roumanian, 51; Russian, 188; Servian, 1; and Swiss, 15.

The climatic influence and the season have nothing to do with the prevalence of rabies. People say generally that hydrophobia is more prevalent in summer than in winter, but by looking at the number of people who come every month to the Pasteur Institute after being bitten the contrary during these last three years seems to be true. The maximum has been at the end of winter and beginning of spring. In June and July a diminution, the minimum in September and October, and an augmentation until February with the same results for the three last years. So it seems by these statistics that the number of mad dogs is greater in winter than in summer.

Since the above was in type a communication has been received from Pasteur, confirming the views here enunciated by M. Loir, in regard to the length of the incubation of hydrophobia, and the efficacy of the regulations now in force for preventing the introduction of that deadly disease.

APPENDIX K.

ESTABLISHMENT OF A FRESH MEAT TRADE.

I AM very glad to be able to report that at last (it is now ten years since I first mooted this matter) there is a prospect of an early commencement of a chilled or fresh meat trade, very largely through the energy and enterprise of Mr. Robert Hudson, of Hudson Bros.

Mr. Hudson has obtained a lease of the large and commodious meat market, with the necessary chill-rooms, erected by the Government at Darling Harbour, which have remained so long unoccupied; and he is prepared to take delivery of meat at up-country railway stations (as he is now doing at Tenterfield), to convey it in his refrigerating cars safely to Sydney at all seasons of the year, to provide the necessary accommodation for its disposal by the owners' agents in the market, and, if not sold, to keep the meat at a small cost in one of the chill-rooms till it can be sold.

I have always said that without these rooms the fresh meat trade could never be established, but with their aid its success is certain, for they give the owner of the meat, when he requires it, a margin of from fifteen to twenty days to wait a rise of market, and, instead of his having to accept what would otherwise be practically any price the buyer chooses to offer, the boot is now on the other foot, and if he will not give a fair price on the arrival of the meat it can be kept till he will do so.

While the first and most important portion of the work is the establishment of a suitable market and chill-room, it is also necessary for the proper conduct of this business that up-country killing and chilling depôts should be erected at the principal centres of the fat stock traffic, and Mr. Hudson has, during the last two years, been indefatigable in his endeavours in that direction, in the face, I regret to say, of a great deal of apathy on the part of many of our stock-owners, for whose interest, as well as his own and that of the Railway Department, there is no doubt he has been hard at work, and I am glad to say with a considerable measure of success.

A company has, with the help of Mr. Manning, been formed at Narrandera, and another, of which Mr. W. H. Walker has been the principal promoter, has been formed at Tenterfield—two important centres of the fat stock trade,—for the purpose of establishing killing and chilling depôts, where the meat will be properly slaughtered and chilled to the bone before being put into the refrigerating cars, and thus be prepared for transit and for being kept with safety till sold.

The company at Narrandera is termed "The Riverine Chilled Meat Company." They have erected commodious premises on an excellent site commanding both the Hay and Jerilderie lines, and are now busy constructing chill-rooms and taking delivery of the machinery, and they hope to commence killing and chilling by the end of September.

Slaughter-houses and chill-rooms will also be erected by the company at Hay and Jerilderie. It is not, however, intended to put up machinery at these places in the meantime, but to supply the necessary ice for cooling and protecting the meat from Narrandera, where the plant is sufficiently powerful for this, besides doing the work there.

At Narrandera the works, which are very complete in every way, are constructed to kill and chill 600 sheep and thirty bullocks a day, but on an emergency a much larger number could be put through. There is a capacious cooling-room to allow the blood heat to escape from the carcasses before passing on to the chill-room, and from there they are loaded direct into the refrigerating cars.

MEETING OF CHIEF INSPECTORS OF STOCK,
HELD IN SYDNEY, IN JUNE, 1891.

REPORT.

WE met on Monday, 15th June, and concluded our labours on the 19th June, and were called together at the instance of the Government of New South Wales with a view to the adoption of a uniform code of regulations for the prevention of the introduction of diseases in stock in the Australian colonies, and to the establishment of an Australasian Stock Institute.

DELEGATES PRESENT:—

Queensland—Mr. P. R. GORDON.

Tasmania—Mr. T. A. TABART.

New South Wales—Mr. ALEXANDER BRUCE.

The following is a copy of a circular letter, dated 13th May, 1891, addressed to the Governments of the Australasian colonies, by which this meeting was convened:—

“New South Wales,

“Sir,

“Colonial Secretary’s Office, Sydney, 13 May, 1891.

“I have the honor to inform you that on the 25th March last I received a communication from the Premier of Queensland, suggesting that the Chief Inspectors of Stock of New South Wales, Victoria, and Queensland, should meet in Sydney for the purpose of discussing some matters of detail which need to be settled before a uniform code of stock regulations can be agreed upon by the Australian colonies. This communication was referred by me to the Secretary for Mines and Agriculture, who has recently had the subject under consideration; and as it appears from the accompanying paper, marked D, prepared by the Chief Inspector of Stock for this colony, that there is very little difference between the regulations now in force in all the Australian colonies except Western Australia, he, as well as Sir Samuel Griffith, is of opinion that the adoption of a uniform code is quite practicable as well as highly desirable.

“He thinks, however, that instead of only calling the Chief Inspectors of Stock for Queensland, New South Wales, and Victoria together, the chief inspectors for all the colonies should be asked to meet; and as he considers that effect should be given to the resolution adopted at the meeting of inspectors and other representatives in 1889, which recommended the establishment of an intercolonial stock institute in Sydney, Mr. Smith is desirous that this matter also should be discussed at the proposed meeting.

“I

“I therefore enclose with this a copy of his minute on these subjects, together with copies of the various papers alluded to in that minute, as per list of papers herewith for your consideration, and would, at the same time, invite you to allow your Chief Inspector of Stock to attend a meeting to be held in Sydney on 15th June next, with the view to the framing of a uniform code of stock regulations for all the colonies, and the preparation of a report on the proposed institute.

“I have the honor to be, Sir,

“Your obedient Servant,

“HENRY PARKES.”

D.

22 April, 1891.

I AM of opinion that the adoption of a uniform code of regulations providing for the interchange of stock between the Australasian colonies, and between these colonies and other parts of the world, is highly desirable; for such an assimilation of the regulations now in force in the different colonies would not only tend to the convenience of owners, and facilitate the introduction of stock from one colony into another, but it would, to a large extent, guarantee that the malignant diseases in stock, which exist in other parts of the world, but which are happily unknown in these colonies, would not be introduced, inasmuch as the same well-considered and effective regulations would then be in force in all the Australasian colonies.

I am also of opinion that effect should be given to the recommendation of the Intercolonial Stock Conference, held in Melbourne, in November, 1889, that a permanent Australasian Stock Institute should be established in Sydney for the purpose of investigating and experimenting on infectious diseases in stock, and for the study of microbiology, and the means of preventing or curing these diseases which are now attracting so much attention since Pasteur and Koch brought them so prominently under notice; and I consider the proposal that the colonies should contribute pro rata, according to the number of stock they own, to the support of the Institute a fair and reasonable one.

If a commodious and conveniently arranged building, on something of the model and furnished like the Pasteur Institute in Paris, were erected on the best and most convenient site for carrying out these investigations, and imparting the necessary teaching to the students, and if a thoroughly competent scientist were engaged as director, there cannot be a doubt but work would be done which would be of the greatest possible benefit, not only to the owners of stock, but also to the people generally throughout the Australasian colonies.

With the view, therefore, of obtaining the concurrence of the other colonies to the opinions which I have here expressed, the necessary copies of my minute, and of the other papers may be forwarded to the Hon. the Premier, with a request that he will cause them to be transmitted to the other colonies for their consideration, and that he will at the same time invite them to allow their chief inspectors of stock to attend a meeting to be held in Sydney at an early date, say, on the 15th June next, to prepare such a uniform code of Intercolonial and Foreign Stock Regulations as shall be approved by all the colonies, and to furnish a report on the proposed institute.

S. SMITH.

DRAFT CODE OF INTERCOLONIAL STOCK REGULATIONS.

At the Intercolonial Stock Conference, held in Melbourne, in November, 1889, a resolution was passed to the following effect:—“50. That a uniform Code of Regulations, embodying the resolutions passed by this Conference, be adopted by all the Colonies, and that the framing of such Regulation be left in the hands of the Victorian Government.”

In terms of that Resolution a Draft Code of Regulations was in March following forwarded by the Chief Secretary, Melbourne, to the other Colonies (see Draft marked B herewith), but although this and some of the other colonies (Victoria and South Australia) have since the Conference issued amended regulations embodying several of the resolutions of the Conference, nothing further has been done towards the completion of such an intercolonial code as contemplated by the Conference

With

With the view, therefore, to assist in framing as complete a code as possible, I have prepared another and fuller draft than that forwarded by Victoria, arranged somewhat differently, and it is thought in a preferable order, inasmuch as the regulations in this draft follow in the natural order of the action which will require to be taken under the regulations in both the foreign and intercolonial codes.

In order, again, to see where the regulations now in force in the several colonies differ, I have cut out the relative regulations and portions of regulations, and arranged them in the same order as that in which the draft code now prepared by me is framed, giving a page to each regulation, and thus keeping all the regulations on the same subject on the same page.

This, of course, admits of a thorough comparison being made, and the difference where it exists is clearly seen, while I have noted underneath what I consider that difference amounts to.

Then, as the numbers of the different regulations in which the provisions corresponding to those in this draft stand are entered on the margin, it will be easy for the correctness of my conclusions to be tested; and if it is, it will, I think, be seen that there is so very little difference between the requirements of the regulations now in force in the different colonies, that if a complete agreement cannot be arrived at by correspondence, it would, I believe, readily be so at a meeting of the chief inspectors; for the principal difference now lies in the order and arrangement of the regulations, not in the provisions of the regulations themselves.

As this is the case, it is to be hoped that no time will be lost in framing a complete and effective Intercolonial Code of Regulations which will be verbatim et literatim the same in all the colonies, dealing with the interchange of all kinds of stock between the different Australasian colonies as well as between these colonies and all other parts of the world, and which, while it permits of the necessary importation of pure-bred foreign stock, will effectually prevent the introduction of disease.

Besides the resolution recommending a common code of intercolonial regulations, there were several other important resolutions passed by the Conference, the adoption of which would be very advantageous to all the colonies.

Among these, perhaps, the most important is resolution 33, which calls for the appointment and maintenance of an efficient and competent staff of Inspectors of Stock in every colony, not only in the interest of the colonies employing such a staff, but also in that of the neighbouring colonies; for if infectious and contagious disease is allowed to obtain a footing among the stock in any of the colonies on the mainland, it is only a question of time when it will spread to them all, unless, indeed, there is a complete stoppage of stock traffic between the colonies.

For these reasons it is most essential that each of the colonies should employ a sufficient staff of competent inspectors; and it is so especially in the face of the fact that all the colonies are now asking that their stock should be admitted into the other colonies with no, or little or no, restrictions.

If stock, therefore, are to be admitted in this way it is necessary that the colony which is asked to admit them on the certificate issued in another colony should have full confidence in the statements contained in the certificate, and that it cannot have, if, as is now the case in some of the colonies, the staff is so defective as to render it impossible for the officer granting the certificate to examine the stock and say from his own personal knowledge that they are, as he certifies, free from infection.

There is another matter connected with the intercolonial code with respect to which it is necessary that an understanding should be come to by all the colonies.

Stock will, no doubt, still continue to be brought by sea, as they have hitherto at times been for introduction, with respect to which all the requirements of the regulations have not been complied with, and it would be well to come to an understanding as to whether such stock are to be refused admission or admitted on certain terms; and, if so, what these terms should be.

In the draft which I prepared I have in two or three regulations inserted a provision to the effect that when the omission is not a material one, the colony to which the stock are brought may, with the sanction of the others, allow the stock to land if it is considered that they can be admitted without risk, but subject to certain additional precautions, which would, to some extent at least, make up for the requirements which the importer of the stock had failed to comply with, and which would entail so much additional expense on him as would prevent such a thing occurring, except through an oversight.

Another very important resolution passed by the Conference is No. 41, which recommends the establishment of an Intercolonial Stock Institute—a matter which calls for prompt action; for the losses of stock throughout the colonies from diseases and ailments, the nature and character of which are but imperfectly mp perfectly known, are exceedingly heavy ; and with the success which has in other parts of the world followed investigations and experiments of a similar nature to those which would be prosecuted at the proposed institute, there is every reason to believe that its establishment would be attended with the greatest possible benefit to stock-owners in all the colonies, as well as to the general public.

In summing up the result of the comparison of the regulations now in force in the other colonies with those in draft code framed by me, I have entered Queensland as the same as New South Wales on the ground that Mr. P. R. Gordon, the Chief Inspector for that colony, when recently in Sydney, went carefully through the whole of the regulations which I have framed, and is prepared to recommend their adoption by the Queensland Government.

With the view of showing still more shortly the difference between the regulations now in force in the several colonies and those in the proposed code, I have prepared comparative statements, which are submitted herewith, and marked B, C, D, and E, contrasting the latter with the existing regulations in Victoria, South Australia, Tasmania, and New Zealand, in which every difference of any importance whatever is clearly set out.

As the law stands in this colony, there are several of the regulations in the proposed code which the law does not empower the Government in the meantime to notify, and their issue will have to be delayed until the Stock and Pastures Bill, which has been prepared, is passed.

ALEX. BRUCE,
Chief Inspector of Stock.

The statement showing the difference between the regulations now in force, and those in the proposed code may be printed and forwarded to the several Governments, with a request that early consideration be given to the proposed alterations, with a view to the adoption of a uniform code in accordance with the decision of the Conference.

S. SMITH, 17-3-91.

Mr. T. A. Tabart, of Tasmania, was elected chairman.

PRELIMINARY.

In consequence of all the colonies not being represented, it was agreed that, in revising the draft regulations, we should be guided by the opinions expressed by the Australasian Stock Conference of 1889, and that any matter brought forward and not embraced by the resolutions passed by that Conference should be adopted only as a recommendation to be hereafter submitted for acceptance by the colonies not represented.

THE FRAMING OF A UNIFORM CODE OF REGULATIONS.

The principal business for which the present meeting was convened—the framing of a uniform code of intercolonial regulations dealing with the interchange of stock between the Australasian colonies and places outside these colonies in terms of resolution 50 of the Intercolonial Stock Conference held in Melbourne in November, 1889—was then entered upon, and the code prepared by Victoria in accordance with that resolution, and the draft subsequently framed by New South Wales having been considered, it was decided to take that framed by New South Wales for discussion, as the order of arrangement of the regulations was better and the code more complete, while the regulations in force in all the colonies were collated and contrasted in that draft.

After a full and careful consideration of these regulations in detail we unanimously agree to the draft code submitted herewith, embodying the resolutions of the Conference of 1889, together with some alterations and additions which we consider desirable, and which are set out in Appendix A hereto; and we recommend that the draft now agreed to by us be printed and submitted to the several colonies for adoption, in as far as the same is adapted to the circumstances of each colony, according to its geographical position.

AUSTRALASIAN STOCK INSTITUTE.

The paper contributed by Mr. Bruce, see Appendix B hereto, on the proposed Australasian Stock Institute sets forth so clearly and concisely the necessity for such an institution; and the cost of its establishment and annual expense of maintenance, compared with the benefits which it would confer on the pastoral interest of Australasia, are so self-evident as to appear to us to be beyond the range of contention. As, however, the construction and equipment of a new laboratory would occupy a considerable space of time, which could in the interim be profitably employed in inquiring into several matters of urgency in connection with animal diseases, we strongly recommend the adoption of that portion of the paper which suggests the use of the Rodd Island laboratory, if it can be obtained, and securing the services of Mons. Loir as Director for the present, until arrangements are matured for an institute on a permanent and more extensive scale.

We find that the annual outlay required to maintain this temporary institute, including salary of director and his assistants, would not exceed £1,000 or £1,200.

Taking the lowest estimate, that sum divided pro rata among the colonies in proportion to the live stock of each at 31st December, 1889, would be as follows:—New South Wales, £337; Victoria, £131; Queensland, £313; South Australia, £52; Western Australia, £19; Tasmania, £16; New Zealand, £132; total, £1,000.

If we except New South Wales and Queensland, the amount to be contributed by each colony is so very insignificant that we cannot imagine a reason for refusal on the part of the other colonies to contribute their quota.

AN EFFICIENT AND COMPETENT STAFF OF INSPECTORS.

We desire to call attention to the resolution by which we indorse the recommendation of the Australasian Stock Conference of 1889 with regard to the appointment and maintenance of a full staff of inspectors, and the necessity for the issue of certificates of health by the officers of the exporting colony.

INTRODUCTION OF SAMPLES OF WOOL FROM EUROPE.

We also desire to call attention to the important resolution in regard to the practice of wool brokers receiving samples of wool from Europe, and to the risk of infection being introduced by this means.

THE VIEWING OF STOCK WHILE IN QUARANTINE.

In our opinion the admission of persons to view stock while in quarantine should be limited as far as possible, and that no persons should be so admitted except the owner or agent for the stock, and then only in company with an inspector.

COLONIES NOT REPRESENTED.

We deem it our duty to express our great regret at the absence of the Chief Inspectors of the other colonies, but more particularly of those within easy reach of Sydney; for there is every reason to suppose that, had they been present, a code of regulations regulations to which all the colonies would have agreed could have been framed. And we are the more inclined to take this view from the fact that where a difference existed between us at this meeting, in regard to any of the regulations which have been adopted, it was speedily removed on the subject being discussed. We have, however, as regards Western Australia, good grounds for believing, from the tenor of the telegram received on the 12th instant from the Prime Minister of that colony (Appendix C1), that they will agree to the code framed at this meeting. We expect, also, from the terms of the telegram of the 9th instant from the Honorable the Minister for Lands, Wellington, that New Zealand (Appendix C2) will also agree to adopt a uniform code, so far as it is applicable to the circumstances of that colony. With regard, again, to the colonies of Victoria (Appendix C3) and South Australia (Appendix C4) it was to be expected, from what transpired at the Conference in 1889 and subsequently, that the Chief Inspectors for both these colonies would be present at this meeting to assist in the revision and completion of the uniform code of regulations prepared by Victoria, and forwarded to the other colonies in April, 1890, as neither the Chief Inspector for Victoria nor South Australia dissented from the resolution passed at the Conference that such a code should be framed and adopted by all the colonies; and, not only so, but, speaking more particularly as regards Victoria, Mr. Dow, the then Minister for Lands for that colony, in addressing the members of the Conference, said, "It would give him great pleasure to further their views, and he hoped that the result of the Conference would be the adoption of a uniform measure by all the colonies in matters affecting stock," and what is still more confirmatory of the view that the code was to be verbatim the same in all the colonies, is that Victoria, to give effect to resolution 50, framed and forwarded to the other colonies, the draft code already referred to.

There can be no question, therefore, what the term "uniform code" meant, as used by the Conference. If not intended that the regulations should—except as regards the reference to and the powers under the Acts under which the regulations were issued—be verbatim, such a draft would not have been made nor circulated; for, if anything else had been intended, the bare resolutions passed by the Conference would have been a sufficient guide to the colonies in framing their regulations. The remarks made by the mover of resolution 50 in bringing it forward also thoroughly confirm this. We trust, therefore, that the colonies of Victoria and South Australia will yet come to an understanding in regard to the proposed code, and give full effect to resolution 50, and that they will, with that view, go carefully over the regulations in the draft codes about to be forwarded to them, and return these drafts with the remarks they may have to make on the regulations to the Chief Inspector of Stock, Sydney, who will communicate with the Chief Inspectors in the other colonies; and in this way we believe a uniform code can soon be agreed to by correspondence, and without another meeting.

Since the foregoing portion of this report was agreed to, a letter has been received from the Premier of Victoria with respect to the subjects discussed at this meeting, and in reference to which we think it necessary that we should offer some remarks. It is true, as stated in the fourth paragraph of that letter, that it was left optional with each colony to adopt or reject the whole, or any part of the regulations contained in the code framed by Victoria, or even the whole of the resolutions of the Conference. But seeing that the colony of Victoria not only joined in passing the resolution for the adoption of a uniform code, but framed and forwarded to the other colonies a draft code for that purpose, we submit, with due deference, that there cannot be any doubt but that the code contemplated was one which would, with the exceptions mentioned, be verbatim the same in all the colonies, and would, in fact, form a portion of the great work of the federation of the colonies; for there can be no question but the interchange and introduction of stock are federal matters.

With regard to the doubt expressed in the fifth paragraph as to whether anything would be gained by uniformity in procedure and phraseology, we desire to point out that the true safeguards against the introduction and spread of disease in stock in Australia is to have a complete and effective set of regulations, and to enforce them with thorough strictness in all the colonies, however great the pressure to relax them may be; and we think that the adoption of a uniform code, with the arrangement and phraseology the same in all the colonies, would not only be certain to be more complete and effective, but, what is of the greatest moment, the regulations could not then—as they now can, while differently arranged and differently expressed in all the colonies—be read in such a way as that they can, in some very important respects, admit of entirely different action being taken by one colony from that adopted in another.

To show to what we refer we will give a few instances in regard to the action taken under the Victorian and South Australian regulations.—1. While the Conference decided by a large majority, and after a lengthy discussion, that all foreign dogs should be sent to a Government quarantine, both Victoria and South Australia allow these dogs to be quarantined on their owners' premises, an utterly useless and dangerous proceeding. 2. While inspectors of stock in the other colonies do not grant certificates as to the health of stock about to be shipped to the other colonies without seeing the stock and examining them, the Victorian inspectors are in the habit of certifying that they "have no reason to doubt the owners' declaration in any particular"—i.e., that the stock are sound, but they do not, we understand, examine them. 3. While the Victorian code includes the greater part of the regulations contained in the draft now adopted at this meeting, that code confers a power on the Chief Inspector of Stock which would completely destroy the uniformity and safety of these regulations. We allude to the power given to the Chief Inspector (not even to the Minister, which we consider would also be unwise) to dispense with requirements in regard to the admission of foreign stock, which would be very dangerous, and which ought not to be left at the option of any single colony.

Besides these cases, there are at least some ten or twelve other requirements of considerable importance, though not all set out in the resolutions of the Conference of 1889, in the code now adopted by us, which are not to be found in the Victorian code, but which we think it should contain.

With respect to the statement in paragraph 5 that New South Wales was not in a position to carry out the whole of the regulations as framed without further legislation, we find on reference to the regulations now in force in that colony that the defect here alluded to in regard to its legislation is comparatively immaterial, and that a bill has for some time been prepared to remedy this and other defects, and will be brought before Parliament at an early date.

With respect to the statements made in paragraphs 6 and 7, it is allowed that if the requirements there alluded to were faithfully carried out in all their details there would be no cause for asking for any alteration; but we have, we think, already clearly demonstrated that this is not the case, and that the proper remedy is the adoption by all the colonies of a full uniform (verbatim) code of regulations.

We

We are quite in accord with the opinion expressed in paragraph 8, that the question of the number and qualifications of the staff of inspectors in the several colonies is a matter for each colony; but at the same time when a colony fails, as not infrequently happens, to inspect and certify to the soundness of stock about to be introduced into another colony, and pleads shortness of its staff as an excuse for the omission, we are of opinion that the colony into which it is intended to send the stock is justified in calling attention to the state of the staff in the colony from which the stock are to come.

Of all the resolutions of the last Intercolonial Conference, there are none of greater importance, or more urgent, than that relating to the establishment of the Australasian Stock Institute, and we consider that the Minister for Mines and Agriculture for New South Wales is deserving of the thanks of the owners of stock throughout Australasia for bringing this matter prominently forward in a manner which in our opinion carries out to the fullest extent the views expressed in paragraph 9 of the letter of the Premier of Victoria. This will be seen by reference to our report on the subject, and Mr. Bruce's paper on the establishment of the institute.

Telegram 9th June, from the Hon. the Minister for Lands, Wellington, New Zealand, to the Chief Inspector of Stock, that the Chief Inspector for that colony would be unable to attend.

Telegram 11th June, from the Premier, Victoria, to the Hon. Colonial Secretary, New South Wales, regretting cannot be represented; letter by post.

Telegram 12th June, 1891, from the Prime Minister, Perth, Western Australia, to the Prime Minister, Sydney, that his inspector cannot attend. Will be glad to make regulations agree with those of other colonies.

Telegram 12th June, from the Prime Minister, South Australia, to the Prime Minister, Sydney. Decided not to send representative. Consider establishment institute better dealt with by Federal Parliament.

Visiting Quarantine.

Letter from Henry Austin, by his attorney, H. Haege, 13th June, asking permission for visitors to see German sheep now in quarantine in Sydney.

The meeting consider this to be a matter which should be left in the hands of the Chief Inspector of Stock, Sydney, and that Mr. Austin be so informed, but fully endorses the existing regulations as to the admission of persons to quarantine; and it was resolved that Mr. Austin be informed that there is no analogy between the cases quoted by him—viz., the admission of sheep from England and those from Tasmania.

CONSIDERATION OF DRAFT REGULATIONS.

The meeting confirmed the opinion expressed in Resolution 50 of the Australasian Stock Conference held in Melbourne in November, 1889, as to the desirability of assimilating the regulations in the several Australian colonies at the earliest possible opportunity.

A copy of the draft code of regulations prepared by Victoria was laid on the table, together with the draft framed by New South Wales, and it was decided to take the latter for discussion as the arrangement of the Regulations was better and the code more complete; while the Regulations in force in the different colonies were collated and contrasted in that draft.

1. Division of parts,—Agreed to.
2. Rescission of existing regulations,—Agreed to as adapted to each colony.
3. Schedule of stock to which regulations now apply,—Agreed to.

INTRODUCTION OF SAMPLES OF WOOL FROM EUROPE.

It having been found that it is the practice for samples of wool, both greasy and scoured, and at times in considerable quantities, to be sent from Europe to these colonies to guide the buying brokers in the purchase of wool for manufactories in England and on the Continent of Europe; we are of opinion that this practice is attended with a risk of introducing scab, sheep-pox, or perhaps some of the other malignant diseases prevalent in Europe, and that unless these samples can be subjected to such a heat as will destroy all germs of disease, and render the samples absolutely free from infection, they ought not to be admitted. We, therefore, recommend that a regulation to that effect be made.

AN EFFICIENT AND COMPETENT STAFF OF INSPECTORS.

That this meeting heartily endorses resolution 38 of the Conference of 1889, which recommends that an efficient and competent staff of inspectors should be maintained in all the colonies, and desires to point out that unless this is done disease may be introduced, and may spread, and that unless the colonies have confidence in the absolute freedom of stock from disease, restrictions must be imposed which will hamper and injure trade.

AUSTRALASIAN STOCK INSTITUTE.

Mr. Bruce submitted a paper on the subject of the proposed Australasian Stock Institute.

Resolved:—That the paper be printed as part of the proceedings, and that the suggestion contained therein as to obtaining the use of Rodd Island and temporary employment of Mons. Loir pending erection of institute and appointment of a full staff is strongly recommended, and we do not anticipate the expense of this will exceed £1,000 to £1,200 per annum.

A letter from the Premier, Victoria, to the Hon. Colonial Secretary, New South Wales, dated 12th June (see Appendix C), was submitted, stating that the Government of Victoria does not see any necessity for another conference, and fully explaining as to regulations and Stock Institute.

The meeting adjourned at 5 p.m. until 10 o'clock on Friday.

FIFTH DAY, FRIDAY, 19 JUNE, 1891.

THE Delegates met at 10 a.m., pursuant to adjournment.

CONSIDERATION OF DRAFT REPORT.

The draft report as submitted was agreed to.

VOTE

VOTE OF THANKS TO THE MINISTER FOR MINES AND AGRICULTURE.

Proposed by Mr. GORDON and seconded by Mr. TABART, and carried,—“That a vote of thanks of this meeting be conveyed to the Hon. the Minister for Mines and Agriculture for having called the delegates together, and likewise for the assistance he has accorded us in providing us with an able secretary (Mr. E. C. Weller), who has carried out his duties with untiring attention and ability.”

VOTE OF THANKS TO MR. ALEXANDER BRUCE.

Proposed by Mr. TABART and seconded by Mr. GORDON, and carried,—“That the thanks of this meeting are due to Mr. Bruce for his untiring efforts in the direction of obtaining a uniform code of regulations for the various colonies, in which he has shown indomitable perseverance, and devoted a very large amount of labour and his own time in the advancement of the welfare of stock-owners in this and the other Australasian colonies.”

VOTE OF THANKS TO CHAIRMAN.

Proposed by Mr. BRUCE and seconded by Mr. GORDON, and carried,—“That a cordial vote of thanks be tendered to Mr. Tabart for the able manner in which he had conducted the business of the meeting.”

Mr. BRUCE and the CHAIRMAN having thanked the meeting, the proceedings closed.

All risk and loss to be borne by the owner.

11. All loss sustained with respect to any imported stock while being conveyed to or from, or whilst in quarantine, whether by accident or by sickness arising from natural causes, or contracted from other stock, or by the destruction, or detention, or quarantine, or dipping, or dressing, of such stock, to prevent the spread of disease—shall be borne by the owner of such stock, and he shall have no claim whatever for compensation for any such loss, nor for any loss sustained by him through the carrying out or enforcement of these Regulations.

No stock to be landed but on Inspector’s permit.

12. No person shall land nor attempt to land, nor permit to be landed, any imported stock nor any carcass nor skin, nor any other portion of the carcass of any stock, nor any fodder, fittings, nor clothes nor other articles or things, with which such stock have been in contact, or likely to have been in contact—although their introduction may not be prohibited—without the written permission of an inspector, to the effect of Form E hereto, except Australian horses and dogs, as provided by Nos. 28 and 29 hereof: And any Inspector of Stock, Officer of Customs, or member of the police force, may prevent the landing of stock about to be introduced, or detain any such stock which may have been newly introduced by sea into this Colony until these Regulations have been complied with.

If

If Inspector is doubtful he may detain stock.

13. If, on the examination of any imported stock, the inspector has reason to doubt their entire freedom from infection, he may either temporarily detain the same on board the vessel by which they were brought, or temporarily isolate them on some other vessel, or in some safe and convenient place, until they are examined by a veterinary surgeon and found free from infection, ; And the owner of the stock shall bear the expense of such detention, isolation, and examination.

Owner to receive notice when stock are ailing or when destroyed.

14. When any stock are ailing, or shall have been destroyed under the above-named Acts or Regulations thereunder, notice thereof shall be given to the owner of such stock to the effect of form F hereto.

How notices are to be given.

15. Notices under these regulations may be either served personally on the person to whom such notice is required to be given, or left at his residence or place of business, or sent to him by registered letter through the post.

Inspector's directions to be carried out.

16. Any person receiving a requisition or direction from an inspector under these Regulations, shall, with due despatch, give effect to and carry out the same ; and if there be any information or document in the possession or power of any person which is required by an inspector under these Regulations, and asked for by him, the same shall be given by such person ; and the requisition so made, or any directions so given by an inspector, may, if not carried out by the owner, be so by the inspector at the owner's expense, and recovered in any competent court.

PART B.—INTRODUCTION OF AUSTRALASIAN STOCK.

II. GENERAL re ALL AUSTRALASIAN STOCK.

Stock not to be introduced from a colony where disease has existed during the periods stated in Form G.

17. No stock shall be introduced from any Australasian Colony in which any of the same kind of stock, or any stock liable to the same diseases, but of a different kind to such first-mentioned stock, are infected, or have, within the respective periods specified in Form G hereto, been infected with any of the diseases therein mentioned. Provided, however, that if the infected stock, other than sheep infected with scab, in any portion of such colony, are so closely isolated and quarantined that the infection has not, nor cannot spread beyond such portion, and if the proper authorities in such colony shall certify to that effect, and that the stock intended to be introduced have not been in direct, nor in indirect contact with stock infected with any such disease, the Minister may authorise the admission of such stock from those portions of such colony as are free from infection, subject to inspection and such isolation or quarantine and disinfection or dressing as may be necessary. Provided also that the provisions of this Regulation shall not apply in the case of outbreaks of disease in any quarantine for foreign stock, nor in the case of cattle infected with, but not actually affected with pleuro-pneumonia, tuberculosis, actinomycosis, or anthrax, nor of any sheep infected, but not affected with the last-mentioned disease.

III. INTERCHANGE OF AUSTRALASIAN STOCK BY LAND.

18. The places notified in the Gazette shall be the crossing-places at which stock shall be introduced into this Colony ; and no stock, except under special circumstances, of which the Chief Inspector shall be the judge, shall be introduced into this Colony by land at any place, not being one of the places notified in the Gazette, at which stock may be introduced.

Owner to give notice of his intention to cross stock.

19. Every person intending to introduce any horses or cattle other than horses or cattle in actual work, or to introduce any sheep, shall give the inspector at the crossing-place at which it is intended to enter this Colony, not less than twenty-four hours, nor more than fourteen days' notice in writing, stating the day and hour when it is intended to cross such stock, to the effect of Form H hereto.

Conditions on which stock may be introduced by land.

20. No stock other than working horses or cattle bona-fide in work shall be introduced until the inspector examining them shall have received a declaration or travelling statement made and signed by the owner thereof, and supported, when required, by the certificate of an inspector in the colony whence such stock are brought, in the form or to the effect of Form I hereto ; and until the Inspector is satisfied as to the number of such stock, and that they are not infected with any of the diseases mentioned in Form C hereto, and shall have granted a permit for the admission thereof to the effect of Form J hereto. Provided that any one or more of the requirements of this and the next preceding Regulation may, where it is considered there is no risk in taking that course, be suspended by notification in the Gazette in regard to any kind of stock specified in the notification coming into this colony from any other Australasian colony by land.

Sheep to be branded before introduction.

21. All sheep intended to be introduced into this Colony shall, before crossing the border, be legibly branded, as the case may be, with the letter if the sheep are from , with the letter if they are from , and with the letter if they are from .

IV.

IV. INTRODUCTION OF AUSTRALASIAN STOCK BY SEA.

1.—General re Australasian Imported Stock.

What shall be deemed a clean colony.

22. Any Australasian Colony shall, as regards any particular kind of stock, be deemed a clean colony if the introduction of that kind of stock, or of stock of a different kind, but liable to be infected with the same disease, is not prohibited from such colony in terms No. 17 of these Regulations, nor with respect to which there are any grounds for prohibiting the introduction of any such stock; and no stock shall be introduced into this Colony by sea but from a clean colony, except as prescribed by No. 17 of these Regulations.

What shall be deemed a clean vessel.

23. When the question is raised with respect to any particular kind of stock, whether or not the vessel by which such stock are intended to be conveyed, or have been conveyed, is a clean vessel, then it shall be held and deemed that such vessel is not a clean vessel,—

- (I) If any of such stock have been put on board such vessel at any port or place not being a port or place in a clean Australasian Colony.
- (II) If within the next preceding three months such vessel shall have traded to or called at any place not in a clean Australasian Colony.
- (III) If such vessel shall during that time have had on board any infected stock of the same kind, or stock of another kind, but liable to be infected with the same disease or diseases as such first mentioned stock.
- (IV) If such vessel shall during that time have carried any stock, or the carcass, or skin, or any other portion of the carcass of any stock from any place not in a clean Australasian Colony, or,—
- (V) If such vessel shall have received on board any stock or skins, or any fodder or fittings from a vessel which is not a clean Australasian vessel.

And the exporter of stock shall, in every case, produce to the inspector examining the same a certificate that the vessel by which such stock are to be exported is a clean vessel in terms of this Regulation. And no stock shall be introduced by sea but by a clean vessel, except as specially provided by No. 17 of these Regulations, and in accordance with the Regulations relating to foreign stock.

Master of Australasian vessel to make declaration on arrival.

24. Upon the arrival, or within twelve hours thereafter, of any Australasian vessel, the master thereof shall deliver to the officer of Customs first boarding his vessel, a declaration to the effect of Form K hereto, made as provided in the next preceding Regulation; and if there are any stock on board any such vessel with respect to which the master shall have failed to make the required declaration, then such stock shall be detained and dealt with as the Minister shall direct.

Declaration and certificate to be produced to inspector examining stock.

25. If an owner intends to import any Australasian stock into this Colony, he shall deliver to the inspector examining the same a declaration duly certified by the inspector of the port from which such stock were shipped to the effect of Form L hereto.

Infected Australasian stock, how to be disposed of.

26. If any Australasian stock shall be found on arrival, or on being landed, to be actually affected with any of the diseases mentioned in Form C hereto, except horses affected with influenza, such stock shall be destroyed, and stock infected, but not actually affected, shall be destroyed or otherwise disposed of, as the Minister shall direct, and no compensation shall be paid to the owner of any stock so destroyed.

If found free from infection, stock, other than sheep, to be allowed to land.

27. If the owner of any Australasian stock other than sheep, brought to a port or place in this Colony shall produce to the inspector a declaration and certificate to the effect of Form L hereto, and if the stock be found on examination by him to be free from infection, he may grant permission for the same to be landed in terms of Form E hereto, without which such stock shall not be landed, except Australasian horses and dogs, as provided in the two next succeeding Regulations.

2. Imported Australasian Horses and Dogs.

Australasian horses and dogs accompanied by declaration and certificate may be landed on permit of Customs officer.

28. All Australasian horses and dogs imported into this Colony, if they are found on arrival to be free from infection, and are accompanied by a declaration duly certified by the inspector for the port from which they were shipped, to the effect of Form L hereto, may be landed on the permit in writing of the officer of Customs put in charge of the vessels by which such horses or dogs are so imported.

Australasian horses and dogs not accompanied by declaration, &c., to be examined by an Inspector, and pay fee.

29. If Australasian horses or dogs imported from any Australasian Colony are not accompanied by a declaration and certificate, as prescribed by the next preceding Regulation, such horses and dogs, although found to be free from infection, shall not be landed until the owner of each lot of horses or dogs, as the case may be, shall have made a declaration as aforesaid and shall have paid to the Inspector examining them a fee of 5s. for inspecting such horses or dogs.

3. Conditions on which imported Australasian sheep are introduced.

They may in certain cases be admitted without dipping.

30. (i) Australasian sheep may be admitted into this Colony without quarantine or dipping on the following conditions, namely:—

- (1.) That they are landed at the port of
- (2.) That they are not infected, and that they are from a clean Australasian Colony, as prescribed by Nos. 17 and 22 of these Regulations.
- (3.) That the vessel by which they arrive is, in terms of No. 23 of these Regulations, a clean Australasian vessel, and with respect to which the master shall have made a declaration to the effect of Form K hereto.
- (4.) That the part of the vessel on which the sheep are penned has been specially cleansed, as the inspector at the port of shipment shall direct.
- (5.) That the sheep have during the voyage been in the charge of their owner or of his servant.
- (6.) That they are accompanied by a declaration and certificate to the effect of Form L hereto.

And if the inspector examining such sheep is satisfied that these conditions have been duly complied with, and that the sheep are not infected, he may, but not otherwise, grant permission, to the effect of Form E hereto, for their being landed without quarantine and dipping.

Australasian sheep in certain cases admitted, subject to quarantine and dipping.

(ii) Should any Australasian sheep be imported into this Colony otherwise than as prescribed by Nos. 3 and 4 of the preceding Regulation, or should they arrive from a clean colony by an Australasian vessel, which is not a clean vessel, or should any declaration, certificate, or other document required by these Regulations with respect to such sheep, be wanting on their arrival—then such sheep, if they are found on inspection to be apparently free from infection, may, with the sanction of the Minister, be removed in a conveyance to quarantine, and there kept and dressed, or otherwise disposed of, as the Minister shall direct.

Clean Australasian sheep imported into another colony may be introduced into this.

(iii) Sheep imported from any clean Australasian Colony by a clean vessel into any other clean colony, and intended to be introduced overland into this Colony, may be admitted, if their owner produce to the inspector for this Colony at the border a certificate under the hand of an Inspector for the colony from which they are intended to be introduced, to the effect that when such sheep were imported into that colony they were certified to be free from infection by an inspector of the colony from which they were imported, and that such sheep have been once dipped, as required by No. II of this Regulation, unless they shall have been brought under No. I hereof, and are thereby exempt from dipping; but all such sheep, unless they have been imported, and where prescribed quarantined and dressed as herein provided, shall, on crossing the border, be placed in quarantine, and kept and dipped in the same manner in every respect as prescribed with regard to Australasian imported sheep required to be dipped hereunder.

4. Miscellaneous re Australasian Imported Stock.

Australasian stock not to be transhipped without the written permission of an inspector.

31. No one shall, in any river, port, or harbour, or elsewhere in any of the waters of this Colony, transfer any Australasian stock from any vessel to any other vessel, without the written authority of an inspector, and in accordance with such authority neither shall the master of any vessel allow any stock to stray from his vessel, or to be removed therefrom, without the written authority of an inspector.

Australasian stock on a foreign vessel.

32. No Australasian stock shall be taken on board any foreign vessel except to be landed at a foreign port, and no person in charge of any foreign vessel shall allow any Australasian stock not intended to be taken to any foreign port to be taken or to go on board any foreign vessel, and all Australasian stock taken or being on board a foreign vessel shall be treated and dealt with as foreign stock.

Foreign Stock not to be put on board nor transhipped to an Australasian vessel.

33. No foreign stock, unless they shall have performed the quarantine hereby prescribed, and with respect to which all the other provisions of these Regulations shall have been duly carried out, shall be put on board or transhipped to any Australasian vessel; and if any foreign stock shall be brought by sea by an Australasian vessel which shall not have performed the prescribed quarantine and been duly certified to be free from infection, then such stock shall, for the purpose of these regulations, be deemed to have been shipped at the place whence the same were originally brought, and such vessel shall for three months thereafter be held and deemed to be a foreign vessel.

APPENDICES.

APPENDIX A.

RECOMMENDATIONS not within the scope of the resolutions of the Australasian Stock Conference of 1889:—

Regulation No. 4.

That "influenza" and "mange" in horses, and "ticks" and "lice" in sheep, be added to the list of diseases to be dealt with under these Regulations.

Regulation No. 6.

That, as regards the interpretation of the term "clean Australasian vessel," the word "three" be substituted for "six." That, as regards the interpretation of the term "stock," it should include "or the carcass, skin, wool, hair, horns, hoofs, or any portion of such stock."

Regulation No. 30. (1).

(4.) That the part of a vessel on which the sheep are penned has been specially cleansed, as the Inspector at the port of shipment shall direct. (5.) That the sheep have, during the voyage, been in charge of the owner or his servants.

Regulation No. 50.

That the quarantine for sheep be reduced to sixty days, and that swine (at present prohibited) be admitted on a quarantine of ninety days.

APPENDIX B.

THE ESTABLISHMENT OF AN AUSTRALASIAN STOCK INSTITUTE.

At the Intercolonial Stock Conference held in Melbourne in November, 1889, a resolution was unanimously passed to the following effect:—

41. That this Conference affirms—(a.) The desirability of establishing a laboratory or institution for the purpose of investigating and experimenting upon any diseases to which stock are or may become liable, particularly, in the first instances, pleuro-pneumonia, anthrax, and tuberculosis. (b.) That the institution be a permanent one, and to be supported by the respective Colonies becoming parties to the arrangement pro rata, according to the number of stock, sheep, cattle, and horses returned for the year preceding the assessment. (c.) That a permanent Board of Direction be formed, to be composed of members to be appointed by the Government of each contributing Colony. (d.) That a competent European scientist be engaged as Director, who shall deliver an annual course of lectures to students, and who shall be allowed to charge fees for so doing. (e.) That the laboratory or institution shall be called the Australasian Stock Institute, and that it be located in the Colony of New South Wales.

As this resolution was quite in accord with the views held by my Minister, the Honorable Sydney Smith, Secretary for Mines and Agriculture, he was prepared, on the receipt of a copy of the Report and Proceedings of the Conference in June last, to take the necessary action to give effect to it, so far as this Colony was concerned; but he delayed doing so pending receipt of the usual letter from Victoria, the Colony in which the Conference was held, asking how far this and the other Colonies were prepared to carry out the resolutions of the Conference.

As, however, several of the other resolutions of the Conference are also very urgent, as well as very important, and as up to April last no communication of the nature indicated had been received from Victoria, my Minister then decided to invite the other Colonies to take action in regard to this and the other resolutions referred to, and hence the present meeting.

I will now proceed, as briefly as I can, to lay before you such particulars as I think will enable you to enter on the discussion of this most important matter, and will help in some degree at least to assist in arriving at a decision with respect to the recommendations which we will submit to our respective Governments in regard to it.

In carrying out this course, I will notice very briefly—

- I. The importance of the interest which this institution is proposed to serve.
- II. The work done in the Pasteur's Institute in Paris.
- III. The site on which the institute should be erected.
- IV. The kind of building which will be required.
- V. The work which should be done at the institute.
- VI. The subjects which should be taught.
- VII. The cost to each Colony.
- VIII. The Board of management, and—
 1. Its constitution.
 2. The meetings of the Board.
 3. The election of a chairman and appointment of a secretary.
 4. The site of the institute, and plan of the building.
 5. The appointment of a scientist.
 6. The regular work to be done at the institute.
 7. Urgent work called for.
 8. Visits of scientist to the country when necessary.
 9. The number of pupils, course of training, and fees
 10. Apparatus and appliances for the institute.

I. THE IMPORTANCE OF THE ANIMAL INDUSTRY OF THE AUSTRALASIAN COLONIES.

The accompanying statement, marked "A," copied from Mr. Coghlan's statistical account of the seven Colonies of Australasia, shows that in the beginning of 1890—

The capital invested in pastoral properties in Australasia amounted to.....	£417,000,000
Of this sum the value of the live stock alone amounted to	£75,000,000
And that the annual return for the pastoral industry amounted to	£34,745,300

The figures speak for themselves, and since then there has been a considerable increase in stock in all the Colonies. In New South Wales alone there has been an increase of 13,386 horses, 167,417 cattle, and 5,000,000 sheep.

II. THE WORK DONE IN PASTEUR'S INSTITUTE, PARIS.

I understand that the work in the Pasteur's Institute, of which M. Pasteur is the Director-General, is divided into five parts.

1. The rabies treatment, at the head of which is Doctor Grancher.
2. Technic microbiology, which is taught by M. Roux. The majority of the students belong to or are studying for the medical or veterinary professions, with a fair number who are following up some branch of science. The course of study includes, among other subjects, the following :—
 - (I) The description and nature of microbes. (II) The preparation of the broth and other media in which they are grown. (III) Typhoid Fever. (IV) Cholera. (V) Intermittent fever. (VI) Septicæmia. (VII) Anthrax. (VIII) Chicken cholera. (IX) Tuberculosis. (X) Swine fever. (XI) Actinomycosis. (XII) Glanders. (XIII) Hydrophobia. (XIV) Yeast; and some twelve or fourteen other subjects.
3. A set of laboratories, where students, after becoming acquainted with microbiology, may stay and make personal researches under the direction of M. Mitchnicof in regard to subjects which have not been fully investigated. These laboratories are also open, at a charge of £4 or £5 a month to scientists from any part of the world who may wish to work in the Institute under the directors.
4. A laboratory, at the head of which is M. Duclaux, for the study of beer and cider and of fermentation generally, including that of wine, and also the making of cheese and the preservation of milk.
5. A laboratory, in which M. Chamberland has to prepare the vaccine of anthrax and swine fever, and in which he has to make analyses of pathologic products of diseases, the nature of which veterinary surgeons cannot exactly determine clinically or by post mortem, and which they wish to have settled by microscopical examination.

III. THE SITE OF THE INSTITUTE.

As the Institute is to be an Intercolonial Institution, it should, I think be in or near Syd the metropolis of the Colony. Indeed, the best site in my opinion is the University Reserve, as there is no doubt the Institute would be largely availed of by the medical students, while in other respects both as regards this and the other colonies no more convenient or accessible site could be found.

IV. BUILDING TO BE ERECTED.

I submit the accompanying rough sketch marked "B" (on the model of a portion of the Pasteur Institute, Paris), showing the accommodation which I think would be required, and the mode in which it should be arranged.

The proposed Board would decide as to this, as well as to the description of building which should be erected.

V. THE WORK TO BE DONE AT THE INSTITUTE.

The work to be done by the scientist would principally be like that done by M. Chamberland, and he would among other things make analyses of pathological products of diseases, the nature of which medical men and veterinary surgeons could not exactly determine clinically nor by post mortem examination. He would prepare the vaccine of diseases; such as Cumberland disease, black-leg, pleuro-pneumonia, tuberculosis, &c., and prosecute researches in regard to diseases and subjects which require investigation.

VI. THE SUBJECTS WHICH SHOULD BE TAUGHT AT THE INSTITUTE.

The principal subjects taught would be technic microbiology, and the course of study would include among other subjects the following :—

- (1.) The description and nature of microbes.
- (2.) The preparation of the broth and other media in which they are grown.
- (3.) Septicæmia.
- (4.) Anthrax.
- (5.) Chicken cholera.
- (6.) Tuberculosis.
- (7.) Swine fever.
- (8.) Actinomycosis.
- (9.) Glanders.
- (10.) Hydrophobia.
- (11.) Yeast.

VII.

VII. ESTIMATED COST OF THE BUILDING, FURNITURE, AND APPLIANCES, AND OF THE ANNUAL EXPENSE OF THE INSTITUTE.

It will be seen on reference to statement "C" herewith that the cost of the building, which need not at first be a very large one, nor very ornamental, is put at £4,000, and the furniture and appliances at £1,300, while the annual outlay for salaries and other expenses is estimated at £1,700.

This would make the outlay for the first year £7,000, and for the second and subsequent years say £1,700.

Statement "C" also gives the proportions of this outlay payable by each of the Colonies, as proposed by the Conference, pro rata according to the number of stock severally owned by them.

VIII. THE BOARD OF MANAGEMENT.

1. Its Constitution.

I would suggest that the Board of Management should consist of two members from each Colony, say a stock-owner chosen by his fellow owners and the Chief Inspector of Stock for the Colony.

2. Meetings of Board and Quorum.

The meetings of the Board, which should at first at least be held quarterly, would be conducted under the usual rules for the guidance of such bodies. Three members to form a quorum.

3. The Election of Chairman, and appointment of Secretary.

The Board would, at its first meeting, elect its own Chairman, and appoint a consulting veterinary surgeon; and there would, of course, be a Secretary appointed for the Board.

4. Site of Institute, and ground plan of building.

The Board would, at its first meeting, take into consideration and report upon the best site for the Institute, and decide upon and submit a plan of the building, and showing how the Board think the accommodation should be arranged.

5. Appointment of Scientist.

The Board would also at an early meeting make arrangements for the appointment of a Scientist, in terms of the resolution of the Conference. The Scientist to be the Director of the Institute.

6. The regular work to be done.

At the first business meeting after the opening of the Institute, the Chairman would submit a statement of the regular work to be undertaken at the Institute for settlement by the Board; and at the following meeting he would bring up a report by the Scientist of the work done by him in the interval, and a statement of new work which he proposed should be taken up by the Scientist; but nothing to be given to the public until the inquiry with respect to it is fully completed.

7. Urgent Work.

The Scientist would, as a rule, be occupied at the work laid out by the Board, but it should be understood that he would, with the concurrence of a majority of its members, take up any urgent work asked for by any of the contributing Colonies.

8. Scientist at times to visit Country.

The Scientist, with the like consent, should also be allowed to visit any place in any of the Colonies for the purpose of making necessary investigations on the spot.

9. Pupils at the Institute.

The Board would decide as to the number of pupils to be received at the Institute, the course of study, and the fees to be paid by the pupils to the Director.

10. Apparatus and Appliances.

Apparatus, appliances, chemicals, and animals for experiment would be obtained on the requisition of the Scientist, and approval of the Board.

ALEX. BRUCE.

OBTAINING the use of Rodd Island and temporary engagement of Mons. Loir, pending erection of Institute and appointment of a full staff:—

WHILE I have endeavoured to pave the way to a full discussion on Resolution No. 41 of the last Inter-colonial Stock Conference, with regard to the establishment of an Intercolonial Stock Institute in Sydney, which, I trust, will result in the preparation of such a report as will lead to the resolution being acted on by all the Colonies, it should be borne in mind that considerable time must elapse before the necessary buildings can be erected and are ready for occupation; and as there is a great deal of work of a character which can only be undertaken by such an Institute, urgently requiring to be done, I would submit, for the consideration of the meeting, whether, in the event of the use of the laboratory on Rodd Island being obtained, a temporary arrangement might not be made with Mons. Loir, under which a commencement might be at once made with the work of the nature contemplated by the resolution.

Mons.

Mons. Loir is now engaged on Rodd Island experimenting for the Queensland Government, as to the best means of procuring and preserving the virus of pleuro-pneumonia, and searching for the microbe of that disease.

There is no question as to Mons. Loir's qualifications as a scientist; and this proposal, if acted on, would have the double advantage of at once meeting the urgent necessity for the appointment of a scientist, and of entering on the undertaking in respect to the Institute in a gradual way, while Mons. Loir would be prepared at once to receive pupils from the contributing Colonies on reasonable terms.

ALEX. BRUCE.

A.

It is estimated that the capital invested in pastoral properties throughout Australasia amounts to £417,000,000, and of this sum the value of stock alone represents £75,000,000. The annual return from pastoral pursuits, including dairy-farming, is £34,745,300, the share of each Colony in the production being:—

New South Wales	£14,725,300
Victoria	4,920,500
Queensland	5,678,900
South Australia	2,054,600
Western Australia.....	535,800
Tasmania	561,400
New Zealand	6,218,800
Australasia	£34,745,300

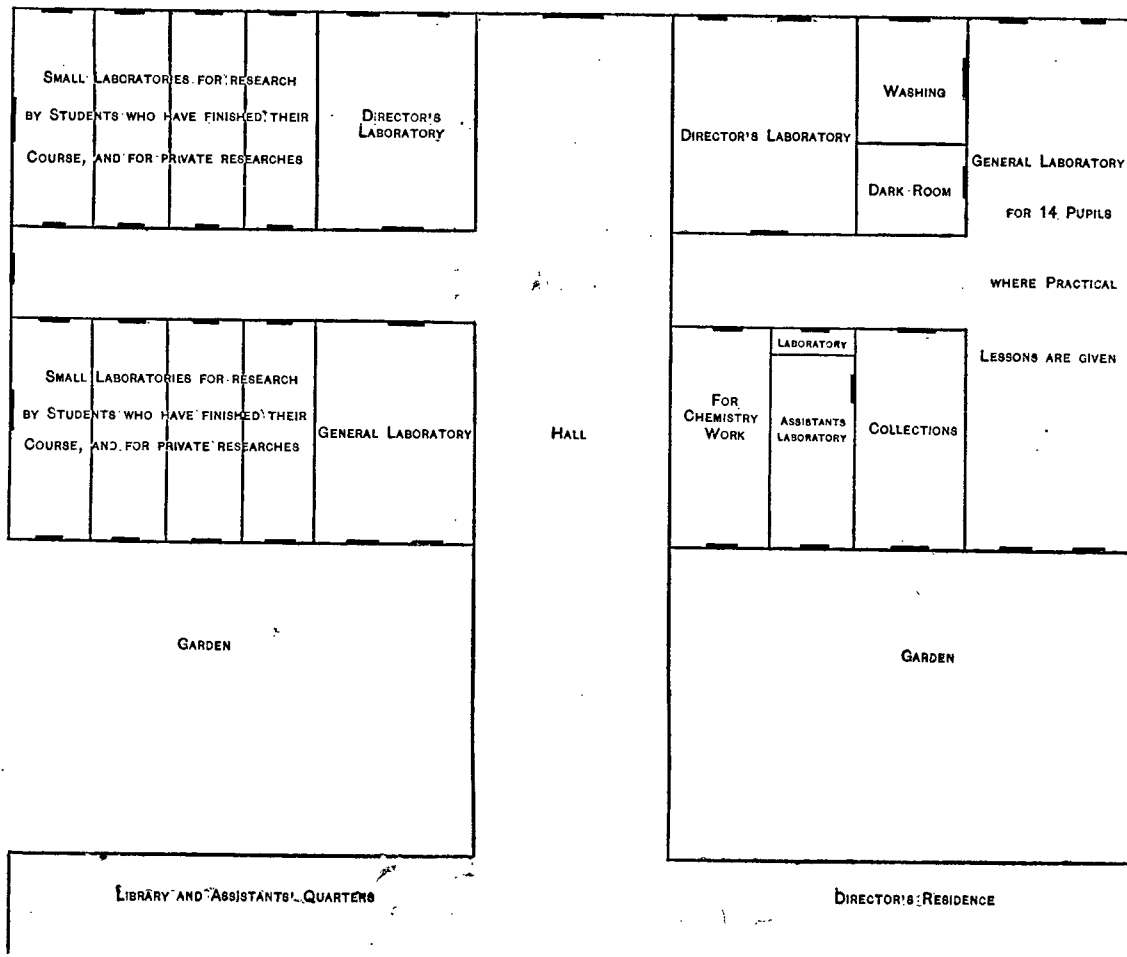

It is to be understood that the products of dairy cattle and swine are not included in the above statement, and that the value of agricultural produce consumed on dairy-farms, and for fattening stock, has also been deducted from the totals.

AUSTRALASIAN STOCK INSTITUTE.

Laboratory referred to as No. 3.

Laboratory referred to as No. 2.

NOTE.—Building about 170 feet x 80 feet.

ESTIMATE

C.

ESTIMATE of cost of building for Intercolonial Stock Institute, and of probable annual working expenses.

First Year.
Cost of building as per plan with only ground-floor, say.....		£4,000
Cost of furniture and apparatus		1,300
		£5,300
Professor of Microbiology.....	£800
(Besides this the Professor would receive fees from students, say £100, and for outside work, say £50=£150, making his salary, say £950.)
Subjects and travelling expenses, chemicals, &c.	400
Wages and incidental expenses	500	1,700
		£7,000

Taking the above sum, £7,000, as approximately correct, the amount to be contributed by the several colonies pro rata according to the number of stock, would be as follows, namely:—

Cost of building and first year's expenses.

Colony.	Sheep— Millions.	Percentage.	Contribution.
			First Year.	Second and subsequent Year.
New South Wales	68	34	2,404	584.
Victoria.....	25	12½	884	215
Queensland	63	32	2,227	541
South Australia	10	5	354	85
Tasmania	3	1½	106	26
Western Australia	4	2	141	34
New Zealand	25	12½	884	215
	*198	100	7,000	1,700

* This includes cattle calculated at 1 head of cattle equal to 10 sheep.

This is equal to 8½d. per 1,000 sheep for the first year.

Second and subsequent years.

Directors salary	£800
Travelling expenses, chemicals, &c.	400
Wages and incidental expenses	500
	£1,700

This is equal to say 2⅓d. per 1,000 sheep for the second year.

C 3.

The Premier of Victoria to The Honorable The Colonial Secretary, Sydney.

Sir,

Premier's Office, Melbourne 12 June, 1891.

I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 13th ultimo, asking that the Chief Inspector of Stock might be allowed to attend a meeting of inspectors from the various colonies, to be held in Sydney on the 15th instant, for the purpose of framing a uniform code of Stock Regulations for all the colonies, and for the preparation of a report on the proposed Intercolonial Stock Institute.

2. The copies of the various papers which accompanied your letter, together with the draft code of Regulations prepared by Mr. Bruce, the Chief Inspector of Stock for New South Wales, having been very carefully considered by the Honorable the Minister for Agriculture.

3. I regret to inform you that this Government does not see any necessity at the present time for the holding of another Conference of Stock Inspectors.

4. At the Conference held in Melbourne in November, 1889, it was agreed that a uniform code of regulations embodying the resolutions passed by that Conference, should be adopted by all the colonies, and that the framing of such Regulations should be left in the hands of this Government. Regulations were framed accordingly, a copy being forwarded to you on the 5th of March, 1890, and it was left optional with each colony to adopt or reject the whole or any part of such Regulations.

5. It is not clear that there is anything to be gained by such a uniformity in procedure and phraseology as it is one of the objects of the proposed Conference to establish, and it is questionable if such uniformity could be adopted by the various colonies, seeing that each has to be guided by its own laws. Mr. Bruce states indeed, that, as the law stands in New South Wales, some of the Regulations which he proposes could not be carried out; it seems, therefore, premature to adopt such Regulations.

6. If, however, the same provisions as to importation, prohibition, period of quarantine, and intercolonial exchange be established, all that is necessary will, it is thought be accomplished.

7. Mr. Bruce admits that there is very little difference between the requirements of the Regulations in force in the several colonies, and under the circumstances, the Minister for Agriculture of this Colony is of opinion that each colony may well be allowed to settle such small differences.

8. One of the objects of the proposed Conference appears to me to discuss the question of the number and qualifications of the staff of inspectors to be maintained in each colony. This, however, is a matter with regard to which each colony is probably the best judge as to its requirements.

9. As regards the establishment of an institution for the investigation of animal diseases, it is thought by this Government that the first preliminary should be to ascertain what expenses in connection therewith are likely to be incurred, and then whether the several colonies would be willing to share those expenses. Until a preliminary understanding on these points is come to, the discussion of details seems to be premature.

10. I trust it will be apparent that there are substantial reasons for the conclusion of this Government not to be represented at the proposed Conference.

11. As requested in your telegram of the 9th instant, I beg to return herewith the draft code of Regulations forwarded with your letter of the 13th ultimo.

I have, &c.,
JAMES MUNRO.

C 5.

Messrs. Brunker and Wolfe to The Chief Inspector of Stock, Sydney.

Sir,

9, Castlereagh-street, Sydney, 16 June, 1891.

For some weeks past sheepskins have been prevented from being landed from foreign vessels trading from this port to New Caledonia, Fiji, and to the northward.

Hitherto it has been the custom to supply the steamers or vessels with sheep for the round voyage, and the skins of the sheep are saved and sold generally to fellmongers on the return of vessel to port.

We beg to bring this matter under your notice with a view of its being dealt with in such manner as will enable the skins to be landed in future, and prevent loss to parties concerned.

Yours, &c.,
BRUNKER AND WOLFE.

STOCK.

(PROGRESS RETURN OF, FOR 1891.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be printed, 4 February, 1892.

Department of Mines and Agriculture, Stock Branch, 3 February, 1892.

THESE Returns are compiled principally from Returns received and partly from the Inspector's Estimates of the Returns of Stock, Lambing and Clip for 1891, and shows the Increase of Stock as compared with the previous year.

		No. OF STOCK.
1892.		Horses.	Cattle.	Sheep.
Total of Stock returned	440,744	1,960,619	59,345,072
Estimated total of Stock not yet returned	18,472	55,944	1,443,832
Grand total returned and estimated at 1st January, 1892	459,216	2,016,563	60,788,904
Grand total as per Annual Report at 1st January, 1891	444,163	1,909,009	55,986,431
<hr/>
Increase	15,053	107,554	4,802,473
<hr/>

These returns are very satisfactory, showing, as they do, a general increase, although perhaps not so large in the case of sheep as might have been expected. This, however, is accounted for by the loss of lambs through cold and continuous rain during the lambing season, prevalence of worms, fluke, and foot-rot, and, especially in the western portion of the Colony, through the devastations caused by rabbits.

ESTIMATE OF LAMBING.

Average 68½ per cent.

ESTIMATE OF THE CLIP.

Lambs shorn in grease... .. average 1 lb. 14½ oz.
 Sheep " " " 5 lb. 10¾ oz.

DISEASES IN SHEEP ACTS OF 1866, 1878, AND 1882.
(ADDITIONAL REGULATION.)

Presented to Parliament, pursuant to Act 30 Vic. No. 16, sec. 77.

Department of Mines and Agriculture, Stock Branch,
Sydney, 22 January, 1892.

DISEASES IN SHEEP ACTS of 1866, 1878, AND 1882.

HIS Excellency the Governor, with the advice of the Executive Council, has been pleased to approve of the following additional Regulation for carrying into effect the provisions of the abovenamed Acts, which is hereby published for general information:—

“Way Bills” for Sheep and “Delivery Notes” for Cattle issued in Queensland to be accepted in New South Wales.

Whenever any sheep or cattle are introduced into this Colony from the Colony of Queensland, and they are accompanied with a “Way Bill” in the case of sheep, or a “Delivery Note” in the case of cattle, as prescribed by the law for the time being in force with regard to the travelling of sheep and cattle in Queensland, such Way Bill or Delivery Note shall be accepted for such sheep or cattle in lieu of, and shall for the purposes of the said Acts be deemed to be, the “Travelling Statement” required by the abovenamed Acts.

Message No. 27.

In accordance with the provisions contained in the 54th section of the Constitution Act, the Governor recommends for the consideration of the Legislative Assembly the expediency of making provision to meet the requisite expenses in connection with a Bill to amend and extend the provisions of certain Acts relating to diseases in sheep; to create a Central Board with certain powers and authorities, and for purposes incidental thereto.

DISEASES IN SHEEP ACT AMENDMENT BILL—
PASTURES AND STOCK PROTECTION ACT.

(PETITION FROM CERTAIN SHEEP FARMERS AND STOCK OWNERS IN THE TENTERFIELD DISTRICT, AGAINST THE BILL, AND FOR THE REPEAL OF THE PASTURES AND STOCK PROTECTION ACT).

Received by the Legislative Assembly, 1. March, 1892.

To the Honorable the Members of the Legislative Assembly of New South Wales in Parliament assembled.

The Petition of the undersigned Sheep Farmers and Stock Owners in the District of Tenterfield,—

RESPECTFULLY SHOWETH:—

That your Petitioners view with alarm the passing of the Bill now before Parliament, granting powers to a central Board of Directors elected under the provisions of the amended "Diseases in Sheep" and "Pastures and Stock Protection" Acts in permitting them to impose a further tax on sheep to subsidise private companies formed for the exportation of meat.

That such a tax will prove burdensome to many small sheep farmers who cannot possibly benefit from the proposed imposition.

That your Petitioners already are called upon to pay annually a tax under the Pastures and Stock Protection Act for which they derive no adequate benefit.

That owing to the high prices ruling in the market for marsupial skins, there is ample remuneration provided to shooters for the destruction of marsupials, without the additional payment for scalps.

That many pastoralists at present protect marsupials by not allowing shooters to go upon their runs to destroy them without paying them a percentage on the skins obtained.

Your Petitioners would therefore humbly pray that your Honorable House will not allow the Bill "to amend and extend the provisions of certain Acts relating to Diseases in Sheep, to create a Central Board with certain powers and authorities, and for purposes incidental thereto," to become law; and that the present Pastures and Stock Protection Act be repealed.

And your Petitioners, as in duty bound, will ever pray, &c.

NOXIOUS ANIMALS IN THE COLONY.

(RETURN RESPECTING.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be printed, 14 December, 1891.

[Laid upon the Table of the House in answer to Question No. 3 of 2 December, 1891.]

Question.

(3.) NOXIOUS ANIMALS IN THE COLONY:—Dr. ROSS asked THE SECRETARY FOR MINES,—

(1.) What method do the Stock Department adopt in order to ascertain the exact number of noxious animals alleged to be infesting the Colony, viz., kangaroo, wallaby, native dogs, rabbits, hares, &c.; or are the statistics furnished in the Annual Report simply the result of an estimation?

(2.) Will he have any objection to furnish a tabulated Return, showing the number of such noxious animals in each stock district respectively, and how such animals exist and become more troublesome in some districts than in others?

(3.) The amount of money that is collected and expended annually in the destruction of these noxious animals in each district respectively; and out of what fund is the money paid?

(4.) Can he state definitely or approximately the number of hares infesting the Molong District, and the amount contributed and annually expended in the district for their destruction?

Answer.

(1.) The numbers of the noxious animals given in the reports are estimates made by the inspectors for the several sheep districts, and it is not, of course, to be assumed that the numbers are put forward as more than approximations. Instead of vague expressions, such as "a few," "numerous," "very numerous," &c., which may mean anything, and which tend to uncertainty and doubt, inspectors are instructed to give their estimates in numbers.

(2.) A tabulated Return is herewith, giving inspectors' estimates of animals in each district in 1890. The reason why these animals are more numerous in some districts than in others is that the country is better adapted for them, and perhaps also through neglect on the part of owners to destroy them, and the fact that the Boards seldom prosecute owners for such neglect.

(3.) The amount of money collected and expended in each district is also shown in the Return. The funds for carrying out the Act are raised in the district, but are subsidised to a small extent from the Consolidated Revenue.

(4.) I cannot state definitely, but the estimate of the inspector for the Molong District for 1890, is 120,000 hares. (See Return.) Prior to the year 1891 there was no bonus paid by the Molong Board. From January to June this year 10,789 hare scalps were paid for at 2d. each, amounting to £89 19s. 8d.

These answers do not apply to rabbits which are now dealt with under a separate Act.

Rabbits do not come under the provisions of Pastures Act.

* Prior to January, 1891, hares were not destroyed by the Board. From January to June, 1891, the number killed and paid for was 10,798, which at 2d. per scalp amounted to £89 19s. 8d.

† Up to the end of 1890 this district formed part of the Casino and Grafton Districts, consequently the particulars given above for Grafton and Casino will include that for the Tweed-Lismore District.

PASTEUR'S VACCINE LYMPH.

(RETURN RESPECTING.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be printed, 14 December, 1891.[Laid upon the Table of the House in answer to Question No. 4, of 2 December, 1891.]

Question.

(4.) PASTEUR'S VACCINE LYMPH.—DR. ROSS asked THE SECRETARY FOR MINES,—

(1.) In attempting to stamp out anthrax among sheep, by treating or vaccinating them with Pasteur's vaccine lymph, will he ascertain if there is any risk in producing or establishing cancer or tuberculosis in such flocks after having undergone the operation, as has resulted in cattle after having been inoculated with virus for pleuro-pneumonia?

(2.) Has the use of Pasteur's vaccine in anthrax proved a success or failure; the number that have been vaccinated; and the percentage of deaths that have occurred after the operation, compared with those that have not been vaccinated?

(3.) In what districts or runs has the operation been chiefly confined?

(4.) Has the alleged prevalence of cancer among stock of late years been brought under the notice of the Department, and can it be accounted for?

(5.) Can he state definitely or approximately the number of sheep that die annually in the Colony from anthrax; and how is the information obtained.

(6.) Has he any information as to whether the disease called anthrax is contagious or non-contagious, and how long has it existed in the Colony, and what steps (if any) have been taken for its eradication, and is it now on the increase or decrease?

(7.) Does he not consider the repeated prevalence and outbreak of virulent diseases among our herds and flocks as anthrax, pleuro, worms, mange, glanders, and farcy, &c., a sufficient indication and warning of the urgent necessity for the establishment of a Veterinary School of medicine in the Colony; and will he see that some steps are taken on this important question, affecting public health, and that a sufficient sum of money is placed on the Estimates for this purpose?

Answer.

(1.) The vaccine of anthrax is a pure cultivation of the microbes of the disease. Therefore it is impossible to communicate either cancer or tuberculosis by such vaccination.

(2.) The sheep-owners who used the vaccine last year appear satisfied with the remedy, as they used it on their lambs this season. The number of sheep vaccinated in 1890 was 193,098, and it is reported that some 80,000 have been treated during this year. It is impossible to give the percentage of deaths of sheep which have been vaccinated compared with those which have not; but I may say that the reported loss of vaccinated sheep in 1890 was a little over 5 per cent.

(3.) To the runs in the known infected districts, and those only.

(4.) Cancer has for many years been known to be prevalent among cattle, though little or no notice was taken of it. Now, however, the effect of these and other diseases in stock on the human subject is receiving more consideration, and this disease is brought more under notice.

(5.) No. Owners are very reticent on the subject, and it is only occasionally that reliable information is obtained in regard to losses from anthrax.

6. Anthrax is a contagious disease. It has existed in the Colony for over 50 years. Until the recent vaccination with Pasteur's Vaccine of Anthrax, no steps have been taken to eradicate the disease beyond burning the carcasses and pastures when practicable. It is not known whether the disease is increasing or decreasing, as owners are not obliged to give notice of out-breaks.

7. Yes. The establishment of such a school is under consideration.

Questions.

- (14.) GRANTS IN AID OF AGRICULTURAL SOCIETIES:—MR. STEVENSON asked THE COLONIAL SECRETARY,—
(1.) Would he have any objection to lay upon the Table of this House a Return showing the special grants in aid of Agricultural Societies from the year 1882 to 1890 inclusive, showing the amounts and dates of grants to each Society respectively?
(2.) Will applications from those Societies which have not participated in such grants be favourably dealt with?

RUST IN WHEAT.

(REPORT OF THE CONFERENCE ON.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be printed, 14 December, 1891.

REPORT of the Proceedings of the Conference convened by invitation of the Minister for Agriculture (the Hon. SYDNEY SMITH), and held in Sydney on June 2nd, 3rd, 4th, 5th, and 8th, 1891.

President :

THE HON. SYDNEY SMITH, Minister for Agriculture.

WM. FARRER

TUESDAY, 2ND JUNE, 1891.

THE delegates from Victoria, Queensland, and New South Wales met at the Colonial Secretary's Office at 2:30 p.m., and were received by the Minister for Mines and Agriculture (the Hon. Sydney Smith), and the Director of Agriculture (Mr. H. C. L. Anderson, M.A.)

The MINISTER took his seat as President of the Conference, and delivered the following address:—I have much pleasure in welcoming the delegates from Victoria and Queensland, who have come over to meet with our own representatives to discuss the important subject of rust in wheat. I must first express my regret that the date of the meeting has been fixed so late, and that in consequence the representatives of South Australia have not arrived. I may mention that it was intended to have this Conference early in March, so that any advice which might emanate from it could be issued to the farmers at a seasonable time. Many things, however, have conspired to make it very difficult to fix on a time which would be equally convenient for all the colonies, and it is, therefore, a matter of regret that we have not been able to meet until this rather late date. No one can deny the immense amount of damage caused by rust in special years, and the considerable mischief caused even in what may otherwise be called favourable years. When we learn that the loss in our greatest wheat-growing Colony has been estimated at £1,500,000 for one year, and that the total loss to Australia is not far short of £2,000,000 sterling, it can easily be seen that the subject we have to discuss is one of national importance. If scientific research and practical experience can indicate a way of saving but 1 per cent. of this large amount, it would be well worth the time and labour spent; but if we can by any means save 1 or 2 bushels per acre which is now destroyed by this fungus, we shall add to the wealth of Australia £100,000 a year. I am fully aware of the difficulties which surround the whole question. I find that at the Conference which met last year in Melbourne the most diverse opinions were expressed as to the very nature of the rust and its primary causes. I am aware also that farmers themselves hold the most opposite views as to the remedial measures to be adopted. While some, and perhaps the majority, believe in early sowing, a few are found who advocate late sowing, while many believe in thorough drainage, others are in favour of a wet seed-bed. With these difficulties surrounding the question, it seems to me to have been a wise course for the conference last year to determine, as they did, to invite several intelligent and observant farmers to give their experience and opinions, and at the same time to invite the co-operation and friendly assistance of the scientific experts of the different Agricultural Departments. I understand that this has been done in each of the four Australian colonies, and that the evidence thus collected will be laid before the present Conference. I see no other way of corroborating the deductions of science but by the actual experience of practice. For our own part, we have received full answers to the series of questions issued from ninety-seven farmers, which, though strongly diverse on some of the points, agree very strongly on others. Almost without exception they are of opinion that certain sorts of wheat are much better able to resist rust than others, and that by judicious cultivation and hybridisation still better varieties may be grown. They seem to be almost unanimous that early-maturing sorts can be made to escape the dangerous season, and they seem equally certain that rust is due to climatic conditions, which can only be combated, but never entirely overcome. Our scientific investigations have been very interesting, inasmuch as they have determined the peculiar species of rust that have infested our wheat-fields. They have shown that there are distinct kinds of rust, but one much more common than the others. Although it matters very little to farmers what is the scientific name or classification of the rust that does them mischief, it seems that it is a matter of vital importance when remedial measures have to be considered; for, as I understand it, one rust may pass a certain part of its existence, when there is no wheat in the ground, on one kind of plant, while another rust may find its host in a totally different class of plants. I have been particularly interested in seeing under Dr. Cobb's microscope a small larva eating wheat rust. Whether this is of any economic value remains to be seen; but it is certainly very interesting to note that the larva of a fly closely resembling the Hessian fly (the greatest enemy that wheat has in America) should be here found getting its sustenance from the rust, which seems to be the greatest scourge of wheat in this country. We have experimented by analysing soils which were particularly famous, or rather infamous, for their rusty character. I cannot say that any light has been thrown on the question by chemistry; but it has certainly shown our farmers that many of the soils which had produced splendid crops of wheat in the past have now had their supplies of phosphoric acid so seriously reduced as to be particularly unfit for producing healthy crops of wheat. It cannot be doubted that rust, like any other parasite, will have the most injurious effects on plants which are otherwise deficient in vigour. We have had a rather favourable year in New South Wales as far as rust is concerned, and I have myself seen good wheat grown in the county of Cumberland and other places in the coast district which were almost free from rust, where thirty years ago this crop had to be abandoned through its ravages. It is worthy of note that most of these crops were the produce of varieties of seed, principally Steinwedel, that are matured in a remarkably short time—as little as 190 days. It seems to be a happy omen that this Conference is equally made up of scientific investigators and practical wheat-growers, for I am of opinion that the observations of the one will corroborate, and perhaps elucidate the investigations of the other. It is becoming that we should exhibit a truly federal spirit by meeting together to consider a common danger, and, if possible, advise a common remedy. It is to me a pitiable thing to see our farmers submitting to rust and other scourges, as if they were under the dominion of some blind fate. I have heard farmers advocate the abandonment of their fields owing to the ravages of this pest; but we cannot surely allow that in these days of enlightenment and knowledge our farmers should have to migrate from district to district in search of new pastures and clean fields. I presume you have all had the same experience as myself with the numerous applicants for the proud distinction of being able to eradicate rust. It is to be noted that each of these claimants is fully impressed with the value of his specific, which varies from £5,000 to £100,000. Though always so simple, cheap, and effective, the secret cannot be parted with under £10,000. It is a rather striking fact that of all the gentlemen who have come forward to give me a perfect cure for rust there has not been one wheat farmer amongst them. Some of them have never seen wheat growing; others have seen it grown by their uncles or their brothers-in-law. One can cure it by dressing the seed; another by sprinkling a few pounds of some manure over the paddock; and yet another by some intricate composition for pickling the seed. I believe that those who have studied the subject most are most convinced of the difficulties surrounding it. Any intelligent farmer may now be fully convinced of the exact nature of the pest. He may see the spores of this parasite; he may examine its plant growth and satisfy himself, with the aid of the microscope, of its mode of robbing the host plant. But it is no less certain that the disease is so widespread, so insidious in its attack, and so dependent on climatic conditions, that the most that can be hoped is to keep it in subjection, without daring to expect its extermination. I take it, the objects of this Conference are to compare notes as to the experience of farmers in your different colonies, to make general deductions borne out by this experience, and to give them to farmers for their benefit. I presume that you will formulate some further questions for submission to practical farmers to arrive at some further common truths. I hope you will determine upon some experiments that may be carried out on our experimental farms and in our laboratories to settle points that are now vexed. For example, it seems to me of the utmost importance that we should settle once and for ever the questions of the hereditary tendency of the seed of plants that have been affected by rust. It has been openly asserted by eminent scientific men in England that the rust is conveyed in the seed. I am well aware that the seed from rusty wheat does not always produce rusty crops; neither does the offspring of consumptive parents always develop consumption; but that may be owing entirely to favourable conditions which have kept the disease in subjection. It seems to me that our scientific men could, by a series of very careful experiments, determine once and for all whether rust can be conveyed in the seed. At all events, I can express my confidence that such a happy blending of practice with science as I see in the gentlemen before me, can devise some scheme by which the best possible advice can be afforded to our farmers, and by which (though we may never hope to banish rust) its ravages may be mitigated, and the whole of our Continent thus benefited. I have every confidence in inviting your reports of investigations and inquiries undertaken during the past year, and a full discussion as to the steps to be taken during that which is to come.
and,

The Conference then adjourned until 2.30 on Thursday the 4th instant, by which time it was expected the South Australian delegates would be present, after having decided that the delegates present would assemble on the following day as a committee to decide upon the best mode of conducting the work of the Conference.

WEDNESDAY, 3RD JUNE.—SECOND DAY.

MESSRS. M'Alpine and Pearson (Victoria); Messrs M'Lean and Shelton (Queensland); and Dr. Cobb and Mr. Farrer (New South Wales), met at 10 o'clock, when a committee meeting was held, presided over by the Director of Agriculture (Mr. H. C. L. Anderson), who was unanimously voted to the chair, when the order of business of the Conference was arranged.

THURSDAY, 4TH JUNE.—THIRD DAY.

THE Conference met at 2.30 p.m., when Messrs. Inglis and Kelly (South Australia) were present.

The PRESIDENT, in opening the proceedings, said:—I am very glad indeed to welcome the delegates from South Australia to this Colony. I have already delivered a formal address to the Conference, which I daresay the South Australian delegates have read. I can assure you, gentlemen, it affords me very great pleasure to preside at this gathering, from which I have no doubt very great benefit will result to agriculture in all the Colonies. I am aware that you are anxious to proceed with the business which has called you together, as some of you, I understand, are desirous of returning home without delay. I hope, however, that all the delegates will remain over Saturday, so as to pay a visit to our new Agricultural College at Richmond. Although, from the short time which has elapsed since it was opened, there is not very much to show you, still I am sure you will be pleased at what has been done; and I shall therefore be glad to hear that you will accept my invitation, so that the necessary arrangements may be made for your convenience. I will now call on the Director to read the correspondence.

Mr. M'LEAN (Queensland) said that before proceeding with the formal portion of the business, he thought they had a duty to perform. The delegates who had arrived on Tuesday had the pleasure of a trip down the harbour on the previous day, and he thought thought they would be neglecting a duty if they did not return thanks for the courtesy of their reception, and the entertainment which had been afforded them. For his part, he should heartily accept the invitation to visit the new College at Richmond. He desired that their appreciation of the Minister's kindness should be recorded, and therefore moved,—“That the best thanks of the representatives of Victoria, New South Wales, and Queensland, be conveyed to the President for the courteous entertainment given to them since their arrival in the Colony.”

The resolution was carried by acclamation.

The PRESIDENT: I am very pleased if my efforts to entertain the delegates have been successful, as I consider it our duty, as representing the oldest Colony, to do all we can for the pleasure and comfort of our visitors.

Mr. M'ALPINE (Victoria) entirely concurred with Mr. M'Lean in his estimate of their reception. He also expressed the pleasure and astonishment he had felt in visiting the scientific branch of the New South Wales Department of Agriculture. He thought it reflected great credit on the Minister, and on Mr. Anderson the Director of Agriculture, that the Department was in such a satisfactory condition, and that such ample provision had been made for the conduct of scientific research. Being himself a vegetable pathologist, he desired to say that the work which Dr. Cobb was doing opened up an entirely new field, the results of which would be a lesson not only to the Colonies, but to England also. He had received a letter recently from Dr. Plowright, an acknowledged authority on rust in England, which showed they were much behind these Colonies in their knowledge of rusts.

The PRESIDENT: I have listened with great gratification to the remarks of the representative of Victoria (Mr. M'Alpine). It is very satisfactory to me to hear such an opinion from a gentleman so well able to judge. It is my desire that whatever success attends our experiments may benefit not only New South Wales but the whole of the Colonies equally.

The DIRECTOR then read the correspondence, which consisted of letters from a Mr. John White, Mr. L. Tanzer, and Mr. J. M'Lean, all of whom proposed schemes for the eradication of rust.

The President then called upon the representatives of Victoria to read their reports.

Report on Rust in Wheat Experiments in Victoria, 1890-1.

Mr. A. N. PEARSON, (Victoria) said:—Field experiments, as recommended by last year's Conference, were carried out in four localities in Victoria during the year 1890-1. These localities were—Port Fairy, situated on the coast in the western district; Childers, in Gippsland; Longerenong, in the Wimmera district; and Dookie in the north.

Experiments at Port Fairy.

The most extensive experiments were conducted at Port Fairy, on the farm of Mr. John Goldie, a very successful farmer, who has an excellent reputation in his district, and who had previously shown considerable aptitude for the conduct of field experiments.

The investigations here consisted of experiments for testing the effect on the development of rust of—

- (a) Different kinds of manuring.
- (b) Application to the soil of lime, salt, and sulphate of iron.
- (c) Spraying the crops with salt and with sulphate of iron.
- (d) Deep and shallow ploughing.
- (e) Drainage.
- (f) Using rusty straw as manure.
- (g) Disinfecting the soil by burning the surface, and by use of gas lime.
- (h) Using rust-shrivelled, as compared with healthy seed.
- (i) Variety of wheat grown.
- (j) Different times of sowing.
- (k) Different times of reaping.

The site of the experiments was 3 miles to the east of Port Fairy, and about 2 miles from the sea coast. The great majority of the plots were placed in an alluvial flat, sheltered from the prevailing wind, which blew from the southern sea, by a low bank about 15 to 20 feet high. The flat is mostly dry, but during heavy rain a little water lodges a few paces away from the lower, (i.e., the western) end of the plots. The soil is a black peaty loam, rich in nitrogen and lime, but rather poor in phosphoric acid, and perhaps also in potash. It is somewhat more fertile at the western end of the flat than at the eastern end. The previous year's crop had been wheat, and the ground was by no means in good condition for another wheat crop; but it was selected for the purpose on account of the situation being very favourable to the development of rust. The plots were 77 in number, and were arranged as shown in the following plan.

Particulars.

Particulars of each Plot, showing date of sowing and reaping, development of rust, and yield obtained under the various conditions, are given in the following table:—

Before proceeding to consider these results in detail, it must be borne in mind that they are far from giving perfectly precise evidence on the questions under consideration. The experiments must be repeated several times, so as to get average results, free from those chance variations which, known as experimental errors, diminish the value of a single series of experiments.

First of all, it is to be noticed that in this alluvial flat, which, from its moisture and its low-lying sheltered position, was eminently favourable to the propagation of rust, there were very striking differences in the degree of rust development on the different plots. There were ten plots on which no rust could be found at all. Then, on the other hand, there were a great many plots which might be described as rusty—a term used to signify such an amount of rust as would readily attract the attention of an average farmer. Then there were some that were so badly rusted that the straw was, for the most part, nearly rotten with the disease.

Now, let us, at the outset, ask what circumstances were associated with these striking contrasts? Do we find them in connection with differences of manuring, or differences in the treatment of the soil, deep ploughing, shallow ploughing, early reaping, or late reaping, and so on? No. These very striking contrasts are observable only in association with differences in the times of sowing, and with differences in the varieties of wheat. This fact is, to my mind, sufficient in itself to indicate that the choice of variety of wheat, and the time for sowing, are the main factors to be attended to in dealing with the question of rust prevention. Not that these are the only things to be attended to, for differences of rustiness are observable, for instance, on the leeward and windward sides of plots, and with differences of manuring, or with the use of salt, &c.; But the differences in these cases are much less pronounced and striking, clearly indicating that these are but secondary measures, and not primary ones.

(a) Effect of Manuring.

Considering now the cases in detail, we find that amongst the manured plots (plots 1 to 10), No. 5, without manure, and No. 7, without phosphoric acid, were not quite so rusty as the other plots, a fact which need not be set down to some specific action of manure generally, or of phosphoric acid particularly, in causing rust, but may be explained by the fact that the chief manure requirement of this soil was phosphoric acid, and without this substance the crop did not grow so thick as with it, and hence, being better ventilated, was less favourably circumstanced for the germination of rust spores. It is possible also that in our climates thin growing crops are cooler, owing to greater evaporation due to better ventilation, than are thick growing crops. And this suggestion may possibly explain the anomaly that in colder climates, such as those of Great Britain and of Canada, thick growing crops are less liable to rust than thin growing ones, for we may surmise that there the greater coolness, due to ventilation, is more than counterbalanced by the greater warmth due to the better penetration of the sun's rays.

The plot without potash was quite noticeably more rusty than the plot with potash, a fact which may, perhaps, be due to the circumstance that the potash salt used was the chloride, and this, like common salt, has some antiseptic quality.

The plots that were manured with nitrogen, namely plots 2, 3, 4, 7, 8, 9, and 10, were not appreciably more rusty than was plot 6, which received no nitrogen; in fact, plot 7, which had nitrogen given to it, was less rusty than plot 6, which had no nitrogen. These experiments, so far as they go, confirm my previously-expressed opinion that those are mistaken who attribute to nitrogen manuring a special tendency to cause rust. It seems to me that the only way in which chemical manuring in this country tends to favour rust is by causing a more abundant and closer growth, so that the crop is less ventilated than where there is a feebler growth. If the soil specially requires nitrogen to cause an abundant growth, then nitrogen manuring will increase the chances of rust. If, on the other hand, the soil should be specially deficient in phosphoric acid, as was the case with the soil now under consideration, then phosphoric acid manuring will, by causing a closer and denser growth, increase the chances in favour of rust.

The worst plot amongst Nos. 1-10, was that dressed with farmyard manure, at the rate of 20 ton per acre. It had from the first a somewhat sickly and unhealthy appearance.

In regard to the yields of grain from these ten plots, it is to be noted that they do not at all correspond with the amounts and kinds of manuring applied, the proper effect of the manuring on the yield being in many cases prevented by the laying of the crops during stormy weather.

(b) Effect of Treating the Soil with Lime, Salt, and Sulphate of Iron.

The effect of liming the soil was tested on plots 11-14; and from the results tabulated it will be seen that, in the case of this particular soil, the liming neither diminished the rust nor increased the yield of grain.

Salt, as will be seen on referring to the records of plots 14-17, diminished both the rust and the yield of grain.

Sulphate of iron applied to the soil (see Plots 14 and 18-20) diminished the rust a little, and seems also to have had some effect in diminishing the yield of grain; but this is uncertain owing to the irregularities introduced into the plots through lodging in some parts, and through sour patches in others.

(c) Effect of Spraying with Salt, and with Sulphate of Iron.

The results of plots 42, 43, and 44, and also of the neighbouring plot 23, which was sown with the same variety of wheat, and nearly on the same date, were as follows:—

	Yield.
Plot 42, sprayed six times, with $\frac{1}{2}$ cwt. salt per acre each time—rusty	15 bushels.
„ 43, „ „ „ „ „ 6 lb. sulph. iron—a little less rusty	22 $\frac{1}{2}$ „
„ 44, „ „ „ „ „ 12-lb. „ „ „ less rusty, and better sample of wheat.	27 „
„ 23, no treatment—rusty	21 „ These

These results tend to the conclusion that the salt spray was of no use as regards diminution of rust, and that it considerably decreases the yield of wheat; whilst, on the other hand, the sulphate of iron caused both a diminution of the rust, and an increase in the yield of grain.

If we compare plot 23 with plot 44, we shall see that there is an apparent increase of 6 bushels, due to spraying with 72 lb. of sulphate of iron. The cost of this amount of material would be 3s. 10½d. in Melbourne, and each spraying should, with a suitable spraying implement, be done at 1d. per acre. Hence, it would appear that 6 additional bushels of wheat were obtained through the expenditure of about 4s. 6d., in spraying with sulphate of iron. It will be interesting to see if this result is confirmed by another year's experience. We shall find in the report of the Childers' experiments, that spraying with sulphate of iron during an outbreak of rust had a very marked effect in destroying rust; indeed, from results there obtained, it would appear that two, or at most three sprayings, given at intervals of a fortnight during an outbreak of rust—the three sprayings costing only about 4s. to 5s. 6d.—would insure the crop against rust.

(d) Deep and Shallow Ploughing.

Plots 40 and 41 were set apart for this test, plot 40 having been ploughed 5 inches deep, and plot 41 12 inches. Both were sown with Purple Straw on the 11th June, and were reaped on the 14th January. Both crops were rusty; but the deep-ploughed yielded 19½ bushels, while the shallow-ploughed yielded only 16½ bushels.

(e) Effect of Drainage.

It was not possible to test the effect of drainage by a plot placed in the same paddock as the other plots, for the reason that it would have been impracticable to have constructed a suitable drain in the flat. In another paddock, on the other side of the farm, and at a slightly higher level, a 3 ft. drain was already cut. A plot was taken on the bank of this drain, to represent the drained land, and another plot about 100 yards from the drain, to represent the undrained land. This paddock had been manured the previous year, and had grown a crop of mangolds. It was, therefore, in very good condition for wheat growing. The plots were sown with Steinwedel on the 14th June, 1890, and were reaped on the 30th December. The yield of the drained plot was 40¾ bushels per acre, and of the undrained, 38 bushels.

(f) Effect of using Rusted Straw as Manure.

Plot 70 was dressed with 20 tons per acre of manure, in which the straw used was the rusty straw of the season just passed. It was intended that this plot, together with plot 71, should be compared with plots 1 and 5, in which the manure used was made with straw free from rust; but owing to the peculiarly unhealthy appearance of plot 1, and the accompanying low yield obtained from it, no such comparison could be instituted, and the results of this experiment must be regarded as at present unsuitable for discussion.

(g) Disinfecting the Ground by burning and by Gas Lime.

On plot 72 the stubble, together with a quantity of straw corresponding to the amount which would be grown by an ordinary crop of wheat was burnt on the ground. This was in order to see if any advantage was gained through destroying the rust spores in the ground by means of heat. Of course, by putting on to the land a quantity of straw and burning it, the ash of the straw remained in the ground and acted as a manure. It was intended to burn the same quantity of straw elsewhere, and distribute the ashes on plot 73, so that plot 73 might receive exactly the same treatment as plot 72, except that the surface soil should not be subjected to the action of heat. Through an oversight, however, this precaution was omitted. In comparing plot 72 with plot 73, therefore, the difference must be regarded as due not to the heating only, but to the heating together with the manurial action of the small amount of additional straw. This manurial action would be very slight. The difference between the yield from the two plots was considerable. The burnt plot bore a crop heavier in yield and less affected by rust than that borne by the untreated plot. The difference was nearly 8 bushels. The two plots were separated from each other by a panel fence, so as to prevent direct contagion, and plot 72 was on the sheltered side of the fence; but, notwithstanding this, it was less rusty than the other plot.

On plot 74 fresh gas lime, at the rate of 1 ton per acre, was used for disinfecting the soil. The result in this case was as noticeable as where the soil was disinfecting by burning, and the difference in the yield was about the same, namely 7 bushels.

(h) Using Rust-shrivelled as compared with Healthy Seed.

In fields of wheat growing in a rusty season, it is frequently observable that some parts are less rusty than others, and that occasionally some patches may be found in which the wheat is almost clean and free from rust. It was desired to gather some seed out of such a field, taking on the one hand seed from the rusty part, and on the other hand seed from the almost clean part. Thus would have been obtained some rust-shrivelled seed and some plump healthy seed, both drawn from the same crop, of the same variety of wheat, and having as nearly as possible the same history, excepting that the one had suffered during its last season from rust and the other had not. Unfortunately I was unable to get seed of this kind last season, but I got what was very nearly as good. In January, 1889, Mr. Goldie harvested a crop of the wheat generally grown in the Port Fairy District, and supposed originally to have been White Tuscan. The crop was healthy, and the seed sound and plump. Some of this seed Mr. Goldie sowed in June, 1889, and some he stored away. The year 1889-90 was a rusty one, and the crop resulting from the sown portion of the seed was very rusty, the grain being pinched and shrivelled. This being harvested, Mr. Goldie had now two lots of seed, one lot reaped in 1889, being plump and healthy, and the other of the same stock, but a generation later, later, having been reaped in 1890, after subjection to the action of rust. These two kinds were sown on adjoining plots (Nos. 28 and 29) on the 14th June, and were both reaped on the 14th January, 1891; with the result that the plump healthy seed yielded 23·45 bushels per acre, and the rust-shrivelled only 21·7 bushels. So far, therefore, as the yield per acre was concerned, the result appears in favour of the healthy seed; but the difference was not so great that it might not be due to experimental error. In regard to the quality of the grain produced, however, there could be no mistake. I showed samples from the two plots to an experienced farmer and wheat grower, and without stating anything about them, asked if there were any difference between the two samples. He at once replied that he could see a difference, almost without looking at them, and then picked out the sample grown from the healthy seed as the superior one. I also showed the samples to an experienced wheat buyer and miller. He also at once picked out that obtained from the healthy seed as being the superior, and while stating that neither of them was a good sample (as was to be expected, since they were grown under unfavourable conditions), yet said that the one was easily recognisable as superior to the other.

(i) Varieties of Wheat.

As has already been stated, some of the most striking differences in regard to rustiness were presented by the plots devoted to varieties of wheat. The varieties tested were:—

Rattling Tom	} Obtained from Prof. Brown, Longerenong.	Mould's Red	} Obtained from Prof. Brown, Longerenong
De Toits		Red Egyptian
Farmers' Friend		Egyptian
Fill-bag		Pringle's No. 5

Defiance	14 June	9·5	Clean.
Steinwedel	"	8·75	Rotten with rust, and lodged.
Roseworthy	"	3·5	Clean.

It should be noted in passing that some of the varieties were sown on plots only $\frac{1}{16}$ th and $\frac{1}{8}$ th acre in extent. The yields per acre cannot therefore be regarded as so accurate as in the case of those varieties grown on plots $\frac{1}{4}$ th acre in area; but the yields per acre may be taken as sufficiently near the truth for present purposes. The small plots will be seen by reference to the plan.

A mere glance at the above list will show that freedom from rust and prolific yielding by no means go together; indeed, some of the highest yields were obtained from the most rusted crops; and, on the other hand, the majority of those which escaped the rust gave comparatively low yields. This fact is not unknown to many practical farmers, some of whom on this account prefer to grow prolific wheats very liable to rust, rather than wheat less liable to rust which give lower average yields, and it can easily be seen that it may pay better to risk an occasional loss of crop owing to rust, if the intermediate crops are heavy, than to ensure constant freedom from rust at the expense of comparatively small average crops; but it by no means follows that a variety of wheat which is a poor yielder in one district will be a poor yielder in every district. The "Defiance" wheat is a case in point. This wheat has a better record than any other of those tested in regard to its rust resisting nature, although there are localities where it has been found to succumb to rust, yet, as we shall see from the information received in answer to the Questions on Rust, there are many localities in which it has been found to escape any serious damage. If, however, the results of one trial at Port Fairy were to be taken as showing its yielding capacity, it would be set down as a poor yielder; yet we have information that in the neighbourhood of Avoca, it has frequently given six bags to the acre; and it may be that at Port Fairy, during the coming season, after it has had time to become acclimatised, it will yield better than it did last season.

The important question, however, is as to whether heavy yielding capacity and rust resisting qualities are incompatible. If they are, then it must remain the better policy to grow prolific wheats, and risk the chances of an occasional loss of crop through rust. If they are not incompatible, if it be possible to have a wheat which is both prolific and at the same time in a high degree rust-resisting, then it remains to improve by systematic selection the light-yielding, rust-resisting wheats in the direction of making them more prolific; or, on the other hand, to improve the heavy-yielding, non-resistant wheats in the direction of making them more resistant. Even if there were no facts to nullify such a conclusion, we ought to be very cautious indeed before adopting so hopeless an opinion as that these two qualities cannot exist together in the same wheat. For my own part, I have the utmost faith in the improbability of anything, if time, perseverance, and the proper methods be brought to bear. The improbability of wheats ought to be regarded as without practical limit. But we have facts which seem to render untenable the abovementioned opinion as to incompatibility. The "Defiance" wheat, grown at Avoca, is one such fact. Our present varieties should therefore be considered not as final, but only as the raw material out of which we are to produce varieties suitable to our purposes. What is wanted at present is an Australian Hallett, who will produce pedigree wheats;—wheats, however, which shall be selected not for one quality only, but for all-round excellence, being prolific, of quick growth, resistant of the attacks of fungus parasites, strong in the straw, and of good milling character. Were we to trace back the sorghums, the sugar-canes, and the maize to their original wild stock, we might perhaps be startled by the possibilities in the way of improving wheats. For anyone possessing the skill and the time for this kind of work, there is a very promising opening in these Colonies.

It would be premature for me to recommend any wheats at present, but it may be pointed out that "Fill-bag," both early and late sown, did very well at Port Fairy last season, and might have done better had the soil been in better condition for wheat-growing. "De Toits," "Farmer's Friend," "Rattling Tom," and "Red Californian," also did well.

(j) Different times of Sowing.

Some of the most instructive plots were those relating to early and late sowing. The earliest sown (28th May) was, so far as can be ascertained, quite free from rust; that sown on 11th June was a little rusty; that sown on the 14th more rusty; and all the subsequent ones fully rusty. This result is in accordance with the general experience in our Colony, that early-sown wheats suffer less from rust than late-sown ones. The rule will then naturally suggest itself to always sow early; but on referring to the yields from the different plots it will be seen at what a cost this freedom from rust was obtained. Plot 23, sown on the 14th June, was considerably rusty, and the yield was 21 bushels; plot 21, sown on the 28th May, was, on the other hand, free from rust, but it yielded only 14 bushels. One must not, however, generalise on only one year's results. Another year's experience might point in the opposite direction. For instance, the coming season may be a very rusty one, and while plot 21 may still yield its 14 bushels per acre, plot 23 may perhaps yield nothing.

It is very interesting to see the effect of still later sowing. None of the late sown escaped rust; so that if one were to err at all, it would appear better to err on the side of early sowing, and not of late sowing. The gradually diminishing crop with lateness of sowing, reckoning from the middle of June, is very striking; with the September sowing many more weeds came up than wheat.

(k) Effect of Early and Late Reaping.

Plots 45 and 46 were set apart for testing the effect of cutting in the dough stage and allowing to ripen in the stook, as compared with cutting when dead ripe; but owing to irregularities which appeared in these plots, it was decided not to use them for the purpose, and two plots were cut out of a standing crop of Steinwedel wheat, near the drained and undrained plots. Owing to the absence of much rust in this crop, the experiment afforded no indication of the usefulness or otherwise of cutting in the dough stage as a means of diminishing the injury to the grain through the action of rust; but it was interesting to the extent that it showed that the sample of grain obtained by cutting in the dough stage was, to all outward appearance, superior to that obtained by cutting when ripe. The yield per acre was, however, a little less in the former case, but the difference was not more than would have resulted from experimental error.

Experiments at Childers.

CHILDERS is in Gippsland, situated in the midst of dense forest growing on an area of older volcanic country to the south of Moe and Trafalgar. Experiments somewhere in Gippsland were specially desirable owing to the fact that wheat can seldom be grown in this district because of the severity of the rust. At the time when I was considering how to arrange for carrying out experiments in this province, Mr. Thos. Whelan, of Childers, called on me in reference to some manure experiments he was desirous of making, and the outcome of our conversation was that Mr. Whelan undertook undertook to carry out the rust experiments ; and I have pleasure in stating that he has shown himself to be a very careful, painstaking, and observant experimenter. His reports were full and concise, and I am able to give his observations mostly in his own words.

The experiments were conducted on the crest of a hill in a cultivation paddock of about 1 acre in extent, enclosed on all sides by a paling fence. There were sixteen plots of $\frac{1}{10}$ th acre area, each, one of the plots being subdivided into six smaller ones. The plots were placed in the spaces between a number of two-year old fruit-trees. The following plan shows the arrangement :—

Owing to continued wet weather, it was not possible to get the seed into the ground before the 12th July. The experiments progressed satisfactorily until the 21th October, during the night of which a violent storm raged over the south of Victoria, doing considerable damage in many places. At the Childers' experiment station the wind blew down several heavy branches of trees, some of which falling on to the enclosure fence broke it down, so that the cattle got access to the plots during the night, and in the early morning the wheat on all the plots had been eaten down to the ground. Owing to this accident the wheat came to maturity under very adverse circumstances, and the yields in all cases were very very small. Nevertheless, the results were in some cases very interesting and instructive. The full statement of results is given in the following table :—

No. of Plot.	Description of Experiment.	Variety Wheat.	Date of Sowing.	Date of Reaping.	Date of appearance of Rust.	Degree of Rustiness.	Yield per Acre.	General Observations.
			1890.	1891.	1899.		bushels.
1	Testing varieties of wheat.	Steinwedel	10 July...	29 Jan.	3 Dec.	Rusty	6 $\frac{2}{3}$	Straw short and much laid; crop thin; reaped when passed the dough stage, but not quite ripe; grain a little shrivelled.
2		Purple Straw	10 ,,	29 ,,	1 ,,	,,	6 $\frac{2}{3}$	Straw short and weak; crop patchy; reaped when ripe; grain a little shrivelled.
3		Rattling Tom	10 ,,	29 ,,	3 ,,	Not so rusty as plots 1 and 2	8 $\frac{1}{2}$	Straw weak; crop patchy; reaped when ripe; grain a little better than on plots 1 and 2.
4		Defiance	10 ,,	30 ,,	21 ,,	Rust on one plant on 3rd Dec.; after 21st Dec. specks of rust were seen on a few plants here and there.	15	Straw clean, strong, and bright; crop regular; grain good. A bunch of self-sown oats was growing within 1 ft. of this plot. These oats were affected with rust in May, and in December were one mass of rust from root to ear, so that every puff of wind sent the spores all over plot 4. In addition to this, the plot had been a bed of ashes, where a log had been burnt, and on which the preceding crop was wheat (cut for hay) which had been rotten with rust. Mr. Whelan was of opinion that the grain would have been a better sample had the crop been allowed to stand a week longer.
5		Farmer's Friend	10 ,,	29 ,,	3 ,,	A little rust; not so rusty as plot 3.	10 $\frac{2}{3}$	Straw strong; in the centre of the plot was a circular patch, on which the plants came up alright at first, but afterwards turned yellow and died off when about 1 ft. high; reaped when nearly ripe; grain a little shrivelled.
6		De Toits	10 ,,	29 ,,	About 29 Nov. The season all through was exceptionally wet, and frequent storms knocked the wheat about very much. It rained steadily from the 23rd to the 30th November, and the first three days of December were very hot. It was during these three days that rust first appeared on the plots. Previous to the 25th October, on which date the wheat was eaten down by the cattle, no rust could be found on any of the plots, although it was prevalent on the self-sown wheat and oats, growing on the spaces between and around the plots.

These Childers experiments have proved interesting for Victorians, inasmuch as they tend to show the practicability of growing wheat in the Gippsland Province. At one time very fine wheat was grown on the western border of Gippsland; indeed, I have been informed that wheat grown in the neighbourhood of Berwick obtained a gold medal in competition with all the world at the London Exhibition of 1862 (?); but shortly after this period rust appeared in the Colony, and since then, wheat growing in Gippsland has been almost entirely abandoned, since it is generally held to be impossible, owing to the ravages of rust. Mr. Whelan, however, has found that "Defiance," "Ward's Prolific," and "Farmer's Friend," have done well with him. The yields, indeed, were poor, as was to be expected after the accident which occurred to the plots; for while wheat may be eaten down almost with impunity in early stages of growth, it must suffer considerably if eaten after three months' growth, and late in the season. Doubtless the coming season will give better results; and, indeed, I am informed that during the last season, there was exhibited at the Warragal Agricultural Show, a very fine sample of wheat grown in the neighbourhood. Wheat-growing should not be despised in Gippsland, and the time may be looked forward to when the farmers of this province will be glad to fall back upon this staple crop for introduction into their rotations.

These Childers experiments have also proved interesting, as showing with some precision the proper use of spraying as a preventive and cure for rust. Plot 14 was sprayed six times during the course of growth, the last time being 2nd December. This date, it will be observed, was about the date on which the rust appeared on the other affected plots; but on this plot it did not appear until a fortnight after the final spraying and did not spread generally all through the plot until 21st December, namely, three weeks afterwards. From this it would appear that the effect of one spraying is to protect the wheat from the action of the rust for about a fortnight. A further experiment which Mr. Whelan performed confirms this. In his report, he states:—"In addition to preventing rust, a weak solution of ferrous sulphate will cure the rust. I marked a rust infected wheat plant, and syringed it with a solution of ferrous sulphate (1 oz. to the gallon of water), with the result that all the rust had disappeared in twenty-four hours, nor was the plant again attacked with rust for fourteen days." Now, the period during which rust may be considered to jeopardise the yield of grain, is probably not more than one month to six weeks; so that if, during this period, the crop were to be sprayed three times with a dilute solution of sulphate of iron, say 6 lb. to the acre, at intervals of a fortnight, it is to be anticipated that it would effectually save the crop. At this rate the cost of material would be trifling—from 8d. to a 1s. per acre—and the cost of application from 2d. to 3d. per acre, making a total of 10d. to 1s. 3d., or (say) 1s. 6d. at the outside. It would not need to be applied every year, but only during rusty years. This season we intend to experiment more definitely in this direction. Other antiseptic solutions also will be tried, such as the Bordeaux solution (which Mr. M'Alpine informs me is used by Dr. Plowright, when, for experimental purposes, he wishes to grow wheat free from rust), soluble phenyl mixtures, and a thymol mixture suggested by a correspondent of the Victorian Department of Agriculture.

Experiments at Dookie.

EXPERIMENTS were conducted at Dookie in regard to the liability of different varieties of wheat to the attacks of rust, and in regard to the effects of manures, and of treating the soil with lime, salt, and sulphate of iron; also, in regard to the relative value of rust-shrivelled and healthy seed. I visited these plots at the end of November, shortly after the rust broke out. The rust was not bad at the time, nor did it increase in severity afterwards; in fact, it was what many practical farmers would describe as a condition of "no rust," there being not more than perhaps twenty to thirty specks on each plant. There were in the plots a great many so-called "take-all" patches, which rendered unreliable any calculations as to yield per acre. It was noticeable that the plots treated with sulphate of iron were freer from "take all" than the other plots were—indeed, that which received the sulphate of iron at the rate of 1 cwt. to the acre, was quite free from it; but whether this was due to the action of the sulphate of iron, or to a better condition of the soil on this plot, it is impossible to say without confirmatory experiments. The treatment of the soil with lime and salt showed no effect in the development of rust, nor did I discern any difference due to manuring. There was a difference perceptible between the plots which had been sown with rust-shrivelled and plump seed. The rust-shrivelled was perceptibly more rusty than the other, but not to any considerable extent. Mr. Thompson has published a statement that the yield per acre from the rust-shrivelled was greater than from the plump seed, namely:—

Yield from rust-shrivelled seed...	...	26 $\frac{2}{3}$ bushels per acre.
Yield from plump seed	20 $\frac{2}{3}$ "

He also stated that the former was a better sample than the latter. These results are precisely the opposite of what I have got; and I am inclined to suppose that experimental error, which the experienced experimenter, accustomed to constantly check his work, knows well may sometimes be very formidable, may have been at work in this case.

Experiments at Longerenong.

EXPERIMENTS similar to those at Dookie were carried out at Longerenong, under the care of Professor Brown, and of Mr. Guerin, the Science Master of the College. I visited these experiments in November, just before the rust broke out; and was therefore unable to make any personal observations; but Mr. Guerin subsequently wrote a concise report on the experiments, from which I take the following statements:—

The ground was uneven owing to crab-holes. This unevenness rendered untrustworthy any comparison between the yields per acre of the different plots; therefore, no weighing was attempted. "Golden-drop," a wheat very liable to rust, was the variety sown. The seed, which was plump, was pickled in sulphate of copper. Rust first appeared on the 18th or 19th November, and was pretty general by the 23rd. It was a mild attack, affecting principally the blade. The western side, namely, that exposed to the prevailing wind, was the most rusty. The three plots treated with salt were the cleanest of the lot; and where the crop was thinned by the wind or by mice, rust was almost entirely absent. As regards the action of manures, the plot treated with farm-yard manure (20 tons per acre) was much rusted, as also was the plot treated with sulphate of ammonia only; but the complete chemical manure seemed to have no special effect as regards inducing rust.

In regard to varieties of wheat, "Carter's Cross-bred," imported last season from England, produced thick crops, late of maturing, and more rusty than any other on the farm. The "Centennial," sown in drills running east and west, grew 6 feet high, and was free from rust. "Steinwedel" and "Farmer's Friend" showed but little rust, though "Farmer's Friend" being later in maturing, was more attacked than "Steinwedel."

Coming Season's Experiments.

The experiments that are being carried out this year are the same as those of last year, with improvements suggested by experience, special attention being paid to the effect and most economical method of spraying for rust prevention. Last year I went carefully through the plots at Port Fairy, and picked out any wheat plants which exhibited striking peculiarities. One kind, which appeared to be a sport from "Red Egyptian," and was growing on the same plot with, and right in the midst of rusty plants, was absolutely clean, and had remarkably full heads. The average number of grains in thirteen heads gathered was seventy-five, and there were two heads containing 92 grains each. This wheat was unfortunately a red wheat; but I have been told by grain merchants that red wheats may come into fashion before long. I am also conducting extensive experiments in regard to the relative value of plump or healthy seeds and blighted seeds, also in regard to the relative value of seed from large and small heads, of seed taken from different parts of the same head, of large seed and small seed, and of seed taken from plants that have escaped free or almost free from rust, when growing in close juxtaposition to plants of the same variety which have been badly attacked by the rust. I shall have more than 10,000 seeds selected in this way to test various questions, the seeds being sown in rows 1 foot apart.

In regard to spraying, I intend trying experiments with a field sprayer which I am having made, and which will cover a width of 50 to 100 feet, and yet admit of being drawn by one horse.

There are two or three suggestions which in conclusion, may perhaps be made. The first is in regard to ascertaining the characteristics of rust-resisting, or, as this term seems to imply some specific rust-resisting quality possessed by the wheat, shall we say rust-avoiding wheats. What are the special features which characterise those wheats which habitually suffer less from the ravages of rust than do others. Does their habitual escape depend upon some large feature or general conformation of the plant, such as the size and position of the leaves, affording less resting place for the rust spores? Or is it due to microscopic characters, such as the absence of hairs, or the size or disposition of the stomata, or the smoothness of the epidermis of the plant? Or is it due to some chemical substances contained by the wheat plants and which are injurious to the rust plant? Or, finally, is it some specific quality of the living part—the protoplasm—of the wheat plant, by virtue of which it can repel or even destroy the rust mycelium? It is of importance that this matter should be settled; for if we know what are the characteristics of rust avoiding wheats, we shall be able to produce wheats having these characteristics. Then, secondly, I think it would be well if we could draw up some definite terms to be used in comparing the degrees of rustiness of a wheat plant or a wheat crop, in place of such vague terms as slightly rusty, rusty, very rusty, and so on. Then, thirdly, it would be well for us during the coming year to effect, for experimental purposes, an intercolonial exchange of all the varieties of wheat growing in the different Colonies. This would have the double effect of enabling us to try a large number of varieties in each representative district, thus enabling us to select in each case the most likely varieties to be used as a basis for the production of more improved varieties; and, in the second place, it would enable us to correct any irregularities in the local naming of the different varieties. The importance of this latter point will be seen when I state that I have just learnt by conversation with Mr. Farrer, that the wheat known as "Defiance" in New South Wales, is not the same as that going by the same name in Victoria; and hence anything said in regard to the rust-resisting character of "Defiance" in Victoria cannot be held to have reference to the "Defiance" wheat in New South Wales. Then, lastly, I think it would be well to adopt again the method of last year of sending out questions to the farmers, such questions, however, being this time confined almost entirely to the present season's crop.

Mr.

Mr. D. M'ALPINE (Victoria) reported as follows:—At the last Conference of delegates on rust in wheat held in Melbourne in March, 1890, it was agreed to send out a series of questions to the farmers of each Colony represented, viz., New South Wales, Queensland, South Australia, and Victoria, "with a view to elicit as much individual experience as possible, and then deduce some general laws for future guidance." The individual experience of 129 farmers has been obtained in Victoria, representing twenty-four counties, and including the principal grain-growing districts. These replies have all been tabulated and arranged under their proper headings, and a preliminary report containing the leading points has already been issued. A full report, based upon the replies, will be submitted to the Victorian Minister of Agriculture, and it seems to me that the best and most useful course to take on the present occasion will be to answer a number of the questions which were raised at the last rust conference, and to consider certain suggestions which were then made, in the light of the practice and the experience of the Victorian farmer. While each Colony thus collects useful data within its own borders, the collective experience of the principal Colonies must form a valuable addition to our present knowledges; and I take it that one of the chief objects of the present conference will be to bring together these different, and often conflicting, colonial experiences, as represented by their leading grain-growers, combine them so as to arrive at well-established facts, and then see what general laws are revealed by these varied experiences—necessarily varied because obtained under such different conditions of soil and climate. The greater the number of accurate observers, the more reliable are the results, and more valuable the information gained.

Besides, this branch of plant pathology has been too much neglected hitherto, in which the observations and experience of practical growers are taken into account. No doubt there are good and bad farmers, just as there are in other callings; but when care is taken to select the most trustworthy, and when numbers of them have had an experience extending over thirty years, I consider that the information thus obtained is of great practical value.

We will now take up the different subjects referred to in the questions sent out in the order there given, only bringing together all subjects naturally related as a matter of convenience. It has to be borne in mind that the full report will often give details which would be out of place here, such as the division of the Colony into different regions (Wimmera and Mallee, Gippsland and Murray districts, &c.), and numerous quotations from the replies received to certain questions from the different districts. All that is aimed at here is to give the general results without all the qualifications and limitations necessary for a complete view of the subject, even without the evidence on which these results are based, and the only geographical division referred to will be that of districts north or south of the Dividing Range.

1. Rusty years.

From the rusty years mentioned at the last Conference, it is evident that the bad rusty years are not always common to the several Colonies. Thus, 1868 was mentioned as a very bad year for rust in South Australia, while in Victoria it is not noted at all among the worst rusty years, and only twice—once in the Northern and once in the Southern Divisions—among the rusty years.

In the principal wheat-growing districts of New South Wales, wheat is described as a total failure in 1860, whereas that year is not mentioned at all in Victoria; but then the subject did not receive much attention.

The worst rusty years, judging from the frequency with which they are mentioned, were 1889 and 1878, while Hayter gives, in addition, 1863 and 1864; but rust is never absent from the Colony—at least, from the year 1862 to 1890 its presence has been recorded. In 1890, which was not reckoned a rusty year, out of 123 returns, sixty-four record rust, although in most cases without any perceptible effect upon the grain.

Mr. Pearson also referred to the general idea that rust occurs every two years; but there is no evidence of that in the replies received. As a matter of fact, rust has occurred every year at least since 1862; but taking the evident meaning to be a rusty year sufficient to perceptibly injure the crops, then there is no such regularity. One farmer maintained, with as little reason, that rusty years recurred in cycles of eleven years, and 1878 and 1889 were in his favour, but he failed to notice the evidence against it.

It is the general experience of farmers, however, that rust does not occur to seriously damage the crop two years in succession; but there are exceptions, which only prove the rule that rusty years, in the farmer's sense, do not succeed each other.

2. Time of appearance of Rust.

The period of the year at which rust shows itself varies in different districts, and even in different years, because its appearance may be considerably hastened or retarded by the state of the weather, which has also its effect upon the crop. The time of appearance is generally given as early in October and early in November, and this may be regarded as its dangerous season, for the farmer usually notices it only when, as one of themselves expressed it, "they can shake it off the plant in a red cloud." In the Melbourne domain I found it pretty bad on self-sown wheat and oats towards the latter end of May, 1869.

It is worthy of note that the Romans held their festival to protect their fields from mildew, annually on April 25th, showing a wonderful regularity in the time of appearance of this parasitic fungus, presuming that the sacrifices were offered when the rust-fiend did the most damage. In connection with the spread of rust, the question of its infectiousness crops up. Many farmers do not believe in the infectiousness of rust, but but the case in favour of it has been very fairly stated by Mr. Pearson in Appendix A to Minutes of Proceedings, 1890. Thus, one farmer writes, and it may be taken as a sample of several others, "I have never found rust to spread from one field to another, as two years ago I had 60 acres of oats rusty, while 50 acres of wheat adjoining were free, the oats receiving heavy rain while in blossom, while the wheat received the moisture when required—just before it burst in the ear." Here we have an illustration of rust not spreading, for the simple reason that the conditions were favourable to its spread in the one case (oats) and unfavourable in the other (wheat). This unfortunate property of contagion in rust must always be taken into account in any proposed remedial measures.

3. Time of Sowing.

The general experience is, that early-sown crops escape rust best. In 1889, the worst affected crops in some districts were sown from 20th May up to 10th June; but early sowing is not an infallible remedy, for the muggy weather favouring the rust may set in about the flowering season of the early-sown crop, and thus it might be damaged, while the later-sown would escape. To quote one out of several instances:—"In 1889, early sown crop only suffered to the extent of 4 bushels per acre, and late, 8 bushels: but in 1887 the early sown crops were most affected." Still, early sowing is the safest as a rule.

(a.) Early maturing wheats.—Early sowing is mainly of value when associated with the property of early maturing, and this is undoubtedly one of the characters in the front rank of preventive means. Professor Lowrie noticed that the "Steinwedel," for instance, suffered little, compared with latter wheats, such as "Purple Straw." Of the seven farmers who have referred to "Steinwedel," four are favourable towards it, and three unfavourable; but the worst result was from sowing late (June and July) in the Coleraine district.

(b.) Nature of seed-bed.—A dry seed-bed is strongly recommended by all who have referred to the subject, and instances are given where sowing on a dry and a moist seed-bed meant a crop comparatively free from rust in the one case, and very rusty in the other.

4. Estimated loss per acre in 1889 due to Rust.

This is variously given, ranging from £5 and 20 bushels per acre to 10s. and 2 bushels per acre. In some few cases there was no loss to speak of, and a comparison of the various conditions with those where the loss was heavy, fails to account for the difference; but this estimate of loss is mainly of value in connection with other data, so nothing further need be said here.

5. Other Plants attacked by Rust.

A number of plants are mentioned as being attacked by rust; but in the absence of information as to the nature of the rust, no conclusions of value can be drawn from this. Of those known to be attacked by the rust of wheat in Britain, mention is made of oats, barley, rye-grass, wild oats, barley-grass, cocksfoot, and Yorkshire fog; kangaroo-grass, prairie-grass, and canary-grass are likewise mentioned, but my own personal observation has as yet failed to discover any rust on these. Johnson grass is likewise noted, but the rust here is probably that of sorghum. Various other rusts were mentioned, and in some instances specimens sent were determined to be distinct from rust of wheat. Mallow and flax rust were among the number, and of the latter one wrote—"I forward you a plant of native flax badly rusted. It does not seem to be of much use to manipulate seed wheat if rust grows anywhere like this." Certainly not, if the rusts were the same, which they are not. The common goose-grass (poa annua) is to be met with rusty all the year round; but then it is not the rust of wheat which is commonly found on it, although it may occur. Drake (Lolium temulentum) is never once mentioned, although it harbours the spring rust of wheat in Britain. I have paid special attention to it myself, but failed to find any rust; and on writing to an Agricultural Society in a district where I knew Drake to be plentiful in wet seasons, the reply was, "Only one present at the meeting could state positively that he had seen rust on Drake, and it was as bad as on wheat." There is another very common rust on groundsel, which is interesting as being one stage in the life history of a fungus which passes the other portion of its life (where it requires to do so) on pines, such as the Scotch fir in Scotland; but in Australia it does not seem to require a change of host, for it passes its entire existence on the groundsel here, as well as in some other countries. The two phases of its existence seemed so distinct from one another that they received two separate names, the one stage on the groundsel being called Coleosporium senecionis and the other on the pine Peridermium pini.

This question of the kind of rust on the various grasses or weeds growing alongside or in our wheat fields is a scientific one, but of great practical importance, since it involves no less a question than the where and the how of the rust wintering while the new wheat crop of next season is coming forward. The various references to this subject at the last conference were delightfully vague, and show the necessity for investigation. I have asked, through the various Agricultural Societies, that specimens of rusted grasses be sent for examination; and bound up with this question is that of the species of rust most prevalent on our cereals. Is it the spring rust of Britain (Puccinia rubigo-vera) or the summer rust (Puccinia graminis)? In Britain the prevailing and damaging rust is Puccinia graminis, although Puccinia rubigo-vera is also common, and Dr. Plowright just recently wrote to me of it—"It is very abundant with us, but does no harm, particularly to our wheat." Mr. Galloway, Chief of the Section of Vegetable Pathology of the United States, writes me to say—"Our prevailing rust here is P. graminis, although P. rubigo-vera is quite common."

Dr.

Dr. Cobb has decided that P. rubigo-vera is the commonest in New South Wales, and this in turn suggests the question as to the intermediary host of the fungus. The Barberry in Europe can act as host to the summer rust, and it is too rare with us to be taken into account; but the ironweed (Lithospermum arvense), which is very common indeed in some parts of the Colony, may act as host to the spring rust. I have not yet met with the cluster-cups of the rust on the numerous specimens of ironweed examined, and the probabilities are that the spring rust can propagate itself without the intervention of an intermediary host, just like the summer rust and others. In this case, then, the so-called black spores, or teleutospores, may germinate upon and produce the rust fungus in the wheat-plant, as has been shown by Plowright to be very likely the case with the germinating teleutospores of P. graminis.*

6. Climate in its relation to Rust.

From the returns it is seen that rust prevails usually in seasons of excessive rainfall, especially during October and November, and it appears when close, muggy weather sets in. It spreads most rapidly in calm, hot days, and dewy, foggy nights; and windy weather is, as a rule, unfavourable to rust.

Mr. Inglis referred to the theory of a good, heavy downpour of rain washing the rust off the plants, and noted that it was not the case with him. However, instances do occur; and a case is mentioned in the returns where a rusted wheat crop was cleaned by heavy rain and wind, and the yield turned out 40 bushels per acre, with nice, clean, bright straw. Dr. Sorauer mentions a somewhat parallel case from the experimental plots at Proskau, in Germany, where a velvet wheat, so badly attacked in its early stages as to be given up as a failure, recovered after a severe thunder-shower, and yielded a perfectly good crop, with ears sound and well-filled. Such experiences are not rare, and the practical farmer says that the rain has washed away the rust; but the sudden arrest of the growth of the fungus is not to be so easily accounted for. Probably, as Dr. Sorauer remarks, the sudden increase in the growing energy of the host-plant has altered the previous conditions favourable to the growth of the fungus, and it may be that the sudden lowering of the temperature had something to do with it.

7. Soil.—Nature and depth in relation to Rust.

At the last Conference the nature of the soil in its relation to rust was often referred to. Thus, the Hon. J. L. Dow spoke of the absence of silica in the soil as a cause of rust. Mr. Inglis found that high lands with a limestone bottom were less liable to rust than others, and Mr. M'Lean spoke similarly of a granite formation. Mr. Anderson gave the unanimous opinion of farmers as being that rust is worst on rich, fertile soil, and Mr. Pearson noticed the statement that rust does less damage on dry limestone and chalky soils.

The majority of the Victorian farmers consider that the soil has no influence on rust, further than that rich land—good strong land—is the most affected; and some even go the length of saying that by reducing the strength of the land, by cultivating wheat crops four or five years in succession, there is little or no rust.

Considering that the farmers of New South Wales also agree that rich fertile land is the worst for rust, it seems to me that this is the most important practical fact to remember in connection with the relation of the soil to rust. It may influence our views as to the application of remedies. It is also noticed that granite soils, especially where hilly, do not favour the rust, as observed by Mr. M'Lean, and stiff, clayey land, with a retentive subsoil, is most affected.

But Table I, giving a rough classification of the soils and their relation to rust, will show that not much light is thrown on the subject, and that rust will pretty well appear on any soil, the conditions otherwise being favourable. The one clear fact, as already mentioned, is that, if anything, rust is worst in rich soils.

The deficiency of silica in the soil, as mentioned by Mr. Dow, is sometimes brought forward as being the main cause of rust, and in this connection it may be advisable to quote the distinguished vegetable physiologist, Professor Sachs†:—"It is established that this substance (silica) is superfluous for the processes of nutrition and growth, and quite certain that the exceedingly fine masses of silica in the epidermis of these plants scarcely at all effects the elasticity and rigidity of the haulms and leaves. The somewhat thoughtless assumption that the rigidity of the haulms of cereals is essentially promoted by the silica which they contain, impelled agriculturists, thirty years ago, to manure their wheat-fields with costly preparations of silica, hoping thereby to prevent the laying of the wheat. By laying, is understood the giving way of the lower joints of the haulms, especially in continuous rainy weather, so that whole wheat-fields have have their haulms laid flat on the earth before the ripening of the grain. In my Experimental Physiologie (1865), and still earlier in my lectures, I demonstrated the incorrectness of this view, and showed that the laying of the wheat has nothing whatever to do with the silica, but is due to deficient lignification of the supporting tissues in the haulms, which stand too closely together, shade one another, and so assume the diseased condition of etiolation; and just those wheat-fields best supplied with food, and the plants of which shade one another to the greatest extent, are most exposed to laying. It would not now occur to any agriculturist to dig his gold into his wheat-fields in the form of silica."

The stiffening of the stem and leaf is thus due to the lignification of the tissues, and not to the deposit of silica, so that the weakening of the plant is not due to the absence of silica from the soil.

8. Treatment of Soil in its relation to Rust.

a. Manuring.—At the last Conference, Professor Lowrie gave the generally received opinion that nitrogenous or farmyard manure favours rust, while Mr. Pearson demurred as to the influence of nitrogen in favouring rust. Mr. Anderson suggested that stable manure might act as a host to the rust, just as we find the spores of mould harboured by horse-droppings.

As will be seen from Table II, the great majority use no manure, and where used it is most favourable to rust. Farm-yard or stable manure is noticed as being decidedly favourable to the development of rust; and this is very probably owing to the teleuto spores upon the straw composing the manures.

b. Cultivation.—The question of cultivation is an important one, and, it may be added, a contradictory one, as judged by the returns. Mr. M'Lean mentioned a case where the well-wrought land produced a slightly rusty crop, while the headlands, comparatively little wrought, was entirely free, although alongside of rusty wheat. Then Mr Anderson instanced one farmer, who said that deep ploughing meant ruination, while another said that shallow ploughing did; and Mr. Coker expressed himself a firm believer in deep or shallow ploughing, according to the season—deep when dry, shallow when wet. All this shows that the question depends on soil and climate and nature of season, and from different districts the replies necessarily vary.

Table III gives the various views, without reference to locality, and it will be observed that the vast majority offer no opinion, possibly because they consider it has no bearing on the question. As between deep and shallow cultivation, eighteen consider shallow cultivation favourable, while twelve think so of deep cultivation, and thus shallow cultivation is reckoned most favourable to rust.

c. Drainage.—This is perhaps one of the most important measures at the farmer's command for the mitigation of rust, and the returns decidedly show that undrained land is most affected, and, in some instances, the only kind affected.

Many express the belief that the want of drainage is the cause of rust to a certain extent, and the Rust Committee of 1864 are emphatic on this point:—"We are inclined to attribute the blight mainly to want of sufficient drainage, whereby a decay of the plant in the earlier stages of its development is caused through excessive moisture, accelerated by fungus growth, and perhaps by insufficiency of lime and phosphates in the soil."

d. Irrigation.—Very little can be said on the effects of irrigation, since so few have had experience of it. The following are the reports:—

1. "My crops were all irrigated, but the unirrigated crops of the district suffered just as much."
2. "Rust worst on land that was irrigated during very hot weather."

3. "A little rust on irrigated part, but none on unirrigated."

The question was raised in the first Conference of Irrigationists held in Melbourne during March 1890, whether irrigation encouraged or discouraged rust in wheat, &c., and the decision came to was thus expressed by the Hon. Alfred Deakin, who presided:—"I take it that the general verdict of those present at all events is not stronger than this, is that they have not been more troubled by rust or parasitic fungi in the irrigated crops than in the non-irrigated."

(e.) Fallowing.—The subject of fallowing was specially noticed at last Conference. Mr. Inglis had quite as much rust on fallowed as on unfallowed land, and, while a believer in fallowing, did not consider it a rust preventive.

According to the returns, the general opinion is that fallowed land is most affected by rust; but it must be remembered that it usually bears a better crop than the other.

9. Situations and Conditions favourable to Rust.

The following are the situations and conditions favourable to rust most frequently mentioned and arranged in the order of frequency:—

1. In hollows, including low-lying ground where water lodges.
 2. On rich soil or virgin land where there is a rank growth.
 3. Around trees or in sheltered spots where the wind cannot readily get at the crop.
- A large number, however, consider that there are no particular spots favourable to rust, all places being more or less alike.

Mr. Inglis found rust worst on lands with a westerly aspect, and two farmers express the same opinion in the return.

10. Seed-wheat and sowing in its relation to Rust.

(a.) Seed suitable for the various districts.—The general result is in favour of seed from a colder and drier district in both the northern and southern divisions, but of course there are local conditions which modify this.

(b.) Thick and thin sowing.—The vast majority find thickly sown crops the most liable to rust, and the following are the figures according to the returns.

TABLE VI.—Thick and thin sowing in relation to Rust.

At the last Conference, Professor Shelton, referring to the fact that there has been a steady diminution of the ravages of rust in the United States during the last twenty-five years, says: "I am confident that the amount of seed used has been diminished almost annually: It is possible that this may have something to do with the recent diminution of rust." Very probably it has.

Then Mr. Pearson referred to experimental plots of his own; on which he observed that "thinly-sown and thickly-sown were equally affected by rust." But the general experience is decidedly in favour of thin sowing with reference to rust in Victoria. Dr. Plowright remarks in a recent letter: "It is an interesting fact that with you a thin crop suffers less than a thickly sown one. The reverse is the case with us."

(c.) Mode of sowing—Broadcast or by Drill.—Sowing broadcast is the almost universal practice among the farmers who have sent in reports; only a few sow by drill; so that but a very few have practically tested both methods. Of ten who have observed both methods, five could see no difference, four are in favour of drill sowing, and one of broadcast sowing as regards rust.

11. Relative value of Rust-shrivelled and Plump Seed.

This is a most important point to settle, whether the farmer may be safely recommended to sow rusted seed or not. At the last Conference this matter was prominently brought forward by most of the speakers, but nothing of a very definite character was made out about it—in fact, it was submitted that the evidence then at command did not allow of a satisfactory solution.

The chairman, the Hon. J. L. Dow, referred to the quandary in which farmers were, over this very point, and he asked, "When they get rust into their crops there is a great deal of it shrivelled, and what is to be done with the shrivelled wheat? Millers will not buy it; is it good for sowing or feeding? They are afraid to sow it. If they could do that, they could utilise a certain portion of the wheat, and sow the other portion."

He was followed by Prof. Lowrie, who observed that the late Dr. Schomburgh found that the shrivelled rusty wheat germinated and grew, and it was thought better that farmers should sow this rusty wheat rather than leave their land idle. Then we have his own opinion and belief in the following words:—"I do not think, however, it it would be in the least advisable for this Conference to countenance the sowing of rusted wheat. All other things being equal, I believe wheat that has been rusted will be more apt to have it, if it be sown in the succeeding year, than a clean wheat. If it be possible for us to obtain comparatively clean seed, let us have it, because the risk must be considerably less."

Then Mr. Inglis, who has been farming in South Australia for over thirty years, observed that those who sowed shrivelled seed from the very rusty year 1868, had the best crops next year, superior to the crops produced from good clean seed.

Mr. Anderson, likewise, called attention to the extraordinary fact that shrivelled seed did as well as plump seed, since the farmers had admitted it; while Mr. Pearson was sceptical as to its value. He considered that "there is a very considerable possibility of the disease being conveyed through the rust-affected seed," and even if that were not so, "yet the wheat that grows from that may be liable in an increased degree to the attacks of rust should the season be favourable."

And, finally, Mr. Coker gave it as his practical experience—"I got a better crop from the wheat that was shrivelled than from the other."

From the above it will be seen that the matter requires further investigation. Fortunately, during the past season (1880) many farmers tried the sowing of rust-shrivelled seed with success who had never attempted it before, and I am now able to present a body of evidence, drawn from the practical experience of the farmer, which is very satisfactory and conclusive as far as it goes. This question I consider so important that I have made a special detailed abstract of the opinions of the farmers who have sent in replies, for they are very capable judges of the value of a crop, whether obtained from rust-shrivelled or plump seed.

The following summary gives the general experience of Victorian farmers with rust-shrivelled seed:—

TABLE VII.—Relative Value of Rust-shrivelled and Plump Seed.

	Farmers.

Second generation from rust-shrivelled seed	22

Out of 112 who tried it, 97 found it at least equal to plump seed, while 12 reckoned it superior, and 3 inferior. Of the latter, one says—"I have proved that it will not overtake plump seed throughout the season if the land is on the poor side, which is too often the case." And the other—"Rusty seed does not appear to produce rust more than plumper varieties during what we may term dry seasons; but I decidedly prefer sowing sound plump seed."

And the third—"Rust-shrivelled when growing appeared equal with healthy seed, but when threshed and cleaned the wheat from healthy seed was by far the best sample (1890). I have sown it years ago as an experiment, and found it quite as good as the best."

Thus, the vast majority of farmers have found rust-shrivelled seed to be at least equal to plump seed in quality and yield, and if the rustiness of the resulting crop is taken into account, it is found to be just like that from plump seed, while many state that they have never seen a rusty crop from rusty seed.

The second generation of the rust-shrivelled seed sown yielded good crops, just like others, and the rust when present was similar to that on other crops.

It would be out of place here to mention individual instances, but an experiment at Dookie Agricultural College may be given. The same variety of wheat was taken and sown under similar condition—the one being "rusty small seed," and the other "plump unrusted seed." The rusty seed yielded 26½ bushels per acre of grain, and 2,920 lb. of straw, and described as "splendid heavy grain," while the plump seed yielded 20½ bushels per acre, and 4,240 lb. of straw, the grain being "not quite so good."

Mr. Thompson remarks: "The surprise of this experiment is the extraordinary yield from shrivelled rusty grain." No doubt, in a given weight there were far more rusty grains than plump grains, but that does not affect the result, that from a given area rust-shrivelled seed yielded a better and larger crop than plump seed.

It may also be noticed that at the recent grain show held in Melbourne, the first prize wheat (red straw), weighing 67 lb. 11 oz. to the bushel, was grown on old land from rust-shrivelled seed.

It has been a surprise to many that rust-shrivelled seed should be fit and used for sowing purposes, and even its capacity for germination and growth had to be tested in South Australia; but it has long been known that rust-shrivelled seed might be safely used for seed. Thus Jethro Tull, in his "Horse-hoeing Husbandry," (1751) says: "Some have thought that a large grain of wheat would produce a larger plant than a small grain, but I have full experience to the contrary. Farmers in general know this, and choose the thinnest, smallest-grained wheat for seed, and therefore prefer that which is blighted and lodged." Also, Sir Joseph Banks, in his paper on "Wheat Mildew" (1806), notices that rust-shrivelled wheat may be employed for seed.

Dr.

Dr. Plowright, referring to the minutes of last Conference, writes: "I notice that Mr. Inglis confirms the well-known fact that seed-wheat taken from mildewed plants produces healthy plants." This was noticed by Sir Joseph Banks at the beginning of the present century. It may be added that the successful sowing of rust-shrivelled seed was also strongly brought out in the committee's report on Rust in Wheat (Melbourne, 1864). Thus the hereditary nature of the disease is negatived; and this is a point of great practical importance, for Dr. Griffith's in his work on "Plant Diseases," gives the advice—"Seed from mildewed corn crops should not be drilled, as Mr. Smith has shown that the disease is hereditary."

The facts on which this view is based are mainly :—

- 1st. The successful sowing of rust-shrivelled seed in so many instances not only bearing an excellent crop, but without a speck of rust, and this not only in a single season, but noticed at various intervals since the commencement of the century.
- 2nd. Rust-shrivelled seed in a rusty year faring no worse than the so-called healthy seed.

There are only a few instances of bad rusty years following each other, and to mention but one instance in which rusty seed from 1888 was sown in 1889, the reply was, from one of our most observant farmers—"I did not observe any difference in rustiness between crops from it and from plump healthy seeds."

On the other hand, neither the first nor the second generation from rust-shrivelled seed are proof against rust in a rusty season.

12. Varieties of Wheat most and least affected by Rust and Rust-free for several years.

The experience of farmers in the matter of varieties of wheat most and least liable to rust, over a wide area, is naturally very conflicting; but among the numerous varieties mentioned there are a few which may be discarded as being very susceptible to rust in almost any district; while there are others which have been proved by experience to be rust-resisting to a considerable extent. The varieties least affected, with the number of times mentioned, are as follows :—

Red Tuscan, 27.
Purple Straw, 26.
Port M'Donnell, 18.
Frampton, 10.
Mexican, 7.
Steinwedel, 6.

The varieties most affected are :—

Purple Straw, 26.
Golden Drop, 23.
Steinwedel, 6.

Purple Straw is in the peculiar position of being evenly balanced, 26 placing it among the least affected and 26 among the most affected.

Golden Drop is always mentioned as being most affected, and ought, therefore, to be avoided on the score of rust.

Steinwedel is likewise evenly balanced, and, like Purple Straw, it will have to be considered what districts suit it best.

As regards varieties rust-free for several years, there are practically none which escape in a rusty season; but among those free from rust several years in succession, mention is made of Port M'Donnell, Mexican, Defiance, Steinwedel, Farmer's Glory, Pollock Wheat, Blount's Hybrid No. 10, and Galand's Hybrid. All are mentioned but once, with the exception of Port M'Donnell twice. Seventy-five consider that there are none rust-free for several years, and 16 give no report.

13. Preventive measures tried—Nature and result.

The preventive measures actually tried have not been numerous, as many farmers believe that rust is entirely due to climatic conditions over which they have no control.

The following gives a general idea of the returns :—

1. No preventive measures tried	103
2. Early sowing, &c.	14
3. Chemicals used to destroy fungus	4
4. Harrowing, sheep-grazing, cutting for hay, &c.	7

The chemicals used have been salt and nitre, lime and carbolic acid.

Salt and Nitre.—"Tried experiments on a small scale with salt as top-dressing, also with nitre. Salt appeared to stunt the growth of the wheat-plants and nitre forced it. Both toughened the straw, but as rust only appears disastrously in our district (Benalla Shire) about every eleven years, these experiments are not reliable."

Lime and Salt-water.—"Have tried lime, also salt-water on affected patches, but with no result."

Salt.—"When I was cultivating a paddock for wheat and knew any parts in it thought too strong, I have sown 2 cwt. salt per acre with good results. I may say that plan was adopted in the old country where corn was likely to be flaggy, and it always had the effect of stiffening the straw."

Carbolic Acid.—"I have steeped my wheat in carbolic acid, supposed to be a cure for rust, but it was a complete failure, and through that I lost more by smut than ever I did by rust."

Of the other measures tried, harrowing may be mentioned, done by Professor Brown at Longerenong Agricultural College. "Harrowing when crop was about 2 feet in height, improved yield of grain, and the crop was but very slightly affected by rust."

14. Results of burning stubble, and surface of land.

The object of burning the straw, stubble, &c., is to destroy the spores of rust which in a rusty season are left behind on the wheat-field in countless millions, and ready, if conditions are favourable, to germinate and reproduce the rust next season. Burning the straw is a wise precaution, even if the season be a non-rusty one as in 1890, for the absence of rust-spores will tend to prevent the weakening of the plant, as happens from the rust settling on the lower leaves; but the full benefit is not received from burning the stubble, if the weeds which harbour the parasite are left alone on the headlands or in adjoining paddocks, hence the necessity for attending to these as well.

The answers to this question may be classified as follows:—

Not tried	67
No result noted	23
No difference, or no use	26
Burning favourable to rust	3
Burning unfavourable to rust	7
Burning good for resulting crop, rust or not	2
	128

15. Miscellaneous information.

In reply to the query, "Is there any other information you would like to give?" many have availed themselves of the opportunity to make various suggestions, recommendations and remarks, and of these the following may be noticed:—

Rust on self-sown crops.—Out of ten farmers who have paid attention to self-sown crops seven found them rusty and three free from rust. One of the rust free patches was in 1890 growing among rusty oats. The presence of rust on self-sown crops is a well-established fact, and during the past season (1890) I watched specimens of self-sown wheat and oats growing in the Melbourne Domain which were literally rotten with rust; but on the other hand, a self-sown crop is not necessarily a rusty crop, as some would seem to imply, and in evidence of this the following are the statements:—One says, "Any grains that drop from the harvesting (these we term self-sown) lie exposed, grow with the early rains, and do not get killed in the cultivating, are much more forward than those which are sown, and are never affected with rust. Another says, "The fact stands out so clear to me that I have never seen rust on self-sown crops." While a third says, "The self-sown patches, where the stripping had been done, were free of rust and ripened well, and this must have been from very shrivelled seed. The self-sown rusty wheat, growing among Calcutta oats, which were badly affected in places, was entirely free."

Rotation of crops.—One farmer remarks, "I believe wheat should not follow wheat, and the sooner the farmer realises this fact and introduces into his system of farming rotation of crops, the better it will be for every one concerned."

Recommendations and suggestions.—When rust appears on wheat before the milk is out of the grain, cut it down at once for hay."

"Where a portion of a crop is laid, if rust is prevalent, the laid portion will be far the worst, thus showing to my mind that a free current of air tends to check the spread of rust."

Green Brothers of Shepparton write:—"As far as we can judge, the only preventive for rust is to drain off the surface water, burn rubbish off the ground before ploughing, and have all self-sown eaten down bare with sheep."

Mr. Thompson, late of Dookie Agricultural College, writes:—"I almost despair of ever being able to procure a specific for the prevention of rust, but I believe the Rust Commission are taking the wisest steps to further this end. The utmost the practical farmer can do is to cultivate early stout-strawed varieties of wheat, sow early in a dry seed bed, drain his land where necessary, and trust to Providence."

Conclusion.

If we endeavour to gather up some of the valuable material contained in the farmers' reports, and present it in a compact form, we may first of all glance at what is found by experience to be unfavourable and favourable to rust in Victoria. This may be given in the form of a double list:—

Unfavourable to rust.	Favourable to rust.
Early sowing.	Excessive rainfall, especially during October and November.
Early-maturing varieties.	Close, muggy weather.
Hardy varieties.	Calm days, dewy foggy nights.
Drainage.	Farm-yard manure.
Thin sowing.	Fallowed land (but it yields a better crop at least in non-rusty seasons).
Dry seed-bed.	Low-lying damp districts.
Deep cultivation generally,	Sheltered spots.
Burning stubble, rubbish, &c.
Removing, as far as possible, all hosts of rust-parasite.

Next, a few simple statements may be made as to the best measures to adopt for lessening or preventing the damage due to rust:—

1. Maintaining a high standard of health. This is simply to surround the plant with as many suitable conditions as are included in good farming.
2. Use all possible measures unfavourable to rust and avoid those favourable.
3. Remove the exciting cause as far as possible—that is, the spores—by burning stubble, removing weeds on which they thrive, &c.
4. Remove the predisposing cause by obtaining rust-resisting varieties.
5. Spray the crop at the critical stage, when rust appears, with some suitable solution to destroy it.

It may be said that there is nothing new in all this—nothing further added to our equipment for the next serious rust visitation; but without granting this, we may now mention a few of the matters in which definite knowledge is still wanting. 1.

1. A complete list of the grasses and other plants on which the rust of wheat may live, is still a desideratum. Besides the wheat itself, Puccinia graminis has been found in Europe upon thirty-four grasses, and Puccinia rubigo-vera upon sixteen grasses. This list is being steadily completed for the Colonies, and will form at least one useful addition to our present knowledge.

2. The production of rust-resisting varieties in the different Colonies, whether by hybridization or selection, is another highly useful and important work to be done.

3. Experiments with different sprays upon the wheat-crop at the appropriate time, either before a likely attack of rust, or when rust has attacked it. This has to a certain extent been done and found successful. Thus, it is found that a 3 per cent. Bordeaux mixture, i.e., three parts sulphate of copper, dissolved in 100 parts water, with three parts quicklime, made into an emulsion with water, sprayed a few times over an experimental plot of wheat, prevents the development of rust; and a solution of iron-sulphate is a cheap and efficient dressing recommended for destroying the rust. So important do I consider this application of a solution at the early stages of the appearance of rust, that I would ask this Conference to recommend that a bonus be given for the most suitable spraying apparatus—for the best mechanical means of overcoming the difficulty of distributing a solution over a growing crop, several feet high, without unduly injuring it. Some farmers have expressed their willingness, in the event of rust breaking out in wheat-crops, to use some modified form of the Strawsonizer, drawn by four horses, and in bad cases, even to mow down for hay a passage through the crop for the machine.

And this mention of the application of solutions to the wheat when attacked by rust, leads me to remark in conclusion that it is a mistake to confine attention to one particular instance of a disease, such as rust in wheat, when similar diseases attack other plants which may have been successfully treated for it. Thus, there is one kind of rust especially interesting to the farmer, say Puccinia rubigo-vera, another kind of special interest to the fruit-growers, Puccinia pruni of the peach and plum, and a third kind specially interesting to the market-gardener, Puccinia apii on the celery. Inasmuch as they are all Puccinias, what has been found successful in one case, might at least be tried in another, and since the peach-leaf rust can be kept in abeyance, so might that of celery and wheat. A striking illustration of this is afforded in the recent discovery of a remedy for potato disease by using successfully the same remedy as was found effectual in the downy mildew of the vine, seeing that both diseases belong to the same, or closely allied genera, viz., peronospora. Cases like these show the desirability of diseases like rust in wheat, being treated from the higher standpoint of a knowledge of kindred diseases at least.

Questions regarding Rust in Wheat, sent out by the Victorian Department of Agriculture.

1. How long is it since rust first appeared in your neighbourhood?
2. In what years have your crops been affected by rust?
3. In what years were they most damaged?
4. What are the usual dates for sowing and reaping in your district?
5. On what dates in each rusty year were your rusted crops sown and reaped?
6. Were the rusted crops cut for hay or reaped for grain? If reaped for grain, were they allowed to ripen before cutting, or while standing in the sheaf?
7. How many acres were attacked, and what was the amount of damage per acre?
8. At what time of the year was the rust first seen?
9. At what time of the year was it observed to spread throughout the crop?
10. What other crops and plants, especially grasses, have been attacked by rust?
11. What is the nature of your climate?
12. What was the nature of the seasons in the year when rust prevailed?
13. What kind of weather occurred when the rust was first seen?
14. What kind of weather occurred when rust spread throughout the crop?
15. What is the direction of your prevailing wind? Have you observed that any special wind prevails during rusty seasons?
16. Where is your wheat-growing farm situated? What is its height above the sea? Is it exposed or sheltered, level, sloping, or undulating? If it is on a slope, please state the direction of slope?
17. What is the nature of your soil and subsoil?
18. What is the nature of the soil and subsoil of those portions of your land affected or most affected by rust?
19. Have you found rust to first appear, or to be most virulent, on any particular slopes of your land, or in hollows, or near trees, hedges, or other shelter, near to streams; in the middle of the paddocks, or near the headlands and sides?
20. Which of the following crops have been most affected by rust:—The manured or the unmanured; those grown on deeply cultivated land, or on shallow cultivated land; those on drained or on undrained land; on irrigated or on irrigated land; on fallowed or on cropped land?
21. What was the kind of manure applied to crops that were attacked, or most attacked, by rust?
22. What kind of wheat do you use for seed? Is it imported into your district or home grown?
23. Does wheat from colder or warmer, wetter or drier, districts suit your district the best?
24. What quantity of seed do you sow per acre? Have you found any difference, as regards rust, between thinly-sown and thickly-sown crops?
25. Do you sow broadcast or by drill? Have you observed any difference as regards rust between broadcast and drill-sown crops?

26. What varieties of wheat have you found most affected and least affected by rust?
27. Have you found any variety of wheat which in your district has for several years escaped free from rust?
28. What is your experience with rust-shrivelled seed as compared with healthy seed?
29. Have you tried the effect of burning all the straw, tailings, stubble, and refuse of rusted crops, and of burning the surface of the land? If so, with what result?
30. Have you tried any other measures for prevention? If so, with what result?
31. Is there any other information which you would like to give?
32. Give your name and address, stating the parish and shire in which your wheat-growing land is situated.

Additional questions sent out February, 1891.

1. Had you any rust during the past season (1890-91) on any varieties of wheat, either on straw or flag, and to what extent did it affect the crop as compared with the preceding season?
 2. If rusty, give date of sowing and harvesting crop?
 - 3a. What is your experience with rust-shrivelled seed, comparing the quality and yield with that of plump seed?
 - b. Did it ever produce a rusty crop?
 - c. Have you ever sown the second generation of rust-shrivelled seed, and how did the yield compare with that from the first sowing?
 4. Have you ever cut rusted wheat in the early dough state; if so, with what result as to yield and character of grain?
- Specimens of any weeds or grasses attacked by rust to be forwarded.

Dr. COBB (New South Wales) thought the Victorian Delegates ought to be highly complimented on the information they had brought before the Conference. The experiments had been ingeniously carried out, and the deductions were most complete. It seemed to him that there could not be any stronger proof of the wisdom of placing experimental plots under the charge of an intelligent thinking man, than the facts disclosed in the paper read by Mr. Pearson. He would be glad to hear what the disease was which was referred to as "take all."

Mr. PEARSON (Victoria) explained that it was a disease which appeared in a crop, and destroyed everything growing around certain spots, leaving nothing but bare patches of earth. He was of opinion that it might be due to a variety of causes; one cause seemed undoubtedly to be a fungus which attacked the roots. Such a fungus was first described by Dr. Carl Mücke in his prize essay on "Take all," published by the South Australian Government. In that essay Dr. Mücke gave drawings of the fungus, which, however, were not satisfactory, and also stated that Baron von Mueller had named the fungus Xenodochium cerealium.

Mr. INGLIS (South Australia) could remember "take all" in his Colony for the last twenty-five years. It attacked any kind of land, and happened as often in crops grown on virgin soil as in cultivated land.

Dr. COBB (New South Wales) said he had asked, not out of any doubt of its existence, but to obtain information. Numbers of specimens had been sent to the Department described as being affected with "take all," and he could never make out any cause for it; but he had satisfied himself that many of the specimens sent described as suffering from "take all" were affected by a number of diseases.

Mr. PEARSON (Victoria) had always considered it as a convenient term, and used much in the same sense as the word "feverish," as applied to man.

Mr. M'ALPINE (Victoria) agreed with Mr. Pearson that "take all" was a convenient term, and he was sorry to say that from what he could hear it was very much on the increase.

Mr. INGLIS (South Australia) said that in several places in South Australia, it was in well worked land that "take all" did the most damage.

The DIRECTOR inquired if any farmers in South Australia had discovered any reasons for its appearance or examined the roots of any plants affected.

Mr. INGLIS (South Australia) mentioned that in some instances he had found the roots of affected plants covered with a sort of mildew.

Mr. KELLY (South Australia) said that during the great rust years of South Australia, 1867 and 1868, a Royal Commission had been appointed by the Government, which sat for six months, and the question of "take all" was also considered, and the following is extracted from the Report of that Commission:—"This disease, so destructive in many districts of South Australia, is not so well understood as rust. Farmers and chemists are alike at sea; ploughmen and microscopical observers differ in toto as to its nature and causes. It is said to result from an exhausted soil, from the presence of too much salt in the soil, from the deficiency of some constituent element essential to the maturing of cereal crops; it is declared to be want of drainage, and it is said to be want of manure; it is affirmed to be caused by a vegetable fungus, and to be analogous to the potato disease; it is also said to be the result of insect ravages. Scarcely any two witnesses agree on this point, whether farmers or chemists. In some respects 'take all' is more to be dreaded than rust. It appears altogether independently of the weather, and as it ravages are irrespective of climatic influences, so are its movements inexplicable by reference to locality or soil. It attacks newly broken or fallowed land, as well as land frequently cropped. All cereals fall before it; even native grasses disappear. It works in patches, selecting certain spots or centres—thence radiating, often succeeded succeeded by cocksbur or Grant's thistle, the 'take all' in following seasons reappearing in other spots. Dr. Muecke has magnified and photographed the fibres of the roots of wheat plants suffering from 'take all,' exhibiting a number of minute white threads of a woolly appearance, which he considers to be the mycelia of a fungus causing the disease. Mr. Ey, who has also examined it microscopically, says it is not a fungus, and that the supposed fungoid may be found attached to all roots, healthy or unhealthy. He considers that the disease is caused either by animalculæ attacking the plant in the first instance, or by the growth of a sort of lichen at the bottom of the stalk, which serves as a nest for animalculæ. He says:—"What I recognise under the name of 'take all,' is the vibrio tritice, or eel of wheat. A plant taken from a diseased spot will be found black on the stem, from the roots to the first internode; and, on pressing, a thin film of lichen or moss will come off. In this will be found a number of animalculæ coiled up, apparently dead; but on being moistened with a drop of water, on a glass slide under the microscope, will come to life in an hour, moving about with great rapidity. They are like eels of wheat, which, as yet have only been found in the grain. I have not yet satisfied myself whether the eel or the lichen is the primary cause; but one of the two is 'take all.' The animalculæ might be sown with the seed. It is sometimes the case that one grain of wheat will contain 4,000 to 5,000 eels of wheat." Experiments are recommended with diluted sulphuric acid as a top-dressing, and sulphur and lime as a pickle for the seed." He thought that extract might be of service in explaining what 'take all' was.

Mr. E. M. SHELTON (Queensland) understood Mr. Pearson to say that the chief means of prevention were rust-resisting varieties and early varieties. He thought Mr. Pearson had struck the key-note of their operations as delegates. Mr. M'Alpine had credited him with the statement "that the improvements in the United States was due to the reduction of the quantity of seed per acre." The remark he had made was that "the improvement was due to the constant changing and improvement in the kinds of seed." He was much interested in Mr. Pearson's remarks with regard to plotting; but he was not convinced, nor should be until he had an opportunity of examining their methods more closely. He had conducted a similar experiment, and had found that plots which had received no fertilising agent were just as variable in their results as those which had been fertilised. He would like very much for the Convention to agree to a definite line of experimental work to be carried out in the four Colonies, so that during a single season they would get results which would otherwise take four or five years to obtain. He hoped sincerely that one of the results of the Conference would be to institute this sort of experimental work.

Mr. PEARSON (Victoria) trusted Mr. Shelton would credit him with sufficient experience to be aware of the necessity for a continuation of the experiments which were not by any means conclusive. From the plans and descriptions in his report it would be seen that control plots were properly distributed over the ground so as to show the natural variation of the soil, and the probable limits of experimental error.

Mr. FARRER (New South Wales) commented on the difficulty of sufficiently grasping the points of a report to enable them to criticise it properly at a moment's notice. He expressed the hope that before the Conference broke up a resolution would be passed that the papers to be read at these Conferences should be in the hands of the delegates some time before the Conferences assembled.

The DIRECTOR pointed out that it took some time to prepare the reports after the answers came in, and if the Conferences met at the usual date there would not be much time to send copies of them to the different delegates.

Some discussion took place on a request by Mr. Smith Ellis, who was present as a visitor, that he might be permitted to read a report before the Conference.

It was resolved, on the motion of Mr. M'Lean, that Mr. Smith Ellis' papers be handed to the Chairman for reference to the Committee which had been appointed to consider the matter.

Mr. SMITH ELLIS urged that he had some samples of Mycelium to produce, which he could not hand to the Chairman.

The Delegates adhered to their resolution, and Mr. Smith Ellis declined to hand in his papers; so the matter dropped.

The Conference then adjourned until 9 a.m. on the following day.

FRIDAY, 5TH JUNE.—FOURTH DAY.

THE Delegates re-assembled at 9 a.m., when Mr. H. C. L. Anderson occupied the chair, in the absence of the Minister, and called upon the Queensland Delegates for their report.

Notes upon the Wheat Crop in Queensland in 1890, in reference to the Conference on Rust in Wheat, held in Melbourne, in March, 1890.

Mr. M'LEAN (Queensland) read the following report:—

Wheat.

It is gratifying to be able to report that the last crop in Queensland was most successful and that those farmers who were not deterred by previous losses from rust from planting large areas with this cereal, were well repaid for their work. Rust certainly appeared in a few places, but the attack was so mild that practically no loss resulted. The success of last season can be attributed to two causes: (1) The favourable planting season, which afforded the seed a chance to germinate properly, and also favourable weather for the growth of young plants; (2) in the month of October, when wheat is in that condition that it most readily succumbs to rust, the weather during that month in last year was dry and cold;—thus a good crop of most excellent grain was secured to the farmers. The last season has conclusively demonstrated that under favourable circumstances the soil and climate of Queensland are equally well adapted to the growth of wheat as that of any other of the Australasian Colonies.

At the previous Conference, held in Melbourne in March of last year, certain recommendations were made, and certain lines of action laid down to be carried out by each Colony. Of these the chief were:—

- 1st. This Conference is of opinion that each of the Australian Governments should institute, as early as practicable, a series of experiments on as many of the following subjects as circumstances will allow; such experiments to be continued over a series of years, and the results to be published periodically for free distribution among all concerned.
- 2nd. This Conference affirms the value of publishing every autumn, in each Colony, a map indicating the extent to which each has been affected, and giving all data possible as to climatic and other conditions of the past season.
- 3rd. This Conference recommends the issuing of a series of questions to farmers and others interested throughout the different Colonies, with a view to eliciting as much individual experience as possible, and thence deducting general laws for general guidance.

Before the Conference was held, steps had been taken by the Department of Agriculture in Queensland to procure a "Strawsonizer," a machine, as you are doubtless aware, which has been lately invented for treating land and crops with remedial agents, it being thought, and I still hold to that opinion, that this machine would prove a valuable auxiliary in enabling the wheat growers to cope with the rust pest. With a view to carrying out experiments, and to test the value of the "Strawsonizer" 3 acres of land have been selected in two different parts of the Colony, each of which have been carefully subdivided and marked into plots, with a space between each, and each will be subjected to a different course of treatment, and the results carefully watched and noted. The accompanying diagrams give full information up to the present time.

It has not been possible to give effect to the second recommendation of the Conference; but with regard to the third, a circular containing twenty questions was compiled, with the object of eliciting as much individual experience as possible, and a copy sent to every farmer who is or has been in any way connected with wheat growing in Queensland, even on the smallest scale. From the circulars sent out, 134 replies were received, but little new information was elicited, which may very possibly be accounted for by the very favourable season experienced, and so little of the wheat having been attacked by rust, and also from the fact that it was the first time that the attention of Queensland farmers has been officially directed to the necessity for close observation. To this latter reason may be attributed the paucity of the replies to the circulars. It is, however, gratifying to find that though some have failed to grasp the importance of supplying detailed information, there are others who have taken great care, and have closely observed the various conditions necessary to supply the desired information upon which important lines of action could be taken.

Of the replies, 124 reported no rust in their wheat, ten that it was affected. In all these cases, excepting one, the attack was so slight that the grain did not suffer, the exception being a total loss. A question asked, among others, was relative to cutting the wheat in the dough stage. This was one of the means suggested at the Conference for saving a crop when attacked by rust, and enabling a farmer to cut early in harvest, before the season indicated favourable conditions for rust development. Thirty-three farmers farmers reported having cut wheat in this stage with the following results:—Good grain, eleven; pinched and shrivelled, twelve; worthless, ten. It is just possible that the latter (worthless) was cut a day or so too soon, with consequent loss.

Time of sowing.—Early sowing is generally acknowledged to be best, as by that means the crop has a better chance of coping with the rust. The danger that arises from this practice is that when the stalk is in bloom, a late frost may possibly occur and the crop lost; but in Queensland such is exceptional. From the middle of April to the middle of May is the best time for sowing, a great deal, however, depending upon the weather during that time. Some farmers decline to put their seed into a dry bed, but prefer to await a shower to ensure germination. Moreover, on some soils, where the land breaks up rough, the farmer prefers to wait for rain to enable him to harrow and pulverise the clods, and so secure by this means a more even seed-bed. Others, again, when the condition of the soil is favourable after ploughing, sow and trust to rain coming to start the seed.

Thick and thin sowing.—Opinions differ considerably upon this point, and will continue so to do so long as different soils are operated upon. In the replies to the questions under this head, it would appear that the answers are not based upon the experience of the last season, but upon that of former years. The balance of opinion, however, appears to be in favour of thin sowing.

Seed.—Rust-shrivelled seed has been used by sixty farmers, of whom fifty-five give testimony of having obtained excellent results, while five objected to the use of that kind of seed, chiefly on theoretical grounds.

Appearance and progress of rust.—The rust in Queensland makes its appearance during the month of September or ieselarly in October, during which months the dew heavy at night, and the sun's heat powerful during the day. It also makes its appearance on the flag during or immediately after a thunderstorm. Should a westerly wind then spring up the rust will make no headway, and the crop is not to any extent affected; but if the weather continue close and muggy the rust will spread rapidly, and the mischief is done.

Rust-resisting varieties.—It is generally conceded that some varieties of wheat are constitutionally better able to resist rust than others. The testimony of all the replies to the circulars sent out is strong on this point. The consensus of opinion, so far as the varieties of wheats now generally cultivated in Queensland, is as follows:—

	Not Rusted	Rusted
Defiance	25	.
Town and Country	8	.
Steinwedel	8	3
Belatourka*	2	.
White Lammas	1	10
White Tuscan	1	2
Purple Straw	4
Talavera	8	...
Bearded Egyptian	1	...

* This wheat was only introduced by the Department two seasons ago, and has only been cultivated on one or two farms, and then only in small quantities. Its record is good. The millers also speak highly of it, and the following extract from a letter to Mr. G. Moulday, of Allora, giving the result of a trial milling of a small quantity of this wheat, will show its value:—"The Belatouka wheat was submitted to Mr. Hayes, of the Queensland Milling Company, who said it was a very fine sample of wheat indeed, and would command the highest price in the market. He would like to get a few thousand bags, and would willingly pay 4s. He was of opinion the sample would turn out a really choice first class white flour with a large percentage of gluten in it. He considered the sample to be superior to any he had from the Downs, and a better class of wheat could not be grown."

Of the remainder of the wheats, Defiance, Town and Country, and Talavera head the list, and were all free from rust.

The question of the relative powers in rust resisting of imported and locally grown seed was referred to by twenty-eight farmers, fourteen favouring imported seed, and an equal number that locally grown. This is a question that could scarcely be decided by last season's experience; but is one well worthy of careful experiment.

Manure.—In very few instances was any manure put into the ground; that used was chiefly farmyard. In every case the crop was free from rust. Comparatively as few farmers as used manure had practical cleaning up of stubble and headlands by burning and other ways, but twenty-five favoured such a practice.

All the information to which I have referred in this paper will be carefully tabulated and arranged, as it will doubtless prove of great value for future use, more especially when compared with a season which does not prove as favourable as the last.

Imported seed.—Recognizing the fact that such grain as rust-proof wheat does not exist, or rather has not yet been found, the Queensland Department of Agriculture has aimed at introducing those varieties that have a reputation of being less liable to attack than others, and also with the object of securing a variety well adapted to the climatic conditions of the Colony. In addition to those previously imported, twenty bushels of Zimmerman wheat, which is said to be a good milling wheat, a heavy yielder, and matures early and well able to resist the attack of rust, were obtained last year from America. This has been distributed among well-known wheat growers upon the Darling Downs, more especially in that district in the neighbourhood of the town of Roma, on the western railway line, where a strong effort is being made to establish the cultivation of wheat as the staple industry of the district.

An interesting question is suggested by the fact that in notorious rust affected districts certain areas are never damaged by the disease. Several practical wheat growers of undoubted reliability have assured us that certain fields, although cropped with wheat almost continuously, have never failed to give a satisfactory crop, although other fields in the immediate neighbourhood, and often upon the same farm, have greatly suffered from rust.

If these exceptional fields exist in Queensland, most likely the other Colonies can show an analogous region thus favoured. Assuming, then, that these rust proof sections exist, it seems plain that this should be carefully studied with the object of learning the facts regarding the character of the soil, its exposure, drainage, &c., which explains their immunity from rustiness.

The following are copies of the documents distributed to farmers by the Queensland Department of Agriculture:—

Rust in Wheat.

Department of Agriculture, Brisbane, 21 October, 1890.

Sir,—The rust disease may be said to be the only serious obstacle to the cultivation of wheat in that large portion of Queensland suited by soil and climate to the growth of the great bread grain. Of the 15,861 acres of land seeded to wheat in 1889, only 2,700 acres were reported free from rust. The total yield of wheat for the year was 131,335 bushels, grown upon 7,504 acres of ground. The average yield of grain per acre, with the rust affected areas, was 17 bushels; while upon rust-free land the average was 21 bushels per acre. The average annual yield of wheat in the United States is 12 bushels, and of Great Britain 28 bushels per acre. These statistics show only a small part of the damage done the Queensland wheat crop by the rust pest, as much of the rusted grain was mown for hay (7,326 acres—almost one half of the total acreage), but they do indicate the position of the Colony as a wheat-growing State and the great importance of knowledge that will enable us to deal with the chief obstacle to further development of a great industry.

The Department of Agriculture earnestly invites your attention to the subjoined questions bearing upon the ravages of rust in the wheat-fields of the Colony, which are presented with the object of eliciting as much as possible of the experience and observation of practical wheat-growers. The information thus obtained will be presented to a Conference, consisting of representatives of the Colonies, which is to meet in Sydney in the autumn of 1891, to the end that practical rules to enable farmers to cope with the rust pest may be adduced. I need hardly say that this a matter of direct and vital importance to you. On this account, we rely confidently upon your hearty co-operation and aid.

The questions, with answers, should be returned to the Department not later than 31st January, 1891. The Department will be glad to reply to all questions relating to special or peculiar outbreaks of the disease, and to receive any information relating to it not covered by the questions.

PETER McLEAN,

Under Secretary for Agriculture.

1. Has your wheat crop been damaged by rust the present season? State proportion of crop injured.
2. What is the character of your farm—forest or scrub? Is the soil black soil, clay, or loam? What is the sub-soil?
3. State the kind of cultivation given to the land. Was deep or shallow ploughing done?
4. Was the ground a deep tilth, harrowed and well rolled?
5. When was rust first observed in your neighbourhood? Name the years in which it appeared?
6. How long has your wheat land been under cultivation?
7. What has been the previous cropping of the land?
8. Name the variety of wheat raised?
9. Did the growing grain stand thickly or thinly in the ground? How much seed was used per acre?
10. State the time of sowing? Was this early or late for your neighbourhood?
11. Was the ground manured? What manure was used?
12. Give the date when rust first appeared in your crop?
13. Have you ever cut rusted wheat in the early dough state; if so, with what result as to yield and character of the grain.
14. Was the weather when rust made most progress wet or dry, hot or cold?
15. How many acres had you under crop for wheat? How much of your wheat crop was cut for hay, and how much allowed to ripen?
16. What was the yield per acre of your wheat? (If you are unable to give yield by actual measurement, state your estimate of the yield.)
17. Have you observed any difference in varieties of wheat in rustiness?
18. What has been your experience or observation of wheat grown from rust-shrivelled seed?
19. Have you noticed any difference in rustiness of wheat plants from imported and locally grown seed?
20. Have you ever observed results favourable or unfavourable as to rust from burning stubble and other trash from and about wheat fields before sowing?

Queensland.—Department of Agriculture.

Suggestions for Checking the Ravages of Red Rust in the Wheat Plant.

In view of the enormous losses sustained in recent years by Queensland wheat-growers from the action of red rust, the Department of Agriculture directs attention to the subjoined facts, looking to the limitation of the destructive influence of this pest. The measures here proposed have, for the most part, received the unanimous endorsement of the Intercolonial Rust Conference, at which this Colony was represented, held in Melbourne from March 10th to 12th of this year. The

The recommendations here offered are not given as specific or absolute remedies for the disease.

There is no "rust proof" wheat, and probably no remedy that can be relied upon under all circumstances to ward off the destructive influences of rust; but there are a multitude of facts, growing out of the experience of Australian, European, and American farmers and practical experimentalists, all showing unmistakably that the damages from rust may be greatly curtailed, and in many cases prevented altogether.

These facts are presented and confidently recommended to wheat-growers as worthy of practical adoption by them in the operations connected with the growth of the crop of 1890, viz.:—

1. Early sowing.—Early-sown wheat, other things being equal, is least damaged, and in many cases reported has escaped injury by rust altogether.

2. Thin seeding.—It is a familiar fact that wheat growing in dense masses always falls an easy prey when rust prevails. On the other hand, wheat standing thinly in the ground, thus admitting the air and sunlight freely, generally escapes with a minimum of damage from rust. On this account it is recommended that the quantity of seed used be so gauged to the soil as to secure a growth of wheat plants which will occupy the ground with a stand of no more than moderate density.

3. Rust-resisting sorts.—Unquestionably some varieties of wheats under like circumstances and conditions suffer much less from rust than others. Local experiences will generally prove a safe guide to the farmer in selecting varieties for seed. Early ripening sorts will often escape damage in a district where later varieties have suffered greatly. In the experiments made at the instance of the Department, Ward's Prolific, Steinwedel, and the Mediterranean variety known as Belatourka have shown a surprising ability to resist rust.

4. Good farming.—Wheat grown upon fallows, or in succession to other crops like maize, clover, lucerne, peas, sorghum, &c., is damaged much less by rust than when the same sort is grown under the scourging system—i.e., wheat after wheat without variation or rest.

5. Clean farming.—Old stubbles straw, dead grass and the like litter form the seed-bed of the rust plant, from which the wheat crop in many cases gets the infection. To clean up and burn such refuse material is obviously sound policy.

6. Early harvesting.—The fact that a field is "struck" with the rust is by no means conclusive as to the final outcome of the crop. Leaf rust, however abundant, rarely damages the grain crop materially; it is only when the stalk of the plant is involved that loss of grain need be apprehended. The question whether the rusted wheat straw is likely to prove of greater value for hay than for the grain which it may yield is one that every farmer must decide for himself. The facts show, however, that many fair crops of wheat have been sacrificed for the sake of a hay crop of low value. It has further been shown, repeatedly, that even when the wheat plant in all its parts is seriously affected by the rust, a fair crop of grain, that otherwise would have been lost, may be harvested by cutting the crop in the early "dough" state, and allowing it to slowly dry on the ground, in the swath or gavel before binding.

7. Special applications.—An application of salt at the rate of 300lb., sown broadcast, has, in the experience of many, given beneficial results, and favourable reports are made of a dusting of quicklime applied in a like manner.

The Department earnestly asks the co-operation of wheat-growers, to the extent of testing one or all of the methods recommended above, so that the next wheat crop may be made to furnish facts bearing directly upon the rust pest as it exists in Queensland.

Let the (a) character of the soil, (b) its previous treatment, (c) depth of ploughing, (d) variety of seed, (e) amount, and time of seeding and harvesting, (f) yield by actual measurement or estimated, and (g) the apparent rustiness of the crop, be carefully noted and in due time reported to the Department of Agriculture for the benefit of the farmers generally.

(Signed) M. HUME BLACK.

Department of Agriculture, Brisbane.

Mr. SHELTON (Queensland) said that in the "rusty" districts of Queensland, there were farms which seemed to be rust-proof. They had been considerably surprised to find this state of things existing in the "Downs" country, even in black soil and in low-lying country. Farmers had told them that they grew wheat year after year without any rust appearing. If it had been an isolated case it would not be noticeable, but the fact of its being so general made it worthy of notice.

Mr. KELLY (South Australia) asked if a meteorological account of the rainfall had been kept in these districts.

Mr. M'LEAN (Queensland) said this had been done, and he would be glad to supply particulars. The rainfall there would be about 24 to 30 inches.

Mr. KELLY (South Australia) explained that the important point was the amount of rainfall in September, October, and November, the most critical time for rust. They had land, such as the Murray Flats, and away north, where the rainfall was light and they often began reaping in the month of October, and the wheat was very free from rust.

Mr. M'LEAN (Queensland) said their rustiest time on the Downs was November, but he did not think the details of the rainfall would be any good, as he knew of instances where one farm never suffered from rust, while the adjoining farm was full of it. He could not see how the rainfall would solve the difficulty in a case of that sort.

Dr. COBB (New South Wales) instanced a case where the influence of a shower was plainly marked on one side of a street, while the other side was perfectly dry.

Mr.

Mr. KELLY (South Australia) had also known of similar instances, and such a shower coming at the "dangerous" time would be very injurious.

Mr. INGLIS (South Australia) said that the report showed that it was a very early district. His opinion was that it was at a certain season of the year that rust appeared, and, therefore, as the wheat was formed, it was not so much affected with rust. That was the case with their early districts.

Mr. M'LEAN (Queensland) said it was not a question of early growth. To put it more clearly, he and Professor Shelton were on the "Downs" last season to get land for carrying out the experiments. One farmer told them that he had never had any rust in his fields; this was just over the railway line from a farmer who said his was the worst rusted spot in the whole district, and it was higher up in the range than the land which was never affected. About 16 to 18 miles away, in another district, they called at one place where the man said he had never had any rust on his land, but just across the road the wheat had been rusty; so that it was not a question of early ripening or early harvesting, as they all ripened and harvested at the same time. There must be some other reason. Before any public attention had been called to the rust question, he was driving along a road about 20 miles from the district referred to, when the gentleman with whom he was driving pointed to a paddock where wheat has been grown for the last sixteen years, and there had never been any rust.

Mr. KELLY (South Australia) inquired if the farms mentioned had been continuously free from rust, and the others continuously affected with rust.

Mr. M'LEAN (Queensland) said the rust-free land had been free when there was rust elsewhere, and they had been growing wheat in large quantities for the last twenty-six years.

Mr. KELLY (South Australia) said his son, who farmed in the north, had a low-lying piece of land which was never affected with rust. He (the son) attributed this to the strong currents of air which carried the rust spores on to the hills, but missed the plains.

Mr. FARRER (New South Wales) said it would be very interesting to know the details of the management of those farms which were free from rust, and he thought it would be worth while to ascertain such details.

Mr. M'ALPINE (Victoria) pointed out how necessary it was to distinguish between isolated fields and districts. With reference to isolated fields, there were several instances in Victoria where, on the same farm, there were several fields free from rust, while others were affected, while all were under the same conditions. He thought it was a question of drainage, and he felt certain if these isolated cases were followed up they might be accounted for. He had selected certain cases where they had rust for three years in succession, and was in communication with the farmers, but he did not think this was so important as rust in districts. It was very striking that in mallee districts there was an entire absence of rust, and he thought this was a matter which ought to be followed up. It appeared to him very important to attend to this, so that they might be able to map out the Colony, showing the districts which were good for the growth of wheat. The rainfall must certainly be important in isolated cases. In the mallee districts they had no rust in 1888-9, as far as the reports sent in showed.

Mr. SHELTON (Queensland) said it was a curious fact that in the regions referred to in the Queensland report, some fields were always free, and others always affected; moreover, in these latter, it was the varieties of wheat which were supposed to be rust-proof which had been affected. It all pointed to the fact that these were regions which were peculiarly liable to the disease, and he thought they might get a hint which was worth following up, and therefore they intended watching during the coming season.

Mr. INGLIS (South Australia) said that there were in South Australia two districts which had been covered with mallee, and they were noted as being the worst infected with rust in the Colony.

Mr. M'LEAN (Queensland), in answer to Mr. Kelly, explained that the Darling Downs was not one level plain, but consisted of slopes, and the wheat was grown on these slopes, and not on the plains, which were used for sheep stations.

Mr. M'ALPINE (Victoria) thought that the term "rust-resisting soil" was hardly suitable, as the resistance depends mainly on the climate.

Dr. COBB (New South Wales) read the following report:—

In order to obtain an account of their experience on this important subject from the farmers of New South Wales, a series of questions were circulated by the Department of Agriculture—in answer ninety-seven replies were received.

These have been carefully collated under various heads, and although they may not contain much that is absolutely new, they will at least be confirmatory of previously expressed opinions, and moreover will represent the views of those whose experience should be of the greatest value.

There is no doubt that rust is very commonly present on certain hosts favourable to its existence, and to do great damage only requires the climatic conditions that are necessary to foster its growth and powers of spreading its devastating influence. If some effective and economical kind of spray could be applied to the crop, it might perhaps be of use in checking the ravages of the pest.

Inasmuch as the spores of peach-rust and other fungi can be killed by the application of certain sprays, it is reasonable to suppose that the spores of rust in wheat can be killed in a similar manner.

There is a great difference of opinion, as might be expected, among the various farmers from whom the replies have been received, and this may be accounted for by the different conditions as to soil and climate under which individuals labour. The following may be taken as an epitome of the collated report which would be too bulky to give in extenso. It

It appears that the crops sown on rich black soils and sandy loams were most affected; but the want among farmers of a standard as to what constitutes each of the soils mentioned prevents any reliable deduction from the information. Undrained land seems to have been more favourable to the spread of rust than that which was either naturally or artificially drained. The answers given show that there were twenty-two cases of rust where wheat was sown in hollows, seven by trees and hedges, and seven by headlands and fences. The evidence throughout shows that warm moist weather is a condition under which rust is most injurious to plants that it has attacked. The year 1889 appears to have been a particularly "rusty" one, and it will be remembered that thunderstorms were very prevalent in that year just when the wheat was flowering, in which state the answers give evidence as to seventeen cases of rust occurring against sixteen cases while in ear. The leaf and sheath, which are really similar in structure, appear to be chiefly subject to attack. The evidence as to part affected is interesting, in view of the fact that the leaves and sheaths are the lungs of the wheat-plant, and that the most rust-resistant wheats are those that have a good hard straw and little leaf. If hot muggy weather occur, the culm appears to become changed, so as to offer a good host for the rust spore to germinate upon.

Taking the Colony as a whole, May is late for sowing, and therefore subsequent months too late to sow in order to escape rust. The general opinion appears to be in favour of cutting the wheat in the dough stage. Not only does it save loss from the grain shedding out to waste, but if the crop be rusted only slightly, the ravages of the fungoid pest are in a great measure, if not quite, arrested. It is interesting to note that the various replies with regard to (1) the months when damaged crops were sown; (2) the different districts; (3) the months when rust first appeared; (4) the seasons, wet or dry, when damaged crops were sown; (5) localities where rust first appeared; and (6) the time of appearance of rust, are confirmatory one of the other. This part of the evidence points out the critical period, to escape which early sowing and early harvesting appear to be the best preventives. The great bulk of evidence is decidedly in favour of early sowing and cutting in the dough stage, or just before maturity; but what is equally, if not more, important, is the selection of early maturing varieties which, combined with early planting, greatly minimises the chance of rust injuring the crops. Just as the swiftest steamer, other things being equal, lessens the danger of crossing an ocean, so early maturing wheat lessens the chances of damage by rust.

The information given and implied in the New South Wales farmer's reports offers considerable enlightenment as to the effects of climate on the wheat plant, and points out why October and subsequent months are critical periods for this cereal; for these are generally moist and very cloudy months, and the evidence shows that rust appeared most during such weather, and to a greater extent in the localities where such conditions would prevail. This indirect evidence as to value of the presence of sunshine is also confirmed to a great extent by the fact that the leaf and sheath, i.e., the lungs of the wheat plant, which are parts of the plant depending to the greatest extent for vigour on the presence of plenty of sunshine, were the parts of the plant most affected, and that the crops sown so thickly that the sun could scarcely get to the flag of the plant were also very badly affected. This evidence seems to point clearly to the importance of giving prominence to sowing wheats which are not too luxuriant in the leaf or flag, whilst the practical experience with regard to the best rust-resisting wheats confirms this inference, for the varieties deserving that title are those which have a hard flinty straw and little flag.

According to the replies which have been received by the Department as to preventive measures, eleven farmers have obtained good results from the burning off of the stubble, while thirteen have found no difference. The answers, however, under this head, are of such a contradictory nature as to mar their value in settling the question. Early sowing has many adherents among those to whom questions were addressed, and there is no doubt that of all the proposals for prevention, this finds the greatest amount of support from those who are qualified to give an opinion. Regarding the method of sowing, the replies show that in eighteen cases thick sowing was most conducive to rust, and eight of the farmers who answered gave their opinion, that thinly sown wheat was least effected. This is a preponderance of evidence in favour of thin sowing, and the reason is doubtless, that a heavily sown crop comes up thick and rank, and the flag offers a large surface for the rust spore to alight upon. The question whether shrivelled or plump seed is preferable, produced seventeen advocates for plump seed as being rust-resisting; five prefer rust-shrivelled seed, while fourteen consider one sort as good as another. Some of those who plant rust-shrivelled seed, contend that they get a larger number of grains to the bushel than with plump seed.

Taking the Colony as a whole, the following table shows the varieties of wheat which were most affected, and those which were least affected:—

Most affected.		Least affected.		Answers— Number of
Purple Straw	22 cases.	Purple Straw.....	7 cases.	29
White Lammas	10 "	White Lammas	7 "	17
Patterson's Dressed	9 "	Patterson's Dressed	1 "	10
Red Straw	9 "	Red Straw	2 "	11
Steinwedel	7 "	Steinwedel	6 "	13
White Tuscan	7 "	White Tuscan	4 "	11
Velvet	4 "	Velvet	6 "	10
White Essex	2 "	White Essex	1 "	3
Ward's Prolific	1 "	Ward's Prolific	11 "	12

NOTE.—Several farmers report that they consider that the treatment given by Mr. Patterson to his dressed wheat, sent out for him by the Department destroys the germinating power of the grain, and those grains that have grown have been disappointing in their rust-resisting power.

The

The following varieties were not tried in sufficient numbers to allow of the evidence with regard to them being of any great value:—New Zealand, Californian, Red Creeping, American, Anderson's Rust-proof, Kalu's Rust-proof, Defiance, Cameron's, Pedigree English, Leghorn, White Talavera, Golden Kent, Blount's Lambrigg.

The effect of manuring on wheat crops, as regards the appearance of rust, produced a variety of answers. In sixteen cases the crops most affected were those upon which farmyard manure had been used, while cases of rust were less prominent where no manure was used. The results of the artificial manures sent out by the Department, are as follows:—

Superphosphate.	Superphosphate and sulphate of ammonia.	No manure.
Out of 16 answers—	Out of 14 answers—	Out of 13 answers—
6 clean.	2 clean.	2 clean.
9 very slight.	8 very slight.	10 very slight.
1 bad.	4 slight.	1 bad.

It is significant that where farm-yard manures were used the crops were most luxuriant and flaggy and also the most rusty, and that those manures were principally nitrogenous. It is to be regretted that the farmers showed on the whole so little experience in treating their land with fertilizers, and in furnishing the Department with the results of the artificial manures sent out by it. This is due in most cases to the farmers having had little or no previous knowledge of artificial manures, the manures generally used being those produced on the farm. With regard to the character of the crops attacked, the evidence shows conclusively that strong heavy crops suffer to the greatest extent, while light crops were comparatively free. The question as to treatment of seed for prevention of rust did not produce any reliable information. The districts in which wheat was produced which best resisted the attacks of rust showed a large majority in favour of cold districts, while the seed produced in temperate districts shows more resisting power than that grown under a higher temperature.

The other plants affected with rust (not always wheat rust) were as follows:—

Plants.	Cases.
Oats	47, wheat rust.
Grasses	33, some of these were wheat rust.
Barley	27, wheat rust.
Maize	8, not wheat rust.
Rye	7, wheat rust.

NOTE.—Most of these cases occurred between September and February. The atmospheric changes most favourable to the development of the rust spore appear from the evidence to be those produced by falls of rain, say 70 to 80 points, followed by a hot sun—80 degrees in the shade—with little or no wind, causing a warm vapour, which is most conducive to fungoid growth, which may lie dormant for a considerable period till the climatic changes bring it to maturity. The farmers have observed rust on many different plants, but the general opinion among them is that rust is not contagious.

It is a fact of frequent occurrence for one kind of wheat to be "rotten with rust" whilst another variety growing hard by may be nearly clean.

General remarks by Farmers.

Mr. J. H. Sommerlad, of Tenterfield having had fifty years experience, recommends (1) early sowing; (2) not planting the wheat in freshly manured ground; (3) growing the wheat in rotation after another crop.

Mr. J. Noble, of Glen Innes, says he has found grazing the wheat crop well down when it is too rank to be beneficial in hardening the straw.

Mr. S. Jacob, of Tamworth, says he has been farming on the River Peel for thirty-two years, and has never lost a crop by rust, the nearest approach to it being in 1889, when Purple straw was very bad and was cut for hay. At the same time, had Anderson's Rust-Proof in an adjoining paddock and a very heavy crop and laid down badly, which when threshed, produced 32 bushels to the acre.

Mr. Pullman, of Tamworth, says he has always found hard flinty strawed wheat the most rust-resistant.

Messrs. Geo. Godfrey, of Gocup, and G. Clout, of Brungle, say early sowing, good cultivation, and early maturing wheat-seed are what they recommend as likely to be best for prevention of rust.

Mr. W. Smith, Comobella, near Wellington, on the western plain, says, re prevention of rust, he considers the plumpest seed the best to use. Pinched grain, in his opinion, produces a sickly plant. He believes in early sowing and in burning off straw, stubble, &c., in order, if possible, to destroy all infected matter. Where possible a rusty paddock should be fallowed and left unsown the ensuing year.

There is a very large consensus of evidence supplied by farmers of long experience from all parts of the Colony in favour of sowing early maturing wheat, and as early as possible, in order to escape the months when rust prevails.

Mr. S. Kingston, of Bandon Grove, in the Hunter River District, says he has noticed if aphids be bad on the crops when stooling, the rust is sure to prevail later on. He thinks wheat should not be sown too soon after the land is ploughed, but some weeks should be allowed to elapse before sowing, as by so doing he has found a harder and more healthy straw to be produced.

Mr. S. Latham, of Port Macquarie, on the coast, 200 miles north of Sydney, says wheat should be sown in March or April in his district. He does not anticipate any great loss in this district from rust, providing the seed can be sown early. The land is very suitable for wheat growing, and he believes that if farmers could be induced to give it a good trial it would be a success.

In view of the very contradictory answers to some of the questions, it is impossible to make definite deductions on all of the points of interest; but on a few, rules may be laid down which may be said to have some claim to be founded in scientific truths, chiefly with regard to—

- 1st. Expediency of early sowing.
- 2nd. Value of early maturing varieties.
- 3rd. Superiority of some varieties in their powers of resisting rust.

At the conclusion of his paper, Dr. Cobb continued as follows:—"I now propose to call attention to a few points which are taken mainly from the investigations which are now in progress in the Department, and which therefore must be subject to the further continuance of these experiments. I have placed on the table copies of Part III, vol. I, of the Agricultural Gazette, to which I shall refer in the course of my remarks for the purpose of saving time. Unfortunately I have not these remarks in print. A large number of samples of wheat were sent to the Department by farmers who conducted experiments under the direction of the Department. These were all carefully examined with the view of ascertaining the different sorts of rust which occurred in New South Wales. We took that as one of the first steps to be taken from a scientific point of view and the results were somewhat striking. I shall call your attention to certain points and illustrations in the paper referred to which may be of assistance. A large number of samples were examined, and over 100 of them were reported upon in the paper before you, and there have since been as many more examined with results confirmatory of the previous experiments. These experiments showed that there are two rusts which affect wheat, viz., "Spring Rust" (Puccinia rubigo-vera) and "Mildew" (Puccinia graminis), but as far as the experiments of last season in New South Wales went there could not be the least doubt that nearly all the damage was due to the spring rust (Puccinia rubigo-vera). I have familiarised myself, by means of the microscope, with the more minute differences between these two rusts, so as to be able to distinguish them with the naked eye, and there are some farmers who state that they recognise the two rusts, one of which attacks the flag and the other the straw. The spring rust may be found all the year round in the flag of the wheat; it is a native of Europe or Asia. It appeared in small spots, not round, of a light orange colour during the early part of the year and changing to a darker orange colour at a later season, but never to brown. It is sometimes found on the straw, but more particularly on the flag. It is of course well known to you that there are three or four stages in the growth of the rust fungus, and after hearing the excellent paper read to the Conference by Mr. M'Alpine, it is not my intention to go into particulars. This spring rust also has its mildew or black rust stage, which is first seen in the summer. The change from red rust (Uredo) to black rust (Puccinia) is in New South Wales not very dependent upon the season, but is dependent upon the state of ripeness; in other words, when the plant begins to ripen it seems to cause a change in the mycelium of the rust, whereby it throws out black spores (teleutospores). The other rust, which does the more damage in northern Europe (Puccinia graminis), exists also in wheat all the year round, and specimens I have received from Wagga Wagga of a native grass (Agropyrum scabrum) related to wheat, have rust on them late in the autumn and during the winter, which is absolutely identical with P. graminis as to structure, if we except this difference, that among its red rust spots there are certain black bodies which may constitute a fourth spore of the rust. Whether this shows that the agropyrum rust is different from that which occurs on wheat is a matter for experiment; but should these spores produce rust on wheat we shall have evidence that P. graminis exists throughout the winter on certain native grasses. Although our observations point to the fact that spring rust did nearly all the damage last season, there are certain indications that this other rust (P. graminis) would be likely to do great damage in certain seasons, particularly the fact that it is a very vigorous rust. It appears in long lines. I believe it was agreed that in 1889 the rust which did the damage was in long lines and not in small spots. If this is true, that rust may have been puccinia graminis. In ordinary seasons, however, if this last season may be taken as an example, it is spring rust that does the damage. As a result of my investigations, I have been able to discover the existence of Australian rusts to the number of about fifty, in the large majority of which I have found pustules closely allied to what are known to botanists as spermagonia; and furthermore I have been able to take spores from them and cause them to germinate. Hitherto, these bodies (providing I am right in calling them spermagonia) have never been known to produce spores that germinate in the ordinary sense of that word—that is, to throw out a mycelium. I would suggest that the gentlemen who are following out the question on the scientific side take these spores and germinate them on different plants. The scientific side presents as many difficulties as the practical side. We are involved in a great deal of ignorance. It has been stated that water is inimical to the germination of rust spores; but I have positive evidence from experiment that germinating spores of rust may live in water for three weeks and still continue to grow. In a future paper I will give a figure of a spore which was in water for three weeks and continued to grow on the twenty-first day, when it was destroyed by accident. This is suggestive, as if the spores will live in water it is not only possible, but probable, that they may also live in the soil. We should then have some definite explanations as to the appearance of rust in crops. (In answer to a question. In experimenting with the germination of spores, I have found that if the temperature is too high the spores will not germinate, while if the temperature is too low germination will be very slow; but I do not find it necessary to alter the temperature either in my laboratory or in my experimental garden.) I think that the fact that spring rust does so much damage, is worthy of attention, in view of the statement that early-sown wheat resists rust best. The mildew, P. graminis, does not appear to do any damage until late in the season; therefore, sowing from March to April would give the wheat time to ripen before it put in its appearance. I hope to get a deal of information from the observations of farmers on the matters to which I have called attention. Another interesting fact in connection with the question is the discovery of an insect which feeds upon rust. Our attention was first called to it by Mr. Annis, a New South Wales farmer, about eighteen months ago, but his opinions on the subject were largely erroneous, although he had made some very careful and useful observations. He sent specimens to the Department, and I called the attention of Mr. Olliff, the entomologist to the Department to the insect (specimen exhibited under microscope), who informed me, after careful examination, that it would produce in its next stage a fly similar to the notorious Hessian fly. An article, bringing out this point, has been published, and has suggested a new line of inquiry of considerable importance. Mr. Olliff has since bred this insect, and finds it is closely allied to the Hessian fly; but, instead of feeding on the juices of the wheat, as the Hessian fly does, this larva certainly feeds on the rust. There is, however, another point which must be taken into consideration. If it is found that this insect spreads the spores as well as eats them, that will far more than balance the account, as regards any benefit it might confer. This, therefore, was a point to be ascertained, and I have, therefore, taken the larvæ from rusted plants, and counted the spores on their backs, the result being that I found an average of 1,121 spores on the back of each of the larva. Then arose another question as to whether these spores that have been in contact with the larva would germinate, and I have found that they will germinate. In order to ascertain whether the spores will drop off the backs of the insects as they move about, I caused several to move across white paper, and have ascertained that about 250 of these spores drop off while the insect traverses the first inch of space. [In answer to a question as to how far the insect moved in a day, Dr. Cobb explained that it was quite possible for the insect to move an inch in two or three minutes.] The next question, therefore, to be decided was whether these larvæ would spread the rust, and to make this perfectly certain, I put a leaf of what is called, "Devil's Pitchfork" (Bidens pilosus) free from rust into a specially constructed tube. This tube was a moist chamber, favourable to the production of rust, and I made an apparatus (produced and explained) to keep fresh air in the chamber. I then introduced one of these larvæ, taken at random, with spores on its back. He wandered about for awhile, but finally, of course, died of starvation, but later on the rust appeared on the leaf. A leaf without rust placed in a chamber to which no larva was introduced, did not become affected with rust. This shows, therefore, that the larva did communicate the rust. It is thought, therefore, in the Department, that this insect is responsible for a very large amount of loss to the country by assisting the spread of the rust fungus. Mr. Skuse, of the Australian Museum, has accurately described numerous Australian insects of this kind. In future papers we shall therefore be aided by his authority. It is worthy of mention that somewhat similar but less extensive observations were reported last year in Germany, where the entomologist, Mr. E. W. Rübsamen, had found a larva feeding on the rust on sunflower. These investigations are an instance of how obvious a previously unnoticed matter becomes when it has once been pointed out. Turning to the question of prevention, I would certainly advocate early sowing. Although rotation is not of so much importance here as in older countries, after a time it will of course become necessary, in order to prevent exhaustion of the soil. If you put the same crop in the same ground year after year, you accumulate the diseases peculiar to that crop. I believe this is almost as important in preventing the growth of the crop as exhaustion of the soil. There are few plants that have so many or such virulent diseases as the vine, and this is largely accounted for by the fact that vines must be grown in the same ground year after year. I find, from the reports received at the Department, that many farmers are not capable of judging early in the season whether rust is in their fields or not. In order to ascertain how rust spreads, I should like to see paddock experiments conducted with grains grown at different distances apart and carefully examined daily. It is important to know how the rust spreads from one place to another. If it spreads from plant to plant, it is reasonable to suppose that it would next appear round the affected plants. Another point in connection with my previous experiments was that the burning of stubble was destructive to weed seeds, and that is a good thing in view of the statement that some weeds are affected with rust. As to shrivelled and plump seeds, the evidence goes to prove rust-shrivelled seed to be equally as good as plump seed; but if I had my choice, I would take the plump seed. I have collected some thousands of rusty seeds for the purpose of examination. There is, of course, the theoretical point, that if a man once had a disease, he could not have it again, but the question is whether this would apply to another generation.

Mr. M'ALPINE said he had collected a large amount of data on that very point which had already been published.

Dr. COBB continuing: With regard to curative measures, the fact of the Strawsonizer being good or not, is merely a question of time. I have settled beyond doubt that we are able to recommend a solution to be used with the Strawsonizer which will kill the spores of rust. Wheat has a bloom which prevents anything but the finest spray from having an effect upon it. This may, however, be a very good thing, because the rust will wet more readily, and if we can wet the rust without wetting the wheat, it will be all the better. In France, they have invented an improved fungicide, which they call saccharate of copper, a compound including bluestone and a proportion of treacle. The object of this is to cause the fungicide to remain on the plant, and I think it is likely to prove very useful. My experiments have not extended to sulphate of iron, but

but experience with the other fungicides tends to show that it would answer. Then the question arises—Will the saving of wheat pay for the spraying machine, the solution, and keeping the machine in repair? With regard to rust-resisting wheat, I must certainly object to the loose reasoning which has been in vogue for the last two years. For instance, a man tries several sorts, and because he finds in a rusty year that one sort is not affected, he immediately jumps to the conclusion that it has rust-resisting powers. I deny that that particular wheat, therefore, has any peculiar rust-resisting powers. There may be many reasons why the particular wheat was not rusted. The system of planting those sorts which have withstood rust has been going on for 200 years, and still we have not a rust-proof wheat. It is generally known that the rust spores gain an entrance into the wheat through the small openings in the leaves, and Mr. Farrer has suggested that some experiments should be conducted with a view to breeding a wheat which had smaller holes, so that the spores could not get through. I have noticed that plants attacked by rusts are glabrous, and it might be worth consideration whether it might not be possible to breed hairy wheat, which would prevent the entrance of the spores (laughter). Referring to pages 200 and 201, of the Agricultural Gazette before you, I would point out that two kinds of spores are shown, one of which germinates spirally, while the other germinates in a zigzag. There is, doubtless, some reason for this, and the question arises, whether these openings, could not by selective breeding, be raised in some manner, so as to counteract the efforts of the germinating spore. I think this suggestion is well worth consideration. Another point is to get a wheat that although it lets the rust in, will prevent the rust coming out again; that would be a rust-resisting wheat. That is the case with the red-skinned hard-strawed varieties. If the wheat gets beyond the flowering stage, and the rust still stays on the lower flags, you will probably get a crop, though of course not such a good one as if no rust had been present. With regard to pickling seed, I have given the matter very considerable attention in a scientific way. There is no doubt that smut can be prevented by treating the seed, because smut is a thing which infests the seed; its object is to attach its spores to the seed which, when sown, become infested and give rise to plants again bearing smutty seeds. It is, however, entirely different with rust, and no satisfactory results have ever been obtained by treating seed for rust.

Questions about Rust in Wheat.

THESE questions should be filled up at each stage of the crops, and forwarded to the Director of Agriculture, Sydney, not later than 31st January, 1891.

Mr. FARRER (New South Wales) considered it was a rare treat to have had the privilege of listening to Dr. Cobb. It was twenty years since he had heard such a lecture. He would like to ask whether it was true that P. graminis was connected with the Barberry plant.

Dr. COBB said that without doubt the Barberry had to do with the life-history of rust, but the Aecidium had never, to his knowledge, been seen in Australia, and it was not true that the Barberry stage was necessary in Australia for the production of P. graminis. The mistake made in Australia had been in assuming that it was necessary for rust to go annually through the Barberry. The facts in a cold country would probably warrant the assertion, but here, inasmuch as they could find red rust existing all the year round, it followed that it was, not necessary at all. It was well known that P. rubigo-vera existed all the year round even in Europe—in the red rust stage.

Mr. PEARSON (Victoria) said he had been very much interested in the remarks of Dr. Cobb. There was one point he would like to refer to, and that was with regard to the spreading of rust in the fields. At one of his experiment stations last year his assistant examined almost every plant and recorded when the rust first appeared, and when it first spread. The breaking out of the rust which a farmer generally observes was not, in his opinion, the first breaking out. He had always supposed that if you went through any wheat crop at any time of the year, in almost any district of the Colony, you would find specks of rust, and that it only required a favourable condition of the weather to cause a general spreading of these specks. As regarded rotation, there was not the slightest doubt doubt the time had arrived in Victoria when rotation could be adopted with great advantage. At Mr. J. Goldie's farm, where some of his experiments had been conducted, they got splendid results, full details of which had been prepared for publication, and there was not the slightest doubt that, besides giving the ground freedom from a crop which would perpetuate a disease, it was also important from a general agricultural point of view. After all, as Professor Shelton had said, the rust question was more a psychological than a physical question; they wanted first to disabuse peoples' minds before they could make any real progress. On the subject of rust-proof seed, he hoped it would not be supposed he held any convictions whatever, or that his mind was made up; he had simply tried to discuss the question, showing the arguments for and against. In regard to the use of the Strawsonizer, he did not think it would produce a spray fine enough for their purpose, and that they could themselves design a machine which would suit their purpose better. He was having an instrument made at the present time in Melbourne from his own design, to be used experimentally. In spraying a crop of wheat it might be desirable that the seed should be planted in rows to allow of going down through it if necessary. He, however, quite agreed with Dr. Cobb that the Strawsonizer, or some equally efficient instrument, might be used for spraying growing wheat.

Mr. KELLY (South Australia) said he might mention that during a conversation with Professor Lowrie that gentlemen had stated that he did not think that the Strawsonizer would be satisfactory for the purpose of spraying wheat crops. He was, however, glad to hear the experience of the delegates in this respect.

Mr. McLEAN (Queensland) pointed out that there were different makes of the Strawsonizer, and that the first which came out was very inferior to the present form. That might be the reason for the difference of opinion which existed with regard to the merits of the machine. He was perfectly satisfied with the one he had.

Professor SHELTON (Queensland) said that the essay by Dr. Cobb was one of the most remarkable he had ever heard. He did not feel competent to criticise the scientific aspects of the question; but, as a practical man, he was greatly impressed with the statement made by Dr. Cobb, that we had remedies for rust in certain well known fungicides, which were easy of application. That was a most remarkable fact, and went to show that their occupation as a Rust Conference was (like Othello's) gone. He was afraid, however, it would be necessary to breed a new race of farmers who would apply these remedies. The great thing to do was to get improved means of applying them. He was forced to think, however, of a number of sprays which were thought quite as much of years ago, but which had now been abandoned. This should lead them to pause and test the doctor's assertion. For instance, some years ago Paris green was considered invaluable for Codling Moth, but now the opinions as to its efficacy were pretty evenly divided. They had always thought kerosene emulsion was the remedy for scale in orange trees, and yet a recent report of a meeting of the Californian Horticultural Society stated that they had abandoned all poisonous sprays for orange scale. It, therefore, seemed to him, what they would have to secure were careful and continuous experiments. If it could be shown that by treating the wheat in its earlier stages with some solution they could prevent the spores from germinating, they had the matter within their grasp; but if they had to go on spraying, he could not for the life of him see how they were going to get the fungicide on the plants. Take the average wheat-field—he had frequently thrown his overcoat upon standing wheat—how were they to get this fine spray down to the lower parts of the wheat plants which were affected with rust? Some years ago a statement was made by an eminent man in America, that rust affected the plant in its very earliest stages. If all neighbours in a district would work together to destroy rust, might they not hope that subsequent applications would not be required? It would need something of that kind, for he did not see how they could get the fungicide into a mass of growing grain. There was also a practical objection. They might leave a space, as in the case of beans; but he did not think that was desirable. However, the information they had heard that day must be carefully examined by men of brains. He was glad to hear that cutting in the dough stage was so satisfactory, as he understood that this made better flour. With regard to the mildew in America, it appeared there as a purplish growth on the wheat, which very rapidly threw the whole crop down. That was not the case with what they knew as rust. Another fact he wished to refer to was the real annoyance of handling rusted grain. He was told that upon the Darling Downs it was difficult to obtain help to work wheat affected with rust; the men became affected with large ulcers and sores, caused by working amongst rusty wheat.

Mr. PEARSON (Victoria) said that with regard to the usefulness or otherwise of spraying wheat in the early stages of growth, when he commenced his experiments he did not know anything about the periods when spraying was to be done. He gave instructions to commence a week after the plant came out of the ground, and thereafter every fourteen days. At Childers the rust broke out on the 3rd December. The last spraying was given on the 1st December. On the sprayed plot there was no rust to be found on any of the plants until a fortnight after this date, and it did not spread until three weeks afterwards. Mr. Whelan, his assistant, syringed one particular plant after the rust had broken out, and found that the rust had disappeared within the next twenty-four hours, and did not re-appear for a fortnight. His experiments showed most conclusively that all the sprayings applied before the rust broke out, did no good whatever.

Dr. COBB (New South Wales) pointed out that it was here that the saccharate of copper solution came in, as it remained on the plant for some time after spraying.

Professor SHELTON (Queensland) said that if it could be ascertained that a fly fed upon grain in the same manner as the Hessian fly, they might add some Paris green to the spray solutions.

Mr.

Mr. INGLIS (South Australia) could fully indorse all that had been said as to the pleasure and profit of listening to the able report and address given by Dr. Cobb. It would appear like presumption in a common farmer to attempt to criticise what had been said. (No, no). The first point that had struck him was in regard to thick and thin sowing. With them the thin sowing caused the rank growth. He thought thick sowing prevented the access of air, and caused the disease to break out. His experience was that sowing immediately after ploughing made very little difference. With regard to smut, they had tried an experiment with "smutty" wheat sown without pickling, and it turned out just as clean as that which had been pickled. He thought there must be a difference in rust, as had been stated by Dr. Cobb, for thirty years ago, when reaping was done by hand and the grain thrashed out by machines, the men would be covered with red, although the wheat was not in the least affected, and that was in the latest district in South Australia. As to shrivelled seed, they had sown nothing else one year, with splendid results. No doubt their experimental stations would be able to determine the effect of rotation of crops, but South Australia was not very suited to rotation.

Dr. COBB (New South Wales) said he did not wish to imply any doubt regarding the evidence of rust-shrivelled seed which had been produced at the Conference; but, allowing this to be correct, if he had his choice of shrivelled or plump seed of kinds he knew to be equally good, he should take the plump seed.

Mr. M'ALPINE (Victoria) said he fully re-echoed the sentiments which had been expressed with regard to the address by Dr. Cobb. The burthen of it all was "science applied to practice." He trusted the news would be sent to all farmers that there were three points which demanded their attention in connection with wheat-growing and rust-prevention, viz., early sowing, early ripening, and the use of fungicides. With regard to the application of fungicides there would appear to be some difficulty, but doubtless it would be eventually overcome. There was no doubt threshing rusty wheat had the effect of producing ulcers amongst the men. It was unfortunate that they had not all obtained data of the season 1888-89, as that was a particularly rusty season, so that they might compare notes in regard to the different kinds of rust. Without saying anything offensive to practical farmers, it was a fact that many farmers were unable to judge when rust really first appeared. In Victoria, they hoped shortly to be in a position to make daily observations in order to decide on the first appearance of rust. He might say, that he had hardly ever examined a single grain from a rusty field without finding a few spores of rust upon it. Another important question was what became of the teleutospores in view of the absence of Barberry. It was a remarkable fact that the wheat which took first prize at the grain show in Melbourne was grown from rusty seed, and he had noticed particularly that very many who stated that they preferred rust-proof seed had never actually tried the other.

Professor SHELTON (Queensland) said that during his corn experiments he had tried a seed from the tip, from the middle, and from the butts, and, almost without exception, the crop obtained from the shrivelled seed was the best.

Dr. COBB (New South Wales) said he was examining about 2,000 seeds to see if there was any mycelium, but up to the present he had been unable to find any.

Mr. KELLY (South Australia) mentioned an instance of a field of 400 acres which, when tried by the reaper, did not produce a single grain. Sheep had been turned on to it, and in July or August he had allowed the plants to grow, and it produced 15 bushels to the acre.

Mr. FARRER (New South Wales) then read his report, which was as follows:—

Soon after the first Conference had closed, I saw in the papers criticisms of the work it had done. One of these criticisms was made by a member of the Conference itself; and, like most of the others, it only showed what unreasonable expectations had been formed of what a single Conference would be able to accomplish. The official report, however, which our Director of Agriculture was so kind as to send me afterwards, showed that preliminary work of a most excellent character had been done—that most of the difficulties of the rust problem had been pointed out by some one of the representatives; that several of the factors which entered into its solution had been indicated; and that data and suggestive ideas enough had been brought forward to set thinking any who might be inclined to grapple with the problem. Last year's Conference was not a failure, but a distinct success. It accomplished as much as anyone had a right to expect from it. Although the ground it went over was familiar to myself, its recommendations were on that account none the less suggestive to me, and valuable for the work I had already taken in hand. It remains for us, the members of the second Conference, to show that during the year which has since elapsed, we have been making use of the material the first Conference put into our hands, and that we are able to do at least as much for the third Conference, as the first did for us.

Although I would wish to express my opinion of the high value of the work which was done by the first Conference, there are two of its recommendations that I cannot endorse in their entirety. These will be pointed out further on.

I may state, before I begin my discussion of the subject of this paper, that after having for many years given much thought to the rust-pest as it affects the wheat-plant in this country, I have been led to the conclusion that the best manner of combating the pest appears to be to give special attention to the securing and creating of resistant varieties of the plant of such a character as our special requirements demand—varieties possessing, together with high milling quality, such a measure of physical and constitutional resistance to the pest, as to have great value on that account. According to my belief, the contagion of rust is generally—to all intents, invariably—conveyed, to the wheat-plant through the air, in which the germs are always present during the warmest months of the year. It matters comparatively little whether the contagion is more or less abundant. If it be present at all, as it practically always is during the hot weather, infection, infection is pretty sure to take place, if the plant be susceptible to it. We may, indeed, do something to diminish the contagion; but, according to my views, and as I hope to be able to show in this paper, we are likely to be able to do far more towards diminishing the susceptibility of the plant to the contagion, and to work with greater effect, by specially directing our efforts in that direction. The susceptible stage of the wheat's growth is by no means of short duration. It extends over the whole of its life until its tissues have become hard*; but owing to the fact that the spores of rust are only abroad in the air during the hot months of the year, it is confined practically to the period during which its tissues remain soft and succulent after the hot weather has set in; and it will be better, I think, to do what we can to shorten that period by making varieties that mature as early as possible, and to look for protection to that natural preventive which some varieties most undoubtedly do possess in a superior power of resisting the contagion, than to seek for an artificial preventive, which, in order to be effective, would have to extend its protection over the whole of this period. Curative measures I also regard as being almost out of the question, and, for obvious reasons, likely to be impracticable on a large scale. A cure for rust might be devised, but the part of the fungus which is beneath the skin of the plant, and could not be immediately reached by a curative application, would be apt to survive even if the part outside were destroyed; and even if a plant should happen to be cured, its tissues would be likely to have been so seriously injured by the fungus as to cause its vitality to be seriously impaired. There would always be danger also of fresh infection if the cure were effected before the end of the susceptible stage. I cannot think also that any curative agent could be applied so thoroughly on a large scale, and so inexpensively as to be of practical value. It is for these reasons that I shall mainly deal in this paper with a consideration of matters connected with rust-resistant varieties of wheat, how they may be secured, and their characteristics.

In entering upon a solution of the rust problem, we ought at the very first to make up our minds in regard to what difficulties are inevitable and beyond our control, and what we may reasonably hope to remove, avoid, or diminish at not too great a cost. To the latter alone we should give our attention.

Amongst the adverse conditions which are entirely or practically beyond our control, I would include all that are of a climatic or of a meteorological character. Heat and cold, rains and drought, fogs and sunshine, winds and calms, will come and go in spite of all that we can do. We must accept them when they come, as facts; and in furnishing a solution of the rust problem, we must make it of such a character that no adverse condition, which is beyond our control, will be likely to upset its action.

There are, again, adverse conditions arising from the physical constitution or condition of the soil, and from the aspect of the land. These can generally be overcome or avoided, and ought to be if the cost be not too great. This consideration specially applies to draining, by which most soils may be improved; but the cost is so serious, that, for the present, at any rate, it can in general only be employed in very exceptional cases; and we must be satisfied to take measures which will only accomplish temporarily and in an imperfect manner what ought to be well done. It is not only for the object of getting rid of an excess of moisture from the soil, important as that object most undoubtedly is, that draining is advantageous; but there are many soils in this country which want draining, although their normal state is that they are too dry. The so-called scalded plains which are found in our level interior are of this character. Such soils are often too compact for either air or water to enter into them freely, and they want draining for the purpose of making them moister, by bringing them into a more porous condition, and so letting in the air with the moisture it always contains. Whenever the temperature falls, as it always does during the night, much of the moisture which the air in it contains, is deposited in the soil; and although the quantity which is deposited is so small as only to be detected by weighing the soil, it is enough for the absolute needs of such plants as wheat that are growing in the soil. In well drained and porous soils the wheat plant seldom receives a severe check to its growth from drought; for a slight deficiency of moisture is more favourable to its health than an excess. The absorption of such (hygroscopic) moisture can be further increased very materially in most soils by making them richer in humus or decayed vegetable matter. This can be done by green manuring, and by ploughing in vegetable substances. So valuable do I consider vegetable matter to be for this purpose, that I have come to regard as friends, rather than as foes, the great majority of our weeds, which can also be made to perform other important functions in the economy of the farm; and the first of the two recommendations made by last year's Conference to which I take exception is that of burning such valuable vegetable substance as the stubble. In this dry climate we must at any cost avoid wasting any vegetable matter, and, in general, aim rather at securing more to plough in, than waste any that we may have. If the stubble contains the germs of the rust fungus, we must, in solving the rust problem, seek rather to diminish their number, or better, to render them harmless, than sacrifice the stubble. This point I consider to be of the very first importance; and I regard it as an essential condition of a successful remedy for rust, that the stubble be not sacrificed. For this reason I would like to say more about vegetable matter and the important part it plays in the soil.

One

* I would like to say here, that I do not consider the plant to be equally liable to be infected by the contagion during the whole of this time; or rather, that although it may be equally liable during the whole of this time to contract the contagion (which I do not think), the conditions of the plant are not such that the parasite can thrive and increase upon it equally well during the whole of this time. The fact that early-sown wheats occasionally suffer more from rust than do the same wheats when they are sown late, would prevent me from thinking that such was the case. It may be that owing to the weakness and the low standard of health which is likely to prevail in the plant at the time when the seed is being formed and is growing most vigorously, if rusty weather occurs then, the rust may thrive more vigorously on the plant and do it more harm than it would to the same plant if it had not at the time reached the stage in which its strength is being sapped and monopolised by the growth and development of the seed. I think this is probably the case. I think, also, that all wheats are not equally liable to be infected by the contagion at the time when they are most susceptible; and that the degree of liability to contract the contagion depends on the variety itself—on its physical and constitutional characteristics.

One of the main essentials of the growth of the wheat-plant, in order that it may not be easily infected by the contagion of rust, is that it shall make a steady, even, healthy, and natural growth, without a check, and without undue speed from the very first; that it shall never be in serious want of either food or moisture; and that it shall never have thrust upon it for long an undue excess of either; and these conditions can be secured in the best manner by keeping the soil well provided with vegetable matter.

The presence of decaying, and the frequent introduction of fresh vegetable matter into the soil, establish and maintain in it a state of chemical unrest, instability, or activity, which causes plant-foods, with which it is often, and indeed usually, at least fairly well provided in an unavailable, generally because in an insoluble, form, to be continually set free and rendered available. This setting free of available plant-foods takes place in small quantities certainly; but it is continuous and in quantities which are large enough to provide for the continuous and healthy development of the plants growing in the soil; while the vegetable matter which has already undergone the process of decay, and has assumed the comparatively stable form of humus, ensures, as I have already pointed out, the presence in the soil and the retention by it of that moisture which is essential alike to the healthy growth of plants, and to the state of chemical activity by means of which available plant-food is constantly being furnished. Another equally important part which decayed vegetable matter plays in the soil is, that it forms a medium in which certain micro-organisms, under conditions which have been ascertained, cause nitrification of the soil to take place; and it is in this way that the soil may be kept naturally and sufficiently supplied with these most expensive of plant-foods—the nitrates. If nitrates be present in the soil in too large quantity, as they generally are at first when they have been supplied artificially, these substances are liable to become, like an excess of nitrogenous food to human beings, harmful to the wheat-plant, by providing too great a stimulus, and by inducing a rapid and soft growth which in any case is undesirable and apt to invite disease. In fact the constant supply in moderate quantity of food, of not too stimulating a character, seems to be a requirement of the normal healthy growth of plants and animals alike. The presence, I repeat, of decayed vegetable matter (humus) in the soil ensures to plants like wheat, whose demands for it are moderate, a constant supply of moisture (and in our dry interior, where the very best wheat could be grown, this is of overwhelming importance); while decaying and decayed vegetable matter together are, in the presence of that moisture, the means through which that constant and moderate supply of food is ensured, which is essential to the healthy and continuous growth of plants. I again say that I can regard no remedy for rust as satisfactory which under any circumstances demands the destruction of the stubble. If the stubble harbours the rust-contagion, we must regard the contagion amongst the adverse conditions which are inevitable, rather than sacrifice such valuable vegetable substance, and until some other means than burning the stubble have been devised for destroying the rust-contagion it harbours, and even then in view of the fact that spores enough to infect susceptible plants are invariably harboured elsewhere, we must regard the power of resisting rust as a necessary property of a wheat we should grow. I need hardly point out that the stubble of a resistant variety would be likely to harbour less of the contagion.*

I have already mentioned that I shall take exception to another of the recommendations which was made by last year's Conference. I refer to the second on the list; but on looking at it more carefully, I see that it is not the recommendation itself which can be regarded as objectionable, so much as the implied recommendation contained in the words, "This Conference believes that cutting the wheat-crop when the grain is in the dough state is at all times desirable."

The cutting of the crop while it is still immature, possesses so many advantages, both for the miller and the farmer, that we can little wonder at its being recommended; still, the fact that it carries with it primâ facie the appearance of being unnatural, ought to be enough to cause us to look upon the practice with suspicion as regards, at any rate, the harvesting of such grain, as is intended for its natural purpose—for seed.

Professor Blount, on more than one occasion, has insisted on the necessity of allowing the grain which is intended for seed, to become thoroughly ripe before it is harvested. As what I have to say on this subject rests entirely on the authority of Professor Blount, I will give his own words. In one communication he says: "When I pick the heads when the grain is in the dough state, the germinating power is the greatest and the growth more vigorous; but the grain from such an operation is not so good for seed. All grain to be sown should be perfectly ripe before being picked or harvested." On another occasion he uses the words: "I cannot explain why seed picked in the dough stage makes more vigorous growth, &c., but it does for a single season certainly. After that you will observe deterioration fatal and rapid. For milling, it is always better, for the same reason that grass cut before going into seed makes the best hay. There is more

* Study and consideration, given to the subject since this paper was read, have caused me to modify my views regarding the burning of the stubble. Owing to the dry condition of the ground in our interior, the stubble is likely to decay too slowly, and the presence in the soil of hard woody vegetable substance like ripe straw is undesirable. It would be better, I now think, wherever the climate is warm enough, to burn off the stubble immediately after harvest, and, after ploughing shallow, to put in a catch-crop of cow peas. In ordinarily favourable seasons there would be a large growth of succulent vegetable matter to plough in during the latter half of March (the time of the year when ploughed-in vegetable substance would decay in the best manner)—in time to sow wheat again (with some bone-dust or superphosphate) before the end of April. The result of experiments at the North Carolina Experiment Station has been summed up in the following words:—"Pea-vine manure is the cheapest and most effective of all fertilizing applications. In 1889 the average increase (of wheat) due to pea-vines was 10 bushels; and in 1890, 16 bushels." Again, some conclusions from experiments made with fertilizers at the Alabama Experiment Station during six years are thus stated. "Under a judicious rotation of crops, including those which are humus-supplying, little else than phosphates (bones, superphosphate, &c.) need be purchased by the corn and cotton-grower." And again, "pea-vines, grown upon the land and left to protect the surface until preparation is made for the next crop, furnish the cheapest source of nitrogen in the most desirable condition." The above (pea-vines ploughed in and phosphates) appears to constitute a practicable and economical system of manuring for wheat-growing in our warm interior. The grain produced under this system would not be wanting in gluten on account of the soil being deficient in nitrogen; but would possibly contain it to the full gluten-containing capacity of the variety grown.

more nutriment and less woody fibre at the time." Later on in this paper, I shall have occasion to speak of the deterioration of constitution produced in the variety by the accumulated effects of a long course of carelessness and mistakes in the management and choice of the grain for seed. The mistakes I shall then allude to are largely connected with the harvesting of the seed-grain in an immature state. I have reason to think that the deterioration—the running out—which most undoubtedly has taken place in most of our standard wheats, has been caused to a greater extent by harvesting the seed-grain while it is still immature than we have ever suspected. It is for this reason that I have for many years recommended that special care should be given to the growing of the grain which is intended for seed—that it should be grown by itself; that great pains should be taken to secure a superior strain and to maintain its purity; and that, in short, the same cares should be given to it as is devoted to the breeding of the stud animals in a well managed flock or herd. I would wish to see this Conference, while it confirms, if it thinks fit, the original recommendation as it applies to rusted crops and to grain which is intended for the mill, make a special exception of grain which is intended for seed, and recommend that it be not harvested until it is at least fairly ripe.*

I will now pass on to the proper subject to which I had intended to devote this paper, and will consider the wheat plant itself; what characteristics specially cause it to be liable to suffer from the attacks of rust; what particular conditions of itself and of its environment lead to its being attacked; and the characteristics which enable it to resist the contagion.

The main cause of the rust-fungus being able to gain a hold on the wheat plant is a soft, sappy, succulent condition of its outside tissues at the time when the rust-spores are abroad. This soft condition is either a normal characteristic of the variety itself, or is induced in some varieties by the environment-conditions which happen to prevail during the susceptible stage of their growth. These environment-conditions, which I shall include under the term rusty weather, are the presence of much moisture in the soil, with a moist and still condition of the atmosphere, accompanied by much heat. Varieties that have for a normal characteristic straw and foliage, the outside coating of which is not close enough of texture and not well glazed with silicious matter are always liable to rust, even in seasons that are little favourable to the parasite; while in rusty seasons they are sure to suffer severely, unless a habit of early maturity happens to have put them through the susceptible stage—has caused their tissues to become hard—before the rusty weather came on. Other varieties, again, of a vigorous habit of growth are liable to surrender to the pest, even though their straw and foliage are of the right texture and well provided with a silicious coating, if they happen to be caught by rusty weather during the susceptible stage of their growth. This happens more readily if they are growing in rich soil, and more readily still if their foliage is also broad and heavy. Their vigorous habit then causes them to respond too freely to their stimulating environment, and by the aid of their abundant foliage they make a rapid and unseasonable growth of soft sappy tissue. Such tissue can offer little resistance to rust. For cold and cloudy countries like England, where evaporation is slow, a broad flag is needed to evaporate all the water the plant requires for its growth, and to catch sunlight enough to elaborate the sap and mature the seed; but in sunny countries like our own, a broad flag is not wanted, and becomes a source of danger in rusty weather. The possession, then, of straw and foliage, the outside coating of which is of too soft and open a texture and deficient in silicious matter, a too vigorous habit of growth, and a broad heavy flag, are all characteristics that cause a wheat to be unsuited to our conditions, where rusty weather so often occurs during the susceptible stage of the plant's growth.

Before I go further I would wish to devote further discussion to what I have just been trying to point out, that a variety of wheat which is of vigorous growth, is on that account ill-adapted to our conditions; but in doing this, I would wish it to be understood that I make an exception of the Durum series of wheats—of the varieties of Triticum durum. These wheats, although their growth is vigorous, have wiry straw, and foliage of peculiar texture; and being natives of hot countries, possess constitutional characteristics which cause them to thrive well and to offer a high degree of resistance to rust in our climate. I will also make a partial exception of the Poulard wheats, which are varieties of Triticum turgidum. These wheats have straw that is well glazed and more or less solid. Like the Durums, they are natives of hot climates; but their foliage appears to be heavier and their growth somewhat less vigorous. They, too, resist rust fairly well in our climate. Both the Durum wheats, however, and the Poulards, unfortunately possess other characteristics which are undesirable; and we ought to do without them if we can get or make others of better milling quality to take their place, and that I think we can do.

I have been much struck by the fact that, with the exception of the Durums and the Poulards, and one or two varieties which seem to contain Durum or Poulard blood, all the numerous wheats I have had under trial from hot countries have been of a moderate and sometimes even of a dwarf habit of growth. Such a habit is the one that would cause the plants possessing it to respond in the least degree by rapid growth to the stimulating conditions of heat combined with moisture, which are apt to prevail

* Experiments carried out in 1888 and 1889 at the Illinois Experiment Station with the object of ascertaining the best time of harvesting wheat, in order to secure the greatest yield, show that the yields "were in both years the largest when the kernels were ripe and hard," and that "the results indicate that it is better to allow the wheat to get nearly, if not entirely ripe to secure the maximum yield." Experiments made at the New York Experiment Station in 1884, show that wheat which has been harvested at the usual time (in the dough was then universally recommended), and hung up under cover in bags containing about 2½ lb. had lost at the end of one month 20½ per cent. of its weight, and at the end of four months over 24 per cent. With myself last season some wheat which had been harvested in the dough and then appeared full and plump, at the end of about two months had shrunk so much, as almost to look like rust-pinned grain. It was this circumstance which first led me to doubt whether early harvesting is really the best. The bakers like the rich-looking yellow-tinted flour made from grain which has been cut in the dough, and find it stronger than the whiter flour made from ripe grain. It is only by growing sorts of wheat that produce grain rich in gluten, that we can satisfy the bakers and get the greatest yield for ourselves.

prevail in hot countries during the susceptible stage of the plant's growth. This moderate or dwarf habit has been brought about in hot-country wheats, I think, by a kind of natural selection operating through long periods of time, which has caused the weeding out of such plants as, in consequence of their vigorous growth, have been exposed to rust. I have also noticed that of these moderate growing wheats, those resist rust the best that are the most scantily furnished with stiff well glazed foliage. I can give an illustration of this from our own wheats. Of all the varieties of Australian origin which are in common cultivation, that which is the most lightly clothed with foliage is Ward's Prolific; and it is the one which has been found to be the most resistant of rust and the safest to grow, especially in the warmer parts of the country. Lightness of foliage, however, a habit of moderate growth, and fairly early maturity are the qualities which give to this variety all its value; for they are unfortunately associated with other characteristics, which are the reverse of desirable. Experience, in short, confirms the conclusion which reason points to, that if we want to escape rust in our warm climate, we must grow varieties which possess, unless they have Durum blood in them, a habit of moderate, and even, in some parts of Queensland, of almost dwarf growth, and are lightly clothed with stiff, well glazed foliage. It is on account of the moderate growth of their wheats that hot-climate countries have furnished us with almost all the resistant varieties that have come into our hands; but such varieties have been of inferior milling quality; and it is for that reason that all resistant wheats have come to be regarded with suspicion, and the search after them to be disparaged. This inferiority for milling, however, is by no means a quality which is necessarily attached to all resistant wheats as such; but is largely accidental, and has arisen from the fact that in the countries from which we have derived such wheats, high milling quality has not been attended to or sought after to the extent it has been by us or in the more advanced countries of Europe and America. The only characteristic of the grain of resistant wheats which I consider to be essential is that it be hard, and that is in correlation with their hard and flinty straw. A hard grain is far from being undesirable. It can be dealt with effectively by roller mills; it is generally rich in gluten; its bran is often very thin, and it is less likely to suffer from weevils.

I ought not, perhaps, to leave this part of my paper without mentioning that another advantage, which is often possessed by wheats of a moderate habit of growth, is that, like fruit trees of a similar habit, they appear to be more productive on that account. It is as if their strength, instead of being given to the production of more stalk and foliage, is used for adding to the production of grain.

Another characteristic which exposes wheats to rust is late maturity. Early maturity, while it can scarcely be said to enable wheats to resist the contagion, often causes them to have almost ceased to be susceptible to it before the advent of hot weather has caused the contagion to be abroad. Certain varieties which, like the Steinwedel, have gained a reputation for resisting rust, owe it entirely to their earliness, and in reality do not possess the qualities of a resistant wheat. Such varieties, if they happen to be caught by rusty weather earlier in the season than is usual, or if they are planted late, or if for any reason they happen to be exposed to the contagion before they have passed through the susceptible stage, invariably become infected. Early maturity is a most desirable characteristic of resistant, as well as of wheats that are not resistant; and it should be secured whenever it is possible to do so, because it often enables the varieties possessing it to escape exposure to the contagion; but it does not enable them to offer any resistance to infection if they happen to be exposed to the contagion before they have ceased to be susceptible; nor can any variety be considered "safe" to grow on account of its early maturity alone; for hot weather is always liable to come on earlier in the season than is usual; farmers also must not be tied down too closely in their time of sowing, and early wheats, if they happen to be sown late, are sure to be exposed to the parasite. Another substantial advantage which is possessed by early wheats is that they are likely to escape hot drying winds, which sometimes cause the grain to be almost as much pinched as does the rust. On the other hand, early wheats are liable, in a few exceptionally cold and late districts, to be caught by unseasonably late spring frosts while they are in bloom.

I will now recapitulate. The following are the special characteristics of wheats that are the most likely to resist rust in our climate:—

1. The straw and foliage should have a covering of close texture, and be well glazed with silicious matter.
2. The habit of growth should be moderate, and for hot districts even somewhat dwarf, provided that such a habit is not the result of constitutional weakness.
3. The flag and foliage, in addition to being well glazed and of close texture outside, should be light, narrow, and stiff; the reverse of heavy, broad and flabby.
4. The grain should be hard.
5. The time of maturity should be early.

The above, as far as I know at present, are the main characteristics which are required by wheats to be resistant of rust in this country; but any variety, in order that it may possess this quality in a high degree, must have associated with these qualities for one of its characteristics as a living organism, an indefinable quality which we can only call a constitutional resistance to the pest. This is a quality which is largely hereditary, and can be secured and even greatly increased by the exercise of judgment in the choice of parents in the breeding of new varieties; but at the same time, it is a quality which is liable to be impaired, weakened, or even lost by the accumulated effects of a long course of carelessness, or of mistakes in the management or choice of seed-grain, as well as (what I have already on a former occasion attempted to point out) by too long continued in-breeding. These points can be embraced by a sixth requirement, which is—

6. That the variety itself be not too old, and that it possess a constitution which causes it to be naturally resistant of rust and adapted to the conditions of the locality in which it is grown.

In order that we may have before us the characteristics of an ideal wheat for our country, I will add to the above special characteristics of a resistant variety, the other points of an ideal high-class wheat. They are—

7. That the straw, in addition to being short or moderately short, and to having a covering of close texture and well-glazed, be also stout, stiff, and wiry (not fleshy), and that the tillering stalks run up fairly straight and in a regular manner from the crown of the root, instead of spreading out irregularly as is the case with such varieties as the Clawson. Stout, stiff straw, growing up straight, and in a compact and regular manner, not only gives to the crop a good appearance, but enables it to resist storms and heavy rains without being laid; and to stand up well before the stripper or reaper.
8. That the head be long, close, and full, and so formed as to hold an abundance of grain; also, that it be smooth (without beards).
9. That the chaff lie close to the grain and cover it well, and be stiff and strong enough to hold it firmly and prevent it from shelling.
10. That the grain be bright, semi-transparent, heavy, plump, thin of bran, somewhat long rather than short or round, smallish or of medium size rather than large; that it have a shallow crease (a deep crease or furrow, harbours dirt and increases the proportion of bran), a rounded germ, which should not be prominent enough to be exposed to injury in thrashing, and a fine brush as indicative of high quality; and lastly—and this is of the very greatest importance—that it be rich in gluten, which should be of fine texture. The colour of the grain is immaterial, for it is the bran which gives its colour to the berry, and the bran is separated from the kernel and got rid of by roller mills before the grinding or crushing of the kernel begins. As a matter of fact, however, the wheats that are the best for milling (the most nutritious—the richest in gluten) are mostly red. And lastly—
11. That the variety itself be productive enough in soil of average fertility and without the aid of manure, to be profitable to the farmer; that it have the habit of tillering well, of ripening its grain evenly, of bearing its ears at a uniform height, and of not producing late suckering shoots.

As soon as we have created a variety possessing the above characteristics—and that from the number of practical men who are giving earnest attention to the breeding of improved and resistant wheats, we shall doubtless soon have done fairly well—I venture to think we shall no longer need to trouble ourselves with cures or preventives of rust, but rather with arrangements for growing wheat in greater quantity. It has been largely for the guidance of my fellow workers in the making of improved wheats, that I have attempted this description of my own idea of a model wheat.

NOTE.—It may perhaps be noticed that I have not dealt in this paper with the reasons why early sowing is of such advantage in the direction of preventing wheats from suffering from rust. My experience points to the fact that in this country early sowing is advantageous with all wheats, whether they be of early or of late maturity, and that its influence extends beyond the effect it has in causing them to ripen earlier. I will illustrate what I mean. Suppose I sow two wheats, the one an early and the other a late variety, which possess characteristics that, with the exception of their respective earliness, cause them to be equally liable to rust. Suppose I sow the early variety late and the late variety early. My experience, so far, leads me to think that although the late-sown early variety may ripen before the early sown late variety, the former is the more likely to suffer from rust. The precise effects of early sowing are now being studied by me, and for that purpose I am making sowings of several varieties at intervals of a fortnight or three weeks, beginning from 1st April. There are several considerations which point to early sowing being more natural and better than late. At the very beginning of autumn the ground is warm and the soil richer in nitrates than it is at any other time of the year. On these accounts, if the soil only be fairly moist, the seed gets a good start under the most favourable conditions possible, and makes great root-development before the ground becomes cold, and lays a good foundation for health and strength during its life-time. It may be that this strength enables it to withstand the strain it has to undergo at the time when the seed is growing, and to resist the contagion, if rusty weather happens to prevail at that time.

Mr. PEARSON (Victoria) said that Mr. Farrer was quite right in supposing that spraying was to be regarded only as an expedient, and that the great point was the production of varieties of wheat which would be rust-resisting, or, if they liked it better, rust avoiding. This was the kind of wheat they were in want of—not only one variety, but varieties that would be suitable for the different districts of Australia. Notwithstanding the promised results of spraying, he did not regard it as any more than a temporary measure. It was not the main point at which they should aim. With regard to burning the stubble. It was best to submit that question to the test of the experiments, for they could argue all day and never arrive at a joint opinion about it. The humus in the soil they knew was absolutely indispensable for many reasons. Mr. Farrer had discussed the question very satisfactorily, and he did not think he could dissent much from what he had said in regard to the use of humus in the soil; but if by preserving a certain amount of humus there is a risk of losing about 50 per cent. of the crop, he thought it would be better to sacrifice that amount of humus and avoid the risk. There was another point dealt with by Mr. Farrer. It was with regard to obtaining a variety of wheat that would be sufficiently prolific without the use of any manure. He would like to have this matter explained a little more clearly. Suppose they took bare sand—could they expect to get a wheat able to grow on that?

Mr. FARRER (New South Wales): No; he referred to ordinary soil. The wheat should yield a fair return in a soil of average fertility.

Mr.

Mr. PEARSON: That made a difference. He would not manure at all unless he could get a profit out of it. Their barleys were sufficiently prolific to give a profit on manuring, and they wanted wheats that would respond to manuring as well as their barleys did. He thought it was a great mistake to suppose that they could overlook the necessity for manuring. It was no hardship for the farmer to have to manure, if he could be sure that it would give him a good profit, and they wanted a wheat that would yield a good return on manure.

Mr. KELLY (South Australia) said that many years ago there was a law against burning stubble, and in those days they had splendid crops of wheat. The law was altered, and the stubble was allowed to be burnt off, provided that so much space was to be ploughed up round each paddock, and so many men were told to attend to the fires. The party whose fire broke lose was responsible for any damage. They were all very pleased in those days, but at the present time cultivation in South Australia was conducted on different lines, and those grand crops they used to get were no longer obtainable. Farming was conducted by sowing fallowed land, and the stubble was eaten off by sheep. After this, in the following year, the land was well worked and sowed with wheat again. In the early days, before they burnt off the stubble they did not know anything about rust, although they used to come home from cattle hunting covered with red from the kangaroo grass. They were at the present time adopting the plan of early sowing, and last year they had very little rust from the early sowing. Their early sowing was about the 25th March, or early in April; May was not considered early. As to cutting wheat in the dough state, there were very few farmers in a position to do that.

PROFESSOR SHELTON (Queensland) said that Mr. Farrer's paper, aside from its thorough treatment of the subject, was of especial interest to him, because it was directed along the lines in which he had been accustomed to look for information on taking steps against the attacks of rust; that was to say, it was in the development of rust-resisting sorts that he had always thought they must look for a really efficacious way of getting rid of this pest. If they talked to the farmers in almost any wheat growing district about varieties of wheat, they would, almost to a man, tell you that there were certain varieties grown in that particular district which were year after year reasonably safe from rust. Often at his meetings in different parts of Queensland the farmers had pointed out to him wheats of that character. "Defiance" and "Town and Country" among others were generally spoken of as sorts which were eminently vigorous in this respect. But the farmer objected to cultivate these varieties because the millers cut them down 2d. or 3d. a bushel on the grain. As he said a year ago, the bulk of the wheat in America, the great shipments that go to feed Europe, come from the North-west, and the varieties were little hard red wheats that the average Queenslander, at any rate, would look down upon with the utmost contempt. Yet these wheats made the very best of flour—good, strong stuff—superior in nutritious qualities to any that could be made from white wheats. All that was required was suitable machinery to mill it, and farmers who had not too deeply rooted a prejudice against such wheat. He was certain that there were varieties of wheat doing well in various parts of these Colonies that were rust-resisting in an eminent degree; and it was a great sin that their cultivation should be neglected in order to go in for sorts that, although fetching a penny or two more a bushel, were much less able to withstand the rust. He was convinced that there was a great field for those like Mr. Farrer who were aiming at the production of rust-resisting wheats. He was disposed to dissent from Mr. Farrer's views so far as the disposal of the stubble was concerned. He agreed with him about the straw; but where they have stubble only a few inches high, if they burnt it the loss was certainly not great, and the farmer who allowed his barnyard scrapings to waste on his farm could not afford to talk about keeping the stubble rough stuff which was not at best a very good, fertilising material. The Convention last year did right in recommending the burning of stubble. He admitted, however, that the point raised by Mr. Farrer was a very good one. Mr. Pearson had referred to the use of manure with wheat. He, the speaker, did not believe that a farmer could afford to manure a wheat field. In America no one thought to use manure for the wheat crop, so they had to go in for manuring indirectly by means of pasture, maize, green crops, &c., applying manure to the crops that went, before the wheat, which thus took the keen edge off the manure. These were the short cuts that all practical farmers should take. With regard to cutting wheat in the dough stage, the arguments of twenty-five (25) years ago had been generally confirmed by modern experiments showing the importance of cutting in the dough stage, so far as the character of the flour was concerned. But all grains could not be treated in a like manner. He believed he was the first to call attention to that fact as the result of an elaborate set of experiments. For example, he made an experiment three or four years ago on a very extended scale, with cutting maize in all conditions of ripeness—in the milk stage, dough stage, and dead-ripe condition. There was a progressive increase in the yield, plumpness, and all the main constituents of the maize as the crop grew ripe. The result was totally unlooked for, but there was not a single case in all that big field, from one side to the other, where they did not find that the plots which were cut the earliest gave the lightest returns, those which were cut a day later a higher return, and so on, until the difference between the increase in yield amounted to something like 8 bushels per acre. The plants were afterwards analysed, and they found a great improvement in the constituents of the corn. What seemed to be true of maize, however, was not true of wheat.

Mr. INGLIS (South Australia) said that in the year when the Duke of Edinburgh visited Australia, they cut some wheat very early and found a nice little grain in it, while that which was left in the paddock all went to powder.

Mr. M'ALPINE (Victoria) quite agreed with Professor Shelton that the application of fungicides was a temporary expedient; but while they did not produce rust-resisting resisting wheat, they ought to turn their attention to fungicides. The last Conference had accomplished a good deal. One great object which had been attained was a large amount of evidence from the farmers, which would be published in his full report. The Conference had led farmers to take considerably more interest in the question of rust. In connection with burning off, there was a question involved, which was: What became of the teleutospores? It had been proved that teleutospores could reproduce themselves in a secondary manner on wheat. As to reaping in the dough stage, he had no opinion of his own to offer; but as far as he could ascertain from the Victorian farmers, fourteen of them considered it was better to cut in that stage. It was a choice of two evils. He objected to the use of the word "natural," as contained in Mr. Farrer's report, as the wheat itself was not natural, considering the amount of cultivation it had been subjected to. As to fallowing land, he had put down as the experience of practical farmers (in Victoria) that fallowed land was favourable to rust, although that must not be confused with the question of fallowed land being suitable for producing good crops. He considered Mr. Farrer's paper a very valuable one, but in the meantime they must pay some attention to fungicides.

Mr. FARRER (New South Wales) said he would like to point out that wheat intended for milling might be harvested as early as possible, but that intended for seed grain ought to be harvested late. He also pointed out that it was the condition of the soil—its warmth and richness in nitrates in the Autumn—which caused early sowing to appear to be the most natural. The word "natural" had not been used with special reference to the wheat plant.

MR. INGLIS (South Australia) expressed regret that he had not been able to reach Sydney in time for the opening of the Conference, and also that he and his fellow-delegate had not been able to bring with them an official report from Professor Lowrie. That, however, their chairman (Mr. Anderson) had been kind enough to telegraph for, and it would, probably, arrive shortly. He then read the following report:—

Since our Conference last year we have unfortunately had to contend with another red rusty year, again causing great national loss.

No doubt the members of the last Conference will have taken more interest in the appearance—the different stages and development—of the rust than on previous seasons. I took particular note of date when sown, condition of soil, state of weather at times of sowing, and different kinds of wheat, and their results; also sowing wheat under different conditions, viz., between dry and damp mouldy wheat. You all know that it has been stated that mouldy wheat sown will produce rust. As I doubted this very much, and to show you to what extent I doubted it, I exchanged fifty bags of good wheat to A. Neiham for fifty bags of wheat that had been damaged by heavy rains, so much so that the wheat merchants refused to buy it for milling purposes. I sowed this wheat on fallow ground, commencing on the 17th April. Wheat pickled with sulphate of copper $\frac{1}{2}$ lb. to the bag. Land dry at time of sowing.

April 26th.—Sowed Steinwedel and Purple Straw Wheat, both wheats having been kept perfectly dry and free from any damp, or any damage; pickled same as other wheat; land dry, and all three wheats sown under same conditions.

Results:—At harvest, the bearded, or first wheat sown, had very little rust; Steinwedel, as near as possible, about the same; Purple Straw nearly all gone with rust—this test showing that the moulded wheat did not produce more rust than the dry wheat, and also that the thoroughly dry wheat will be badly affected by rust.

May 7th.—Sowed twenty bags of wheat which had been grown from wheat samplings by wheat buyers, containing a mixture of nearly all kinds grown; pickled same as others; land nice and moist; plenty of moisture to start the wheat growing at once; all fallow land, and worked well; but the result was, the rust affected it more than any other wheat sown at the same time and under the same conditions. I attribute the cause to being mixed wheat. Some were bad wheats for rust, and no doubt affected the whole crop.

Stubble land.—On the 27th May sowed Early Frann, Steinwedel, Velvet Pearl, and another sort, name unknown. Land in splendid order, 4 inches of rain having fallen to date. All those kinds sown at this time produced a better grain and quite as much per acre as the earlier sown crops, and sown on fallow land as well, and would have produced more had it not been for the locusts destroying it in the green stage, being late.

Appearance of rust:—October 21st.—Rust began to appear on the first sown wheat. Weather at the time close and warm, with occasional showers.

October 28th.—Fine rains with cool change; rust not making much progress.

November 7th.—Rust again making great progress, although weather cool.

13th and 14th.—Heavy rains, 1.300 inches fell, with cold south winds blowing.

October 16th.—Very heavy dew at break of day—everything wet as with rain. The sun came out hot, and I noticed that after this the rust made great progress, and I believe that had it not been for the cold windy weather that we had for about a week the result from the rust would have been as bad as the previous year.

After the results that I have given you, I feel quite sure that perfectly sound dry wheat will not resist the ravages of rust, nor will mildewed wheat be more liable to rust than the dry, for I maintain there is no country in the world that can produce dryer wheat than we can, and I am sure that farmers will bear me out that the driest wheat is liable to rust.

Mildew in soil.—I have been thinking a good deal lately whether the very heavy summer rains have not something to do with it, for I have noticed that whenever the summer rains have been the heaviest the rust made the most havoc; and rust can be produced by artificial means. For instance, water a plot of land heavily in the middle of summer; leave another plot alongside without water; sow both plots with the same kind kind of wheat. The one watered in the summer will be rotten with rust and the other comparatively free from rust. A farmer made this test, and the results were as I have stated; so that the heavy rains in the heat of summer might produce a mildew in the soil instead of in the grain of wheat.

I do trust that our meetings will be the means of curtailing the ravages of rust, and I am confident this will be done by the experiments made and intended to be made; and I would urgently request that what I suggested last year should be carried out, as my firm opinion is that hybridizing our best wheats will be the best cure for rust. I hope this will be carried out extensively by our respective Governments, as no doubt we shall have a return of our old enemy, for I believe it is with us more or less every season.

In conclusion, in our Colony they have set apart experimental plots of 40 acres each in different districts, which are to be treated according to instructions from Professor Lowrie. The farmers find the land and labour, and the Government find the seed and manure, the farmers getting the benefit of the results. These plots would be a means of testing the efficiency of rotation of crops. I suggest that it would be a good plan for the other Colonies to follow our example. We have about six of these plots so far.

Rain register at Springfield (S.A.) for 1890.

(Between Harvest and next Seeding.)

1890.—January, 6 days, 1 630 inches. February.—2 days, 1 730; March.—1 day, 320; April.—2 days, 710; May.—9 days, 3 820; June.—14 days, 2 960; July.—13 days, 3 620; August.—14 days, 4 270; September.—13 days, 1 700; October.—9 days, 1 160; November.—5 days, 2 250; December.—3 days, 560. 1891.—1 060 inches.

Dr. COBB (New South Wales) inquired of Mr. Inglis how they arranged with their farmers for the land and labour.

Mr. INGLIS (South Australia) explained that invitations were sent out to the farmers, and the Commissioners arranged with those who assented. The only payment the farmers got was the returns.

Mr. M'LEAN (Queensland) said that with regard to the returns of rainfall, it was very necessary to know what kind of weather followed the rain. In Queensland, they had generally very clear weather after the summer rains, and that was not conducive to rust; but if the weather was warm and muggy after rain, rust was almost sure to make its appearance. A great deal depended on the state of the weather just at the time when the crop was favourable to the attacks of rust.

Mr. INGLIS (South Australia) explained that in reference to mildew in soil the time he referred to was the height of summer, when the land was in fallow, and there was no crop growing.

Mr. KELLY (South Australia) related an instance at Renmark where a crop of 10 acres of wheat was grown and irrigated twice, which ripened without a sign of rust. There was not a single shower fell upon that wheat. He then read the following extract on the subject from the South Australian Rust Commission, held in 1867:—"Mr. E. Hanson mentioned the other day, at a meeting of the Philosophical Society, that a fourteen year's stay in Chili furnished him with opportunities for observing red rust diseases in the wheat. In Chili they never had any rain between the 18th September and the middle of March; and the cultivation of the soil was dependent entirely upon irrigation. The whole country was saturated fortnightly by means of the torrents of melted snow which flowed down from the Andes towards the Pacific. Red rust appeared twice during his stay. One farmer, with whom he had a conversation regarding the visitation, attributed it to the water. Periodically, one year in every seven, the atmosphere was attended with certain peculiar circumstances, favouring the breaking out of the rust. The air then became dense and damp, and the water used in irrigation, instead of being absorbed by the soil and evaporating by the dryness of the atmosphere, lay in the fields in pools; and, when this continued for a time, red rust appeared in the crops. He believed it was the excessive moisture which favoured the breaking out of red rust. In the year 1862, he recommended a farmer to abstain, when the weather was adverse, from irrigating his fields. The advice was followed, and whilst the crops of his neighbours fell a prey to red rust his escaped scathless.

Mr. PEARSON (Victoria) said he was a member of the Irrigation Conference held in Melbourne last year, and spoke upon the introduction of irrigation and its relation to the development of rust. Two or three of the delegates said that they had found that their irrigated crops were freer from rust than those on unirrigated land; but others said that there was more rust on irrigated land than on unirrigated. For his own part, he was quite sure that Mr. Kelly's explanation was the right one. There was no doubt that irrigation, judiciously applied, was beneficial.

Mr. M'ALPINE (Victoria) felt certain that if the advice given in that article (read by Mr. Kelly) were published, and the farmers followed it, there would be no fear of rust as the result of irrigation. With regard to the rainfall and temperature, he thought the information usually supplied was rather misleading.

Mr. SHELTON (Queensland) said he had some particulars of observations on the effect of irrigation of wheat in Colorado, United States, where the rainfall was not 10 inches a year. Everything grown there had to be irrigated. While spending a year in this State, he amused himself with growing 20 acres of wheat, and there was not a speck of rust to be seen on it. In fact, he had never heard of rust in Colorado. The hybridizing of wheat was a very interesting subject. The main difficulties always appeared to have been in getting types fixed. This recalled to his mind the statement of Professor Brewer, of Yale College, who drew attention to the principle of inter-breeding something like the following:—"No perfect breed of cattle or horses was ever created except by the union of three. That the union of two breeds had never been possible, for the reason that the antagonisms of the two breeds were constantly breaking out. The second cross breaks the type, and by hybridising the second with a third type you get a fixed breed." This appeared to be the general law, and he thought it could be applied to the hybridising of wheats with good results.

Mr. KELLY (South Australia): I have not prepared a paper, but would like to offer a few remarks on this important subject for the consideration of the Conference. With Mr. Inglis, I represent one of the largest agricultural Colonies of Australasia. The question of red rust is an all-important one to us, as the Colony has lost enormous sums every year through the attacks of this dreaded-enemy. Upon hearing the first part of Dr. Cobb's statement with regard to means of combating the rust, I felt convinced that in the grub, so thoroughly and clearly described by him, we had at last found an effectual means of checking the inroads of rust; but I was greatly disappointed when, leading us up to a certain stage, the doctor could give no more definite information as to the effectiveness of the grub. Notwithstanding all that has been said with reference to the perfecting of certain kinds of wheat, I think the wheats now produced in Australia are of a very superior quality. The last time I was in England I went down to the docks where ships were unloading American wheat, and would point out that I did not see a single sample equal to the one on this table from South Australia. As a colonial farmer of fifty years' experience, I can safely say that our millers would not look at those American wheats—so much so, that when the "Steinwedel" first came out they said it was thick-skinned and produced too much bran, and endeavoured to "dock" the farmers 1s. a bag. The "Steinwedel" has now, however, become a harder plant, i.e., a coarser wheat. This wheat (on the table) was a fine wheat to take the eye, but it was a delicate wheat.

Professor SHELTON: No.

Mr. KELLY: But compared with those grown in America, it is. It would be easy to grow the hardy varieties if we could only get our millers and home buyers to take to them. The Purple Straw is a great favourite with growers, and when it first came out it was a strong hardy wheat. It has now quite supplanted the "Goldsmith," on account of its rust-resisting qualities. The question is often arising,—Do we, by cultivating the same classes of wheat, render them somewhat delicate or more liable to diseases than they were at first? It has often been discussed at our Agricultural Societies. When we had to hand reap our wheat we used to like varieties that would ripen gradually, but now with reaping machines we can go through the whole crop in a little over a week, and of course the general tendency is to obtain early maturing wheats. The Agricultural Bureau of Adelaide recommends early wheats, in the hope that when the critical periods, viz., rusty-weather (a term which, I think, is generally understood), hot winds and locusts arrive, the crop will be so far advanced that it will be able to pass through them unharmed. If we could get wheats to do this we would do very well indeed, but it is doubtful.

The following is rather interesting:—"As regards the physiological character of red rust, there can be no doubt whatever that it is essentially a vegetable parasite or fungus, attacking the plant externally, and brought into active operation by certain atmospheric or climatic conditions, the most effective of which last year (1866) were heat and humidity. In September and October there was a most unusual amount of moisture, combined with sultry heat, and frequent heavy dews at night, the blades of cereal plants being kept in a continual state of dampness, with occasional rapid evaporation, causing the pores of the leaf to be more than ordinarily open, and thus facilitating the entrance of the infinitely minute spores or seeds of the rust fungus, which are more or less always floating in the atmosphere, or deposited on the soil or surrounding objects, ready for dissemination by every wind that blows. An opinion has been expressed before the Commission, that the rust on the wheat blade is simply an exudation from the plant itself—a spontaneous overflow of sap, and is not the result of parasitical attack; but this theory is altogether without support, either in the general conditions and circumstances of the rust, as observed by the naked eye on a great variety of plants, or in the microscopic appearances of the diseased wheat plant; for although the most luxuriant growths of wheat have doubtless suffered most from the rust, thus lending an apparent support to the theory of sap "exudation," it is an undeniable fact that a large number of cereal plants and grasses—the very reverse of luxuriant—have also suffered from rust, which must, therefore, be accounted for in some other way than by the outflow of superabundant juices. The spores of the rust are proved to be true seeds, possessing a uniform and definite character according to their variety, retaining their vitality as other seeds do, and capable of being developed at any time by the application of heat and moisture.

"Your Commissioners have examined through the microscope various specimens of last year's rusted wheat, and find the rust pores identical in appearance with those noticed and delineated by Mr. Cooke and other eminent mycologists who have written on the subject. There is, therefore, no doubt whatever that the rust in wheat, now so painfully known to South Australian farmers, is identical with the disease long recognised by the same name in Europe, briefly described by Dr. Mueller. It has also been shown in evidence, that the red rust has affected, in addition to wheat and other cereals, flax, lucerne, wild oats, wild barley-grass, reeds, and many other vegetable productions.

"It has been noticed that the red rust appeared in some localities before the humid weather of September and October, and also (in the south-east) after the dry hot weather had set in. On this point it may be remarked that there are two distinct varieties of red rust, designated in Dr. Mueller's paper, Puccinia graminis, and Puccinia straminis— straminis—one of which has the power of producing its spores in almost any season. Mr. Ey, in his evidence, also refers to the two kinds of rust, and avows his conviction that both have been active agents in the destruction of last season's crop. The rust that appeared earlier is popularly known as the "long corn" rust, and is believed to have borne a full share with the Vera rubigo (or true rust) in the desolation of our last harvest.

"In the course of this investigation, some points of importance have been established, materially affecting and modifying opinions hitherto entertained. In 1865 it was reported by the Agricultural and Horticultural Society, who took evidence on the subject of red rust, that crops grown upon land long cultivated were much more liable to the disease than those grown upon new land, and that crops grown upon well-cultivated and manured land were much less liable. These opinions, though disavowed by some cultivators, prevailed very generally down to the time when your Commissioners entered upon their investigation; but the experience of last season excited grave doubts on the subject, and the result of the evidence now adduced entirely sets aside this portion of the Report of the Agricultural Society. It is found, as the almost uniform result of last year's operations, that rust has prevailed on all kinds of land—upon lands long cropped, upon fallow lands, upon grazed lands, upon virgin soil, upon manured lands, upon the plains, and upon the hills; but, more than this, it has been found that in nearly every instance the richest lands have suffered the most from red rust, and that in a large number of cases, the best crops have been reaped from the poorest natural soils, and from those most exhausted by frequent cropping. It is an almost universal fact that wherever the wheat grew most luxuriantly in September and October, there the failure has been most complete; whilst those crops that in the early part of the season were the least promising, as a rule turned out by far the best sample and the heaviest yield. This very remarkable circumstance, attested by hundreds of witnesses, is thus accounted for:—Luxuriance in vegetation, like excessive fat in animals, is not identical with vigour. Plants forced into abnormal luxuriance are more susceptible of climatic changes than those which are tough and hardy. The more juicy and succulent the plant, the more predisposed is it to the inroads of the rust. The pores of the leaf being unusually open, the minute spores of parasitical fungi can more readily enter. Then again, the more dense and heavy the crop, the less possible is it for the wind to circulate, and the saturated leaves to dry. On the other hand, in a thin, light crop, the leaf pores being less open to the entrance of the rust seed, the disease is not so freely propagated, whilst the whole crop is far better situated to enjoy the drying influences of the wind, which retard the development of the parasite. The poor crop has thus a twofold advantage over the thick and luxuriant crop in a season favourable for the development of rust. Hence, so far as red rust is concerned, rich soils and what is termed "high farming," instead of shutting out the disease and mitigating its severity, operate in the contrary direction, always supposing that the climatic conditions favourable to the development of rust are present.

"The modus operandi of the disease is two-fold. The rust spores, obtaining entrance through the open stomata, or breathing pores of the plant, are very quickly developed, and, pushing forward rootlets (mycelia), gradually work their way along the sap vessels of the leaf—in all probability injuring, by their multiplication and progress, its internal mechanical structure. But the chief damage—or, at all events, that which can with most certainty be traced—is caused by the absorption of the wheat sap by the parasite that has entered its channels. The juices that should have gone to nourish the wheat-ear are intercepted in their progress by the rust fungus, which starves the grain by living on its proper nourishment. This is not only deduced from microscopic observations, but is clearly demonstrated by chemical analyses. Healthy grains of wheat contain certain definite proportions of inorganic ash, the ash, in its turn, containing definite proportions of phosphoric acid, potash and soda, and magnesia. It has been demonstrated that rusted wheat is very deficient in that ash, having sometimes less than one-third its proper quantity. On the other hand, the rust spores, gathered from the rusty wheat, yield, on analysis, an extraordinary quantity of ash, and this ash is found to contain a large amount of the constituents present in the ash of healthy wheat, but wanting in the ash of rusty wheat. Doubtless, further experiments on this point are eminently desirable, but, as far as chemical analysis has extended, it seems fairly proved that the wheat perishes through the absorption of its proper nutriment by the rust fungus, and that the constituent elements wanting in the shrivelled grain are to be found in the parasite which was fed upon and destroyed it."

This evidence, I think, is the more interesting on account of the year referred to being an exceptional one for rain. In that season we had 80 per cent. more rain than in ordinary years, and I know of one farmer who lost 1,000 acres of wheat from rust.

Professor Lowrie's Report (Roseworthy, South Australia), incorporated by resolution of Conference.

In the following abstract it will be noticed that there is much unanimity in the replies to some of the questions, and much difference of opinion and direct contradiction in the answers to others. It may, perhaps, be useful to consider the questions in succession.

1. The situation, elevation, exposure, shelter, and aspect of the farm. No doubt each make a difference as regards risk from rust, but the variation in the cultivated land in this Colony in these respects is small, and is such as can only bring about a small difference in degree. Severe loss has been suffered in almost every district—near sea level and up to 1,800 feet above it, on exposed hillsides and in sheltered valleys, and in undulating land as well as in flat country. It no doubt is the case, as might have been inferred, that low-lying and sheltered lands, being more moist, afford better opportunity for the germination of spores and the propagation of rust, and therefore suffer most; but it is evident also that land fairly elevated and exposed suffers very considerably. For example, Mr. Neill's land in Stanley is 1,500 feet above sea level and exposed, yet his loss in different years has varied from 6 to 15 bushels per acre.

2, 3, and 4. The disease has apparently been known in this Colony since 1851, and during these forty years has, at short intervals, caused more or less loss. In 1878 and 1880 it prevailed over a considerable area, but in 1867, 1889, and 1890, it was well-nigh general throughout the Colony, and resulted in immense loss. The seasons 1882 to 1888 seem to have been very free from rust.

5. It is evident that late-sown crops suffer most from rust. This is easily explained, for, other things being equal, an early-sown crop is early ready for harvesting, and, as the conditions which favour rust are moisture and warmth, the crop which is well advanced when what may be called hot weather sets in, is less likely to be injured. The full importance of early sowing is, I fear, among our average farmers, not recognised. I would argue, as strongly as three years' experience may justify me, that in this Colony there is distinct advantage in its favour. Of course, we know that seasons occasionally occur when late sowing becomes a necessity; but in average seasons I question whether wheat can be profitably sown after May in this district, and I am convinced that land which has to be sown in June or in early July, can with better advantage be sown with pease or other crop which admits of later sowing than with wheat. I am aware that failures have occurred which have been due to early sowing, and that occasionally very late sown crops have given remarkably good yields; but as a general rule I do not think it is possible to lose by judicious early sowing, but rather I believe much is to be gained by it.

6. There is some indication in the replies that the harvests in which rust most prevailed were late, though these replies are not sufficiently definite for an authoritative general statement.

7. In the great majority of cases the crops were allowed to ripen. The practice of using the stripper, which is general in South Australia, requires the grain to be left till dead-ripe. In a rusty season there seems some reason to expect that grain which has been so left will be more shrivelled than if it had been earlier cut. If the crop be cut in the "dough" stage, the shrivelling effect of rust is less marked, though in our experiments on the College farm the advantage of early cutting was less marked than we had anticipated. In five different fields, which had pairs of adjacent blocks laid off, one block of each pair was cut early and thrashed, the other was left and stripped, and in four out of five cases we obtained more wheat from the stripper than from the thrashed, though the sample was slightly lighter (about 2 lb. per bushel).

8. The average loss appears to have been 7 to 8 bushels per acre in the years affected, and it would seem that the averages for these years, had rust not prevailed, would have been considerably above the normal. In other words, rust has done most damage when in other respects the seasons have been most favourable.

9. The wide variations in the periods of harvesting which occur in this Colony do not allow of much satisfaction being obtained from the replies to this query. Speaking generally, however, it would seem that rust was first seen after, or about, the time that the wheat was in the bloom.

10. As a rule, it appears to have spread right away after its first occurrence, if the climatic conditions were favourable.

11. In addition to wheat, the only plants suffering from rust are oats, wild oats, barley, and some grasses. On the College Farm I have looked carefully from time to time to see whether rust appeared on any of the weeds, especially of the Boraginaceae order, but during the past season I have failed to notice it. One reply gives marsh-mallows as being affected.

12. Rust has occurred under all the varieties of climate which exist in this Colony. One reply mentions proximity to the sea, and sea-breezes as a preventive of rust. The observations concerning temperature are too indefinite to be of avail.

13. The consensus of opinion indicates decidedly that wet seasons, especially after warm springs, have been followed by rust.

14. Moist, or showery and sultry weather favours the propagation of the fungus, as might have been expected, for the spores will germinate more readily, and a healthy luxuriant growing plant forms the best host for it.

15. All kinds of soils are liable to rust, but light limestone and sandy soils seem to be affected less severely than loams and strong clays.

16. As it is with soils, so it is with cultivation. Rust prevails under every form of cropping, and it seems to have been worst where cultivation was good. During the past two years it has been our experience on the College farm that well-manured, well-cultivated, and well-rested or new lands have suffered most from the pest. In 1890 one field carrying its first crop, after having been cleared from mallee scrub, yielded only 3 to 4 bushels instead of 14 to 15 as promised.

19. Low-lying, rich, or fertile flats have evidently suffered most; but, according to the replies, new land and manured lands have also been badly affected.

20. Manured land has been decidedly most affected, and evidence points to deep cultivation as also being favourable to rust. Occasional replies state that crops on bare fallowed land suffered least, but this may probably be explained from the practice of sowing the bare fallowed land first in the season. Artificial drainage is almost unknown in South Australia, but from answers to the previous queries, our opinions are confirmed that drained land would suffer less from rust than undrained land. However, drainage is too expensive for this Colony, our average returns and prevailing prices will not justify it. Irrigation for wheat is also unknown.

21. Artificial manures are used only in the most isolated cases. The use of a nitrogenous artificial manure is almost unknown amongst South Australian farmers. Farm-yard manure, as was to be expected, increased the rust attacks. On the College farm artificial dressings of phosphatic and nitrogenous mixtures decidedly encouraged the rust, and dressings with kainit and common salt had no appreciable preventive influence during the past season.

22. There is extraordinary diversity of opinion as regards the capability of different varieties of wheat to withstand rust, some farmers giving in their rust-resisting lists the same wheats which other farmers place amongst those most affected. Speaking generally, the earlier wheats seem to withstand rust better. Wheats such as Steinwedel and Baart, are favourably mentioned by several farmers. Of the late wheats Ward's Prolific in the northern areas seems to be least affected. It is, however, a non-prolific wheat, giving a comparatively poor yield even under favourable circumstances. On the College farm, however, it was as much affected as Purple Straw and Steinwedel, which were growing alongside of it. There is no doubt that the red wheats and the hard flinty wheats are the most rust-resistant. They are not so valuable for milling purposes, however; but I firmly believe that it would be wise for our farmers to consider the advisability of growing a proportion of these wheats so as to lessen the risk from rust. Out of about 100 varieties of wheat grown on the College farm during the past year, only one could have been said to have been free from rust, and that was a large flinty-grained solid strawed wheat—an African variety.

It seems to make very little difference as regards the rust effects, whether or not the seed has been changed. It is probable, however, that in cases where the change has been from a colder later climate that the susceptibility to rust is greater, as the wheat is likely to develop less rapidly. On the College farm, wheats imported from Britain, America or New Zealand were markedly most affected.

24. One farmer replied to this query, "None whatever, or ever will, until man can control the weather," is, I fear, not very wide of the mark. It will be noticed that some mention Ward's Prolific as never having been affected, others mention Purple Straw, Tuscan and Baart, but one and all of these wheats were practically rotten with rust during the past year on the College farm, and I have no sufficient reason to believe that one variety which we grew last year (Algerian) is infallibly rust-resisting.

25. The preponderance of opinion seems to be in favour of thin sowing. On the College farm we could notice no variation between drilling and broadcasting on different parts of the same field as regards the susceptibility to rust.

26. There is evidently no disadvantage in sowing rust-shrivelled seed, and if the weight of evidence leans to any one side, it is that a crop grown from rust-shrivelled seed is less liable to rust.

27. Crops following burnt and unburnt stubble have been alike affected.

28. Nothing to be noted.

29. The great majority have used the stripper, and there is very little experience of the binder and thrasher in this Colony. Our experiments on the College farm during the last year have been such as to encourage the introduction of the binder and thrasher. (See Annotation to Question 7.)

30. Some say continuously cropped land has escaped best, whilst others believe fallowed land suffered least. As already stated, it is probable that the time of sowing has more to do with the result than the character of the cropping as regards rust. One can understand that wheat after wheat being likely to be a more dwarfed, stunted, less luxuriant crop, would suffer less than a healthy, wealthy crop after bare fallow.

31. No remarks.

32. During the season 1890-1891 rust could be seen on the College farm all the year round, from harvest to harvest, on stray self-sown oats and wild oats.

MONDAY, 8TH JUNE.—FIFTH DAY.

Mr. M'ALPINE, Victoria, said that before resuming the business he desired to express his high sense of the kindness of the Minister in asking the delegates to visit the new College at Ham Common, and to explain that it was only their desire to conclude the business of the Conference which prevented the acceptance of the invitation. He moved:—

"That the thanks of the Conference be tendered to the Hon. the Minister for Agriculture (Mr. Sydney Smith) for his invitation to the delegates to visit the Agricultural College at Richmond, although, in consequence of the amount of work to be performed, they were unable to accept it." Carried unanimously.

Dr. COBB (New South Wales) proposed a vote of thanks to Mr. A. N. Pearson for the able manner in which he had performed the duties of Secretary of the committee.

Mr. PEARSON (Victoria) briefly returned thanks.

The DIRECTOR mentioned that the Minister was away that day visiting his electorate, but he had seen him (the Minister) the last thing on Saturday evening, when he told him (the Director) to be sure to impress upon the delegates that anything which could be done to make their trip pleasant after the work was done he was to do, having the Minister's full authority. If, therefore, they would still like to visit the College the necessary arrangements could be made.

Mr. PEARSON (Victoria), as Secretary of the Committee, then brought up the following report:—

Report of the Conference in Committee.

The committee of the second Conference of delegates of the Australian Colonies called together to consider the question of rust in wheat desire to record the fact that, since the last Conference, held in Melbourne in 1890, distinct advances have been made in our knowledge both of the life-history of the rust fungi occurring in Australia, and of possible methods of coping with the pest. On reference to the papers and records of experiences presented to the Conference, it will be seen that certain discoveries of an interesting nature have been made in regard to the predominance of the spring rust (Puccinia rubigo Vera) in the Colony of New South Wales during the past year, and a possible fourth stage of the autumn rust (Puccinia graminis), on a species of Agropyrum, the presence of germinating cells in the spermatogonia of the same rust; and the grub or larvæ of a species of Diplosis which feeds on the rust, and may be instrumental in spreading the pest. Abundant evidence has been accumulated showing the existence in Australia of varieties of wheat which are constantly less liable to damage from rust than are other varieties. Evidence has been gathered by direct experiments, and by information received from farmers in response to questions issued to them, which confirms the soundness of the recommendations of last year's Conference in regard to early sowing, and the less liability to disease of crops grown in rotation; and it has also been shown that, as a rule, thinly-growing crops suffer less from rust in these Colonies than do thickly-growing crops. In regard to curative measures—which as temporary and occasional expedients should not pass disregarded—the proper use of fungicides has been further indicated by last year's experiments. It has been found that a solution composed of one part of sulphate of copper and 400 parts of water destroyed the vitality of the rust spore, and that a solution of 1 oz. of sulphate of iron to the gallon of water when sprayed over a growing crop at a time when rust was about to break out prevented the appearance of rust until a fortnight or three weeks later; and even if applied when the rust had attacked the plant, destroyed all outward appearance of fungus, and prevented its reappearance until fourteen days afterwards. These, the committee submit, are evidences of real progress in the important and difficult work with which the Conference has had to grapple.

After a survey of the facts in evidence, the Conference in committee has drafted a series of resolutions, which are now submitted for formal sanction. These resolutions are the same as those of last year's Conference, together with certain modifications and additions suggested by the further evidence gained during the past twelve months.

The series is divisible into two classes, the first embracing measures which the committee believes may with confidence be recommended for immediate adoption, with a view to lessening the chances of loss consequent on rust. These recommendations do not refer to the adoption of any specific remedies or preventives, but rather to the general improvement and modification of existing methods of wheat growing, and the gradual introduction of better systems of farming. The facts accumulated in evidence, as well as the experience and knowledge of the individual members of the committee—both of those members who are engaged in wheat growing for the market, and of those who are engaged in scientific inquiry into the subject—unmistakably indicate that the ravages of the rust pest would be materially decreased by intelligent perseverance in the direction of these general methods. The recommendations are not offered for indiscriminate adoption, but for selection or modification according to the results of local experience. The Committee believes that if all those interested in the advancement of agriculture, would cordially unite in encouraging Australian farmers and wheat growers to persevere in the direction of these recommendations, the result would be a most important diminution of the loss resulting from rust, and a steady increase in our output of wheat.

The second class of resolutions refers to methods and subjects of inquiry recommended for the coming season.

The resolutions are as follows:—

I.—Recommendations for the immediate attention of Farmers.

1. In view of the general experience that early sown wheat frequently escapes free from rust at times when late-sown crops are greatly damaged thereby, and that in the great majority of cases it is attacked considerably less than late-sown wheat, this Conference recommends that early sowing be adopted whenever possible. In making this recommendation the Conference does not overlook the fact that sometimes, owing to unseasonable weather, early sowing is impracticable, but it also recognises that early sowing might readily be adopted in many cases where late sowing is now the practice.

2. This Conference believes that cutting the wheat-crop when the grain is in the dough stage is generally desirable as a means of securing a better sample of grain for milling purposes; and that in a rusted crop the practice is specially to be recommended to this end. This recommendation, however, does not refer to obtaining grain for seed, for which purpose the crop should not be cut until fairly ripe.

3. This Conference, believing that no such cereal as rust-proof wheat has yet been discovered, but that—as shown from experiments lately carried out by importing different varieties from countries outside the Australian Colonies, and by carefully selecting and hybridising them within the Colonies—certain kinds have been found to constantly escape to a considerable extent the ravages of this pest, recommends a continuance of this work of importation, selection and hybridisation, with a view to securing varieties most likely to escape rust and specially adapted to the different districts of our Colonies. And, it having been found from evidence submitted to this Conference, that certain varieties of wheat, believed to be rust-resisting, when grown in one locality, have succumbed to the pest when grown in another locality, this Conference considers that it would not be justified in specifying any particular varieties as possessing rust-resisting qualities under all conditions, but provisionally recommends the following as worthy of careful trial:—Ward's Prolific, Victorian Defiance, Queensland Defiance, Red Tuscan, Belatourka, Fill-bag, Du Toits, Rattling Tom, Blount's Lambrigg, and Leak's.

4. Inasmuch as rust-resisting wheats, when grown for a few seasons in rusty districts, are liable to lose their ability to avoid the attacks of the rust fungus, this Conference affirms the desirability of establishing at as early a date as possible in suitable districts of the different Colonies, seed depôts, or stations for the maintenance and improvement, by selection and hybridisation, of the rust-resisting and other desirable qualities of seed-wheats, and for the constant distribution of standard varieties throughout the Colonies.

5. This conference desires to record its conviction that red wheats should be brought more generally into cultivation in these Colonies, for the reason that, while they are hard and well suitable for milling purposes with modern milling machinery, they are also less liable to the ravages of rust than are white wheats. It considers that the present prevailing demand on the part of grain merchants and millers for white wheats is not based on any sound principal, and it is prejudicial to the interest of wheat-growers and bread consumers.

6. The advisability of growing wheat on land previously fallowed, or in succession to crops of a different order, such as maize, sorghum, clover, peas, cow-peas, Indian grain, lucerne, and other leguminosæ, potatoes, mangolds, and other root-crops, &c., is earnestly recommended to our farmers, on the grounds that wheat thus grown has enjoyed a greater immunity from attacks of rust than when succeeding wheat, oats, and other like graminaceous plants, and also upon broader grounds of sound practical farming. The general tenor of the many facts laid before the Conference is to the effect that better farming—the practice of rotation, fallowing, and the use of farm yard manure indirectly, by applying it to plants which precede wheat in the rotation—has resulted, not only in better crops of wheat, but noticeably lessened damage from the rust scourge.

7. In view of the general evidence that in the Australian Colonies, thinly-sown crops are less attacked by rust than thickly-sown crops, the Conference recommends the more general adoption of the practice of thin-sowing, due regard being given to the soil, the time of sowing, and the peculiarities of the local climate.

8. This Conference, recognising that the locus of the rusting spores of the rust fungus is chiefly the straw of the infected crop, advises that, where practicable, all infected straw, tailings, or stubble, and all grasses immediately adjoining thereto, be carefully burned; and that, where infected straw must necessarily be fed to stock, or used for bedding, all the manure therefrom be well rotted and applied to land about to carry a non-cereal crop.

II. Recommendations for Inquiry and Investigation.

9. The conference affirms the desirability of continuing experiments and inquiries in directions such as are indicated in the 6th resolution of last year's Conference. The subjects for investigation fall under the following headings:—

- (a) The effect, as regards rust, of manuring.
- (b) The effect of applying lime, salt, and sulphate of iron to the soil.
- (c) The effect of applying to the rusted crops, by means of the Strawsonizer or otherwise, various fungicides in solution or in powder, such as sulphate of iron, salt, sulphate of copper, Bordeaux mixture, eau celeste, ammoniac carbonate of copper, carbolic acid, and thymol.
- (d) Effect of different modes of cultivation.
- (e) Effect and economical application of drainage.
- (f) Expediency and best methods of using infected straw.
- (g) Efficacy of burning all straw, weeds, and other plants in the infected field, and of using other disinfecting agencies, with a view to destroying spores.
- (h) Relative value of rust-shrivelled and plump seed.
- (i) Relative value of different varieties of wheat.
- (j) Effect, as regards rust, of different times and modes of sowing.
- (k) Effect of different times and modes of reaping.
- (l) Investigations regarding plants that act as intermediary hosts, and regarding all plants that are affected by rust in the different Colonies.
- (m) Investigations as to the earliest stage of wheat in which the fungus may effect an entrance.
- (n) Investigations regarding any insects, such as the recently discovered grubs of a Diplosis, which feed upon rust spores and may be instrumental in spreading the pest.
- (o) Investigations in regard to the influence on rust of interchange of seed between suitable localities.
- (p) The influence which the growing of the seed in hot climates has on the early maturing of wheats.
- (q) Investigations in regard to the effect of mixture of seed on the development of rust.
- (r) Macroscopical, microscopical and chemical examination of varieties of wheat in order to discover the characteristics of rust-resisting wheats.
- (s) Trials of various leguminous plants from various parts of the world, suitable for introduction into rotations in the different districts of Australia, and especially into the wheat-growing districts of the dry interior. (t)

- (t) Investigations in regard to a standard of rustiness and in regard to some more precise method of comparing the degree of rustiness than the use of vague expressions, such as "slightly rusty," "rusty," and "very rusty."

10. Resolved, that, for experimental purposes, an intercolonial exchange of all varieties of wheat in the Colonies be effected in time for next season's sowing.

11. It is recommended that steps be taken by the various Governments to encourage the production or improvement of implements suitable for spraying wheat crops.

12. Resolved, that as soon as possible experiments on a sufficiently large scale be made in the various Colonies to demonstrate the most practical method of spraying crops with suitable fungicides.

13. The Conference affirms the value of publishing every autumn in each Colony a map indicating the whole of the wheat-growing districts, illustrating the extent to which each has been affected by rust, and giving all data possible as to climatic and other conditions of the past season.

14. It is recommended that the series of questions set forth in Appendix I to this Report, relating to the coming season's crop, be issued to the farmers in all the Colonies; and that, together with these questions, an invitation be issued to the farmers to forward specimens of wheat and other plants upon which rust is found growing, instructions for gathering samples, as set forth in Appendix II, being issued at the same time.

15. Resolved, that draught copies of all reports of investigation and experiments which are intended for presentation at the next year's Conference, be circulated amongst the various members at least a fortnight before session,

PETER M'LEAN,
Chairman of Committee.
A. N. PEARSON,
Secretary.

Sydney, 8th June, 1891.

Appendix I to Committee's Report.

Questions on Rust in Wheat, to be issued to wheat-growers of Australia during the season 1891-2.

HEADING: At the Intercolonial Conference on Rust in Wheat, held in Sydney in June, 1891, it was recommended that the following questions be submitted to the wheat-growers of Australia. Special attention is called to the fact that the questions cover in part the same ground as those issued last year. It is hoped that the experiments and discussions resulting from the questions of last season have given rise to more valuable opinions among wheat-growers, and that therefore all growers who undertake to answer the questions here submitted will be even more particular than formerly to give as complete and exact information as possible, even though information of a similar kind was forwarded last year. It is requested that the answers to these questions be sent in not later than the 21st January, 1892.

Name _____
Address of Farm _____
Parish _____
County or Division _____

1. What is the height above sea level of your farm?
2. Is the farm exposed or sheltered?
3. Is it level, sloping, or undulating? If it is on a slope, please state the direction of slope.
4. Was your land originally scrub, forest, or open country?
5. What is the nature of your climate?
6. What is the direction of your prevailing wind?
7. What is the nature of your soil and subsoil?
8. How long has your land been under cultivation, and what has been its previous cropping?
9. Has any of your crop been injured this season by rust? If so, what proportion?
10. How many acres of your land were under wheat? How much of this was cut for hay on account of rust?
11. What was the estimated loss per acre owing to rust?
12. What was the nature of the soil and subsoil of those portions of your land affected or most affected by rust?
13. Did the rust first appear or be most virulent on any particular slopes of your land, or in hollows, or near trees, hedges or other shelter, near to streams, or in the middle of the paddock, or near the headlands and sides?
14. Was your wheat this season sown on fallow or stubble ground?
15. Was your land ploughed shallow or deep?
16. Was your land drained or undrained?
17. Was your land manured or unmanured? If manured, state the kind of manure used.
18. Was your land irrigated?
19. What kind of season have you had this year?
20. Give the date when the first speck of rust was observed in your crop.
21. State the kind of weather—frosty, rainy, sultry, &c.,—which occurred at this time.

22. Give the date when the rust spread throughout your crop so as to do damage.
23. State the kind of weather which occurred at this time.
24. Did any special wind prevail during the outbreak of rust?
25. What was the time of sowing the seed? Was this early or late for the district?
26. How much seed was used per acre?
27. Did the crop stand thinly or thickly on the ground?
28. Have you observed any difference, as regards rust, between thinly-sown and thickly-sown crops, and between thinly growing and thickly growing crops?
29. What kind or kinds of wheat did you grow this year?
30. What varieties of wheat have you found this year most affected and least affected by rust?
31. Have you this season found any difference in regard to rustiness between wheat crops grown from imported and from local seed?
32. What has been your experience this season with rust-shrivelled seed, as compared with plump seed?
33. Did you cut any of your rusted crop in the dough stage? If so, what were the results as to yield and character of grain?
34. Have you tried the effect of burning all straw, tailings, stubble, and refuse of rusted crops, and of burning the surface of the land? If so, with what results?
35. What results have you obtained from any other measures of prevention you may have tried?
36. Name any other plants—and especially grasses—upon which you have observed rust.
37. Are there any portions of your farm, or of the farms in your neighbourhood, which have been observed to be constantly free from rust? If so, give any information you can concerning such areas.
38. Does wheat from colder or warmer, wetter or drier districts, suffer most from rust with you?
39. Is there any other information you would like to give?

Mr. M'LEAN (Queensland) moved the adoption of the Report. He considered they were in a much better position that year in dealing with the question than they were last year, as they had obtained a large amount of experience. There was also another point gained, and that was that the questions to be issued to farmers would be uniform throughout the Colonies represented at that Conference.

Dr. COBB (New South Wales) seconded the motion, which was carried unanimously.

The DIRECTOR said that with regard to the correctness or incorrectness of the reports furnished by the experimenters, the New South Wales Department had sent inspectors to visit every one of them. There was nothing but the most bitter disappointment, as to the way in which the experiments, on the whole, had been conducted. There were sixty men who offered to conduct experiments. The best seed was supplied, and the experimenters were to get the yield and be paid for any additional labour incurred. Reports were submitted, but when the inspectors visited the farmers, many of their reports were found to be useless. Some interesting facts, however, came out, and that was with regard to the "Steinwedel" which they had obtained from South Australia and sowed in April. With a single exception, this was reaped in November, and was proclaimed the finest wheat they had ever seen. That which was allowed to stand till December, however, was rotten with rust. This seemed to show that if they allowed Steinwedel to ripen late it was liable to have rust. Ward's Prolific had been proved to be the finest rust-resisting wheat grown in New South Wales, as no rust had been found upon it. The reports on Steinwedel were most flattering. They grew Steinwedel in the county of Cumberland, and on the rich alluvial flats in the Richmond district. The crops were magnificent, and went about 30 bushels to the acre. In one instance there was a crop of wheat on the Hawkesbury flats which was affected with rust. One of their inspectors went to see it, and recommended its being cut at once. A very heavy thunderstorm came on and washed the rust off, and it was cut for grain, giving about 40 bushels to the acre. The delegates did not mention Steinwedel in their report, but it should be borne in mind that every farmer who cut it in November was most successful, and, moreover, it was ready to reap three weeks before any other wheat.

Mr. M'LEAN (Queensland) inquired whether the experimenters were appointed from those who were known or indiscriminately.

The DIRECTOR said that was their weak point. They had appointed persons who offered to do the work, provided they were practical farmers.

Dr. COBB (New South Wales) freely endorsed Mr. Anderson's remarks regarding Steinwedel, but he saw no way of introducing that wheat, as the heading under which the various wheats were introduced was "rust-resisting," whereas Steinwedel was an early wheat. With regard to the experiments with fungicides they must not be too sanguine. The facts were as stated, but they ought to realise the practical difficulties which had been pointed out, and they should be very careful in making reports not to encourage people as to what the results were likely to be. The spray known as saccharate of copper consists of 4 kilos of lime in water, adding 2 kilos of treacle, and 2 of sulphate of copper to the hectolitre of water. He could see from the nature of the recipe they would have a precipitate in suspension. He then exhibited a sample of growing wheat attacked with P. rubigo vera, in order to show the importance of ascertaining when the rust first appeared. Individual plants might be examined throughout a field to see if there was a single spot to be found, as it was then that the rust first appeared in the crop.

Mr.

Mr. M'ALPINE (Victoria) desired to emphasise the remarks of Dr. Cobb as to the application of fungicides in reference to the point raised by Mr. M'Lean as to the application in an experimental plot being far different to applying to a crop. They ought, therefore, to be very careful not to mislead the farmers.

Mr. M'LEAN (Queensland) explained that his reason for mentioning it was because it had been pointed out to them by the farmers. He believed, however, it was possible, and if they could show a farmer that by sacrificing one-sixth of his field he could save five-sixths of his crop they would have done some good. It was better for a farmer to secure two-thirds than to lose a whole crop, and that was why he wished to carry out the experiment on such a scale as to prove to the farmer that it was within his reach.

Dr. COBB (New South Wales) quite agreed with what Mr. M'Lean had said. His remarks were not with a view to preventing experiment, but simply to avoid misleading the farmers.

Professor SHELTON (Queensland) in speaking of the importance of detecting the rust in its earlier stages, said that they knew, as practical men that the fact of small patches of rust being present in a field was not proof that it was general throughout the field. In Queensland they had rust in almost every wheat field, but it was not general. If they commenced to spray as soon as they saw the rust in a field, of course there was a good amount of energy expended, and probably the crop might not have suffered, so that there was a danger of doing something unnecessary. The question was, was there not some point at which a crop was unquestionably rusted, and when they could apply the fungicide? He was glad the point had been brought out in the report as to the influence of the spray lasting over two weeks.

Mr. INGLIS (South Australia) said that Mr. Shelton had referred to just the point he had intended to bring before the Conference. He looked upon the plant produced by Dr. Cobb as entirely out of season, and most plants out of season were affected with rust. With regard to Steinwedel wheat, he would never recommend a farmer to sow a large quantity of it. It was so open in the head, and so easily shaken out. He would like to ask that the official South Australian report, which was expected that day, might be included in the report of the Conference.

By Dr. COBB (New South Wales),—"That the Department of Agriculture of New South Wales be empowered to add to the report of the Conference such appendices as may be deemed expedient."

Seconded by Mr. PEARSON (Victoria), and carried unanimously.

By Mr. M'LEAN (Queensland).—"That this Conference desires to place on record its appreciation of the action of Mr. E. Annis, of Manilla, near Tamworth, in forwarding to the N.S. Wales Department of Agriculture, specimens of the rust-eating insect."

Seconded by Dr. COBB, and carried unanimously.

By Mr. PEARSON (Victoria),—"That the report to be received from Professor Lowrie, South Australia, be incorporated in the proceedings of the Conference."

Seconded by Professor SHELTON, and carried unanimously.

By Dr. COBB (New South Wales),—"That the next Conference be held in Adelaide, in the first week in March, 1892, and that the Delegates be as nearly as possible the same as on the present occasion."

Seconded by Mr. INGLIS, and carried unanimously.

By Mr. M'ALPINE (Victoria),—"That a hearty vote of thanks be accorded to the Hon. Minister of Agriculture, Mr. Sydney Smith, for his reception of the Delegates, and for presiding over the sittings of the Conference as far as his official duties permitted."

Seconded by Professor SHELTON (Queensland), and carried by acclamation.

The DIRECTOR explained that the Minister regretted exceedingly that he could not preside altogether at the sittings of the Conference; but, to tell the truth, it was wonderful how he managed to be there so much. He (the speaker) could assure them that the Minister was nearly distracted with work, and was not able to leave town until late at night, and had left express instructions that the first report of the Conference might be forwarded to him, in order that he might bring it under the notice of the farmers in his electorate.

Mr. KELLY moved,—"That a cordial vote of thanks be accorded to Mr. H. C. L. Anderson, the Director of Agriculture, for his courtesy and ability in presiding over the sittings of the Conference."

This was seconded by Mr. PEARSON, supported by Mr. INGLIS, and carried by acclamation.

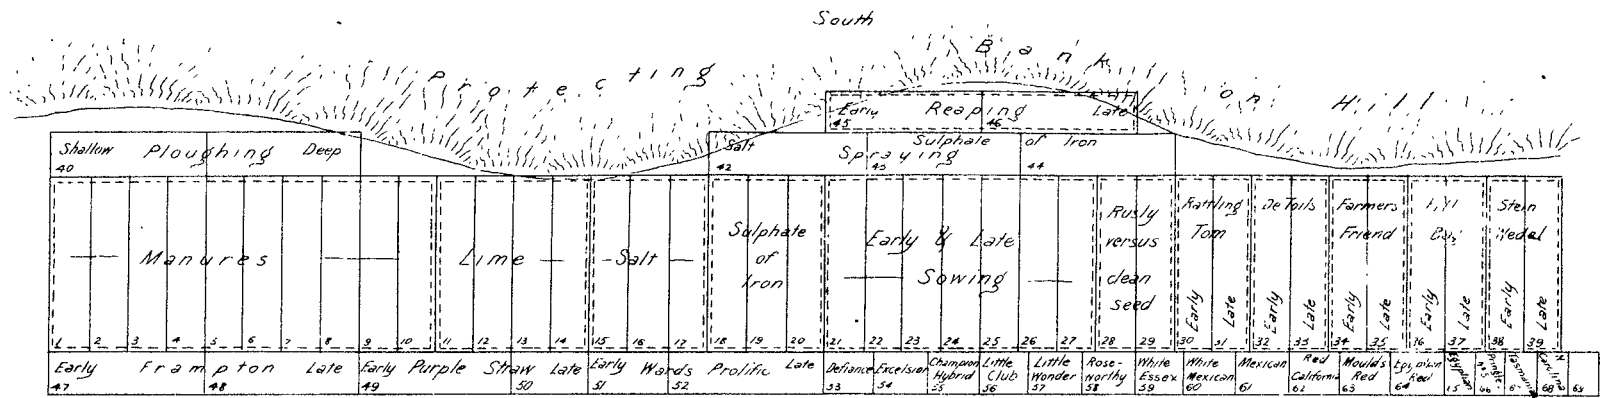

The DIRECTOR thanked the Delegates very much for their kind words.

Mr. FARRER (New South Wales), moved,—"That Delegates from Tasmania be invited to the next Conference."

Mr. INGLIS seconded the motion, which was carried unanimously.

The proceedings of the Conference then terminated.

Forest Department, Sydney, 1 September, 1891.

To the Honorable Sir Henry Parkes, G.C.M.G., the Prime Minister and Colonial Secretary.

Sir,

I have the honor to submit herewith my first Annual Progress Report upon State Forest Administration in New South Wales, together with various suggestions in regard to the Reorganisation and Working of the Department.

I may state, for the sake of record, that after having had the honor of being appointed by you to the position which I now hold, I began my duties as Head of the Department on the 1st July, 1890.

There are perhaps several matters referred to in this Report which are more or less already familiar to yourself and other Members of the Government, but as this is the first Report of the kind which I have the honor to lay before you, I consider it expedient to enter much more fully into details of matters in connection with Arboriculture than will be necessary in any future Annual Reports.

I have the honor to be,

Sir,

Your obedient servant,

J. EDNIE-BROWN,

Director-General of Forests.

ANNUAL PROGRESS REPORT of State Forest Administration in New South Wales for the year 1890.

In consequence of pressure of departmental business in connection with the reorganization of the Forest Department of New South Wales, there has been some little delay in issuing the usual Annual Report.

In the following pages every endeavour has been made to give a clear statement of the prospects of this Colony in regard to the conservation of forests, as also the manner and circumstances requiring consideration for the future success of all undertakings by the Department.

In future an endeavour will be made to issue the Annual Report as early as possible, after the end of each Financial year, say about March.

GENERAL INTRODUCTION.

STATE CONSERVATION OF FORESTS.

Administration by the State Necessary.

THE wisdom of the policy of placing the forest lands of all settled countries under the immediate control of the State, has been fully demonstrated by practical experience during the last quarter of a century in India, America, Canada, Africa, and Australia. It is indispensable to the health, wealth, and prosperity of the community, and is undertaken in the ordinary course of events as part and parcel of the general function of government, but it is only in comparatively recent years that the responsibility has been fully recognised and accepted in Australia. The reason for the long delay is not apparent, but the necessity for the conservation of the forests is everywhere palpable, and indeed in every one of the Colonies where the pioneer has built himself a home he has to a large extent done so at the sacrifice of the primeval forest. Indeed the progress of civilisation in the Colonies has been marked by a wasteful desolation of timber everywhere in the forest country, to the subsequent injury of the climate, and the unavoidable deterioration of the natural and cultivated products of the soil. In carrying out their scheme of settlement, the early colonists conceived it necessary to clear the ground of the "weeds" that obstructed the progress of the plough and the production of cereals and other necessaries of life, and they did the work so thoroughly that there were very few of the original forests left intact when they had concluded. They did not stop to think nor to draw a discriminating line between the rate of advantage and disadvantage of their destructive progress, but swept on triumphantly over hill and dale, and in their haste to have the country available for the supply of their immediate wants, omitted to think of the future. They cleared away indiscriminately the crops which nature had placed upon the land from the earliest stage of the world's history, and made no provision for reproducing them. It was so in America; it is so to-day in many parts of Australia; and in the absence of a thorough system of State Conservation of the depleted forests the evil will increase in extent, as well as in its injurious consequences. The dense forests which were originally looked upon as so many evils and obstructions to settlement have since come to be recognised as necessary to the welfare of the communities, but it was not till the products became necessary for commercial and domestic purposes, and had to be produced at considerable expense in other markets, that the despoiler became conscious of the selfish unwisdom of his early courses, and temporarily stayed his hand. It is necessary, nay, imperative, that a stop should be put to indiscriminate clearing everywhere, and at once, and it is not possible for anyone but the Government to give effect to such an interdiction. A remedy could have been found for the destruction which has taken place in America in the adoption of a plan of setting certain portions of each district of its country apart and placing them in the hands of the governing powers at the time, but the opportunity was neglected, and the consequences have been most serious. New South Wales forests are capable of great development, and although there are large breadths of country utterly destitute of trees, the destruction of these still goes on in the same improvident manner as in those parts of the old world which are well stocked and densely covered with forests. In view, therefore, of this wholesale destruction of timber which is still going on on every hand, and as individuals are too grasping in their efforts to obtain wealth, regardless of the consequences which may befall the country in after years, to turn their attention to the planting and conservation of timber, it is incumbent upon the Government of the country, in the interest of the people, people, to take the matter in hand, and by legislating for the preservation and conservation of a certain proportion of the indigenous forests, so that they may not altogether become a thing of the past, to carry out a practical and thoroughly comprehensive system of reforestation. Apart altogether from the beneficial influence of forests upon the climate of a country, and looking at the matter purely in the light of public utility, the conservation of the forests should receive the best attention of the Government of any country. The necessity exists as much in large coal-producing countries as in those where there is no coal at all, and though the question of cost and revenue should not be lost sight of any more than they should be made of first importance, there is no doubt whatever that in course of time the forests of New South Wales will prove a source of very large annual financial profit to the Colony. Such work can never be done by private individuals of their own accord,—they are too much engrossed in the management of their affairs to think of directing their energies towards securing a permanent benefit for unknown future generations. It is unquestionably the duty of the State to undertake the work and carry it out to a successful issue. While the Government is apathetic the people will do nothing, but when once the ball is set rolling, and forest conservation forms a part of the administrative policy of the Government, the force of example is so strong, and the desire for gain so general, that the matter will be taken up by private individuals, both as a means of speculation and for the purpose of improving the appearance and value of their properties. The Government of New South Wales having realised the necessity of undertaking the responsibility of replanting and conserving the forests of the Colony, the work is now proceeding vigorously, and good results may be looked forward to at no distant date.

The Commercial Value of Forests.

It is impossible to assess the commercial value of forests to a community: it is so enormous as to be absolutely incalculable, not only from a direct trading point of view, but also from the indirect benefits that are conferred upon the agricultural, pastoral, the dairying, and a variety of other important industries, and through them upon the general public. America has secured an opening in all the markets of the world, Old and New, by means of her timber products, and the Baltic Provinces have commanded, if they have not monopolised them for centuries. The properly planted and carefully conserved natural forests of a country are as gold mines, though more lasting in their character, and possess an inexhaustible and unassailable value of their own. At the present time hundreds of thousands of pounds are sent out of the country every year for timber, a very large portion of which might be obtainable in the forests of the Colonies, and the whole of which might be produced in New South Wales for a comparatively small annual expenditure. Nearly all the timber that is required for mining, fencing, railway, and firewood purposes can now be obtained from our own forests, and, with a little care, it would be possible to produce nearly all the timber, including the best hardwoods, which is required for building and manufacturing purposes. It will be seen at a glance what a wide field and extensive prospect there is for the forests of the Colony under a proper system of conservation. In this purely commercial aspect of the question, it is desirable that the replanting of the old, and the creation of new, natural forests in suitable localities should be the duty of every Government.

The Marketable Products of Forests.

There is almost no limit to the supply of good marketable timber in the present forests of the Colony, and it is within the scope of forest science not only to increase the supply, but also to greatly improve its quality, and, of course, its value in the open market. There is always a large demand for timber of various qualities and sizes for mining purposes in various districts of the Colony, and as the near supplies become exhausted through the absence of a thorough system of reforestation, the timbers have to be carried great distances, at largely increased prices, to the mining industry. A large number of the timbers now grown in our forests are suitable for building purposes, and might be utilised, thereby retaining the money now sent abroad; and the waste woods of the forests cast aside every year in the process of thinning the plantations, would more than supply all the posts and rails and firewood annually required, and would, at the same time, produce a very large revenue for the State Treasury. In no country in the world is so much fencing timber used as in these Colonies, where thousands of miles of posts and rails are put up every year either as new fences or for replacing decayed and useless old ones. In the construction and maintenance of the public railways there is a never ceasing demand for various descriptions of timber, for fencing, for construction of culverts and bridges, for sleepers and other works; but unless the forests are replanted and conserved, the supply which is now in abundance will give out, and it will be necessary to procure supplies from those who have been wiser in their day and generation. Experiments which have been made, and others now in progress show conclusively that there are a great many varieties of first-class timbers unutilised in our forests which will, when properly seasoned and carefully prepared, be equal to any of the timbers of the old world in the manufacture of household furniture of every description, and for the finest class of railway and vehicular carriage manufacture, but no doubt it will be some time before the old prejudices can be removed, and a wholesome taste cultivated amongst the general public for colonial timbers.

The effect of Forestration upon Climate.

Scientific observation and research have, in the course of the century, proved beyond the question of doubt, that large tracts of forest country have a direct, a lasting, and a beneficial effect upon the climate; that a wise process of reforestation not only increases but equalises the rainfall, purifies the atmosphere, subdues aridity, prevents sudden floods, and as a natural consequence greatly tends to encourage increased settlement and production from an active and prosperous people who practice it. The direct influence which large masses of trees have upon the atmospheric changes of a country is very marked, and very interesting, and is deserving of the careful consideration of all those who take an earnest practical interest in developing the large natural resources of the country. It is not necessary to travel back over the dull dreary pages of ancient or medieval history to find deplorable examples of decreasing rain, dried up rivers, extended deserts and arid plains resulting from the depletion and destruction of the natural forests, nor to discover striking instances where large areas have been transformed from barren hillsides and arid wastes into broad acres rich in golden harvests, and green pastures, and smiling, prosperous, happy homes, by the gradual process of reforestation; they are to be found in India, America, and in Canada without number, and in more recent years—and, of course, less numerously—

numerously—in South Australia and some of the other Colonies. Practical reforestation is indeed a complete and unvarying natural process of irrigation devised by the creation, and may be carried out comprehensively with but very little trouble, and, in fact, without much expenditure if nature were only permitted to have a little more of her own way. In view of the importance of the subject of the effect of forests upon the climate of New South Wales, where there are such vast areas of barren, as well as of well timbered country, it is undesirable that it should be dismissed with merely a passing reference. The exigencies of the climate demand that the fullest and most careful attention should be paid to this particular aspect of the subject, if it is desired that good results should attend the efforts of the Government to restore the forests of the country and place them on a tolerably secure footing, above even those accidents “of flood and field” which have so often been attended with such disastrous results; and I propose to deal with it in short separate sections in the hope that it will more readily attract, and more clearly convey itself to all those whom it may concern in the agricultural, as well as in the pastoral areas.

Forests as Conservators and Irrigators.

In a general way the forest may be said to act as its own conservator in times of drought as well as in the winter season. It carefully gathers and stores up its supplies for its preservation when the rains are few, and in the longest and hottest summers the temperature of its shady trees is cool and pleasant, and most noticeably different from the unplanted open country beyond the shadow of its trees. The vegetation affects the constitution of the atmosphere, and every tree and every blade of grass in its measure contributes to the general effect. “The meteorological effect of a tiny leaf or a tiny moss scarcely perceptible by a hurried glance, or those of a single tree, may be inappreciable because infinitesimally small, but the effects produced by a forest with its countless trees, boughs, and leaves are most manifest.” The moisture which is absorbed by the trees from the soil is passed on and on from the extremities of the rootlets to the extremity of the smallest twigs, and on to the loftiest extremities of the branches, where a portion of it is given off through the leaves into the atmosphere, a portion is retained and deposited in the leaves, the barks, and the roots for future use, while a portion is returned to the earth. In this way vegetation has the effect of increasing the humidity of the atmosphere, and it is thus shown that the forest is designed by nature as a conservator and irrigator, and practical experience more than proves the general statement. It is not altogether necessary to this result that great masses of trees should be grown indiscriminately together, or that they should be grown in specially-defined parks, or areas fenced off from all the rest of the world. Good results will also accrue from planting the country roadsides with avenues of suitable trees, from planting rows of selected trees along the subdivisional fences on the farm or the sheep-run, and on the cattle station; from planting unoccupied odd corners here and there, from planting a fringe of cool shelter around the water-holes in the interior, also alongside the numerous lines of railway which subdivide the Colony into districts. The individual cost of such undertakings would be infinitesimally small, while the general result would be a great natural boon. There would be cool shades where there was formerly only sunshine and dense oppressive heat; there would be green pastures where there was formerly only dry plains and barren fields, and the atmosphere would be so affected that wholesome fresh food would be provided for man and beast out of its very purity and freshness.

Trees provide Shelter from Heat and Cold.

Most beneficial results are obtained from judicious tree-planting in the open country, not the least important among which is the generous protection they afford all descriptions of stock throughout the varying inclement seasons of the year. In the hottest summers—and the Australian summers are not to be trifled with in the interior—as in the depths of the bitterest winters, the sheep and cattle are sheltered from the extreme winds that sweep across the naked treeless plains with resistless fury during certain seasons, carrying death and destruction in their train. There are extensive tracts of most excellent and valuable country in New South Wales open to every blast of wind that blows, with the result that the pasture is poor and intermittent, and the crops, where there are any crops, are of the poorest and most indifferent description. Now, the planting of a few belts of trees here and there, apart altogether from the great blessings they would provide in the way of shade and shelter, would indeed “temper the wind to the shorn lamb,” and, in a more commercial and utilitarian sense, so improve the pasture as to largely increase the carrying capacity of the surrounding country. The effect of the shelter, as well as of the increased humidity of the atmosphere, upon the crops would be most marked. Practical experience has shown, wherever the experiment has been tried, that the planting of belts of timber through the dry open country of Australia has been that the hot winds, which at present are the very scourge of such country, so far as their effect upon vegetation is concerned, have very often been subdued altogether, but more often so softened and moderated by contact with the cooler atmosphere arising from the damper surface of the ground shaded by the trees, as to pass almost harmlessly over the country, and the crops were more certain, more luxuriant, and the ultimate yield proportionately larger. When the practical mind has had time to think the matter out, it must condemn the impetuosity that impelled the destruction of every vestige of timber from the face of the farm or station, and will at once set about reverting, in some small degree at all events, to the ordinary conditions of mother nature. In a most valuable work on “Forests and Moisture,” Dr. J. C. Brown points out, “It will generally be found that the temperature, both of the earth and of the atmosphere, is lower amidst abundant vegetation than in a barren, sterile, stony district; probably the heat being absorbed and retained in a latent form by the process of vegetation in the one case, while in the other it is reflected unchanged. In consequence of this, if a wind in any degree hotter blow over the district covered with trees, this wind is cooled down; its powers of holding water in a state of vapour is thereby diminished in a geometrical ratio with every fall of temperature, and a large deposit of moisture may follow in the form of dew, mist, or of rain.” In this way the shelter from the hot sun and the cool wind is made healthy, refreshing, and profitable.

Trees fertilise soils.

The fertilising influence of trees is very great, and supplies a sufficient reason in itself—if one were wanted—why an extensive national system of planting should be insisted upon, as far as possible, by the Governments of all the Colonies. It cannot be too often or too forcibly impressed upon the people who live live in the settled towns, as well as upon those who live in the scattered districts, that nothing can be lost and no injury whatever can result from systematic tree-planting everywhere, while incalculable benefits must result to everybody in the community, either directly or indirectly, from the adoption of such a course. The absorption of water is a necessary concomitant of vegetation, and a very large proportion of vegetable matter is an indispensable ingredient of good agricultural soil. This element is provided in a large measure by the annual deposit of the leaves and bark of trees on the ground around and about the locality where they grow, which improves and enriches it. It is hardly necessary to point out that when the vegetable matter decomposes it amalgamates with the soil, and provides a porous and absorbent surface which retains and stores up the rains for the use of the trees in dry weather, instead of allowing the water to run away and lose itself in the sea. In another way the roots of trees planted upon hard clayey soils penetrate and spread in every conceivable direction, and make it easier for the small fibrous roots of cereals and other agricultural crops to prosper, when, under other conditions, they would probably not be able to exist at all, and would at the same time open up a way for the retention and percolation of the water, which would otherwise flow uninterruptedly over the stiff hard surface and leave no trace of its visitation behind it on the dry plains and barren uplands, where possibly its retention was of vital importance. In an able and well-known work on the advantages of restoring the forests, Mr. Marsh points out that there is good reason to believe that the surface of the habitable earth, in all the climates and regions which have been the abode of dense and civilised populations, was, with few exceptions, already covered with a forest growth when it first became the home of man. This is inferred from the extensive vegetable remains—trunks, br anches, roots, fruits, seeds, and leaves of trees—so often found in conjunction with works of primitive art; in the boggy soil of districts where no forests appear to have existed within the eras through which written annals reach; from ancient historical records, which prove that large provinces, where the earth has long been wholly bare of trees, were clothed with vast and almost unbroken woods when first made known to Greek and Roman civilisation; and from the state of much of North and South America, as well as of many islands, when they were discovered and colonised by the European race. Whenever a tract of country, once inhabited and cultivated by man, is abandoned by him and domestic animals, and surrendered to the undisturbed influences of spontaneous nature, its soil, sooner or later, clothes itself with herbaceous and arborescent plants, and at no long interval, with a dense forest growth. Indeed, upon surfaces of a certain stability and not absolutely precipitous inclination, the special conditions required for the spontaneous propagation of trees may all be negatively expressed and reduced to these three—exemption from defect or excess of moisture, from perpetual frosts, and from the depredations of man and browsing quadrupeds. Where these requisites are secured, the hardest rock is as certain to be overgrown with wood as the most fertile plain, though, for obvious reasons, the process is slower in the former than in the latter case. Lichens and mosses first prepare the way for a more highly organised vegetation. They retain the moisture of rains and dews, and bring it to act in combination with the gases evolved by their organic processes; in decomposing the surface of the rocks they cover, they arrest and confine the dust which the wind scatters over them, and their final decay adds new material to the soil already half formed beneath and upon them. A very thin stratum of mould is sufficient for the germination of seeds of the hardy evergreens and birches, the roots of which are often found in immediate contact with the rock, supplying their trees with nourishment from a soil deepened and enriched by the decomposition of their own foliage, or sending out long rootlets into the surrounding earth in search of juices to feed them. In referring to the same subject Waltershausen states that he found plains of volcanic sand and half subduced lava streams, which twenty years previously lay utter waste, covered with fine vineyards. The ashfield of 10 square miles above Nicolosi (on the slopes of Mount Etna), created by the eruption of 1669, which were still entirely barren in 1835, were in 1861–2 planted with vines almost to the summits of Monte Rosso, at a height of 3,000 feet above the level of the sea. Of course there are conditions essential to this success, one of the most important of which is an adequate but not excessive supply of water.

Evaporation Modified by Forests.

The absence of extensive, well cultivated, and thoroughly preserved forests throughout the Colonies is in a measure responsible for the excessive evaporation that takes place at all seasons of the year all over the country. It is a well ascertained fact that, through the exposed character of the country to the full powers of the sun's rays, the evaporation which takes place is abnormally large, and the consequence is that the rain, instead of being absorbed by the soil and the trees, is either carried away in floods or dissolved and carried away by a natural process of evaporation. Even in those districts of the Colonies where indigenous forests exist, the evaporation goes on in a very rapid manner in consequence of the sparse and scattered character of the trees and the absence of efficient shade, a defect which in many cases is a peculiar characteristic of Australian trees from the upright habit of their foliage. The absence of extensive never-failing rivers is due in a very large degree, too, to the excessive evaporation that goes on incessantly everywhere throughout this, and indeed the neighbouring Colony of Victoria. The forests exercise a considerable influence in modifying the evaporation of moisture from the soil by the shade which they provide; the shelter which they afford against drying winds, and, the general humidity of the atmosphere which they superinduce. M. Cézanne, in his Suite to Etude sur les torrents des Hautes Alpes, by M. Sourell, declares that "Forests exercise an appreciable influence on water courses, according as they promote or retard, to whatever degree it may be, evaporation"; and, again, "forests oppose themselves to evaporation, and, consequently, acquire for the ground the product of the rain." The general statements are supported by practical experience in the Colonies, and I am more strongly than ever of opinion that were there numerous judiciously organised forest plantations all over New South Wales,—plantations in which well-selected trees would be placed at such distances from each other as to effectually shade the ground from the sun and so modify the evaporation,—the rain would be absorbed into the ground to considerable depths by percolation, and having provided food and sustenance for the forests, would pass down and come out somewhere at a lower level as a natural stream or spring, and so on from place to place to induce humidity and encourage the growth of vegetation of every description. Practical experience in many parts of the world has shown that where large areas of forest land have been cleared, and the surface exposed to the rays of the sun, excessive evaporation has taken place, and the rainfall, which formerly fed many streams, has been carried away as already described, with the result that the streams and water-courses are ultimately dried up.

Forests

Forests Decrease and Control Floods.

The disastrous floods which have at one time and another overswept the greater portion of the surface of the Colony may in a general way be attributed to several particular causes, such for instance as the absence of an extended system of arable farming, the absence of large forest plantations, and the neglect to cultivate masses of trees in the dry districts. Damaging floods are periodical occurrences and quite characteristic of the Colony, and the explanation is to be found in the fact that the surface of the country, being very much exposed to the sun's rays, is baked and parched, so that when the heavy rains come on, the soil not being open and porous, the water is not absorbed, but flows on over the dry surface accumulating and gathering volume and force as it flows on the hillsides and in the hollows, so that by the time it reaches the plains it is a wild torrent, resistless and destructive along the whole length of its desperate course—sweeping away everything before it, as was recently experienced at Bourke. Effective remedies are at the service of the State, and may be applied with an assurance of success. In the first place more extensive tillage is necessary, and in the second extensive forests must be built up, not that the trees may act as barriers to the onsetting flood-water, but as so many mouths or agencies wherewith to absorb the waters immediately upon their falling upon the earth from the clouds, and so prevent their dangerous accumulation in the first instance. Everywhere, whenever the country becomes more settled and a larger extent of surface is broken up, the chance of sudden and destructive floods becomes proportionately reduced. The explanation of the fact is to be discovered in the subjoined generally well-accepted principles ;—(1) The rains are absorbed by the loose soil as they fall, and, being percolated gradually through it to considerable depths, are retained and diffused over the country in small streams; (2) the water being absorbed by the soil, more vapour is generated in the surrounding neighbourhood, and consequently the air becomes more moist, and forms an attraction for rain clouds—thus more rain falls upon the ground than formerly; and (3) the rain being taken into the soil and given out gradually as already explained, the accumulation of large bodies of water by it when heavy showers take place is reduced to a minimum. By growing large belts of timber, the trees with their shelter and the annual deposit of vegetable matter, the soil is rendered looser on the surface and of a more arable nature, and when the rains come, the water is taken more quickly into the ground and is given off gradually in the form of watery vapour, exhaled from the leaves of the trees and by the means of small streams. In the immediate neighbourhood of extensive tracts of forest country the danger of sudden floods is very greatly diminished. In the forest country of Canada heavy rain has fallen for ten or twelve hours at a time without either occasioning a flood or causing any appreciable rise in the rivers and streams. In the early experiences of America before her magnificent forests were depleted and destroyed, serious floods were practically unknown, while at the present time they are even more frequent and more destructive than could ever be possible in the case of the Australian Colonies. An excellent American authority on this subject, and whom I have frequently taken the liberty of quoting, says :—“Now, a body of timber is especially adapted for the retention of the rainfall. Suppose 12 inches of water falls in an open country, and the same amount in a forest in twenty-four hours. In the former instance, though the ground may be dry, it is impossible for it to take in this amount, probably not more than 5 or 6 inches. Now multiply the area of the watered region by 6 inches, and you have a flood of fearful magnitude—especially if the country is rolling. Let the same amount fall in a forest, you watch it as it falls. Ten thousand leaves on every tree catch and hold the drops, and when they strike the ground there are 6 inches of leaf-mould, and the ground itself for a foot in depth is very porous, the leaves hold it till the ground drinks it in; the old rotten logs are like sponges, and if the ground and mulch cannot retain it, all the roots seem to build dams to obstruct it, and though so much rain has fallen the streams are hardly swollen; and now we see the design of this surface cistern. The water begins to ooze out by slow degrees, and when the streams of the open country have run themselves dry, and the ground is baked for the want of more rain, the wooded streams are in their full flow. The navigation of our forest rivers is already affected by thoughtless destruction of the forests. When will we learn that God made trees for more purposes than the lumber in them?”

Forests are a Means to Equalise the Rainfall.

In those parts of the Colony where the forests have been cut down and cleared away, the rainfall is smaller and more irregular than in the timbered districts, and the fact is in a great measure due to the influence which the trees have upon the climate. The total rainfall is as heavy as in moister climates, but it is not equally distributed over the whole year, and there is in consequence either a feast or a famine—periods of excessive rain and periods of excessive and protracted drought. Experience has shown that countries which are thickly covered with trees have their rainfall spread over the whole year. In New South Wales a very small proportion of the whole area is covered with forests, and the rainfall is irregular, and unequally distributed. It often happens that as much rain falls in this country in two or three hours as would cover two days' steady drizzling in Great Britain, but it is not conserved, and consequently runs to waste, and not only is no advantage obtained but it frequently happens that the rain that is prayed for proves a source of destruction to life and property when it comes. Mr. Marsh, in referring to this aspect of the subject, says :—“We cannot positively affirm that the total annual quantity of rain is even locally diminished or increased by the destruction of the woods, though both theoretical considerations and the balance of testimony strongly favour the opinion that more rain falls in wooded than in open countries; an important conclusion, at least, upon the meteorological influence of forests, is certain and undisputed—the proposition, namely, that within their own limits and near their own borders they maintain a more uniform degree of humidity in the atmosphere than is observed in cleared grounds. Scarcely can it be questioned that they tend to promote the frequency of storms, and, if they do not augment the amount of precipitation they probably equalise its distribution through the different seasons.”

Forests attract Rain-clouds.

There can no longer be any doubt in the minds of those who have taken the trouble to study the subject, that large forests do really attract the rain-clouds. It is beyond the question of a doubt—it is a well-ascertained fact. It is true, as Harland Coultas, an American writer, points out, that the ocean, winds, and woods, may be regarded as the several parts of a great distillatory apparatus. The sea is the boiler, in which the vapour is raised by the solar heat. The winds are the grinding tubes, which carry the vapour to the forests, where lower temperature prevails; the vapour is condensed, and showers of rain are

are distilled from the cloud masses by the woods beneath them. It is not contended that the trees themselves attract the rain, but that this is the general effect produced by large bodies of trees. Treated scientifically, it is shown that these effects are produced (1) by the shade of the trees lowering the temperature of the earth; (2) the atmosphere hovering immediately above the trees is consequently lower than that in any other part of the country adjoining, which may be clear of vegetation, and, it therefore follows as a natural sequence that if hot winds blow over a plantation they will be cooled sooner, and their moisture condensed upon coming in contact with the cold, humid atmosphere hanging about the trees, and as their power of holding water in a condition of vapour is sensibly diminished in a certain ratio according to the fall of temperature, the result is a deposit on the ground of either rain, mist, or dew; and again clouds containing vapour which have blown over dry ground heated by the sun, where the air is in consequence highly rarified and warmer than the clouds, these evaporate, and dissolving, vanish; but should these clouds come in contact with the cooler air above masses of trees, they become over-charged with moisture, and rain is the result. This is not a solitary experience in the Colonies, but has been described by all the best authorities in all the forest countries of the old world.

Forests Subjugate Aridity.

One of the great advantages of forestration is the subjugation of aridity, if such a term may be applied to the process of transforming a dry arid plain into a fertile and habitable region. Aridity is the dry rot of the treeless plains, and is only to be subjugated by the growth of belts of well selected timber throughout the denuded country. It has been shown that large bodies of trees have an appreciable influence in attracting rain-clouds, equalising the rainfall and keeping up a continual state of moisture, and if such an effect could now be produced on the burning plains around Wentworth, Hay, Bourke, and Wilcannia, for instance, it would produce a national revolution of prosperity throughout Australasia. By planting arid tracts with properly proportioned belts of timber here and there, the results would be obtained of a lower temperature, the arrest of hot winds, the provision of shelter for stock, more frequent rains, the impossibility of serious floods, and the production of a more humid climate generally, which would really transform the barren plains into gardens, and make them more suitable for agricultural and pastoral purposes. This result can be achieved at very small cost in the way of labour and in a very short space of time.

Some General Effects of Forestration.

The most important of the many primary effects produced by forestration is the increased humidity of the climate, because upon it depends to a very large extent the growth and expansion of the forest itself as well as the success of the surrounding vegetation. The process has already been explained. The water which is taken up from the earth by the trees through their myriads of roots is exuded again through the leaves into the atmosphere, where it forms into clouds, and if not deposited on the ground as rain by some counter-balancing atmospheric influence, is wafted across the country cooling the air and keeping up a supply of heavy dews which refresh and invigorate the vegetable life. The green moist foliage prevents the increase of the sun's rays by radiation, and by so reducing the chances of evaporation the humidity of the climate is maintained. The picturesque effects produced by planting the streets and squares and public reserves, as well as the open country districts, with ornamental as well as commercially useful trees, need hardly be referred to, as every body must have at one time or another remarked the agreeable difference which a country well stocked with timber presents to one where arboriculture has not been either practised or encouraged. Where the trees are planted the country looks warm and comfortable, clothed and picturesque; where there are no trees everything is either cold or hot and uncongenial, barren and unproductive-looking. But apart altogether from the picturesque, the production of trees is a commercial benefit to the community, and therefore on the most commonplace utilitarian grounds it is desirable that no possible opportunity should be missed to plant a useful tree wherever a vacant spot of seemingly useless ground can be found to hold it. In one case there are luxuriant crops and fine arborous retreats for stock, while in the other the crops and the stock are subject to every inclement change of the weather, and suffer a serious depreciation in their market value in consequence. In another aspect the forests purify the air by absorbing the carbonic acid gas produced by animal life, and other forms of natural combustion. The leaves of the trees separate the carbon from the oxygen, and while the carbon is retained as food the oxygen is emitted into the air and utilised for sustaining animal life. The grasses which arise from the rank growths of aquatic vegetation in low-lying and swampy parts of the country have a deleterious effect upon animal life, producing insidious, and very often fatal diseases. The danger may be removed; if not altogether, at least to a very large extent, by planting such trees as the Tasmanian blue-gum (Eucalyptus globulus), and of course the more large timber that can be planted in and about such swamps the purer is the surrounding atmosphere for man and beast. These are some of the general benefits and effects which result from the planting of trees, and it is to be hoped that they will fully impress themselves upon the minds of the general public of the Colony.

SECTION I.

RECOMMENDATIONS FOR THE REORGANISATION OF THE DEPARTMENT.

Introduction.

1. It is not an easy matter to state with certainty when the subject of Forest Conservation was first brought before the Parliament of New South Wales, and who by; and in regard to records of the past I may state that considerable loss was suffered by the Forest Branch in maps and records through the fire which consumed the Garden Palace, in 1882.

2. On the 4th of March, 1870, Commander Onslow asked, "Do the Government intend proclaiming any timber reserves, seeing the price of railway sleepers is increasing, and the difficulty of obtaining them becoming greater?" To which the reply was, "No such measure has as yet been considered."

When forest conservation first brought before Parliament. Loss of records.

Question in Parliament. Commander Onslow 870

3. On the 14th January, 1874, Mr. Lackey asked, "Do the Government intend to introduce any measure for the more effectual protection of the timber forests throughout the Colony, and more particularly those of the northern rivers." Mr. Sutherland replied,—“It is considered the reserves referred to may be effectually protected under the existing law. The Government have the matter under consideration, with a view to appointing special Forest Rangers.”

Question by Mr Lackey, 1874.

4. In 1871 the first timber reserves were proclaimed to protect forests in the Murray River and Clarence River districts, but it was not till 1875 that any special officers were appointed to supervise them. Other reserves were made in course of time, until they numbered some 461 in 1881, with an approximate area of 3,401,447 acres, 250 of these reserves being proclaimed exempt from the operation of ordinary timber licenses.

First timber reserves proclaimed.

5. In 1877 and 1878 regulations were made regarding the cutting of forest timber.

Regulations framed.

6. In its early stages the Forest Branch appears to have been worked under the then "Occupation of Lands Branch" up to September, 1878, when it was transferred to the Department of Mines, and continued thereunder till 1st January, 1888.

The Forest Branch under various Departments.

7. On the 21st of April, 1881, Mr. Henry Kendall was appointed Inspector of Forests. He died on the 1st September, 1882, and on the 1st December following, Mr. John Duff was appointed as his successor.

Appointment of Mr. Kendall. He is succeeded by Mr. Duff.

8. On the 1st of January, 1888, the Forest Branch once more was taken in charge by the Department of Lands, and continued thereunder until the 17th of April, 1889, when it was taken over by the Colonial Secretary's Department, under which jurisdiction it still remains.

The Forest Branch under the Department of Lands, 1888, taken over by Colonial Secretary's Department, 1889.

9. Upon my appointment as Director-General of the Department, Mr. Duff was allowed to retire under the provisions of the Civil Service Act of 1884.

Appointment of J. Ednie Brown as Director-General of Forests.

10. From the foregoing sketch of the early stages of the Forest Branch it will be seen that, as an important Government institution, it has had an existence of some vicissitude, struggling through official apathy and want of public recognition, until Sir Henry Parkes recognised the necessity and utility of such a branch being placed upon the proper basis of a Government Department.

Necessity and utility of Forest Branch recognised.

11. To arrive at that proper basis necessary for the successful administration of Forest Land Reserves, it is, however, yet necessary to evolve out of the crude forms and regulations of the old Forest Branch a new system, more in accord with our present growing requirements and modern advancement. I, therefore, append the following recommendations for the Reorganisation of the Department.

New regulations necessary.

*12. After careful consideration of the whole subject of the Reorganisation, or, what may more properly be designated the Organisation of the Department of Forests of New South Wales, I have for the present to indicate, in, perhaps, a somewhat cursory manner, the following as a basis upon which it should be established.

Introduction.

13. In the first place—in order to give the Director-General and his staff that footing which is essential to the proper conservation, protection, utilisation, and extension of the forests of the Colony, it is absolutely necessary that a Forest Act should be passed and so become law, as briefly outlined in another section of this report.

Forest Act necessary.

14. Should this proposed Bill be passed by Parliament, I would suggest that to carry its provisions out properly, something like the following should form a basis upon which to formulate a controlling and executive staff.

Basis upon which controlling and executive staff should be formulated.

1st. That the Department should in Parliament be represented by a Minister, either individually, as Commissioner of Forests, or that the functions attached thereto should be combined with those of the Colonial Secretary who would also be designated Commissioner of Forests.

2nd. That there be properly and systematically established in Sydney a Department designated the Department of Forests, under the control of the Commissioner of Forests.

A. The Staff.

15. The Controlling, Executive, Protective, and Office staff of the Department should consist of the following:—

Members of the staff.

Director-General of Forests.
Secretary and Clerical Staff.
Consulting Botanist.
Relieving Officer.
Conservators of Forests.
Foresters.
Nurserymen.
Forest Guards.
Cadets.
Permanent labourers.

B. Duties of Officers.

16. The Director-General of Forests should have the immediate control of the whole working of the Department; appointment of all the officers of the Department; the employment of all labour in connection therewith; the disposal of all the timber and other forest products in connection with the Department; the letting or leasing of the grazing of the forests, and generally to conduct these upon a thorough commercial basis, subject at all times of course to the approval of the Commissioner of Forests.

Powers of the Director-General.

17. So that the carrying out of the proposals as set out in the foregoing paragraph be satisfactorily accomplished, it would be essential that the Director-General have direct and personal communication with the controlling Minister as well as officially through the Principal Under Secretary.

Director-General to have direct and personal communication with controlling Minister.

* Several of the above recommendations have already been carried out.

The secretary.
Immediate control of clerical matters.

Subdivisions of Colony. Conservators of forests.

Foresters.

Forest Guards.

Forest Nurseries.

Nurseries under immediate control of Director-General.

Qualified labourers.

Officers absent on leave. Relieving officer.

Classification of indigenous flora, &c. Consulting botanist.

Forest cadets. School of Forestry.

Forest Act necessary for proper working of Department. Regulations to be amended under any circumstances. Proposed regulations.

Two classes of forests.

Reserved forests.

Unreserved forests.

Outline of regulations.

By-laws for each forest or district.

By-laws to be gazetted

18. Under the Director-General, a Secretary of the Department should be appointed, he having the immediate direction of all clerical matters emanating from him.

19. The Colony should be subdivided into three or more districts over which Conservators of Forests should be appointed; the duties of these officers being the inspection of the work of the various Foresters who might be appointed to look after certain forests within a defined district, and report to the Director-General in regard to the various matters that come under their notice and supervision.

20. Foresters would as indicated have certain forests within defined districts under their control, to whom the selling of timber and a general conservation of the forests would be entrusted; all communications from Foresters would be forwarded to the Head Office through the respective Conservator of Forests.

21. Upon reserves whose areas would exceed say 10,000 acres in extent, Forest Guards should be appointed; these would be stationed upon their respective reserves, and would generally supervise and attend to the measuring of timber before removal, the thinning of the indigenous trees, and the formation of any plantations which might be decided upon under the direction of the Forester of the district, who would of course be directed by, subject and responsible to the Director-General.

22. There should be several forest nurseries formed in various parts of the Colony, in order that trees of suitable kinds, both indigenous and exotic, might be raised for planting out in such sites and situations as they are suitable for.

23. These nurseries would be under the immediate control of the Director-General; but generally supervised by specially trained and experienced nurserymen.

24. A certain number of picked and thoroughly qualified labourers would be kept in such districts where their services would be permanently required in planting, thinning, pruning, &c., and these would be under the control of the Foresters or Nurserymen as the case might be in their respective districts.

25. With such a staff of officers as has just been indicated, it is only reasonable to expect that during each year a number of the superior class would apply for and procure leave of absence for a certain time under the provisions of the Civil Service Act. Hitherto no provision has been made when such leave has been granted to place some one in charge during the absence of any such officer. That temporary overlooking of a district in the absence of the permanent officer is absolutely necessary there can be no doubt, and in order to provide for such contingency I propose that an officer be appointed upon the staff to take the position of Relieving Officer; such being available for taking up the position of conservator, forester, and forest-guard, as the case may be. Under any circumstances, whether these recommendations be carried out or not, such an appointment is absolutely necessary and under the present system I propose making provision for such an appointment.

26. In order to generally assist the Director in the classification of the indigenous flora of the Colony; the production of bulletins, pamphlets, &c., in connection with the flora of the Colony; the issue of the important and instructive publication of the "Forest Flora of New South Wales," which of itself will extend over many years to come, and which production has already been approved of by the Government, it is essential that an officer be appointed to assist in this work, and therefore a Consulting Botanist should form a member of the staff.

27. In order that the efficiency of the staff be kept up, it is most desirable that a number of young men possessing the necessary qualifications in education, physique, and general training, should be appointed, so that by their gradual tuition in the various branches of the Department, either through the proposed School of Forestry or otherwise, as the case may be, they may be at hand to fill vacancies as these occur. I propose, therefore, that the necessary provision for these should be made.

C. Proposed new Regulations.

28. It is of course necessary, in order to arrive at the proper working of the forests under the Department, that the Forest Act (as briefly outlined in this Report) should become law.

29. But should this Bill not be passed by Parliament, it will at all events be absolutely necessary that the Regulations under the present Crown Lands Act be altered and amended.

30. Whether, therefore, the Bill be passed or not, the following is an outline of the regulations which I propose should form the basis of the future management of the Department, even under the present Crown Lands Act.

31. The forests of the Colony should be divided into two classes, viz. :—

1. Reserved forests.
2. Unreserved forests.

32. Reserved forests would consist of those which were properly surveyed and demarcated, and set apart under Gazette Proclamation for all time to come, as the property of the Forest Department; to be used by it for the purpose of forest conservation, or the planting of indigenous or exotic trees, as the Department might determine.

33. Unreserved forests would consist of those portions of Crown lands upon which timber is growing naturally, and which timber it would be desirable to utilise in the interests of the State before the land was laid open for settlement. At present the regulations under the Crown Lands Act apply to all forests in the Colony.

34. Regulations should be framed which are outlined as follows, although it might be found necessary to make separate regulations for the two classes of forests, in order that these might not interfere with the proper settlement of the latter.

35. Each forest, or district of forests, should have, by By-Laws, a separate and distinct Code of Timber Regulations which would only be applicable to it or them as the case might be.

36. By-laws for each forest or district of forests should be gazetted as required; and any alterations deemed necessary to such By-Laws should also be gazetted from time to time as found necessary.

37. All live trees previous to sale should be marked by the Forester or such other officer as might be appointed to do so. The official mark should consist of a chip taken off one side of the tree into the wood, and the spot thus exposed, marked or branded F.D. in distinctive characters. Each tree should be cut above that portion of it so marked. In all cases, growing and standing trees would be sold either singly to individuals as might be required or in lots by public auction as might be deemed advisable. Manner of dealing with trees for sale.
38. In either of these cases the trees would be marked by the Forester in charge, and sold at an upset price at a valuation based upon its quality and proximity to market. Trees marked by Forester to be sold at upset prices or valuation. Trees sold at risk of purchaser.
39. Trees marked and sold would afterwards be at the entire risk of the purchaser, but he would not be allowed to cut the trees until a proper settlement for the same had been made to the satisfaction of the Forester or other officer in charge.
40. The trees having been marked, measured, and sold, the particulars of the transaction would be entered by the Forester in a book kept for the purpose, which would have to be duly signed and accepted as correct by the purchaser. Particulars of sales to be kept by Forester.
41. In all cases a specified time might be allowed for the removal of the trees, and such time would be entered in the book of acceptance. In several cases it might, no doubt, be found from various causes, that the purchaser would fail to remove the trees within the period agreed upon, and it might therefore be understood that it was optional for the Forester to declare the timber forfeited or to give an extension of time for its removal as the Department might determine. Time allowed for removal of trees.
42. Persons desiring to remove timber from forests should be required to procure a residence permit from the Forester, so that his bona fides as a timber getter might be ascertained upon application by any officer of the Department. These residence permits would be issued at a nominal charge at the rate of, say, one shilling per month per man. Such authorised persons might erect temporary huts upon such sites as might be approved of by the Forester or other officer in charge. Residence permits.
43. Sites for the erection of saw-mills would be granted if desirable on payment of, say, 10 shillings per acre per annum, but no one site should be given of more than 10 acres in extent. On such sites the holders would be entitled to erect temporary camps, huts for labourers employed by them, stabling, &c., and to sink wells. All stacking of timber in connection with such saw-mills would have to be within the boundaries of their prescribed areas, and where necessary, saw-mill proprietors would be required (under forfeiture of site for non-compliance), to form ploughed, or burned fire brakes round such sites. Saw-mills, stacking of timber.
44. Dead timber lying upon the ground should be sold in area lots, or at such rates per load as might be deemed desirable by the Forester. Sale of dead timber
45. Any person or persons who acted contrary to the regulations of the Forest Department, should be dismissed from a forest without having any cause of appeal. Persons acting in contravention of by-laws.
46. In order that in forests of any considerable extent, matured timber might be utilised in a systematic manner, and the Natural Regeneration of the indigenous timber have a fair chance of progressive renovation; the system as regards their treatment should be in blocks as recommended in the section of this Report dealing with the Murray River Forests. Treatment of forests.
47. Licenses for the stripping of wattle bark should henceforth be discontinued, both upon State Forests and Crown lands. Licenses for wattle stripping.
48. In lieu of these, a systematic register of all Wattle Lands should be kept at the Head Office, which would indicate in each year such portions of these as might be available for stripping purposes during any one year. At the beginning of each stripping season, the Department would advertise in the Government Gazette, and in the local papers of the respective districts, such areas of wattle country as might be available for stripping during that year. These would be subdivided into blocks of various sizes according to the quantity of wattle which might be growing upon them, and they would be offered by auction at an upset price per block, at the nearest postal town. Should these blocks not be purchased at the said auction sale; it would then be within the province of the Department to dispose of the blocks privately. Areas of wattle lands to be sold.
49. The conditions upon which the stripping of wattles upon these blocks would be permitted would be published before the sale. Conditions under which stripping wattle allowed.
50. In all cases the price agreed upon for the purchase of any one block of wattles should be paid upon the fall of the hammer, and in the case of private sale, previous to operations being commenced. Sales on cash terms.
51. Such, therefore, is a brief outline upon which the new regulations of the Department should be framed. It is perhaps almost unnecessary to remark that the regulations as at present in force are utterly inadequate to meet the exigencies of this important branch of the political economy of this Colony. These latter were no doubt framed in good faith, and have undoubtedly done much towards checking that immense destruction of Nature's crop upon our land, which, unfortunately, has become proverbial in this and other portions of the Australian Continent. In these latter days, however, when the country is becoming more densely populated, and our timbers and barks are becoming more generally recognised as a valuable asset to the State, it is undoubtedly incumbent upon the authorities to adopt still more stringent means towards the protection of the present crop and its permanent reproduction. To this end, therefore, I have, after very careful consideration, to suggest that the time has now arrived when a departure from the old system should be made, and I think that new regulations, based upon the lines briefly indicated, would meet the present requirements of the case. Present regulations inadequate. Necessity for stringent measures.

SECTION II.

SYNOPSIS OF THE PROPOSED FOREST BILL.

Acts under which Forest Department now worked.

52. At present the operations of the Department are carried out under the Crown Lands Act of 1884, and the Crown Lands Act of 1889. It is found, however, that these Acts do not give the necessary powers to attain the proper management of our forests. I have, therefore, respectfully to suggest that a Bill be framed and brought before Parliament to meet the case. With this view I recommend that the following should constitute its principal features:—

Repeal of regulations under Crown Lands Act

53. A.—That all those Regulations under the Acts referred to, relating to Timber, State Forests, and Quarry Reserves, and all other regulations which have been framed thereunder should be repealed. That such repeal shall not affect any rights, interests, or liabilities at present created or existing under these Acts.

Reserves and quarries to continue such under New Act.

54. B.—That all the reserves and quarries hitherto declared under these Acts shall continue to be such under the New Act, but that in future these reserves should be classified under the designation of Reserved and Un-reserved forests, as follows:—

Classification of forests.

1. Reserved forests—to mean any lands which shall be specially proclaimed or set apart for the purposes of forest conservation and planting.
2. Unreserved forests—to refer to un-sold timbered Crown lands the timber upon which shall be dealt with by the Forest Department until such time as they may be required for settlement.

Powers, rights, and trusts vested in Colonial Secretary.

Powers under same.

55. C.—That all powers, rights, and trusts pertaining to the Department in regard to its estates and property generally shall be vested in the Colonial Secretary for the time being as its Ministerial head, who shall also be designated the Commissioner for Forest Lands, and by that title have perpetual succession, and be able to deal with all necessary cases in the various Courts of Law, as might arise in connection with the Department; to have sole right to deal with in such manner as he may think fit, all lands designated Reserved Forests, and to lease these or any other property whatsoever belonging to the Department; and to apply and dispose of all such moneys as shall be annually voted by Parliament for the purposes of the Act, and to enter into all contracts as he may think necessary for the proper carrying out of the Act; and to make such Regulations as he may deem desirable for the sale and disposal of the timber and other products upon them.

Appointment, formation, and powers of the Department.

56. D.—That the Department shall be a properly constituted one, as a Sub-department to that of the Colonial Secretary's, with its offices in Sydney; and that it shall be under the immediate control of the Director-General of Forests, who shall have full power under the Colonial Secretary in regard to all details of management, the disposal of timber, the employment of officers and labourers, and generally to conduct the business of the Department.

Planting of forest trees.

57. E.—In order to encourage the planting of what is known as the tree-less or western plains of the Colony, provisions should be made under the Act, authorising the Department to give a bonus of so much per acre for any portion of such lands which may be properly planted and cared for under its supervision.

Penalties and legal procedure

58. F.—Provision should be made for prescribing the legal procedure, fines, and penalties necessary for the carrying out of the Act.

SECTION III.

PROPOSED ESTABLISHMENT OF A SCHOOL OF FORESTRY, MUSEUM OF ECONOMIC FORESTRY, AND AN ARBORETUM.

Difficulties in dealing with forest conservation.

59. One of the principal difficulties to contend with in dealing with Forest Conservation in these Colonies is undoubtedly that of the lack of material in men having a thorough practical knowledge of all detail works in connection with a thorough system of forest conservation and the formation of plantations.

Necessity for a staff of men with practical training.

60. It is, of course, possible at any time to obtain the services of fairly educated bushmen, and others suitable for carrying out some of the many necessary outside duties in connection with the proper organisation of the Department, but to have officers capable of and being in touch with the Director-General in the practical administration of the whole working of the Department, it is absolutely essential that he have at his command a body of officers who have had a thorough practical training in all works pertaining to the science of Arboriculture.

Necessity for a school of forestry.

61. Looking, therefore, at the great future and possibilities of Arboriculture in this Colony alone, it is necessary at this early stage of the Department's organisation to point out and very strongly recommend to the Government the absolute necessity which exists for the establishment of a School of Forestry, in order to provide for a supply of officers whose training has been such as to qualify them for the position of Nursery-men, Cadets, Forest Guards, Foresters, and Forest Inspectors.

Other colonies require practical foresters.

62. It is, perhaps, almost unnecessary to remark that the other colonies of Australia are as much in need of practical foresters as New South Wales, and there is no reason why, by the means of this proposed School of Forestry, we should not entertain the idea of providing a staff of officers for the various Forest Departments of all the Colonies. The indigenous timbers of New South Wales are of a character so varied, its forests are so much more extensive than those in any other sub-division of Australia, and its climate in regard to rainfall, and the various phases in connection with altitude, are such that, in my opinion a School of Forestry here would be a natural outcome of our position in connection with the now recognised importance of the subject of Arboriculture in Australia.

63. In connection with such a school it would, as a matter of course, be necessary to have a properly organised Arboretum, where, as far as possible, the various timber trees of Australasia, as well as those trees from other parts of the world, which it is desired should be introduced into these colonies, would be represented. Necessity for an arboretum.

64. This Arboretum would be used in connection with the educational matters taken up by the school, and thus the cadets, before leaving the institution, would become thoroughly and practically acquainted with the various trees with which they would have to deal when they came to be appointed to positions of trust in the Department. Arboretum to be used in connection with education of foresters.

65. In order to be in touch with, and readily at the command of the head officer of the Department in Sydney, it would be advisable that the School, Museum, and Arboretum should be as near to the Metropolis as possible. School, museum, and Arboretum.

66. There are near Rookwood some 1,400 acres of land and a number of buildings belonging to the Government which were some years ago set apart for reformatory purposes, but which have not as yet been utilised. Rookwood, 1,400 acres available.

67. Should the Government entertain the proposals herein set forth, and with a view to economy, I would recommend that these lands and buildings, or at least a portion of them, be devoted to the establishment of the proposed School of Forestry, Museum, and Arboretum. Recommendations for proposed school, museum, and arboretum.

68. The necessity for such an institution becomes very apparent from the fact that, in the teachings in our primary schools, there is at present no effort made other than that of the establishment of Arbor Days to introduce the study of Arboriculture. Necessity for such an institution.

69. In view of the fact, which I think cannot be questioned, that Australasia has many natural advantages for forest cultivation and conservation, and also that she has large tracts of country upon which there is no indigenous forest growth, the need of scientific training upon such matters is very manifest. Australia has many natural advantages for forest conservation.

70. It may here be stated, in support of my recommendation, that the manifold effects of large areas of forest lands are very remarkable, and hence their special interest to Australia, which, as a country generally, is prominent in possessing mountain plateaux, and districts, humid, tropical, temperate, dry; and inland plains, remarkable for their hot, sandy wastes, and areas subject to inundations and disastrous floods. Large and varied areas of forest lands.

71. From the records of scientific forestry we find that wonderful effects have been produced in the reclamation of sandy wastes by the production of trees and subsequent growth of herbage. Wonderful results by planting sandy wastes.

72. We also find that tree-planting upon mountain slopes act as a means of averting the destructive consequences of torrents, and that benefits may be derived from the planting of certain kinds of trees Eucalyptus globulus, for instance, in order to counteract the malarial influences of low-lying and marshy country. Benefits are derived from planting certain trees.

73. Then, again, as is more fully entered into in another section of this report, we find that the subject of forestry is an important one to any country; in that forests affect very materially the rainfall and general humidity of its climate. Forestry important to any country.

74. It will, from the preceding remarks, be at once evident that the scientific and practical study of Arboriculture should form a prominent feature in the education of our rising generation, and that the matter is deserving of the very serious attention of the Government. Necessity for a scientific and practical study of arboriculture.

75. Supposing a School of Forestry were established, it is sufficient for the present to indicate briefly the outlines of the Institution, both theoretical and practical, which I would propose should be carried out in connection with it. Theoretical and practical outlines for School of Forestry.

76. The inside instruction would consist of matters in connection with the following subjects:— Instruction.

1. Arithmetic.
2. Geometry.
3. Mensuration, surveying, and planning.
4. Forest mathematics and measurement of trees and timber.
5. Erection of buildings.
6. Water conservation by dams, wells, tanks, &c.
7. Forest botany.
8. Physiology of tree vegetation.
9. Forest chemistry.
10. Formation and nature of earth and soils.
11. Forest conservation.
12. Forest laws.
13. Forest administration.
14. Correspondence and general routine of office work.

77. The outside or purely practical work would consist of the following:— Practical work

1. The selection of tree seeds.
2. Their treatment before sowing.
3. How to sow them.
4. When to sow them.
5. Treatment of the young plants.

- a.* Deciduous.
- b.* Evergreen.
- c.* Indigenous.
- d.* Exotic.
- e.* Hardy.
- f.* Tender.

Arboretum :
Subjects receiving special attention.

78. The formation of an Arboretum, and in connection with this, special attention would be paid to —

- a.* Soil suitable to each species.
- b.* Situation and aspect suitable for each kind of tree.
- c.* Treatment as regards thinning and pruning.
- d.* The general management of plantations in the various stages of their growth.

Dealing with timber generally.

79. The felling of trees and the various methods in connection with this operation.

- 6. The measurement of standing and felled timber in the rough.
- 7. The measurement of timber by cube, superficial, and lineal processes.
- 8. The economy and utilisation of the timber.
- 9. Practical surveying.
- 10. Draining.
- 11. Ploughing.
- 12. Hole sinking.
- 13. Fencing.

Plants and the systems of planting.

80. Practical planting of plants raised under the following systems :—

- a.* Open root.
- b.* In bamboo tubes.
- c.* In pots.

So
seeds.

81. The formation of plantations by the system of sowing the seeds in the sites which the trees are intended to permanently occupy.

- a.* By broadcast sowing.
- b.* In drills.

The sawing and transport of timber and means to protect plantations from fire.
Qualifications necessary for admission to
School of Forestry.

82. The sawing of timber for various purposes, with the view to its proper utilisation; the most economic methods for the transport of timber to the saw-mill and to market; the proper manner by which to protect plantations by brakes from their possible destruction by fire.

83. With regard to the qualifications required for admission to the School of Forestry, something like the following conditions would be necessary :—

- a.* Applicants not to be over 25 years of age, and not under 16 years.
- b.* That they should hold a certificate from their previous schools as to proficiency in reading, writing, and ordinary arithmetic; and as to character.

84. The students would be divided into two classes, as follows :—

Two classes of students.

- 1st. Those studying with a view to seek service in the Forestry Departments of the various colonies.
- 2nd. Those studying for general information in connection with the subjects treated.

Resident and non-resident students.

85. The students would be

- a.* Resident.
- b.* Non-resident.

Terms for
School of Forestry.

86. The terms upon which the students would be admitted to the Institution may, for the present be briefly indicated as something like the following :—

- a.* That resident students be charged £50 per annum.
- b.* That non-resident students be charged an annual sum of £25 for the education received.

Out-door work-

87. The regulations of the School would insist upon the students doing at least five hours of actual out-door work per day when required.

Allowance for actual labour,

88. When labour of this kind is executed it will be credited to each student at the rate of 6d. per hour, and supposing that students worked five hours per day for 200 days in the year the result would be that those non-resident would clear themselves of any liability to the institution, whilst those who might be resident in the school would only have for their education, board and residence, a sum of £25 to pay.

Practical work compulsory.

89. It would be compulsory for all students to do practical work, and as this would be to a large extent reproductive, the Institution would not be a burden upon the State.

Course of
year.

90. The course of instruction would be limited to one year, and according as the respective students took an interest in the work and passed a critical examination in all matters connected with forestry, so would diplomas be issued to them as to their proficiency in the subjects which they were taught; and drafted as might be required into positions in the Department, or recommendations made in regard to them in connection with similar Departments in other colonies.

91. The officers of the proposed school would be the [Director-General of Forests in full charge of the whole, and who would personally take up the following subjects:—
- Officers of proposed School.
Director-General in full charge.
- State Forest Economy.
Management of Forests.
Forest Botany.
Forest Conservation.
Forest Laws.
Forest Administration.
92. A Principal of the school under the Director, whose duties would consist of conducting the establishment generally and of teaching the students arithmetic, geometry, mensuration, surveying, chemistry, measurement of trees and timber, &c.
- A Principal of the school conducting the establishment generally.
Professor of general sciences and a practical expert.
93. A professor of general sciences, and a practical expert in all outside work.
94. Each of these officers would give the necessary lectures in connection with the various subjects entrusted to them.
- Officers give necessary lectures.
Subjects proposed sufficient for a commencement.
95. Such are the outlines, which, if followed, would give us the foundation of a School of Forestry for Australia, and although perhaps not very comprehensive, I think the subjects proposed to be dealt with would be sufficient for the present to start this very desirable Institution.
96. In connection with this proposed establishment it will be necessary to have, both for its educational purposes and for the information of the public generally, a building set apart for a Museum of Economic Forestry, in which the various timbers not only of Australia, but also of those exotic timbers which are used in our various industries and constructive works would be exhibited.
- Building required for a Museum of Economic Forestry.
97. In this Museum other forest products would also be exhibited under a systematic arrangement, and thus, taken as a whole, the establishment would be looked upon as altogether a comprehensive one in regard to Australian arboriculture and its possibilities.
- Other products to be exhibited.

SECTION IV.

REVENUE AND EXPENDITURE OF THE DEPARTMENT.

Introduction.

98. It is, perhaps, somewhat interesting, and no doubt unique in a Departmental Report, to observe that in many of the Reports of the Forest Branch as lately existing, no regular reference was made to its annual expenditure, although they in all cases contained a detailed account of the revenue which was annually derived from its operations.
- No reference to expenditure in some previous reports.
99. Why such an omission should have been at any time made in a public report of this kind it is difficult to understand, and it appears almost incredible that it should apparently have escaped notice.
- Omission appears to have escaped notice.
100. That such institutions should show their financial position each year is only what the public is entitled to know, in order that the State may form an opinion, adverse or otherwise, as to the utility of its operations.
- Public entitled to the knowledge of financial position of Department.
101. The Forest Conservancy Branch was instituted in 1877. and in order to bring the whole matter up to date, I beg to subjoin the following Statement in regard to its Revenue and Expenditure up to the end of the last financial year:—
- Institution of Forest Conservancy Branch, 1877, and statement of revenue and expenditure.

A. Statement of Revenue and Expenditure since 1877.

Year.	Receipts.			Expenditure.
1877	4,324	10	3	4,579	7	6
1878	5,934	14	0	5,592	12	6
1879	7,945	18	2	5,920	2	11
1880	8,990	4	3	6,635	10	0
1881	10,812	13	8	7,093	4	11
1882	13,046	18	10	12,591	19	5
1883	16,685	19	7	15,389	15	11
1884	18,250	5	8	17,480	14	5
1885	13,863	2	8	18,145	17	6
1886	14,606	12	3	17,932	15	4
1887	12,249	18	9	18,038	0	2
1888	19,727	18	5	19,505	1	5
1889	17,137	1	11	18,211	12	1
1890	15,436	15	11	20,779	3	10
Total	£179,012	14	4	£184,895	17	11

102. The above therefore shows that to the end of 1890 the expenditure on account of forests has been £184,895 17s. 11d., and the corresponding revenue £179,012 14s. 4d., thereby showing an excess of expenditure over receipts of £5,883 3s. 7d., thus giving to the department a deficit legacy to this amount.

Revenue and expenditure,

E.—General remarks upon foregoing Statements.

105. From these figures it will be seen that the expenditure of the Department for the year under review exceeds that of its revenue by £5,342 7s. 11d. Expenditure exceeds revenue

106. From this deficit, however, it is, I think, only right in the interests of the purely forest matters of the Department that a sum of £1,571 8s. 11d. should be deducted, that being the sum of £1,698 2s. expended over the eradication of prickly-pear, less £126 13s. 1d. received from prickly-pear leases, and which are entirely outside of the operations of the Department. Prickly-pear eradication outside the operations of Forest Department.

107. Under this deduction, therefore, it would appear that the actual expenditure of the Department over its revenue during the past year is £3,770 19s. Actual expenditure over revenue, exclusive of prickly-pear eradication.

108. The net revenue as thus amended represents what has been received during the year under review from the purely wood and bark products of the land under the jurisdiction of the Department. Revenue from wood and bark products.

F.—Claims of Department for its Pastoral Rents.

109. As these lands have been handed over to the Department for the special purpose of the conservation of the indigenous forests upon them, and also for such planting operations as may be deemed advisable, I am of the opinion that the land rents accruing therefrom in regard to grazing and cultivation should in all fairness be credited to it, as is done in connection with other institutions of the kind in various parts of the world, and perhaps more particularly with the Forest Department of South Australia. Department entitled to land rents.

110. It is to be recorded that the actual revenue of the Department as at present instituted was, as a whole, less this year than it was in the preceding one, and this is accounted for to a very large extent, that owing to the flooded condition of the Darling, Murrumbidgee, and Murray Rivers, the timber out-put upon these was very materially reduced, and the consequent receipts from the same fell in a corresponding ratio. Shrinkage of revenue through floods.

111. The right of the Department to the ground rents just referred to has not hitherto been recognised or in any way claimed as an asset, but in a commercial point of view this claim can hardly be disputed, and I therefore at this, the beginning of the Reorganisation of the Department, claim it as a legitimate source of revenue. Right to ground rents not hitherto recognised.

Amount received by Lands Department from lands dedicated for forest purposes. Position in which Forest Department should stand in regard to its revenue and expenditure.

112. I have ascertained upon a fairly authoritative basis that at a low estimate the amount of money received by the Lands Department for the grazing rights under yearly or other lease of the lands, now dedicated for forest purposes, amounts to, approximately, the sum of £40,000 per annum.

113. Under these circumstances I maintain that the position of the Department with regard to its revenue and expenditure during the past year should stand as follows:—

Receipts from timber, bark, &c., less leases	£126 13s. 1d., received from prickly-pear leases	£	s.	d.
	...	15,310	2	10
Grazing rents, &c. (fairly approximate)	...	40,000	0	0
		£55,310	2	10
Total expenditure upon all lines of the Department, less in aid of prickly pear eradication	...	19,081	1	10
Credit balance	...	£36,229	1	0

Handsome balance from forest rents.

114. From the above figures we see that if the Government recognises that the lands set apart for forest purposes shall be dedicated for purely forest conservation, according to the schedule herein set forth, the Revenue from these, according to the results of the past season, shows an excess over expenditure of the very handsome sum of £36,229 1s.

Land permanently dedicated will probably return even larger revenue.

115. So far this is very satisfactory; but it is my opinion that were these lands permanently dedicated to the Department and managed by it in its own way, as regards the grazing leases and disposal of timber, a much larger revenue than that just shown would be the result. In order to arrive at this, however, the necessity for the proposed Forest Act, as already pointed out, becomes more apparent.

G.—Prosecutions by Forest Rangers, and receipts derived therefrom.

Prosecutions and receipts from same.

116. Following is a return of the prosecutions undertaken by Forester during the year, and the receipts derived therefrom:—

Offence.	Number of Prosecutions.	Number of Convictions.	Amount of Penalty.
Illegally cutting or removing timber	129	107	£ 102 18 0
Quarrying or removing other materials	10	7	3 3 6
Trespass on Crown lands	6	2	1 14 10
	145	116	107 16 4

Number of cases in which timber or other material has been seized	109
Number of cases in which claims have been preferred to seized material	19
Number of cases in which claims have been confirmed	7

117. Although it appears necessary that such prosecutions as those indicated should take place in a Department of this kind, it does not, in my opinion, necessarily follow that the greater number of these indicate the efficiency of the officers; and it will be my endeavour to so frame regulations and generally manage the Department that the necessity for these will be minimised as far as possible, and at the same time the rights of the Department and the public upheld.

SECTION V.

A.—Total Number and Class of Forest Reserves.

Number and class of timber reserves.

118. As at present constituted under the Crown Lands Act, the following is a return showing the total number of each class and area of the timber reserves in the Colony:—

Reserves in Class A, regulations 7 and 8, including 21 reserves, partly in Class C	Number of Reserves.	Area in Acres.
...	682	3,473,065
Reserves in Class B, regulations 7 and 8	13	70,626
Reserves in Class C, regulations 9 and 10, including 5 reserves, partly proclaimed State Forests	255	1,818,523
State Forests	21	97,721
Total number of Reserves from sale, after making deductions for those in two classes	945
Total estimated area reserved	...	5,459,937

B.—Remarks thereon.

Area of land under jurisdiction of Forest Department.

119. From the above it appears that there are no less than 5,459,937 acres at present under the jurisdiction of the Department comprised in 945 separate reserves.

Percentage of area held by the Department.

120. This roughly shows that of the total area of the Colony there is only about 2.75 per cent. held by the Department under reserves.

Distribution of the reserves.

121. So far as I have yet been able to investigate, the distribution of these over the Colony has been fairly well apportioned.

Considerable areas reserved unfitted for purposes intended.

122. In many cases, however, I am of the opinion it will be found that considerable areas of land have been reserved under the name of Timber and Forest Reserves which are thoroughly unfitted for the purpose; at the same time, I think it will be found that, so far as the natural forests are concerned, other portions of the Colony should have been placed under the jurisdiction of the Department in lieu of many of those at present in its hands.

Re-arrangement of reserves intended.

123. It will, therefore, be a special part of my duties in the near future to see that any unsuitable lands now under the Department shall again revert to the Lands Department for the purpose of its legitimate settlement, and that other portions of the Colony more suited for forest purposes shall be taken in hand in lieu thereof.

Sandal-wood. 126. Sandal-wood.—The felling of the sandal-wood tree within 5 miles of the Darling River, and within 5 miles of the Murray, below the junction of the Murrumbidgee River is not permitted, but the lighter branches may be lopped for feed in time of drought, vide Gazette Notice of 9th October, 1889. The same restriction also applies to this tree in the Counties of Farnell, Mootwingee, Yungnulgra, Killara, Yancowinna, Tandora, Young, Werunda, Menindie, Livingstone, Windeyer, Woore, Perry, Manara, and Mossiel, but the twigs are permitted to be used in connection with the destruction of rabbits, vide Gazette Notice of 23rd May, 1890.

Preservation of sandal-wood important. 127. The preservation and possibly the reproduction of the so-called sandal-wood tree in our Western Districts, if even only regarded as a fodder plant, is a matter for very serious consideration in connection with pastoral pursuits, and will therefore receive the due attention of the Department.

E.—Statement of State Forests and Reserves under the Department.

Forests and reserves, county, parish, and land district. 128. In the Appendix a return is given in alphabetical order of various State Forests and reserves under the Department, showing the county, parish, and land districts in which they are situated, their numbers and names, their class according to the present regulations, their areas in acres, and generally some remarks in regard to the class of timber growing upon them.

SECTION VI.

BOTANICAL WORK OF THE DEPARTMENT.

Recommendation for Consulting Botanist. 129. Shortly after my appointment as Head of the Department I found it necessary to recommend, in order to assist me in the carrying out of the purely botanical work, that a Consulting Botanist should form a member of the Staff—and with this object the Colonial Secretary was good enough, upon my recommendation, to appoint Mr. J. H. Maiden, F.L.S., Curator of the Technological Museum.

Satisfactory work by Mr. Maiden. 130. Although Mr. Maiden has been for a short time only in this office, his work has been very satisfactory, and in order to point out the work which he has already established in connection therewith, I have much pleasure in giving his report upon the subject as follows:—

Report by Mr. Maiden, Consulting Botanist. 131. "I have been engaged in the duties of my office as acting Consulting Botanist since the 1st September last; I was formally appointed Consulting Botanist on the 1st May last. My work has hitherto been largely of a preparatory nature."

Unsatisfactory condition of herbarium and carpological collections. 132. "On commencing my duties, I found the state of the Herbarium and Carpological collections to be such that I was able to pick out very little material which was unaffected by fungus, pests or vermin. No systematic attempt had been made to form and classify a Herbarium,—this work has therefore had to be begun from the beginning. It is necessary to speak thus plainly, as demands have already been made upon the Department which cannot be satisfied until the collections are in order and vastly increased."

Thanks due to forest rangers. 133. "Thanks however to the energy of some of the Foresters, the carpological collection is already attaining such dimensions that the room in which it is kept is insufficient to properly store it, much less to adequately display it. In two or three seasons, at the outside, I feel sure that this branch of the Department will be self-supporting, as the seeds secured from Foresters, and friends of the Department, will be sufficient to meet all the demands of the State Forest Nursery, and to leave an ample margin for exchange, for other seeds, with firms, private individuals, and public institutions throughout the world."

Numbers of specimens received from forest rangers. 134. "Several of the Foresters have sent large numbers of specimens to the Herbarium and Museum of Economic Forestry. These specimens are accompanied by the Form A. in which as many particulars as are available are filled in by the sender."

Treatment of timber, specimens, seeds, &c. 135. "On arrival at the Department the timber specimens are branded, and the seeds, &c., spread out on trays to dry, named botanically, treated with naphthaline, labelled, bagged and stored in tin boxes, each containing a genus or natural order, the botanical names are inserted in the forms, if this has not already been done by the Forester himself, and the forms are returned to him for noting. In this way, in the course of time, the Foresters will be afforded facilities for obtaining the botanical names of the trees in their districts. Herbarium specimens are treated in precisely the same manner, and names are likewise assigned to timbers, barks, &c., Herbarium specimens being required if necessary, for diagnosing these."

Specimens duly entered, &c. 136. "The specimens having been named and duly entered in the forms, the information is ready for posting in the Stock Registers which form the permanent records. Herewith is a specimen heading (Form B.) of a Stock Register. For the sake of uniformity the same heading is used throughout, though different registers are used for different groups, e.g., Herbarium specimens, fruits and seeds, timbers, &c., and also for exchanges."

Specimens classified by each ranger. 137. "The Herbarium specimens of each Forester are classified by themselves; this will facilitate the formation of local forest herbaria with which you have decided to supply each ranger in course of time, while they form a permanent record of the forest flora of a particular district readily available for reference."

Assistance given. 138. "To carry out the detail work you have given me satisfactory assistance.

Various reports from time to time. 139. "In addition to supervising what may be termed the Museum work of your Department, I have reported to you upon a number of botanical matters which have come forward from time to time."

DONATIONS OF SEEDS, &c., RECEIVED DURING THE YEAR.

140. I have much pleasure in acknowledging the following donations of seeds to the Department:—
 Received from Lands Department, Wellington, New Zealand—Twenty-one species of New Zealand tree and shrub seeds. Donation of seeds.
 Technical Education Branch, Department of Public Instruction—One packet of Acacia pycnantha (golden wattle) seed.
 Under Secretary, General Crown Lands Office, Wellington, New Zealand—Three packets native tree seeds.
 Under Secretary, General Crown Lands Office, Wellington, New Zealand—One parcel seeds Pittosporum tenuifolium (tawhiwhi).
 Under Secretary, General Crown Lands Office, Wellington, New Zealand—One parcel of New Zealand native tree seeds.
 Under Secretary, General Crown Lands Office, Wellington, New Zealand—Forwarding seeds of kauri, kahekatea, kohekohe, and pariri.
 Under Secretary, General Crown Lands Office, Wellington, New Zealand—Forwarding seeds of pariri, wangeao, and kohekohe.
 W. H. Phillips, Esq., Sydney—Specimens of New South Wales woods.
 F. Verdin Hunter, Esq., Ballina—Two samples of flax.
 Stephenson and Johnson—1 lb. Cupressus macrocarpa seed.
 Director, Botanic Gardens, Sydney—Cones containing matured seed of Pinus pinea and Pinus maritima.
 Under Secretary, Department of Agriculture, Brisbane—Small quantity of red cedar seed.
 Wm. C. Tait, Esq., Oporto, Portugal—Three small bags containing acorns, Quercus lusitanica, and Quercus tozza.
 W. Gill, Esq., Conservator of Forests, Adelaide—Case containing seed vessels.

SECTION VIII.

THE FREE DISTRIBUTION OF TREES AND SEEDS.

Introduction.

141. This year it was found that there would be a surplus stock of plants in the Gosford State Nursery beyond the requirements of the Department for the coming season's planting operations, and in concurrence with the wishes of the Colonial Secretary, it was decided to offer these to State Schools and Corporate Bodies generally, for the purpose of utilising them in school grounds, streets, and public parks. Surplus stock of plants offered to State Schools and corporate bodies.

142. Last year many applications were received by the Department for trees, from the Minister for Public Instruction and from various Municipal Bodies in the Colony; and so far as the then limited stock would admit, these applications were complied with, but unfortunately not to such an extent as could have been wished, hence it is cause for congratulation that our stock of plants this year will admit of a larger distribution without interfering in any way with the progressive planting operations of the Department. Many applications received

143. The plants available consist of timber tree seedlings, and shrubs of various kinds, and have been raised in pots, bamboo tubes, and in open root nursery beds, according as these are suitable to their requirements. In all, some 161,700 plants have been selected and set apart for this free distribution. Plants available.

Pamphlet prepared containing catalogue of trees.

144. By permission of the Colonial Secretary, and at the request of the Minister for Public Instruction, a pamphlet has been prepared by the Department of Forests, entitled "Catalogue of Trees for Free Distribution to State Schools and Municipal Bodies, from the Gosford State Nursery," Season, 1891.

B.—In this Catalogue the following subjects are dealt with:—

1. The planting of trees and shrubs by children in State Schools.
2. Street and park planting by corporate bodies.
3. Some general observations in regard to trees and tree planting.
4. Table showing the number of trees which can be planted on an acre of ground at stated distances apart.
5. Table showing the number of plants required to plant lines of trees at stated distances apart.
6. The State Nursery.
7. Conditions upon which the young trees will be distributed.
8. Brief description of the trees and shrubs available, with some remarks as to their value for ornamental and useful purposes, and the soils and situations in which they flourish.
9. Works and reports on forestry.
10. List of the trees available.

C.—Arboricultural Lecture for State Schools.

Special Arboricultural Lecture.

145. The Arboricultural Lecture referred to in the catalogue has been specially prepared at the request of the Hon. the Minister of Public Instruction; it is called. "A Tree, what it is; how to plant, and tend it."

Lecture printed and distributed

146. Some 3,000 copies of this lecture will be printed for the Educational Department alone, to be distributed by the Minister to the various school teachers in the Colony, so as to form an instructive lesson upon the subject of Arboriculture, in conjunction with the more practical work which it is proposed will be carried out by the children in the planting of trees, which they may do upon the day set apart by the Minister as Arbor Day.

Copies of catalogue obtainable on application to Forest Department.

Establishment of arbor days.

147. Such corporate bodies as may desire to benefit by this free distribution, may obtain copies of the catalogue upon application to the Forest Department, in which full directions will be found as to the conditions upon which the trees may be obtained.

148. The establishment in the Colony of Arbor Day, which was very wisely I think introduced by the Minister for Public Instruction last year in connection with public schools, will I trust be continued for many years, and with the aid also of the various corporate bodies become in the course of time a general National Institution.

149. I trust, and I think the sentiment will be endorsed by all colonists, that the free distribution of trees by the Department from its various nurseries to such institutions as those indicated, if authorised by the Government from year to year, will conduce very materially to the intellectual education, and advancement of the people generally. Free distribution of trees beneficial.

150. The following is a list of the trees which were given away by the Department last year from the Gosford State Nursery to Schools, Corporations, District Councils, and others. Trees distributed last year.

D.—Seeds and Plants Distributed during the Year 1890.

151. During the latter part of the season a call was made by the Minister for Public Instruction upon the Department for trees and shrubs in connection with the Arbor Days instituted by his Department. Call upon the Department for trees and shrubs.

152. In connection with this distribution some 1,700 trees and shrubs were sent out. 1,700 trees distributed.

153. To corporations and other public bodies some 500 trees were distributed. 500 trees to public bodies.

154. To several railway stations in the Colony over 450 trees were sent for their ornamentation. 450 trees to railway stations.

155. Some 725 plants of various kinds were sent in exchange to various nurserymen in the Colony who had previously favoured the Department with consignments of seeds and plants. 725 plants exchanged.

156. To the Hyde Park Trustees 1,079 trees, shrubs, and bulbs were forwarded during the year. 1,079 trees to Hyde Park Trustees.

157. To others some 250 shrubs, trees, and collections of seeds were forwarded. 250 shrubs and trees also distributed.

158. Several cases of ferns and palms were sent to the Director of the Botanical Gardens, Melbourne, in exchange for plants and seeds received from him. Exchanges with Botanical Gardens, Melbourne. A total of 4,700 trees distributed.

159. Altogether the number of plants sent out by the Department from the Gosford State Nursery during the year was about 4,700 in round numbers.

160. Seeds of various sorts were sent to the Director of Botanic Gardens, Sydney; to the Trustees of the Hyde Park, various American and Australian seeds; to the Director of the Botanic Gardens, Melbourne, various Australian and New Zealand seeds. Specimens of wattle bark (Acacia pycnantha) were forwarded to the British Chemical Coy's. stores, Melbourne, and a quantity of the seed of Acacia pycnantha was sent to Mr. Bowen, of Bowen Mount, Grose Vale. Seeds of Eucalyptus amygdalina were sent to the Revd. David Landsborough, Kilmarnock, Scotland. To F. Turner, Esq., Botanist of the Department of Agriculture, Sydney, seeds of Eucalyptus rostrata and Eucalyptus resinifera were also sent. Seeds of various sorts distributed.

SECTION IX.

STATE NURSERIES.

Introduction.

161. The establishment of Nurseries for the raising of trees, whether they be indigenous or exotic, is considered in all parts of the world where State Forest Departments have been organised, to be a necessary adjunct to such institutions. In the various countries of Europe, in India, in America, and coming closer home, in South Australia and Victoria, we find they are forming a prominent feature in connection with State Forest Administration. Perhaps it may not be going too far for me to express the opinion that in no part of the world, owing to the large extent of treeless country in it, are such establishments more required than in connection with the various Forest Departments of the Australian Colonies. Necessity for State Nurseries in connection with forest conservation.

162. In South Australia there are no less than seven properly organised State Nurseries, and two in Victoria. In these the trees required for the purpose of carrying out the re-forestation of the respective Colonies are raised. In South Australia, for instance, the object in having so many depôts of the kind is, that owing to the large extent of country embraced, the trees produced may be of such a quality and general suitability as will meet the requirements of the respective districts in which they are situated; by this I mean that owing to the largeness of the Colonies, and to the diversity of soil and climate in various portions of them, it would not be practicable to raise all the trees required by the Department in one locality, hence the necessity for a number of Nurseries; each to grow such trees and in such a manner as may be considered suitable for their respective districts. Properly organised State Nurseries in South Australia and Victoria.

163. In no other of the Australian Colonies should this fact be borne in mind more forcibly than in that of New South Wales, where I venture to think there is a greater diversity of climate, soil, and situation than in any of the other Colonies. Hence, in consideration of the future operations of this Department and of its possible planting operations, it will be necessary to establish several Nurseries in various parts of the Colony to meet the requirements contemplated. Great diversity of climate, soil, and situation in New South Wales.

164. In such a large country as this it will take some time to determine where such Nurseries should be established, but it will suffice at present to indicate in a general manner the probable districts in which they should be situated. Before doing so, however, I shall briefly refer to the Gosford State nursery, which is the only establishment of the kind at present at the command of my Department. Time required to determine where nurseries should be established.

165. The State Nursery at Gosford is situated about half-a-mile from the township of that name. The operations in connection with its formation were begun some three years ago; it occupies about 80 acres of a portion of commonage reserved for the township of Gosford, but which was resumed for the purpose to which it is now dedicated. Although it is not intended that the whole area shall be devoted to the raising of trees, some 15 to 20 acres of its extent will be cleared eventually, and possibly devoted to the purpose of nursery propagation, and the remainder will be cleared of its indigenous trees and scrub, and planted out with specimen trees of various kinds as an Arboretum. Gosford State Nursery.

166. The soil is somewhat variable in character, and in parts consists of a poor sandy loam and in others of a fairly rich vegetable sandy loam lying upon a clay subsoil. In many respects, therefore, the site is one fairly well suited to the successful raising of young tree stock. Nature of soil and suitability of site.

The upper portion of reserve.

167. The upper portion of the reserve, upon which the first efforts of the Department were some two years ago devoted to the purpose of raising young trees is, perhaps, so far as regards soil and situation, the least favourable portion of the whole area for the purpose in view, as it consists of a somewhat sour sandy nature lying upon a hard pan, and is subject to a continual wetness caused by a natural drainage from the adjoining rising ground.

Necessity for drainage.

168. In order, therefore, to put the land in a condition suitable for the raising of a young stock of plants, it has been found necessary to go to considerable expense in the way of underground covered drains; but even with this improvement the ground still remains too wet and sour for the raising of certain kinds of plants, and hence the utilisation of this part of the enclosure will, I fear, have to be confined only to a large extent to plants favourable to such conditions.

Varied nature of soil in Gosford nursery not altogether a disadvantage. The necessary buildings at the nursery.

169. It is true that in a Nursery of this kind, which necessarily will have to be devoted to the raising and cultivation of plants and trees from various parts of the world, and thus requiring soils and situations of a varied character, it is not to be altogether regretted that this state of things exists here.

170. Upon that portion of the reserve just referred to, the various huts, houses, sheds, shade houses, stables, carpenter's shops, and timber stores or sheds required for the establishment have been erected, and although these are of a comparatively primitive nature, they are sufficient at present for the purposes for which they were intended; and the selection of the sites which they occupy have been well chosen as regards the general working of the Nursery.

Lower portion of Gosford nursery.

171. During the last year some 5 or 6 acres of the lower lying and richer portion of the reserve have been cleared of the indigenous trees and undergrowth, trenched, and otherwise made suitable for nursery purposes. The soil upon this part consists of a good sandy humus clay lying upon a fairly retentive clay subsoil. It is rich in those ingredients which conduce to the growth of plant life, and consequently the results from it may be expected to prove much more satisfactory than what has resulted, or may be expected to result from the portion previously mentioned. Already many thousands of plants of various kinds have been lined out upon it, and the results, so far, have come up to expectations.

Clearing the portion still in progress.

172. The work of continuing the clearing on this portion is still in progress, and will be carried on until something like 10 acres of the land will be ready for the raising of plants before the end of the present season.

A.—Stock of Plants in Gosford Nursery.

173. The stock of plants at present in this Nursery is composed of those enumerated in the following tabulated statement:—

174. It is intended that the Gosford nursery shall be the principal one belonging to the Department, this decision having been arrived at in consequence of its central position and its adaptability for the raising of trees requiring soils and situations of a fairly general climatic character. In it will be raised such trees as those exotic ones belonging to America, Britain, the Continent of Europe, and the cooler portions of Asia and India.

Gosford to be the chief nursery.

B.—Other Nurseries Proposed.

175. As the operations of the Department progress and its requirements become more fully developed, it will, as I have already anticipated, be necessary in order to carry out the extensive planting which I propose, to establish nurseries in various parts of the Colony for the propagation of such indigenous and exotic trees as may be considered suitable for the respective districts.

Other nurseries to be established

176. Without committing myself to abide by what will now follow, I am at present of the opinion that we shall find it will be necessary to establish these nurseries in something like the following named districts, and I briefly indicate the kinds of trees which, in a general way it will, I think, be advisable to raise in them.

Places where nurseries may be required.

- A. One nursery is necessary in the New England district, situated at either Tenterfield, Glen Innes, or Armidale. Here the most valuable of the timber trees of the cooler portions of the Northern Hemisphere could, I think, be successfully planted.
- B. Should the planting of Red Cedar be carried out as proposed in another section of this Report upon our northern rivers, it will be necessary both for convenience of carriage, as also in a climatic sense for the future success of the plants, that they be raised somewhere in the district. Under these circumstances I shall probably propose that a small nursery for this purpose be established either upon the Don Dorrigo or Talgyaum Reserves. This will be devoted almost entirely to the propagation of the Red Cedar, and possibly also to those exotic trees of a like character.
- C. The north-western districts of the Colony should, I think, command, as regards the planting of trees, the very special attention of the Department, and hence, as I have recommended in a previous report, planting operations should at once be commenced in that portion of it lying between Cobar, Wilcannia, and Broken Hill. At present owing to difficulty of transport of trees from the Eastern nurseries it is almost impossible to carry out any extensive scheme of planting in these districts, and although small plantations will be formed both at Broken Hill and Wilcannia during the coming winter, these will be purely experimental and possibly will be of too expensive a character to be carried out upon a large scale. If, however, tree-planting is to be carried out under any systematic, extensive, and beneficial scheme in these districts, it will be almost absolutely necessary that a nursery be formed somewhere in the neighbourhood of Wilcannia, as that place is most central, and commands all the requisites in the way of soil and water

- water for the purpose. Were a nursery established at Wilcannia, the trees from this would be available for any planting which might be decided upon in the Wentworth, Broken Hill, Cobar, or Bourke districts. The principal trees raised in this nursery would be sugar-gums, carob, pepper, kurrajong, lagunaria or silky oak, and the native box-gum. When grown in masses, as they would be, other valuable kinds of trees would no doubt be also available.
- D. The Riverina district requires as much attention in regard to planting as that of the Western Districts already referred to; and should planting operations be carried out upon them, it is evident that a nursery will be required for this purpose, and it remains a question for further investigation and consideration as to whether Hay or Deniliquin would be the most suitable place for it. From either of these points the distribution of young trees to various places in the district would be easily attainable. Here such trees as the sugar-gum, the box-gum, the frenela, lagunaria, carob, pepper, kurrajong, and in special spots the ordinary river-gum would be available.
 - E. Possibly in the near future it might be advisable to start a nursery in what may be generalised as the Cooma and surrounding districts, where there are extensive tracts of country which would be much benefited by the planting of trees which produce the introduced timber and tannic products of commerce. A site for an establishment of this kind could easily be found in the district.

SECTION X.

PROPOSALS REGARDING THE SUPPLY OF TIMBER TO DEPARTMENTS FROM STATE FOREST DEPÔTS.

Introduction.

Work of developing new countries carried out by Government. Utisiation of local timber.

177. In all new countries, especially in Colonies such as these, most of the works in connection with their development are generally carried out by the Governments in the shape of railways, bridges, harbours, and other works of necessity.

Public Works entered upon hurriedly.

178. In many instances, such works as indicated, are constructed of local timbers, which are easily obtainable.

179. Owing to representations made to the Government by local bodies, Public Works of some of the kinds referred to, are often entered upon in an exceedingly hurried manner in order to meet pressing public demands.

Unsuitable timber used:

180. In this way such structures as bridges, harbour works, &c., are frequently carried out with timber of a character which, is in more senses than one, to a certain extent utterly unsuitable for the purpose.

Timber cut at wrong seasons.

181. By this remark I mean that owing to the apparent urgency of the case, such structures are frequently constructed of timbers, which have been cut at all seasons of the year without regard to their possible future durability.

Rapid deterioration of timber structures

182. As a result, in very many cases of the kind, disappointment often arises in consequence of the more rapid deterioration of such works than was anticipated; it is almost needless to say the timber used in their construction had not been cut at the proper time.

Durability of timber affected by the season of the year when felled.

183. The durability of timber, it matters not of what kind it may be, depends very largely upon the season of the year in which the tree may be felled; and it has been found from many and various experiments made in regard thereto that this is when the life of the tree is dormant and the sap in a stagnant condition.

Rapid decay of timber under certain conditions.

184. If trees be felled when they are in full and vigorous sap, it is found that the tissues of the timber are subject to fermentation, and that consequently its woody matter is subject to early, and in many cases rapid decay. Even at the present day, when matters of this kind might be expected to be better managed, I find that in the erection of bridges for instance, no reference whatever is made in the specifications for such work, that the timber required for their construction must be cut only at a certain season of the year.

At present impossible to keep a check on contractors.

185. Of course if the Departments of the Government interested in such works frame specifications with special reference to the timber, it is, at present, unfortunately, almost impossible for the Departments to see that the contract for its supply has been carried out properly, i.e., that the timber has been cut at the proper season of the year.

Forest Departments undertake supply of timber for Government work. Guarantee that timber is perfectly matured.

186. In order that timber of a properly seasoned character may only be used in the general constructive works of Governments, it has been found necessary in all cases where Forest Departments exist, to arrange that these institutions should undertake its supply.

Durability of timber increased by cutting at proper season.

187. In this way the Forest Departments, as a matter of course, see that the various timbers required are cut at the proper season of the year only, that these are manufactured into such lengths and sizes as may be required by the respective Departments, and that no timber of any kind leaves their depôts without a guarantee being given that it is perfectly matured and thoroughly seasoned in all respects.

Recommendation re matter of timber cutting for Government Works. Government Departments already taken matter up. Steps necessary to attain best results.

188. By attention to the cutting of trees at the proper season of the year, it has been fully demonstrated, that the durable life of the timber from them is increased at the very least by nearly one-half, and this perhaps more especially as regards its lasting capabilities underground.

189. Taking these circumstances into consideration therefore, I very strongly recommend that this matter receives the very careful and favourable consideration of the Government of New South Wales.

190. I am pleased to state that already some of our Departments have taken the matter into consideration, and recognising its importance, intend, if they have not already done so, bringing the matter before the Government.

191. Having endeavoured to show the importance of this subject, I now briefly indicate the steps which I propose should be carried out in order that the best results may accrue from its adoption in this Colony.

- A. That the Government should at once recognise the importance of the subject, and by Cabinet minute instruct its various Departments that, so far as possible, all timber required shall be of indigenous growth, and obtained from the Forest Department.
- B.

- B. That each Department shall intimate to the Forestry Department every year, the probable quantities, kinds, and sizes of the timbers which are likely to be required by it during the following or subsequent year.
- C. That the Government instruct the Forest Department to deal with this matter and arrange as far as possible for the supply of the various timbers required by the other Departments.
- D. In order that the Forest Department may be in a position, in a monetary point of view to fell, cut, and manufacture the timber so required by other Departments, arrangements may be made whereby the former may be placed in a position to do so, without interfering in any way with its annual Parliamentary vote.
- E. That Depôts be established by the Forest Department in various parts of the Colony of such timbers as may be required, and that these be formed in localities and positions as contiguous as possible to easy and ready transport by rail or water.
192. That such a system as has thus been briefly sketched would very materially enhance the value of the works of the various Departments interested, there can be no doubt, and besides contributing to the lasting capabilities of the works affected thereby, it would to a very large extent tend to increase the usefulness and solidity of the revenue of the Forest Department.
- Beneficial results derivable from adoption of system recommended.

SECTION XI.

WATTLE CULTIVATION AS A NATIONAL INDUSTRY; ITS IMPORTANCE TO THE COLONY.

Introduction.

193. The developments of industrial science in recent years have proved the superiority of the astringent properties of the Australian wattle for tanning purposes, and have so strongly emphasised the desirability of conserving and cultivating the tree on a large scale for commercial purposes in the waste corners of the State Forests of the Colonies, that surprise cannot but be expressed at the comparative inertia and indifference that has been shown to the subject on hand up to the present time.

Superior quality of Australian wattle bark.

194. There is no natural product of the forest which costs so little to mature and produces so much in so short a space of time as the wattle,—it is a golden twig wherever it is grown that requires little or no attention,—and yet very little has been done, in a solid practical commercial sense, except in South Australia and Victoria to develop its resources, and utilise its properties on a scale at all commensurate with its national importance.

Small cost and large returns.

195. As a branch of forestry it is of the utmost value to the Colony, and might in a very few years, with only an odd hours attention now and again, be developed into such a revenue producing industry as to pay the whole cost itself of the Forest Department of New South Wales, but the longer the initial work is delayed the greater difficulty will be experienced in restoring the "twig" to the depleted forests and developing the market for the bark.

Wattle cultivation a revenue producing industry.

196. There is an almost inexhaustible market in Europe for Australian wattle bark; it commands a higher price than the old astringents; and there is no prospect of increased production injuriously affecting the exportation as is very often the case with other natural products of the soil; for the experiences of the last twenty years or so have shown that the prices have risen from £2 10s. to £10 per ton, with the result that the forests have been ravaged and very often permanently destroyed to keep pace with the increasing demands in the home and Colonial markets for the better qualities of tanning-bark.

European market for wattle and rise in price.

197. At one time the supplies were so intermittent and unreliable that a number of large tanning firms in Great Britain, France, and Germany, who had shown a preference for the Australian bark, were compelled in their own interests to fall back upon other less effective astringents in their tanneries, since which time the local supply has been less regular and less abundant and larger quantities of hides have been exported from all the Colonies.

Intermittent and unreliable supply of bark detrimental.

198. There is no doubt that the better qualities of wattle bark,—those which possess the richest tannic properties—are diminishing seriously throughout Australia through the absence of anything like a system of reproduction, and which, but for the interference of the stripper, Nature herself would provide; it is imperatively necessary therefore that the Government should undertake the duty of cultivating wattles in the State Forests, and of encouraging their growth on the roadsides and on the farm as a national industry.

Better qualities of wattle diminishing.

199. Wattles will thrive on dry barren spots and stony places where much else will not grow; a very heavy rainfall is of no importance as they prosper with from 10 to 16 inches a year; and, they yield a large profit at the sixth or seventh year when probably the farm proper is recuperating in fallow. The very poorest soil can be utilised and turned to profitable account, while at the same time the fallen leaves manure and improve the ground and make it ultimately useful for other purposes; at one time the natural reproduction of the wattle was so great in Tasmania that they ridiculed the idea of cultivating it in the State Forests, but the destruction has been so great in recent years that the better classes of Acacia have almost entirely disappeared, and the people are now endeavouring in a few years to retrieve the destruction, neglect, and inattention of generations.

Wattles readily grow and poor soil can be turned to useful purposes.

200. In Victoria wattle forests have been depleted and it will be so in New South Wales unless their cultivation is placed upon a more satisfactory footing. The Government should set a good example by forming wattle plantations in the State Forests, and distributing acacia seed with instructions for planting and cultivation and conservation throughout the pastoral and agricultural areas, particularly in those parts of the country where the soil and climate are most likely to conduce to the success of the enterprise. With the view of helping the matter forward I take the liberty here of going somewhat fully into the question of wattle cultivation.

Destruction of wattle in Victoria.

A.—The Science of Wattle Culture.

201. There is a science in growing wattles as in almost everything else that is turned to profitable account in the industrial world, and in a general way it may be laid down as an unvarying rule that the greater scientific experience is brought to bear upon the subject the greater the return and the larger the

A science in growing wattles.

Leaves and barks used in tanning.

the profit. The rule does not apply alone to the cultivation of the wattle, but to all conditions of life in the vegetable kingdom. In the early times, when the tanning of hides was first practiced various descriptions of leaves and barks were used as astringents such as the leaves of the myrtle, laurel leaves, the bark of the mangrove-tree, willow bark, gall nuts, and birch bark.

Astringency of bark, dependent on age and character of tree. Most suitable time for stripping operations.

202. The astringency of the bark varies with the age and character of the tree from which it has been stripped, and experience in all parts of the world has shown that bark stripped in the spring months contains more tannin than when procured in winter.

Inferior wattle grows on limestone formations.

203. In the Colonies, the stripping should commence as soon as the sap rises sufficiently into the tree to admit of the bark being readily removed—September to February,—and it will be found that the most valuable bark will be that which is first removed when the trees are in bud. The tanning properties are not so strong when the trees have expanded into full leaf.

Number of crops that may be taken. Treatment of land before planting wattle

204. The bark of trees grown on limestone formations is greatly inferior to that grown on sandy soil lying upon a clay subsoil, which will probably be found the best, but any description of poor land may be used for planting with great success.

205. Three or four crops may be taken off the same soil without impairing its quality or productivity. The trees should not be stripped until they are 10 inches in girth.

206. Land intended for wattles should be cleared in the usual way, the surface broken up and the seeds harrowed in, and the more care that is taken in the planting of the trees the more profit will be obtained from their maturity.

B.—State Control Necessary.

Strong reasons for State interference.

207. The strongest reasons for State interference in connection with the cultivation of the wattle are to be found in the abstention, and disinclination of private enterprise as a rule to develop the industry; the value, number, and importance of the industries which require a permanent supply of bark and the possible extinction of the Acacia in our forests in the near future.

Without Government control wattle industry will collapse.

208. Without that particular kind of encouragement, which the Government alone can give, the cultivation of the wattle for commercial purposes will in a few years become a mere reminiscence in the Colony, while judicious legislation and the cultivation of a few successful plantations within the forest areas, may induce the farmer and the squatter to give some practical consideration to the subject, and turn their barren and unproductive patches to profitable account.

Many interests concerned in the production of wattle.

209. The number of people who are concerned directly and indirectly in wattle growing must be enormous. They comprise the growers of the raw material, the strippers, tanners, fellmongers, who number some thousands in New South Wales, to say nothing of the minor branches and industries which in one way and another profit by the local production of wattle bark.

The supply of wattle should be maintained.

210. Not only should the supply at present required within the Colony be kept up without intermission, but a large surplus should be annually produced for exportation to England, France and Germany, where a good price can always be obtained for it, and this desirable end can only be achieved by the Government demonstrating that the trees can be profitably and systematically grown in the public reserves. It is necessary that this should be done with as little delay as possible, because, as the country is gradually taken up and put under cultivation, the wattle, as well as almost every other description of tree, will in time almost disappear, and the work of reforestation will be made more costly and more difficult of accomplishment.

C.—Supervision of Wattle Plantations.

Strict supervision necessary.

211. In South Australia and the other Colonies where any attention has been paid to wattle growing, the bark is almost wholly obtained from the State Forests, and experience has shown that the strictest supervision is necessary to ensure the success of the plantations—that is to say Legislative precautions have to be taken to prevent the destruction of the plantations by fire, to protect the young trees from unseasonable interference, and to restrict the process of stripping to certain months of the year.

Restrictions on wattle bark strippers.

212. In the early times in South Australia, stripping licenses were issued from September to December at £1 per month, and the stripper was restricted in his operations to trees of not less than 10 inches in girth, measured one foot from the ground, and the stripped trees had to be grubbed; but the system did not work efficiently in the direction of conserving a crop of wattles permanently in the reserves, and fresh regulations were framed whereby permits to strip bark upon defined areas of the reserves were issued direct from the Forest Office, upon agreement to pay a royalty per ton, or a lump sum for the whole season's stripping, and not to strip any trees under 10 inches in girth, and to cut down all stripped trees. [The system acted very well, and the revenue was thereby considerably increased.]

D.—What Results may be Expected.

Plantations established at little cost.

213. Under the supervision of the Government such wattle plantations can be established at little or no cost and will ensure a permanent supply of the best description of bark for tanning purposes, and greatly benefit a number of important industries.

Present source of supply precarious.

214. The present means of obtaining necessary supplies are too precarious and in a few years may be expected to disappear altogether, but by adopting a systematic course of planting, good results would be obtained.

Proper and systematic measures and their results

215. A large and regular supply of good bark would be obtained; no supervision would be necessary as to the size of the trees felled, because by a systematic process of sowing the ground, a regular portion would come on for stripping each year; the wood of the trees felled would be removed from the ground as firewood, thus preparing it for another crop, and at the same time reducing the chances of bush fires; the value of the bark would be maintained and could be relied on from the prevention of unseasonable stripping, and it would be to the interest of the strippers to take all the bark they could get from the trees included in their particular area.

What successful plantations will produce.

216. There is always a revenue, and an ordinarily successful plantation will produce 5 tons of bark per acre after the thing has got a fair start—which at £10 a ton amounts to a yield of £50 per acre, or £7 per acre per annum allowing seven years for their maturity. With a proper system of of planting, and judiciously thinned, the subsequent yield of the same plantation would be quite as heavy annually for many years.

217. The estimates of the Melbourne Board of Inquiry in wattle cultivation (1878) showed that the proceeds from 100 acres of wattles in eight years would at £4 per ton be £4,852 and the expenditure £2,213 including £240 as interest, and practical experience since this has shown that the estimates were not over the mark. Estimates of Melbourne Board of Inquiry.

E.—Where to grow Wattles.

218. It is hardly necessary to specify the description of country most suitable for wattle growing, they will grow almost where nothing else will. It grows with vigour in different kinds of soil and with considerable vitality, and with a large amount of profit on the poor and sandy parts of the country at various elevations. Wattle will grow anywhere.

219. In the State Forests the wattle should be planted, in poor spots where timber trees will not mature to profitable dimensions, on exposed country in masses so that they may act as shelter to more valuable trees, and as "nurses" in certain spots, so as to protect and encourage the growth of those timbers which are intended to occupy the ground permanently. Planting wattle in State Forests.

220. Any arid spot or unoccupied odd corner about the farm or station, for which ordinary vegetation appears to have no liking, may be strewn with the golden wattle seed, and in time small plantations will spring up imperceptibly, and may be utilised either for shelter or for profit. No hill-side can be too barren, nor plain too desolate for the wattle, and if it is not used in its maturity for its tanning properties it will beautify the locality and improve it, and at the same time afford shelter to the stock from the cold winds and summer heat. Planting wattles, on farms and stations.

F.—The most profitable Wattles to grow.

221. There are a great many descriptions of trees possessing tanning properties which might be profitably planted in the public forests and reserves, but the subjoined are the most suitable. Trees possessing tannin qualities.

Botanical name.	Vernacular name.	Average height.	Age at maturity.	Soil on which it grows.	Percentage of tannin.
Acacia pycnantha	Broad leaved wattle.	ft. ft. 15 to 20	Generally when 8 to 10 years old, but they are ready for stripping at 5 years	Poor sandy soil, stony ridges, &c.	30 to 40
Acacia decurrens and varieties.	Black wattle	40 to 50	do do	do	25 to 35

G.—How to form a Wattle Plantation.

222. When once a wattle plantation has been fairly established no difficulty will be experienced in keeping up a regular crop by a process of natural reproduction, but of course a great deal of the after success will depend upon the conditions under which the original sowing is carried out. No difficulty in obtaining regular crops.

223. Having selected the area upon which it is proposed to establish a plantation, the ground should be lightly prepared for the seed, and each species should be sown in separate blocks by itself, so as to ensure regularity of growth and to facilitate the subsequent work of pruning, thinning, and clearing at regular intervals. In planting masses of any of the Acacias the plough should be used and furrows opened at regular intervals 4 feet apart in as straight a line as the ground will permit. The seed should be dropped in, three or four together, all along the furrow 4 feet apart—the man in the second furrow dropping the seed one pace behind the first man, the sower in the third furrow doing the same behind the second man, and so on over the whole area so as to secure alternate rows 4 feet apart throughout the plantation. The plants will in this way be protected and their vitality concentrated more to making stems than side shoots. Preparing ground and planting.

224. The average cost would be from 10/- to 12/- per acre; but the process of planting them as "nurses" for valuable timber trees and with the spade would naturally be more elaborate and more costly. The spade is only used in spots which are of too rough a character generally to allow of the plough being used. Average cost.

225. The seed will require some slight preparation before being planted. The germination must be assisted by means of heat, and it can best be effected by either placing the seed in hot water, by roasting it in a frying pan, or by mixing it up in hot ashes, charred coals, or the residuum of any still slumbering fire. The most favourable process is to pour water nearly boiling upon the seed, and allow it to remain twenty-four hours, when it should be removed and kept damp in a suitable bag until swelling commences, when it should be planted. In adopting this course the seed must be planted in the winter season so that the necessary amount of moisture may be maintained. Seed germinated in any other way may be planted at any time of the year without imperiling the prospects of the future plantation. Wattle seed requires slight preparation before sowing.

226. The young trees will require some little attention in the way of thinning and occasionally pruning in order to direct their growth into one stem, and so aid the production of more bark and simplify the process of stripping, and beyond keeping the roads ploughed in the summer time so as to minimise the risks from fire, nothing further need be done until the first period of thinning arrives, which, as a rule, when the wattles are healthy and of vigorous growth, will be about the fifth or sixth year from the time of sowing. Young trees require attention in thinning and pruning.

227. The best bark containing most tannic acid, is obtained from trees between the ages of five and eight years. Age at which trees contain most tannic acid.

228. Every alternate tree should be removed at the first thinning,—two years afterwards it will be a matter for observation on the ground to say whether only a portion or the whole of the original remaining trees should be stripped. Manner in which thinning operations are carried out.

229. It will depend very much upon the condition and general appearance of the plantation, but in a general way it may be said that in view of the rapid growth of the young trees no great advantage can be obtained from allowing the old trees to stand beyond the seventh year. No general rule can however be laid down, for so very much depends upon the character of the country, the climate, the description of wattle, and the condition of the market. No material benefit from old trees after seventh year.

SECTION XII.

OUR CEDAR FORESTS.

Introduction.

- Importance of the red cedar. 230. One of the most important trees indigenous to New South Wales is that of the red cedar (Cedrela australis), the timber of which is now so well known in the commercial timber markets both here and in Europe.
- One of the first Australian timbers used for general purposes Cedar as an article of commerce. 1815, 1817, 1824, 1837. 231. Curiously enough, its launch upon the timber market bears record as one of the first of Australian woods which was used for cabinet and general furniture making.
232. As far back as 1815 we find it being referred to as an article of commerce on this Continent, and at a later date also in the Home market, and, the cutting down and general utilisation here, and export to Britain and other countries has ever since given birth to a considerable industry in the districts where the timber is found largely growing. In 1815 there is some record of a man named Dalton bringing cedar from Shoalhaven and Illawarra, and a vessel is stated to have been wrecked upon our coast some time in 1817 loaded with cedar. There is also some record of cedar having been exported in 1837, the quantity being 116,000 feet. In 1824 one, Alex. Berry, exported cedar from Shoalhaven.
- The height and diameter of red cedar. 233. The wood is easily worked, comparatively light in texture, fairly durable, and is largely used in the construction of furniture, general house decorations, and other purposes where lightness, beauty of grain, and capability of taking a fine polish are necessary.
234. The tree attains a height sometimes of over 180 feet, and from 4 to 10 feet in diameter. As a rule it is deciduous, umbrageous when allowed sufficient room to expand its branches, and is generally handsome in appearance. Its congener, the Cedrela Toona, indigenous to India, is also well known in the timber market as a wood of great commercial value, which is used for similar purposes as those referred to.
- Cedar forests destroyed through inadequate supervision. 235. Owing to its very great value the indigenous forests of Cedrela australis have been largely worked upon, and owing entirely to inadequate regulations and supervision by the State, they have been to a very large extent ruthlessly destroyed; and although not beyond the means of renovation both by natural regeneration and planting, it will be a matter of very careful and special application for a considerable number of years before their previous original excellence can be attained.
- Large quantities of cedar felled. 236. In consequence of the very lax regulations and to the value of the timber and the general demand by the trade, large quantities of this timber was at times felled by the so-called and well-known "cedar getters" in almost inaccessible situations, with the view at some future time of being able either by floating it down creeks and rivers when floods occurred, or by opening up the country by settlement through the construction of roads, to reach a market.
- Waste of timber through delay in transport. 237. In many cases, and unfortunately they are very many, the necessary means in the way indicated towards the transport of the logs did not occur, or at least were delayed so long that the timber thus cut became so thoroughly water-logged and otherwise decayed as to become to a very great extent worthless and hence unmarketable.
- Waste of Cedar timber a serious loss to the country. 238. In this way it is not too much to say that millions of superficial feet of this the most valuable of all our indigenous timbers have been wantonly wasted, and consequently that tens of thousands of pounds not only in royalty, but in value of actual product have been lost to the country.
239. In connection with the important matter of our cedar forests, I have to draw attention to the following subjects under their respective headings:—

A.—Where are our Red Cedar Forests?

- Natural habitat of red cedar. 240. It is interesting to record at this stage of the country's history where the natural forests of Red Cedar trees exist at the present time. From personal observations, and from the information I can obtain upon the subject, it appears that the natural habitat of the Red Cedar is confined to a very large extent to the rich alluvial deposits in the sheltered valleys and foot hills of what may be called the coastal ranges.
- Districts favored by red cedar. 241. In no instance whatever has the tree, so far as I am aware, been found to any great degree beyond the influence of the sea breezes, or say at a distance of over 40 to 50 miles from the coast. This of itself is a very marked feature in the physical habitat of the tree, and is of very great importance to be considered in connection with any planting of Cedar, which may be proposed and carried out by the Department.
- The growth of cedar in coastal districts an advantage. 242. In a commercial point of view, the facts thus notified of its growing in such close proximity to water carriage, both by sea and river, is of very great importance, and contributes in no small degree to the commercial value the timber has and always will attain.
- Real habitat and home of the red cedar. 243. We find that the real habitat and home of the red cedar in its most comprehensive sense, is found to be upon the rivers and affluents thereof in the northern portion of the Colony, viz., those of the Tweed, Richmond, Brunswick, Clarence and Macleay. Perhaps, however, the palm as regards the natural production of the tree may be given to that of the rich alluvial deposits of the Tweed River District, from which, to say the very least, millions of superficial feet of the timber have been removed.
- Quantities of cut cedar not utilised. 244. In these districts the cutting of the cedar in the reckless manner already mentioned, has been carried out upon a very extensive scale, and at the present time it is not too much to say that there are many thousands of pounds worth of the timber lying on the ground, cut many years ago, and which to a large extent is going to waste from the want of adequate means for its removal to market.
- Few matured trees of the species left. 245. From my own observation in that part of the country, there are, comparatively speaking, very few natural matured trees of the species still standing, and with the exception of along the borders of rivers and creeks, the natural reproduction of the tree is in a general sense not so prolific as one could wish.
- Satisfactory growth of young cedar requiring proper attention. 246. In many instances, however, there are some fine young trees and saplings growing upon the sites indicated, which will, in course of time, if systematically attended to (as will now be done), take the place of those trees which have been removed, and thus we trust will gradually conduce towards the keeping up of the supply of this class of timber.

247. Similar remarks may be made with regard to the natural Cedar Forests of the Brunswick and Richmond Rivers, but perhaps one of the most important indications of the natural regeneration of the forests of the trees in question, is to be found upon what is known as the Don Dorrigo reserve, which is situated upon the plateau at the head of the Bellinger and Macleay Rivers, where, upon a very considerable extent of country, young cedar plants are found growing in all stages, from the smallest seedling to the young tree 60 or 70 feet in height and from 1 to 2 feet in diameter.

248. The Cedar is found growing in various parts of the coastal ranges other than those mentioned; from the Illawarra northwards; among which may be mentioned Bulli mountain, Kowmung, Hawkesbury River and thence northwards in increasing abundance until the northern rivers are reached,

B.—Results of Cedar plantations already formed.

249. Some years ago it was decided, upon the recommendation of Mr. Duff, the late Inspector of Forests, and approved by the then Minister for Mines, to begin the formation of Cedar Plantations upon several of the forest reserves in the northern portions of the Colony.

250. In accordance with this decision, operations of this kind were begun upon the Don Dorrigo Forest Reserve, as also upon the reserve at Hogan's Brush, near Gosford and Nulla Nulla, on the Macleay River.

251. In regard to the planting of cedar upon the Don Dorrigo Reserve, it may be stated that the operations in connection therewith consisted to a very large extent of transplanting cedar seedlings of various sizes, varying from 2 to 4 feet in height, from various parts of this reserve where such seedlings had come up naturally, to other portions of the reserve where trees of the kind had not previously existed.

252. These seedlings were planted in straight lines at distances of about 12 feet apart in the scrub vegetation of the reserve. This planting was begun in the winter of 1884 and continued each year till 1888, up to which time it is estimated that over 23,000 trees were planted. The area so occupied was also estimated at 400 acres.

253. Upon an examination of the work I very much regret to say that it was not carried out in such a satisfactory manner as should have been done, nor in accordance with the usual method adopted under such circumstances.

254. The trees were planted out in a manner much too methodical, ignoring to a very large extent the surroundings of the various sites which they were intended to occupy. In consequence of the system adopted, in many cases the young plants were placed in sites in which any practical forester would never have expected them to grow. By this I mean that the trees were in many instances planted near to, or within the influence of the overhanging branches of large trees, which as a natural consequence would prevent their growing. In other cases their surroundings in regard to vines and general undergrowth were such that no practical results could possibly accrue.

255. I much regret to have to make a statement of this kind, but the circumstances of the case compel me to do so; and in consequence of the defective manner in which the work has been carried out, it is sufficient without further remark to say that of the large number of trees planted out in the manner described there are not more than from 5,000 to 6,000 plants now alive, and these to a very large extent are of a somewhat stunted growth, and in my opinion do not show any particular symptoms of that progress which might have been expected under more favourable circumstances in regard to management.

256. In addition to the unsatisfactory manner in which the trees were planted it is unhappily my duty to record that some few years ago a large number of the plants were destroyed by the inroads of cattle, the matter of their protection from depredations of this kind having been entirely overlooked.

257. Upon this reserve a small enclosure of some 30 or 40 feet square was cleared of the brush, thoroughly dug, fenced and otherwise properly prepared for the purpose of forming a small nursery or seed-bed, in which to raise young Cedar plants from the seed, with the view of transplanting the seedlings out into the forest in the manner described, as they became of sufficient height and strength for the purpose.

258. This primitive nursery I inspected and was gratified to find the results were satisfactory, and that a large number of fine seedling plants had come up and will be available for the purposes of the Department in years to come.

259. In many of the gullies and otherwise rich portions of the country within what may be generally designated the Gosford or Hawkesbury River district the Red Cedar had, and in some instances still has, its natural home—the latter simply arising from the fact of natural barriers having prevented its eradication. Taking this into consideration and also the fact of the district being in direct communication with Sydney as a central market, the Department very wisely, some two years ago, determined to begin the formation of Cedar Plantations in the neighbourhood

260. The first of these, and it is the only one which has so far been formed, is that at a place called Hogan's Brush, situated about 4 miles from the township of Gosford. The site of this experimental plantation is that of a deep alluvial flat, possessing soil of great depth, and composed of a rich humus deposit, and was before being cleared occupied by an indigenous growth of the usual scrub timbers, ferns, and palms.

261. The plantation, although small in extent (embracing an area of only 6 acres), is a thoroughly typical one as a site for the production of Red Cedar, and hence the results accruing from it may be accepted as an indication of what the Department may be able to attain in the replanting of our Cedar Forests.

262. The ground was thoroughly cleared of its indigenous scrub before being operated upon by planting, and as the situation is such that it is subject to inundation when floods occur, the soil was not ploughed as the opening up of it would have made it liable to be washed away by the rush of flood waters. For the insertion of the plants, therefore, holes only were dug.

263. Something like a little over 800 red cedar plants were put out upon this site at about 10 feet apart, but as it has been thought that this distance would enable the young plants to develop a tendency to the making of more lateral shoots in the way of branches than is desirable for the production of good, sound and straight-grained timber, other kinds of trees—chiefly Silky Oak, American catalpa and Eucalypts of various sorts, were subsequently planted amongst them in order to act as nurses, with a view of checking any symptoms in this way.

- The plantation a success. 264. I have upon several occasions examined this plantation, and it is with much satisfaction I am enabled to report most favourably of it.
- Hogan's Brush a well chosen site. 265. The site has been well chosen as regards its surroundings, the soil is all that could be desired for the growth of Cedar; the plants had evidently been well selected, of a healthy and robust character, and the work generally carried out in a thoroughly practical manner.
- Red cedar and other plants growing well. 266. Although some filling up has had to be done, where failures have occurred from various causes, the plants of all kinds have done well, and this remark, I am glad to say, has special application to the Red Cedar.
- 5,000 trees planted. 267. During the last six months these trees have begun to assert themselves in a very satisfactory manner, and are now making a progress which indicates a thorough adaptation to the site in which they have been placed. Altogether somewhere about 5,000 trees of the various kinds indicated have been put out in this plantation.
- Plantation on Nulla Nulla Creek. 268. The only other plantation of cedar formed by the Department up to date, is one of about 10 acres in extent situated upon the Nulla Nulla Creek, a tributary of the Macleay River.
- The reserve suited to red cedar. 269. The reserve upon which this plantation has been formed is within an area of country which is the natural home of the Red Cedar tree, and hence its selection as a site for the experiment.
- Naturally growing trees planted out. 270. The plants used in connection with this plantation were found growing naturally on the reserve and were simply planted out in the scrub in a similar manner to the system adopted at Don Dorrigio.
- Unfavourable reports received. 271. Although I have not as yet been able to make a personal inspection of this plantation, I gather from reports received from the officer in charge, that the results in more ways than one have not been as satisfactory as could be wished.
- Unfortunate position of the plantation. 272. The site appears to be too liable to spoliation by severe floods, and consequently more than one half of the trees put out have been either washed away, or otherwise destroyed by inundations.
- 2,450 cedars planted. 273. In all, about 2,450 cedar trees were planted on this reserve in 1888.
- Proposals for operations in connection with the reproduction of timber. 274. This ends the record of the efforts of the Department hitherto in the reproduction of the cedar timber in the Colony. As the subject is one of very great importance, especially in a commercial point of view, the proposals of the Department with regard to future operations of the kind will be dealt with under the following special heading:—

C.—Proposals with regard to future operations, in connection with the formation of plantations, and the renovation of the indigenous Cedar Forests.

- Depletion of forests through past neglect. 275. I have already endeavoured to draw attention to what has been a matter of general comment by the public many years before the establishment of a Forest Department was ever contemplated, viz., the immense importance to the country of nature's gift in her indigenous forests of Red Cedar. The matter has occupied the attention of many abler Colonists, and the attention of the Government has been from time to time directed to the subject of forest preservation; but unfortunately it is only now when to a large extent the forests have been depleted, some action is being taken to endeavour to restore them to their primeval value. Although fortunately not too late to begin this work, the effects would have been perhaps, much more immediately satisfactory in their results had the matter been taken up by the Government many years ago. I need not further dilate upon the subject, but will now endeavour to point out to the Government the course which I propose should be adopted as expeditiously as possible, in order to attain that most desirable object, the continuance and possible extension of the permanent supply of our Red Cedar timber.
- Reforestation in New South Wales requires systematic treatment. 276. I have already briefly pointed out the efforts of the Department in this direction, but as these have been to a very large extent purely experimental, not altogether so successful as might be wished, and moreover of too small a nature to ever meet the requirements of this important subject in a preliminary sense alone, it behoves us to take up the matter in a much more comprehensive and systematic manner than has been attempted in the past, before the materials remaining, such as they are, have become exhausted.
- Situations favoured by the red cedar. 277. It is well known to all those who have had any experience in connection with our Cedar Forests, that the natural habitat of the tree is limited to deep alluvial soils, sheltered and warm situations, with general surroundings of a semi-tropical nature. In all cases where the tree has been found; and this has invariably been in isolated patches, it has been intermixed with, surrounded and protected by more or less dense masses of forest vegetation.
- Red Cedar not found beyond certain limits. 278. In no instance so far as I am aware have Red Cedar trees of any important commercial value been found otherwise than under the conditions stated.
- Particular attention required to the predilections of red cedar. 279. Since the opening up of the so-called Cedar Scrubs upon our northern rivers, a good number of trees of the kind have come up in the open glades or clearances made by settlement; and in every instance it is found that in such situations the trees become dwarfed and branchy in habit. It appears therefore that the warm and comfortable surroundings in the habitat of the tree are essential to its growth, for the production of a saleable commercial commodity; and as the aim of the forester in the growing of trees, and attempts at their reproduction, may always be guided by the experience gained from seeing how the trees favour certain localities in their natural state, it is evident that in the reforestation of this our most valuable timber tree particular attention will have to be paid to its predilections thus referred to.
- Predilections of red cedar tree not previously considered. 280. In some respects I fear that this matter has not had that attention which it deserved in the attempts hitherto made in growing these trees.
- Red Cedar requires to be planted in certain ways. 281. As in a smaller degree indicating the natural desire of the tree to be surrounded and confined in its habitat, it is interesting to note that even in the nursery they have to be grown closely together in order to produce plants of a character suitable for planting out.
- Red cedar favours rich land. 282. As will be gathered from these remarks, it is evident that to a very large extent the Cedar can only be grown successfully upon rich lands, and therefore upon sites which unfortunately, if I may use the expression, are suitable for settlement, and hence no doubt will be sought after for the latter purpose. As however the production of the timber is beyond doubt essential to the country's welfare, I respectfully submit that it will be necessary for the Government to dedicate certain portions of these lands for the growth of cedar, beyond any alienation whatever.

283. The selection and dedication of reserves for this purpose will, of course, have to be carefully and judiciously made, in order to interfere as little as possible with the necessary settlement of those districts in which cedar is found to flourish. Careful selection of sites for future reserves necessary.
284. Coming now to the practical aspect of the question, I have, after careful consideration of the subject, to submit the following suggestions for the consideration of the Government. Suggestions for future action in regard to red cedar.
285. If the Government approve of the suggestion, a very careful inspection and survey of the cedar growing localities should be at once made, and certain portions of them declared reserves for the purposes of the propagation of the tree for all time to come, in the manner indicated above. Careful inspection and survey of cedar lands necessary.
286. Regarding the reserves which should be selected, it must, of course, be a point of paramount importance to see that the retention of these is made so as to embrace those places in which the tree has been known to have originally existed, and also where it is seen to be reproducing itself by natural means at the present time. And as its natural habitat is, as we know, somewhat circumscribed in area, it would, I think, be advisable to make these reserves as large as possible. Reserves must be selected in favourable situations.
287. Although it is a matter of purely departmental detail in connection with the renovation and planting of cedar, it is perhaps advisable that I should indicate to the Government and the public generally those steps which I propose to carry out in connection with this work. It will be gathered from previous remarks that notwithstanding the destruction which has hitherto taken place in these forests, nature has asserted herself in reproducing the cedar tree to a certain extent in her own way. This fact is perhaps more noticeable upon the Don Dorrigo Reserve than upon any other reserves upon which the trees are growing naturally. Necessity to indicate the best course to be pursued in the future.
288. Where natural regeneration of this kind takes place, the reforestation of a tree by this means is of great importance, and should be carefully attended to, and encouraged in every possible manner. Natural regeneration and reforestation.
289. On such of the reserves, therefore, where this has taken place, it is the object of the Department to give this natural regeneration special attention and assistance, as it is a well known fact that when trees grow up in this manner they have a better chance of giving satisfactory results in regard to growth and quality of timber than those trees reared by artificial means. It is consequently proposed that as regards these trees, there care and proper supervision will have the special attention of the Department. Special attention to natural regeneration!
290. In order to protect such portions of these reserves as are not already naturally protected by the density of the scrub against the inroads of stock, it will be advisable to thoroughly fence them. Necessary to fence certain portions of reserves.
291. Should the system be carried out upon an extensive scale, this matter of fencing will, no doubt, entail considerable expenditure, but the results will eventually amply justify the cost. Ultimate results will justify expense of fencing.
292. In dealing with such tracts of country, it is proposed for a few years to go carefully over the ground and clear away all underbrush which may be interfering with the proper health of the young cedar plants, to thin out these where they are found growing too thickly together, and, in some instances, to ring-bark such of the worthless trees of other kinds which may be found overshadowing, and thus retarding the growth and proper development of the young cedar, which it is desired should be assisted to come on as the permanent and most important crop. Manner of dealing with certain forest lands.
293. Of course, it will be found in work of this kind that the cedars have come up in a very intermittent and irregular manner, hence many spots in the forests highly suitable for the production of the species will be unoccupied by them. It will therefore be a matter of detail for the foreman in charge of the work to have the thinnings referred to, transplanted out into such vacant places as the work progresses, and these sites treated in a similar manner as regards undergrowth and useless trees, as those left standing. Manner of dealing with reserves a matter of detail for officer in charge of work.
294. In this way it will only be a matter of time and application to regenerate these forests of cedar in a more systematic and regular manner, than they were originally. Regeneration of forests, matter of time and application.
295. Whilst looking to the natural reproduction of the tree, to which reference has just been made, for its output of cedar timber, it will be necessary I think to supplement this by the formation of regularly formed plantations, and with this object in view the Department has, as a preliminary step, already raised over 100,000 red cedar plants at the Gosford State Nursery. Regularly formed plantations necessary.
296. In certain reserves in which there are portions where the red cedar is found growing naturally, there are some fine open glades and valleys of an extent of from 5 to 20 acres upon which no trees of any particular size or value, are to be found; in many cases the soil upon such portions appears to be equivalent to that upon which the cedar luxuriates, and as these sites are well sheltered, it is proposed that the best of them should be devoted to its cultivation by the formation of plantations, in the usual artificial manner. For such purposes the trees will be utilised, which have been, and may hereafter be raised at the State Nurseries. The system of carrying out this work may be briefly stated as follows:—
297. Where it exists upon the comparatively open glades and spaces referred to, the indigenous scrubby growth will be thoroughly grubbed and removed in order that the ground may be systematically dealt with afterwards. Ground to be thoroughly cleaned and grubbed.
298. Where not naturally surrounded by impenetrable scrub, it will be necessary to fence the lands in question, in order to protect the plantations from the depredations of stock. Lands to be fenced.
299. The whole of the ground will then be thoroughly ploughed and partially subsoiled to a combined depth of about 15 inches, taking care that the subsoil is only stirred up and not turned up to the surface. It is proposed to do work of this kind at least twelve months previous to the work of planting being carried out upon it, with the view of pulverising, sweetening, and otherwise making it as suitable as possible to the young trees which as proposed should be planted out upon it. Ground to be ploughed and subsoiled.
300. At an early period of the following season, and just before planting operations are begun, the ground will be again reploughed, but in this instance only to a depth of about 4 inches, with the view chiefly to simply clear the surface of any weeds and other growths which may have come up during the previous summer. Ground to be reploughed just before planting operations.
301. The site will now be in a fit condition for planting, and I propose to establish these Cedar plantations in the following manner. Before leaving the nursery the plants which have been raised there will be selected at a fairly uniform height, and as far as can be judged of equal vitality. Selection of plants.
302. It may here be stated that these trees before leaving the nursery will have been transplanted once or twice as the case may be in order to encourage as much lateral and fibrous roots as may be attainable, so that the plants may be able at once, upon being removed into their permanent sites, have the means of establishing themselves in their permanent positions, with every chance of success. Treatment of young trees before leaving the nursery.

- Planting the young cedars. 303. It is proposed to plant the young Cedars in rows 10 feet apart, and the trees shall be put out in these at the same distance apart, and the plants in each successive row will alternate with those of the previous one.
- Other trees to be planted with the cedars. 304. In order to give the young Cedars that shelter and general protection which we find in nature is an absolute necessity for their proper growth, I propose to plant nurses amongst them with this object; these will be planted in such a way that when completed the whole of the trees in the plantation will be at equal distances of 5 feet apart all over the ground. By doing this the young Cedars will, from the branches of the nurses, be confined in their attempts to produce that undesirable lateral growth, which as I have already pointed out they are so apt to assume when standing out by themselves at wide distances apart.
- Treatment of the plantation in its early stages. 305. For two or three years after the plantations are formed, it will be necessary to dig round the trees and otherwise keep the ground clear of any other tree and scrub growth, which in such situations as are proposed to be dealt with would be sure to arise. By this operation, the soil upon the surface will be kept open and friable and materially conduce to the growth and development of the young trees.
- Management of plantations depend on character and physical conditions. 306. The future management of the plantations will of course very much depend upon the character of the soil, and the general physical conditions of each site operated upon; and to the consequent progress and health of the trees. Taking, however, an average of the conditions under which such plantations are likely to be formed, I may generalise by saying that in the course of four years the position of the Cedar trees which as may be gathered will be intended to form the permanent and ultimate crop in the plantation, will be such, that it will be necessary to carefully watch their relative positions in regard to their nurses.
- Growth of the cedars and nurses. 307. At the comparatively close distance apart, both cedars and nurses, at which they will stand, it may be presumed that under ordinary fair circumstances the respective trees will naturally begin to interlace or otherwise obstruct each others branches at a comparatively early stage of their growth. This crowding which it is of course desirable to a certain extent to encourage, must only be allowed to continue up to a certain stage, and no further; if allowed to proceed too far the results may not be conducive to the future welfare of the Cedar plants.
- Remarks on the gradual thinning of the plantation. 308. It is difficult of course to describe here the particular stage at which relief should be given to the Cedar plants, by the pruning and thinning out of the nurses; but to the practical forester it is a simple matter to judge of this by an inspection of the plantation. It is only necessary, therefore, in a report of this kind, to state, that as the Cedars progress upwards, and as their lateral branches become thoroughly checked, and their vitality driven into the formation and strength of the woody matter of their stems, the nurses must be gradually removed, in order not to retard in any way the growth of the permanent Cedar crops. It may be as well here, in order to illustrate my meaning, to explain, that once Cedar or any deciduous tree becomes in its youth trained in the way it should go, it will almost invariably continue to assume that character until maturity.
- Pruning by cutting not advisable. 309. It is not desirable to assist the upward tendency of cedar trees by pruning with the knife, as this conduces to bleeding, and the possible deterioration of the timber by "borers," to which it appears the tree is subject, and hence my object in recommending that the necessary curtailment of the lateral shoots should be done naturally by nurses in the way pointed out. In the course of a few years it will be seen, therefore, that all the nurses will be gradually thinned out, and eventually nothing will remain but the Cedars. Should—and it will no doubt happen, after the removal of the nurses—the Cedars assume a tendency to branchy growth, this will be curtailed by the closeness at which they have themselves been planted.
- Foresters must use discretion in thinning. 310. In the course of years it will no doubt be found that even the Cedars will stand too close together, and these will have to be thinned out from time to time as the plantations progress, and it will be a matter for the forester to decide upon as the circumstances of the case arise. I may say, however, that in my opinion plantations of this valuable tree could easily be formed in the manner described, if carried out upon the lines indicated.
- Trees planted as nurses to consist of indigenous and exotic trees. 311. The trees which will constitute the nurses will consist of kinds both indigenous and exotic, whose growth will be equal to, if they do not exceed that of the Cedar; and care will be taken to select for this purpose such as may, when they are being gradually removed, be utilised for some regularly commercial purpose, and thus, that their utility as nurses will be supplemented by conducing in some degree to the revenue of the Department.

SECTION XIII.

THE MURRAY RIVER FORESTS.

Introduction.

312. I recently had an opportunity of making a careful general inspection of these forests, and from personal observations, and information derived from various sources, I venture to make the following remarks in regard to their present position and future management.

A.—Their Extent, Condition, and Value.

- Murray forests extensive and valuable. 313. Of the hard-wood forests of the Colony, those lying along the banks of the River Murray are perhaps some of the most extensive and valuable of any of the kind which the State possess.
- River frontage over 500 miles. 314. These, with few intermissions, have a frontage to the northern bank of the river of over 500 miles, and are embraced chiefly in the counties of Hume, Denison, Townsend, Cadell, and Wakool.
- Nature of the trees. 315. These forests are composed chiefly of Eucalyptus rostrata, or red-gum, with occasional belts of Eucalyptus hemiphloia, or the box-gum.
- Acreage occupied by timber. 316. In all it is roughly computed that something like 300,000 acres are occupied by these timbers, and that the Eucalyptus rostrata is growing upon about two-thirds of the whole area.
- Nature of the country occupied by red and box gums. 317. The red and box gums occupy the immediate frontage to the river, the former invariably suiting itself to the lower-lying or more swampy portions of the land and which are always subject to inundations by floods, and the latter apparently favouring the more elevated stretches of the frontage country, which are not, as a rule, subject to the overflowing of the river.

318. The gum-timbered portions of the land in question extend back from the river to various depths, ranging from 3 to 8 miles in extent, according as the land lies within the influence of the river and its overflowings. Immediately behind this belt of Eucalypts the land appears to get somewhat more elevated, and the soil of a sandy and lighter character, upon which we find that the native or Murray pine (Frenela robusta) and Acacia myall anema, together with other genera of a like low and scrubby character, form the principal indigenous forest growth. The red-gum, or Eucalyptus rostrata, being, as I have already indicated, the principal and most valuable of the trees upon these reserves, it may, perhaps, be as well to indicate briefly the character of the timber, its sizes, and the uses to which it has been and may be put, before dealing with the more practical question of the future management of these forests.

Extent of timbered land from river frontage and forest growth thereon.

319. This tree grows to a height of about 120 feet, and in many instances attains a diameter at the base of from 6 to 8 feet; the timber possesses great crushing strength, and is almost unequalled for its durability for underground works.

Growth of the red-gum tree.

320. In comparison with other Eucalyptus timbers it does not, in several instances, compare so favourably as regards its lateral or tensile strength, yet for general engineering constructive works it bears a very high standard.

Strength of the red-gum timber.

321. In Victoria and South Australia the timber of this tree has been highly favoured by the Railway authorities for the purposes of sleepers and bridge timbers, and very large quantities of trees of this kind have from time to time during the last thirty years been removed from these forests to meet the requirements of the Colonies named.

Red-gum timber favoured by Railway authorities.

322. For Harbour and Jetty works they have also been largely used and are still in great request. Many thousands of piles for these purposes have been procured from our Murray River forests, and in order to show the importance and suitability of Red-Gum for such works it may be mentioned that jetty piles of from 60 to 70 feet in length have been procured from them.

Use of red-gum in harbour works.

323. Although no doubt the Government has for several years back had fairly good supervision exercised over these forests, and a fair revenue obtained from them in regard to licenses and royalty, their management in that systematic and proper manner which they undoubtedly deserve has been to a large extent overlooked, and this shall therefore be a matter demanding the careful attention of the Department.

Management of Murray River forests to be improved upon.

324. Although we are aware that much of the original timber upon these reserves has to a large extent been ruthlessly wasted, like that upon many other of the forest reserves of the Colony, it gives me much pleasure to state that much valuable timber still remains upon them for immediate use, and that it is purely a matter of careful management and judicious application to not only bring the reserves back to their former excellence, but also to exceed this in their capabilities for a permanent output of timber.

Much valuable timber upon the Murray River.

B.—Proposed treatment of these Forests.

325. These reserves are of such a large area, and their management has been so thoroughly overlooked in the past (through no neglect of the Chief Forester, but from departmental apathy), especially in regard to future permanency, that the work in connection with their practical renovation now becomes of a much more laborious character than had it been undertaken many years ago. By this remark I mean, that owing to past neglect a larger outlay is now necessitated in order to deal with the matter in a thoroughly practical manner.

Past neglect entails larger outlay at present time.

326. There is still a very considerable quantity of matured, and hence available timber for market upon these reserves, and this fact will be borne in mind in the suggestions I am now about to make in regard to their management.

Considerable quantity of matured timber available.

327. Under the present Crown Lands Act, under the provisions of which the Department is at present worked, the definitions of these reserves are to a certain extent very vague and uncertain; and until the boundaries of these are definitely settled under a schedule of a properly constituted Forest Act, working in conjunction with the said Crown Lands Act, in regard to the opening up of certain portions of them for legitimate settlement, the proper and systematic working of these reserves cannot be thoroughly gone into in such a manner as could be wished.

Indefinite position of reserves under present Crown Lands Act.

328. Looking forward, however, to the possibility of a Forest Act being passed by Parliament, it may not be premature to lay my views in regard to the matter at issue before the Government.

Possibility of a Forest Act.

329. Assuming, then, that large areas of these valuable forest lands will eventually be permanently dedicated to the Department, I suggest that something like the following system in regard to them be adopted.

System to be adopted in regard to forest lands.

330. Assuming that 300,000 acres of these forest lands, upon which there is a naturally growing crop of red-gum trees in various stages of growth, have been dedicated for forest purposes under the proposed Forest Act, I propose that this area be subdivided into carefully defined blocks, say 10,000 acres each in extent. This would then give us approximately some thirty blocks in all. These blocks should be carefully surveyed and plotted upon respective plans, and a proper valuation recorded of each in regard to the timber and the various ages and sizes of the trees then composing the crop; and it will no doubt be found that this would embrace trees of all stages, from the small seedling to the matured tree fit for marketable purposes.

Subdivision of forest lands into blocks.

331. The object in view in dividing the reserves into blocks of the areas indicated would be to simplify the means of taking stock of the marketable timber, and its periodical sale, and of dealing with the matured timber from time to time in rotation.

The object in view in dividing reserves into blocks.

332. Over such an immense area as there exists, upon which there would be found trees to a greater or less degree matured and suitable for marketable purposes, the organisation of the system in the first instance in a hard and fast line could not be carried out, for as can be seen, some of the trees upon the respective blocks would have arrived at a too advanced state of maturity before they could be dealt with, unless an unprecedented demand for timber had arisen.

Hard and fast lines cannot be carried out.

333. In course of years however, and keeping the main object of rotation in view, the matter could eventually, by proper management, be gradually dealt with in the manner desired; and in this way the work of the Department upon these valuable reserves would become as methodical as that upon a well organised farm, where a thorough system of cropping prevails. In this way the head office would be able to estimate at the beginning of each year the probable amount of timber which it could guarantee to supply from these forests, and the revenue which it might expect to receive therefrom.

Work will ultimately become methodical.

Subdivision of blocks

334. As each block or blocks became available for utilisation, it would perhaps be advisable to subdivide them into areas of from 100 to 500 acres in extent, according to the quantity and character of the timber, all the matured trees marked for sale, and a carefully prepared valuation made. According to this valuation these subdivided blocks of timber would be offered by public auction at the upset price thus arrived at, or the timber upon them placed under cutting by royalty, as the case might be considered most judicious in the interests of the State.

Stringent Conditions with purchasers.

335. Of course stringent conditions would have to be entered into with the successful purchasers in regard to the system of felling the trees, the fines which would be inflicted in case of any infringement of the agreement, the damage which might be carelessly inflicted upon the young growth of trees, and the time which would be allowed them in which to remove their timber.

System necessary to successfully work the forests.

336. I may say that it would only be by a system of the kind briefly indicated that the systematic utilisation and permanency of output of these valuable forests could be maintained, and I can only trust that the Government will see its way to adopt a system such as that which has been thus briefly, and perhaps somewhat imperfectly indicated at present.

C.—Operations already initiated with regard to these Forests.

Natural regeneration of Murray forest simple matter.

337. During my inspection of the Murray River Flat forests it was most visibly demonstrated that their renovation by natural regeneration is a very simple matter indeed.

Healthy and vigorous growth of timber.

338. Almost without exception I observed that a strong, healthy and vigorous growth of young trees had come up in all stages of growth, and that proper attention to this was a matter of the utmost importance.

Principal growth after immense floods.

339. Curiously enough, the principal growth of young trees appeared to have started some eight or ten years ago, at which time I was informed, the country was inundated by immense floods, after which the young trees came up in dense masses over nearly the whole area of the forest.

Height of the young growth.

340. This young growth has now attained heights ranging from 6 to 20 feet, and in many places presents an almost impenetrable bush.

Young trees must be helped to develop.

341. Of course under such circumstances as these it would be almost impossible to expect that these saplings would reach anything like those proportions which it is most desirable they should attain, unless some means are adopted by which a certain number of them may be allowed to properly develop themselves.

Parliamentary Vote for thinning forests made use of.

342. Recognising this fact I have to intimate to the Hon. the Colonial Secretary that—there being a vote for the purpose of thinning forests granted by Parliament, I at once made arrangements to begin the thinning of this natural growth in a systematic manner.

Necessity to work on Murray forests before floods arise.

343. In consequence of the country being almost invariably inundated by floods each year, it is necessary that work of this kind should be undertaken before the floods come down, therefore in April last I put on a squad of some sixty men with a view of beginning the thinning out and otherwise properly attending to the young growth referred to.

Work on the Murray in full operation.

344. This work is now in full operation under a careful foreman, who carried out successfully the work of a similar character for several years under myself in the State Forests of South Australia.

Will be continued till prevented by floods

345. This work will be continued until such time as it may be stopped by the overflow of the river as already referred to.

Number of young trees attended to.

346. It will no doubt be of interest to record that up to date over 1,000,000 of strong young trees have been carefully attended to in this manner, which from the attention thus paid to them will in course of time have a chance of developing themselves into trees of a marketable value, and which, had this not been done, would have grown into long and useless saplings of no immediate commercial value.

Immense area to be operated upon will take considerable time.

347. Although this work is of very great importance, and should have been begun several years ago, it will take a considerable time to accomplish it thoroughly, owing to the immense area which will have to be operated upon, still the fact of its having been started is an important one, and the results will eventuate in a very satisfactory asset to the State.

D.—Supervision of these Reserves.

Officers in charge of the Murray forests and their duties.

348. These are under the supervision of a Chief Forester for the district, who has under him three foresters and one assistant forester, the duties of the staff being to patrol the river frontage, measure the timber purchased under royalty, and to receive such licenses as are now imposed under present regulations.

Steamer in use on the Murray.

349. In order to expedite this work a steamer has recently been constructed for the Department, and placed under the management of the Chief Forester.

SECTION XIV.

PLANTING IN OUR WESTERN DISTRICTS.

Introduction.

Director-General visits Western District.

350. Having been requested by Sir Henry Parkes to make an inspection of the far western portions of the Colony, I proceeded in the early part of this year to the Darling District, as also the Barrier Silverfield, travelling via Adelaide, in order to get at the most important portions of this region expeditiously. The result of this visit was, that I discovered all timber used by the property owners and in mines was imported from other districts or abroad. As a matter of fact, hundreds of miles can be traversed by the traveller over sandy plains and ridges on which in the most favoured spots timber is scarce and of a very stunted nature; but as a rule the country is either treeless or otherwise thickly covered with dense low-lying scrub.

The scrub country.

351. This scrub country is decidedly uninteresting and monotonous, consisting of leopard-tree, mallee, mulga, belar, punty, hop bush, blue bush, and the various species of salt bush.

Edible scrub.

352. Most of the scrub bushes are edible by stock, and in many instances they are the chief stand-by of the pastoral tenants in this portion of the Colony, generally remarkable for a scanty rainfall.

Large trees near water courses.

353. It is only when in the vicinity of some large creek, or perhaps some inland lake fed by the flood waters of the Darling, that trees of large dimensions are found growing, they being chiefly the common Red-gum (Eucalyptus rostrata).

354.

354. There is an immense quantity of timber used in the Silverton and Broken Hill districts both for mining and building purposes all of which may be said to be imported. Such timber as grows on the pastoral properties is only fit for the rough and common purposes of station work, but red-gum, Colonial pine, American pine, flooring boards, beams, battens, lining boards, and all descriptions of wood for superior buildings in the shape of residences, woolsheds, &c., has to be imported and is therefore a considerable article of commerce to the merchants of the Barrier and Wilcannia districts. Immense quantity of timber used in the Barrier district.
355. Wilcannia receives its importations by river, and considerable quantities of red-gum and Colonial pine which are landed at that place come from Echuca, the Murray and Narrandera districts. Wilcannia importations by river.
356. In regard to any possibilities of an increased demand for timber in the Wilcannia district, the nature of the country around that place and the permanent nature of the Barrier field all tends to warrant the belief in the demand being one of an increasing and lasting character. An increasing demand for timber.
357. Wilcannia is but the shipping port at present of a vast and almost unknown land lying to the westward, and there are hundreds of square miles of auriferous and argentiferous country between Wilcannia, Broken Hill, and Tibooburra embracing what is known as the Albert Gold Field, which has yet to be properly developed. For years there has been more or less mining at Milparinka and Tibooburra, and of late considerable activity has been displayed on what is known as the Nuntherungie Silver Fields and at the Black Mountain Silver Mine near Gnalta. Mineral country beyond Wilcannia.
358. Besides the present demand for timber arising from mining operations there is a large demand for various classes of timber for station improvements, the district being one in which there are very extensive pastoral firms who in the face of many difficulties and serious losses from drought, persevere in making improvements in wool and shearing sheds, tanks, and wells and artesian bores. Demand for timber for station improvements.
359. Besides the demand for timber for many large stations in the district, the smaller settlers in the shape of homestead lessees are apparently on the increase, and in prospect of the railway from Cobar being continued to Broken Hill via Wilcannia, the people seem to anticipate a considerable increase in this desirable class of settlers, all of which mean increased demand and consumption of all descriptions of timber. Small settlers on the increase who require timber.
360. Timber for ordinary household purposes is not obtained within close proximity to the town of Wilcannia, the wood carters having to travel some few miles to obtain supplies, and there is now but little timber upon the reserve devoted to the purposes of a town common. Firewood not plentiful.
361. There is a continual drain upon the timber growing along the Darling caused through the necessity for firewood for the steamers navigating the river, and taking the whole aspect of this country into consideration, it is evident it is being gradually denuded of what little timber it possesses, and there is no new growth worth mentioning to provide in the future for an ever increasing demand. River steamers consume quantities of timber.
362. If this portion of the Colony is likely to progress in a proportionate ratio with that of other districts, the question of timber supply is one of considerable importance on commercial and climatic grounds, and great care should be exercised in preventing any more extensive destruction of the river fringes of timber. Question of timber supply one of importance and necessity to protect river fringes of timber.
363. I found on investigation that the cultivation of trees so far as it has been attempted by private persons and the Wilcannia Municipal authorities, had met with remarkable success. In the streets I found white cedar (Melia azederach), Silky Oak (Grevillea robusta), the Maple-leaved Plane (Platanus acerifolia), the Morton Bay fig (Ficus macrophylla), Sugar Gum (Eucalyptus corynocalyx), Pepper-tree (schinas-molle), the Aleppo pine (Pinus halepensis), Cork Elm (Ulmus suberosa), and Kurrajong (Lagunaria Patersoni), all growing luxuriantly. Wilcannia Municipality plant trees with success.
364. On economic, climatic, and commercial grounds the future prospect of tree cultivation of this western region is full of promise and without regard to these features at all, there are parts where the endeavours to preserve or grow useful timber trees seems a positive necessity to provide for some of the ordinary demands of daily life. Various grounds on which tree cultivation is necessary in the west.
365. Fruit growing so far as it has been attempted in this district and along the Darling to Wentworth has proved exceedingly successful. Grapes grow luxuriantly. Lemons, oranges, peaches and apricots show a wonderful growth. Fruit growing a success.
366. The fertility of the soil on the Darling is remarkable and it is easily cleared and made fit for tree-planting or cultivation of crops. Fertility of soil.
367. Lucerne is found to grow well, the soil being well adapted for it. Some system of irrigation has been attempted in most cases where lucerne was planted. Lucerne growing well.
368. The route to Mount Brown for some distance is a heavy sandy road on which there is considerable traffic, the mining population of Mount Brown, Milparinka, and Tibooburra, together with the owners of pastoral properties around the two latter townships drawing considerable supplies from Wilcannia. There is very little timber that is any good around those places, and if a large amount of timber is required for mining or other purposes it is imported. In the future if any railway work is projected in that direction, there is not at present any timber in that country fit for railway sleepers. Timber not plentiful in Mount Brown district.
369. The rainfall at Wilcannia each year since 1873 was as follows:—

- Director-General visits Cobar. 370. From Wilcannia I proceeded to Cobar, a journey which at the time was one of some difficulty in consequence of the flooded state of the country after heavy rains.
- Nature of soil. 371. The character of the soil around Wilcannia and on the route to Cobar is in many places of a rich chocolate loamy nature, and where station owners attempted cultivation it has met with considerable success.
- Great Cobar Copper Mine. 372. The Great Cobar Copper-mine has been idle for some time, but there is considerable activity in gold mining.
- Nymagee Mine. 373. At Nymagee also is a large Copper-mine using considerable quantities of timber.
- Firewood scarce. 374. It has been estimated that at one time when in full working order the Cobar Mining Company expended for firewood an average amount per annum of £24,700. Around Cobar and Nymagee this necessary commodity is becoming scarce.
- Pine Forest. 375. Between Nyngan and Cobar there is a considerable area of pine forest country.
- Imported timber at Broken Hill. 376. Large quantities of timber both sawn and rough used for mining and business purposes come through South Australia from Tasmania and New Zealand and America. New South Wales timber is, however, generally considered more serviceable for mining and other purposes than imported Tasmanian and New Zealand timbers.
- Official report to the Colonial Secretary. 377. The official report upon the subject submitted by me on the 4th February last to the Hon. the Colonial Secretary was as follows:—

“ Sir,

“ As requested by you, I recently inspected that portion of the Colony between Broken Hill and Cobar, with the view of forming an opinion as to whether or not trees of commercial value could be grown upon what is known as our Great Western Plains; and, although my inspection was not, owing to delays caused by the heavy rains, as extensive as I should have desired, still sufficient was seen for the present to enable me to have the honor to submit the following brief report upon the subject for your consideration.

“ With regard to the soil in the stretch of country lying between Broken Hill, Wilcannia, and Cobar, I may say that, generally speaking, it is much of a similar character throughout, and consists of a deep, rich, alluvial chocolate loam of great depth.

“ Although at present unsuitable for agricultural purposes, owing only to the scanty rainfall, the soil is highly suited for the successful growth of ordinary farming crops, especially cereals, were the rainfall greater or a supply of artificial water available for irrigation purposes.

“ Bearing in view the desire of the Corporation of Broken Hill that, if possible, the subject of tree planting should occupy our attention for the purpose of supplying the mines with timber in the neighbourhood of that town, I, accompanied by the Mayor, carefully inspected the mines, and selected about 50 acres of the catchment area of the Stephen's Creek Broken Hill Water Supply upon which, in my opinion, a trial of planting trees suitable for the requirements of the industries of the district might be carried out with every chance of permanent success.

“ The site selected is situated about 4 to 5 miles north of the Town of Broken Hill as per portion coloured red on plan attached, and I ascertained that its occupancy for the purpose of forest culture would not in any way interfere with the possible extension of the mines or its efficiency in connection with the catchment area of the proposed reservoir. Indeed, I may here remark that the success of the proposed reservoir would be very materially enhanced were a large portion of its catchment area covered with a dense crop of tree vegetation, the flow of water into it would be more gradual and become more permanent than that which may be expected off its at present bare, non-absorbent, and thus flood-producing surface.

“ Under the circumstances therefore I have the honor very strongly, to recommend that the portion of the catchment referred to should, both in the interests of the timber and water supplies for Broken Hill be proceeded with as early as possible.

“ At Wilcannia, I selected a piece of country upon what is known as ‘The Common’ which, in my opinion, might be experimented with in regard to the planting of trees. The position of this is shown in blue on the plan attached. From 50 to 100 acres could be obtained here without in any way interfering with the commonage privileges or rights of the people.

“ For the present I would recommend that the experimental planting on the Western Plains be confined to the two places indicated, and should the results upon these come up to expectations, the matter of extension and other developments of this important matter could be taken up at any future time.

“ In considering the subject of planting upon these hitherto treeless plains, I have not made the recommendations which I have now the honor to lay before you, without carefully considering the matter in all its aspects. I am aware that the rainfall at both Broken Hill and Wilcannia is not only fitful in its periods of precipitation but very uncertain in regard to its volume per annum as well. The average at these places is 16 inches and 13 inches respectively. In dealing with planting operations upon a similar character of country in South Australia both as regards soil and rainfall, we found that, owing to the uncertainty of the rainfall as just referred to, the success of the planting was not always assured during any one season, but that it, on several occasions took two and three years' careful attention and persistent application to secure the desired object of thoroughly clothing the ground with trees. Should therefore you decide to try the planting as recommended, it is just possible that a similar experience might result; I mention this in order that a possible failure during the first season may not be altogether unexpected.

“ With regard to the trees which I think would grow upon these Western Plains there are several kinds which in my opinion might be experimented with later on, but the one of all others which I consider would produce the best results on these plains is the sugar gum Eucalyptus corynocalyx.

“ This tree is endemic to South Australia only; it grows to about 150 feet in height and 6 feet diameter; its timber is of excellent quality and is largely used in the construction of the South Australian railway lines; it delights in dry climates, and has been grown by myself as high as 10 feet in one year without artificial watering, and with an annual rainfall of only 9 inches, about 250 miles north of Adelaide. I have some 40,000 trees of the species now being raised in the Gosford State Nursery, which will be available for planting out during the coming season.

“ Should

"Should the Colonial Secretary decide to begin planting at Broken Hill and Wilcannia this winter, I would advise that only 50 acres at each place be so treated this year. This would entail an expenditure of about £500.

SECTION XV.

THE PLANTING OF OUR RAILWAY RESERVES.

Introduction.

378. The planting of the Reserves, or what may perhaps be more definitely described as the vacant or unoccupied lands within the fences of the areas resumed for the construction of our railway lines, is one which I think might very advantageously be considered by the Government.

Government may plant railway reserves to advantage.

379. In the Colonies of Victoria and South Australia this matter has received in several instances a fair amount of attention, and the results have been as satisfactory as could be wished under the circumstances. In both of these Colonies the work has been carried out by their respective Forest Departments.

Victoria and South Australia already done so.

380. In Victoria the class of tree operated with has been chiefly that of the wattles of commerce, viz., Acacia pycnantha and Acacia decurrens, where belts of these trees have been raised directly from the seed, chiefly upon the lines from Melbourne to Geelong and from Geelong to Ballarat.

Wattles mostly planted in Victoria.

381. In South Australia the work has been confined chiefly to the planting of a large variety of evergreen trees and shrubs, around and in the neighbourhood of the several railway stations; especially those situated upon what are locally known as the northern and more southern lines.

Action taken by South Australia.

382. In both of these cases the results have been very satisfactory indeed, and these may, I trust, act as an incentive to similar work being carried out by the Government of this Colony.

Results satisfactory.

383. Presuming, therefore, that some definite action will be taken in regard to this matter, I refer to it generally under the following headings.

A.—The Area of land available.

It will perhaps be a matter of surprise when it is stated that there are no less than something like 60,000 acres enclosed or otherwise dedicated for railway purposes in the Colony, of which there are probably about 40,000 acres containing all sorts of soils and situations which could be in many instances devoted to the cultivation of trees and other products.

Large areas of land available and benefits derived by planting.

B.—The benefits which would arise therefrom.

1. Improved appearance of the country, especially where no trees already exist.
2. Comfort to passengers, in protecting them from dust storms and providing a cool shade in summer, and the breaking of cold winds in the winter time.
3. Running as these lines do, through the country in various directions, these plantations would, especially in the more exposed parts of the Colony, act to a large extent as shelter belts to the agricultural land adjoining.
4. Were the proper kinds of trees planted, to which we shall presently refer, the products from them would form a very considerable source of revenue.

C.—Trees suitable for Railway planting.

384. After due consideration of the subject, and from previous experience, I have come to the conclusion that the best tree to plant upon these reserves is the wattle, which produces the well-known tannic bark of commerce.

Best plant is the wattle.

385. These trees are easy of propagation, and their height would not to any great degree interfere with the general view of the country by the passengers.

Easily grown and not too high.

386. Their product would come early into market, and, comparatively speaking, the profits derived from them would in my opinion be greater per acre than those which might be obtained from any other tree growth.

Results and profits would be satisfactory.

387. The expenses attached to placing the wattle bark from these trees on the metropolitan or other markets would only be light, in consequence of the close vicinity of the plantations to the trucks.

Expense of reaching a market only slight.

388. While the Government would be reaping any profit derived from the sale of such wattle bark, the Railway Department would be receiving its freight for haulage of same.

Government reaps a benefit and railway receives freight.

D.—The system of planting proposed.

389. This, with regard to the wattles, is a simple matter and also very inexpensive. The wattles are hardy trees, and can easily be raised in plantations by simply putting the seed in the places which they are intended to occupy until arriving at maturity. As a rule they are somewhat shy of transplanting, and consequently the system of raising them in the nursery and afterwards transferring them from this to the plantation which they are intended to occupy permanently is seldom or never resorted to.

The system of planting.

390. Upon the railway reserves the putting of these unoccupied lands under a crop of wattle would be a very simple matter indeed. Briefly stated, this would simply consist of ploughing the land thoroughly to a depth of about 6 inches, taking care to see that the grassy surface was properly turned over and given a chance to rot.

Planting railway reserves an easy matter.

391. The seed would then be sown either broadcast or in rows, as the case might be, and the whole run over with a light harrow. The cost of ploughing, purchase of seed, preparation of same before planting, the sowing of it, and the harrowing in of it afterwards would not, under an average of circumstances, exceed £1 per acre.

Cost of sowing the wattle.

E.—Action already taken in regard to this matter.

392. The matter was brought before the railway authorities some time ago, and arrangements are likely to be made to begin the planting of wattle upon a large scale upon our railway reserves.

Planting railway reserves brought before the railway authorities.

393. With this object in view about half a ton of the seed of Acacia pycnantha or the broad-leaved wattle of South Australia, was procured from Adelaide some months ago. This seed is of the very finest quality and the results from it may be expected to be highly satisfactory.

Wattle seed procured from Adelaide.

Acacia pycnantha the most suitable.

394. The Acacia pycnantha produces the best mimosa bark of commerce. The tree is not indigenous to New-South Wales, and its introduction therefore to this Colony, in situations suited to its growth, will be looked upon as a matter of general interest and one of importance to the Colony at large.

SECTION XVI.

TIMBERS SUITABLE FOR ENGRAVING PURPOSES.

An abundance of timber suitable for engraving purposes.

395. There is abundance of timber in the forests of New South Wales suitable for engraving purposes, indeed it is now growing to waste everywhere, but it is difficult of access and will require a lot of careful handling and preparation before it is likely to supplant the finer qualities of imported wood-engraving timber from Turkey, Persia, and India, which have been growing scarcer and more expensive in the open markets of Europe during the last few years.

As old sources are exhausted an opening for Australian timber will occur.

396. A great market might be established in Europe for Australian timbers suitable for engraving purposes, now that the old sources are being exhausted, if someone would only take the trouble to select the most suitable timbers for the purpose and mature them. The result would undoubtedly be a national benefit.

Experiments with Australian timber.

397. Some experiments have been made in this direction during the last few years, but they have been intermittent and inconclusive, and it yet remains to be shown that our timbers may be profitably utilised on a large and comprehensive scale for this particular purpose. Morally, there is very little doubt about the matter; practically, very much still remains to be done.

Colonial timbers equal to that of Turkey and Persia.

398. A large proportion of the timbers of the Clarence, Tweed, and Richmond Rivers districts are equal in quality to those of the forests of Turkey and Persia, and even of India; but they require careful scientific treatment before being taken into the markets for comparison and competition, and this consideration has been notably absent in the past. Experience has shown that while the timbers possess all the necessary good qualities, we lack the training and experience which is necessary to mature and treat them as they do in the old world.

With care, Australian timbers will be proved suitable for wood engravers.

399. With a little care, however, it would be possible to place at least a dozen of our timbers on the European market as suitable for the best description of wood-engravers' work, with an almost certain assurance that they would all favourably compare with the best Turkish boxwood.

Experiments already made

400. In the experiments that have already been made, blocks were cut from the trunks of trees gauged at a thickness of about 2 inches, some being squared up, and others left in the block, the squares being 6 inches by 4 inches by 2 inches, and cut from each variety of timber, taken from the end of the log across the grain, while other sections of the same size were cut lengthwise with the grain, so that some judgment might be formed of its general usefulness, and after the most practical tests they were all found well adapted for engraving purposes, though the results were not in every way as satisfactory as could be desired.

Australian wood the proper colour.

401. The colour in the majority of specimens was of the yellow or cream tint necessary for work under the graving tool, but some of them were of a reddish hue and too dark to be used, except as a last resort in an emergency, and then for the most coarse and common class of wood cuts, including posters.

Grain and density of the timber.

402. The grain and density of all the samples were tolerably suitable, but the real value of the timbers in this aspect was not clearly ascertained owing to the insufficiency of the seasoning and dressing. Whatever failure there was in the experiments was due to the absence of effective scientific treatment, and this defect can only be remedied as already indicated by time and more matured experience.

Samples of wood should be seasoned with age.

403. To allow the wood to become properly seasoned, the samples should have been laid up for years, and, instead of being cut into small pieces, it would have been preferable to prepare them in short logs, from which the perfectly seasoned portions could be selected for finishing. It is most important that these principles should be observed in the future, because, until the timber has been brought into the condition which is obtained by proper seasoning, it can never be offered as a suitable engraving wood with any hope of securing a good profitable market.

Difference between imported and Australian wood.

404. One of the essential differences between the imported box-wood and the best timbers of New South Wales lies in the nature of the sap, which plays a most important part in the qualities of an engraving timber. The sap of the box-wood is oily, and not only remains in the wood after it has been seasoned, and so proves a distinct value to the engraver during the process of carving, but facilitates a proper distribution of the ink when being worked on the machine. In the New South Wales timbers, on the other hand, the sap is resinous, and while they contain any portion of the resin they are not fit for the best descriptions of engravers' work. Besides the question of the cutting surface, there is the even more important one of preserving a permanent plane. As long as any sap remains in the block there is no knowing how its various portions may be affected by temperature; marginal shrinkage, as is well known, will occasion serious inequalities of height and actual rupture even of the fibres, facts which were forcibly and practically illustrated in experimenting with the specimens already referred to. In some of the specimens this kind of thing existed to such an extent that the concentric rings of the growth of the tree showed distinctly on the printed proofs of the engravings, and in others the effect of the engravings was totally destroyed by wide cracks and shrinkages and warping and twists, defects that were the immediate results of insufficient seasoning, and in this respect it may fairly be said that the timbers did not have a fair trial.

No proper appliances for preparing the timber

405. Apart from the want of mature treatment in seasoning the timber, so as to make it fit for the engraver, there is a want of proper appliance in the Colony for preparing and surfacing and shaping the blocks, and it is desirable that all the necessary plant for seasoning and dressing the marketable timber of the Colony should be provided with as little delay as possible. There is really no necessity to send timber to Europe for experiment, its good qualities are ascertainable if not known in the Colony, and after all it would only result in a waste of time and money without in any way solving the difficulty. So far, taking all the experiments of the past as a guide, it is only fair to say that the engraving was not sufficiently fine to thoroughly test the suitability of the timbers for the finest work, and the fact is due, as already stated, to the insufficiently prepared character of the timbers used.

406. Generally speaking, although the New South Wales timbers are not equal to the box-wood generally in use for the reasons stated, they nevertheless include some varieties which experience has proved to be rather better than the American maple wood, which is being tried as a substitute for the box. All the timbers growing at random in the New South Wales forests are suitable for engraving, and five or six specimens, which are hard and firm and give a clean line, are considered by the best experts worthy of special attention. They are all capable of doing good work, and it only remains to be shown by experiment and the practical work of seasoning and preparing and dressing to command a sure and profitable market in the old world.

Australian timber and American maple.

407. Subjoined is a list of the timbers which have so far been tested:—

Timbers that have been tested

Botanical Names.	Local Names.	Localities.
Duboisia Myoporoides	Cork-wood.....	Port Jackson to the Blue Mountains, northward to the Richmond River, southward to Illawarra.
Dysoxylon Fraserianum	Rosewood	Bush forests, from Illawarra to the Tweed River
Eucalyptus Melliodora	Yellow-box	Lachlan and Gwydir Rivers, near Bathurst and New England.
Fagus Moorci	Negro-head beech ..	In the forests abutting on the Bellinger and Macleay Rivers.
Pittosporum undulatum	Mock orange	Port Jackson, Illawarra, and on to the Tweed River.
Hymenosporum flavum	A kind of orange wood	Brush forests of the Clarence and Richmond Rivers and on through the forests of the south.
Zanthoxylum brachyacanthum .	Thorny yellow satin-wood	Forests on the Clarence, Richmond, and Tweed Rivers.
Eremophila Mitchelli	Sandalwood — Rose-wood	Lachlan, Bogan, and Castlereagh Rivers.
Elæocarpus cayneus	Native olive, white-thorn, white bark.	Port Jackson, Illawarra, Twofold Bay to Tweed River.
Zieria Smithii	Tumeric	Bush forests, Twofold Bay to Hastings River, Mount Lindsay, and the Blue Mountains.
Omenila Leichhardtii	White beech.....	Brush forests of Illawarra to the Tweed River.
Tusanus acuminatus ..	Quandong.....	Lachlan, Murray, and Darling Districts.
Pomaderris apetela	Port Jackson, Nepean River, and Twofold Bay.
Acacia glauscescens	Bastard myall	Blue Mountains, Nepean, Clarence, and Richmond Rivers, and Illawarra.
Acacia dealbata	Silver-wattle, Sallon	Illawarra, Cumberland, Blue Mountains, and banks of rivers in interior.
Backhousia myrtifolia	Native or scrub myrtle	Blue Mountains, Port Jackson to the Tweed River.
Hemicyclia australasia	Brush forests, Clarence, Richmond, and Tweed Rivers.
Weinmannia rabifolia	Marara	Brush forests, Richmond and Tweed Rivers.
Eugenia, sp	Mountain brush	Richmond and Tweed Rivers.
Bosistoa sapindiformis	Union nut.....	Brush forests, Richmond and Tweed Rivers.
Callistemon lanceolatus	Water gum	From Port Jackson to the Blue Mountains, and northwards to the Tweed River.
Eugenia myrtifolia	Brush cherry	Brush forests, Illawarra to the Tweed River.
Eugenia, sp.	Lignum brush-wood saplings.	Brush forests, Manning to Tweed Rivers.
Pentaceras australis	Scrub white cedar ..	Scrub forests, Richmond River.
Olea poniculata	Marble wood	Brush forests, from the Hunter to the Clarence Rivers.
Acacia binervata	Hickory.....	Blue Mountains, Nepean, Hastings, and Clarence Rivers, southward to Illawarra.
Notelia ovata	Native olive	Brush forests, Illawarra, Cumberland, and Grose River.

SECTION XVII.

OUR TIMBER TRADE.

408. To the generality of people the study of statistics is by no means a favourite pastime; but to those who take an interest in such a pursuit it proves intensely interesting and entertaining, for there is nothing connected with the life and commercial activity of the human race that is not embraced in the work of the Statistician. Statistics are instructive and of much service in enabling us to estimate the possibilities of increase or decrease in various pursuits and enterprises.

Statistics are instructive.

409. An examination of the record of imports and exports into and from New South Wales of timber and other forest products during the year 1890 shows that the timber industry is one of very considerable importance.

Importance of the timber industry.

410. The quantity of dressed timber imported is estimated as amounting to 6,819,946 feet; value, £65,018; exported timber, the product or manufacture of this Colony, is estimated at 399,232 feet; value, £2,797; the British, foreign, or other colonial timber exported was 30,305 feet; value, £322; or a total export of 429,537 feet of dressed timber; value, £3,119.

Dressed timber.

411. Of rough timber we imported 50,333,194 feet, valued at £340,058, making a total of £405,076 expended in the importation of rough and dressed timber.

Rough timber.

- Rough timber exported. 412. We exported 20,819,829 feet of our own native timber in the rough, valued at £80,984, and of British, foreign, and other colonial timbers we exported 3,168,912 feet, valued at £18,157, making a total of 23,988,741 feet of exported rough timber—value, £99,141; or a total value of rough and dressed timber exported, £102,260.
- Firewood. 413. One circumstance worth remarking is that we imported 1,935 tons of firewood, valued at £1,570. Our exports of this useful commodity, however, amounted to 8,994 tons of New South Wales timber, valued at £2,481; and 150 tons of other timber, value £225; being a total export of firewood, 9,144 tons weight, and value £2,706.
- Wattle bark imports. 414. Next to timber, the most important item is evidently that of bark used for tanning leather, and other purposes. In this our imports were 61,220 cwt., amounting to the respectable total of £24,610
- Wattle bark exports. 415. Of New South Wales bark we exported 18,649 cwt., value £5,169; bark, the product of other Colonies, we exported to the extent of 17,125 cwt., value £5,488; or a total export trade in bark from this Colony of 35,774 cwt., valued at £10,657.
- Shooks and staves. 416. Shooks and staves were imported to the extent of 503,968 pkgs., value £5,015; on our own part, we exported 15,983 pkgs. of shooks and staves produced in the Colony, valued at £3,808; and 11,083 pkgs. from other sources, value £2,694; making a total export of 27,066 pkgs., valued at £6,502.
- Posts and rails. 417. Posts, rails, and spars, our own production, were exported to the value of £287.
- Laths and shingles. 418. 2,677,767 laths were imported, value £3,712. In exports, however, we do not appear to have any of local manufacture, the exports in this line being 599,700, the production of other sources, and valued at £746. Likewise shingles: we imported them to the number of 30,300 valued at £55, while in exports of our own production we were nil, but we apparently re-exported 24,000 shingles, value £50.
- Pitch, tar, and resin. 419. Coming to those useful articles, pitch, tar, and resin. Whilst we imported 2,897 barrels of pitch and tar, valued at £3,259, we only exported 612 barrels of New South Wales production, value £600; but we appear to have re-exported 286 barrels of imported, value £439; being a total export of 898 barrels of pitch and tar, value £1,039. In resin there was an importation of 4,331 casks, value £3,904. In exports of New South Wales resin we are nil, but 1,206 casks of resin were re-exported, valued at £1,337.
- Turpentine. 420. Of turpentine we imported 63,207 gallons, value £8,143. We exported no turpentine of local production, but re-exported 1,839 gallons, value £298.
- Noticeable features. 421. It is noticeable there is not any record of any of the following having been imported:—Cabbage-tree, posts, rails, and spars. On the other side, in exports of local production we are nil as regards charcoal, copra, corks and bungs, fibre, gum, kapok, resin, sandalwood, laths, palings, shingles, and turpentine.
- Exceedingly small exports. 422. There are other lines in which our exports of local production are exceedingly small compared to importations of the same material.
- Boats. 423. We imported boats to the number of 60, valued at £6,338; and we exported 28 boats of local manufacture, valued at £2,165, together with three boats re-exported, value £69; making a total of 31 boats exported, value £2,234.
- Charcoal and copra. 424. 227 tons of charcoal, value £777, were imported. Copra, amounting to 4,868 tons, value £52,899, was imported; 4,534 tons being re-exported, value £56,272.
- Corks and bungs. 425. Corks and bungs to the value of £17,183 were imported, of which £3,292 worth was re-exported.
- Wooden doors. 426. Of wooden doors we imported 30,821, valued at £17,269; and in exports it is recorded we exported 10 doors of local manufacture, value £12, and 627 doors of foreign manufacture, value £326.
- Fibre. 427. The fibre importations amount to 18,184 pkgs., valued at £3,095, of which 5,122 pkgs., value £353, were re-exported.
- Sashes. 428. 1,489 sashes, valued at £838, were imported; 76 sashes of colonial make were exported, value £38; and 607 sashes were re-exported, value £217.
- Gum. 429. We imported 1,102 pkgs. of gum, value £3,312, of which there was a re-exportation amounting to 839 pkgs., valued at £2,743.
- Kapok. 430. £15,995 worth of kapok was imported and £3,124 worth was re-exported.
- Oars. 431. 8,366 oars valued at £1,757 were imported; 150 of New South Wales manufacture were exported, valued at £77, and 2,702, valued at £918, were re-exported.
- Sandalwood. 432. Sandalwood, weighing 80 cwt., and value £34, was imported; the out-going being a re-export of 37 cwt., valued at £29.
- Shutters. 433. While we imported £26 worth of shutters, we exported £23 worth of colonial made shutters.
- Turnery. 434. 2,577 packages of turnery, valued at £3,744, were imported; we exported only 32 packages of New South Wales make, value £64; and 1,683 packages were re-exported, value £2,192.
- Palings. 435. Of palings we imported 114,670, valued at £932; the export of local manufacture or foreign being nil.
- Total imports and exports. 436. The total value of importations of forest products, &c., during the year mentioned in this paper amounted to £579,543, while the exports amounted to £197,851 in value; of these exports, £99,293 worth may be regarded as simply re-exports, leaving £480,250 worth of imported materials for consumption within the Colony.
- Export of articles manufactured in New South Wales. 437. The total export of articles produced or manufactured from forest products within our own borders amounted to £98,558. With what I take to be local consumption of £480,250 worth of imports and the export of £98,558, we have a total sum of £578,808 involved in the demands of our timber trade, and probably we may even add to that sum the value of re-exported materials, which gives us the grand total of £678,101.
- Figures do not represent whole of timber consumption. 438. These figures do not however represent the whole of our timber consumption or trade demands, for there is that immense consumption of indigenous timber for fuel, building, and general purposes of which we have at the immediate moment no estimate or data.
- Necessity for more attention to plantations of exotic timbers. 439. Surely this Colony, with its immense resources, should endeavour in every possible way to meet this demand for forest products, with material from our own forests of timber grown in them both of indigenous and exotic kinds; and as, however, some of the imported materials are manufactured from woods of a softer and more pliable nature than can be obtained from our indigenous trees, the necessity for more attention being given to plantations of exotic timbers is herein strongly illustrated.

SECTION XVIII.

PRICKLY PEAR DESTRUCTION.

440. The Act providing for the destruction of what is known as the prickly pear was passed on the 31st July, 1886. Prickly Pear Destruction Act.
441. At that time the Department of Forests, then designated the Forest Branch, was under the Department of Mines. Forest Branch under Department of Mines.
442. The carrying out of the provisions of the Act was thrown upon the Forest Branch, and all the Forest Rangers of that time were by Gazette notice appointed as Inspectors under the "Prickly Pear Destruction Act" of 1886. Forest Rangers appointed Inspectors.
443. Since the date referred to, the attempted eradication of the prickly pear has been carried out under the supervision of, and by the officers of the Forest Department in the respective districts. Eradication of prickly pear supervised by Forest Department.
444. Since 1887 the Government annually voted sums from £1,000 to £2,000 for the destruction of this pest, and in all £7,000 has been voted for the purpose. Amounts voted by Parliaments.
445. Of this amount, however, only £2,602 10s. 2d., has been expended in connection with the work up to date. All vote not expended.
446. It is of course impossible for me to state why the full amounts, as provided by Parliament, were not expended in their respective years. It is, however, simply a matter of record that this was not done. No reason given for votes of money not being utilised.
447. Although it was considered by the Government at the time as expedient that the matter of the eradication of the prickly pear should be placed under the jurisdiction of the Forest Branch, I am of opinion that the matter is entirely outside of our province, and should not be thrown upon our hands. Prickly pear eradication not within province of Forest Department.
448. I have therefore to recommend, as the inspection of the work in connection with the carrying out of the "Prickly Pear Destruction Act" interferes very considerably with the efficient work of the Foresters generally, that the whole working of the matter be delegated to the Agricultural Department to which it undoubtedly properly belongs. Recommendations.
449. It may perhaps be as well to state that the £9,000 allowed by Parliament for the eradication of this pest since 1887 stands against the Forest Department, and that there is no doubt this should be excluded from the total cost of the Department should such a question ever arise. Amount allowed on prickly pear account stands against Forest Department.
450. Should the Hon. the Colonial Secretary concur with this recommendation, I am prepared to make early transfer to the Agricultural Department. Director-General prepared to make transfer to Agricultural Department.
451. Of the work carried out by my Department in connection with this pest, the following is a brief statement during 1890. Brief statement.
452. Thirty-seven notices were served upon owners of private land within the meaning of the "Prickly Pear Destruction Act," requiring them to eradicate the prickly pear on their holdings. Notices served.
453. All lands upon which such notices have been served, have been frequently inspected by the Foresters (also Prickly Pear Inspectors) and their reports show that in a large number of cases the eradication of the plant has been completed, and that in the remainder of the cases this, with a few exceptions, is proceeding satisfactorily. Lands frequently inspected.
454. It will, however, be a work of some years before the plant is effectually destroyed, as there are many seeds in the ground which are germinating from time to time. Some years before plant effectually destroyed.
455. In one case a notice to a defaulter to pay the cost of eradication was forwarded for service in consequence of the work of the extermination of the pest having been necessarily performed by the Crown. Notice to defaulter.
456. Some nineteen contracts for destroying the pear on Crown lands were entered into by the Department during the year. These contracts operated upon an area of 8,330 acres, and were let at a cost of £1,588 15s. 6d. Contracts for destroying prickly pear.
457. Tenders were invited for leases under the "Prickly Pear Destruction Act" for thirty-two portions of land, embracing an area of about 10,877 acres. Sixteen of these lots of land, comprising some 4,295 acres, were let for terms varying from one and a quarter to twenty-one years, which realised a total rental of £129 14s. 7d. Two of these leases were, however, cancelled in consequence of non-payment of rent; thereby reducing the area operated upon to 3,015 acres and the rental to £28 14s. 7d. Tenders invited for leases.
458. A lease granted under the Act in 1889 was also cancelled for non-payment of rent during the year. Lease cancelled.
459. The total number of leases, including one which expired on 23rd June, 1890, numbered 44, area 16,494, producing an annual rental of £126 13s. 1d. Total leases.
460. Several areas proposed to be offered for lease under the "Prickly Pear Destruction Act" have been withheld from lease pending decision as to the administration of the Act. Several areas withheld from lease.
461. It is worthy of note that a liquid known as Cowper's scrub destroyer has in several cases been tried by the Department with apparently successful results upon the prickly pear. A scrub destroyer.

SECTION XIX.

THE ILLUSTRATED WORK UPON THE FOREST FLORA OF NEW SOUTH WALES.

462. For some years back I find that it was contemplated to bring out, under the authority of the Forest Department, a work upon the forest flora of the Colony, but until quite recently the matter has not been entered into. A work on forest flora.
463. I am, however, pleased to intimate that, with the concurrence of the Colonial Secretary, the production of the work is now being proceeded with, and that the issue of its first part will probably be laid before the public at an early date. Work now being proceeded with.
464. It will no doubt be recognised that a work of this kind is most desirable, in order not only to place our forest flora upon a permanent record, but also to be the means of instructing the rising generation in regard to the indigenous forest products of their country. Such a work most desirable.
465. Arrangements have now been fully completed for the proper production of the work by the Government Printer. The frontispiece of the book has been produced and freely distributed, along with the following advertisement pointing out the synopsis of the work:— Arrangements completed for production of work.

- “A work is now in the press entitled ‘The Forest Flora of New South Wales,’ issued by the Forest Department, under the authority of the Government. An effort will be made to illustrate and describe in a popular manner the principal trees and shrubs indigenous to the Colony.
- “The illustrations will be in colour, and show natural-sized flowering branchlets of each species, together with its fruits, barks, &c.
- “A special artist has been engaged for this purpose, and no effort will be spared to render the plates, as far as possible, faithful representations of the plants which will be dealt with.
- “The descriptive matter will be clear, comprehensive, and up to date. It will be subdivided into the following headings:—
- “Botanical names of the plants with their synonyms.
 - “Vernacular and Aboriginal—as far as obtainable—names.
 - “Territorial and general geographical distribution.
 - “Popular description.—This will include the general appearance of the plant, its suitability for economic or ornamental planting, uses of timber, bark, leaves, fruits, &c. Careful observations will also be made in regard to the principal characteristics of each plant, and specially in regard to its habitat.
 - “A purely botanical description of each plant will also be given, in order that the work may be useful for technical reference.
 - “It will be published in quarterly parts, each containing five plates, with their corresponding letterpress of descriptive matter. The price of the work will be 5s. per part to subscribers and 7s. 6d. to non-subscribers; postage extra in each case. The liability of subscribers will be limited to four consecutive parts, prepaid. It is expected that the first part will be published in June next.

SECTION XX.

INTRODUCTION OF EXOTIC TIMBER TREES.

- Indigenous timbers. 466. Our indigenous timbers are great in their variety, and are perhaps as a rule second to none in the world as regards their durability; but for general purposes they are to an extent deficient in that their specific weight militates against their use for certain constructive purposes.
- Unable to do without the timbers of Europe and America. 467. There is no doubt that however valuable our timbers may be, and that they are valuable there can be no question, I have, after careful consideration of the subject, arrived at the conclusion that the lighter weighted timbers of the Northern Hemisphere—say those of America and Northern Europe—are, and always will be, a commodity which we shall to a certain extent be unable to do without.
- Large sum expended in the purchase of timber. 468. We find that, notwithstanding the immense variety and general usefulness of our own timbers, there is annually something like £400,000 which leaves the Colony for the purchase of timber of various kinds from other countries. These are chiefly of a light character and used for house construction, house fittings, furniture, cases, and other works requiring a timber of a light nature.
- Can this money be retained in the Colony. 469. The question therefore arises, cannot this large amount of money be retained in the Colony and the supply of this useful and necessary foreign timber be obtained through some action of our Forest Department locally? My reply is that this can be done; and the proposals which I have to make in regard to this are briefly summarised as follows:—
- Variety of climate, soils, and situations. 470. The climate, soils, situations, and aspects required for the successful growth of most of the trees of the Northern Hemisphere, which supply us with the general timbers of commerce, can be found in this Colony. We have here soils of a great variety ranging from those of a sandy nature to those of a deep retentive clay, and in many instances they are composed of deep humus deposits of great richness. Besides these we have fortunately the various altitudes, up to 4,000 feet above the sea, which are requisite for the growth of the exotic timbers which it is desirable we should endeavour to produce, in order to supply local requirements.
- Present supply of imported timber samples. 471. At present the supply of these timbers from their respective countries is in a generally commercial point of view equal to our necessities; but, as is well known, the forests from which they are obtained are being gradually depleted, without in many instances steps being taken to provide for their reproduction. Hence it behoves us to look forward to, and provide for, the almost certain possibility of the supply of such timbers as those referred to, in the near future being unobtainable from their present indigenous sources.
- Timbers chiefly imported. 472. The trees which produce the timbers so largely imported to the Colony are chiefly the ash, walnut, oak, redwood, cedar, pine, fir, and elm, all of which trees can be successfully grown only in a variety of soils and climates such as those, which fortunately we possess. Looking therefore to the whole circumstances of the case and to its absolute necessity, I have to recommend that the efforts of the Department be specially directed to the institution and formation of plantations of the trees referred to.
- Imported trees do well in the Colony. 473. Most of the kinds of trees mentioned have been already introduced into the Colony, and are in single instances found doing fairly well wherever they have been planted, but in order to produce them to such an extent as would be desirable for the production of timber, so as to supply the market, they would require to be grown in masses and in such special sites and soils as are suitable for their necessities.
- Where exotic trees can be grown. 474. At present it is only necessary for me to indicate in a general way where the exotic timber trees referred to could be grown in the manner indicated. Without, therefore, committing myself to this, it will for the present be sufficient to say that these trees could, for the production of marketable timber equal to that of the kinds now imported, be successfully grown in such districts as New England, Monaro, Goulburn, Bathurst, Orange, Mudgee, and the Hawkesbury.
- Financial results. 475. Should a scheme of this kind be carried out, the financial results not only to individuals but to the Colony at large would be of immense importance; and, therefore, looking at it in a broad and comprehensive light, I consider that the matter should receive the early and serious consideration of the Government.

(REPORT FROM 1 JANUARY, 1889, TO 31 DECEMBER, 1890.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be printed, 5 August, 1891.

The Secretary of the National Park Trust to The Principal Under Secretary.

Sir,

National Park Office, No. 3, O'Connell-street,
Sydney, 31 July, 1891.

Under the instructions of the Trustees, I have the honor to forward the accompanying Report to the Colonial Secretary of the operations of the National Park Trust, from 1st January, 1889, to 31st December, 1890.

I have, &c.,

J. E. ORMISTON,

Secretary, National Park Trust.

The Trustees of the National Park to The Colonial Secretary.

Sir,

National Park Office, No. 3, O'Connell-street,
Sydney, 18 July, 1891.

The Trustees of the National Park have the honor to present you with a statement of their operations from the 1st January, 1889, to 31st December, 1890.

It is with much regret we have to record the death of the Chairman of the Trust, Sir John Robertson, K.C.M.G. The efforts of Sir John to make the National Park worthy of the country whose welfare he always had at heart, and which his whole life-work testified he loved so well, are fully known only to his co-trustees. He succeeded in procuring the dedication of the Park as a recreation ground for future generations, and the results of his action in this particular will be very practically realized in the future if the Trustees are placed by the Legislature in a position to carry out the policy which they have invariably advocated for converting the National Park of New South Wales into the most attractive place of holiday resort and healthful recreation in the Southern Hemisphere, a position which it is entitled to by reason of its magnificent and unsurpassed natural resources.

Before submitting the customary details in reference to works carried out during the period under review, others in progress, and also improvements in contemplation, the Trustees have much pleasure in adverting to the high appreciation which still continues to be manifested by the public for the beauties of the Park, as evidenced by the steady increase in the number of visitors during the years 1890 and 1891. It is hardly the province of the Trustees in a return of this character to deal with anything beyond the practical business of their Trust, but they venture to say that they have done their best with the means available to offer inducements to residents of and visitors to New South Wales to take advantage of the magnificent country retreat which lies almost at the doors of the Metropolis. Its natural beauties have been conserved, and as far as possible enhanced under the direction of skilled officials. Shooting has been strictly prohibited, and as a consequence the Park preserves now abundant with birds which are hardly to be found elsewhere, except at great distances from centres of population. Visitors to Park

The preservation of the flora of the National Park is made a distinctive feature. Visitors are not permitted to remove roots or shrubs. As a consequence wild flowers abound in great profusion, and become more conspicuous with the recurrence of the seasons, thus adding to the beauties of all parts of the Park, and making it in this particular unsurpassed by any similar locality in the Colony. Flora.

The principal works carried out during the year 1889 are as follows:—

The deepening of Port Hacking River between the dam at Audley and Swallow Rock, in order to make it navigable for steam launches and other craft of moderate draught. Deepening river below dam to Swallow Rock.

The making of a track or pathway (on the western side of the Port Hacking River) from the dam to the boundary fence near the training wall, distance $1\frac{1}{2}$ miles. Formation of track on western side of river.

Road from Loftus Junction to Loftus.	The road from Loftus Junction to Loftus was repaired, and the road between Loftus railway station and Audley has been regravelled.
Mountain road.	A portion of the mountain road leading from the dam towards the ocean, about one mile in length, has been remade.
Damage by heavy rains and flood.	Owing to the heavy floods during the year 1889, a portion of the dam at Audley was washed away, and the principal roads were greatly damaged in consequence of which heavy expenses were incurred in repairing and restoring these works to their former condition.
Improvement of land, Loftus Heights.	During the year a large area of land at Loftus Heights was sown with grass seed.
Trees.	Over 4,000 ornamental trees were planted at Loftus Heights and other parts of the park.
Buildings.	The buildings at Audley were painted and renovated.
Snagging of river.	Port Hacking River, between Audley and the locality known as the Peach Trees, was cleared of snags and otherwise improved.
Fencing boundary. Deer Park.	The boundaries common, to Mr. E. P. Simpson's land and the Park, were enclosed by a substantial fence, and the Park Trust has paid half the cost. At the Deer Park further progress has been made by underscrubbing and clearing the land, the deer at the Park improved greatly during the year.

REPORT of Work performed during the year ending 31st December, 1890.

Roads made, repaired, and maintained.	About one mile and a quarter of the new road cleared and formed, leading from the Military Encampment Ground to Kangaroo Creek. This road was specially made to afford the soldiers in camp access to the fresh water to bathe, and was largely patronised by them in the encampment of 1890. The road is now in a good state of repair.
Loftus Junction to Sutherland Road.	The whole length of the road has been reformed, ballasted, and blinded, and it is now an efficient well-made thoroughfare, largely used by the local and through travelling public on the main Illawarra Road.
Audley Road to Dam.	This road has been reconstructed and formed in a very substantial manner, leading from Audley Camp to the Dam, thereby connecting the Lady Carrington Road with the road from Loftus by a well-macadamised thoroughfare.
Waterfall Road.	The Waterfall road has been improved; several land slips have been removed, by which its width has been increased. The road throughout has been maintained in a good state of repair.
Lady Carrington Road.	The Lady Carrington Road has been widened in several places, and landslips removed after heavy rains. This road has become very popular, and it is one of the main drives through the Park. The traffic is daily increasing, and the beautiful scenery is highly appreciated by the travelling public. This road requires widening in several places, which would make it safer and more popular for vehicular traffic.
Mountain Road	Several chains of this road have been reformed, and the whole put in a thorough state of repair.
Wattamola Road.	A track has been cut, and the road in several places formed, leading from the coast track to Wattamola, a favorite fishing resort.
Deer Park, South-west Arm, and other roads.	The road leading to the South-west Arm, and the road leading to the Deer Park, have been put in good repair, and all thoroughfares and pathways throughout the park have been put into and kept in good repair.
Clearing.	Nearly three hundred acres of the land cleared and sown with grass seed, and specially prepared for the annual Easter Encampment, have been scrubbed and kept free from suckers, and this area is becoming good grass land, suitable for a recreation ground.
Flats.	Several of the good and valuable points and flats, both below and above the Dam at Audley, have been cleared and sown with grass-seed, making pleasant and convenient resorts for picnic parties, which extended convenience the visiting public much appreciate.
Recreation ground.	A large portion of the recreation ground, opposite the homestead at Audley, has been reclaimed and improved, and will be available now for picnic parties.
Clearing the deer park.	The clearing of the Deer Park has been extended—useless under-growth and trees have been cut away, thereby giving better feeding ground for the deer, which are annually increasing in numbers. This is also available for picnic parties.
River improvements below the dam.	Below the dam beacons have been placed, which greatly assist the public to navigate the intricacies of the river flats.
River improvements above the dam.	Above the dam the river has been effectually cleared of snags, and several dangerous rocks at the upper end have been blasted out, making it now safe for the pleasure-seeking public to navigate the upper part of the river without guides.
Buildings, &c.	Several new buildings have been erected for the convenience and comfort of the workmen employed on the Park, for which they pay a small rental. The public pavilion has been lined and ceiled, and the surroundings of the same improved. Such improvements are highly appreciated by the visiting public, which is shown by the gradual increased number of visitors.
Accommodation for visitors.	The necessity for increased accommodation for the largely increasing number of visitors has forced itself on the consideration of the Trustees.
Audley Dam.	The dam at Audley has been considerably widened and strengthened, and this, at present, effectually keeps back the tidal waters.
Fish liberated.	The trout, perch, and tench, liberated in the upper waters of Port Hacking, are thriving. These, the Trustees hope, in time, will fill the river and its tributaries with an abundant stock of these particular species of fish, and afford interesting sport to the public.
General.	Many minor and general improvements have been made throughout the Park, and all the roads thus far formed have been maintained and kept in good order.

A change has taken place in the official staff since the previous report which has not entailed any additional expenditure upon the Trust. Mr. William Freeman resigned his position of Secretary on account of his transfer to another position in the Public Service in the country, and Mr. J. E. Ormiston was appointed to the vacant office on 1st July, 1890.

In concluding this brief epitome of their labours, the Trustees express their thanks to the Legislature for the liberality hitherto manifested for enabling them to meet the requirements of the public in connection with the National Reserve, which they have been appointed to manage, and hope that there will, in future, be no lack of the necessary funds to enable them to perform their duties satisfactorily and carry out much needed work.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.

NEW SOUTH WALES.

PUBLIC PARKS.

(OPINIONS OF ATTORNEYS-GENERAL AND THE CROWN SOLICITOR, ON THE EXCLUSION OF THE PUBLIC FROM.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be printed, 27 January, 1892.[Laid upon the Table of the House in answer to Question No. 18 of 21 January, 1892.]

Question.

- (18.) Redfern Park:—Mr. Houghton, for Mr. Sharp, asked the Secretary for Lands,—
- (1.) Will he obtain an opinion whether the Municipal Council of Redfern, as trustees of the Redfern Park, have any power or authority under the Parks Regulation Act, or any other Act of Parliament, to close the said park at any time, and charge admission during the holding of a cricket-match, or other entertainment; or to fence off any portion of the ground for cricket or bowling-green; or to erect any building in connection therewith on the said park?
- (2.) Will he take such steps as to cause such encroachments to be removed as infringe upon the rights and liberties of the people, the said park being dedicated to the general public?

Answer.

Mr. Copeland answered,—For the information of the Honorable Member I will in a day or two lay upon the Table a number of opinions of Attorneys-General and other Crown Law officers bearing on this subject.

Mr. Attorney-General Simpson's Opinion.

It seems to me very doubtful whether the Public Parks Act, 48 Vic. No. 22 sec. 6, authorises the setting apart and enclosure of portion of this park for sports as proposed by the 6th by-law.

If it does, the previous consent of the Minister is necessary. The by-law should be amended by inserting after the word "trustees" "with the consent of the Minister for Lands."

* * * * *

26th March, 1888.

G. B. SIMPSON, A.-G.

By-law referred to as amended.

6. The trustees, with the consent of the Minister for Lands, may set apart and enclose any portion or portions of the park for the purpose of cricket, football, or any other lawful game, sport, or exhibition, and may from time to time grant to any person or persons, club, or association of clubs, upon such terms and conditions as to the said trustees (or a majority of them) may seem meet, the use of the ground to set apart, and may authorise the erection, alteration, and removal of any booths, sheds, or buildings thereon, and to make a reasonable and limited charge for admission thereto, and for the right to play thereon; but all such buildings shall be the property of the said trustees, who shall have power at any time to revoke such grant or license; and nothing in such grant or license shall limit or affect the right of entry upon or control of over the said ground by the trustees or their servants or agents.

Rushcutters' Bay Park.

Mr. Attorney-General Want's Opinion.

Exclusion of Public from Parks.

Parks generally. Is it lawful for the trustees of any public parks to set apart any portion of the park as a cricket-ground or football-ground, or race-course, or the like, and to exclude the public therefrom either altogether or unless a fee is paid for admission?

W. M. COOPER,

Surveyor of Public Parks.

I THINK that a portion of a public park can be made the subject of a temporary license granted by the trustees with the consent of the Minister. (See section 6 of 48 Vic. No. 22).

Such a license might be for the use of a club subject to such terms, charges for admission (inter alia) as the Minister might think fit to approve.
May, 1886.

J.H.W., A.-G.

Mr. Attorney-General Manning's (Sir Wm. Manning) Opinion.

I THINK the proposal of the Mayor of Sydney may be complied with under proper precautions.

The notification of the 22nd December, 1865, dedicates the Cleveland Paddock as a "reserve for public recreation," but it does not attempt to define the meaning of the terms used.

This may be done by a deed of grant to be issued in pursuance of the notice of dedication and under the authority of sec. 5 of the Crown Lands Alienation Act.

And in defining the objects of the dedication I see no reason why such purposes as the exhibition of agricultural and other products of the Colony, or of works of art, and so forth, and the erection of a building for such purposes and for any other purpose of recreation with or without instruction should not be mentioned. Nor do I see any legal obstacle to the granting of power so as to regulate the use of the building and park as may enable the council to close them, either wholly or partially during periods required for preparing for exhibitions and other recreations or to charge for admission on occasions when expense shall have been incurred in providing them. I would, however, propose that any rules and regulations which the council might make for such purposes should receive the sanction of the Governor-in-Council, and that on all extraordinary occasions of closing, and all cases in which it may be proposed to charge for admission to the park, the approval of the Secretary for Lands for the time being should be obtained.

27th July, 1869.

W.M.M., A.-G.

The Crown Solicitor to The Under Secretary for Lands.

Sir,

Crown Solicitor's Office, Sydney, 27 January, 1891.

I have the honor to return herewith the papers noted as per margin, respecting Victoria Park referred to this Department by the direction of Minister for Lands for my opinion regarding the question at issue between the trustees and citizens and how to advise thereon as follows:—

The Victoria Park was dedicated pursuant to the "Public Parks Act of 1854" for the public recreation, health, and enjoyment of the inhabitants of the City of Sydney, by Lord Belmore on 12th July, 1870, and in the same proclamation certain persons and their successors were appointed trustees as a body corporate under the name of "the trustees of Victoria Park."

On passing the "Public Parks Act of 31st October, 1884," the Victoria Park became subject to the provisions of that Act in substitution for those contained in the "Public Parks Act of 1854."

On 11th August, 1887, Victoria Park was proclaimed a public park within the meaning of the "Public Parks Act of 1884," to be known by the name of Victoria Park.

On the 11th October, 1887, the then existing trustees of the park were re-appointed under the name style and title of the trustees of Victoria Park.

On the 29th November, 1888, by-laws pursuant to the 9th section of the Act were made, approved of by the Attorney-General, and passed by the Governor with the advice of the Executive Council and duly gazetted. These by-laws are still in force. It accordingly follows that the trustees of the park are subject to the provisions contained in the "Public Parks Act of 1884," under section 6 of which Act it is provided that the trustees shall not be capable in any way of alienating or disposing of the park land or any part thereof, but may with the consent of the Minister for Lands lease or grant grazing, or other temporary licenses to occupy or use any portion of such lands for such purposes, on such terms, and subject to such conditions as he may approve.

It is not disputed by the trustees that they have no power whatever to make any arrangement such as has been entered into with the trustees of the Newtown Bowling Club without obtaining the previous consent of the Minister and his approval of the purposes, terms, and conditions of such letting, and this consent the trustees now ask the Minister to give.

I am clearly of opinion that the Minister has no power to consent to, or approve of a license or letting such as that contemplated by the resolutions of the trustees of the park passed on the 13th October, 1890, under which the trustees proposed to grant the request of the Bowling Club for permission to use a portion of the park as a bowling-green subject (inter alia) to the following condition, "That such permission may be withdrawn at any time, and that without compensation."

It is clear that if the Minister was to approve of such a condition he would be depriving himself and his successors in office for all time of the power to control the temporary occupation of this portion of the park without obtaining the previous concurrence of the trustees.

I am not called upon to advise whether the existing by-laws are ultra vires or not, but I should state that similar by-laws appear to have been ratified and approved of by several of the Crown Law officers, including Mr. Justice Windeyer, Mr. Justice Foster, and, I think, the present Attorney-General.

I am inclined to think that (if the by-laws are valid) the trustees would have power under such by-laws to rail off a space for the bowling-green, and to exclude the public from entering it except through gates, and to confine them to the path or paths (if any) provided within such enclosure in accordance with the spirit of the 9th section of the Act which provides that by-laws may be made for the protection, not only of the shrubs and trees, but also of herbage growing on the land, and for regulating the use and enjoyment of such land.

I

Prince Alfred Park.

I also think that under the 8th by-law, if any person were to interfere with the railings now being put up by the trustees, or attempt to destroy the turf (if any) in course of being laid down for the bowling-green, or obstruct the workmen in any way in carrying out the instructions of the trustees, such person would be liable to a fine of £5 or not less than £1, and could forthwith be removed from the park.

Under any circumstances it is perfectly clear that the trustees (even though they have power thus to make and rail in and provide a bowling-green) have no power to reserve it exclusively for any club, or section or portion of the public, and whatever rights in respect of it are granted to any one member of the public must be equally open to all.

Assuming the trustees determined to rail in and construct such a bowling-green, it would, of course, be lawful for the Minister from time to time, for the purposes, on the terms and subject to such conditions as he may approve of, to consent to a temporary license for the use and occupation of such enclosure or bowling-green, for example, as on the occasion of an intercolonial cricket, bowling, or tennis match, but the license could only be granted for a temporary occupation, and should in any case be liable to be determined immediately at the instance of the Minister, without any intermediate consent on the part of the trustees, and without any liability for compensation.

It will, of course, be understood that I am now advising the Minister, and not the trustees, in thus pointing out to him, as representing the public, that the trustees may have the power in the way I have indicated to construct a bowling-green, but as they may have such a power under the Act and by-laws to which I have referred, it would be dangerous on the part of the public to attempt to interfere with the trustees in carrying out the terms of the by-laws, as by so doing they would possibly subject themselves to the damages and penalties thereby provided.

I have, &c.,
JOHN WILLIAMS,
Crown Solicitor.

THE BRUSH RESERVE, WINGHAM.

No. 1.

The District Surveyor, Maitland, to The Under Secretary for Lands.

Re Extension of Reserve, Town of Wingham.

Sir,

2 March, 1887.

Referring to your instruction, dated the 18th August last, with respect to an application for an extension of the recreation reserve at Wingham, I have now to report that on a recent visit to that village I made inquiries into the matter, and found that the areas referred to are those tinted pink on the enclosed tracing marked Ms. 86-14,368. They are valuable, inasmuch as that they are covered with dense jungle, and are representative of what must have been the condition of the rich lands along the bank of the river before they were cleared for cultivation.

I must say that I quite agree with those lovers of nature who think that areas such as these may well be retained, and if some steps are not now taken to do so, in future years specimens of this luxuriant indigenous growth will be unknown in accessible places.

The object in view is to have these lands so protected as to prevent the brush now growing thereon from being cut down and carried away. I would therefore recommend that they be proclaimed forest reserves, and be exempted from the operation of ordinary timber licenses, and that the Police Department be requested to keep them under surveillance and prevent acts of vandalism.

I would not recommend the permanent dedication at present, for if the shallows in the river be removed by dredging, and Wingham becomes the head of navigation, some portions of the reserves will, I think, be absorbed in connection with the necessary wharfage accommodation that will then be required.

I have, &c.,

J. WITTER ALLWORTH,

District Surveyor.

Recommendation submitted.—R.H.D., 8/3/87. S.F.—C.O., 15/3/87. District Surveyor's recommendation may be acted on.—T.G., 5/4/87.

No. 4.

The Mayor of Wingham to The Secretary for Lands.

The Hon. The Minister for Lands,—

Municipal District of Wingham,

Sir,

Council Chambers, 17 December, 1890.

I am requested by my Council to most respectfully request that you will revoke the Forest Reserve sections 26, 27, 28, 29, of the town of Wingham, and cause those portions of land to be vested in the Council of this Municipality as a reserve for public gardens and bathing-place. If so dedicated, I can assure you that the Council will use every effort to make the place healthy, beautiful, and useful to the public.

Trusting that you will meet the wishes of the Council and the inhabitants in this respect,—

I am, &c.,

HENRY LAMBERT,

Mayor.

The District Surveyor, Maitland, for report.—J.O.D., B.C., Lands, 22/12/90. Mayor informed, 22/12/90. Replied to by my report of the 6th March, No. 91-83.—J. WITTER ALLWORTH, District Surveyor.

No. 5.

Mr. W. Allen to Mr. District-Surveyor Allworth.

Dear Sir,

Wingham, 18 December, 1890.

There is a movement on the part of the Municipal Council of Wingham to cut up that part of the Wingham Brush adjoining the recreation reserve, an act of spite on their part, and against the desire of the intelligent part of the inhabitants. Would it be asking too great a favour, if not interfering with your official duties, to recommend that no action shall be taken until reported on by Mr. E. Brown.

It has been placed under the supervision of the forest ranger, with whom I am sure you will agree, that it would be the action of a Goth to destroy it, and an injury to the beauty of Wingham. If you can in any way aid in its preservation, you will be conferring a great favour, not only on myself, but on the intelligent part of Wingham.

Wishing you the compliments of the season,—

Believe me, &c.,

W. ALLEN.

No. 6.

Messrs. W. Allen and others to The Secretary for Lands.

To the Honorable the Minister for Lands,—

Wingham, 19 December, 1890.

We respectfully request that the application of the Municipal Council, Wingham, to have the reserves adjoining the recreation reserve and on the north side by Isabella-street vested in them, be refused, as we have every reason to believe that it is the intention of the Council to have the ornamental timber growing thereon destroyed; and we would also ask that before the Government makes any decision, that the report of the forest ranger be obtained, and that Mr. Ednie Brown, Conservator of Forests, be sent to inspect the timber growing thereon.

We have, &c.,

WILLIAM ALLEN.

Messrs. J. H. Young and W. H. Vivian, M's.P., to The Secretary for Lands.

Sir,

Sydney, 9th January, 1891.
We have the honor to enclose herewith a letter addressed to us by G. S. Hill, Esq., of Bungay, near Wingham, in which he asks us to induce you to send the Director of Forests to that place before deciding on the question of placing under the control of the Municipal Council certain reserves which they have applied for. Mr. Hill is a gentleman whose opinions are entitled to much consideration, and represents no doubt the opinions of many others.

Yours, &c.,

J. H. YOUNG.
W. H. VIVIAN.

The District Surveyor, Maitland, in connection with previous papers.—J.O.D., B.C. Lands, 20/1/91.
Messrs. Young and Vivian, M's.P., informed, 20/1/91. Replied to by District Surveyor Allworth's report, No. 91-83 of 6th April.

[Enclosure.]

Messrs. Young and Vivian, M's.L.A.

Gentlemen,

Bungay, 18 December, 1890.
I hear that the Municipal Council is asking the Government to grant them the water reserves at Wingham, for the purpose of forming botanic gardens, I hope the Government will do nothing in the matter until they get a report from the forest ranger on the matter, and also to send up Mr. Ednie-Brown, Conservator of Forests, to inquire into the application. I know the subject is a delicate one for you, and I would not have troubled you with this letter unless I knew positively that it is the intention of a portion of the Council to destroy the brush, and I cannot stand idly by and see one of nature's beautiful spots destroyed by ignorant and prejudiced men; and destroyed it will be unless the Government keeps it out of the hands of the Council. A portion of it has already been destroyed by the Council opening a road which was not required, and is used by no one. The fact that the Council is applying to have the Municipal area reduced on account of not having sufficient money to expend on the roads, is proof sufficient that they have no money to expend in forming botanic gardens. I sincerely trust you will do your best to have Mr. Ednie-Brown sent up to inspect it. For the trees, there once destroyed can never be replaced, you may think that no one would be so foolish as to destroy the greatest charm Wingham has, but there are people who would root out everything to gain their own ends.

I am, &c.,

GEORGE S. HILL.

No. 8.

The Mayor of Wingham to The Secretary for Lands.

Sir,

Wingham, 24 January, 1891.
With reference to letter from Department of Lands, dated 20th January, 1891, No. 91-120, and addressed to the Members for the district, acknowledging receipt of letter from them, on behalf of Mr. G. S. Hill, on the subject of botanic gardens for Wingham, I beg most respectfully to inform you that Mr. Hill's interference in this matter is regarded as an impertinence by a large majority of ratepayers, as Mr. Hill is neither a ratepayer nor a resident of the Municipal District of Wingham, and so far as I know has no stake or interest in the town whatever.

Trusting that the Council's request asking you to vest in the Council those sections of the town now known as a forest reserve, will receive favour after consideration.

I am, &c.,

HENRY LAMBERT,

Mayor.

The Mayor of Wingham to The Secretary for Lands.

Sir,

Wingham, 27 February, 1891.
I beg to request that you will cause to be forwarded to me for publication in the local press, copies of all correspondence connected with the request made by my Council, asking that the reserve known as Wingham Brush should be vested in the Council for botanical gardens, &c.

I respectfully submit that this should be done in justice to the Council, who have been working openly and above board in the matter against persons using very different tactics.

I beg to take this opportunity of repeating the statement that the Council have no intention whatever of destroying the brush in any way, but are anxious to secure the place to the inhabitants for all time. Moreover, the persons protesting are unable to put forth any proof whatever to the contrary.

Feeling sure the matter will be fairly dealt with by you.

I have, &c.,

HENRY LAMBERT,

Mayor.

P.S.—I may add that at a meeting attended by about 200 residents last night, a resolution was carried, asking you to grant the Council's request, only one person voting against the motion.

HENRY LAMBERT.

No. 10.

Mr. J. Andrews to The Secretary for Lands.

Sir,

Woodside, 3 March, 1891.
As chairman of a meeting attended by about 200 residents in Wingham, 26th February last, I am requested by the Mayor of Wingham to state a resolution was carried, only one being against it, to have have the forest reserve, known as the Wingham Brush, vested in the Council for botanical gardens and public baths.

Trusting that you will favourably consider the above statements and cause the reserve to be so vested.

I have, &c.,

JOSEPH ANDREWS.

The previous papers are at present with the District Surveyor for report, and it does not appear expedient to recall them to deal with the request 91-754 Ms. Submitted; the writer thereof and Mr. Andrews be informed of a reference to the surveys, and that officer asked to expedite action. Remind D.S. and inform writer of this letter and 754 (printed forms only).—J.O.D., 12/3/91.

No. 11.

Mr. District-Surveyor Allworth to The Under Secretary for Lands.

Sir,

East Maitland, 6 April, 1891.

Adverting to your B.C. memorandum, endorsed on Misc. 90-18,899, requesting a report from me on the above-quoted matter, I have to state that I have visited the locality, gone into the matter with the Mayor and Council, also heard the arguments advanced by those gentlemen holding views adverse to those of the Council, and have obtained all information I could get from other sources. Enclosed will be found a diagram upon which the areas under reference are tinted pink. Originally, two of those areas were shown upon the town map of Wingham as GR. The third section, No. 27, was notified for wharf, &c., 26th September, 1881.

These areas were by my report (a copy of which is enclosed for more ready reference), dated the 2nd March, 1887, a date prior to the constitution of the Wingham Municipal District, recommended to be proclaimed forest reserves, and to be exempted from the operations of wood-cutters' or timber-cutters' licenses.*

In that report I set forth the reasons upon which I based my recommendations, and hardly consider that they need now be recapitulated, or emphasis laid upon the desirableness of retaining intact this splendid specimen of indigenous growth. It is resorted to by visitors to the district, and in that way may be credited with more than local interest. If improved by removal of the dead timber, weeds, and the smaller nettles, the clearing and formation of a few paths, its beauties could be more easily viewed, and would, I think, be even better appreciated. Even from a botanical point of view it should be worth retaining. So rare are specimens of the original vegetation that once covered the rich alluvial flats of the coastal rivers in the earlier settled districts becoming that I cannot now point to another brush in an accessible position within this Land Board District that can compare with the "Wingham Brush." I enclose four photographs, which may give some idea of the beauty it possesses. I would point out that it is represented that the existence of the natural timber, &c., along the margin of the river, between Isabella and Farquhar Streets, is of value in flood times as affording protection to the public wharf.

2. From what I could learn, the present state of matters is that it is desired that the present temporary reservations should be converted into permanent dedications, one party wishing that they should be vested in the Council of the Municipal District of Wingham as trustees, the other party holding that the trustees should be independent of the Council, as they consider that they have sufficient ground for the belief that if vested in the Council as a botanic garden and public bathing-place steps might be taken to clear the land and damage the undergrowth and indigenous timber, which, if once done, could not again be restored to its pristine beauty. They also point to the action of the Council in clearing that part of Combined-street south between Rowley-street and the north-west corner of the church land, and the further proposal to clear that part of Rowley-street lying between Farquhar and Isabella Streets.

At present vessels load timber at the point lettered B on the tracing, and as the timber trade is one of some importance an area for the convenience of its loading and approaches thereto from both Farquhar and Isabella Streets should, I consider, be left; the exact width of the approaches and the extent required for wharf might be left to the judgment of the surveyor marking the reserves on the ground. With regard to the triangular area ER 4,208, the greater part of it has been cleared of undergrowth and only one or two trees now exist. I therefore see no reason for its further retention, and consider that it might be set apart as a recreation reserve.

After giving the whole surroundings of this matter my best consideration, I would now recommend—

- (1.) That the design of the town of Wingham should be amended by the closure of that part of Rowley-street lying between Farquhar and Isabella Streets.
- (2.) That the portion of Rowley-street so closed and the areas at present contained within reserves 4,225 and 4,226 be dedicated, under the 104th section of the "Crown Lands Act of 1884," for the preservation and growth of timber.
- (3.) That reserve 4,208, section 29, be dedicated as a recreation reserve.

I am of opinion that the real object in view in this matter would be met by carrying out my recommendations. With reference to the trustees, it appears to me that the personnel is not of so much importance as that the conditions of trust should be set forth in clear and comprehensive terms, so that there can be no doubt as to their import or departure from them.

I enclose herewith descriptions, &c., for the amendment of the design of the town and the revocation of reserves No. 4,208, 4,225, and 4,226, as well as that for wharf, &c., notified 26th September, 1881, also the two G.R.'s.

Should you approve of my recommendations, the preliminary notices might at once appear, and upon my being informed of your decision any field action necessary could be at once put in hand.

I have, &c.,

J. WITTER ALLWORTH,

District Surveyor.

Wingham Brush.—By "Observer."

THE question relating to the Wingham Brush asked of our senior member last Saturday was perhaps the only matter that roused the meeting. Large as the audience was, little or no enthusiasm was shown by them, except when giving three ringing cheers for Mr. Vivian at the opening of the proceedings.

Probably the aldermanic and mayoral election had exhausted the energies of the citizens, which could not be at once recuperated, even by the visit of our members.

But a spark of real interest shot forth when the Brush and its proper custodians came to be considered, and it must be said that Mr. Young answered the question with more vigour than he had shown in any part of his interesting speech.

The question was hardly one that should have been put, for on any local matter our Parliamentary representative has to exercise caution in giving an opinion, lest he seem to take sides. The question was one that affected only a few of his constituents, and he might therefore feel excused if on so burning a parochial question as the Brush has been, and threatens to be, he answered it with statesmanlike caution and politic reserve.

1. Mr. Young, however, did not conceal his opinions on two important points. He stated with great definiteness that the proper guardians of all areas within a municipal boundary are the councils elected by the people. This he laid down as a principle which no sane man can deny. The Council stand in law, and in fact, as the representatives of the people, recognised by the citizens as worthy of their confidence. In consigning reserves and such like to the care of the Council it is practically handing them over to the care of the ratepayers. The citizens are the ultimate court of appeal, it is their interests that are to be conserved, and the Council is the lawful, the natural guardians of all that concerns the interests, the well-being, the improvement, the beautifying of the town. No one, except some antiquated fogey with a bee in his bonnet, can deny the validity of this principle. It is a first principle—a municipal axiom to be accepted without debate by all rational citizens. So clear has this point become to statesmen, that it is probable a Bill will shortly be introduced to Parliament giving power to Municipal Councils to take over all reserves within the area of the town.

2. The second point in Mr. Young's answer was the expression of his belief that no man, whether in the Council or out of it, would dream of cutting down the Brush. In this belief Mr. Young is undoubtedly correct.

I have been interested in the Wingham Brush for several years, and I never yet heard a good citizen even suggest the destruction of the Brush, except perhaps in jest. I confess that the Mayor rather startled me the other day when, in the presence of Messrs. Young and Vivian, he stated his desire was to clear out the Brush so as to let the town get the benefit of the north-east wind. But that was only one of his little jokes. Any one who knows Mr. Lambert knows that no one can surpass him in the love of the beautiful and the picturesque. To regard the Mayor as some Goth, with the bump of destruction abnormally developed, who is only waiting his opportunity to exercise his vandal instincts, and root out the beauty spots of the town is, I am certain, nothing short of a libel on the mental sanity and moral calibre of that respected official. Mr. Young in stating his conviction that no true citizen could possibly propose such an act of vandalism as the cutting down of the Brush, only said what any candid and intelligent man must know to be true. If such a thing were proposed the town would take fire at once. There are hundreds of people in the town and district, and even out of the district, who would rise as one man, and hurl from his seat the Councillor who dared to suggest that this lovely bit of aboriginal and pristine nature should be converted into corn-fields, lucerne patches, or cabbage gardens. Such an idea, I am convinced, is not entertained by a single member of the present Council, nor indeed by any citizen in his right mind.

It is true that not so long ago—ten years or so—two, at least, of those who are now so noisily posing as preservers of the Brush were not always so clamorously eager to do so. History records the fact that one of the present batch of blustering patriots (?) coolly proposed to cut down the Brush, and sell it for a maize paddock. Another suggested cutting the Brush up into allotments, and giving them to the few citizens Wingham then possessed. If it had not been for the strenuous exertions of a few who were resolved at all hazards to preserve the Brush as the people's inheritance, it would have been destroyed years ago.

And now the gross utilitarians who were then ready to make merchandise of the picturesque, and sell the birthright of the people for a mess of pottage, are trying to pose as patriots, and play the role of patrons of the aesthetic.

3. The necessity of the Council securing the Brush as a botanic garden and recreation ground for the town is apparent to all who are not blinded by prejudice. The insecure tenure of the Brush ought to fill every citizen with alarm, and they ought not to rest till the title deeds of the reserve are lying safe in the archives of the municipality. Are the citizens aware that at present the beautiful paradise is merely a forest reserve under the control of a Government official? Are they aware that at any moment the fiat may come forth from Government House, cut it down? Do they know that this beauty spot may at any moment be sold by a Government auctioneer? It should be understood clearly that this is the exact position of the Brush. It is under Government control, and at the nod of a Crown Minister it may be sold, cut down, or transformed into wharves, piggeries, potato furrows, and pumpkin patches. The thanks of the citizens are due to the Mayor and Council for their endeavours to get the Brush placed on a more secure footing, and they should not cease their efforts till they get the title to a bit of land which one day will be Wingham's glory, when the iron horse brings its freight of visitors to the town.

4. At the present moment the discussion is about that part of the Brush which is a forest reserve, viz., from Rowley-street downwards. What right the trustees of the upper portion of the reserve have to interfere with the people and their representatives is not very obvious. Let the trustees mind their own business, and leave the Council to attend to theirs. It is clearly the duty of the Council to secure the lower part of the reserve to the town. Indeed, the Council would be wanting in their duty if they did not put forth every effort to get the Brush away from Government control, and placed securely under their control as the representatives of the people. The attitude of the trustees in opposing the efforts of the Council to secure the Brush as the legal possession of the town is one that must be resented by every intelligent and patriotic citizen. If the trustees of the upper reserve would devote a little more attention to their part, and leave the Council to work the lower portion, they would occupy a more dignified position than in acting the part of obstructionists to the natural guardians of the ratepayers. But let me assure them that their efforts to block the Council, and prevent the citizens getting legal hold of the Brush is futile, and will bring upon them the contempt and just anger of the ratepayers.

Do these trustees mean to insinuate that they are better qualified to control the Brush than the legitimate and chosen men of the people? Have they the presumption to suppose for one moment that they should be preferred before the elected officials of the Municipality? Such an idea on their part originates only in the vanity of their minds, and in the emptiness of their understandings. What guarantee have the trustees given that they, and they only, are worthy of so honourable an office. What proofs, either in the past or present, have any of the trustees given of superiority to the Council? The answer is none. On the contrary, there is evidence to show that at least two of the trustees are not to be relied on, while on other grounds the citizens could see with perfect sang-froid, the whole of the trustees supplanted by the legal guardians of the town—the Municipal Council. The people will never be satisfied nor feel secure till the control of every reserve is placed in the hands of the Council, and the title deeds lodged in the strong-box of the Commercial Bank.

5. In demanding that the Brush and all reserves within the municipal area shall be placed under the control of the Council it should be noted that not one farthing of the ratepayers' taxes can be spent in making a botanic garden and recreation ground. The fact that the Council have petitioned to get control of the Brush for the purpose of a botanic garden, makes certain two points on which the minds of many of the citizens may not be very clear. First, municipal rates cannot by law be expended on botanic gardens. The money required to make the Brush a botanic garden would come from two sources, viz., from private subscription and Government grants. I am sure there is not a citizen who would not give something to run a neat fence round the Brush. Get the dead logs cleared out, prune out the rank undergrowth, and get paths and seats made. Secondly, the petition of the Council makes it manifest that they have no intention of cutting down the Brush. For if the Brush is granted for a botanic garden, then to cut down the trees would be a breach of the law, and would render render the Council liable to prosecution. It would be one of the conditions attached to the granting of the Brush as a botanic garden that the rare and beautiful trees and the wonderful shrubbery should remain intact. The Council in asking for a botanic garden have tied their hands, and have given a legal pledge that they will maintain the Brush in all its natural and rugged beauty; simply pruning it, so as to render it more accessible and more fit for the purposes of recreation to the citizens.

The cry that has been raised about the Mayor and Council wishing to destroy the Brush is as false as it is senseless. Only a fanatic, or one animated by personal feeling, could harbour the idea or ventilate the absurdity. Some of the trustees ought to be ashamed of themselves. The delegates who visited Woodside and Marlee did their level best to poison the minds of the voters against the Mayor and his supporters in the Council. But their misrepresentations of the Mayor's intentions towards the Brush were of no avail. The electors saw in plain black and white that the Council wanted a botanical garden, and they had sufficient knowledge of the law to be sure that under such a heading the Brush could not be destroyed. The electors did their duty at the poll, and renewed their confidence in the Aldermen and Mayor. Mr. Lambert and his supporters in the Council are pledged to secure the Brush as the legal possession of the town. In their efforts to reach this result they have the support of every well-disposed and rational citizen.

It is a pity this subject of the Brush has been the occasion of so much heat and party-feeling. The matter ought to be discussed calmly and in a judicial temper. No good ever comes of such division as I fear has been fostered by persons moved by unkindly feelings. The subject is too important, too deeply identified with the vital interests of the community, to be made a mere party cry. It is the duty of all interested in this question to consider it in a patriotic spirit.

Let the trustees of the upper reserve meet the Council in a friendly spirit, and I feel sure the Council will not be behind in responding. Let the trustees withdraw all insinuations and accusations against the sincerity of the Council. Let them believe that the Wingham Brush is as sacred in the eyes of the Council as it is to them. If the trustees come forward in that frame of mind it will do much to allay the feelings that have unfortunately been awakened, and prepare the way for a happy and righteous solution of the question.

Summing up this paper, I would ask my fellow-citizens to consider the following points:—

1st.—The natural guardians of a town with all its reserves are the Municipal Council.

2nd.—The Wingham Brush is at present in an insecure position, being a Government forest reserve. The Council wisely wish control of it as the legal possession of the town.

3rd.—The Council want the brush as a botanical garden and recreation ground; under that title the trees and shrubs must be left in their natural state. The Council cannot even transform it into a flower garden, far less into a vegetable garden.

4th.—The municipal rates cannot be expended on a botanic garden. Government grants and private subscriptions are the sources of revenue; but the money question is an after-consideration.

5th.—The whole of the reserves should be placed under the control of the Council. At present the lower portion is under Government, and the upper under trustees. The citizens should keep it before them as part of their policy to bring all properties and reserves, &c., under the control of the Council, the proper guardians.

[Extract from Wingham Chronicle, 28th February, 1891.]

THE WINGHAM BRUSH.

A MEETING to consider the Brush question was held at the School of Arts on Thursday last. Mr. Joseph Andrews, J.P., occupied the chair, and there was a large attendance, the hall being quite full.

Mr. E. Ryc moved, "That the Minister for Lands be requested, through the chairman of this meeting, to vest in the Council the forest reserve, known as the Wingham Brush, for botanical gardens and public baths." In a speech of considerable length the mover went into the whole question, and showed clearly that the Council were the proper custodians of the reserve. The trustees in opposing the Council were opposing the ratepayers. The present position of the Brush was not satisfactory, for at any moment the Government could sell it. He ridiculed the idea of the Council wanting to cut down the Brush. That was a cry raised for the purpose of frightening the citizens, and turning them against their representatives. Very probably a Bill would be passed soon to vest all reserves in Municipal Councils. The motion was seconded by J. J. Herkes, who fully endorsed the remarks of the previous speaker.

Mr. H. Lambert, the Mayor, was the next speaker. He referred to the action of the trustees, and in particular to a letter sent by Mr. G. Hill to the members, in which the Council were spoken of as a "set of prejudiced and ignorant men." He did not think the conduct of Mr. Hill that of a gentleman. He had not come forward in fair fight, but had gone behind their backs. That was cowardly and unmanly. He thought the bulk of the Council quite equal to Mr. Hill in intelligence. Mr. Lambert went on to speak of the petition got up by the trustees. He was surprised by some of the names on it, notably, Mr. Colley and the Rev. Anson Smith. The trustees were fighting a losing battle, for the Council were determined to have the Brush as a perpetual inheritance of the people. He hoped the ratepayers to-night would endorse the labours and efforts of the Council.

The Rev. W. Anson Smith said he wished to say a word of explanation. He signed the trustees' petition at the request of Mr. Allen, a gentleman whose age and long residence entitled him to respect. Mr. Allen had represented to him that the Brush was in immediate danger of being cut down, and putting it under trustees was the only way to save it. He had always been a friend of the Brush, and a few years ago, when a suggestion was made to cut it down, he broke out into poetry. He was opposed to the destruction of the Brush, and under the idea that the Council had resolved on cutting it he had signed his name; but he was now convinced that the representations of Mr. Allen were misrepresentations. Mr. Allen had exaggerated the matter to him. He had faith in the Council, and thought them the natural guardians of all these public areas within the boundaries. He did not fear for the Brush, for as a botanical garden its natural beauties would be preserved. The present insecure tenure made it imperative on the Council to secure it to the town.

Alderman Pollock thought the trustees had shown great narrowness of mind. It had been said that the Council were going to cut down the Brush, because they had opened out Rowley-street. That was poor reasoning. The streets belonged to the Council, and they had a right to open them. He found himself boycotted by the trustees, whose heads he considered were no bigger than a hen's. The trustees said that the fig-trees would die if the undergrowth were cut down, but that showed how little they knew about trees.

Alderman Rye would not have spoken had it not been for the insult cast on the Council by Mr. Hill in the letter he had sent to the members. He thought it was the duty of the ratepayers to resent it as an insult to themselves.

Alderman Fotheringham spoke very strongly about the misrepresentation to which the Council had been subjected in reference to this matter, and about the double-dealing of some of the trustees. One of them had distinctly told him that he was remaining neutral in the matter, but it now transpires that he had been working in the dark with the others. He spoke also of the gross insult to the Council contained in a letter from Mr. Hill to the members. He thought that the members of the Council would compare with Mr. Hill for intelligence.

Mr. A. Herkes denied the statements attributed to him, and claimed never to have uttered an untruth in his life.

Mr. Hawke denied that Alderman Cochrane ever supported the transfer of the reserves to the Council; although he, with a great many others, years ago, did wish to have the Brush transformed into lucerne patches.

On the motion being put, it was carried almost unanimously—there being only one dissenting voice.

A vote of thanks to the Chairman terminated the proceedings.

Proposed alteration of design of the Village of Wingham.

Department of Lands, Sydney, 5 May, 1891.

It is hereby notified, for public information, that at the expiration of three calendar months from this date, it is intended to obtain authority, under the provisions of the 107th section of the Crown Lands Act of 1884, to alter the design of the village of Wingham, by closing that part of Rowley-street lying between the south side of Isabella-street and the north side of Farquhar-street.

Tracings showing the proposed alterations may be inspected at the Crown Lands Office, Taree, and at the Department of Lands Sydney.

No. 12.

Messrs. J. H. Young and W. H. Vivian, M's.P., to The Secretary for Lands.

Sir,

Sydney, 7 April, 1891.

We have the honor to request that we may be furnished with copies of all correspondence, &c., between ourselves and your Department, and between other persons and your Department, with all minutes, reports, &c., on same. Referring to the application of the Municipal Council of Wingham, that the forest reserves known as the Wingham Brush might be placed under its control.

Yours, &c.,

J. H. YOUNG.
W. H. VIVIAN.

This is apparently intended for the Department of Lands, as all copies of correspondence in this case from this Department to Messrs. Young and Vivian, M's.P., were forwarded on the 16th March. Forwarded through the Principal Under Secretary to the Department of Lands.—P.T.H., B.C., 20/4/91, Principal Under Secretary.

The Under Secretary for Lands.—C.W., B.C., 22/4/91.

The Mayor of Wingham to The Secretary for Lands.

Sir,

Municipal District of Wingham, Council Chambers, 9 May, 1891.

My attention has been called to a notice in Government Gazette of 5th May, page 3,392, showing intention to apply for an alteration in the design of township of Wingham, by closing portion of Rowley-street.

I beg to inform you that the Council know nothing whatever of this matter. At the next meeting, however, the subject will be brought forward, and in the meantime I should esteem it a favour if you will cause copies of correspondence, or any other information that will throw any light on this very unexpected announcement, to be forwarded to me.

I may inform you that not only the Council, but also the great majority of the ratepayers will certainly oppose this proposed alteration.

I am, &c.,

HENRY LAMBERT,

Mayor.

No. 14.

The Trustees of the Wingham Recreation Reserve to The Secretary for Lands.

Sir,

As trustees of the Wingham Recreation Grounds, we beg to bring under your notice the actions of the Wingham Municipal Council.

1st. Some time ago they passed a motion, which has not been rescinded, to fall Rowley-street from Combined-street to Farquhar-street and part of Combined-street; and but for the influence of Mr. William Allen, Mr. George Hill, and Alderman Cochrane, our beautiful Brush would have been fallen.

Your District Surveyor, Mr. Alworth, of Maitland, visited our township, and no doubt advised, as your responsible officer, that part of Rowley-street from Isabella-street be resumed, and this action of the Government the trustees endorse and approve of.

The present Council as now constituted would fall every tree in our Brush reserve, and one thousand years would not replace those shrubs and trees which now are the admiration of all people who love natural beauty.

2nd. On 12th instant the Council passed a motion protesting against the resumption by Government of part of Rowley-street, Alderman Cochrane dissenting.

This action of the Council will at once prove to the Government what the present Council would do with this street (which is quite useless for any purpose except as a reserve.)

To make this street would require an expensive bridge and the formation of a high embankment, and when finished would not be used, and we may state that the Wingham Recreation Ground or Reserve, under the present trustees, adjoins Rowley-street on one side; and these trustees, five in number, are with one exception in sympathy with the Government in having this street cancelled.

In conclusion we beg to urge that the Government will not give this street up to the Municipal Council, at least until the Chief Inspector, Mr. E. D. Brown, visits our township and reports.

The Mayor of Wingham to The Secretary for Lands.

Sir,

Municipal District of Wingham, Council Chambers, 13 May, 1891.

I am directed to inform you that this Council strongly protests against the proposed alteration of design of the village of Wingham, as notified in Government Gazette of 5th May, No. 3,740, and endorse the opinion expressed by me in letter dated 9th instant.

I am, &c.,

HENRY LAMBERT,
Mayor.

Messrs. J. H. Young and Vivian, Ms.P., ask (91-3,530) to be furnished with copies of the correspondence in this case; a similar request is made by the Mayor of Wingham (91-1,546). Submitted as to whether the requests should be complied with. This protest to await the expiration of the three months, then to be referred to the Land Board.—J.O.D., 26/5/91.

The Mayor of Wingham to The Secretary for Lands.

Sir,

Municipal District of Wingham, Council Chambers, 26 May, 1891.

On 24th January I had the honor to address you asking that copies of all correspondence and reports on the Wingham Brush question may be sent in to me for publication. To that letter I received the usual formal reply "Sent to the District Surveyor for report (91-275, 5th February)."

As evidently the matter has been overlooked, I would respectfully request that you would give such instructions as will cause me to be placed in possession of the information asked for.

Yours, &c.,

HENRY LAMBERT,
Mayor.

Submitted, in view of the enclosed "notice of motion," whether the applications for copies of correspondence should be granted. If so, probably applicant should defray cost of copying.—J.O.D., 4/6/91. Copies may be supplied to the Council on payment as usual.—R.H.D., 5/6/91. Approved, W.H., 5/6/90.

[Enclosure B.]

[Enclosure B.]

Messrs. Young and Vivian,—
Gentlemen,

Bungay, 19 May, 1890.

I see it is proposed to close that portion of Rowley-street between Isabella and Farquhar Streets, and I write to say that I cordially approve of the proposal. As I have lived in the neighbourhood of Wingham for over thirty years, and saw it grow from two or three houses to its present size, I believe I have as good an idea as anyone as to the probable traffic requirements of the future, and I have no hesitation in saying that, in my opinion, that portion of Rowley-street will never be required. Nothing but timber is shipped at the old wharf, and the opening of Rowley-street would not shorten the distance by one inch, the streets running at right angles. At any rate, the Government might withdraw it from the control of the Council at present, with the understanding that the street be returned if ever sufficient proof was forthcoming that it was needed for traffic. I may say that a motion was passed by the Council to fell the timber on this street, and this motion has never been rescinded, so that the beautiful timber on it is liable at any moment to be destroyed.

I hear that the Council have got a petition signed against the resumption, but I hear that several signed because a report got about that if Rowley-street was resumed the Government might close other streets, and other silly reasons of a like nature. It seems to me that a portion of the Council have made this a personal matter, and whatever was done towards the preservation of the Brush would be opposed by them on some ground or other.

Would you kindly send on this letter to the Minister for Lands, or whatever department has the matter in hand.

I am, &c.,
GEORGE S. HILL.

Sydney, 4 June, 1891.

Sir,

We have the honor to enclose a petition from the ratepayers of the Municipality of Wingham, strongly protesting against any resumption of any portion of Rowley-street, which they declare is required as a street in the public interest.

We are not aware of any intention to resume, and, in the face of this protest, we hope it will not be done.

Miscellaneous Branch, 91-1,919.

Wingham, 13 May, 1891.

To the Honorable the Minister for Lands,—

We, the undersigned ratepayers and residents of the Municipal District of Wingham, hereby respectfully protest against the proposed alteration of Rowley-street by closing that portion between Isabella-street and Farquhar-street, as notified in Government Gazette.

We would point out that in the near future this street will be required for traffic, as there is no other street between Wyater-street and the river, and with Rowley-street reclaimed, there will be no means of communication between the public wharf and the old wharf, where the lumber shipping trade is fast increasing.

We would further add that the whole of the members of the Council (with one exception) are against the alteration; and in conclusion we respectfully protest against the action of the movers in this matter, who have pointedly ignored the authorities of the town, the Council, appointed by the ratepayers.

Trusting that you will see justice in the matter, we shall, as in duty bound, ever pray.

Memo. from The Surveyor of Public Parks to Mr. A. W. Sladen.

Sir,

Department of Mines, Sydney, 9 October, 1886.

I have had further inquiries made this morning about the Camp Cove Reserve, and have reason to believe that it is a military reserve. Mr. Deering (District Surveyor) has promised to give us more definite information on Monday next, which I will transmit to you at once.

I am, &c.,

W. M. COOPER,
Surveyor of Public Parks.

My dear Mr. Cooper,—A gentleman from Mr. Deering's office just called with plans of Camp Cove Reserve. The thing seems as far off as ever. Pardon me for suggesting either:—1st. The prompt payment of the request. 2nd. The informing your Minister, or Sir John Robertson, of your difficulty without further delay, and, if possible, the required remedy to get over the difficulty.—A. W. SLADEN, 11/10/86.

No. 2.

Memo. from The Metropolitan and Coast District Surveyor to The Under Secretary for Mines.

Dear Sir,

Department of Lands, Sydney, 11 October, 1886.

You sent to me yesterday to inquire if I knew what reserve the enclosed application referred to. From investigations since made, it appears that the reserve is one set apart, originally as a water reserve, in the private subdivision of the township of Watson's Bay. The reserve tracing herewith is not now used for its original purpose; and is simply a municipal reserve. The trustees referred to were appointed by the Municipal Council. I do not see how the reserve can be termed a public park.

Yours, &c.,

JOHN W. DEERING.

Perhaps the Municipal Council, Woollahra, may be asked under what tenure it holds the land, and if it is willing to convey it to the Crown for recreation purposes, and in the meantime Sir J. Robertson may be informed that in its present state a subsidy cannot be granted on account of this land.—W.M.C., 12/10/86.

Submitted for approval.—H.W., 12/10/86. Approved.—J.F., 13/10/86. Council Clerk, Woollahra, and Sir John Robertson, 15/10/86.

The Under Secretary for Mines to Sir John Robertson, K.C.M.G.

Sir,

Department of Mines, Sydney, 15 October, 1886.

With reference to the application of Mr. A. W. Sladen for £100, for the improvement of Camp Cove Reserve, Watson's Bay, I am directed by the Secretary for Mines to inform you that in its present state a subsidy cannot be granted to improve this land.

The Woollahra Council has been asked to state under what tenure it holds the land, and if it is willing to convey it to the Crown for recreative purposes.

HARRIE WOOD,
Under Secretary.

I am directed by the Secretary for Mines to request that you will be good enough to state under what tenure the Council holds the land at Watson's Bay, known as the Camp Cove Reserve, for which Mr. A. W. Sladen states it appointed himself and Messrs. J. Thompson and M. A. Black as trustees, and whether the Council is willing to convey it to the Crown for recreation purposes.

The Surveyor of Public Parks to The Under Secretary for Mines.

Subject :—Camp Cove, Watson's Bay.

Department of Mines, Public Parks Branch, Sydney, 4 November, 1886.

In compliance with the Minister's verbal instruction, I have obtained a description of the land which is called, in the papers horewith, the Camp Cove Reserve, in order that the same may be submitted to the Executive Council for resumption as a public park; and a minute therefore accompanies.

2. I may remark that this land forms part of a private subdivision of 20 acres of land granted to E. Laing, 28th May, 1793, and is not, therefore, a reserve in the usual sense of the term, but is, so far as the Government is concerned, in my opinion private property. At the same time, as the owner, when subdividing the land, marked it in his sale plan as a water reserve, I think he could not now sell it or claim any compensation for its resumption for public recreation.

W. M. COOPER,
Surveyor of Public Parks.

Submitted. The question as to compensation should, perhaps, be referred to the Crown Law Officer, unless the Minister is of opinion that the resumption should be made without regard to that question.—H.W., 4/11/86.

The land may be resumed at once.—J.F., 5/11/86.

Minute for Executive Council.

Resumption of Land at Watson's Bay for a Public Park.

Department of Mines, Public Parks Branch, Sydney, 24 November, 1886.

I RECOMMEND to His Excellency the Governor, with the advice of the Executive Council, the publication, in accordance with section 6 of the Lands for Public Purposes Acquisition Act (44 Victoria, No. 16), of a notification declaring that the piece or parcel of land, situate in the parish of Alexandria, county of Cumberland, and described in the paper annexed, signed by me, has been resumed for and in connection with the establishment of a public park at Watson's Bay.

JAMES FLETCHER.

His Excellency the Governor and the Executive Council.

The Executive Council advise that the land referred to be resumed for a public park in Watson's Bay in terms of the Act specified.—ALEX. C. BUDGE, Clerk of the Council, 1/12/86. Minute 86-55. Approved.—CARRINGTON, 1/12/86. Confirmed, 7/12/86. Copy of proclamation to Government Printer, 9/12/86. Proclamation now forwarded for the signature and authority of the Minister. Public Parks Branch, 15/12/86. May now be gazetted, and a minute drawn up for Executive Council, proclaiming the park under the Act.—W.M.C., 17/12/86. Under Secretary for Mines,—Notice to Printer for proof, 17/12/86. Camp Cove. Mr. Piper,—The Under Secretary wishes the proclamation pushed on, so that the minute may come before the next Executive Council.—W.M.C., 17/12/86. Gazetted, 18th January, 1887, No. 31, page 371.

Description for resumption.

COUNTY of Cumberland, parish of Alexandria, at Watson's Bay, area about 2 roods 20 perches: Commencing on the western side of Cove-street, at the south-east corner of allotment No. 14 of section No. 2 of the private subdivision of 20 acres, granted to E. Laing, 28th May, 1793; and bounded thence on the north by the south boundaries of that allotment and allotments Nos. 13, 12, 11, and 10, bearing west to the eastern boundary of allotment No. 9 of the same section; thence on the west by a line partly forming part of that boundary and the eastern boundary of Camp-street and part of the eastern boundary of allotment No. 5 of section No. 3, bearing south to the north-west corner of allotment No. 6 of that section; thence on the south by the northern boundaries of allotments 6 aforesaid, 7, 8, 9, and 10 bearing east to the western side of Cove-street aforesaid; and thence on the east by part of that side of that street bearing north, to the point of commencement, being the portion marked as a water reserve on a lithograph (of a survey by T. R. Roe, civil engineer, of a subdivision known as the town of Watson's Bay), published by Allan and Wigley, lithographers, Sydney, and being part of 20 acres granted to E. Laing, 28th May, 1793. The Council Clerk, Woollahra, to The Under Secretary for Mines.

Sir, Borough of Woollahra, Council Chambers, 16 December, 1886.

I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 15th October last, requesting to be informed under what tenure the Council holds the land at Watson's Bay known as the Camp Cove Reserve, and whether the Council is willing to convey it to the Crown for recreation purposes.

In reply, I am directed to intimate that the Council holds this reserve by right of a dedication from the late Sir George Wigram Allen.

It is the desire of the Council, before replying to your second request, to be informed as to the reason why the Government requires it to be conveyed to the Crown, since it belongs to the Council for purposes of public recreation.

NOTIFICATION OF RESUMPTION OF LAND UNDER 44 VICTORIA, No. 16.

New South Wales, } By His Excellency the Right Honorable CHARLES ROBERT, BARON CARRINGTON, a Member of Her to wit. } Majesty's Most Honorable Privy Council, Knight Grand Cross of the Most Distinguished Order of Saint Michael and Saint George, Governor and Commander-in-Chief of the Colony of New South Wales
CARRINGTON,
Governor.

WHEREAS I, the Governor aforesaid, with the advice of the Executive Council of the said Colony, have duly sanctioned the establishment of a public park at Watson's Bay, in the said Colony, and for the acquisition thereof public funds are lawfully available: Now I, the Governor of the said Colony, with the advice of the Executive Council of the said Colony, in pursuance of the powers in this behalf given to or vested in me by the Lands for Public Purposes Acquisition Act, do, by this notification published in the Gazette and in newspapers—that is to say, in the Sydney Morning Herald and the Sydney Daily Telegraph, circulated in the police district wherein the said land is situated, declare that the land hereinafter described has been resumed and appropriated for the public purpose hereinafter mentioned; that is to say, for and in connection with the establishment of a public park, to the intent that upon the publication of this notification in the Gazette the legal estate in the said land shall forthwith be vested in the Minister for Public Works and His successors on behalf of Her Majesty for the purpose of the said last-mentioned Act, for an estate of inheritance in fee-simple in possession, freed and discharged from all trusts, obligations, estate, interests, contracts, charges, rights of way, or other easements whatsoever; and to the intent, further, that the legal estate therein, together with all powers incident thereto or conferred by the said Act, shall be vested in the said Minister as a trustee, with the powers stated in the said last-mentioned Act. And I declare that the following is the description of the land hereinafter referred to, that is to say:—

County of Cumberland, parish of Alexandria, at Watson's Bay, area about 2 roods 20 perches: Commencing on the western side of Cove-street, at the south-east corner of allotment 14 of section 2 of the private subdivision of 20 acres granted to E. Laing, 28th May, 1793; and bounded thence on the north by the south boundaries of that allotment and allotments 13, 12, 11, and 10, bearing west to the eastern boundary of allotment 9 of the same section; thence on the west by a line partly forming part of that boundary and the eastern boundary of Camp-street, and part of the eastern boundary of allotment 5 of section 3 bearing south to the north-west corner of allotment 6 of that section; thence on the south by the northern boundaries of allotments 6 aforesaid, 7, 8, 9, and 10, bearing east to the western side of Cove-street aforesaid; and thence on the east by part of that side of that street bearing north to the point of commencement, being the portion marked as a water reserve on a lithograph of a survey by T. E. Roe, civil engineer, of a subdivision known as the town of Watson's Bay, published by Allan and Wigley, lithographers, Sydney, and being part of 20 acres granted to E. Laing, 28th May, 1793, aforesaid, and shown on plan catalogued C. 1,012-2,030, in the Metropolitan District Survey Office.

Mr. H. F. Norrie to The Under Secretary for Lands.

Sir, Crown Solicitor's Office, Sydney, 22 July, 1889.

I have the honor, as a resident of Watson's Bay, to invite your attention to the condition of the Camp Cove Park, Watson's Bay. Since about the 25th May last the park has been under water, and at the present time all the seats are submerged, so deep is the water inside and outside the enclosure. So far as I can see, there is no provision for carrying off the water after heavy rains; and it is very doubtful if the beautiful trees in the park will survive the dreadful soaking they have already received.

RECREATION RESERVE, WATSON'S BAY.

Shorthand Notes, 27th February, 1890.—Deputation from the Vigilance Committee, Watson's Bay, re resuming a piece of ground for a recreation reserve.

THE deputation said that they had come to ask that a piece of ground might be resumed, and granted to the residents of Watson's Bay as a recreation reserve.

The block they would suggest was a triangular one, bounded by Cove, Pacific, and Victoria Streets, containing about 2½ acres. Part of it was swampy ground, and would require to be filled in, but the military authorities were giving away stone for the purposes of retaining-walls, etc., and there would, they thought, be no difficulty in obtaining the necessary material from them for the filling in; the other part of this piece of ground was high enough, and had several old buildings upon it, the outside value of which was not more than £200. There was also another block of land of 1½ acres, adjoining which was a suitable site also; the total value of these lands was about £3,000. There were already two parks there; Gap Park, which was upon the side of a cliff, and Camp Cove Park, which was, with half an hour's rain, under water, and in the recent rains was completely submerged, only the fences being visible, so the residents had no place for cricket, football, lawn tennis, and such like amusements, and the recreation ground they now asked for was therefore badly needed. It was also very desirable, in the interests of the health of the inhabitants, that the land should be reclaimed.

The Minister (Mr. Brunker) here asked if Camp Cove Park could not be filled in a similar manner.

The deputation said that this might perhaps be done, but pointed out that the land comprising this park was below the level of the sea, and so could not be drained.

The Minister said that in dealing with this matter he was met by two difficulties. First, in the Estimates for 1890, no sum had been provided for the purchase of parks, and consequently the Government had no money at their disposal for the purchase of parks in any part of the Colony. Secondly, applications of this character were usually made by the Municipal Council; he did not know who were the gentlemen composing that Council, but if the matter had been properly represented to them, he could not understand how they could neglect their interests so far as not to make this application.

The deputation stated that the Vigilance Committee was elected by the residents, and had been brought into existence through the apathy of the Council to the interests of Watson's Bay.

The Minister continuing, said that he had expected to see Sir John Robertson with them to-day, as he knew that gentleman had large interests in the locality, and was always to the front in urging the requirements of the people.

The deputation: He owned part of the land, and perhaps had some delicacy in coming to urge its resumption.

The Minister: All he could say was that he would make inquiry as to the necessity for this recreation reserve, and if the result met with his approval, he would instruct the Metropolitan District Surveyor to report as to the most suitable sites, and the probable cost of resumption, with a view to considering the question of placing a sum on the Estimates to acquire a recreation ground.

Extract from Sydney Morning Herald, 28th February, 1890.

DEPUTATIONS—RECREATION GROUND FOR WATSON'S BAY.

A DEPUTATION composed of the Watson's Bay Vigilance Committee waited upon the Minister for Works yesterday morning, concerning a recreation ground for Watson's Bay.

Mr. H. F. Norrie, the secretary, stated that the Vigilance Committee had been elected by a ballot of the residents, and one of the matters in which they were interested, seeing that Watson's Bay was ignored by the Municipality of Woollahra, in which they were included, was a recreation ground. They wanted the Government to resume about 4 acres of land around a spot known as Camp Cove Park, a piece of land given by the late Sir Wigram Allen.

There was no other site that could be made into a level piece of ground. There was a population now of about 760 people, and with the early prospect of getting gas and water laid on many buildings would go up and the population would be largely increased. A ground such as they were asking for was a matter of necessity, there being no athletic ground there.

Mr.

Mr. Bruncker said in reply that no provision had been made for 1890 for the purchase of land for parks, and the Government had no money at their disposal for the purpose of securing land either for recreation or public parks.

Another difficulty was that applications of the kind were usually made by the municipality within which the place was incorporated, and he could not understand why their representatives in the Woollahra Council had so far neglected the interests of Watson's Bay, or to have omitted making the representations in question after they had been referred to them by the people. (Mr. Norrie: "That has been the cause of the formation of the Vigilance Committee.")

He supposed that the gentlemen forming the Vigilance Committee took some interest in the progress and welfare of the place, and he expected to have seen Sir John Robertson, who had a greater interest in Watson's Bay than any other person. He generally looked after the interests of the public, and one would have thought his first aim would have been to satisfy the requirements of the people in recreation matters, and that he would have been the first to agitate. (Mr. Norrie: "The greater part of the land we want resumed is the property of Sir John Robertson, and he might have some delicacy in the matter.")

It was strange the Council had not made some move in the matter. All he could do was to have inquiries made as to the desirability of providing a piece of land for the purpose to which they referred, and, having satisfied himself of that, he would direct the Metropolitan District Surveyor to select a site and to give the probable cost, with a view to considering if it could be placed on the estimates next year.

Subject :—Proposed Recreation Reserve, Watson's Bay.

Department of Lands, Sydney, 23 May, 1890.

1. Upon the accompanying tracing is shown by green edging the present recreation reserve, containing 2 roods 20 perches, and which was set apart in the subdivision of the private township of Watson's Bay. This area was proclaimed as "Camp Cove Park," 29th March, 1887.

2. The area edged red, containing about 2 acres, is now applied for as an addition to the above.

3. I have personally inspected the site applied for. It lies low, is swampy, and to be available for recreation purposes, the low-lying area, forming a large proportion of the whole, must be filled in, at least, 3 feet. The existing reserve or park, which appears to be little used, has been filled in or raised about 18 inches over the entire area.

The site applied for is neither more nor less than a basin, and will always be liable to inundation.

4. Under these circumstances, and considering also that the population of Watson's Bay is very limited, and that Gap Park, of 9½ acres, and other reserves exist in the locality, I recommend that the application be not complied with.

JOHN W. DEERING,

The Under Secretary for Lands.

Metropolitan and Coast District Surveyor.

The Council Clerk, Woollahra, to The Under Secretary for Lands.

Sir,

Borough of Woollahra Council Chambers, 17 January, 1891.

I have the honor to hand you herewith copy of a petition received by this Council from residents of Watson's Bay, urging the resumption of certain lands within that village for public purposes, and from a report which has been received from a committee, consisting of the Hon. Dr. Mackellar, Messrs. E. W. Knox, and T. H. Kelly, to whom the matter was referred, the Council is of opinion that in the interest of the public health immediate steps should be taken to resume these lands to prevent building thereon and to supply a much-needed want to the inhabitants. I beg therefore to ask for this matter the favourable consideration of the Honorable the Minister.

[Enclosure.]

[Enclosure.]

To the Mayor and Aldermen, Borough of Woollahra.

The humble Petition of the undersigned residents and ratepayers of Watson's Bay,—

RESPECTFULLY SHOWETH :—

1. That your Petitioners are ratepayers and residents of Watson's Bay, representing a population of upwards of 700 persons.

2. That no adequate provision has been made here for recreation purposes, inasmuch as Camp Cove Park is only a few perches in area, and is always more or less under water, and the Gap Park being situate on a hill side, and generally a mass of broken rock, is unfit for cricket, football, and other out-door games.

3. That the land embraced by Cove, Victoria, and Pacific Streets, together with a paddock bounded on the south by Cove-street, west by Victoria-street, north by Cliff-street, and on the east by improved lands, are situated in a depression, and totally unfit for building purposes, being constantly under water, but which, by some filling in, could be converted into a park suitable for the requirements of this locality.

Your Petitioners, therefore, pray that you will be pleased to bring this matter under the notice of the proper authorities, with the view of having the area described resumed for the public purposes indicated.

And your Petitioners, as in duty bound, will ever pray.

Office Memorandum.

Borough Council of Woollahra, for Recreation Ground at Watson's Bay.

9 January, 1891.

It is alleged that the land immediately surrounding Camp Cove Park should be resumed in the interests of the public health, and dedicated as a recreation ground.

Upon inspection of the ground, it appears to me that the surface drainage which collects in the depression around the park, and causes annoyance, might be drained into Watson's Bay.

I would request Mr. Perdriau to be so good as to supply section levels from Cove-street, via the park, by the most direct course to low-water mark in the Bay. The section to be plotted to 2 chains to the inch horizontal scale, and 20 feet to the inch vertical scale.

At the same time it is requisite that the names of the owners of the weather-board cottage and three huts fronting Pacific-street be ascertained and the approximate values of these buildings. Tracing herewith. No. 139.

ED. TWYNAM.

Replied to by my report No. 91-26, dated 27th February, 1891, forwarding tracing and section of levels.—STEPHEN E. PERDRIAU, Government Surveyor.

No. 33.

Mr. Government-Surveyor Perdriau to The Metropolitan District Surveyor.

Sir,

43 Phillip-street, 27 February, 1891.

In compliance with your instruction No. 91-38, dated 9th instant, on cover to Misc. 91-238 individual, I have the honor to transmit herewith a tracing showing the depressions adjacent to Camp Cove Park, complained of as being injurious to health.

2. The tracing also shows a section of levels from the lowest part of the depressions to low-water mark of the Bay, the former being 3 feet 1 inch higher than the latter. This difference of level is ample to drain the water-holes.

3. Attention is invited to the fact that although drain-pipes have been laid from one water-hole to Camp Cove, as indicated on tracing, they were choked on the date of my last inspection, on the 24th instant, so that the storm-waters of the previous day's heavy rains did not escape as they should, but remained on the ground, causing the nuisance complained of.

4. The larger water-hole, the lowest part of which is on the same level as the inlet of the drain-pipe in the gully-shaft, is now not drained by the present pipes, owing to the earth-drain, which apparently formerly connected them, having silted up to a height of 2 feet. It is not until the water has exceeded that depth (consequently, of course, covering a comparatively large area) that it commences to flow thereto.

5. I think I have made it plain that if even the present provision for disposing of the storm-waters falling on an area of certainly not less than two-thirds of a square mile, though very steep, were in good repair, there would probably be no cause for complaint; but would point out that Camp Cove is very much exposed to the sea, and that the surf continually beating against the mouth of the present drain there must impair its efficiency.

6. The section of levels shows that it would be practicable to drain the water into Watson's Bay, at a part not exposed to the sea, being sheltered by Green Point.

The names of the owners, and the approximate values of the two weather-board cottages, and two huts fronting Pacific-street, are as follows :—

No. 1, hut ; William Newtown owner and occupier	£ 40
No. 2, weather-board cottage ; George Newtown owner and occupier	160
No. 3, weather-board cottage (small) ; Frederick Newton, owner and occupier	60
No. 4, old hut ; Albert Jones, owner ; address, Watson's Bay	30

Approximate total value £290

Cost of survey, &c.—

Field work, 1½ days, at £3 3s. £ 4 4 0

Office, 1½ days, at £3 3s. 4 4 0

Total 8 8 0

Mr. H. F. Norrie to J. H. Want, Q.C., R. J. King, J. Shepherd, and A. Allen, Esqs., M's.P.

Gentlemen,

Progress Committee, Watson's Bay, 10 March, 1891.

Would it be asking too much, in requesting you to urge the Department of Lands to resume the low-lying land around Camp Cove Park as an addition thereto, which has been the subject of correspondence, and a deputation from the committee, a petition from the inhabitants, and a request from the Council? The proposed resumption, as you are aware, embraces the land within Pacific, Victoria, and Cove Streets (excepting there at Camp Cove Park), and is the site of an old lagoon. A large quantity of water lies stagnant on part of the land for the greater part of the year, and Camp Cove Park is so moist as to be dangerous, and is therefore locked up by the trustees.

The people here are quite willing to subscribe liberally, and to get up entertainments, &c., for the purpose of raising funds for filling up and levelling the ground, as has been done at Manly and other places, if the Government will resume the land, and vest it in the Woollahra Council.

It must be remembered that Watson's Bay has not a foot of ground whereon any games can be indulged in.

The Gap Park is on the side of the cliffs containing no level land, and Camp Cove Park is too small, even for a game of bowls, whereas if the land around be resumed, cricket, football, and other games could be well carried on after a time.

I am, &c.,

HAROLD F. NORRIE.

Dear Brunker,—Do this for my people. Your Government have done very little for my unfortunate electorate.—J. H. WANT.

Office Memorandum.

Municipal Council of Woollahra.—Application for a recreation ground at Watson's Bay.

19 March, 1891.

THE Borough Council applies to the Government to resume certain land in extension of Camp Cove Park at Watson's Bay, to be appropriated to purpose of public recreation. Camp Cove Park is too small as a recreation ground, containing only 2 roods, and what is desired is to obtain sufficient space for sports. The area proposed to be acquired is indicated upon tracing A by green edging; it covers several separate holdings.

Plan of Woollahra herewith.

In further support of this application, it is represented that it is in the interest of the public health that this land be resumed, so as to prevent building thereon, as the land presents the aspect of a depression or basin, wherein the surface drainage accumulates to the depth of 18 inches or 2 feet, and becoming stagnant causes a nuisance.

I have caused a survey with levels to be taken, the result of which shows that the bottom of this depression is 3 feet above low-water mark in Watson's Bay, and consequently can be readily drained without large expenditure, as the formation is sandstone; and thus the land may be made available for occupation without danger to health. I may state that a drain was constructed leading into Camp Cove, but owing to defects, and on account of the outfall being in an unsuitable position, the drainage has failed.

As to recreation areas, it is merely requisite for me to point to the large area available for recreation, viz., Gap Park, and the reserve about the lighthouse, and the reserve for military purposes at the South Head, to show that there is more than ample provision in that respect; but what is desired by the petitioners is that an area adapted for sports within limits of the settlement at Watson's Bay shall be acquired at cost of the State. This raises the question, whether the Government, in addition to ordinary parks, shall provide play-grounds; and it will become a question of policy or practice, for it appears to be expected in several municipal districts that such play-grounds shall be required.

It does not appear requisite for me to enter into further particulars at present, e.g., as to values, &c., inasmuch as the resumption will depend upon the general question as to a play-ground, in addition to ordinary recreation grounds or parks, the conditions of which may not be suitable for athletic sports; and, also, as it has been shown that the intervention of the Government, in order to secure proper sanitary precautions in the utilisation of this land, would be unnecessary, as the land can be drained, it would appear to devolve upon the municipal authority, rather than the State Government, to insist upon such proper precautions being taken.

The Under Secretary.

E. TWYNAM.

The Chief Surveyor's report is submitted. A previous application for resumption of this land for park purposes was refused. (See decision of 6/6/90, 7-837).—J.O'D., 13/4/91. R.H.D., 13/4/91. F.H.W., 15/4/91. There is a later paper.—W.H., 16/4/91. 91-1,227 Ind. herewith.—R.H.D., 18/4/91.

Whatever force there may be in other arguments used by the residents of Watson's Bay in advocating the extension of Camp Cove Park, there is none in that which alleges the unhealthiness of the area within the proposed addition, which, it appears from the report of the Chief Surveyor, can be readily drained, either into Watson's Bay or Camp Cove. The report of the Chief Surveyor is submitted for the consideration of the Minister.—W.H., 20/4/91.

The report of the Chief Surveyor indicates that the resumption asked for is not required in the public interest. The application must be refused.—J.N.B., 21/4/91. J. H. Want, M.P., and the Council Clerk, Woollahra, informed.—23/4/91.

No. 38.

Mr. G. Newton and others to The Under Secretary for Lands.

Sir,

Watson's Bay, 6 May, 1891.

We, the undersigned, being residents on the land applied for by adjacent land-holders and others, as an extension of the Recreation Ground at Watson's Bay, have the honor to draw your attention to the fact that we in no way desire the suggested resumption to be carried out.

We are poor fishermen who have lived in these houses many years, and worked hard in better times to make them our own. Any compensation we might receive in the event of the land being resumed, would ill repay us for the loss of our homes. The situation is very convenient for our particular calling, and we do not know of another suitable site available in the Bay.

Of course, if this suggested further reservation is for the public benefit, we must submit, being in the minority, but we would most respectfully point out our belief that many of the requisitionists for this reserve have not entirely the public welfare in view, their properties fronting the land in question, and by its dedication to the public they would be the most benefited.

Apart from the large sum that will be required (in proportion to the importance of the locality) to resume the land and fill in the swamp upon it. We submit that the further reservation is not needed, as the Recreation Ground already there, provided with a pavilion, seats, trees, &c., is seldom or ever used, being most of the time under lock and key. Besides, the locality consists of some of the best building sites in the Bay, which has not too much good land available for that purpose.

In conclusion, we would urgently request that before taking further steps towards resumption, you will cause the fullest inquiries to be made, and take the above matters into consideration.

We have, &c.,

GEORGE NEWTON,

Householder.

No. 1.

The Secretary, South Head Road's Trust, to The Secretary for Lands.

That a sum of money may be placed upon Estimates for resumption of land (flat), Rushcutters' Bay.

Office, Commissioners South Head Road's Trust, Pitt and Hunter Streets,

Sir,

Sydney, 14 July, 1885.

Certain matters in connection with the New South Head Road, at Rushcutters' Bay, relating to the widening of that road and the erection of a retaining wall, were before a Board meeting of the Commissioners of the South Head Road's Trust yesterday, and the extreme desirability of Government acquiring the flat lands adjacent to and on the southern side of that road was very apparent to my Board.

I have the honor, therefore, by direction of the Commissioners, to solicit that you will cause to be put upon the Estimates this year a sum of money sufficient to provide for the resumption by the Crown for public purposes of the flat land at Rushcutters' Bay, lying on the southern side of the South Head Road and eastward of the sewerage reserve.

I have, &c.,

GERARD PHILLIPS,

Secretary, South Head Road's Trust.

This matter may be referred to my honorable colleague, the Minister for Mines.—J.S.F., 19/8/85.

The Council Clerk, Paddington, to The Secretary for Lands.

Sir,

Borough of Paddington, Council Chambers, 14 August, 1885.

I have the honor, by direction of the Mayor, to inform you that a deputation has been appointed from the Councils of Sydney, Woollahra, and Paddington, to wait upon you respecting the proposed resumption for public purposes of the land lying to the southward of the New South Head Road, near Rushcutters' Bay, and to request that you will be pleased to inform me when it will be convenient for you to receive such deputation.

I have, &c.,

GEO. E. BLACKMORE,

Council Clerk.

Submitted.—J.E., 17/8/85. F.H.W., 18/8/85. This is a matter for my honorable colleague, the Minister for Mines.—J.S.F., 19/8/85. The Under Secretary for Mines.—C.O., Department of Lands, 19/8/85.

RUSHCUTTERS' BAY—THE CHINAMEN'S GARDENS AT RUSHCUTTERS' BAY.

THE Hon. W. J. Trickett and Mr. R. Butcher, M.L.A., next introduced to the Minister for Mines a deputation, who came to ask that a large block of low-lying land at Rushcutters' Bay, and on the south side of the South Head Road, should be resumed and dedicated as a public recreation reserve. The deputation consisted of the Mayor of Sydney, Alderman Beare, Mr. M'Guanne (Mayor of Paddington), Mr. Street, Mr. Blackmore (Council Clerk for the Municipality of Paddington), and Mr. C. A. Vivian (Council Clerk, Woollahra).

Mr. Trickett said that the deputation had waited upon Mr. Abbott, with a view to bringing before him the desirableness of obtaining for the public the low-lying lands situated at Rushcutters' Bay and on the south side of South Head Road. Some four or five years ago the Government, by a Bill, resumed the land on the northern side of the road and facing the water. They had since reclaimed that land, and by doing that had really made things on the other side of the road worse than they were before. That land, as a matter of fact, was below high-water mark, and in wet weather was nothing but a swamp, and was moreover offensive. Effluvia arose from it, and it was felt that it would be a public calamity if it were built upon and used as sites for small tenements. He remembered that when Mr. Clarke, the eminent engineer, was here, he, in a report with respect to that place, said it would be a misfortune if the land were ever built upon, because it would be impossible to drain, and to include it in the system of sewerage. An open sewer ran through the land, and was lower than the sewer which was being constructed. He had had many conversations with medical gentlemen who had from time to time given consideration to that place, and they all agreed that it would be very undesirable to use it for any purpose other than a recreation reserve. The medical adviser to the Government was quite of opinion that the land should not be built upon. The deputation knew that Mr. Abbott had the well-being of the people at heart, and hoped he would be able to obtain the land for a public recreation ground. Of course they knew that funds for that particular object would have to be voted by Parliament before anything could be done, but the deputation felt confident that if the Minister for Mines obtained a report with respect to the land he would be able to realise in the fullest degree the necessity for taking some action to prevent its being used for building purposes.

It was mentioned that the land in question consisted of about 12 or 13 acres, and one member of the deputation spoke of the land being at times almost hidden by a malarious cloud, which was very prejudicial to the health of residents in the neighbourhood.

Mr. Abbott said he would get a report to see what had been done, and what was the position of matters, and would then communicate with Mr. Trickett. He knew that the land ought to be reclaimed, as well as that on the other side of the road.

F. M. Darley, Esq., M.P., to W. J. Trickett, Esq., M.P.

My dear Mr. Trickett,

Wentworth Court, Phillip-street, 22 August, 1885.

I had hoped up to the last moment to have been able to join your deputation to the Minister for Mines, but I was detained in Court and could not get away. I have long been of opinion that in the interest of the public health it is the duty of the Government to resume the land in question, and on more than one occasion I have so expressed myself in the House. If my memory serves me, I did on one occasion table a question on the subject, and this I am prepared to do again, if by doing so would strengthen the hands of the Government in the matter.

Believe me, &c.,

FRED. M. DARLEY.

My dear Abbott,—Kindly place the enclosed with the Rushcutters' Bay papers.—W. J. TRICKETT, 22/8/85. The Honorable J. P. Abbott. Put with the papers in reference to the resumption of land at Rushcutters' Bay.—J. P. ABBOTT, 25/8/85.

Rushcutters' Bay.

Department of Mines, Public Parks Branch, Sydney, 21 September, 1885.

I HAVE visited the ground which the Government is asked to acquire, viz., the low-lying flat on the south side of the New South Head Road, at the head of Rushcutters' Bay. The land already reserved for recreation purposes by 44 Vic. 22, lies on the north side of the road, and it appears from papers I have obtained from the Lands Department that it was proposed at that time to resume land on the south side as well. The matter was very fully investigated by Mr. W. Freeman, of the Surveyor-General's Department, and a detailed plan prepared, of which a tracing is herewith, marked 78-13,723, Miscellaneous, showing an area of over 30 acres as desirable to be acquired.

2. From my inspection I can state that the area indicated on the plan by green doted line is low and flat, and unsuitable from the difficulty of drainage for building purposes. There are a few weather-board buildings upon it of no great value.

3. I beg to call the Minister's attention to the 3rd paragraph in the report herewith of the deputation which waited on the Minister for Lands on 18th April, 1884, wherein it is stated that the Paddington Council would be willing to give up in exchange for this the existing recreation reserve on the other side of the Glenmore Road. This is mostly elevated land, and the area as given in the lith. map herewith of of the Borough of Paddington, is 13 acres 2 roods. The sale of this ground would go a great way towards recouping the Government for the probable outlay which would be incurred in acquiring the other; at the same time I think it would be better to retain it if possible.

W. M. COOPER,
Surveyor of Public Parks.

Submitted.—H.W., 23/9/15. Ask Mr. Mills to favour me with a valuation of this land.—
J. P. ABBOTT, 25/9/85. Mr. Mills, for valuation.—H.W., B.C., 26/9/85.

Rushcutters' Bay—Proposed resumption south of New South Head Road.

I BEG to submit for consideration Mr. Mills' valuation of the land in question, some 30 acres in area, which he values at £30,000.

2. Until Parliament passes a further vote for the acquisition of land for parks I presume the decision of this matter must stand over, and it is possible that good rather than harm will result from the adoption of this course, as, in the event of a Public Health Bill being in the meantime passed, the land would cease to be building land, and would only be worth its value for gardens, probably only a fraction of what it is worth at present.

3. Perhaps it would be well to ascertain whether the Borough Council is still willing to give up the present recreation ground of 13½ acres adjoining, in exchange for the larger area now proposed to be acquired.

W. M. COOPER,
Surveyor of Public Parks.

Submitted.—H.W., 31/10/85. May stand over until there is money available, then submit.—
J. P. ABBOTT, 31/10/85.

[Enclosure.]

To the Under Secretary, Department of Mines, Sydney,—

Sir,

Land Sale Rooms, 130, Pitt-street, Sydney, 27 October, 1885.

1. In accordance with instructions (minuted 85-541 P), I have the honor to report that I have examined the property edged in green dotted lines on the tracing furnished to me, comprising some 30 acres in area, and being the low land lying to the south of the Rushcutters' Bay Road, which is proposed for resumption. This land is divided into two unequal portions by a former resumption for a road and sewer: the western part owned by Mr. Obed West, and leased to the Sydney Omnibus and Tram Company, and the eastern part, extending from the main road to the Glenmore Road on the south-east, is nearly all owned by the Cooper Estate; upon this there are several gardens leased to Chinamen some 20 acres at about £16 per acre per annum. There is also a small tannery and several cottages, and numerous sheds and hovels. There are two dairies, of 36 cows in all, feeding on the swamp, and drinking the water. When I visited the place, the stench from the excrement and urine and sewerage water was almost unbearable. The greater portion of this area is totally unfit for residences of any class, but in the absence of any law or regulation to the contrary, if cut up, it would certainly find buyers who would speculate upon the chance of its being filled up with refuse in the course of years.

2. Such being the case, I estimate that the cost of resumption and covering claims for disturbance and damage would require about thirty thousand pounds (£30,000).

3. If a Health Bill were passed not allowing dwellings to be erected in such unhealthy places, the value of this property would be very considerably reduced.

4. The 13 acres 2 roods of recreation reserve offered by the Paddington Council towards paying for the proposed resumption would realise by sub-division sale about one-half of the cost (say £15,000).

I have, &c.,

The Council Clerk, Paddington, to The Secretary for Mines.

Sir,

Council Chambers, Borough of Paddington, 20 July, 1886.

I have the honor to inform you that at a public meeting held at the Town Hall, Paddington, last night, a deputation was appointed to wait upon you respecting the desirability of immediate steps being taken to resume the low-lying flats and Chinamen's gardens situated to the south of New South Head Road, near Rushcutters' Bay.

I shall be glad, therefore, if you will kindly inform me when it will be convenient for you to receive such deputation.

I have, &c.,

GEORGE BLACKMORE,

Council Clerk.

The Minister for Mines has, I think, no power to resume land for any purpose other than for Public Parks or ground for public recreation, or places for bathing, and unless it is desired that the land be resumed for one of these purposes it would perhaps be advisable for the deputation to wait upon the Minister for Public Works.—H.W., 27/7/86.

Perhaps it would be better for me to meet the deputation, say on Thursday week, I want to try and get some information from them.—J. FLETCHER, 28/7/86. Council Clerk informed by telegram, 3/8/86.

Land at Lacrozia, Rushcutters' Bay.

Sydney, 2 April, 1887.

THE bulk of the low-lying land at the south of the New South Head Road is the property of Mrs. Booth, whose attorney is Mr. James R. Hill, 35, Bent-street, and whose agent is Mr. Raine, of Raine and Horne, Temple Court, King-street. Mr. Raine informs me that the great bulk of the land is let on short leases, and that none of the land has as yet been leased for a term of years, but that three small pieces fronting the Glenmore Road are open to be leased for fifty years to anyone who chooses to take them up. They occupy approximately the position shown hereunder.* The two end pieces are mostly on higher ground, and practically, therefore, it may be considered that, so far as this estate is concerned, there is only one piece of the low land that is likely to be leased for a long term, and of course for a short time it would be worth no one's while to build. The size of this piece I am unable, in the absence of an important tracing, which is unfortunately missing from the papers, to state, but it is not large.

2. I cannot learn that any part of the low ground which does not belong to Mrs. Booth is likely to be leased or sold.

The imminence of the danger of additional land unfit for human habitation being sold in building lots, and built upon, renders advisable, I submit, the adoption of one of two courses, viz., either to pass a short Act of one or two clauses in the present session of Parliament, providing (say) that the Governor may, upon the advice of the Board of Health, or other competent authority, declare certain areas to be unfit for human habitation, and take the necessary steps to prevent building or dwelling thereon, or to adopt the recommendation contained in paragraph 11 of the Report of the Medical Adviser to the Government, dated 15th July, 1886, viz., to obtain the opinion of the Crown Law officers whether, in the present state of the law, any effectual step can be taken, by way of injunction or otherwise, to prevent building upon a situation which must be injurious to the health of persons residing therein.

Surveyor of Public Parks.

Submitted.—H. Wood, 2/4/87. The second course should be taken, and the opinion of the Attorney-General be gained.—F. ABIGAIL, 4/4/87.

Minute of submission may be drawn up for Minister's signature, and forwarded to the Crown Solicitor, accompanied by extract of paragraph 9 from Medical Adviser's Report, paragraph 86, 1,150. Minute herewith.—W.M.C., 6/4/87.

IT was the intention of Mr. Farnell, when Secretary for Lands, to deal with these papers as soon as he possibly could find time to do so, but before any such favourable opportunity arose the Ministry was reconstructed, and he ceased to be Secretary for Lands.

As the public parks are now under the control of the Mines Department, it is submitted that these papers should be transmitted to that Department for any action that may seem desirable.

I have the honor to inform you that a deputation has been appointed, representing the Municipal Councils of Woollahra and Paddington, to wait upon you respecting the necessity of resuming the Chinamen's gardens and low-lying land at Rushcutters' Bay for the purpose of a public park.

Will you please inform me, therefore, when it will be convenient for you to receive such deputation.

I saw the deputations, and informed them that, admitting the desirability in the interests of public health of making the resumption, in view of the very high prices demanded by the owners for small areas in this locality, and of the present state of the public finances, I would not hold out any hope of the Government undertaking the responsibility of the resumption at the present time.

I suggested, however, that the Borough Councils interested should take steps to ascertain what price the owners would be willing to accept for the area in question.—T.G., 23/12/87.

[Extract from Daily Telegraph, 7th December, 1887.]

THE CHINESE QUARTERS AT PADDINGTON—PROPOSAL TO REMOVE THEM.

A DEPUTATION composed of municipal representatives of the inhabitants of Paddington waited upon the Minister for Lands yesterday morning, to complain of the nuisance arising from the Chinese quarters situated on the northern side of the South Head Road, in the immediate vicinity of Rushcutters' Bay, and to ask that they should be removed, and the whole of the low-lying land of this locality should be resumed. Several members of the deputation addressed the Minister on the subject. They stated that this grave danger to the health of the residents of the surrounding neighbourhood had been long admitted by the municipal authorities, who had done all in their power for the abatement of the nuisance, but from the want of power they had been unable to cope with it. They found that they could not prevent the land being used for the purpose of Chinese gardening; they could not compel the owners to improve it so that it could be drained, nor had they any means of preventing the erection of habitations on the land. Already a large area of land, too low to be drained by the Bondi sewer, had been built upon. The connections with the main metropolitan sewer, not having yet been made, this low ground was a receptacle for the sewerage of the higher ground surrounding it, and now the Municipality of Paddington was threatened with litigation for allowing sewerage to accumulate on the lower ground. One action for £10,000 damages had been commenced, and others were threatened. The members of the Paddington Council found themselves powerless in the matter. They now asked the Government to take it in hand, and abate the evil by removing the Chinese quarters, and resuming the whole of the low-lying lands in this locality. One member of the deputation stated that in many respects Chinese gardens had been the means of diminishing the danger to public health, and their gardens certainly improved the appearance of the place; but it still remained a huge sewerage receptacle, the stench of which in the summer months was an abomination. It was also pointed out that much of the land was 13 feet to 15 feet below the level of the Bondi sewer, so that its drainage by the metropolitan sewerage system was impossible. It was, therefore, absolutely necessary that the land should be resumed, and raised to allow its being properly drained. For years past the question, "Are you in favour of the resumption of the Chinese gardens?" had been submitted to Parliamentary and aldermanic candidates. All had replied in the affirmative. The matter had frequently been referred to in Parliament, as well as discussed no end of times in the Paddington and Woollahra Councils; yet the residents of these boroughs found that the evil had been allowed to increase, and was greater to-day than it ever had been. If the Government would deal with this subject at once they would earn the gratitude of the people of those two municipalities.

Mr. Garrett, in reply, said as they were aware this was not a favourable time for them to come asking for the expenditure of a large sum of money, and there was no doubt that the carrying out of their request would involve very considerable expenditure, as the people they would have to deal with in this matter would, he feared, be found very exacting when asked to part with their lands, low-lying though they were. He was fully aware that a public nuisance existed at this locality. In 1875, when in office, he, as Minister for Lands, took steps for the reclamation of the land on the northern side of the road; so they might know that he was fully acquainted with the place and the extent of the evil they complained of. He was not prepared to make any definite promise that the Government would immediately undertake the resumption of these low-lying lands, but he would promise that the subject should not escape his attention. He would call for all the papers on the subject, would make an inquiry as to the probable expenditure the resumption would involve, find out how it could be best carried out, and then place the whole subject before his colleagues. More than that he could not say at present. He regretted that they or the Government had no power to prevent the erection of houses on lands so low that they could not be drained by the metropolitan sewerage system. That was evidently a mistake, and some steps should be taken to prevent the continuance of the evil. As to the Borough of Paddington being threatened with actions for allowing the drainage of the high grounds to flow on to private lands occupying lower levels, he would point out that this nuisance would be removed as soon as they completed the connections with the main sewer. That, at any rate, would be the means of draining all lands above the level of the sewer itself. He would advise them to communicate with the Works Department on this matter. It was the duty of his department to resume the land only, and for the Works Department to carry out the improvements required for its drainage or other purposes.

[Extract from Sydney Morning Herald, 7th December, 1887.]

DEPUTATION—LOW-LYING LAND AT RUSHCUTTERS' BAY.

YESTERDAY, a deputation representing the Paddington Municipal Council, and consisting of Aldermen Brown, Scott, Harper, George, Davidson, and Messrs. Dillon and Blackmore (Council Clerk), waited upon the Minister for Lands (Honorable T. Garrett) for the purpose of urging upon him the necessity of resuming the Chinamen's gardens, and other low-lying land contiguous thereto, situated at Rushcutters' Bay. In their addresses to the Minister, the members of the deputation pointed out that a portion of the land in question had been recently surveyed and cut up into building blocks. It was urged that for sanitary reasons the land was not fit to be built upon. The people of the eastern suburbs were anxious that the land should be resumed and set apart as a recreation ground, and it was stated that if buildings were erected thereon the place must become a fever bed and a danger to the inhabitants of the municipality. It might be stated, said one member of the deputation, that as the city had the Centennial Park, it would not be necessary to form another recreation ground at the bog, but the piece of land they wished to have resumed was a considerable distance from the new park. Another member said the stench arising from the Chinamen's gardens and the low-lying lands generally was almost unbearable, and was a grievous nuisance to the people of Paddington and Woollahra. He regretted that the Woollahra portion of the deputation had not attended with the others for the purpose of representing the state of affairs to the Minister. Allusion was also made to the difficulty experienced by the Paddington Council in carrying off their sewage, and it was stated that an action for a large sum was pending against the municipal authorities for allowing sewage to run through land adjoining that sought to be resumed.

Mr. Garrett said he had not had time to look into the papers concerning the matter since his accession to office. He would, however, give the question his early attention and consideration. As they were aware, the present was not a favourable time for the Government to enter into anything that involved large expenditure. The people whom the Government had to deal with in this matter were very exacting, and they would have every penny the property was worth to them; therefore the Government would have to take into consideration the fact that the resumption of the land would involve a large expenditure. There could be no doubt whatever that the place was a nuisance and an eyesore. He could make no definite promise to do anything in the way of resuming the land on the south side of the road. He believed it was necessary to do it, but it would have to be done in a careful way. He would go through the papers shortly, and would bring the matter before the Government with the view of something definite being accomplished. He advised the deputation to see the Works authorities with reference to the sewage question.

The Under Secretary for Lands to The Council Clerk, Paddington.

Sir,

Department of Lands, Sydney, 30 November, 1887.

Referring to your letter of the 28th instant, inquiring when it will be convenient to receive a deputation, representing the Municipal Councils of Woollahra and Paddington, respecting the necessity of resuming the Chinamen's gardens and low-lying land at Rushcutters' Bay for the purpose of a public park, I have the honor to inform you that the Secretary for Lands will receive the deputation referred to on Tuesday, the 6th proximo, at 11 o'clock.

Sir, Borough of Paddington, Council Chambers, 11 April, 1888.
Referring to the deputation which waited upon you on the 6th December, 1887, from this Council respecting the necessity of resuming the Chinamen's gardens and low-lying land at Rushcutters' Bay for the purpose of a public park, I have the honor, by direction of the Mayor, to request that you will please inform me whether any steps have yet been taken to carry out the proposed resumption of this land.

I have, &c.,
GEO. BLACKMORE,
Council Clerk.

The deputation was informed that, while the desirableness of the proposed resumption was admitted, the high price asked for land in the locality and the low state of public finance would not then permit the Government to proceed with the resumption. It was also suggested that the Borough Councils interested should in the meantime ascertain what price owners would be willing to accept. No information has yet been received as to whether the suggestion was acted upon, and no further steps in the matter have been taken by this Department. The Minister also promised (so the printed report says) to look through the papers (see extract on Miscellaneous, 87-15,136).—R.H.D., 5/5/88.

Submitted.—F.H.W., S.F.

Inform that it is out of the question under present financial circumstances of the country to venture upon such a vast undertaking as that proposed. Further remind writer that the Council has not taken steps to ascertain the price owners would accept for the land.—T.G., 11/5/88.

Sir, Department of Lands, Sydney, 16 May, 1888.
With reference to your letter of the 11th ultimo, asking whether any steps had been taken in regard to your Council's request that the Government should resume the Chinamen's gardens and low-lying land at Rushcutters' Bay for the purpose of a public park, I am directed by the Secretary for Lands to inform you that it is out of the question, in the present financial state of the Colony, to venture upon such a vast undertaking as that proposed. I am also to remind you that apparently your Council has not taken steps to ascertain the prices the owners would accept for the lands.

Sir, Borough of Paddington, Council Chambers, 31 May, 1888.
I have the honor, by direction of the Mayor, to acknowledge the receipt of your letter (Ms. 88-4,162) of the 16th instant, regarding the proposal to resume the Chinamen's gardens and low-lying land at Rushcutters' Bay, for the purposes of a public park.

In reply thereto, I have to inform you that the trustees have informed the Mayor of this Borough that they are not disposed to name the price required for the land proposed to be resumed, but they would be quite willing to consider any overtures that the Government will make in the matter.

I have, &c.,
GEO. BLACKMORE,
Council Clerk.

The Borough Council of Paddington have intimated that owners of the low-lying land at Rushcutters' Bay, which the Council are urging the Department to resume, are not disposed to name the price they will accept for the land. As the Minister has decided that it is impossible to carry out the resumption in the present financial condition of the Colony (see 88-4,162), there is, perhaps, no need for further action at present.—A.H.S., 13/6/88. Mr. De Low.

No further action. It is for the vendors, or those acting for them, or interested in the purchase, to say what is wanted for the land. It is not for the Government to be both buyer and seller in a transaction of this kind. Put the papers away.—R.H.D., 14/6/88.

Will you please inform me, therefore, when it will be convenient for you to receive such deputation.

Sir,

Borough of Paddington, Council Chambers, 29 May, 1889.

Regarding the deputation appointed to wait upon the Secretary for Lands relative to the necessity of resuming the Chinamen's gardens, Rushcutters' Bay, for the purpose of a public park, I am directed to ask when it will be convenient for the deputation to be received, the former appointment for an interview having fallen through, owing to the illness of the Secretary for Lands.

I have, &c.,

GEO. BLACKMORE,

Council Clerk.

This asks the Minister to receive a deputation. I may say that on the 21st instant the Minister for Works borrowed the papers specially.—R.H.D., 31/5/89. The Under Secretary. Submitted as to the deputation.—S.F., 6/6/89. Appoint Friday, 14th instant, 11 a.m.—J.N.B., 7/6/89.

Office Memorandum.

DEPUTATION, introduced by Messrs. Want, Allen, and Street, M's.P., from Municipal Council of Paddington, urging the resumption of the Chinamen's gardens, Rushcutters' Bay, for the purposes of a public park.

The deputation said that they came to urge the resumption of the Chinamen's gardens, Rushcutters' Bay, for a public park. It was not so much that they wanted the land at present, but it was in a deplorable condition, being occupied by Chinese, who block up the water-courses, and in wet weather the area was a regular lake, which, with the drainage from part of the borough into it, became a regular seed-plot of malaria. Such low-lying lands should not be allowed to be built upon, as the tenements would be very objectionable from a sanitary point of view, and moreover, it was a bed of shifting sand underneath, which would be very unsafe to build on. When Mr. Farnell was in office, a deputation had waited upon him, pointing out that the owners were attempting to cut up and sell this land, and he, Mr. Farnell, had taken a favourable view of the deputation's desires, and had plans prepared with a view to resuming the area, and would doubtless have carried out the work had he remained in office.

Apparently the only objections to the scheme, when urged by previous deputations, had been that the Cooper family asked an excessive price for the land, this was erroneous, as Mr. Hill, the representative of the Cooper family, had been interviewed, and had stated that no offer had been made them, and they were prepared to accept a reasonable figure.

There was a large population round this locality, and a rapidly increasing one, and in their interest the matter demanded immediate attention, they required a park, as many of them were unable to get to Rushcutters' Bay Park, except round by a long road, it being impossible to pass this other place in bad weather, &c.

One member of the deputation (Mr. Dillon) said that recently in parts there had been 8 feet of water, and he would be afraid to say how much mud on parts of this land.

The Chinamen had blocked up the natural water-courses, and the land was consequently flooded; in the late heavy rains it was only by chance that a hut, and perhaps twenty or twenty-four Chinamen in it, had not been washed out into the Bay. The place was dangerous, and he had often left his work, when employed in the vicinity, to see children going to school, &c., safely across it. He would urge its being reclaimed.

The deputation thought about £10,000 to £12,000 would do the whole thing.

The Minister, Mr. Bruncker, in reply, said he fully recognised that it was the primary duty of the Government to do all in their power to keep good the health of the people. In regard to that particular application, he knew immediate action should be taken especially in view of the rapidly increasing growth of population in the locality. He could not, however, see that the whole of the evil complained of could be remedied by action taken by the Lands Department. As a matter of fact the whole question was without his province. What was most necessary for the preservation of the public health was action by the Works, and not by the Lands Department. From the remarks of Mr. Dillon, it was quite clear that there was something more than the resumption of the land required. Before taking any action in the way of resuming the land, he felt it would be necessary to hold a conference with the Minister for Works to ascertain what could best be done in the public interest.

Mr. Want suggested that the land might be first resumed, and subsequently the Works Department could decide on the best course of action to follow.

Mr. Brunker maintained that the better course would be for him to confer with the Works Department. He would lose no time in doing so, and his object would be to meet with the wishes of the deputation as far as practicable.

RESUMPTION OF LAND NEAR RUSHCUTTERS' BAY.

YESTERDAY morning a deputation waited on the Minister for Lands, and asked that certain land known as the Chinamen's gardens, and other low-lying lands contiguous thereto, situate at Rushcutters' Bay, be resumed by the Government for the purposes of a public park.

The deputation was introduced by Mr. J. H. Want, M.L.A., and amongst the others present were Messrs. Alfred Allen, R. J. King, and J. R. Street, M's.L.A.

It was pointed out by Mr. Want that at present the land in question was occupied by a number of Chinamen who had so banked up the outlets that after every shower of rain, the whole area was of a lake like appearance. As the time went on, the condition of the land became worse and worse.

It was understood that the Sir Daniel Cooper family had formerly asked an enormous price for the area in question, but he understood that recently the Mayor of Paddington had interviewed the representatives of that family who had expressed their willingness to accept a fair and reasonable amount.

Mr. Alfred Allen described the land as a hotbed of malaria, which, for the sake of the health of both Woollahra and Paddington, should be resumed.

Messrs. Street and King, M's.L.A., and Mr. Dillon also supported the application.

Mr. Brunker, in reply, said he fully recognised that it was the primary duty of the Government to do all in their power to keep good the health of the people. In regard to that particular application, he knew immediate action should be taken, especially in view of the rapidly increasing growth of population in the locality. He could not, however, see that the whole of the evil complained of could be remedied by action taken by the Lands Department. As a matter of fact the whole question was without his province. What was most necessary for the preservation of the public health, was action by the Works, and not by the Lands Department. Before taking any action in the way of resuming the land, he felt it would be necessary to hold a conference with the Minister for Works to ascertain what could best be done in the public interest.

Mr. Want suggested that the land might be first resumed, and subsequently the Works Department could decide on the best course of action to follow.

Mr. Brunker maintained that the better course would be for him to confer with the Works Department. He would lose no time in doing so, and his object would be to meet with the wishes of the deputation as far as practicable.

[Extract from Daily Telegraph, 15th June, 1889.]

DEPUTATIONS—RECLAMATION OF LAND AT RUSHCUTTERS' BAY.

MESSRS. Want, Allen, and Street, M's.P., yesterday morning introduced to the Minister for Lands a deputation, consisting of the Mayor, aldermen, and several of the residents of Paddington, who desired that a portion of land situated at Rushcutters' Bay should be reclaimed by the Government and converted into a public park.

The deputation pointed out that their reason for asking such a concession was not so much because they wanted the land, but because of its deplorably filthy condition at the present time. A number of tenements upon this land were occupied by Chinamen, and after very heavy rains it presented more the appearance of a vast lake than anything else. If some steps were not taken fevers must become prevalent, and they thought they should try to protect the people by asking for its reclamation, so that the present nuisance might be abated. Woollahra and Waverly, as well as the city, were equally concerned in this matter in making an effort to prevent this land from being sold. The land, which had an area of about 14 acres, would, from its natural position, be suitable for a recreation reserve. At any rate, it would be absolutely imperative to have the evil remedied, as the Chinamen had stopped the water from making its escape, and after rain large quantities of matter were allowed to fester in the sun. A deputation had before waited upon the Minister anent this matter, and the only objection then appeared to be that the Cooper family, who owned the land, had asked an enormous sum for it. This impression was erroneous, as the present owners had signified their willingness to accept a reasonable amount for it. Mr. Farnell, when in office, had had plans prepared for the resumption of the whole of this land, and had he remained in office no doubt his scheme would have been carried out. The foundation of the land was a bed of shifting sand, which rendered it perfectly unsafe for building upon.

Mr. Brunker, in reply, said that he recognised the force of what the deputation had said, that the primary duty of the Government was to do that which it considered best to conserve the health of the people (hear, hear), and he knew from personal experience, as well as from the representations which had been been made by that deputation, that it was necessary some steps should be taken with a view to the protection of the rapidly increasing growth of the municipality. He did not think, however, that the question came within his province, so far as making the necessary alterations on the land. That portion of the work belonged to the Works Department, because it was quite clear that something more than resumption was required from the statements which had been made. Before taking any action he should like to confer with the Minister for Works, and he could assure them no time would be lost in dealing with the matter.

The Council Clerk, Paddington, to The Secretary for Lands.

Sir, Borough of Paddington, Council Chambers, 31 December, 1889.

I have the honor, by direction of the Mayor, to inform you that the Board of Health has forwarded a report to this Council by the Chief Medical Inspector with regard to the sanitary condition of the Chinamen's gardens and Begg Estate, Rushcutters' Bay, in which it is stated that the whole area is unfit for building purposes, and that it would be almost impracticable to properly drain the same.

This Council fully endorses the statement made in the report, and trusts that the Government will favourably consider the advisability of the land being resumed forthwith.

J. H. Want, Esq., M.P., to Mr. J. Barling.

Dear Mr. Barling,

My constituents are crying out with many grievances. Foremost is the wood-blocking of Oxford-street. When will it be commenced? After this, the resumption of Rushcutters' Bay China-men's gardens is a source of great grief. Can you give me any information of an encouraging nature to communicate to them?

J. H. WANT.

Mr. Want is pushing very much for a reply of some kind regarding the resumption of the land for an extension of the park. Is the matter in such a state that we can say anything to him about it?—D.C.M'L. (for the Under Secretary), B.C., 9/6/90. Mr. Darley.

Owing to Mr. Hickson's illness and consequent absence from the office, this matter which was referred to him and myself for our joint report has been in abeyance. I hope now to be able to send the report in within the next four or five days.—C.W.D., B.C., 12/6/90. Under Secretary for Public Works.

Resubmit in a week.—D.C.M'L. (for Under Secretary), 14/6/90. Mr. Darley, B.C., 30/6/90. Report attached, dated 27th June, 1890.

No. 36.

Minute Paper.

Subject:—Respecting the resumption and reclamation of low-lying lands at the head of Rushcutters' Bay.

Messrs. C. W. Darley and R. R. P. Hickson to The Under Secretary for Public Works.

Harbours and Rivers Branch, Sydney, 27 June, 1890.

WE have given this matter some consideration and examined the ground, and find that to thoroughly reclaim this land it would be necessary to resume about 42 acres, being all the land lying below and within the contour of 20 feet above low-water mark, and to fill it up nearly uniformly to this level. To do this would require about 610,000 cubic yards of sound filling. We find, however, that this cannot be procured anywhere in the immediate vicinity, owing to the surrounding heights having become so closely built upon within the last few years.

The cost of obtaining this material specially for the work and bringing it from any distance would render the undertaking prohibitory.

We are therefore of the opinion that it would be desirable to let this matter stand over until some large public work, such as the city railway extension, is being carried out, in which event the whole area might be resumed, and provision made in the railway contract for some of the surplus soil from the cuttings and tunnels being conveyed to this site and there deposited, and that the sum of (say) 9d. per cubic yard be paid for so doing.

The railway would more than proportionately benefit by this arrangement, as one of the difficulties of dealing with the railway construction question would be overcome by providing such a convenient site for depositing a large quantity of surplus soil.

A drain, about half a mile in length, would have to be constructed through the reclamation to take the surface drainage from the head of the bay, and lead it into the existing open surface drain near the bridge.

We are of the opinion that this land should then be subdivided, streets laid out and formed, and the frontages sold for building purposes, for, with some 9 to 10 feet of fresh soil overlying the present surface, it would be perfectly sound and suitable for buildings.

The sum likely to be obtained upon reselling the land would probably recoup the whole cost.

The value of the land is a matter that should be reported upon by the Land Valuer, but the probable cost of reclaiming and preparing for sale we estimate as follows:—

	£	s.	d.
610,000 cubic yards filling at 9d.	23,125	0	0
810 yards covered surface water drain, £3 per yard	2,640	0	0
Say, 140 chains of forming, kerbing, guttering, and metalling streets, at £66 per chain	9,240	0	0
Drainage and other works (say)	4,995	0	0
	£40,000	0	0

Say, £1,000 per acre for improvements.

We consider the property will be proportionately enhanced in value, so that this desirable improvement might be carried through without loss to the country.

We observe, however, in the papers that some of the writers suggest converting this area into a park. Should this be decided on, then the cost of reclamation may be greatly reduced, as it will not be necessary to resume so much land, or to fill in to such a depth.

We

We do not, however, believe that it is necessary to add to the parks already existing, seeing that there is a portion at the very head of the bay above Cascade-street already set apart as a public reserve, as well as the large Rushcutters' Bay reclamation reserve facing the bay, and therefore suggest that the greater part, if not the whole, of the land, if raised to the extent proposed, be sold, and thus made to recoup the cost of the work.

If it is set apart for a park, then probably it will only be necessary to resume about 35 acres, and the cost of reclaiming this to a height of (say) 15 feet over low water would probably be as follows:—

800 yards covered surface drain	2,640	0	0
Surface drainage works, &c. (say)... ..	3,960	0	0
	£17,100	0	0

Or say £509 per acre for improvement.

Before anything can be done, however, or very accurate estimates can be made, a very careful feature survey, showing all the properties effected as well as levels, &c., should be prepared.

C. W. DARLEY.
ROBT. HICKSON.

Plan herewith shows in dark red 35 acres, and in light red the additional area to make up 42 acres. Approximate boundaries only in absence of a proper survey. No. 39.

Office Memorandum.

Subject :—Low-lying lands Rushcutters' Bay.

Department of Lands, 22 August, 1890.

FIRST proposal.—Resumption of 42 acres at a cost of £39,900; reclamation of same at a cost of £40,000, total, £79,900. Land to be afterwards sold as building sites.

Second proposal.—Resumption of 35 acres at a cost of £33,250; reclamation of that area at a cost of £17,100—total £50,350. The land to be set apart for a park.

THE report of Messrs. Darley and Hickson of the Works Department, has been referred to this Department by the Minister for Works, and is submitted in connection with reply to deputation 14th June, 1889, 8583. The proposal to appropriate the land for park purposes is viewed with disfavour by the officers reporting, for the reason that ample provision for such purposes has already been made. The report suggests that the matter be deferred until some large public works such as the City Railway extension is being carried out, in order that filling-in material may be obtained from the excavations; otherwise the cost of obtaining such, would be such as to prohibit the undertaking, it is further stated that nothing can be done, nor accurate estimates made, until a careful survey showing all properties affected, levels, &c., has been carried out. If, however, the scheme outlined in this report for resumption, reclamation, and sale of land is to be adopted, contingent upon the material for filling-in being obtained from the excavation in connection with some other Public Works in the city, it would seem desirable that all all necessary preliminary action prior to issue of notice of resumption should be taken in order that both undertakings should proceed simultaneously. Attention is, however, invited to the necessity for special legislation to authorise the work, if the land be not resumed for a park (in which case funds must be provided); but as it is not clear what action in connection with the undertaking is to devolve upon the Department, it is submitted that the Chief Surveyor be requested to furnish a report on the matter as regards public interest coming within the province of the Department of Lands.

J. O'D.

Special.—I do not see that any good can come of a report from the Survey Branch. The case has not yet reached that stage. Messrs. Darley and Hickson are not in favour of the resumption of the land for a public park. To deal with the land in the other direction indicated, will require special legislation. The abstract question of resumption or not has not yet been before the Cabinet apparently.—R.H.D., 22/8/90.

Submitted.—F.H.W., 25/8/90. Ask the Chief Surveyor to be so good as to report upon the provision made for recreation purposes at Rushcutters' Bay, in first instance.—W.H., 25/8/90.

No. 40.

The Chief Surveyor to The Under Secretary for Lands.

Paddington Municipality—Application for further resumption for a Park at Rushcutters' Bay.

A VERY important public work has been carried out in reclamation of the foreshores of Rushcutters' Bay, and formation of a recreation ground and park 27½ acres, which fronts William-street (or New South Head Road).

On the opposite side of William-street is a tract of flat land, bounded southward partly by Glenmore Road and eastward by Cascade-street, mostly under cultivation as market gardens; this area, about 25 acres, in its present state is represented to be detrimental to health, and there have been repeated applications to the Government to resume it for a park.

It will be observed that the superficial drainage of a large and populous area is shed into this flat, and there is now considerable discharge by the two drains intersecting it; the flat land being under cultivation there is less injury to the public health than if the land were in its natural state, when, indeed, it would be a pestiferous swamp.

On the opposite side of Cascade-street, before mentioned, there is a recreation reserve comprising 18½ acres, upon the flat part of which a recreation ground is formed and enclosed; the residue is very sloping, and will require considerable expenditure in laying out and planting before it can be utilised.

The resumption asked for as a park would largely augment the value of all surrounding properties, say by 25 per cent., and consequently thereby increase the municipal income; therefore, it may be held that proprietors should either contribute proportionately or the Municipal Council, as representing local public interests, might take the initiative by seeking special legislation; or pending further proceedings, perhaps the proprietors of the land might be compelled to ensure the utilisation thereof in a manner which shall not be detrimental to the public health.

A park would be ornamental and would be beneficial to the surrounding town settlement; but the cost involved is large,—about £17,100 for works irrespective of compensation for land, estimated at £33,350; and it becomes a question for consideration whether such large expenditure would be justifiable without adequate contribution on part of the land-owners of surrounding estate and the Municipal Council, whose income will also be augmented.

The following particulars may be useful as bearing upon this matter:—Paddington: population, about 18,000; buildings, 3,711; ratepayers, 3,991; municipal income, about £12,000.

The municipality of Paddington abuts on Moore Park, and also on the Centennial Park; the Green Park is distant about 200 yards from the eastern boundary; and there is a small recreation reserve on the boundary near the Victoria Barracks. I think that in respect of ordinary requirements for recreation there has been ample provision; indeed, this municipality may be said to have had special advantages.

A plan is herewith, showing the limits of the municipal district of Paddington, and the adjacent parks and reserves.

Under these circumstances I submit that the matter of resumption of these low-lying lands now occupied as market-gardens should be regarded more as a work desirable for the general public health, and consequently as a work to be entered upon with that object in view, to be done as economically as possible, and if practicable without incurring loss to the State.

Such mode of procedure is indicated in the report of the Works Department (90-4,951), viz., by filling up, i.e., raising the surface level, and selling the land thus improved for building sites, under an approved design of subdivision.

Should this course be adopted, proceedings will have to be taken for resumption of the land by special Act of Parliament, as the Crown Lands Acts and Public Purposes Acquisition Act do not cover such a proposal. Consequently it would seem that further action should be taken in another Department.

The cost of the work last mentioned is estimated at about £40,000; compensation for purchase of land, about £40,000.

With respect to the latter item I may point out that the valuation is high, inasmuch as the present conditions are prohibitory against using the land for residential purposes.

As to survey, it is stated that a very careful survey would be requisite in event of further proceedings. The detail sewerage survey is complete for all the surrounding holdings, and the additional features such as drains, fences, new works, &c., can be interpolated at any time in the course of a few days; or if this project be entertained, the further survey requisite may proceed at once.

It is impossible to afford an estimate of prospective value of this land when improved and made available for building, but it is more than probable that the aggregate expenditure may be recouped.

E. TWYNAM,

Chief Surveyor.

23 September, 1890.

P.S.—In event of a decision to resume this land, with a view to subsequent subdivision, and sale thereof as building sites, it would appear that proceedings might be taken under the Public Works Act (51 Victoria No. 37), vide section 12 and 37.

Subject :—Resumption of land, Chinamen's Gardens.

Department of Public Works, Sydney, 22 November, 1890.

MR. J. H. WANT, M.P., called upon the Minister to draw his attention to the matter of the resumption of land, Chinamen's gardens. He stated that the Department of Lands were waiting for some information from us before they could proceed with the matter. Please have inquiries made to see what this refers to. I was under the impression that we had given all the information.

The Under Secretary for Public Works to J. H. Want, Esq., M.P.

Dear Sir,

Department of Public Works, Sydney, 1 December, 1890.

With reference to your representations in regard to the resumption of the Chinamen's gardens at Rushcutters' Bay, I find, upon inquiry at the Lands Department, that they have obtained all the necessary information, and that the matter is now being submitted to Mr. Brunner.

Yours faithfully,

J. BURLING,

Under Secretary.

No. 44.

Minute by The Under Secretary for Lands.

21 January, 1891.

THE final disposal of the land adverted to within will, it is presumed, when the time arrives, be determined by the Government, as weighty considerations of an important character are involved.

Two modes of dealing with the matter have, however, been suggested :—

1. To resume and reclaim by filling in 42 acres, at an estimated cost of £79,700, with a view to subsequent sale as building sites.
2. To resume and reclaim an area of 35 acres, at an estimated cost of £50,350, and devote it to the purposes of a public park.

Reports are enclosed from officers of the Works Department, which are unfavourable to the latter proposal, and it will be seen from the accompanying plan of the Paddington municipal area and contiguous lands, that the locality, admitting its large population, is liberally supplied with outlets for public recreation, and it would therefore appear that the very large expenditure which would be required to convert the area into a park would be unjustifiable in the circumstances. See No. 36.

The first proposal has more to commend it, and presents a possible solution of the difficulty, but special legislation would probably be required to carry it into effect.

The Works officers, however, advise that any undertaking involving the reclamation of the land should be deferred pending the construction of some large public works, such as the city railway extension, in order that filling in material may be procured at a reasonable price, as otherwise the cost would be prohibitory.

They are further of opinion that "the sum likely to be obtained upon reselling the land would probably recoup the whole cost," but unless the estimated cost of the proposed resumption has been fixed at too high a figure (£40,000), it would appear that better results than this should be expected.

This phase of the matter will, however, require minute investigation by experts, and can hardly be pronounced upon at this stage or with data available.

In the meantime, I will submit that the Chief Surveyor be instructed, at his convenience to cause a detailed survey to be made, which, I understand, can be done without any considerable outlay.

Mr. Want, M.P., may, perhaps, be informed that the proposal to convert the land into a public park, in view of the very large expenditure which would be involved, and the ample provision already made for places of public recreation in the vicinity, cannot be entertained.

ADVERTING to a report jointly by Messrs. Darley and Hickson, Chief Civil Engineers of the Public Works Department, touching the proposal to resume low-lying lands at Rushcutters' Bay, in which it is stated that before any accurate estimates can be made a careful feature survey will be required; and in referring to the Under Secretary's minute of 22nd January, 1891, by which I am instructed to cause such detail survey to be made. I have now to forward six mounted heliographs, which have been prepared for use accordingly, and await further information before causing lithography or the drawing of a plan to a larger scale to be made.

See No. 44.

E. TWYNAM,
Chief Surveyor.

Papers and helios may, it is submitted, be now forwarded to Department of Works.—J.O'D., 7/8/91. Special.—R.H.D., 10/8/91. Forward as suggested.—W.H., 10/8/91. The Under Secretary for Works.—J.O'D. Employ Mr. Stack to take levels over all the low-lying land south of the South Head Road, especially round the margin up to, say, 8 feet over high-water mark, so that contours can be accurately laid down.—C.D., 21/8/91.

[Enclosure.]

THE area proposed to be improved is comprised within seven sheets of the City Detail Survey, four of which are not yet published, but these latter, I am informed by the Surveyor-in-charge, are ready for lithography.

A comprehensive plan may be readily compiled from these sheets to the smaller scale required by the Works Department, and this can be most readily done in the Detail Survey Branch.

The work is of the character which appertains to the detail survey for sewerage, and is in fact a reproduction of that survey to a more convenient scale for a cognate purpose.

Referred to the Surveyor-in-charge of City Detail Survey.

Detail Survey Branch.—Received, 11th April, 1891. Herewith are forwarded six heliographs, showing that portion within the city of Sydney and Paddington that is proposed to be resumed, as well as the locality immediately surrounding it. All the information thereon having been brought up to date. If required at any time lithographs can be prepared from the tracing compiled in this office, from which the heliographs have been printed.—D. M. Dear Sir, Sydney, 13 November, 1878.

In this day's Herald I read a report of the proceedings in the Legislative Assembly, by which I learn that you intend to introduce two Bills to resume additional land fronting Rushcutters' Bay, also certain low-lying land near Rushcutters' Bay.

As

[870 copies—Approximate Cost of Printing (labour and material, £5 15s. 5d.)]

As this land may be part of Mr. Booth's 40 acres, which I am constantly letting for terms varying from one week to ninety-nine years, it would not I think have been deemed injudicious, had the Government sent me a draft plan of their intentions, in order that I might have refrained from letting those portions which it is intended to resume, and thus saved much complication in the settlement.

Rushcutters' Bay—proposed additional resumption and proposed resumption, southerly from New South Head Road.

It is suggested that Mr. T. Buckland, attorney for Mrs. Booth, the proprietress of Thomas' 40 acres, and Mr. Obed West, the proprietor of Wests' 71 acres, be requested to furnish to the Government the following required information in respect of leases in the above estates, within the spaces to be resumed, viz.: The names of the present lessees—the terms of lease and rental in each case, and copies of the descriptions of the boundaries of those leases.

A tracing showing the land in Mrs. Booth's estate proposed to be resumed has, by direction of the Minister for Lands, been furnished to Mr. Thos. Buckland, and it is suggested that the enclosed tracing "W" be forwarded to Mr. Obed West to show the land to be resumed from West's 71 acres.

Messrs. Holdsworth and Evans to The Secretary for Lands.

Sir,

69, Pitt-street, Sydney, 24 December, 1878.

In reply to your letter of the 10th instant Mr. Obed West desires us to inform you that the only lease granted by him of any portion of the land at Rushcutters' Bay south of the New South Head Road sought to be resumed by the Government is a lease to the Sydney Tramway and Omnibus Company, dated 1st January, 1878, for the term of twenty-one years at the annual rent of £240.

A portion, however, of the land so intended to be resumed was alienated by him in fee to his daughter, Mrs. Wilcox, who by lease dated 1st May, 1874, demised the same to the Omnibus Company for fourteen years at the annual rent of £80. We forward herewith a tracing of the land upon which the piece conveyed by Mr. West to his daughter is shown by blue lines. The land intended to be resumed is to the eastward of the reserved road shown on the tracing as 18 feet wide, but the width of which Mr. West intends to increase 20 or 25 feet. See Appendix.

The Surveyor-General to The Under Secretary for Lands.

Proposed additional resumption of low-lying land at Rushcutters' Bay, southerly from New South Head Road.

In 1878 Mr. Secretary Farnell proposed submitting to Parliament a Bill to authorise an extensive resumption of low-lying land at Rushcutter's Bay, southerly from the New South Head Road, with a view of dedicating it as a park for purposes of recreation, in conjunction with the lands resumed, and proposed to be reclaimed under the Rushcutters' Bay Act of 1878.

It is understood that the proposal was abandoned by the present Government, but there is nothing on the papers to show that such is the case. The papers are therefore submitted for consideration as to whether the proposed resumption should be further proceeded with or otherwise.

Question.

- (3.) RESUMPTION OF LAND AT RUSHCUTTERS' BAY:—MR. MACINTOSH having, pursuant to Notice asked the Representative of the Government,—Is it the intention of the Government to complete the resumption for public purposes of that parcel of low-lands surveyed by the late Government, and situated at Rushcutters' Bay, between the New South Head Road, and the line of sewer to Bondi.

Answer.

MR. DALLEY replied,—It is not the intention of the Government to make any further resumption of land in the locality mentioned.

This answer was given in error.—J.S.F., 18/4/83. Resubmit after the prorogation of Parliament.—C.O., 18/4/83. See answers to subsequent question in the Legislative Assembly asked by Mr. Trickett, M.P.—C.O., 7/5/85.

The Under Secretary for Lands to The Town Clerk, Sydney.

Sir,

Department of Lands, Sydney, 6 October, 1884.

Referring to my letter of the 1st instant, apprising you that the Secretary for Lands would be happy to receive a deputation from the City and Paddington Municipal Councils for the purpose of submitting to the Government the desirability of the land to the southward of the South Head Road at Rushcutters' Bay being resumed for recreation purposes on Friday, the 3rd instant, I have now the honor to inform you that as the Minister was unavoidably absent at the time appointed, he will be glad to receive the deputation in question on Friday next, the 10th instant, at noon.

I have, &c.,

CHARLES OLIVER,

Under Secretary.

RESERVE AT RUSHCUTTERS' BAY.

YESTERDAY morning a deputation, consisting of the Mayor of Sydney, together with several of the aldermen and representatives of the boroughs of Paddington and Woollahra, waited upon the Honorable Secretary for Lands in reference to the resumption of land for sanitary purposes and recreation between the old and new South Head roads at Rushcutters' Bay.

The deputation strongly urged the necessity for the resumption of this land, consisting, as they said, of about 8 acres, on public grounds, and they reminded Mr. Farnell that he had already taken steps in the same direction as far back as 1878.

Mr. Farnell, in reply, said he certainly had taken action in regard to this matter in 1878, when he gave notice of a motion on the subject, but a change of government occurred, and the motion was discharged from the paper, and the matter has remained in abeyance ever since. He was personally favourable to the resumption of this land, which was, however, more nearly 34 acres than 8. He would call for the papers in connection with this matter, and would look into the case with a view to deal with it by legislation.

NEW SOUTH WALES.

FISHERIES OF THE COLONY.

(REPORT OF THE COMMISSIONERS OF FISHERIES FOR THE YEAR ENDING 31st DECEMBER, 1890.)

Presented to Parliament, pursuant to Act 44 Vic. No. 26, sec. 69

REPORT of the Commissioners of Fisheries for New South Wales on the Fisheries of the Colony, for the year ending 31st December, 1890.

The Commissioners of Fisheries to The Colonial Secretary.

Sir,

We have the honor to submit our Report on the Fisheries of the Colony for the year 1890. The vacancy on the Board, stated in our previous Report as having been occasioned by the retirement of Mr. Alexander Oliver, has been filled by the appointment of the Honorable W. R. Campbell, M.L.C. In other respects the constitution of the Board remains as it was in 1889.

Finance.

In the matter of revenue, we have to record that the Department is not in such a satisfactory condition as could be desired, owing principally to the falling off in the number of applications for leases for oyster culture, neglect of lessees to pay up arrears of rent due upon their holdings, and, as heretofore represented, to the abolition of the royalty on oysters.

As promised in our previous Report, we have effected a substantial reduction in the cost of the official staff, which stands at £728 less than the previous year; but notwithstanding, the total expenditure shows an increase of £365 17s. This is caused by our having had to pay, under statutory provisions, no less a sum than £1,160 8s. 4d. for rewards for destruction of cormorants and shags, and £46 for increased office rental. Under the heading of Inland Waters Fisheries, we shall refer at length to this matter of cormorants' destruction. A perusal of our remarks will show that a similar drain upon the revenue is not likely to be made.

The overdue rents on oyster-culture leases have not yet been recovered by the Crown Solicitor. We have, however, by our own efforts, succeeded in obtaining more than £250 of these moneys, and we hope that the efforts of the law officers will be effective in recovering at least a very large proportion of the amount due.

Official Staff.

We record the abolition of the offices of the Inspectors of the Northern and Southern Divisions of Fisheries, and having obtained our wish to be relieved of the small steam launch attached to the Department, it has been found possible to dispense with the engine-driver, whereby a further saving of revenue has been effected.

We also record that the office of Assistant Inspector of Fisheries, at Broken Bay, has become vacant by the decease of Mr. A. T. Black. This position we do not propose to fill, at least at present.

Fish Acclimatisation.

The attempts made last year to introduce trout we have repeated, and we gratefully record our thanks to the Acclimatisation Society at Wellington, New Zealand, who, on application, most readily supplied us free of cost the following ova:—5,000 of the brown trout, Salmo fario; 1,000 of fry of the brook trout, Salmo fontinalis; and 1,000 ova of the Loch Levan trout, Salmo levenensis. A large percentage of these ova were successfully hatched, and, as will be seen by the following enumeration, the fry distributed as widely as possible. We hope that these added to our former efforts in the same direction will in time produce their effects and that in the not far distant future our streams will be abounding with salmonidæ of such various kinds as it is possible to obtain. From experiments made in the Department it was found that trout fry imprisoned in hermetically sealed jars would exist for seventy-two hours at least. Acting on the knowledge so obtained, it was determined to attempt the transport of fry so imprisoned to remote waters for liberation. The experiment proved successful, and, so carrying it further, we succeeded in sending to New Zealand some of the fry which had been hatched here from Wellington ova. With modified success, owing to the high temperature prevailing at the time, the Acclimatisation Society, through their energetic Secretary, Mr. A. J. Rutherford, repeated the experiment back here. Taking advantage of this experience we propose in the future to adopt this mode of transmission. Some memoranda relating to trout will be found in the appendix.

The distribution of Trout Fry was as follows:—50 Loch Leven in the Lachlan River at Forbes; 50 Loch Leven in the Mongarlow River at Braidwood; 50 Loch Leven in the Hastings River (died in transit); 200 Brook Char and 100 Brown Trout in Barber's Creek Reservoir; 100 Brown Trout in Macdonald River at Bendemeer; 200 Brown Trout and 40 Brook Trout in Moombah, McLachlan, and Quidong Rivers, Monaro; 100 Brown Trout and 75 American Trout, Megalong Creek; 75 Fontinalis and 75 Fario at the viaduct, in the Bong Bong River; 500 Brown Trout in the Prospect Reservoir; 40 Fontinalis, 50 Loch Leven, and 50 Brown Trout in Gyra Creek, Grose Vale; 50 Brown Trout in Crookwell River; 100 Brown Trout in Molonglo River, Queanbeyan; 100 Brown Trout in the Nepean River, at Camden; 100 Brown Trout in Doctor's Creek, Murray River, at Albury; 50 Loch Leven in the Port Hacking River; 200 Loch Leven in the Reservoir; 100 Loch Leven, 100 Brown, and 400 Brook Char in the Beardy Waters and the Upper Beardy Waters, New England; 40 Loch Leven in Berowra Creek, Hawkesbury River; 40 Loch Leven in a tributary of Upper Murray Creek, Hawkesbury River; and 4 Loch Leven and 8 American Char in Mother of Ducks Lagoon, Guyra.

Oyster Culture.

We cannot report that this industry is in anything like a flourishing condition. The returns, as will be seen from the appendices, compare most unfavourably with those of 1889; and comparison with previous years is still less encouraging. While the total quantity brought into consumption in 1889 and 1890 is nearly equal, being 18,175 bags and 18,191 bags respectively, yet in 1889 only 6,914 bags came from New South Wales waters, while in 1890 those waters contributed only 6,092 bags. We are thus brought face to face with the fact that notwithstanding the enormous length of our oyster-bearing foreshores we are indebted to other Colonies—New Zealand and Queensland—for two thirds of our supply.

The causes for this may be looked for partly perhaps by the failure of the natural supply resulting from damage by floods and the ravages of what is popularly known as the worm disease, but the main reason is that many of those who during past years have taken up foreshores for oyster-culture have not practised culture at all. This fact we have represented from time to time, and it is now beginning to tell in the very practical shape which we record by the figures above given.

It will be readily imagined that if a person takes up ground only for the purpose of collecting and selling whatever oysters he finds upon it, and bestows no care in providing for the continuity of the supply, that ground must cease to be productive. This is just what has been done by oyster culture lessees generally, and the law as it stands leaves us practically powerless to force these persons to make a more provident use of the public estate which has been entrusted to them. The demand for oyster bearing land has also decreased, the quantity applied for this year being only 12,700 yards—but little over half the quantity taken up in 1889.

It is quite evident that the more restrictive legislation which in our last report we stated to be needed is more urgently necessary now, if oyster production is to have any place at all. To this legislation we have given our earnest attention; we refer to it more at length in another portion of this report. We merely assert here that it is absolutely imperative that our oyster beds and deposits must be regulated on quite a different system to that which obtains under the existing law.

The Fishing Industry.

This industry, so far as regards the take of fish, is in a satisfactory condition, inasmuch as it shows an increase of 2,486 baskets over the capture for 1889; while the amount realised by sales exceeds the previous year's result by no less than £4,383.

These figures in themselves largely refute the assertions so broadly and generally proclaimed by fishermen and others, that the maintenance of substantial portions of the coastal waters intact from the operations of fishing nets is destroying the trade and depriving fishermen of the means of earning a livelihood.

In the matter of supply, Lake Macquarie has contributed 14,521 baskets; Tuggerah Lakes come next with 9,172 baskets; Botany, 8,991 baskets; and Port Stephens, 5,327 baskets. Other waters in the Home division follow in the following order:—Port Jackson and Parramatta River, 5,035 baskets; Broken

Broken Bay and Hawkesbury, 4,721 baskets; and Lake Illawarra, 3,256 baskets. Lake Macquarie has thus nearly doubled her output for 1889; Tuggerah Lake has increased hers by one-third; and Botany is considerably in excess of the previous year's supply; while Lake Illawarra shows a decrease in yield of over one-half.

The fisheries in the Clarence, Richmond, and other Northern waters still show progressive decreases in supply. In 1889 we had to record 11,730 baskets as against 15,830 baskets in 1888; this year we note a further decrease of 3,621 baskets. This decline is to be attributed not to the absence of fish, for the evidence before us points to the fact that while these waters are teeming with the different kinds of edible fish, the deficient means of transit to the Metropolitan markets deter persons from attempting their portage in the fresh state. On the other hand the Iluka Canning Company are prosecuting their enterprise with vigour, and when the refrigerating chambers, which they have in contemplation, are erected it will be possible to utilise this abundance of fish which is now but a waste product, and the fishing will thereby be greatly stimulated.

The supply from the Southern rivers is just 29 baskets in excess of last year's yield. Fish abound in those waters, but are not sought for by fishermen, there being no available market.

Inland Waters Fisheries.

It will be observed from the reports of the local Inspector that the fish supply from the Murray River is on the increase, and they attribute this to the closures made against the operations of netters. Of course this water is principally of value to the Victorian market, which, during the year, has received from it no less than 40,076 lb. of fish, being an increase of 9,434 lb. over the supply for 1889.

Nearly all the fishermen who follow their calling on this river have their homes on the Victorian bank, and so evade even the payment of the small license fee enacted; and, besides, they use illegal nets for the purpose of capture. Every possible check is employed to make these evasions of the law difficult of accomplishment, but that, nevertheless, they, to a large extent, succeed there is not a doubt—in fact, in the matter of fish supply this water is to New South Wales not of any appreciable value.

Under the Fisheries Regulations the extinction of cormorants or shags, birds very destructive to fish, was promoted by means of a reward for each bird destroyed. These birds exist in vast numbers on the Murray River, and the claim upon the Department for their destruction has amounted, during the past and present year, to no less a sum than £1,501 17s. 10d. The provision of the regulation has been but very partially availed of, except on the Murray, and as the riddance of these voracious pests on that water could not, under circumstances stated, produce adequate beneficial result to the Colony, we considered it desirable to obtain its repeal; further expense in this direction will thus be saved.

The mode in which these birds were captured in the Murray district may be of interest. Taking advantage of their habit to congregate in thousands, and to build their nests in swamps, the blacks and half-castes, noting the locations, made raids on their nests at the proper time in the breeding season and captured all the fledglings, and as each nest contained on an average three birds, it was not a difficult matter to collect a considerable number in a short time, and with comparatively little trouble. Another plan pursued was to collect the eggs and hatch them out under a hen or in an incubator. A few half-castes made this quite a business, so that the greater part of the large sum paid as rewards for capture passed to those persons.

The Murrumbidgee River, at Naranderra, has received our attention. The Chief Inspector of Fisheries made a special visit there to inquire into a petition from the residents urging the desirableness of closing it against the use of fishing-nets. We invite attention to his report, which will be found in the Appendices. Except so far as regards the appointment of a local Inspector, we adopted the Chief Inspector's recommendations, and the river for a distance of 7 miles on each side of the town is now protected against the operations of netters.

The more adjacent fishery at Lake George shows a decrease in production of 88½ lbs. for the year. This does not, as might be imagined, imply that the supply has decreased—on the contrary, the local Inspector states that there is evidence of an increase both in large and small fish, but as only one fisherman follows his vocation on the lake it will be obvious that its resources are not sufficiently availed of. We have not yet succeeded in obtaining any spawn or fry for distribution. The two attempts made to secure some were frustrated by unsuitable weather.

Fisheries Legislation.

The defects of the existing fisheries legislation have for a long time been apparent to us, and as these defects render it impossible to administer our trust satisfactorily, we have given the subject of new legislation attentive consideration, the result being the draft Bill for the regulation of the Fisheries and Oyster

Oyster Fisheries of the Colony, which we have had the honor to submit for your consideration. We claim for this Bill, framed on the lines of the Fisheries Act, 1881, that it avoids all the difficulties and incongruities which in our administration of the existing law we have found to exist.

It repeals all existing legislation, but maintains unaltered the constitution of the Fisheries Commission as a body corporate. Its order of arrangement is similar to the Act of 1881—indeed, with the addition of requisite amendments, many of the sections of that Act have been preserved. Larger powers are taken to make regulations, as experience may suggest. It seems necessary that the Commissioners should possess power in this direction, because their knowledge of possible future requirements of the Fisheries is not yet sufficiently perfect to make it desirable that their administration should be bound by hard and fast legislation.

Part No. I of the Bill regulates the net and line fisheries, and while for the most part it follows the order of the existing Act it enacts, in addition, other provisions which experience has shown to be necessary.

Part II of the Bill is a new provision, having for its object the leasing of Crown lands for general fisheries purposes. It is based on the lines of Part III—Private Fisheries—of the existing Act; this part of the Act, not having been availed of, has been so far a dead letter. We have thought that the scope of its intention might, with advantage, be extended, so as to allow of water being leased for a fishery, to any persons, whether they be the owners or lessees of the adjoining lands or not. In the Bill we have made such leases acquirable by auction or tender. We have lately had under consideration an application from the “Deep-sea Fishing Company” for a lease of tidal waters for a fishery. Under this Bill such a lease could be granted, while under the existing law it could not.

Part III provides for leasing Crown lands for oyster culture, and it differs in principle from the present law in so far that it takes power to lease land in large areas; it also provides for the protection of oysters on unleased Crown lands; further, assuming the existence of undiscovered oyster deposits in the open sea, it regulates the manner in which such may be worked.

Amongst other provisions, lessees will be required to find sureties for the payment of their rent. The purpose of this is to prevent persons who have leased oyster-bearing areas from stripping them of oysters and then practically throwing the areas back on our hands, as has been so frequently done under the present Act, and has resulted in such heavy arrears of rent, which, in many instances, it will, we fear, be impossible to recover.

The Bill has also a clause empowering the Commissioners to institute experiments in fish and oyster culture and propagation, and protecting their operations from interference by the general public.

With such a power it is reasonable to expect that much information will be gained for the public on matters which are yet obscure.

In this connection we invite attention to the reports of the Chief Inspector, which are amongst the Appendices, on Lake Wolumla, in the Shoalhaven district, and Lake Macquarie; either of these lakes would be suitable for carrying out experiments such as are contemplated. In Lake Macquarie, especially, a large area of water has been enclosed by the construction of a tram-line from the Heads. This water has communication with the tide by means of a bridge, and could be availed of at once as a fish preserve. At the time of the Chief Inspector's visit this bay, or, more properly, artificial lake, swarmed with small whiting and other fish, and is evidently a favourite feeding-ground. The utilization of this water for experimental fish culture and observation would doubtless be productive of most beneficial results in enlarging our knowledge of the habits of fish and the conditions essential to fish culture.

We conclude this Report with the expression of our earnest hope that opportunity will be secured for passing this Bill into law during the coming Session of Parliament, for unless a radical change is made in the legislation for regulating the fisheries, it is beyond possibility that they can flourish under the present Acts, one of which, at least, has been under trial for ten years, during no part of which period has it proved to be a success.

A copy of the Bill will be found in the Appendices.

REPORTS, &c.—CHIEF INSPECTOR OF FISHERIES, 1890.

Tuggerah Beach Lakes Fisheries.

30 December, 1890.

IN furtherance of instructions, I visited Tuggerah Beach Lakes to ascertain, by personal inspection, what portions thereof should be closed against the use of fishing nets.

I went over the three lakes, and the result of the traverse has been to confirm my previous conviction of the necessity for affording ample protection to these valuable nurseries and breeding grounds against the ravages of netters. That restriction is essential must be obvious in view of the public interest, and that interest is scarcely conserved under the existing law, which, instead of operating to conserve and amplify the resources of the various fisheries, enacts that exhaustion of the natural supply must, to a certain extent, have occurred before steps may legally be taken to recover it. As the exhaustion thus enacted to be a precedent to any recommendation for closure is not, in Tuggerah Lakes, yet accomplished, I should scarcely be warranted in suggesting any present restriction to fishing there. I can only show, and I do so on the accompanying tracing, the closures which, in the public interest and in the interest of the fishing industry, ought to be made. The present prolific supply from the Lakes is due entirely to the closures which have hitherto been maintained; those restrictions being now removed, and fishermen being at liberty to fish where they please, and (owing to insufficient oversight) with whatever lengths of nets they please, it is beyond reason to expect that these waters will continue for very long to yield their present large and varied supply.

It will be seen from the tracing that the closures I propose are somewhat different from those which have existed. It would be difficult now to make hauls in Saltwater, Pipeclay, Middle, Hammond, or Elizabeth Creeks; these creeks therefore, and the parts of the lakes into which they discharge, can be left open.

I am, however, much impressed with the importance of Lake Budgewoi as a breeding ground and nursery; it contains extensive flats, on which food exists in abundance. These flats are so mercilessly hauled by fishermen that future fish supply will assuredly suffer, as also it will suffer from the ravages of water birds, which collect on them in immense flocks.

Some part at least of these flats ought to be closed against the use of fishing-nets, and an effort should be made to destroy or drive away the birds. It would be scarcely consistent to close the flats against netters, and yet allow these voracious pests to remain unmolested.

If it were made legal, under certain conditions and at certain times, to use set nets in closed waters, large breeding areas could be maintained, and yet be practically available to fishermen for the capture of the marketable fish to be found therein. Doubtless the Commissioners will give attention to this point, which is embodied in the new Fisheries Bill, which I had the honor to submit for their consideration. I may add also, in passing, that in that Bill, a discretionary power is taken to close waters as circumstances may seem to warrant.

I have already remarked on the inadequacy of supervision so far appointed to this fishery. It will be simply impossible for one inspector to give necessary oversight, either to the netting, or to the closures. When these latter come to be made an additional inspector will be required to oversee the middle and upper lakes alone, and until such, and a small boat with engine power, so that ready transit may be available, are supplied, effective supervision need not be hoped for.

I again invite attention to the necessity for securing the elevated head-land north of Wyong Creek, as a site for an inspector's residence. This point, as I have previously reported, is admirably adapted for the purpose, as it commands a view of the whole of the first lake.

A residence will be needed also for the second inspector, who so as to oversee the second lake, should be located somewhere at its entrance. That the closures need active watching will be apparent from the fact that the fishermen in many cases have their residences or camps on the abutting shores, and are thus in a position to fish the proscribed areas at their convenience, with scarcely any risk of detection. As instances: Fishermen are located on the land abutting the closures at the Budgewoi entrance, and also on premises fronting the closure at the sea entrance. I saw there three or four large nets, hung on poles to dry, and I have no doubt in my own mind that they are used in closed waters whenever opportunity offers.

I submit that the importance of these fisheries seems fully to warrant the expenditure which some of my proposals herein made would involve.

LINDSAY THOMPSON,
Chief Inspector of Fisheries.

Murrumbidgee River at Narrandera.

IN pursuance of instructions I visited Narrandera, on the Murrumbidgee River, for the purpose of inquiring into the petition to the Colonial Secretary from certain residents, for the closure of the river for a distance of 10 miles on either side of the town, against the use of fishing-nets under the provisions of the 3rd section of the Inland Waters Fisheries Act.

On arrival I interviewed the Mayor, Mr. Willans, and pointed out to him that the ground on which the prayer of the petition was based, viz., "the protection of anglers," was not a very strong one as regards the public interest, which should be the paramount consideration; and he admitted the force of an objection I took, namely, that the proposed closure meant possibly depriving the public of their supply of fish food, merely to meet the views of a few persons who desired to pursue angling as a recreation. I gathered from him that there were only three fishermen in the locality, and that the price usually paid to them for their produce was 6d. per pound, but that at present the river being in flood little netting was being done.

The

The Mayor thought personally, that if an inspector were appointed to supervise the fishing, and see that the nets in use were made legal, which at present they are not, any necessity which was supposed to exist for closing the river, might be obviated.

He then referred me to Mr. Selway, the Manager of the Australian Joint Stock Bank, who with a few others had initiated the petition. Mr. Selway informed me, that it was the general desire of the residents that the closure should be made; that the signatures to the petition were very readily obtained, and that if time had been taken the number would have been largely increased.

On asking him if he had considered what would be the effect of the closure on the town fish supply, he replied that it would not mean any deprivation to the townspeople, nor did he think the fishermen themselves would object to the closure, inasmuch as the bulk of the fish captured were sent to outside places and to the metropolis, and that but little of it found its way to Narrandera.

Later on Mr. Selway, accompanied by the Police Magistrate, Mr. Tingcombe, Manager of the Commercial Bank, and joined afterwards by Mr. Alderman Manning, called upon me to press for the closure; they represented that angling was generally indulged in, and was a principal of the few means of inexpensive recreation open to the public, confirmed Mr. Selway's statement that the fish supply for town consumption came from a distance considerably beyond the suggested limits of closure, and claimed the consideration of what they deemed to be but a fair request. After a lengthy discussion I induced these gentlemen to agree to a modification of the proposed limits with a promise that if on the further inquiries I proposed to institute I found that no serious objections existed I would recommend the closure to the favourable consideration of the Commissioners.

On the next day I made a lengthy visit of inspection along the river in company with the Mayor, but the current was so strong, running some 5 knots per hour, that fishing was impossible; there were none of the fishermen to be seen, subsequent inquiries showing that they were netting in branches 20 and 30 miles from the town. I ascertained this on calling at the house of a fisherman named Hill, who told me that his operations were now carried on by his sons at points of the river varying in distance from 30 to 70 miles away, and that the fish they caught were placed in the train for transit to Sydney, Goulburn, and other parts at the station nearest the point of capture, so that his catch did not come to Narrandera at all. He said he believed the Municipal Council had passed a by-law prohibiting fishing near Narrandera, so that he did not attempt to work there. I found that Hill could not tell me anything of the habits of the cod, or their times of spawning; he had, however, frequently sent live fish away to other waters, wrapt in damp grass. I arranged that he should send some to Sydney, which he confidently expressed his ability to do; from the result it is evident that he either over-estimated his ability, or else his instructions to his sons were not obeyed; at any rate the attempt was a failure.

As the result of my inquiries, which the Commissioners will observe have been extensive, I recommend that the Murrumbidgee River, opposite the town of Narrandera, to a limit on either side of it, shown on the accompanying tracing, embodying a length of 14 miles of water as against the 20 proposed, be closed against the use of fishing-nets for a period of two years. Also I recommend that Mr. Condell, the Forest Ranger be appointed an Acting Inspector of Fisheries for the waters within his district, at a salary of £20. I interviewed Mr. Condell, and ascertained that he would be willing to accept the position, and to render his best service to the Commissioners.

Lake Macquarie Fisheries.

MEMORANDUM.—I made a visit of inspection to Lake Macquarie, to witness the operation of netting in the channel, which, under provisions of the law recently became open to fishing. Preparations had been made by the fishermen to avail themselves of the occasion of the expiry of this closure to capture fish in quantity, and this was done, but on receipt of the proclamation reclosing the water the fishermen ceased netting, evidently under misapprehension, for their legal right to net did not expire for thirty days from its date; the happy effect of this misapprehension has been the protection of the fish in the entrance from capture, and the escape of the feeding grounds from damage.

I went very carefully over the channel, and on a sandy bank found whelk oysters in abundance. They were not of any size, as visitors and men on strike, many of whom were camped on the banks, had been using them for consumption. Spat had adhered in quantity to the wharf piles in Pelican Flat, and, in order that the Commissioners might see the growth, I instructed the local inspector to fix some oak saplings in suitable places, and to send some of them to head-quarters, in three months time, for inspection.

If I may venture an opinion, it is beyond question that these oysters came from the sea, because in the lake there are none.

If this be so, and if it suggests the possibility of the crops of immature oysters which occur at the mouths of other inlets, and even on ocean rocks not adjacent to any inlets, being the produce of unknown beds on the floor of the ocean, it may not be unreasonable to suppose the existence of extensive beds all along the seaboard, and in the public interest it would seem desirable to take means to attempt their discovery.

Reserve for Fish Culture.

On the southern shore of the channel a tram viaduct has been formed; this encloses a large area—some hundred acres—of water, which is evidently a splendid breeding ground for fish. Notwithstanding the previous netting, this water teemed with small whiting, and fish generally. It has communication with the tide through a bridge about 100 feet long. I consider this water as a valuable site for experimental purposes. It might under the new legislation, which I have to propose to the Commissioners, be reserved for fish propagation, or be leased for a like purpose.

Lake

Lake Wolumla and other Southern Waters.

In furtherance of instructions I left Sydney on the 13th ultimo, for the purpose of inspecting Wolumla Lake, south of Crookhaven Heads and any adjacent waters, as might be practicable.

Proceeding to Kiama I visited the Minumurra River, a small water some 4 miles north from that township. Within the last two years some very fine oysters were supplied to the metropolis from the leased beds of Peter Johnson. These are situated in this river, on either side of the Railway Bridge, near to which Johnson resides, and as his house immediately fronts his beds he is in a favourable position to oversee and cultivate his oysters. He has, however, of late suffered from the effects of floods, which had silted refuse over a quantity of ware he had laid down; to what extent he had carried out his laying I was unable to determine owing to the accretion of mud, but I saw enough to assure me that he had prosecuted the work with some industry. Nevertheless the capabilities of this water have certainly not been tested to their limit. There is abundant evidence of its suitability for rapid development of oyster-growth. The bottom is of the desired consistency to support suitable cultch, and there are among the extensive mangrove flats fringing the banks, a large quantity of spat, which only needs planting out to yield a large return.

I pointed out to Johnson the advantage he would gain from conserving this ware, and also explained how easy it would be to collect spat on the beds themselves, where, with but little labor, it could be tended, until it had developed into a marketable commodity.

Johnson has a second lease lower down the river, which is equal if not superior to the first, but he is not using it, giving as a reason that it is subject to depredations by the half-castes and navvies. Johnson does a little fishing in the river, and finds Kiama a ready market for his catches.

Lake Wolumla.

Proceeding onwards to Shoalhaven, I reached Wolumla Lake, a sheet of water about 4 miles south-east of Greenwell Point; this water is about $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles long, by half that distance in width. At present the lake is very low, having at high tide scarcely more than 5 feet of water in any part. The entrance to the sea is open to a width of about 50 yards, and a passage through is quite capable to whale a boat.

Having in view an idea, sometime since expressed to the Commissioners, of the suitability of the coastal lakes as breeding grounds, or nurseries for fish, I thought that this lake from its position would probably, prove as suitable as any other for the purpose. I had also considered that it might be advantageous, under certain conditions, to lease coastal lakes to responsible persons as fishing grounds, believing that in a sheet of water of such extent as Wolumla Lake, both fish culture and fish capture could proceed, as it were, simultaneously. Of course, to do this legislation, somewhat on the lines of the chapter of the Fisheries Act, 1881, relating to private fisheries, would be necessary.

To test the present producing capabilities of the lake I set at sunset a $4\frac{1}{2}$ -inch meshing-net of 60 fathoms in length, and leaving it for only an hour, succeeded in capturing a quantity of large fish—mullet, bream, black-fish. This result as the product of an hour's setting I consider to be very satisfactory; and estimating from it what might be the take of a whole night's setting with a net of twice or three times its length, and of less mesh, it is easy to imagine that payable results would follow. The advantage of a meshing-net, or more properly a set-net, is that it does not in any way disturb the feeding on the breeding grounds, as a hauling-net must necessarily do, and in my opinion it could, under official supervision, be used as well in any closed waters, except during spawning times, without detriment to the development of young fry.

During the last twelve months four fishing-boats have been working this lake with great success. As an evidence of its capabilities I may mention that two or three years since when it was first tried, a fisherman, George Wheeler, made a take of fifty baskets in one haul.

The men recently working here made very good catches; they could be fishing the lake now were it not for a dense slime, which is held in the water, and damages their nets. This slime is said to be due to the over-abundance of fresh water, the result of continued rainy weather.

Lake Illawarra.

OWING to wet weather setting in I was unable to follow out my intention to inspect the fisheries on this lake; I gathered, however, the following information:—

There are in the lake at present nine boats and nineteen men. All the take is carted to Unanderra, and thence sent either to Sydney, Wollongong, or Kiama. The local sale in the Illawarra district has very much increased; about a thousand baskets were sold there in the year. This originated at the time of the strike, when many miners turned to the occupation of fish-hawkers, some of whom have since kept to the business.

Fish are sold free of commission at 8s. and 9s. per basket to these hawkers, who are thus able to earn good wages.

The fishermen on the lake capture by hauling-nets in the summer and meshing-nets in the winter. The latter season is selected for meshing on account of the coldness of the water, making it inconvenient to work hauling-nets.

The inspector reports that this partial adoption of the meshing-net has increased the supply of young fish, since by its use the necessity for disturbing the nursery grounds is obviated. This experience, related by the inspector, corroborates the view I had formed of the desirableness of urging the use of meshing-nets in the lake waters of the coast. I have referred to this matter in my report on Lake Wolumla.

I also submit for consideration whether it would not be advantageous to establish under legislation, somewhat on the lines of the private fisheries under the Fisheries' Act, a system of licensing or leasing some of the smaller lakes to responsible individuals.

Licenses

Licenses to gather Spat.

Minutes by Chief Inspector of Fisheries, and Extracts.

1 April, 1890.

REFERRING generally to the fact that licenses to gather the spat of oysters are so much abused, I submit, for the consideration of the Commissioners, whether any should be granted in future.

LINDSAY THOMPSON.

Com. Minute: The Chief Inspector to make suggestions as to gathering and disposal of spat to lessees.

Memorandum by the Chief Inspector of Fisheries' as to future issue of Spat Licenses.

Department of Fisheries, Sydney, 16 April, 1890.

As the law stands I am not able to suggest any course which would be practically effective. The 34th Regulation, Oyster Fisheries Act, is ultra vires so far as it permits the taking of spat from unleased Crown land; and as the Act itself, section 15, allows persons to take oysters therefrom for their own consumption, unprincipled lessees avail themselves of the concession to gather surreptitiously marketable oysters for purposes of sale. The consequence is that bonâ fide lessees, who are disposed to work their leases systematically and legally, are handicapped by any holder of a lease of (say) 100 yards or so, who under color of a license gathers marketable oysters far and near for sale.

Of course while the present law exists this practice will continue. All I can suggest is that spat licenses, if issued at all, should issue only to a lessee whose bonâ fides is unquestionable, and that every issue should be preceded by a special report from an inspector as to the manner in which the lessee applying is working and improving his lease.

In the case of a lessee applying for a license contemporaneously with the issue of his lease, such a report could not be made. But in my opinion all lessees should rely for their supply more upon the use of fascines and other spat collectors fixed within their areas than upon licenses which are simply instruments to legalize the spoliation of ground capable of being utilised for oyster culture, and are open to abuse in the manner I have indicated.

I think that the adoption of the suggestions made herein will be evidence that the Commissioners have done what little it is in their power to do to minimize the evil referred to.

LINDSAY THOMPSON,
Chief Inspector of Fisheries.

Commissioners' Minute: The Chief Inspector to report to the Board as to the best methods of collecting spat on our own reserves, with the object of demonstrating to the lessees the desirableness of collecting their own spat instead of depending on supplies obtainable from Crown lands.

Department of Fisheries, 8 May, 1890.

As an initial step, I recommend that a spat-catching station be established on the reserve at Greenwich, which several years since was placed at the disposal of this Department. I have recently inspected the locality, and although it is kept stripped of oysters there are evidences that rapid growth would be attainable under supervision. It will be necessary to place a man in charge, and to provide him a residence. This would be the chief cost; the preparation of the ground and provision of cultch material would be covered by (say) £10. If the attempt proved successful here it could easily be extended to other waters.

LINDSAY THOMPSON.

Commissioners' minute: Resolved that the Chief Inspector report as to what officer at present in the Commission would be most fit to supervise Port Hacking and take charge of experiments for the catching and laying down of oyster spat.

Minute by Chief Inspector of Fisheries: To establish a spatting station at Port Hacking would, while involving the removal of an inspector from another water, deprive the Commissioners of his services in any other direction. When I proposed the station at Greenwich I had it in view to utilise the services of the officer placed there in supervising the closed waters of Lane and Iron Coves. I think Assistant-inspector Curan could most easily be spared to take charge of the spatting station, but whoever may be placed there it should be maintained under my own personal direction.

Commissioners' minute: Call a special meeting to consider the question of a Spat Station.

Resolved that the Commissioners are of opinion that it is desirable to carry out experiments with the view of collecting, growing, and cultivating the spat of oysters, publishing the results for the information of the lessees of oyster-bearing areas, and that the Colonial Secretary be invited to apportion a sum of money (say £300) for the purpose.

Trout Ova.

Minute by Commissioners of Fisheries.

RESOLVED to make application to either the Geelong Acclimatisation Society or other societies for trout ova—as many as can be procured.

The Chief Inspector to make proper arrangements for their reception. Communicate with Mr. Murray as to his ponds being utilised after being hatched.

Minute

Minute by Chief Inspector of Fisheries.

Reception of Trout Ova.

I have written to the Acclimatisation Societies of Victoria and New Zealand for trout ova. In respect to the Commissioners' direction to make proper arrangements for its reception, I recommend that a hatching station be at once started at Berrima, on the site indicated in my report of last year, to which I invite further reference now. Of course it will not be impossible to hatch the ova in the back kitchen as heretofore, and with another apparatus to hatch a large number in a small space; but provision must be made for the fry after it has passed the alevin stage, and by that time the Sydney temperature will have so much increased that there will be no certainty of the fish being able to withstand it, and as the temperature will continue on the increase for months, only fatal results can be expected. I offer these remarks, presuming that it is not intended this year to repeat the experiment of turning the fry adrift at the early age of three months, for much better results will be likely to accrue if it be kept in ponds and tended until the following spring. By that time it will be old enough to care for itself, and food in the shape of insect life will then be in abundance. If this suggestion should commend itself to the Commissioners it will be necessary to provide, in the comparatively cool climate of Berrima, sufficient hatching and nursery accommodation for the quantity of ova which may be available, together with water supply and a caretaker's residence. The cost of a small weatherboard cottage, with a windmill and pump or a ram for water supply, a hatching shed and ponds, would probably be between £500 and £600. I ask further consideration of the instructions to obtain from Mr. Murray the use of his dams for the fry. If turned loose in these ponds it could not readily be captured when required for distribution, nor could it in them receive the daily supply of food and care necessary for its regular and continuous development. Nursery ponds, to be under proper control, should be of rectangular shape, long and narrow. In such receptacles the fry could be properly looked after, and good results might with confidence be expected.—

LINDSAY THOMPSON, Chief Inspector of Fisheries.

Minute by Commissioners of Fisheries.

The Chief Inspector to be instructed to cover over and erect a large trough in the back yard for the rearing of young trout when hatched. This has been done, as directed, by Allen and Walker.—L.G.T.

The Hon. Secretary of the Wellington Acclimatisation Society, New Zealand, to The Chief Inspector of Fisheries, New South Wales.

Sir,

Wellington, 25 July, 1890.

I am in receipt of your letter of the 15th instant, asking if our society can supply your department with any trout ova.

As we have some ready and the season is far advanced, I send you a case containing 5,000 brown trout ova (Salmo fario) and 2,000 Loch Leven trout ova (Salmo Levenensis). I also send you, as an exceedingly interesting experiment, two cans with 500 American Brook Char in each can, in the alevin stage, which I trust will arrive safely.

The Union Steamship Co. have, with their usual courtesy, taken the packages free of freight, and Captain Neville is going to look after them.

Yours, &c.,

ALEX. J. RUTHERFURD,

Hon. Secretary.

The Chief Inspector of Fisheries, New South Wales, to The Hon. Secretary, Wellington Acclimatisation Society, New Zealand.

Sir,

Department of Fisheries, Sydney, 8 August, 1890.

I have the honor, by direction of the Commissioners' of Fisheries for this Colony, to acknowledge the receipt of your letter dated 25th ultimo, advising me of shipment of salmonidæ, particularised in the margin, and to inform you, that both the fry and ova reached here in good condition, and with scarcely any loss; about fifty only of the ova and a dozen of the fry were dead.

The Commissioners regard with very great satisfaction the successful result of the transit of the Brook Char, which at this present time seem to be in perfect health, and are feeding very freely in their troughs.

The Loch Leven trout ova have all hatched out, the loss subsequent to deposit on the trays being quite inconsiderable, and the brown trout ova are now in process of hatching.

In conveying the thanks of the Commissioners for the courteous manner in which your society has responded to their request, I am to say that any costs which have been incurred in connection with the matter will be gladly defrayed.

I have, &c.,

LINDSAY THOMPSON,

Chief Inspector of Fisheries.

Memorandum by the Chief Inspector of Fisheries.

I HAVE a private letter from the Hon. Secretary, Wellington Acclimatisation Society, in which, amongst other matters, he states that the Society is so much interested in the propagation of fish that it does not propose to ask payment for the consignment of char fry and trout ova sent here.

Notwithstanding, I think the generous view taken should have recognition, and I suggest that a donation be made to the Society. Further, as the Society does not seem to be aware of the mode of transmitting fry in closed jars, which mode I had the honor to suggest to the Commissioners, I should like to send a few of the remaining fry to Wellington as an experiment.

LINDSAY THOMPSON,

Chief Inspector of Fisheries.

22/10/90.

Minute by Commissioners of Fisheries.

Donate 5 guineas, and send a few Loch Leven trout as an experiment.

The

5,000 brown trout ova (Salmo fario).
2,010 Loch Leven Trout ova (Salmo levenensis).
1,000 fry American Brook Char (Salmo fontinalis).

The Hon. Secretary, Wellington Acclimatisation Society, New Zealand, to The Chief Inspector of Fisheries, New South Wales.

Sir,

Parliament Buildings, Wellington, 4 November, 1890.

I have to thank you for your cablegram, and subsequent letter of 23rd October, on the subject of the exceedingly interesting experiment in the transit of live trout fry in hermetically sealed jars.

The s.s. "Tekapo" arrived here from Sydney direct on the 29th ult., her sixth day at sea, and I duly received the jars packed in sawdust, the temperature of the cool chamber they were in having varied from 66 degrees to 55 degrees during the voyage.

The officers of the vessel were much interested in the experiment, and we were all pleased to find the fry lively, only one fish, the largest in one of the bottles, being dead.

As the day was a warm one I placed a lump of ice in the sawdust to keep the temperature down, and after showing the live fish to the press the box was taken by afternoon train 60 miles to our ponds, and hatching at Masterton.

On carrying the box to the hatching house the temperature of the water in the bottle was found to be 50 degrees, the air in the hatching 50 degrees, and the water in the trough prepared for the fry 54 degrees.

We then liberated the fry in one of the jars, and they all swam away, and were quite lively in their movements. On examining the other jar we found the fry lively, with the exception of the dead one noticed on arrival, and decided to place it in a cool place and see how long the fish would live in a state of quiescence.

On the next day (30th October) the liberated fry were strong and healthy, but two of those in the jar were dead, and another one sickly; their eyes protruding probably denoted death by strangulation.

On the following day (October 31st) the fry liberated in the box were as strong and feeding as well as any in the hatchery, but all the imprisoned fish but three were dead, and they all died that evening, the eighth day from Sydney. The fact of these fish being past the alevin stage made the experiment a more difficult one, the water in each of the jars being to a certain extent foul from excrement.

I propose to repeat the experiment by the s.s. "Tekapo" returning to Sydney at the end of the week, the boat that will probably take this letter, but will write you further on the subject.

Thanking you for the donation of £5 5s., promised towards the funds of our Society,

I have, &c.,

ALEX. J. RUTHERFURD,
Honorary Secretary.

The Hon. Secretary of the Wellington Acclimatisation Society, New Zealand, to The Chief Inspector of Fisheries, New South Wales.

Sir,

Parliament Buildings, Wellington, 8 November, 1890.

As advised in my letter of the 4th instant, I am sending you two boxes in the cool chamber of the s.s. "Tekapo," containing live trout fry, hermetically sealed.

The larger one has four jars in it packed in sawdust.

Jar No. 1	contains	15	Loch Leven	trout fry,	10	weeks	old.
Jar No. 2	"	13	"	"	"	"	"
Jar No. 3	"	16	brown	trout fry,	9	weeks	old.
Jar No. 4	"	13	"	"	"	"	"

These fry have not been fed for ten hours before being placed in the jars, in order to try to prevent the water being fouled by excrement. The temperature of the water in which they were placed was 54°, atmosphere at the time 55°.

The small box has two jars with about $\frac{3}{4}$ pint of water in each, in which fifteen and eight brown trout fry have been placed respectively. These fish have just absorbed their yolk sac, but have not yet been fed, and they are the youngest fry we have.

The fish were placed in the jars at 6 a.m. on the morning of the 7th (yesterday), and came down 60 miles by rail. The steamer has been put off from 3 p.m. yesterday to 2 p.m. to-day, so that the jars have been here since then, and on inspecting the fish before sending them I find them lively. In order to prepare you for the shipment I am sending the following cablegram:—"Experiment successful repeating by 'Tekapo.'" I will ask the officers of the vessel to look after them and shall be interested in hearing the result from you.

These are valuable experiments and I would suggest an interchange of them; if you are cabling, "Rutherford, Wellington," will be a sufficient address. I lent the papers you sent me to a member who has neglected to return them, and if not causing you any inconvenience shall be glad to receive duplicates, also any good work on the fishes of New South Wales. Have not you any good fresh water fish suitable for any waters here that will not do for Salmonidæ? I wonder if prawns would live in salt water hermetically sealed; you might try some experiments in this direction.

I have, &c.,

ALEX. J. RUTHERFURD,
Honorary Secretary.

The Acting Secretary, Department of Fisheries, New South Wales, to The Hon. Secretary, Wellington Acclimatisation Society, New Zealand.

Sir,

Department of Fisheries, New South Wales, 22 November, 1890.

I have the honor to acknowledge with thanks the receipt of the two boxes mentioned in your letter of the 18th instant, containing trout fry.

On opening the smaller box with two small jars of brown trout fry, I regret to say that I found them all dead, and from their appearance am of the opinion that they must have died soon after their immersement.

The experiment with regard to the fry in the larger box was however very successful, inasmuch as out of the fifteen Loch Leven in No. 1 jar only one had died, the remainder being lively, while those in No. 2 jar were all alive, and for the most part vigorous.

Six out of the sixteen brown trout fry in No. 3 jar had died, but with regard to No. 4 jar there were no casualties to report.

The boxes were obtained from the "Tekapo" on Monday morning the 18th, and opened at 10-30 a.m., the water in the jar being clear and free from excrement, and the temperature 63°. From this it will be seen that the fry were hermetically sealed up for 10 days 3½ hours.

When liberated into the trough the fry for the most part were, and remained exceedingly lively for some time, and although every effort was made to keep the temperature down by the assistance of ice, 67° was the lowest to which it could be brought, and the fry gradually sickened and died one after the other, so that at present there are but three brown and four Loch Leven left.

From experiments made some short while ago with regard to prawns, I believe we will be able to keep them also alive for several days in hermetically sealed jars, but on this matter I will communicate with you at a later date.

I have much pleasure in forwarding you under separate cover Reports of this Department for the years 1888 and 1889.

I have, &c.,

EDWARD J. ELLIS,

Acting Secretary.

INSPECTORS' ANNUAL REPORTS, 1890.

Tweed River Fisheries.

3 January, 1891.

FISH have been very plentiful in this river the past year. There are not any fishermen here, but several people have short seines for their private use, and can get fish at any time, consisting of bream, whiting, sea-mullet, flat-tail mullet, tarwhine, black fish, taylor, flathead, and jew fish.

Herrings are caught occasionally, and fresh-water perch are often caught at the head of the river. Schnapper and both black and red rock-cod have been plentiful at the reefs off Cook's Island. Most of the oyster leases are in good condition.

Sea-mullet were about from the beginning of the year till the end of June, and very numerous in May. There were only a few shoals seen coming in from May to June, and only one shoal noticed going out over the bar, but at the time that shoal was seen going out the bay to the northward of the port was alive with mullet. I believe that most of the sea-mullet seen the first three months of the year had come down river, there having been a deal of fresh water in the river at that time. Bream are always numerous, and whiting were very plentiful in the summer months. There has been a great quantity of spawn outside this season, some of it coming in and lodging about the beaches. Some was of a greenish but most of it a brownish colour. Have seen a great many shoals of fish outside the bar, but as they were deep could not make out their kinds.

About one-half of the oyster-culture leases are in very good condition, and a quantity of marketable oysters on them. There have been 136 bags taken during the year, most of which were shipped to Sydney; a few sent up river (local consumption). Two leases have been totally destroyed by mud being deposited on them through freshes, and two others partially. One of the deeper water leases has no oysters on it, evidently having been worked too bare, there being nothing on it but shells.

Have not seen any sign of the worm or mud disease on any part of the river this year.

I do not think any oysters on the leases have spawned here the last year, as there is no small spat showing near the leases. The only place small spat is showing is on ballast heaps near the heads, some distance from the leases. The oysters now being shipped are very full and fat; believe nearly spawning.

The suitability of the fishing grounds within this district, for trawling, I cannot report as to, but there are many splendid hauling grounds for seines, from the entrance to the head of the river. Fish are generally plentiful about the station, but more so up river, more especially in the broadwaters some few miles from the entrance.

WILLIAM M'GREGOR,
Acting Assistant Inspector of Fisheries.

Clarence River Fisheries.

12 January, 1891.

IN order to form a correct idea of the condition and prospects of the Clarence River oyster-beds, it will be necessary to refer back to the flood of 1887, which proved so disastrous to the oysters,

It will be found on reference to the report for that year that 84 per cent. of the oysters were killed.

But, yet after all this vast destruction of oysters in the early part of the year, in the month of October in the same year the largest fall of spat appeared that had been seen for years previous.

The question naturally arises, if such a wholesale destruction of oysters had taken place, from whence came this large quantity of spat almost immediately afterward; the answer may be this: it was produced from a few oysters in the middle of the channel where the depth of water is greater, and consequently contained during flood time enough salt for the preservation of those oysters.

It is satisfactory to note that these deep-water oysters are very seldom interfered with in any way, and rightly so, seeing that they form the source of supply for the whole of the lower beds.

The dredging of these beds did not commence again until the early part of 1889, and continued during the summer season with very good results, until the flood of 1890 again devastated the beds, though not quite so disastrous as the flood of 1887, still quite three parts of the entire number may be put down as killed.

The fact that any but the deep-water oysters were saved from destruction may be attributed to the extraordinary high tides which occurred during the early part of the year, thereby keeping back a large portion of the fresh water which otherwise must have found its way into Lake Wooleweyah and its channel.

Between the destruction caused by the flood and the endeavours of some of the lessees to obtain all the oysters they could at that time, those known as the lower beds were left in a very moderate condition. There has been an average spawn during the early part of spring, but none since.

The

The output of oysters from the Clarence River must necessarily be very limited during the present season; in fact one lease has been so denuded as to render it unfit to work at a profit for the present.

I am conducting experiments to obtain accurate information regarding the conditions of the weather, the salinity of the water, the season, and other matters relative to the spawning of oysters, by which I hope to be able to furnish additional particulars on this important question.

The leases known as the upper leases are still unproductive, and have been so for years past, in consequence of which the greater portion has been surrendered.

In reference to the barren condition of the beds of the upper waters I have under the permission accorded to me stocked a small area of the deep water with oyster-shells and oysters, with the view of resuscitating those beds, and I note that my recommendation that the area be set apart as a public oyster reserve has been duly gazetted.

The worm disease which made its appearance on the oyster-beds in the beginning of the year, and has worked so much havoc on the beds in other parts of the Colony, has to all appearances died out, or, at all events, it has disappeared so far that, although I have opened numbers of oysters during the present season, I have not detected a single instance.

The net-fishing industry is not increasing as it should do in so fine a district, where it may be safely said that the waters are teeming with the different varieties of edible fish, nor is it at all likely to improve under the present arrangement of shipping to Sydney.

The Iluka Fish Canning Company's prospectus has been published, and a large portion of the capital has been invested. As soon as the necessary amount has been subscribed, the company proposes (as noted in last year's report) to erect refrigerating chambers, to enable them to purchase fish almost to an unlimited quantity as soon as caught.

This enterprise if brought to a success should stimulate the fishing industry, and reduce the fishermen's losses and expenses which are at present incurred in shipment.

As a commercial enterprise it should well repay the investors, there being an abundance of fish at all seasons to be had for canning purposes.

The prawn-fishing industry has not assumed dimensions beyond local requirements. There was, I believe, an attempt made to open up a market in Melbourne, but the venture not proving a success was discontinued.

It is doubtful if prawning can be carried on successfully on the Clarence for some time to come, the drawback being the very extensive area over which these fish are constantly moving, thereby rendering it difficult for fishermen to net in sufficient quantities to supply a large market even if such were established within a reasonable distance.

For breaches of the Fisheries Act during the latter half of the year there were two fishermen summoned, but only one appeared, and a nominal fine was inflicted.

The number of fishermen's licenses issued was thirty-four, and the number of fishing-boat licenses seventeen.

The quantity of fresh fish shipped in ice to Sydney may be estimated at 3,461 baskets, and the local consumption at about 350 baskets.

The quantity of salt fish, which is exclusively in the hands of a few Chinese fishermen, amounted to twenty bags.

The number of bags of oysters taken from the different leases during the year was 1,167, of which number thirteen bags were consumed locally, and the rest shipped to Sydney.

JAS. MASSINGHAM,
Acting Assistant Inspector of Fisheries.

Macleay River Fisheries.

8 January, 1891.

I HAVE the honor to submit my report on the fisheries of the Macleay River for the year ending 31st December, 1890.

The first three months of the year, the river being flooded several times, there was very little fishing done, the fresh water driving the fish outside; also being very destructive to the small fish.

The mullet season commenced 1st April, ending about the end of May, not being a good season on account of the fresh water confining the fish to the lower parts of the river.

Net fishing for the Sydney market has been carried on by four boats at the heads, sending away 1,643 baskets for the year, the principal kinds being whiting, bream, flathead, and mullet. The local trade has exceeded the export as all the fishing boats on the river have been fishing for local consumption.

This river has been opened for a long period, and the fishing having been carried on for years without intermission by a number of fishermen the fish are greatly decreasing in quantity.

As for oysters there are no cultivated beds on the river, and the floods have destroyed all the natural growth for a number of years.

J. A. JAMIESON,
Acting Assistant Inspector of Fisheries.

Nambucca Fisheries.

Nambucca Heads, 31 December, 1890.

I HAVE the honor to submit the annual report for your information. The oyster-beds are improving, owing to the freshets removing a sediment of mud, leaving the old shells and small stones bare, to which the spat adheres. If the beds are allowed to rest for a period no doubt they will be well worth working.

No oysters have been shipped during the present year.

About seventy baskets of fish have been taken by two fishermen with boat, all of which have been used for local wants.

The sea mullet season was only moderate, commencing on the 30th of April and ending on the 18th of July.

Salmon, from the 14th to the 31st of October, were observed along the beach, and some fine schools passed into the river, being the first salmon seen in the river for the last five years.

Diary for 1890 posted.

W. J. WHAITES,
Assistant Inspector of Fisheries, Nambucca.
Bellinger

Bellinger River Fisheries.

2 January, 1891.

I HAVE the honor to inform you, in reference to the Fisheries of the Bellinger River, that the oyster leases owned by Mr. N. Hanley, have this year, for the first time, been fairly remunerative, he having shipped to Sydney, from the 1st January to the 31st December, 1890, 200 bags of oysters, which have realised at the rate of 30s. per bag—the sum of £300, clear of all expenses; and providing there are no heavy floods this year he expects to ship fully 400 bags. This year the oysters appear to keep quite free of disease of any sort, having a nice clean shell, and growing very fast on the beds.

As to the net-fishing there is one man that is trying to make a living at it, but his success is very small, as fish are scarce in the river.

THOS. STEWART,

Acting Assistant Inspector of Fisheries.

The Manning Fisheries.

6 January, 1891.

THE condition of the natural deep-water oyster-beds in the south channel were showing signs of improvement on the 27th and 28th of October. I tested the whole of the south channel deep-water oyster-beds, and am pleased to state that after a careful trial found on one portion of the deep water, for about 100 yards in length and a few yards in width, a fair show of spat and young oysters, this portion being about the centre of the south channel oyster-beds. I formed the opinion that spat would set in over the whole of the south channel.

On Monday, 5th January I again tested the south channel, and am pleased to say that I found spat more or less over the whole of the south channel, from five to ten young oysters and spat per haul.

On that portion that I found in October I ascertained that the bed had extended for about 400 yards in length, and from 10 to 20 yards in width, with an average of from 80 to 100 young oysters and spat per haul, which shows that the spat is spreading fast all over the beds. In the examination of the young oysters and spat I am pleased to state that very few of the young are dead. The few that are dead is, I think, the result of the dredge, when I tested them, therefore I do not intend to test them again until the end of March or April, as the shell of the young oysters are very thin and soft, and the least knocking about will break it.

The foreshore oysters in patches are doing remarkably well. Should there be nothing to disturb the young oysters and spat there should be a very fair sample of marketable oysters in the south channel in eighteen months or two years.

Strange to say that there is no sign of spat in the main river as yet, still I am in hopes of spat setting on the main river-beds before next winter.

The total quantity of oysters collected on the Manning River during the year amounts to 171 bags, of which 137 bags were shipped at Sydney, and thirty-four bags retained for district use.

There has also been imported by Mr. E. Woodward eighty-four bags of New Zealand and other oysters, which were laid down on Scott's Creek bed for fattening, of which fifty-two bags have been reshipped; these have given a fair return, as a good number of them were in bad condition when they arrived here.

There have been thirty oyster culture leases cancelled on the Manning River during the year, and five of the cancelled leases reapplied for by other lessees.

ANDREW GYLER,

Assistant Inspector of Fisheries.

The Cape Hawke Fisheries.

31 December, 1890.

I HAVE the honor to furnish annual report of the condition of oysters and fisheries, Cape Hawke.

The oyster fisheries at present are in a most thriving state, as most of the beds and foreshores are well stocked with young oysters from spawn, of which large quantities set in here in the months of August, October, and December, and reached 2 miles up the river; these oysters are of quick growth. Mr. Woodward has sent from Sydney about 250 bags of oyster-shells, and has had the shells placed on some of his leased beds as an experiment to catch spawn, which I think will be a success. Only thirty-six bags of oysters have been sent from here for the year 1890, and most of the oysters were New Zealand and Port Stephens.

Net-fish of all kinds are very plentiful and in good condition, but net-fishing is a thing of the past, owing to there being no steam communication with Sydney. Prawns are very plentiful here at present; for the first six months ending June 26, the export of fish was—261 cases of preserved, 115 bags of salt, 645 baskets of fresh, and 17 cases of smoked fish; and for the six months ending December 31, 1890, 32 cases smoked, 298 baskets of fresh, and 74 bags of salt fish. Shoals of salmon came into the river on the 3rd and 21st November.

A. H. KENDALL,

Acting Assistant Inspector of Fisheries.

Camden Haven Fisheries.

CAMDEN Haven has a grand show of young and marketable oysters, and spat is still setting in on some of the beds.

There has also been four leases applied for during the year which I measured and forwarded report to head quarters.

Sea mullett made their first appearance in the river on the 18th of March; they were working their way up the river against a strong fresh.

Several large shoals of salmon appeared in the river on the 9th of September, and are still there.

Whiting have been very scarce here until last month; there is a fair share of other kinds of fish—bream, flathead, taylor, and jew-fish.

Licensed

Licensed Fishermen.

There has been issued in Sydney for this river five yearly fishermen's licenses, and three yearly fishing boat licenses. Six half-yearly fishermen's licenses, and two half-yearly fishing-boat licenses.

Only 177 baskets of fish have been sent to Sydney market, on account of their not being able to get them away to market in good condition. There is or have been three men fishing and cleaning them during the last two months, but they complain of the irregularity of the steamer, as they have lost several cases of fish and eels on account of the steamer being delayed several times on the river.

There has also been an average of about ten baskets per week caught for local consumption.

ANDREW GYLER,
Assistant Inspector of Fisheries.

Nelson's Bay (Port Stephens) Fisheries.

I HAVE the honor to submit the following report on the state of the Fisheries under my supervision for the year 1890:—

Fish.

Throughout the year there has been a plentiful supply of good edible fish in the harbour, the upper tributaries (i.e., the closed portions) teeming with them at all times. The total quantity caught for the year has been about 5,208 baskets, or an average of 434 baskets per month, being a decrease on the previous year of 771 baskets; garfish and herrings, and I doubt not other valuable varieties of fish have also been very abundant along the coast, but the net fishermen will not "brave the storm with firm endeavour," whilst there is a pittance to be gained nearer home, nor have they the means to enable them to adopt the system required to prosecute deep sea fishing.

From the beginning of the great labour strike fish began to deteriorate in value, so much so that the fishermen here could not earn wages at their calling; consequently there has been less and less caught since about the end of August, at which time almost the whole of the net fishermen either sought other occupations or started cray-fishing; hence the fishing grounds since that date have had a much needed rest.

Oysters.

In general the oysters on the foreshore leases are in good marketable condition. Spatting has been very good on most of, if not on all the leases, but the oyster-worm is to be met with everywhere. The worm has almost entirely destroyed all dredge oysters; in fact it is a difficult matter to get one good oyster on any of the deep-water leases. Most of the lessees have theories of their own as to the causes, and the effectual eradication of the worm, but nothing has been done by the majority that would prove their theories to be correct. If they would endeavour to keep their leased areas free from weeds and slime I think the worm would have very little chance of doing much harm, and the spat would by that means settle upon the boulders should there be any such upon the areas.

During the year a total of 869 bags of oysters have been sent away, being a decrease on the year 1889 of 691 bags.

In one or two instances lessees have signified to me their intentions of applying for spat licenses. Their argument is that as their neighbour has one they should have one also. I have in each case explained that as the license authorises the lessee to remove the spat, brood, and ware of oysters from public oyster reserves (of which there are none in Port Stephens), and only then in the presence of an inspector at times to be arranged, they (the lessees) would derive no advantages by holding such a license, yet the licenses have been issued to them, and the lessees in direct contradistinction of the above conditions remove oysters from Crown lands; but they neither tender me the fee required to be paid for each bag, nor do they in anywise inform me of the circumstance.

H. LAMAN,
Assistant Inspector of Fisheries.

Hunter River Fisheries.

5 January, 1891.

I HAVE the honor to forward annual report for the year just ended. The fish supply has been good and plentiful. Mullet was in large shoals in the river, from the bay to Morpeth, in the Hunter, and Seaham, in the Williams River, from January to May. They were in large shoals all over the river; but from the bay to Newcastle they were not so plentiful. There have been nine boats and eighteen men employed catching fish in the Hunter River this year, resulting in a take of 4,426 baskets of fish, all sold in Newcastle. There have been forty-three boats, and 101 men licensed to fish for the Hunter River this year. When I was up in November and December last the fish were in large shoals; I could hardly get my boat through them. The farmers about Raymond Terrace go out scooping on dark nights, and kill from 300 to 1,000 fish in a short time. The fish have increased since the river was closed up there. Bream, whiting, and flathead have been very scarce all the year.

Prawns.

The prawns have been plentiful and large this season; large shoals of them are all over the river, from Fullerton Cove to Morpeth, on the Hunter River, and to Clarence Town, on the Williams River. Eighteen boats and thirty-six men have been constantly employed catching prawns in the Hunter River since the season started, last October, and 1,970 baskets sent to Sydney, besides 562 baskets sent to Melbourne, and 1,077 baskets kept for use in Newcastle. The market was very bad for prawns in Sydney this season, so some of the fishermen started drying prawns for a merchant in Newcastle, to send to China. There were 200 baskets dried, weighing 18 cwt. They are now sending dried prawns to Sydney—there is more demand for them there. Prawns are increasing in the Hunter River every year since the closed season came in force. Total prawns caught, 3,089 baskets for the year just ended.

Oysters.

Oysters.

I am sorry to say there is very little improvement in the bay oyster-beds, but there is a good set of spat on two of them, in the back channel. I got from twenty to 120 young oysters to a haul of the dredge. The worm is still in the old shells, but not so bad as they were two or three months ago. I believe they are dying out. The few old oysters that are alive look healthy and in good condition, and some of them are spawning. When I was examining the oyster-beds last month the oysters were spawning—some of them spawned in the boat. There is a good set of spawn on the stones under the wharf at Bullock Island Dyke. The beds are all clean, except Yellow Tom's Point; there is a long silky weed growing on the shells there. Forty-five bags of oysters were got from the Hunter River oyster-beds this year.

HENRY CURAN,
Assistant Inspector of Fisheries.

Lake Macquarie Fisheries.

29 December, 1890.

THE Assistant Inspector has the honor to report to Mr. Chief-Inspector L. G. Thompson, for the information of the Fisheries Commission, the following particulars in connection with the fisheries under his charge, and the report is submitted earlier than usual in accordance with request:—

Baskets of Fish.—The number of baskets sent to market this year has been very large, and totals 15,085, which is far above last year's take, and the usual average, owing in part to its being a good year generally for fish in this lake, and to the very large take in one week, when the channel and closed grounds were open, to the unusually large number of 763 baskets were taken in six working days, and to four other large takes of 485, 458, 453, and 540 baskets.

Boats and Crews.—There have been twenty-nine boats licensed, most of which are the same boats as were licensed last year. The owners, as a rule, finding that the laws as to the fisheries are strictly enforced, give very little trouble. There are seventy-eight licensed fishermen, and the crews are changed now and then by departures and additions, but the license fees are very regularly paid.

Chinese.—There is only one camp of these men, five in number, with one boat, who send their fish to Sydney and Newcastle, and they have not dried any fish this year as far as can be ascertained. One net, belonging to these men, was seized by Sub-inspector Smithers, as being over length for a garfish net, but after being cut by Assistant-Inspector Boyd orders were given for the ends cut off to be returned, which was done.

Supply of Fish.—The fish in the lake and channel have been very plentiful, in spite of the great hindrance to the fishing caused by the immense quantity of blubber, which prevents parts of the lake being fished, and may act beneficially in that way. Sharks about the entrance and channel have been very numerous, and, no doubt, destructive, and a great number have been caught. Salmon and taylor have been also very plentiful, and as it is known that they are voracious and destructive, and of small market value, they, no doubt, decrease the number of marketable fish. Great numbers of small mullet, whiting, and garfish are found in these destructive fish when caught. It is respectfully suggested with regard to the salmon that numbers of them might be destroyed on the bar when they hang about there in countless numbers, by the use of dynamite, without interfering with good fish, which, as a rule, clear out of their way. Schnapper in the lake is not nearly so plentiful as a few years back, but the red bream seems to be increasing in number and size. Outside this valuable fish has also been very scarce for the past year, and the fishing for them, as a means of living, has been given up here.

Transport to Market.—Nearly all the fish taken in this lake are now sent to Sydney from the platform at Dora Creek, generally starting from there about 11 o'clock at night, and this arrangement is in every way an improvement, as it enables the fishermen to catch later in the evening, and the carriage of 12 miles or more by dray from Belmont to Newcastle is saved, and thus the fish is fresher and the cost of carriage less. The fishermen, however, complain that they have to leave men there to assist in loading the fish into the trains, which is not done at Cockle Creek station, from which some fish are sent. Some few baskets are also sent up the northern line, and the convenience of the train arrangements is also found in this case.

Prosecutions.—The inspector has great pleasure in reporting that the breaches of the Act in fishing on the closed waters, and in using illegal nets, have been unusually small, only one net having been seized by the inspector for the owner fishing in closed waters, out of which arose a prosecution against the owner, who was convicted. His mate absconded and has not been found.

The great benefit of having some part of the lake closed against net fishing has been shown by the great take above referred to, which shows that where the fish are comparatively undisturbed they will congregate and breed.

The assistant inspector ventures to suggest that one-half the lake might be entirely closed, in view of its not only becoming a large breeding ground, but so that the schnapper and other large fish might have a chance of resting there, and providing line fishing for the very large number of people who now visit the lake from all parts.

The Oysters in the lake itself are nearly extinct, but in the channel there are some to be found at low tide. The Assistant Inspector is of opinion that oyster culture could not be carried out here successfully.

WM. BOYD,
Assistant Inspector of Fisheries.

Tuggerah Beach Lakes Fisheries.

6 January, 1891.

I HAVE the honor to submit my report on the Tuggerah Beach Lakes Fisheries.

Since I have been appointed to the charge of these lakes there has been a plentiful supply of fish, but I believe this is only owing to the very lengthy nets which the fishermen are using, which, if they are allowed to use for a much longer time, there will be very few fish to be caught here.

I recommend the entrance of all three lakes here, as also the mouths of all the principal creeks, and the large flat on the southern side of the middle lake, to be closed against netting.

On all these places mentioned are to be seen large shoals of very young fish.

The average number of boats has been sixteen, and forty-eight men.

The total catch since 11th August has been 4,793 baskets.

CHARLES GORDON,
Assistant Inspector of Fisheries.

The

The Hawkesbury River Fisheries.

12 January, 1891.

I HAVE the honor to forward my annual report on the fisheries and oyster fisheries of the Hawkesbury River, the district under my supervision.

With your permission I will first deal with the net and line fisheries.

This industry is carried on all the year through, giving average employment to about thirty men, sometimes more, sometimes less.

The total quantity of fish caught, and carried into consumption during the past year, has been 4,511 baskets, the total of which is now carried by railway, some to the Sydney market, but a large percentage to the suburbs of Sydney and inland towns, particularly during the winter months.

A large portion of this river has been closed against the use of fishing-nets, and fish of all sorts have again become and are now fairly plentiful.

Line-fishing has also been fairly successful by licensed fishermen, but it is also largely carried on by pleasure parties.

The enormous area of water, of this really fine deep water river, for many miles 50 or 60 feet deep, and never less than 10 feet in the channel, I have reason to believe is now well stacked with all sorts of fish, either fresh-water fish or salt-water fish, according to locality.

I beg also to state, that great quantities of sharks have again made their appearance in Cowan Creek, that bream, mullet, and whiting, and other fish are plentiful, and that schnapper have been particularly scarce this summer.

The lower part of this river is just now infested with a great quantity of blubber, to the great hindrance of the fisherman, who find it often impossible to haul their nets.

The kinds of nets used on this river are mostly a common hauling-net, 2½-inch in the bunt, 3-inch wings, and about 130 fathoms long; also garfish-nets and sunken-nets, and for the Upper Hawkesbury, meshing-nets of 4-inch mesh.

Of the oyster fisheries on this river I beg to state that this industry is at present in a very unsatisfactory condition, the provisions of the Oyster Act of 1884 having altogether failed in their object, of inducing persons to go into oyster culture.

The oyster leases which were issued, but of which a large percentage have already been cancelled, have generally been used for dishonest purposes; the promiscuous mixing of all leases, large and small, has had the effect of totally stopping oyster culture, chiefly through lessees thieving from one another, and marketable oysters have now become really very scarce.

The worms in oysters, which committed such havoc in destroying oysters some two years ago, have not yet wholly disappeared, but are now principally confined to low water oysters.

The total shipments to market during the past year has been about 830 bags, of which quantity about 500 bags were imported oysters from New Zealand, and laid for fattening purposes, which leaves to this once famous river less than 400 bags for its yearly produce.

Of oyster culture there is none, and under present conditions there will be none.

I beg also to call your attention to the fact that a number of leases which were completely denuded of oysters I have recommended for cancellation, in terms of section 28, Regulation, Oyster Act of 1884.

There are only very few leases which are in fair condition. Several lessees have imported several hundred bags of oysters from New Zealand, and these have again spat, and have replenished the surrounding foreshores with spat.

I would beg further to state, that Birowra Creek is particularly bare of oysters, and so is Marra Marra Creek, and also Mooney Creek, these places having suffered severely by the last winter freshets.

P. SMITH,

Assistant Inspector of Fisheries.

Home Fisheries.

8 January, 1891.

I HAVE the honor to forward my report regarding the Fisheries under my supervision, for the year 1890.

In the first place I wish to say fish have been rather scarce in the waters of Port Jackson during the past year, and the causes I assign for this are—(first) through the heavy rains we had for some months, which swept the fish out to sea; and (secondly) the sewerage which, running into the harbour, diminishes the supply through covering the feeding-grounds.

The following kinds of fish have been more plentiful than formerly, namely:—Schnapper, king-fish, travally, and salmon; the last-named fish at times has been rather too numerous. Also there have been a number of small sharks and leather-jackets along the coast, which are obstacles to line-fishers.

I attended at the Fish Market at an early hour every morning for the past year, and the supply of fish there was very fair, but mostly all from distant places,—Broken Bay, Lake Macquarie, Tuggerah, Shoalhaven, Richmond, Macleay, Clarence, Manning, and other places. The fish are brought to market in baskets, and arrive there in very good condition, considering the long distances they are sent. If it were not for these places we should have a poor supply.

Cray fish have been plentiful, mostly coming from Port Stephens.

During the year good quantities of prawns have been brought to market, most of them being of a very fine quality, and bringing a good price.

In regard to oyster-culture in the harbour there is very little to say regarding it, as this article of food has almost disappeared from my district, with the exception of private wharfs; also Middle Harbour is not quite destitute of this favourite shell-fish—the rocks there being covered with small oysters, rather too small to be marketable.

THOMAS MULHALL,

Assistant Inspector of Fisheries.

George's

George's River Fisheries.

5 January, 1891.

I HAVE the honor to report the following regarding the waters under my supervision for the year 1890:—

Taking my district as a whole it is in a prosperous condition with fish, and more particularly prawns, for which it has been the greatest season ever known, fishermen sometimes catching forty or fifty baskets in one haul; at times more prawns were caught than could be disposed of at a price to pay for labour and the wear and tear of the nets. The principal places where prawns were caught in great quantities are Lady Robinson's Beach, Cook's River, Oyster and Kogarah Bays in George's River, those caught at Lady Robinson's Beach being of much larger size than any caught in the other mentioned places.

In the early part of the year, also in the winter months, freshes caused great quantities of fish to leave the closed waters, when fishermen made good hauls of fish, nearly all bream, about the lower portions of the river, and a great number of fish of all sizes and species were strewn along the shores dead, also many driven to sea, this being the cause of a scarcity in fish more particularly in the winter months, and as late as the months of September and October, but I am happy to state for the last six weeks of the year fish have increased in great quantities; in fact many bays and inlets in the open waters you could hardly see a fish three or four months ago, now Wolloware, Kogarah, Oyster, and Oatley's Bays, also in all parts of the closed waters fish to be seen plentiful. Flathead is the only fish that seems not to have been disturbed much by the freshes, only being driven down in the bay, as great numbers were caught by anglers there, as many as four and five dozen being caught in one hour by one party, also for the last two months anglers have caught good lots in the open and closed waters of George's and Woronora Rivers, especially flathead and jewfish.

It is useless my trying to give the number of baskets of fish taken from my district, as the fishermen live at many different places, fish being carted to market from La Perouse, Botany in several places, Cook's River, Lady Robinson's Beach, Sans Souci, Kogarah, and different parts of George's River. There are also a great many baskets of fish sold for local consumption.

Oyster Fisheries.—I have visited all parts of the river, and find all oysters below low-water mark in a bad state with the worm disease, not one being fit for market, also a great many dead. All oysters above low-water mark that I have seen are healthy and clear of the disease.

The private oyster fishery of L. Wray's, in Gwawley Bay, are mostly in good condition. There is a few infected with the disease, but those are what he removed from his oyster lease at Owen Reach over twelve months ago. Oysters on the Mangrove Flats at the lower parts of the river and Quibray and Weeney Bays are healthy, but the public do to the best of my knowledge collect about 200 bags of oysters a year from the shores of my district for their own consumption. It is singular that although oysters below low-water mark are infected with the disease all the foreshores of the river are covered with spawn.

P. GRANT,

Assistant Inspector of Fisheries,
George's River.

Lake Illawarra Fisheries.

14 January, 1891.

I do myself the honor to present the following report on the Fisheries in my district for the year ending 31st December, 1890.

There has been a considerable fall in the supply, the output being less by one-half than that of the previous year. This is owing to the very unseasonable weather prevalent during the greater part of the year, which had the effect of almost suspending fishing operations.

The total output was 4,354 baskets, of which 3,454 were forwarded to the metropolis, the balance being consumed in the district.

During the month of February, March, April, May, and June the water of the lake to depth of about 5 inches were perfectly fresh. This extreme freshness of the water had the effect of driving all the ground fish out of the Lake, mullet, blackfish, and pike being the only varieties that appeared to withstand this change, and even these fish were to a certain extent affected, their flesh being soft and not firm or healthy. Certainly these heavy rains have done a vast amount of good in the way of cleansing the lake, thus leaving it more favourable as a breeding and feeding ground.

There has been a heavy spawn during the latter part of the year. The varieties noticed were mullet, bream, flathead, and garfish.

Oysters.

In the channel at the entrance to the Lake there is a large quantity of young spat; these have attached themselves to the whelks that are so numerous in the flats. This is the first spawn that I have noticed in this lake. This spawn would appear to have come in from Windang Island, at the mouth of the channel.*

D. W. BENSON,

Assistant Inspector of Fisheries.

* Note by Chief Inspector of Fisheries.—The occurrence of oysters in this channel, coupled with the fact that they occur also in the channel at Lake Macquarie and in other embouchures, seems to corroborate the theory which I had the honor to suggest, viz., that extensive deposits of oysters exist along the seaboard, the actual location of which might, I think, be ascertained by a systematic series of experiments with the trawl and the dredge.—LINDSAY THOMPSON, 15/1/91.

Minumurra River Fisheries.

FISHING operations as heretofore have been confined to a couple of fishermen for local consumption.

Oysters.

The two beds held under lease are in a healthy condition. No oysters have been taken off them during the year.

These beds, if properly and systematically worked, would become extremely productive, the lessee to a great extent trusting to nature to stock his leases.

No disease exists.

D. W. BENSON,

Assistant Inspector.

Shoalhaven

Shoalhaven Fisheries.

6 January, 1891.

I HAVE the honor to submit to you my annual report of the fisheries under my supervision, in the Shoalhaven District, up to August, at which time I left to take charge of Tuggerah Beach Lakes.

In Broughton Creek there was no sign of any spat settling on any of the beds there; but in Berry's Creek, Comerong Bay, Goodnight Island, Crow Island, and Billy's Island, the beds seemed to be recovering.

Fish were very plentiful just before I left, the principal sorts being mullet, blackfish, bream, whiting, garfish, and flathead.

In Currumbene and Nooney Creeks, and Jervis Bay, the oysters are very thick, and as there is only one lessee in all these places he may expect to reap a rich harvest as the result of the care he is bestowing on his property.

Fish were very plentiful, but owing to the distance to cart them, and the uncertainty of the steamers running, there is not much done, although there is a plentiful supply of all sorts of beautiful fish, Bherrewerre. The oysters have all been taken away, and there is not much sign of spat settling yet.

The supply of fish was plentiful, principally mullet, black fish, bream, whiting, and garfish.

The take for the Shoalhaven District, from January 1st to August, has been—Oysters, 456 bags; fish, 2,613 baskets.

CHARLES GORDON,
Assistant Inspector of Fisheries.

Moruya Fisheries.

Moruya, 5 January, 1890.

I do myself the honor to send you the following report regarding the state of the oyster-beds and fisheries at this station:—

Regarding oysters there is nothing fresh to report. The principal leasees not living on the river, there has been no attempt at oyster-culture nor improvement of their respective areas, but I have no doubt they are deterred from effecting any improvements, through the harbour improvement works that are in progress. From what I have observed at the mouth of the river there should be no difficulty in cultivating oysters; likewise there must have been a good supply of spat in the river during the last three years.

A stone ballast dyke inside the heads three years ago was covered with sand; since that period the sand has drifted away and left the stones uncovered. At present the said stones are pretty well covered with oysters. I have no doubt, if undisturbed, in a twelve-months time would be marketable.

There were forty-nine bags of oysters sent from this river during the past year to Sydney and Braidwood.

There have been no licensed fishermen; the local market being limited, and besides a great many private parties having their own nets, it is not an easy matter for a licensed fisherman to make a living, especially as there is no direct steam communication with the Sydney market.

Schnappers have been very scarce on this part of the coast during the past year, although the leather-jackets have not been so plentiful as in former years.

The principal fish caught during the past year have been mullet, black-fish; also a few whiting, trevally, and flat-head.

There were shoals of salmon observed travelling north along the coast during the months of October and November, but they seemed to be deterred from entering the river. They would cross the bar, and after getting a little inside turn tail and clear out to the northward. I presume the dredging operations going on in the river being the cause.

I do not expect there will be any large supply of fish until these operations are completed, and we get a little deeper water, as all the old deep pools are filled up, so that the fish have no pools to resort to in the lower part of the river.

A. SUTHERLAND,
Assistant Inspector of Fisheries.

Lake George Fisheries.

6 January, 1891.

In submitting my report for the year 1890, on the fisheries of Lake George, I have the honor to report the closing of Butmaroo Creek and a portion of the lake against net-fishing has been productive of much good, and there is every evidence of an increase in the supply both of large and small fish.

Up to the present time this increase is most noticeable in Butmaroo Creek, principally of large and small cod.

In this creek, after a fresh or stormy weather, the large fish can be plainly seen in great numbers up the creek as far as they can get. This will prove how beneficial the closing of this creek and its entrance against net-fishing has been; and although I have taken every possible interest in the movements of the fish, yet I have never noticed this before this season.

During the present fishing season a very large supply of fish have been captured by the fishermen (licensed) by means of cross lines; these are still the principal means used for fishing in the lake. The fish have been caught all sizes, from 3 lb. up to 50 lb. weight, and in splendid condition.

During the stormy weather of last month several small fish have been washed ashore (one of which I forwarded to you for your information). A few perch were placed in the Turalla Creek by Mr. Powell, of Turalla, some four years ago; these must be increasing, but the lake being such a large sheet of water it will no doubt be some time before they appear plentiful, unless the creeks and the entrances are protected against net-fishing. During the past three months I have made several visits to different parts of the lake, with a view of capturing some fish to enable me to ascertain what stage the fish were in as regards spawning. I was very successful in capturing several fine fish full of roe but not ripe; one or two I got last month; the roe or spawn was about to extrude. It is a matter of great difficulty to ascertain the exact time of spawning; my experience leads me to believe that the cod in Lake George spawn all through the summer months. One thing I specially wish to bring under your notice is this: Every fish I have caught, or seen caught, I have opened and examined the stomach, and in five out of six instances I have not found any food, and yet the fish are so large, fat, and healthy.

Since

Since the Butmaroo Creek has been closed against net-fishing I have exercised every diligence to detect illegal fishing, and for a long time was unsuccessful, but at last, after a good deal of trouble, on the 30th November, at midnight, I was successful in catching Thomas and James Murphy setting their nets in the closed waters of Butmaroo Creek. I seized three nets, and have since prosecuted James Murphy, who was convicted and fined. Thomas Murphy was not prosecuted, for the reason that before proceedings were initiated he received a sentence of two years' imprisonment in Goulburn Gaol for an assault.

I beg to recommend the further closing of Butmaroo Creek, and the same area of the lake for another period of twelve months, by this means of protecting Lake George. It will no doubt become a large fishing centre.

FREDERICK NELSON,
Acting-Assistant Inspector of Fisheries.

Murray River Fisheries.

5 January, 1891.

I HAVE the honor to submit my Annual Report on the Fisheries on the Murray River and adjacent waters within the district under my supervision.

During the passed year I have seized two bag-nets and one gill-net.

I have given receipts for 9,223 cormorant's heads, and issued pay vouchers for the same to the amount of £159 8s. 2d. Had not the regulations relative to the reward for the destructive cormorants or shags been repealed in April last no doubt there would have been a very much larger number of heads presented; the continuous destruction of cormorants or shags doubtlessly would have been highly beneficial to the fishing industry in these waters and the result satisfactory if the Fisheries Department had received any adequate return for the expenditure, but as the persons receiving the greatest benefit, in most cases, do not even pay the small amount demanded for their license fees, it was scarcely to be expected that the department would continue paying away large sums of money for which it received no returns.

Owing to nearly the whole of the fishermen living on the Victorian bank of the Murray very few fishing licenses have been taken out during the year. I have seen a large number of bag-nets at various times hanging to dry on the Victorian banks of the river which I have no doubt have been set at night in our waters and taken out in the morning but as I have no power to touch them on that side it renders it very difficult to suppress illegal net-fishing on the Murray and also to institute legal proceedings against offenders, as in every case when I have seized a net I have never found any one in actual possession of it, and though I have been morally sure as to the owner in every instance they have persistently repudiated the ownership, though owing to the number of nets that I have seized since I have been supervising these fisheries there is not anything like the amount of illegal net-fishing carried on as compared to what there was some time back.

As a rule the rivers, creeks, and lagoons are much better supplied this year with fish than for some years past, no doubt owing to the prohibition of netting, which I earnestly recommend the Commissioners of Fisheries to continue in these waters for some time to come.

JOHN A. MANTON,
Assistant Inspector of Fisheries.

The Murray River Fisheries.

12 January, 1891.

IN submitting my annual report, I have the honor to inform you that fish of all kinds, known to the waters of this district, are increasing in consequence of the closing of the streams by the prohibition of netting.

1. I have no doubt that in some instances, illegal netting takes place, but it is so hard to detect this in so large a district, although I have taken every precaution to prevent this illegality and during the year succeeded in seizing 10 gill-nets which was confiscated, but I was unable to secure the offenders.

2. The rivers and creeks continue to be very high up to the late season of the year, which will be of advantage in the multiplication of the various species of fish.

3. Since the opening of the Swan Hill railway, fishermen plying for the Melbourne market confine their attentions principally to the streams in the western part of the county of Wakool and the county of Cairn, and to the large lakes in the vicinity. Their operations are very successful, large consignments of fish being sent weekly to the Melbourne market.

4. There have been 263 baskets of fish sent from Deniliquin to Melbourne during the past year, aggregating 11 tons 2 cwt., most of which were large fish caught by cross and night-lines.

5. Up to the date when the principle of paying for shags heads was cancelled, I had given receipts for 10,319 heads for the year.

6. Sixteen boat licenses were applied for and obtained through me for fishermen in my district for the year.

7. The condition of the fish generally is healthy, and they are spawning well, those recently captured containing large quantities of roe.

8. In conclusion, I would strongly recommend that after the expiration of the present proclamation against net-fishing, it be continued for a further period of twelve months, and that the waters within the county of Cairn be included.

OSBORNE WILSHIRE,
Assistant Inspector of Fisheries.

4. The duty of protecting, developing, and regulating the Public Fisheries of New South Wales shall be vested in five Commissioners, to be called the "Commissioners of Fisheries for New South Wales," who, by that name, shall be a body corporate, with perpetual succession and a common seal, with power to hold real and personal estate, and to sue and be sued, and to take, and be the subject of all legal proceedings by such name. And the duties, power, and authority of the said Commissioner shall extend to the territorial limits of the said Colony. Such body corporate shall be composed of five persons to be appointed by the Governor by Commission under the Great Seal, each of whom shall hold office for the term of five years from the date of his appointment, unless his office become vacant in the meantime by death or resignation, but subject nevertheless to removal by the like authority. But any Commissioner may be reappointed after the expiration of his term of office. The Governor shall, either by the original Commission or otherwise as to him seems proper, appoint one of the Commissioners to be President. And the President, or in his absence one of the Commissioners appointed from time to time by the meeting, shall preside at all meetings, and at any voting shall have an original, as well as (in cases of equality of votes) a casting vote. Any three Commissioners shall be a quorum.

Constitution of Fisheries Commissioners as a body corporate.

5. It shall be lawful for the Governor, on the recommendation of the Commissioners, to appoint a Chief Inspector, Travelling Inspector, and so many Inspectors and Sub-Inspectors of Fisheries and other officers as he may think necessary for the purposes of this Act, and to assign to every such officer such salary as he may think fit, and as Parliament may vote. And every such officer shall act under the direction of, and be responsible for the due performance of his duties to, the Commissioners.

Appointment of officers.

6. The Commissioners and all officers of police and constables, and all persons employed in the Department of the Marine Board, shall be, and have, and are hereby required to exercise, the powers and authorities of, Inspectors of Fisheries ex officio.

Certain persons to be
Inspectors ex officio.

7. It shall be lawful for the Governor to make regulations from time to time for the purpose of giving effect to the provisions of this Act as to all details whatever; and, in addition to any purpose herein-after mentioned, for any of the purposes following, namely—

Regulations.

- (I) For regulating the conduct of business by the Commissioners, and defining the duties of all officers and other persons clothed with any duty or authority under this Act.
- (II) For prescribing the forms and conditions of all licenses, mode of payment of license fees, and the due transmission of and accounting for all moneys to the Treasury and Audit Department, respectively.
- (III) For prescribing, notwithstanding anything contained in this Act or the Second Schedule hereto, the lengths of nets and dimensions of meshes of nets which it shall be lawful to use in any specified waters, and the mode of testing the same,

as

- as well as the kinds, weights, or sizes of fish prohibited to be caught, sold, or consigned or exposed for sale; and for defining what are marketable and unmarketable crustacea.
- (IV) Providing for the sale or other disposal of any nets, boats and gear, or other implements of fishing, or any underweight fish seized or forfeited under any of the provisions of this Act.
- (V) Prescribing a scale of rewards (and the terms and conditions of the payment thereof) for the destruction of sharks, or of cormorants, shags, or other birds which by proclamation may be declared to be destructive to fish. Provided that such reward shall not exceed the sum of threepence for any one such bird, nor the sum of six shillings for any one such shark, and shall be payable out of the moneys received into the Treasury under the provisions of this Act.
- (VI) Prescribing the conditions under which gaolers and persons in charge of any gaol, watch-house, lock-up or police station may take recognizances from persons lodged in custody under the fifty-ninth section hereof.
- (VII) Providing for the casting, setting, fixing, placing, hauling, or landing of fishing nets in such a manner as to prevent the destruction of underweight fish, and for the general regulation of net and line fishing, as well in regard to modes, places, and times of usage as in all other respects.
- (VIII) For determining all rights of priority in shooting nets, or dredging for oysters, as between fishermen and dredgermen netting or dredging on the same ground.
- (IX) For taking oysters from Crown Lands, not under lease, under such limitations as to number of licensed dredgers or gatherers as the Commissioners shall deem fit, or the payment of prescribed license fees, and for the seizure and disposal of oysters unlawfully removed from Crown Lands or public oyster reserves.
- (X) For marking the boundaries of and periodically inspecting public oyster reserves and leased areas. And to give due effect to the intent of this subsection every inspector and every officer duly authorized by the Commissioners shall have a right of entry on all lands whatever for purposes of inspection or survey, or of erecting and maintaining beacons or other marks for, or in connection with, the boundaries of leased areas or public oyster reserves.
- (XI) For the allotment or sale of young or foreshore oysters on public oyster reserves and Crown Lands, not under lease, to the holders of leased areas.
- (XII) For determining the size of marketable oysters, and the penalties for selling or exposing for sale undersized oysters and oysters not in condition fit for food, and for disposing of or selling oysters, boats and gear, dredges and other appliances seized or forfeited under this Act.
- (XIII) For the protection and regulation of public oyster reserves and Crown Lands, not under lease, for the limitation and regulation of dredging by divers on such Crown Lands, and for the protection and regulation of all boundary beacons, buoys, or other marks.
- (XIV) For compelling lessees to place and maintain a sufficient stock of oysters on their areas and to return all spat and undersized oysters and oysters not in a condition fit for food, together with all dead shells, cultch, and substances dredged up from beds in such a manner as may be most beneficial for the preservation of such beds, and for enforcing payment of rent overdue on leased, or applied for, areas.

(xv)

- (xv) For preventing the destruction of oysters or fish or injury to fishing grounds by refuse or other deleterious matters from saw-mills, paper-mills, gas-works, or other manufactories, and for prohibiting such matter from being deposited in tidal waters.
- (xvi) For preventing lessees and others from disposing of cultch or any dredged refuse so as to impede the access by water to Crown or private land abutting on leased areas.
- (xvii) For prescribing the amount of penalties for breaches of any such regulations.

It shall be lawful for any such regulations to provide for their enforcement by the imposition of a penalty not exceeding in any case the sum of twenty pounds. And all such regulations shall, on publication in the Gazette, have the full force of law, and a copy thereof shall be laid before the Legislative Council and Legislative Assembly, within fourteen days after the making thereof, if Parliament be then in Session, and if not, then within fourteen days after the commencement of its then next ensuing Session. The Governor may, in like manner, rescind any regulation made, or purporting to be made, under the authority of this Act or the enactments hereinbefore repealed.

PART I.

Net and Line Fisheries.

8. Fishing nets of the several kinds and of the respective lengths and dimensions of meshes hereinafter described shall, subject to the provisos severally specified, be deemed to be lawful nets within the meaning of this Act—

A hauling net, which shall have a maximum length of one hundred and fifty fathoms along the cork lines, and shall consist of a bunt and a wing on either side of such bunt, but hung on the same cork and foot lines. The bunt shall not exceed fifty fathoms in length, nor shall have a mesh not less than two and one quarter inches, and each wing a mesh of not less than three inches. Such net shall be used for taking fish in tidal waters only.

A gar-fish net, which shall have a maximum length of ninety fathoms measured along the cork lines, and shall consist of a bunt, and a wing on either side of such bunt, but hung on the same cork and foot lines. The bunt shall not exceed thirty fathoms in length, nor have a mesh less than one and one quarter inches. Each wing shall have a mesh not less than two inches. Provided that such net shall be used only in tidal waters, and in such months of the year as shall be determined by regulations under this Act, and for the purpose of catching gar-fish only.

A prawn net, which shall have a maximum length of fifteen fathoms, and a mesh throughout not less than one inch. Such net shall be used only in tidal waters and in such months of the year as shall be determined by Regulations under this Act, and shall not, when set, extend into the water more than one hundred fathoms beyond the line of low water-mark.

An inland waters net which shall consist of a net having a mesh not less than four inches in any part thereof and not fitted with a bag or purse. Such net shall not be staked, fixed, or set set within fourteen feet of the edge of the water on either bank of any inland waters. Provided always that nothing in this section contained shall apply to the owner of the soil or bed of any inland waters using or setting a net within such waters to capture fish for breeding purposes, or for stocking a fishery, or for his own consumption only.

A set net which shall consist of a net having a length not exceeding sixty fathoms, and a mesh not less than four inches in any part. Such net shall be used in tidal waters only, shall not be hauled or drawn ashore after the manner of a hauling or gar-fish net, but shall be cast from and hauled into a boat in a depth of water of not less than ten feet. Provided always that to meet conditions which hereafter may be found to be necessary to fish capture in any specified waters it shall, on the recommendation of the Commissioners, be lawful for the Governor by notification in the Government Gazette to vary the lengths of any nets or the dimensions of meshes of any nets herein prescribed for use in such waters, and in like manner to rescind any such variation.

Sunken nets illegal.

9. The foot lines of any net lawful under this Act, except a prawn net, may be weighted, but only to such an extent that when cast or set, or in process of using, the top or cork line of such net, on which the netting must be directly hung in the proportions hereinafter prescribed, shall not be sunken below the surface of the water.

Open sea nets.

10. The provisions of the foregoing sections as regards the lengths of nets and sizes of meshes shall not apply to the use of nets in the open sea or coast beaches.

Penalties for using unlawful nets.

11. Any person using for fishing purposes or having in his possession any net of longer lengths or smaller meshes than are prescribed for the several nets hereinbefore mentioned, shall be deemed to be using an unlawful net, and shall, for the first offence, be liable to a penalty not exceeding five pounds and not less than two pounds, and for a subsequent offence to a penalty not exceeding twenty and not less than ten pounds. And every person aiding or assisting in the use of such unlawful nets, or being in the same boat in use at the time by the offender, shall also be liable to the like penalties. The Justices shall, in every case where an offender is convicted under this section, order such unlawful nets to be forfeited to Her Majesty.

Fishing nets how to be hung.

12. Every net shall be deemed to be an unlawful net within the meaning of this Act, if the same, when hung, shall have the netting distributed in less equal proportion than eighteen inches in length of the netting to every twelve inches in length of the cork and foot lines.

Waters not to be stalled.

13. The setting of any net, netting, brushwood, or other substance across or within any bay, inlet, river, or creek, or across or around any flat, in tidal waters, in such a manner that fish enclosed thereby are, or may be left, stranded at low tide, or that immature fish may be destroyed thereby is hereby declared to be illegal.

Two or more nets not to be set together.

14. Any two or more nets of any of the kinds specified in this Act placed nearer to each other than thirty feet in the haul, or in such a manner as to diminish the mesh or the means of escape for enclosed fish, shall be deemed to be unlawful nets under this Act.

Penalties for having under-weight fish in possession.

15. If any person shall have in his possession or on his premises or in his boat, or shall sell or consign or expose for sale, any fish of any of the species mentioned in the Second Schedule hereto of a less weight than that set opposite the name of such fish in such Schedule, or prescribed by any regulation, he shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding exceeding two pounds for the first offence, and for the second or any subsequent offence to a penalty not exceeding five pounds and not less than two pounds. And all such under-weight fish, together with all other fish found in the same basket or other receptacle, or on the same table, or stand, or residence, or in the same boat, cart, or vessel with such under-weight fish, shall be forfeited and be disposed of in accordance with the regulations. And any Inspector may seize any fish which under this section are liable to forfeiture and take the same before any Justice, who upon view thereof shall declare whether or not such fish are under weight, and if he declare them to be so, shall order them to be forfeited and to be disposed of in accordance with the regulations. The provisions of this section shall not apply to any curator of a museum or zoological collector holding a permit from the Commissioners, or to any lessee of a general fishery in respect of fish taken therefrom, or to any inspector of fisheries, or lessee capturing or being in possession of fish for purposes of pisciculture, or to any aboriginal taking or being in possession of fish for his own consumption; but in every such case of exemption the proof thereof shall be upon the defendant or person charged.

16. All prawn-fishers and other persons catching prawns shall, if they require to riddle them so as to separate the marketable from the unmarketable, so riddle or separate them immediately upon being caught, and in such a manner as to permit the small prawns to escape into the water alive. And if any prawn-fisher or person shall fail to comply with such direction, or shall defer such riddling or separation until after boiling or cooking such prawns, or until such prawns are dead, he shall be liable to the like penalties and forfeitures as are provided by the last preceding section.

Prawns to be riddled in their own waters only.

17. It shall be lawful for the Commissioners to declare by notice in the Gazette that any specified tidal or inland waters shall be exempted from net or line-fishing, or both, during any specified months in any year. The fisheries in all such waters so specified shall be termed "Close Fisheries," and the months during which the same are so declared exempt from net-fishing, "Close months." And if any person shall, in any close fishery, during any close month, place any line or haul any net whatever, for the purpose of catching, taking or enclosing fish, or in such manner that fish might be caught, taken or enclosed, thereby, such person shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding ten pounds, and not less than two pounds. And every person aiding or assisting in the placing of any such line, or hauling of any such net, or being in any boat from which any such line or net shall be placed or hauled, in contravention of the provisions of this section, shall incur a like penalty. Provided always that it shall be lawful for the Governor, or the Commissioners, in like manner, to rescind or vary any such proclamation.

Proclamation of close fisheries.

18. It shall be lawful for the Governor, if so advised by the Commissioners, from time to time, to declare by proclamation to be published in the Gazette and in some newspaper circulating in the nearest Police District, that the whole or any defined portion of any inland water or tidal river, inlet, estuary, lake, lagoon or arm of the sea shall be closed against the use of fishing-nets or lines, or both, for such term as the Governor shall think fit. And any such proclamation may be renewed by the Governor, if so advised by the Commissioners, for a further period, or may in like manner be varied or rescinded at any time whatever.

Proclamation closing waters against use of fishing-nets.

19. If after the publication of any such proclamation as is described in the next preceding section hereof and during the currency thereof, or of any renewal or variation thereof, and during the currency thereof, any person except an inspector shall haul any net or place any line or instrument of any kind whatever for the purpose of taking or capturing fish, or by which fish may be taken or captured, within the limits of the waters or area defined in such proclamation, such person shall be liable for the first offence to a penalty not exceeding ten pounds and not less than five pounds, and for the second or any subsequent offence to a penalty not exceeding twenty pounds and not less than ten pounds; and every person aiding or assisting in the hauling or otherwise fixing of such net or line, or being in any boat from which any net shall be shot in contravention of the provisions of this section, shall incur a like penalty. And every person convicted under this section shall, if holding a license under this Act, be deemed by conviction to have forfeited his license for the year then current. And all fish taken in violation of the provisions of this section, together with all fishing-nets and lines used for the purpose of taking the same, shall thereupon become forfeited to Her Majesty, and shall be disposed of as provided by the regulations. Any inspector, may, with or without warrant, apprehend and take before one or more Justices any person found offending against the provisions of this section, to be dealt with as hereinafter provided; and may in like manner seize every such net.

Persons not to have fresh caught fish in closed waters.

20. If any person shall be found with freshly caught fish or a wetted net in his boat or in his possession in waters which by proclamation under this Act are exempted from line or net-fishing or closed against the use of fishing-nets or lines, such person shall be deemed to have been unlawfully catching or attempting to catch fish in contravention of the provisions of this Act, and every person convicted under this section shall be subject to the penalties and forfeitures provided by the next preceding section hereof. Provided always that a right shall be reserved to the defendant to prove that he was not upon such waters for any unlawful purpose under this Act.

Crew of seized boats to assist inspector.

21. In every case where a seizure of any fish net, or other article is made under the provisions of this Act, the inspector making the seizure may direct the owner thereof or his boat's crew, or any of them, to forthwith convey such net, and other seized articles to some point convenient for further conveyance by land or sea carriage, and any such person refusing to obey such inspector's direction shall be liable to a penalty of not less than three nor more than five pounds.

Boats to be licensed.

22. Every boat used, or intended to be used, for catching for sale any of the varieties of fish enumerated in the First Schedule hereto, by net or line, shall be licensed. The fee for every such boat license shall be one pound, which shall be paid to the Colonial Treasurer or some officer authorized by him to receive license fees under this Act; and payment of such fee shall cover the interval from the date of payment to the thirty-first day of December of the same year, unless such boat shall in the meantime have been sold or disposed of by the owner, in which case the license thereof shall be deemed to be void. Provided that after the thirtieth day of June in any year one moiety only of such fee shall be payable. Every boat licensed under this section shall have painted in legible letters in such conspicuous place as may be prescribed by the regulations the name of her owner and the words "Licensed fishing-boat."

Fishermen to be licensed.

23. Every person catching fish for sale (the proof to the contrary whereof shall be upon such person) in or upon any tidal or inland waters shall pay an annual license fee of ten shillings to the Colonial Treasurer or some officer authorized by him to receive license fees under this Act. Such fees shall be payable on the dates and according to the provisions expressed in the last preceding section.

24. If any person shall take or attempt to take any fish for sale within such waters as aforesaid, whether by line or by net without holding a valid fisherman's license as required by the next preceding section hereof, or shall take or attempt to take any such fish, whether by line or net, in a boat not licensed under section twenty hereof, he shall be liable for every such offence to a penalty not exceeding forty shillings.

Penalty for fishing without license.

25. It shall not be lawful for any person to carry more than two lawful fishing-nets in any fishing-boat licensed under this Act.

Boats to carry two nets only.

26. It shall not be lawful by the explosion of dynamite or any explosive substance, or by means of any poisonous or noxious thing, to destroy or take fish in any tidal or inland waters in New South Wales. And if any person shall explode any dynamite or any such substance under such waters, or place or cause to flow thereinto any poisonous or noxious thing such person and all other persons at the time in his company shall for every such offence be liable to a penalty not exceeding forty pounds and not less than ten pounds. But nothing herein contained shall apply to any person duly authorized (the proof whereof shall be on him) to explode torpedoes or dynamite in any such waters.

Dynamite not to be used.

27. If in any tidal water any person without lawful authority (the proof of which shall lie on him) shall drive or place any boat, stake, log, stone or other thing whatever, likely to damage a fishing-net if dragged over or against it or within the reach of a fishing-net of lawful length, and if any damage shall be sustained by any lawful fishing-net through coming into contact with such boat, stake, log, stone, or thing, such person shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding ten pounds, and in addition, shall pay such compensation to the owner of such net as may be awarded by the adjudicating Justices. Likewise any person who by placing or mooring a boat in such a position as to obstruct any licensed fisherman from hauling with a net, lawful under this Act, shall be liable to a like penalty. Provided always that it shall lie on the plaintiff to prove that such person had been duly warned to abate such obstruction.

Penalty for damaging lawful nets by placing obstacles on hauling ground.

28. It shall not be lawful for any person, by the wilful firing of guns, or by the production of other disturbing noises or sounds, to frighten fish around which nets are being set by any person holding a valid fisherman's license. If any person shall offend against the provisions of this section he shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding five pounds nor less than three pounds.

Penalty for disturbing fish in process of being netted.

29. Every person who shall be found using a fishing-net of any kind whatsoever in any waters in New South Wales shall, on demand, give his true name and residence to any inspector or Justice, or to any owner or occupier of land bordering such waters, or over which they ebb and flow. And if any such person shall refuse or neglect to comply with such demand, or shall give a false or fictitious name or residence, he shall be liable to a penalty not less than five pounds nor more than ten pounds.

Netters to give name and residence when demanded, &c.

30. Any inspector may at any time enter any land, premises, or dwelling, or go on board any boat and search for and seize and take away any net which has been, or is suspected to have been, used in contravention of the provisions of this Act, or which is, or is suspected to be, of less dimensions in the mesh or of a length not permitted by this Act or the regulations. And every net so seized shall be viewed by a Justice, who, on inspection thereof, shall, if satisfied that the same has been so used as aforesaid, or is an unlawful net, order the same to be forfeited to Her Majesty.

Inspectors may search for and seize nets used in contravention of Act.

PART II.

Leases of Crown Lands for General Fisheries Purposes.

Lagoons and lakes may be leased for fisheries.

31. The Governor may lease by auction or tender for the purpose of a fishery any Crown Land below high water-mark in any river, creek, arm, or bay in any tidal water or in any lake or lagoon, whether subject to or beyond the influence of the tide.

Term of lease.

32. Any such lease may be granted for a term not exceeding fourteen years, and shall be issued subject to any regulations which from time to time may be made under this Act.

Property in lease.

33. (I) Every such lease shall vest in the lessee the exclusive right during the currency thereof of stocking the area leased with fish of any kind whatsoever, as well as oysters, spat, and other varieties of molluscs, and of taking therefrom any such fish or oysters and their shells.

(II) Of vesting the property (at law or in equity) in any such fish or oysters while the same are within the limits of such leased area in such lessee, any rule of law to the contrary notwithstanding.

(III) Of vesting in such lessee the right to the influx and efflux of the tide into and over such area by means of such admission as a trench or passage through, or by the laying of pipes under the shore, or by such other means as may be prescribed.

(IV) Of vesting in such lessee the right to enter upon the shore, the property of the Crown, for the purpose of constructing works for the admission of tidal waters, and for the repair or renewal of such works, stopping the traffic thereover (if necessary) for any period not exceeding seven days in any one year in order to effect such repair or renewal.

(V) Of abrogating any rule of law so far as it might be held to confer any public right of way or of navigation over such area, or any public right of fishing or taking fish by nets, lines, or other appliances whatsoever in or upon such area, but subject always to the right of any inspector or authorised officer to enter upon any land included in such lease, and to test its condition by such means as may seem to him proper.

Provision for bridge across trenches, &c.

34. No trench or passage through the shore for the purpose of permitting the tide to ebb and flow to and from such area, or any area leased under this Part, shall at any point exceed a width of twelve feet; and every such trench or passage shall, at the cost of the lessee, be bridged by such a substantial bridge or means of crossing as the lease shall prescribe, or (if none shall be so prescribed) as the Commissioners shall determine. And every such bridge or crossing shall be maintained in good order and repair by such lessee, and shall in every case be furnished with substantial handrails on either side, and be not less than twelve feet wide between the rails.

Lease may be revoked.

35. Any lease so granted may be revoked by the Governor at any time if he shall be of opinion that the conditions therein expressed, or the provisions of any regulation made at any time under this Act, have not been faithfully complied with, and such revocation shall take effect upon notification thereof in the Government Gazette. Occupation under such lease shall not confer any right or title to the lessee to enter upon or occupy any portion of the shore surrounding or adjacent to his leased area, or to use any portion thereof not included in his lease.

Commissioners may recommend revocation of lease in certain cases.

36. If it shall appear to the satisfaction of the Commissioners that any lessee has not, within the period of one year from the date of his lease, taken measures proper, in their opinion, for stocking the area with fish and for propagating the same, or that through carelessness or negligence negligence an undue destruction of either mature or immature fish has been caused, then it shall be lawful for them to recommend the revocation of the lease by the Governor. And the Governor shall have power to revoke the same accordingly by notification in the Gazette. And, upon the publication of such notification, all the rights and privileges granted by such lease, and the term thereby demised shall absolutely cease and determine. Provided always that, before making such recommendation, the Commissioners shall cause a notice in writing stating their intention to make such recommendation to be served on the lessee or person for the time being entitled to the lease, or, in case such person cannot be found, they shall cause such notice to be inserted as an advertisement at least three times in a newspaper circulating in the Police District nearest to or in which the area leased is situated, and also to be published once in the Gazette. And no such recommendation shall be made until after the expiration of one calendar month from the service of such notice, or from the date of the last advertisement (whichever shall happen last); and the lease of the land comprised within any such revoked lease may be disposed of by public auction or tender, subject to the provisions of this Act.

37. The limits of a leased fishery shall in every case be marked by substantial stakes placed at a distance not exceeding fifty yards from one another, or (where such staking is not reasonably practicable) in such manner as the regulations shall prescribe. But in any proceedings taken by the lessee of such fishery for larceny, or any offence or matter under this Act, it shall not be necessary for him to prove that the requirements of this section have been duly complied with. Marking limits of leased fishery.

PART III.

Leases of Crown Land for Oyster Culture.

38. For the purposes of culture and propagation of oysters the Governor may, on the recommendation of the Commissioners, lease by auction or tender for any term not exceeding ten years, with power during the currency of a lease to renew the term for a like period, and subject to such limitations as the Commissioners may recommend, any area of Crown Land being within the head lands of any harbour, bay, estuary, or tidal water. Lease for oyster culture.

39. Every such lease shall vest in the lessee, his executors, administrators, and assigns all oysters within the area leased, and as well the exclusive right, during the currency of the lease, of laying and planting oysters on, and of dredging and taking oysters from, the area leased, but subject always to the several provisions of this Act, and the right of any inspector or authorized officer to enter upon such area for any authorized purpose. Property in lease.

40. Occupation under any lease shall not give any right to the lessee to occupy or use any portion of Crown Lands abutting on but not included in his lease, except for such purposes and during such times as may be prescribed. Abutting land not included in lease.

41. Any leased area may be described in the lease by reference to posts, stakes, buoys, marks, or natural features showing the limits of such leased area in a manner sufficient to allow of their identification. Leased area how described.

42. The Governor may, if recommended by the Commissioners, accept a surrender of a lease, after the third year of its currency, in any case where it shall appear, to the satisfaction of the Commissioners, that oyster culture cannot be carried on upon the leased area with any reasonable hope of success, or where, from any other reason, the Commissioners shall report in favour of such surrender. Surrender of lease.

Lessees in arrear with rent not to apply for further areas.

43. Any lessee who shall be at any time in arrear with the rent due on any one or more leased areas shall, notwithstanding anything in this or the repealed Act provided, not be entitled to take oysters from off such areas, or to lease a further area until such overdue rent shall have been paid.

Forfeiture for mismanagement.

44. Upon receipt of a report by an inspector that a leased area is being so stripped of oysters or otherwise mismanaged by the lessee that the production of oysters thereon has, in such inspector's opinion, been so reduced as to threaten its destruction partially or wholly as an oyster-bearing area, further dredging or taking of oysters may be thereupon stopped by the Commissioners, and the Commissioners may call upon the lessee to show cause why they should not recommend the Governor to declare the lease of such lessee to be forfeited. And upon the receipt of a recommendation by the Commissioners recommending the forfeiture of any such lease, the Governor may, by notification in the Gazette, declare the same to be, and the same shall thereupon be forfeited accordingly.

Injuries, &c., to leases.

45. It shall not be lawful for any person other than the lessee, his agents or servants, within the limits of any leased area to do any of the following acts, viz.:—

- (I) To take or in any way disturb or interfere with any oysters without the consent of the holder of the lease.
- (II) To allow cattle to stray; to cut or lop mangroves or any timber.
- (III) To deposit or remove any stone, ballast, rubbish, or substance, or to dredge or drag with any implement, unless by direction or authority of the Commissioners, or the proper officer of the Department of Harbours and Rivers, or the Marine Board, and in any such case on payment of compensation for damage done (if any).
- (IV) To use any implement of fishing except a line and hook.
- (V) To place any implement or thing likely to injure oysters, except for a lawful purpose of navigation or anchorage.

Penalties.

And if any person does any act in contravention of this section he shall be liable for the first offence to a penalty not exceeding five pounds, and for the second offence to a penalty not exceeding ten nor less than five pounds, and for a third or subsequent offence to a penalty of twenty pounds. And shall be liable to make compensation to the lessee for all damage sustained by such lessee by reason of such person's unlawful act, and in default of payment the same may be recovered by the lessee in any Court not incompetent by statute in respect to the amount or nature of the claim, and whether such person has been convicted of an offence under this section or not.

Commissioners may recommend revocation of lease in certain cases.

46. If it shall appear to the Commissioners that any lessee has not within a period of two years from the date of his lease taken proper measures to carry out the condition of his lease, they may recommend the Governor to revoke the lease. And the Governor shall have power to revoke the same accordingly by notification in the Gazette, and upon the publication of such notification all rights and privileges granted by such lease, and the unexpired term thereof, shall cease and determine. Provided always, that before making such recommendation the Commissioners shall cause a notice in writing, stating their intention to make such recommendation, to be served on the holder of the lease, or in case such person cannot be found, they shall cause such notice to be inserted at least three times in a newspaper circulating in the police district nearest to the area leased, and also to be published once in the Gazette. No such recommendation shall be made until after the expiration of one calendar month from service or the publication of such notice in the Gazette.

47. The Governor, by notification in the Gazette, may declare any Crown Land, not leased under this or the repealed Acts, to be a public oyster reserve for recreation, or to be exempt from any power of leasing conferred by this part, either absolutely or for a limited period, and on the recommendation of the Commissioners in like manner may cancel any such notification wholly or in part.

Portions of certain Crown Lands may be exempt from leasing, or be declared public oyster reserves.

48. If any person shall dredge for or take oysters from any leased area, or from Crown Lands not under lease, at any time between sunset and sunrise, except under special permit, he shall incur a penalty for every offence not exceeding fifty pounds.

Oysters not to be dredged between sunset and sunrise.

49. Every person who shall gather or burn live oysters for the purpose of converting their shells into lime whether he be the holder of a leased area or not, shall incur for every such offence a penalty not exceeding fifty pounds.

Penalty on burning live oysters for lime.

50. Whenever the Commissioners report that the whole or any part of any oyster-bearing area, whether under lease under the repealed Act or this Act or not, has by over-dredging or from any other cause been reduced to such a state that the taking of oysters therefrom ought to be suspended, or that the oysters thereon are in such a condition as to be not fit for consumption as food, the Governor may prohibit, by proclamation in the Gazette, for any term not exceeding three years, the taking of oysters from such area. And if any person shall without lawful authority, at any time during the period mentioned in such proclamation, take or attempt to take oysters from any area described in such proclamation, such person shall incur a penalty not exceeding twenty pounds and not less than five pounds. And all oysters and the bags containing them, together with all dredging or other appliances for the taking of oysters, found in the possession of any person so offending may be seized, and upon conviction of the offender shall be forfeited to Her Majesty. And the Governor may in like manner rescind any such proclamation, or any proclamation made under the hereinbefore repealed Act, relating to the opening or closing of oyster beds.

When natural oyster beds may be closed.

51. Oysters on a public oyster reserve for recreation, or on Crown Lands not under lease under this Act, or the repealed Acts, or on areas proclaimed under the next preceding section hereof, also oysters taken therefrom without lawful authority, shall be deemed to be the property of Her Majesty; and if any person, without lawful authority, shall dredge for or otherwise take any oysters from any such public oyster reserve, or Crown Lands not under lease, or shall be found dredging for or taking or attempting to take oysters within the limits of such reserve or Crown Lands or proclaimed areas, he shall incur a penalty not exceeding twenty pounds and not less than five pounds, and all oysters found in his possession shall be deemed to be oysters unlawfully taken by him, and shall, on his conviction, be forfeited to the use of Her Majesty.

Penalty for unlawful dredging or taking of oysters.

52. Nothing in this Act shall render liable to a penalty any person who takes oysters from any oyster reserve for recreation, or any foreshore not leased under this Act for his own consumption on the spot, unless such oysters shall be in a spawning condition, or shall have spat in quantity attached; in which case it shall be within the discretion of any inspector to prohibit the taking of oysters from any such oyster reserve or foreshore, and any person who shall take oysters therefrom after being warned against doing so by any inspector shall, on conviction, be liable to a penalty of not less than three pounds.

Persons may take oysters for their own consumption.

53. Any person employed by any lessee or applicant under this Act for a lease of land abutting on or near to occupied premises, or any lessee or applicant himself who shall, either within view or hearing hearing distance of such premises, conduct himself in a disorderly manner, or use obscene language, to the annoyance of the occupier or other person on such premises, shall for every such offence incur a penalty of not less than three pounds. Proceedings under this section may be taken by and in the name of any person in whose sight or hearing such offence shall have been committed.

Penalty on disorderly person.

54. It shall not be lawful for any lease to be granted of any oyster bed on the sea coast outside the headlands of any bay or estuary, or within three miles of the coast, but the same may be dredged by persons duly licensed in that behalf, subject to the provisions of this Act, and any regulations made under its authority.

Licensing of oyster dealers.

55. Every person dealing in or selling oysters by retail shall take out an annual license for which a fee of one pound shall be paid. Such license shall entitle the holder to sell and dispose of oysters on any specified premises, or from any cart, stand, basket, or other receptacle, during the year commencing on the first day of January and ending on the thirty-first day of December, and shall be renewed annually by a like payment within fourteen days after the first-mentioned day. Provided that on applications for licenses made after the thirtieth day of June in any year one moiety only of such license fee shall be payable. Such licenses may be granted by the Commissioners or by any Police Magistrate, and the fee shall be paid to the Colonial Treasurer or some officer authorized by him. And every person who shall so deal in or sell oysters without holding a license under this section shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding twenty pounds and not less than five pounds.

PART IV.

Legal Procedure—Miscellaneous.

Procedure.

56. All offences, penalties, and forfeitures under this Act or any regulation made thereunder may be heard, determined, and recovered, and all proceedings therefor may be taken, in a summary way, by and in the name of any Inspector, or by and in the name of any person authorized by the Commissioners, or by and in the name of any person holding a lease under this or the repealed Acts before any two or more Justices, in pursuance of the provisions of the Acts regulating summary convictions before Justices, except that, in the discretion of the prosecuting officer, offences committed in any part of the Metropolitan Police District may be so heard at any one of the Courts in that District; and every defendant shall be a competent witness in his own case. Provided that if any person shall be adjudged to pay any sum, by way of penalty or otherwise, the adjudicating Justices shall order such sum to be paid (together with costs to be fixed by the said Justices) either forthwith or within such period as the said Justices shall appoint, and if such sum and costs (if any) shall not be paid at the time so appointed, the same shall be levied by distress and sale of the offender's goods and chattels, and for want of sufficient distress, or, in the discretion of such Justices, without any such distress, such offender may be imprisoned, with or without hard labour, for any term not exceeding three calendar months unless such sum be sooner paid. In all cases where the defendant or person charged with any offence under this Act shall plead any of the exemptions therein contained the proof thereof shall be upon such defendant or person charged. Provided also that no information or conviction under this Act shall be quashed through any defect or want of form.

57. Any person aggrieved by any conviction, order, or adjudication of Justices under this Act may appeal therefrom to the next Court of Quarter Sessions holden in the district in which the subject matter of the appeal arose, unless such Sessions shall be held within fourteen days from the date of such conviction, order, or adjudication, and, in that case to the Court of Quarter Sessions then next following. And such Court shall have power to hear and determine the matter in a summary way in accordance with the Acts in force regulating appeals from summary convictions. And the decision of such Court shall be final and conclusive. Provided always that the appellant shall, within seven days from the date of such aforesaid conviction, order, or adjudication, have given written notice of his intention to appeal, stating the grounds thereof to the, or one of the, adjudicating Justices, and to the prosecutor, and provided that such appellant shall also pay into the hands of such Justice the full amount of any penalty or sum awarded against him, together with costs, within twenty-four hours next after such conviction, order, or adjudication, and also enter into a bond, with two sureties approved by such Justice, conditioned to prosecute such appeal with effect, and to abide the event thereof, and to pay the full amount of all costs which may be awarded against him.

Appeal.

58. Any person who shall assault, resist, or obstruct, or encourage any other person to assault, resist, or obstruct, or shall use abusive language to any inspector, or other person whomsoever in the execution of his duty under this Act shall incur a penalty not exceeding ten pounds nor less than five pounds, or be liable to imprisonment not exceeding six calendar months. And the adjudicating Justices may, in addition to any such penalty, order a sufficient sum to be paid by the offender to cover any damage or injury sustained by the person so assaulted, resisted, or obstructed, which sum shall be recoverable in the same manner as a penalty under this Act.

Assaulting, &c., inspectors and others in execution of their duty.

59. Any inspector may enter any fish market, premises, place, or dwelling, or go on board any boat, and seize any undersized oysters, or any parcel of oysters in which undersized oysters may be found, or any underweight fish or any nets, boat or gear, or other implement of fishing which any person found offending against any of the provisions of this Act may have used or may be then using, and may also, with or without warrant, apprehend and lodge with the gaoler or person in charge of any gaol, watch-house, lock-up, or police station any person found offending against any of the provisions of this Act, who, on demand made, shall refuse to give his true name and address, or whom such inspector may have reason to suspect has given a fictitious name and address or incorrect information as to the ownership of any net or other article seized under any of the provisions of this Act; but any Justice, or, subject to the conditions prescribed by the regulations, any such gaoler or person in charge may liberate any person so lodged in custody, on such person entering into a recognizance (with or without sureties) in the sum of twenty pounds conditioned for his appearance before two or more Justices at a day and place to be therein mentioned.

Offenders may be apprehended and bailed.

60. The production of any of the undermentioned documents, writings, or publications shall be conclusive evidence in all Courts as to the several matters contained therein, and in the case of a lease or license, that the same was duly issued, viz. :—

What instrument, &c., to be evidence.

- (I) A receipt showing that the rent for the first year on any lease has been paid into the Colonial Treasury.
- (II) A lease signed by the Governor or a copy thereof bearing the common seal of the Commissioners.

(III)

- (III) Any license or a copy thereof bearing the like seal.
 (IV) A copy of the Gazette containing any notice, regulation, or proclamation purporting to be made under this Act.

Search for and seizure of fish.

61. All fish and oysters of which the taking possession, exposure for sale, consignment or purchase for sale is prohibited by this Act may be searched for, seized, condemned, and dealt with according to law by any inspector or by any person holding the written authority of any Justice, or any search warrant under the hand and seal of any Justice, or authorized by any regulation under this Act.

Customs officers, &c., to aid inspectors.

62. All persons employed in the department of the Marine Board, the Customs, or Harbours and Rivers, if called upon to aid and assist any inspector in the execution of any power or authority vested in him by this Act, are hereby authorized and required to aid and assist such inspector in the lawful exercise of any such power or authority.

Larceny from contiguous leases.

63. Whenever a person shall be charged with larceny of oysters from any leases which may be contiguous to another or others, it shall be sufficient in alleging and proving the place from which such oysters were stolen, to allege and prove that such oysters were stolen from one or other of such contiguous leases, and that the same belonged to, and were in the lawful possession of, one or other of the lessees or owners thereof.

Limitation.

64. Every area leased under this Act shall be subject to all reclamation rights conferred by the ninth section of the "Crown Lands Act, 1885," or any Act amending the same, and to such conditions and provisions and limitations as may be prescribed by the regulations or approved by the Governor.

Lessees to find sureties for payment of rent.

65. Every lessee under this Act shall be required to enter into a bond with two sufficient sureties to be approved by the Crown Solicitor in a sum equal to ten times the amount of rent payable under the lease, conditional for the payment of the rent reserved in the lease, as from time to time the same shall become due, and it shall be lawful for the Attorney General to take proceedings thereon, and put such bond in force notwithstanding that such lease may have been cancelled or forfeited under any of the provisions of this Act.

Property under leases.

66. The purchaser of the lease of any area under this Act shall, upon payment of the rent thereon for the first year, be deemed to be in actual and absolute possession of such area for all purposes of this Act, notwithstanding that the deed of lease shall not been issued; and such purchaser, or any inspector, may seize any fish or oysters removed therefrom without lawful authority; and any person who shall be found unlawfully dredging, taking, catching, or attempting to catch fish or oysters in such area, shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding twenty-five pounds, and not less than ten pounds, and all fish or oysters found at the time in possession of such person shall be deemed to be fish and oysters unlawfully taken by him, and may be forthwith returned to the water.

Commissioners to institute experiments.

67. It shall be lawful for the Commissioners from time to time to direct the institution and carrying out of experiments in modes of fish capture, in the culture and propagation of fish and oysters, and to attempt the discovery of fishing grounds and oyster beds off the sea coast. For the purposes of this section the Governor may by notification in the Gazette declare any Crown land not leased under this or the repealed Acts to be reserved for experiments in the culture and propagation of fish or oysters. Such Crown land shall be deemed to be vested in the Commissioners who shall have and exercise over it all the powers and authorities which by this Act are conferred on a lessee.

68. Any person who shall commit any act in breach of or be guilty of any default of, or non-compliance with, the requirements or prohibitions of this Act, or any regulations hereinafter made under it, shall in every case where no penalty has in such case been provided be liable to a penalty of not less than forty shillings nor more than ten pounds, and to the forfeitures prescribed by section nineteen hereof. Provided always that, for the purposes of this section, the word fish shall be deemed to include oysters and spat.

69. The Commissioners shall as soon as possible after the thirty-first day of December in every year report to the Minister charged with the administration of this Act as to the state of the fisheries of the Colony, and such report shall be laid before both Houses of Parliament. The Commissioners shall also furnish to the said Minister such reports, accounts, plans, vouchers, and documents relating to any act or matter done by them, or within their control or cognizance as he may, by writing under his hand addressed to the said Commissioners, require. The Commissioners shall in all matters be subject to the like control by the Governor as any Department of the Public Service.

FISHERIES COMMISSION.
(REPORTS, &c.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be printed, 24 September, 1891.

RETURN to an Order made by the Honorable the Legislative Assembly of New South Wales, dated 30th July, 1891, That there be laid upon the Table of this House,—

- (1.) “Copies of all reports received from Inspectors and other officers under the Fisheries Commission in connection with the closing of the waters of the Hawkesbury River and its tributaries.
- (2.) “Similar information in regard to Brisbane Water, Tuggerah Lakes, Lake Macquarie, The Hunter, and Port Stephens.”

(Mr. Stevenson.)

Mr. L. F. Mann to The Chief Inspector of Fisheries.

Sir,
Department of Fisheries, Sydney, 24 December, 1890.
The President desired me to inform you that he intended visiting the Hawkesbury River during the Christmas holidays, and whilst there, would make an inspection of Cowan Creek, with the view of having that portion closed against the use of fishing-nets, if beneficial to the district.

I have, &c.,

LIVINGSTON F. MANN,
Draftsman.

The Secretary, Fisheries Department, to Mr. Assistant-Inspector Smith.

Department of Fisheries, Sydney, 2 January, 1891.
MR. ASSISTANT-INSPECTOR SMITH is requested to report at once whether the natural supply of fish in the Hawkesbury River has been exhausted by net-fishing or otherwise to such a degree as to require rest for the recovery thereof, in which case he will be good enough to state which portion of the waters referred to he would recommend should be closed under the 17th section of the Fisheries Act, and the period for which he would recommend such closure should be made.

LINDSAY THOMPSON,
Secretary.

Mr. Assistant-Inspector Smith to The Secretary, Fisheries Department.

Sir,
Hawkesbury River, 5 January, 1891.
Referring to your communication of the 2nd instant, I beg to state that the supply of all sorts of fish in the Hawkesbury River and tributaries is at present very fair, with the exception of gar-fish, and in view of this fact I am at present unable to recommend the closing of any portion of the Hawkesbury River.

Exception

Exception should be taken to the garfish nets, and as garfish seldom or never come up the Hawkesbury River in sufficient quantities to warrant the use of such destructive nets, I would most respectfully beg to recommend that the line of closing this river against garfish nets should be at Flint and Steel Point, running north and south, if such a step be practicable under the provisions of the Fisheries Act.

I beg further to state that, should fish at any time become really scarce, that I shall at once report the same.

I have, &c.,

P. SMITH,

Assistant Inspector.

The law does not provide this being done.—L.G.T.

Mr. Assistant-Inspector Mulhall to The Chief Inspector of Fisheries.

Sir,

Sydney, 15 January, 1891.

I have the honor to inform you regarding the kinds of fish which are to be caught in the Hawkesbury, that from the mouth of the river to up above Peate's Ferry there are fine bream, whiting, blackfish, and garfish, and above there few other fish are to be had but mullet, and they are very plentiful also at Mangrove Creek and the main river. The last-named fish are in good quantities. There are also many eels to be had there.

At Wiseman's Ferry and above it there are numbers of mullet, which always keep travelling down into the open waters.

I have, &c.,

THOMAS MULHALL,

Assistant Inspector, Fisheries, Sydney.

Wire to Inspector Smith to report at once in what numerical proportion the different kinds of fish, such as mullet, bream, whiting, blackfish, and garfish are caught in waters (say) from Peate's Ferry upwards.—L.G.T., 15/1/91.

Telegram from The Chief Inspector of Fisheries to Mr. Assistant-Inspector Smith.

REPORT at once in what numerical proportion the different kinds of fish, such as mullet, bream, whiting, blackfish, and garfish, and caught in waters (say) from Peate's Ferry upwards.

LINDSAY THOMPSON,

Chief Inspector of Fisheries.

Mr. Assistant-Inspector Smith to The Secretary, Fisheries Department.

Sir,

Hawkesbury River, 16 January, 1891.

In reply to your telegram of the 15th January, 1891, I beg to state that the proportions of the different kinds of fish caught in the Hawkesbury River, may, according to my estimation, be classified as follows, namely:—Of mullet the proportion is about 40 per cent. of the whole; of bream, 25 per cent.; of blackfish, 17 per cent.; of whiting, 5 per cent.; of sole and flounders, $\frac{1}{2}$ per cent.; of garfish, $\frac{1}{2}$ per cent.; of flathead, 6 per cent.; of jewfish, 6 per cent.

I have, &c.,

P. SMITH,

Assistant Inspector.

Memo. by The Chief Inspector of Fisheries.

4 February, 1891.

At the instance of the Commissioners, and for the purpose of determining by actual experiment, the proportionate quantity of the different kinds of fish at present in the Hawkesbury River, I visited those waters and obtained the services of a fisherman, with his boat, net, and assistant, and, in company with the local inspector, proceeded to certain fishing-grounds, selected by the fisherman, for the purpose of making hauls.

With the exception of two undersized bream, nothing but mullet were captured.

Only two hauls were made. In one, sixty-five mullet were captured, and in the second, twenty-eight mullet and the two bream referred to. Very much time was occupied in journeying to the hauls, and in waiting for suitable tide.

I was informed by the inspector that bream could not be caught in quantity, except on stormy wet nights, and as those conditions of weather were not likely to be met with when I made the visit, I decided, taking the statement for its value, not to waste further time then, but to await the occurrence of weather alleged to be favourable for bream capture to make further hauls, in order to test the accuracy of the inspector's estimate of the proportion of the several varieties of fish which that river now supplies.

I have requested Inspector Smithers to be in readiness, when stormy weather sets in, to proceed to the Hawkesbury and make hauls in such places as the local inspector may suggest.

Perhaps before taking steps to close the river, the Commissioners may see the desirableness of making the attempt I propose; but if, on the other hand, they should determine, on the basis of the trial already made, that the natural supply of fish, other than mullet, is sufficiently exhausted to make closure necessary for its recovery, I recommend that such closure should embrace Mullet, Money, and Borowa Creeks, also the main river from Bar Point to Mangrove Creek.

As the upper portion of this river, except near Windsor, is remote from market, and thus practically not available to netters, I think it may be excluded in any closure which the Commissioners may recommend.

It will be observed from Inspector Mulhall's report (enclosed) that while fish of the various kinds are plentiful in the lower part of the Hawkesbury, few varieties, besides mullet, are to be found much above Peate's Ferry.

LINDSAY THOMPSON,

Chief Inspector of Fisheries.

Mr. Travelling-Inspector Smithers to The Chief Inspector of Fisheries.

S , Sydney, 14 February, 1891.

In compliance with your instructions I visited Hawkesbury River in company with Mr. Assistant-Inspector Grant last Tuesday night, and we were met by Mr. Assistant-Inspector Smith. As it was a dirty night—just such a night as Mr. Smith had previously described as exceptionally suitable for catching bream, I asked him to take us up the river to get bream with our net. He replied he could not tell where to find them on such a night. I reminded him of what he had previously told the Chief Inspector and me, viz., that this was the proper kind of night, but he denied it, saying it was Lloyd who had made the remark, but that he (Smith) intended from his remarks to infer it was after dirty weather with plenty of rain, whereby the bream were washed out of the main river.

I then interviewed Mr. Sutton, fisherman, who stated no bream would be caught on such a night, but that after wet weather fish in the main river came down; also bream were not nearly so plentiful as formerly; the average catch of bream would be for down the river included, one basket in fourteen, and whiting and garfish mixed, one in thirty baskets. This is above Milson's Island.

Met Cole and White, fishermen, returning from down the river, former having one and a half baskets of mixed fish—mullet, blackfish, jewfish, bream; and White, nearly a basket—flathead, small jews and bream. In reply to my question as to why they went down instead of up the river, the reason given was they wanted good fish.

Then Cox, fisherman, came in from Berowra, with seven baskets of mullet, and three parts basket of bream. He said fish were scarce, but were plentiful up the river. I asked him why he did not go there then. He then said they were only mullet.

The total catch being this night thirteen baskets for seven boats. In face of this I would not go out with the net.

Next morning we visited Berowra; saw Cox haul 140-fathom hauling-net; got one and a half baskets mullet and six bream. The other fisherman, Cox, got then half a basket of mullet, blackfish, jewfish, and twelve bream. They told Mr. Smith if we waited for slack water on a certain haul in Marra Marra we should get some bream. This I did, and got one mullet. Certainly we used a garfish-net. After dark pushed round shores; saw no signs of ground-fish, but plenty of mullet, but too far out for our net to reach. As Mr. Smith then stated, he did not know where to make certain of catching bream above Bar Point, but that if we had hauling net 180 meshes deep we might get some. I gave it up, coming to the conclusion that fish are not above Bar Point, for otherwise the fishermen themselves would be working there instead of scraping for half basket a haul further down, even with their hauling net and, perhaps, 180 meshes deep. No doubt during my visit bream were caught in the morning's young flood at Dangar's Island, 4 miles below Bar Point.

I have, &c.,

FREDK. W. SMITHERS,
Travelling Inspector.

Under this further report I think the Commissioners would be justified in making the closures recommended in my previous report.—L.G.T., 18/2/91. Schedule of closure herewith. I have included Marra Marra Creek, as it can hardly be called a tributary of the Berowra.—L.F.M., 20/2/91.

On this report the Commissioners recommended that the closures suggested by me should be made, but that the closure in the main river instead of terminating at Mangrove Creek should be extended to Windsor.—L.G.T., 23/4/91.

HAWKESBURY RIVER.

THE tidal waters of the Hawkesbury River with its affluents and tributaries upwards to the town of Windsor, from a line drawn south-westerly from the extremity of Bar Point to the extremity of Fisherman's Point, opposite Bar Island.

The tidal waters of Marra Marra and Berowra Creeks, with their respective affluents and tributaries above a line drawn in a south-easterly direction from the extremity of Fisherman's Point to the opposite shore.

The tidal waters of Mooney Mooney Creek, with its affluents and tributaries, above a line drawn in an easterly direction from the north-east extremity of J. W. Cole's portion No. 46 of 40 acres, parish of Cowan, to the opposite shore, being the east point of entrance to the said creek.

Mr. Assistant-Inspector Grant to The Chief Inspector of Fisheries.

Sir,

27 April, 1891.

I have the honor to report that on 10th February, 1891, by instructions from your Department, I accompanied Mr. Inspector Smithers to the Hawkesbury River, where we were met by Mr. Assistant-Inspector Smith, who said, "Surely you have not come here to fish to-night, it being very wet and windy." Mr. Smithers answered, "Did you not tell Mr. Thompson that such a night was the only time to get bream?" He (Mr. Smith) said, "No, it was a man named Lloyd, and it is no use to go to-night." Mr. Smithers said, "Very well, we will wait until the weather suits for fishing." Mr. Smith then went home saying he would meet us in the morning. Some time afterwards two boats came up the river. Mr. Smithers asked the fishermen how it was they did not go up the river for their fish, one man said it is no use going up the river, as the fish are scarce, blackfish and mullet being the only fish there; but sometimes when the tide suited, they could get good hauls of bream at Dangar's Island.

We also saw several boats come from above the bridge with fish, and out of the lot, I do not think there was more than one basket of white fish, the others being blackfish and mullet. On the following morning, Mr. Smithers, Mr. Smith, and myself, under Mr. Smith's instructions, made a start for Berowra, where we saw a fisherman named John Crumpton, who had been out nearly all night, and had only caught about three baskets of mullet. Mr. Smithers asked him if that was all he got, and did he not catch any bream. He said, "What you see in the boat is all I have caught." Mr. Smith then proposed to go up Berowra. We went there and saw three men had just hauled their net ashore, with about one basket of mullet. Mr. Smith asked them where they thought we might get a few bream. They told him a place, saying if there is any bream, you will get them there, Mr. Smith remarking, "I think so too." We went to the place mentioned by the men, but the tide not being low enough, Mr. Smith said we would have to wait, which we did. In the meantime, I removed our coats, bags, &c., off the net and wet it, and waited about an hour. Then Mr. Smith shot the net; after we hauled it ashore, found our catch was one little mullet. The net being new of course, it would not fish as deep and well as an old net, but think if there had been any bream there, we would have caught one or two. When we were going to the said place, we met a boat going from about there, and I do not think they had any fish, so our chance was very poor. At the place where we hauled the net, there was about 7 or 8 feet of water. Mr. Smith proposed we should go back towards Berowra, as the tide would suit at dark; but when we got there, we could neither see or hear any fish. Mr. Smith remarked that it was no use trying with this southerly wind blowing.

In my opinion, by what I saw and heard amongst fishermen, white fish were very scarce in the upper part of the river.

I have, &c.,

J. D. GRANT,

Assistant Inspector of Fisheries, George's River.

Memo. by The Chief Inspector of Fisheries.

Department of Fisheries, Sydney, 10 September, 1890.

I RECOMMEND that that portion of Brisbane Water from the Broadwater southward to the Heads, shown by pink tint on the accompanying tracing, be closed against the use of fishing-nets for a period of two years.

I make this recommendation because of the fish supply in that water being practically exhausted, and because in my opinion it ought to form a splendid nursery and feeding ground for fish.

It will be observed that the area I propose to close is unusually large; this, however, is rendered necessary by the peculiar conformation of the surrounding land, which creates in some points very narrow channels and in others extensive shallow flats, in any parts of which fish can and have been readily captured, to the great detriment of the fishing-ground.

It will be obvious, therefore, that to curtail the closure in any direction would practically mean to destroy the usefulness of any closure at all.

The residents in the vicinity are, I believe, anxious to have the closure effected, and in respect to the fishermen it will be seen from Inspector Cain's report of to-day that they have left the water on account of the scarcity of fish.

LINDSAY THOMPSON.

Mr.

Mr. Assistant-Inspector Mulhall to The Chief Inspector of Fisheries.

Sir,

I have the honor to recommend Brisbane Water (from the entrance to the head of the river) to be closed against net-fishing. Some of the fishermen have been speaking to me about and say in all parts of the river there are large quantities of small fish; therefore, if nets are allowed to be used in any part of it, there would be a great destruction of young fish. I recommend the closing of it all.

SCHEDULE.—COUNTY OF NORTHUMBERLAND.

THE whole of that portion of the tidal waters of Brisbane Water, including the waters of Cockle and Woy Woy Creeks, and their respective tributaries and affluents between a line produced in a westerly direction from the south-west corner of P. Mulhall's portion No. 30 of 50 acres, parish of Kincumber, to the opposite shore, and a line produced in an easterly direction from the south-east corner of J. Muckle-doon's portion No. 121 of 100 acres, parish of Patonga, to the opposite shore.

Also the whole of the tidal waters of Erina Creek, and that portion of the Broadwater northerly of a line produced in a westerly direction from the south-west corner of J. Sea's portion No. 47 of 600 acres, parish of Kincumber, to the opposite shore.

Memo. by The Chief Inspector of Fisheries.

Chief Inspector of Fisheries—Report, Tuggerah Lakes Heads.

24 September, 1890.

ON my return from Lake Macquarie, I visited Tuggerah Lakes Heads, and on reaching them found a fishing-net, consisting of a garfish bunt, on the shore, attached to a stake. It had evidently been used, and was so fixed that it could be used again at any time. I instructed Inspector Gordon to take the net to Wyong, and to return it to the men with a warning, but up to the present time no one has claimed it, although it is alleged to belong to one Etherington. Gordon should have seized the net had the law warranted such an act, but it does not. I had the stake removed, and thrown into deep water. On premises at the lake entrance some three or four nets were hung out to dry, and, doubtless, are being used in the closed waters. There is, however, no proof of this, and it is next to impossible, except, perhaps, by a system of continual watching to detect offenders. In another report I have recommended further supervision for this water, and if the Commissioners adopt the recommendation the oversight of the closed waters at the heads should be specially looked to. The boat allotted to Inspector Gordon for oversight of the lakes is absolutely useless for its purpose.

LINDSAY THOMPSON,

Chief Inspector of Fisheries.

Memo. from Mr. Travelling-Inspector Smithers to The Secretary, Fisheries Department.

1 December, 1890.

ON Friday last, when at entrance of Tuggerah Lake, I noticed fishermen hauling garfish nets there, and two lots of fish staked up, the fish caught being whiting (in roe), garfish (in roe), mullet 4 oz. fish, and bream. If fishing is allowed to be carried on there it must help to cause destruction to the lake fisheries by the use of the destructive garfish net, further the fish have but little chance of getting into the lake in consequence of fishermen being always stationed at entrance to shoot round fish attempting to come in.

I would urgently recommend the closing of the entrance up as far as the lake, then 1 mile each side of the channel, and 1 mile distant out into the lake. In this closure the valuable flats will be included and giving protection to the fish as well as saving the place from being over fished as at present.

MR. ASSISTANT-INSPECTOR GORDON is requested to report at once whether the natural supply of fish in Tuggerah Lakes has been exhausted by net-fishing or otherwise to such a degree as to require rest for the recovery thereof; in which case he will be good enough to state which portion of the waters referred to he would recommend should be closed, under the 17th section of the Fisheries Act, and the period for which he would recommend such closure should be made.

LINDSAY THOMPSON,

Chief Inspector of Fisheries.

Mr. Inspector Gordon to The Secretary, Fisheries Department.

Sir,

Wyong, 3 January, 1891.

In reference to your memo. of 2nd instant, I would beg to state that I have not been here long enough to state positively about these waters, but from what I can see and hear about them I should say that they want to be closed in certain parts.

The closures I would recommend would be Calangra Creek top lake entrance to top lake, the large flat in middle lake, Wallarah Creek middle lake, entrance to middle lake, entrance from ocean, Tumbie, Ourimbah, and Wyong Creeks in Tuggerah Lake. I should recommend them to be closed for at least two years.

I have, &c.,

CHARLES GORDON.

Mr. Inspector Gordon to The Chief Inspector of Fisheries.

Sir,

Wyong, 15 January, 1891.

As regards the numerical proportion of the different kinds of fish caught in Tuggerah Lakes, I beg to submit the following, which, I think, is as correct as possible:—

Mullet	30	Jewfish	10, $\frac{1}{3}$ of the mullet
Blackfish	20, $\frac{2}{3}$ of the mullet.	Whiting... ..	5, $\frac{1}{6}$ "
Bream	15, $\frac{1}{3}$ "	Flathead	5, $\frac{1}{6}$ "
Garfish	15, $\frac{1}{3}$ "

I have, &c.,

CHARLES GORDON.

Memo. by The Chief Inspector of Fisheries.

RETURN showing quantity in baskets of fish brought to Fish Market, Woolloomooloo, from Tuggerah Lakes, January to December, 1889 and 1890.

And this does not represent the total take, for a considerable proportion of the fish from these lakes goes into consumption through channels other than the Fish Market.

L.G.T.

Fisheries of New South Wales.

RETURN relating to the Fisheries of Tuggerah Lakes for the week ending Saturday, the 14th day of February, 1891.

Number of fishermen employed:—34.

Number of boats at work:—12.

Description of net in use:—Hauling, garfish, and meshing.

Quantity (in baskets) of fish caught:—104, 9=113.

Kind of shoals seen, and in what direction moving:—Sent per rail for local use.

Does any source of pollution exist injurious to the fisheries?—No.

Do the waters require to be closed? If so, state reasons:—Yes; for the protection of young fish.

CHARLES GORDON,

Assistant Inspector.

Will Inspector Gordon be good enough to state whether, in his opinion, parts of these lakes require to be closed for the purpose of recovering the natural supply of fish, which has become exhausted by net-fishing or otherwise. Mr. Gordon's attention is directed to 17th section, Fisheries Act.—L.G.T., B.C., 18/2/91.

Mr.

Mr. Inspector Gordon to The Chief Inspector of Fisheries.

Sir,

Wyong, 20 February, 1891.

I beg to inform you that, in my opinion, the natural supply of fish is being exhausted through net-fishing, and I would recommend that portions of the lakes be closed.

The lakes on all the flats and all the creeks are swarming with young fish of all sorts at present, and if portions are closed they will not be disturbed, as would be the case if all the lakes were open to net-fishing.

I have, &c.,

CHARLES GORDON.

Will Assistant-Inspector Gordon be good enough to state in a more definite manner the lakes and the portions thereof he recommends for closure against the use of fishing-nets.—E.J.E., 24/2/91. B.C. Fisheries, 24/2/91. (To be returned.)

Mr. Inspector Gordon to The Chief Inspector of Fisheries.

Sir,

Wyong, 24 February, 1891.

I have to inform you that I would recommend the immediate closure of the entrance to the lakes, as the fishermen are continually at work there. On Thursday, 19th instant, there were no less than seven boats at work there, and the first they caught (whiting especially), were very small, in fact, the bream and whiting are getting very scarce all over the lakes.

I would, therefore, recommend that the closures be made at once.

There are great quantities of small fish of all sorts in the lakes at present.

I have, &c.,

CHARLES GORDON.

Inspector Smithers,—As you were at the lakes yesterday, and in communication with Inspector Gordon, are you of opinion that the natural supply is being exhausted to such an extent as to require rest for recovery? Mr. Gordon implies, though he does not state, that such is the case.—L.G.T., 24/2/91.

Yes; and Mr. Gordon expressly stated so to me, and gave this as a reason for which he intended to recommend the closure. His omission to state so in his letter must have been an oversight.—F.W.S., 25/2/91.

In view of these reports I recommend that effect be given to the closures suggested in my recent report enclosed.—L.G.T., 24/2/91. This report affirms that it is not necessary to renew the closures of Saltwater, Pipeclay, Middle, Hammond, or Elizabeth Creeks, or the parts of the lakes into which they discharge.—L.G.T.

The Secretary, Fisheries Department, to The Principal Under Secretary.

Sir,

Department of Fisheries, Sydney, 23 March, 1891.

The Commissioners of Fisheries have the honor to report for the information of His Excellency the Governor (as required by section 17 of the Fisheries Act) that the supply of fish in Tuggerah Beach Lakes has been exhausted to such a degree as to require rest for the recovery of the natural supply, and by their direction I have the honor to request that you will convey to the Colonial Secretary their recommendation that the several portions of those waters specified in the appended schedule be closed against the use of fishing-nets for a period of two years.

THE CLOSURE OF PORTIONS OF TUGGERAH BEACH LAKES.

The closure of Tuggerah Beach Lake Channel, county of Northumberland.—So much of the tidal waters of Tuggerah Beach Lake, the channel and the sea entrance, together with all inlets as included within the following boundary lines: Commencing on the east bank of the lake at the extreme southern point of the channel entrance into the lake; thence south-south-westerly along the line of high-water mark and part of the eastern bank of lake about 80 chains to a point; thence north-westerly about 40 chains into the waters of the lake; thence north-north-easterly and north-easterly about 1,120 chains; thence south-easterly about 40 chains to a point on the line of high-water mark; thence south-westerly by the line of high-water mark and part of the eastern bank of lake about 80 chains to the extreme northern point channel entrance to lake; thence south-easterly by the line of high-water mark of the northern waters of the late channel to the extreme northern point of the sea entrance to the lake; thence northerly along the line of high-water mark of the ocean beach about 40 chains, into the waters of the South Pacific Ocean; thence southerly about 80 chains; thence westerly about 40 chains to a point; thence northerly along the line of high-water mark of ocean beach about 40 chains to the extreme southern point of the sea entrance; thence north-westerly by the line of high-water mark of the southern waters of the lake channel to the point of commencement.

Saltwater Creek.—The whole of the tidal waters of Saltwater Creek, and that portion of Tuggerah Beach Lake as included in the following boundary lines: Commencing on the southern bank of lake at the extreme western point of the entrance to Saltwater Creek; thence westerly along the line of high-water mark, and part of the southern shore of the lake about 40 chains to a point; thence north-easterly about 40 chains into the waters of the lake; thence easterly about 40 chains to a point on the lake bank; thence south-south-westerly by the line of high-water mark, and part of the eastern shore of the lake, about 40 chains, to the extreme eastern point of creek entrance; thence across the mouth of the creek to the point of commencement.

Tumbi Umbi Creek.—The whole of the tidal waters of Tumbi Umbi Creek, and that portion of Tuggerah Beach Lake as included in the following boundary line: Commencing on the southern bank of the lake at the extreme western point of the entrance to the creek; thence north-westerly along the line of high-water mark, and part of the southern bank of lake about 40 chains to a point; thence north-easterly about 40 chains into the waters of the lake; thence south-easterly about 80 chains; thence south-westerly about 40 chains to a point; thence north-westerly along the line of high-water mark, and part of the southern bank of lake, about 40 chains to the extreme eastern point of entrance to creek; thence across the mouth of creek to the point of commencement.

Ourimbah

Ourimbah Creek.—The whole of the tidal waters of Ourimbah Creek, and that portion of Tuggerah Beach Lake as included in the following boundary lines: Commencing on the western bank of lake at the extreme northern point of entrance to creek; thence westerly along the line of high-water mark and part of the western bank of the lake about 40 chains to a point; thence north-north-easterly about 40 chains into the waters of the lake; thence east-south-easterly 75 chains; thence south-south-westerly about 85 chains; thence west-north-westerly about 75 chains; thence north-north-easterly about 40 chains to a point on lake bank; thence easterly along the line of high-water mark, and part of the western bank of lake about 40 chains to the extreme southern point of creek entrance; thence across the mouth of creek to the point of commencement.

Wyong Creek.—The whole of the tidal waters of Wyong Creek and that portion of the Tuggerah Beach Lakes as included in the following boundary lines: Commencing on the western bank of the lake at the extreme northern point of the entrance to creek; thence northerly and east-north-easterly along the line of high-water mark, and part of the western bank of lake about 40 chains to a point; thence south-easterly about 40 chains into the waters of the lake; thence south-westerly about 80 chains; thence north-westerly about 70 chains; thence north-easterly about 40 chains to a point on bank; thence south-easterly along the line of high-water mark, and part of the western bank of lake, about 40 chains, to the extreme southern point of creek entrance; thence across that entrance to the point of commencement.

Portions of Tuggerah Beach Lake, Budgewoi Lake, and Munmorah Lake, as included in the following boundary lines: Commencing on the northern bank of Tuggerah Beach Lake, at the extreme eastern point of the entrance to Budgewoi Lake; thence south-easterly and easterly by the line of high-water mark, and by part of the northern bank at Tuggerah Beach Lake about 40 chains; thence southerly about 40 chains into the waters of the lake; thence west by northerly about 80 chains; thence northerly about 40 chains; thence easterly by the line of high-water mark, and by part of the northern bank of the lake about 40 chains to the extreme western point of entrance to Budgewoi Lake; thence north-westerly by the line of high-water, and part of the western bank of that lake, about 40 chains; thence easterly, about 65 chains into the waters of the lake; thence north-easterly about 120 chains to a point of land on northern bank; thence north-easterly, east-south-easterly, and north-westerly by the line of high-water mark and by part of the northern bank of lake, the western bank of Budgewoi Creek to the extreme western point of its entrance into Munmorah Lake; thence north-westerly by the line of high-water mark and part of the south-western bank of that lake about 40 chains; thence easterly about 40 chains into the waters of Munmorah Lake; thence south-easterly about 40 chains; thence westerly by the line of high-water mark, and by part of the southern bank of Munmorah Lake, about 40 chains, to the extreme eastern point of the said entrance into the lake; thence south-easterly, south-westerly, northerly, and south-westerly by the line of high-water mark, and by the eastern bank of Budgewoi Creek, the eastern bank of Budgewoi Lake to the point of commencement.

Wallarah, Pipeclay, Second, and Hammond Creeks.—The whole of the tidal waters of Wallarah, Pipeclay, Second, and Hammond Creeks, tributaries to Budgewoi Lake, and that portion of the lake above a line drawn in a west-south-westerly direction from a point on the north-eastern bank, distant about 40 chains south-easterly along the line of high-water mark, from the extreme south-eastern point of entrance to Hammond Creek, to a point on the western bank distant about 40 chains south-westerly and southerly along the line of high-water mark, from the extreme southern point of the entrance to Wallarah Creek.

Callangra Creek.—The whole of the tidal waters of Callangra Creek and that portion of Munmorah Lake, west of a line drawn in a south-south-easterly direction from a point on the north-western bank distant about 40 chains north-easterly along the line of high-water mark from the extreme northern point of the entrance to the creek to a point on western bank distant about 40 chains south-easterly along the line of high-water mark from the extreme southern point of the entrance to the aforesaid creek.

Elizabeth Creek.—The whole of the tidal waters of Elizabeth Creek, and that portion of Munmorah Lake east of a line drawn in a south-easterly direction from a point on north-eastern bank distant north-westerly about 40 chains along the line of high-water mark from the extreme north-western point of entrance to creek to a point on the eastern bank of the lake distant about 40 chains south-westerly along the line of high-water mark from the south-eastern entrance to the said creek.

Memo. from Mr. Travelling-Inspector Smithers to The Chief Inspector of Fisheries.

29 April, 1891.

I WOULD state, for the information of the Chief Inspector, that on the 26th instant I hauled four times within the contemplated closed waters at and about the entrance to Tuggerah Lakes with a garfish net—one used daily by the Bogan fisherman, and obtained but about a quarter of a hamper in the whole of such hauls, our catch being blackfish, mullet, flathead, two whiting, and three garfish. There were five persons present the whole time. I therefore submit that there is urgent necessity for closure of the part referred to.

Memo. from The Chief Inspector of Fisheries to Mr. Assistant-Inspector Gordon.

Department of Fisheries, Sydney, 27 June, 1891.

TWENTY-EIGHT calico proclamations, declaring portions of Tuggerah Lakes closed against net-fishing, are forwarded under separate cover to Mr. Assistant-Inspector Gordon, who will be good enough to have them placed in conspicuous places near the closed waters as soon as possible.

LINDSAY THOMPSON,
Chief Inspector of Fisheries.

Mr.

Mr. Assistant-Inspector Boyd to The Chief Inspector of Fisheries.

Sir,

I beg most respectfully to report for the Chief Inspector's of Fisheries information that the supply of fish has become exhausted in Lake Macquarie by net-fishing, and that the lake will require a rest for the term of two years, and it would be better if the lake could be closed for three years against net-fishing. I would strongly recommend the whole of the lake to be closed for the above stated time, and after this term only one-half of the lake should be used for net-fishing at the one time.

I have, &c,

WILLIAM BOYD,
Assistant Inspector,
Swansea.

I am not inclined to endorse this whole closure, but I leave for the Hunter to-night, and propose to visit this water on my return thence, and will submit a report.—L.G.T, 17/2/91.

Too late home to post report on Saturday. Forward on to-day.

Memo. by The Chief Inspector of Fisheries.

Recommending closure of certain portions of Lake Macquarie against the use of fishing-nets.

25 February, 1891.

I VISITED this water and found that at the channel entrance to the lake it was being fished on a very extensive scale. There were a number of boats at work and the nets were so arranged that it was impossible for fish to pass through the channel to spread in the lake. Each of these boats had a quantity of fish penned up awaiting transit to market; and this has been going on for some time, while in other parts of the lake it is next to impossible to capture fish in marketable quantities. Forty-eight men with fifteen boats, are at present working the lake, and if these confine their attention to the entrance it is quite clear that the lake itself must remain depleted. The water evidently needs rest for the recovery of the natural supply, and I recommend that the following portions of it be closed against the use of fishing-nets.

The lake entrance and the lake itself, between lines from the south-west corner of the VR on the south of the entrance to Kahiba Point on the north; thence by a line extending west into the lake 40 chains; thence by a line south to meet a line drawn west 40 chains from the south-west corner of the VR referred to.

Also the whole of Muddy Bay and Dora Creek (vide my report of 14th October last, herewith), and the lake itself to a line drawn north and south from the beacon fronting the creek, and extending to each shore; and Mannering Bay, from Warrawibah Point to Wye Point: also Fennell's Bay, including Edmunds Bay; bounded by a line extended southerly from the eastern boundary line of Fennell's 50 acres, portion No. 11, southerly, across the bay to the opposite shore.

In suggesting these closures, so desirable in the public interests, I recognise that their value will be much impaired unless sufficient oversight can be afforded for their protection.

LINDSAY THOMPSON,
Chief Inspector of Fisheries.

Memo. by The Chief Inspector of Fisheries.

Department of Fisheries, Sydney, 14 October, 1890.

In furtherance of the proposal to station Inspector Curan at Dora Creek, Lake Macquarie, I visited that locality on the 10th instant, with the object of selecting a suitable site for a residence, and generally inspecting the waters.

Dora Creek, in relation to Lake Macquarie, is very similar to Wyong Creek in its relation to Lake Tuggerah; like it, it is crossed by the railway, and is the entrepôt for fish consigned for transit. Just outside the entrance there is an elevated point of land which commands extensive views, and is altogether suited for a site for an Inspector's residence; it is on land belonging to the Toronto Land Company, and can, I believe, be obtained at a reasonable price. In the meantime—that is, pending a settlement of the general question of Inspectors' residences—Curan could obtain accommodation at a house on the creek kept by a man named Frost, and I should recommend his removal there, so soon as the lake is again closed against net-fishing.

In respect to such further closing, I recommend that Dora Creek, and the water next to it, called Muddy Lake or Stingaree Bay, be also closed; both of these waters are obviously splendid breeding grounds, and ought to be preserved as such. There are several hauls in each, but the greater part of Muddy Lake is covered with the cypress weed, which is a bar to netting with the ordinary net, though the hindrance can be overcome with proper appliances, but the hauls themselves make it quite worth while to close the whole, so that fish may be perfectly protected from disturbance.

The entrance to the lake is about 200 feet wide and very shallow, as also is the lake generally; it has not more than 8 feet in the deepest part. It would be admirably adapted for experimental purposes, or for leasing under the provisions of the new Bill.

Dora Creek is of a like depth, and if the Commissioners entertain the proposal to close it, I recommend that such closure should extend outwards to a line quarter of a mile north and a quarter of a mile south of the beacon at the entrance; thence by lines westerly to the shore. Muddy Lake would be included in these boundaries. These waters, though abounding with small fish, seem very spare of large or marketable ones.

Chief Inspector of Fisheries.

SCHEDULE.

Description of proposed closures, Lake Macquarie.

27 February, 1891.

PARISHES of Wallarah and Kahibah, county of Northumberland. The waters of the lake channel and its inlets, and of the lake itself, within the following boundaries: Starting from the south-west corner of water reserve No. 1, notified 24th December, 1861, parish of Wallarah, by a line bearing westerly 40 chains into the waters of the lake; thence by a line bearing north by easterly about 170 chains; thence easterly 40 chains to the extremity of a point known as Kahibah Point, parish of Kahibah; thence along the northern shore of the lake channel in a south-easterly and easterly direction to the north point of the sea entrance to the said channel; thence by a line bearing south-easterly to the south point of such entrance; thence along the southern shore of the lake channel to the point of commencement.

Mannerling Bay.—The whole of the tidal waters of Mannerling Bay, parishes of Morrisset and Wallarah, including all affluents and tributaries south of a line drawn in a south-easterly direction from the north-eastern extremity of Wyee Point, fronting J. Braid's portion No. 28 of 55 acres, parish of Morrisset, to the north-western extremity of Warriwibah Point, fronting reserve No. 55, notified 8th July, 1878.

Muddy Bay and Dora Creek.—The whole of the tidal waters of Muddy Bay and Dora Creek, parishes of Coorumbung and Morrisset, with their respective affluents and tributaries west of a line drawn southerly from the north point of the entrance to the said bay to Stingaree Point, being the south point of entrance to Dora Creek.

Fennell's Bay, Edmund's Bay, and Stony Creek.—The whole of the tidal waters of Fennell's Bay, Edmund's Bay, and Stony Creek, parish of Awaba, with their respective affluents and tributaries west of a line drawn in a south-westerly direction from the south-east corner of H. M. Fennell's portion No. 11 of 50 acres, to the opposite shore.

The Chief Inspector of Fisheries to Mr. Assistant-Inspector Curan.

Department of Fisheries, Sydney, 2 January, 1891.

MR. ASSISTANT-INSPECTOR CURAN is requested to report at once whether the natural supply of fish in the Hunter River has been exhausted by net-fishing or otherwise to such a degree as to require rest for the recovery thereof, in which case he will be good enough to state which portion of the waters referred to he would recommend should be closed under the 17th section of the Fisheries Act, and the period for which he would recommend such closure should be made.

LINDSAY THOMPSON,

Chief Inspector of Fisheries.

Mr.

Mr. Assistant-Inspector Curan to The Chief Inspector of Fisheries.

Sir,

Fisheries Office, Newcastle, 3 January, 1891.

In reply to your memo. of the 2nd instant, I have the honor to inform you, the supply of natural fish exhausted in the lower end of the river. All the fishing is done about the heads, and about 4 miles up the river. The boats seldom go past Fullerton Cove.

But the fish is increasing in the river from Hexham all the way to Morpeth, in the Hunter, and to Clarence Town in the Williams. Both rivers are full of fish. When I was up the Hunter in November and December last, the fish was plentiful; I could hardly get my paddles in the water, and some large mullet jumped in the boat in the day-time.

I would recommend that a portion of the river be closed for two years, commencing at the south point of Mosquito Island going east and west to Bluff Head, and in a straight line of outer end of South Breakwater to outer end of North Breakwater, and to include half a mile along the south shore of Dempsey Island, and then a line south to North Waratah. That will give the fish a chance to go up the river, and leave plenty of fishing ground for the fishermen to work on.

Most of the fish caught here is caught near the Heads, and it is time this part of the river had a spell. There is plenty of fish in the Hunter River if the fishermen will only go a few miles from home for them; that they won't do while they can get a basket or two about home. I am sure it would be no trouble to land fifty or 100 baskets a haul about Raymond Terrace or Eales Flat. The farmers up there go out and scoop a half-boat load in a very short time on dark nights.

And to include Bullock Island Creek.

I have, &c.,
HENRY CURAN.

Fisheries of New South Wales.

RETURN relating to the Fisheries of the Hunter River, for the week ending Saturday, the 31st day of January, 1891.

Number of fishermen employed:—Twenty men.

Number of boats at work:—Ten boats.

Description of net in use:—Hauling and mesh nets.

Quantity (in baskets) of fish caught:—209.

Kind of shoals seen, and in what direction moving:—Mullet; the river is full of them from Newcastle to Raymond Terrace, but bream, flathead, and whiting are very scarce. Seventy-seven baskets of fish were sent by train from Newcastle for the week ending 31st January, 1891.

General remarks:—Three boats and six men have been employed catching prawns in the Hunter River, and three baskets sent to Sydney and three baskets sent to Melbourne, and two baskets for use in Newcastle. Prawns are very scarce in the Hunter River.

HENRY CURAN,
Assistant Inspector, Newcastle.

Minute by Chief Inspector of Fisheries.

WILL this report be sufficient to warrant the closing of the Hunter River, or will a special report be required? If not, what part of the river should be closed?—L.G.T., 4/2/91.

Memo. by The Chief Inspector of Fisheries.

I HAVE made an inspection of the Hunter River, and am of opinion that there is such a scarcity of the various species of fine fish, mullet being the only kind which are in abundance, that the river requires rest for the recovery of the natural supply, and to effect this I recommend that the Hunter River from the heads to a line about north-north-east from Waratah jetty to the south point of Mosquito Island, and thence about north-east to the powder hulk, also the whole of Mosquito and Throsby Creeks, and the back channel as far as the punt line, be closed against the use of fishing-nets.

I do not propose to close any part of the upper waters, and I have selected these lower parts because the fish are intercepted at the Heads in their passage up the river—there are five hauls at the Heads, three in the south side and two on the north, and these can be worked at any part of flood-tide. Fishermen are generally stationed there, the result being that very few fish which come from sea succeed in passing upwards. If this closure be effected it will afford opportunity for the fish to enter the river, and to spread over the flats and other parts of that extensive water.

LINDSAY THOMPSON,
Chief Inspector of Fisheries.

Memo. by Mr. Draftsman Mann.

25 March, 1891.

THE closure of portion of the Hunter River, parish of Newcastle, county of Northumberland. So much of the tidal waters of the Hunter River with its affluents and tributaries as are included within the following boundary lines:—

Commencing on the line of high-water mark on the south bank of Ash Island at the eastern side of the punt crossing over the south channel, thence easterly by the line of high-water mark, and by the southern shores of Ash, Dempsey, and Mosquito Islands to the extreme south-eastern point of the latter island, thence by a line bearing east-north-easterly to a point on the line of high-water mark on the eastern shore of the Hunter River, intersecting the powder hulk adjacent to that shore, thence southerly, south-easterly, and north-easterly, by the line of high-water mark of the eastern shore to the eastern extremity of the Northern Breakwater, thence by a line easterly to Nobby's Head, thence westerly-north-westerly, and westerly by the line of high-water mark of the southern and western shores of Port Hunter, and and the southern shores at the South Channel to the eastern side of the aforesaid punt crossing, thence northerly by that crossing to the point of commencement.

Also the whole of the tidal waters of Dempsey Channel and Mosquito Channel from their junction with the waters of the Northern Channel to their junction with the waters of the South Channel, Hunter River.

Also the whole of the tidal waters of Throsby Creek from Port Waratah to its junction with the waters of the main river east of Honeysuckle Point.

LINDSAY THOMPSON,
Chief Inspector of Fisheries.

Mr. Travelling-Inspector Smithers to The Secretary, Fisheries Commission.

Sir,

Sydney, 4 February, 1891.

I beg to state, for your information, that I have visited Port Stephens. I wished, in the first place, to overhaul some illegal nets; but at time of my visit last week, the fishermen had almost knocked off work, on account of the small return they got for their fish, and being unable to catch fish other than mullet.

I had great difficulty in getting a boat either at Limeburner's Creek or Nelson's Bay, having to fall back upon fishermen for their boats.

Limeburner's Creek has now a small quantity of young oysters, and in good order, but in this creek large quantities of prawns are to be seen, and plenty of mullet. I include in this the waters as far as Sawyer's Point. Along the foreshores in the above-mentioned places there are properly marked boards now standing upon cancelled oyster leases. There is hardly any necessity for me to add that they are mostly without an oyster now. There may have been disease; but disease does not consume the shells.

At Sawyer's Point there is existing now what will become a very grave evil to the waters of Port Stephens, that is the sawdust of the mill now in full work, and owned by Mr. Joass. It is now piled up to the height of about 18 feet, and right out to the water's edge, and in some places right over the water, being upon an old wharf, and in all places the high spring tides rise to the sawdust. The first slip that there may be tons of sawdust must go into the water. The evil will be still greater each day, as there is but little room for him to put the sawdust, and to pile it upon the heaps now there it will fall in.

The closed waters have a very large supply of mullet, but I failed to see ground fish, especially at night-time. These waters are simply one mass of mullet. The whole of the bays and beaches were visited with like result, except in two instances, whereas down near Nelson's a large lot of whiting were upon a flat, and a little further on we saw a few bream.

I gave the fishermen to understand that they must take out their licenses or abide by the results. Licenses were then applied for.

There is still a quantity of oyster-stealing being carried on there, although some of the men have permits to work oyster reserves. There being no reserves there, Crown and other lands must suffer.

Mr. Laman has been very zealous in trying to put a stop to stealing, but unfortunately he has to hire a boat from some of the men connected.

Mr. Travelling-Inspector Smithers to The Secretary, Fisheries Commission.

Sir,

I beg to report for your information that, whilst on my visit to the closed waters at Port Stephens, I found that Tellegerry Creek, which has been closed by the Commissioners for the protection and preservation of fish, has been fished to such an extent, that the supply has been exhausted. As on my previous visits, I found this famous creek well stocked with fish, and having since spent two nights on the creek, I can speak from observation. The seven boats recently working there have left, and started to ruin the closed waters of Swan Bay, where I found evidences of most wanton destruction, for in one part, where stalling had taken place, about 1 ton of mullet had been left to rot on the flat, the fishermen, no doubt, having taken what they wanted from their catch, and left the others. I did my utmost to detect the offenders, but failed, through not being able to find out their movements until too late; when just at dusk on Thursday evening, I saw two boats at work at the head of Swan Bay, and one about the limit line of closure; this was Evans' boat. In starting from Cabbage Tree Island for them I was observed, and came up to Evans, and warned him that he had just been hauling on the line of closure. The other boats I could not find, although I watched closely all the night.

The great destruction is caused by the men using garfish nets for general hauling, and, having plenty of men and very fast boats, they are difficult to catch.

Assistant-Inspector Laman has no doubt done his duty, as far as possible, but he has had to work against people watching his movements.

I will endeavour to stop the further destruction as soon as possible.

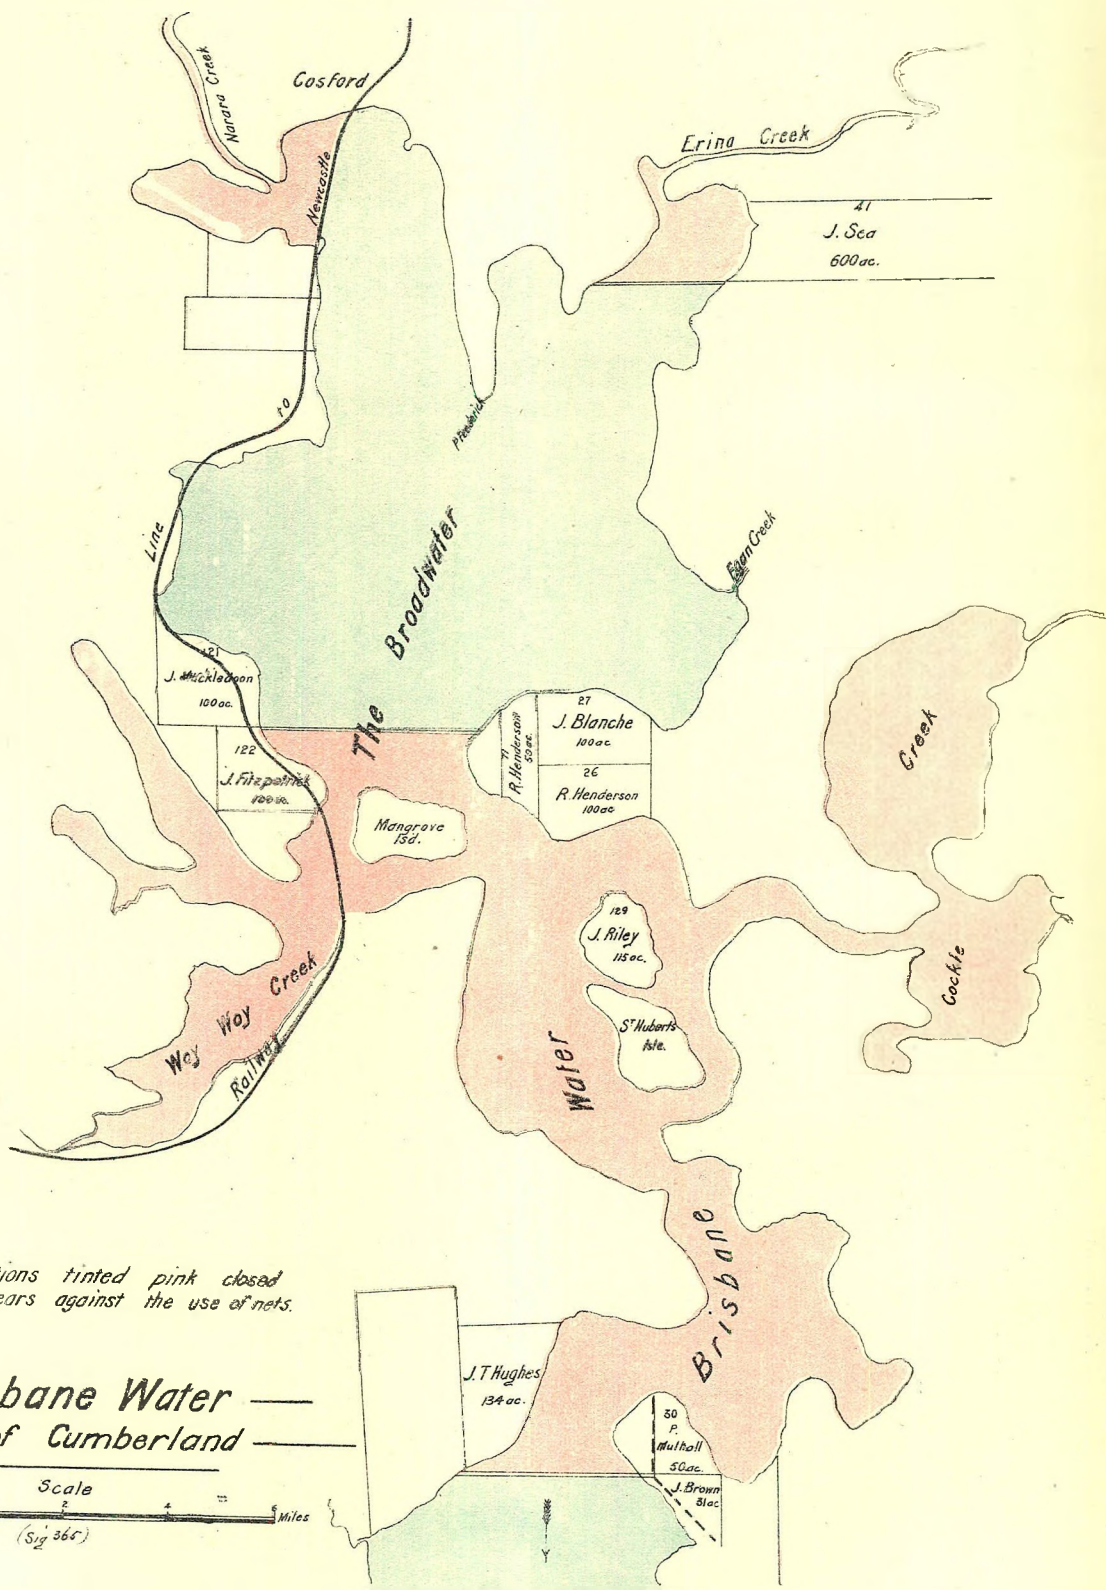

I have, &c.,
FREDK. W. SMITHERS,
Travelling Inspector.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.

NEW SOUTH WALES.

OYSTER LEASES, WALLIS LAKE.

(APPLICATIONS OF LIONEL RALSTON AND CHARLES MURPHY FOR.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be printed, 26 August, 1891.

RETURN to an Order of the Honorable the Legislative Assembly of New South Wales, dated 29th July, 1891, That there be laid upon the Table of this House,—

“Copies of all letters, reports, minutes, and other documents having reference to the applications of Lionel Ralston and Charles Murphy, for leases for oyster culture, of areas at Wallis Lake, and the reasons of the Commissioners of Fisheries for refusing such applications.”

(Mr. Young.)

Mr. L. Ralston to The Commissioners of Fisheries.

Oyster Fisheries Act, 1884—Application for a lease for oyster culture.

Gentlemen,

12 February, 1891.

I hereby apply, under the provisions of the 4th section Oyster Fisheries Act, 1884, for a lease for fifteen years, for the purpose of oyster culture, of the portion of Crown land shown in the appended tracing, and described hereunder.

Description.

Parish of Forster, county of Gloucester, at Crown lands, and commencing at a point on the line of high-water mark, 550 yards west of Woodward's upper stake, and extending 200 lineal yards west along the foreshore; thence 60 yards north; thence 200 yards east; thence 60 yards south to starting peg; stake driving down at high-water mark.

I am, &c.,

LIONEL RALSTON,

Forster (Per T.M.)

The Secretary, Department of Fisheries, to Mr. L. Ralston.

Sir,

Department of Fisheries, Sydney, 16 February, 1891.

I have the honor to acknowledge receipt of your letter, dated 12th instant, enclosing Post Office order, £2, deposit on application for a lease for oyster culture of 200 yards, Wallis Lake, and to say that it will receive the early consideration of the Commissioners of Fisheries.

I have, &c.,

LINDSAY THOMPSON,

Secretary.

Office Memorandum and Enclosures.

APPLICATION for oyster culture lease, submitted for the consideration of the Commissioners—Cockatoo Island, Wallis Lake.

Registered No. of Papers.	Applicant.	Area.	Remarks.
91-1,288 ...	L. Ralston ...	yards. 200	The enclosed is an application for 200 yards of foreshore at Wallis Lake. In submitting this, I beg to draw the Commissioners' attention to H. Woodward's letter, No. 89-1,080, attached, asking to be protected against "Cockatoo lessees," also to Commissioners' minute, No. 7,638, thereon, viz. :—"For the present, the Commissioners are of opinion that it will be sufficient protection to Mr. Woodward to decline to grant any leases, except on special grounds, and after due consideration."

LIVINGSTON F. MANN,
Draftsman, 23/2/91.

[Enclosures.]

Sir, 85, Castlereagh-street, Sydney, 7 February, 1889.
I am the lessee of very near the whole of the Wallis Lake oyster beds; my rent amounts to just about £100 per year.

During the time I have had the leases I have lost a deal of money in wages and rent, and last year I sent 298 bags of oysters to the fishery and have only taken seventy-two out of that number. The consequence of refraining from taking the oysters growing naturally on the fishery and sending the large quantity there has been, that a very good lot of young oysters have set on the beds, and, if I am allowed, I hope to be able to restore the fishery to its old condition. But now I am threatened with what we may term "Cockatoo lessees";—application is, or will be made to you for small leases adjacent to mine. If you grant them it will put me to great loss in endeavouring to guard my beds, and will put a stop to the development of the fishery.

The whole of the fishery lays within a radius of 2 miles of the sea entrance. If you was to make the whole of the shores within that radius oyster reserves you could protect me, and help on one of the good old fisheries of our Colony.

Yours, &c.,

HENRY WOODWARD.

Lindsay Thompson, Esq., Secretary, Fisheries Commission.

Submitted to the Commissioners, 13/2/89. Commissioners' minute No. 7,532. Procure report from Kendall, 13/2/89. Acting Assistant Inspector Kendall for report.—L.G.T., Secretary, B.C., 14/2/89.

Sir, Cape Hawke, 23 February, 1889.
With reference to Mr. Woodward's letter of the 7th instant, I have the honor to inform you that Mr. Woodward has spent a large amount of money on his foreshores and wages. From the 18th May to the 25th August, 1888, Mr. Woodward sent here 191 bags of New Zealand oysters, and ninety-eight bags of small Port Stephens oysters. The Port Stephens oysters to re-stock some of the beds, the New Zealand oysters for fattening.

Mr. Woodward has been very unfortunate with the New Zealand oysters, as Mr. Woodward has only shipped seventy-two bags out of the 191 bags of New Zealand oysters; there has been some gross neglect by Mr. Woodward's employee with regard to the New Zealand oysters.

The two leases applied for by Ravel and Hocking will in no way interfere with Mr. Woodward's leases.

A person is about to apply for 300 yards; should those 300 yards be granted, I have no doubt in stating the person would give Mr. Woodward reason to complain.

I cannot see by reserving the whole of the foreshores here would protect Mr. Woodward's interest in the least. The only and best way to bring the fisheries back to its former state is for the Commissioners of Fisheries and lessees to close this place for a definite time—that would give the young oysters a chance to grow.

I have, &c.,

A. H. KENDALL.

Secretary, Department of Fisheries.

Submitted to the Commissioners, 6/3/89. Commissioners' minute No. 7,585—Read. Lessees have it in their power to close their areas for as long a period (within the term of their lease) as they wish—6/3/89.

I re-submit this case for further instructions. Mr. Woodward asks, on grounds stated in his letter, that the unleased portions of Wallis Lake within a radius of 2 miles from the entrance, may be made a public oyster reserve, so as to protect him against "Cockatoo lessees." The local inspector reports that such action would not protect Mr. Woodward in the least, and it is he who proposes to close the fishery as the means of saving the young oysters.—L.G.T., 9/3/89.

Submitted to the Commissioners, 13/3/89.

Commissioners' minute No. 7,638.—For the present the Commissioners are of opinion that it will be sufficient protection to Mr. Woodward to decline to grant any leases except on special grounds, and after due consideration. Mr. Woodward to be informed—13/3/89.

Sir, Department of Fisheries, Sydney, 18 March, 1889.
Referring to your letter dated 7th ultimo, asking that your leased areas at Wallis Lake might be protected by declaring all unleased land within a radius of 2 miles from the sea entrance to the lake public oyster reserves, I am desired by the Commissioners of Fisheries to apprise you, that after careful deliberation, they are of opinion that sufficient protection will be afforded to you if they decline to grant any leases except on special grounds, and after due consideration.

I have, &c.,

LINDSAY THOMPSON,

Secretary.

Mr. H. Woodward.

Oyster Fisheries Act, 1884.

ASSISTANT Inspector Gyler is requested to furnish, as early as possible, replies to the following questions relating to the application of Lionel Ralston to lease for oyster culture, 200 yards, at Wallis Lake.

Yours, &c.,

LINDSAY THOMPSON,

Chief Inspector of Fisheries.

Registered No. 91-1,288.

1. What are the distance and direction by compass of the starting point from the nearest corner of the portion which the area fronts, or other defined point? Commences 550 yards from Mr. Woodward's western stake (200 yards' lease) thence west.
2. What is the length along the line of foreshore? Two hundred yards west.
3. What are the lengths and directions by compass of the other lines bounding the area? North 60 yards; east 200 yards; south 60 yards to the point of commencement.
4. What is the average depth of water at low tide on the outer boundary-line? About 18 inches.
5. Is the land on which the area abuts Crown or private land? Crown land.
6. If private, state owner's name? Crown land.
7. Is the land under lease, or occupation; if so, state the lessee's or occupant's name, and the time his tenure has to run? Annual lease for grass right by Mr. Kendall.
8. To what extent is the area at present oyster-bearing, and are the oysters in good condition or otherwise? A fair show of young oysters in patches.
9. Could its oyster-bearing capabilities be improved by judicious management? Yes.
10. What steps, if any, is the lessee taking under his sufferance occupation to improve his holding? None up to date; only temporarily marked.
11. Have you any further information respecting this area which, in your opinion, might be of use to the Commissioners; if so, state it? In measuring the above application I found that it was not according to his plan; in starting 550 yards from Mr. Woodward's upper stake, I found that the measured portion passed the mark in his plan, therefore I have marked Mr. Woodward's 200 yards in red, and also marked Mr. Ralston's portion in red.

ANDREW GYLER,

Assistant Inspector,

12/3/91.

Mr. Assistant-Inspector Gyler to The Secretary, Department of Fisheries.

Sir,

Croki, Thursday, 12 March, 1891.

I have the honor to inform you that I left Croki on horseback early on Monday morning, arrived at Forster (Cape Hawke) at 3 p.m. Was informed that Acting Assistant-Inspector Kendall was up the river; then called on Mr. Woodward, and started in his boat up the river; found Mr. Kendall there; went and measured the portion applied for by Mr. Ralston. In starting 550 yards from Mr. Woodward's upper stake, as mentioned in the application, I found that his plan or sketch of the island was not right. I therefore marked Mr. Woodward's 200 yards in red in the plan, and also marked Mr. Ralston's application in red according to the measurement.

We then proceeded to Forster, and I sent for Mr. Ralston who is working at one of the saw-mills, he informed me that he has had one of his legs hurt some time ago, which will never be right or strong again, and as he is an old fisherman he thought, by getting an oyster lease, and by catching a few fish, that he might be able to make a fair living.

On Tuesday Acting Assistant-Inspector Kendall and myself took the boat and went round the principal part of the fisheries (the water being very high but clear), which I found to be in a forward state. As far as I could see most of the mangrove shores in places are covered with young oysters, and there is a fair show of young oysters on portions of the natural oyster beds.

In looking round the beds I found that this 200 yards applied for by Mr. Ralston is nearly in the centre of Mr. Woodward's leases. Should you look at the plan of Wallis Lake you will find that this is just opposite the Cutting Bed and McClement's Bay, which are large leases belonging to Mr. Woodward. I might also mention that Mr. Woodward also holds several leases at the back or south side of Cockatoo Island.

I left Forster on Wednesday morning, as it was raining heavy, and I arrived home in the evening. Raining hard all day.

I had no personal objection against Mr. Ralston, but I am not in favour of granting small leases in the centre of large lessees' leases while there are other portions available; therefore I shall leave it in the hands of the Commissioners of Fisheries for their decision.

Trusting that the above report will be satisfactory,

I have, &c.,

ANDREW GYLER,

Assistant Inspector.

Application

Application for Oyster Culture.

APPLICATION for Oyster Culture Lease submitted for approval by the Commissioners of Fisheries in accordance with Commissioners' minute No. 7,304—Cockatoo Island (Wallis Lake).

Reg. No.	Applicant.	Remarks.
91-1,288...	Lionel Ralston.....	This application is for 200 yards at Cockatoo Island, Wallis Lake; was submitted for the consideration of the Commissioners on 25th February, 1891, under term of Commissioners' minute No. 7,638, viz.:—The protection to Mr. Woodward from so-called "Cockatoo lessees," subsequently sent to Gyler for report. Vide Commissioners' Minute No. 9,952. Report herewith concerning his official inspection. Vide papers attached, 91-1,741.

LIVINGSTON F. MANN,
Draftsman, 17/3/91.

Urgent. Mr. Mann,—It should be explained how far the Inspector's report affects Ralston's application, and a tracing showing the alleged clashing may be appended.—L.G.T., 18/3/91.

There is no clashing whatever. Gyler has only stated in his report that the applied for area is situated opposite some large leases of Mr. Woodward's. The Inspector has clearly measured the application according to the description in application form—starting 550 yards from the western stake of Woodward's lease; vide papers 91-1,288, 91-1,740. Tracing of Wallis Lake herewith enclosed.—L.F.M., 18/3/91.

Submitted to the Commissioners, 18/3/91.

Commissioners' minute No. 10,012.—Postpone, and explain verbally to Woodward that the Commissioners cannot keep vacant areas closed against the public, unless we have evidence that the applicants do not intend to use them legitimately, 18/3/91.

Note sent to Mr. Woodward to call, 21/3/91.

Mr. H. Woodward to The Secretary, Department of Fisheries.

Sir,

57, Castlereagh-street, Sydney, 23 March, 1891.

About two years ago I informed you that a person named Murphy intended to apply for a lease at Wallis Lake, either in his own name or in that of one of his acquaintances.

I asked you as a great favour not to grant a small lease to Murphy, as I was sure he only wanted it as a blind to give him the right to roam over the fishery and to ship or sell oysters. I believed then, and do so now, that if he gets the right to make any use of the fishery, it will cost me more money to protect the oysters I have growing there than they will be worth.

Murphy is an old servant of mine. In December, 1889, I discharged him for representing to me for a year or more that he was laying large quantities of spawn on my beds when in reality he had laid hardly any, and I had paid him from £2 to £2 5s. per week, with a house, the whole of the time.

Now a person named Ralston has applied for a lease of 200 yards, Cockatoo Island, at Wallis Lake. Ralston is a poor man, working at a saw-mill there, and Murphy works with him. They are mates.

The talk about the matter at Wallis Lake is what Murphy intends to do, not Ralston. If the lease at Cockatoo is given to Ralston, another application is to be put in for a lease right up against the heart of where I have a large quantity of oysters within a few months of being fit for market. I have, at a heavy outlay, been nursing up this fishery for years past, and as it is the only way of working that will ever restore our fisheries to their old state, it will be a bad job to let people in as lessees that will cause the breakage up of such good work.

I would never ask you to refuse a lease to any person that intended to honestly go into the cultivation of oysters, but I feel sure such is not the intention under the present application.

I may say there is no inspector on this fishery. Mr. Kendall acts as a sub., but he is the pilot, and all his time is taken up carrying out his duty as pilot.

Trusting you will view this case favourably.

I have, &c.,

HENRY WOODWARD.

I forgot to mention above that it is easier to steal oysters off this fishery than at most others, as they all grow in shallow water, the depth rarely exceeding 1 foot.—H.W.

[Enclosure.]

Dear Father,

16 April, 1891.

On going up to work, on the afternoon of the 14th, with young Sam, we went on the west point of Cockatoo Island and saw Mrs. Murphy and Mrs. Ralston with a boat on the 100 yards applied for by me. They had been picking up the spawn in the boat. They had a couple of dozen bunches, and gathered alongside were two heaps. Neither of them were at the boat, but in the bush having their dinner, we took the oysters and scattered them about on the bed. I went in to them, and asked them not to take any oysters off the ground, as I had applied for a lease of it; before this, Mrs. Murphy asked me if it was a lease. I told her she could see the two stakes the inspector had put down when measuring the ground, and that the lease applied for by Ralston was lower down, and as I had been manly enough to keep off the ground applied for by him, that they would do the same to me. I then went to work on the cutting; they went to Clement's Bay and stopped the rest of the afternoon, about three hours, and I believe they took oysters off a lease of yours; however, I am not sure of this. That night I went to Murphy and Ralston's houses, down at the mill; they were not in, but going home I met them at the Bakers, and called them both out, and stated what took place. They both said they knew nothing about their wives gathering spawn, and that they would stop it. I said that was all I wanted. Last night Murphy came to me and said that as I only applied for the ground, I had no right to take the oysters, and that if I did not publicly withdraw my charge of stealing, made against his wife, that he would make me. I told him I did not say his wife was stealing oysters, but had gathered some, and also that I had said to him and the inspector, that they may not have known it was a lease, as there was nothing to show but the two stakes the inspector had put up. We talked awhile, and he went away all right. I told him I would not apologise for what I never said, but that if I had said anything unmanly to either of the women (and I was sure I had not), that I would apologise to them at once. Of course I know who instigated their coming to me. Kendall was telling them I had no right to take the oysters, as I had only applied for it, and that I had no stakes up; well, how could I, until I get the number of the lease; at any rate, I don't think there will be any more about the matter; if there is, don't let it bother you in the least, I can take care of myself.

We have got four bags ready, but I don't think any of the ketches will be able to get out till the beginning of next week, the bar is bad.

Last Christmas, in Sydney, I asked Lewry to tell you to send me some pine boards and paint for the leases, and that is all I have heard about it since. There is a lot down, and to prevent any disputes, should be put up at once.

W. W. WOODWARD.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.
NEW SOUTH WALES.

CLOSING OF PARTS OF LAKE ILLAWARRA.

(CORRESPONDENCE, &c., RESPECTING.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be printed, 9 March, 1892.

RETURN to an Order made by the Honorable the Legislative Assembly of New South Wales, dated 3rd December, 1891, That there be laid upon the Table of this House,—

- “ (1.) Copies of all reports, correspondence, minutes, or other papers “ having reference to the closing of parts of Lake Illawarra recently “ against net fishing, for a period of two years.
“ (2.) A map or tracing showing the portions of the said lake so closed
“ and their respective areas.”

(Mr. Campbell.)

Mr. Assistant-Inspector Benson to The Chief Inspector of Fisheries.

Sir,

Unanderra, 19 February, 1891.

I do myself the honor to present the following report, in accordance with instructions, on the natural supply of fish in Lake Illawarra.

The supply of fish in the lake for some time past has been exceptionally good, and not at all exhausted, and at the present time, instead of a decrease the supply is being considerably augmented by school fish making their way into the lake.

The output at the present time is not what it should be; this is owing to the presence of vast numbers of jelly fish in the lake; so numerous are they that it is impossible to haul a net in the principal hauling grounds of the lake.

I would recommend for the consideration of the Commissioners the following modified closures:—The sea entrance, from the ocean to the lake; and Mullet Creek, from the mouth up.

My reasons for closing these two waters are as follows:—Through the sea entrance the lake draws its supply of fish life of all descriptions, and should this small channel be left open for net fishing, our supply is endangered by the fishermen constantly netting here, thus blocking the free ingress of fish to the lake. If the fish are not caught they are frightened to sea again, and will not again attempt to enter the lake. Thus the use of these fish for spawning purposes are practically lost, perhaps not altogether, but nearly so, as the spawn is shot at sea under compulsion, and under conditions that are not at all suitable for the successful growth of the young fry.

Mullet Creek.—This water is our most valuable breeding ground for mullet and bream. The length of this creek is about 3 miles, and with the exception of a short distance at the mouth the bottom is eminently adapted for spawning purposes, it being composed of a coarse-grained sand. Here again the fishermen would by constantly netting day and night, drive the fish out of this creek, thus making it little or no good for spawning purposes. At the spawning seasons this creek is literally alive with the fish above mentioned.

Nature has sufficiently well protected the body of the lake against nets by the shallow flats that are around the foreshores, upon which no fishing boat can go.

I have, &c.,
D. W. BENSON.

However desirable it may be to close the portions of this lake referred to, I presume it cannot be done in view of the report that "the supply of fish is not all exhausted, but rather augmented."—L.G.T., 24/2/91.

Mr. Assistant-Inspector Benson to The Chief Inspector of Fisheries.

Sir,

Unanderra, 1 August, 1891.

I do myself the honor to request your permission to confer with the resident fishermen re closing portions of Lake Illawarra against the use of fishing-nets.

I have every reason to believe, from conversations with these men, that they would recommend a much larger portion of the lake being closed than heretofore.

I have, &c.,

D. W. BENSON.

I submit this request for consideration of the Commissioners, but it seems to me that the object in view is not so much to secure an extensive closure of the lake as to protect those portions of it which are recognised breeding and feeding-grounds, with the view to preserve the continuity of supply.—L.G.T., 4/8/91.

Submitted to the Commissioners, 5 August, 1891. Commissioners' Minute, No. 10,413:—Smithers to go down and report, 12/8/91.

Mr. Assistant-Inspector Benson to The Chief Inspector of Fisheries.

Sir,

Unanderra, 4 August, 1891.

I do myself the honor to forward the following report on the natural supply of fish in Lake Illawarra.

During the last seven months fish of all description have become so exhausted in this lake that I am of opinion a much larger portion should be closed against the use of fishing-nets than heretofore.

I would strongly recommend to the consideration of the Commissioners the following portions for closure:—

The whole of the northern portion of the lake, starting from a point 440 yards south of Mullet Creek to a point 440 yards south of the entrance. Under the 17th section of the Fisheries' Act this closure would allow a complete recovery of the natural supply of fish.

I may state that all varieties of fish caught in the lake at the present time are of marketable size, but are not fully matured, also the weekly catch has never been as low as that of the present time, the average for the past seven months being 33½ baskets per week to the metropolis, and 21 baskets locally.

I have, &c.,

D. W. BENSON.

The Inspector's report being so very vague I have marked on the official plan in pencilled lines the proposed closure, assuming a point distant 440 yards south of the inner entrance to the south-eastern termination of the closure. (Vide plan).—L.F.M., 11/8/91.

I am not willing to concur in this recommendation of the Inspector's, at any rate until I have had an opportunity of visiting the lake. On the face of it it seems to me that the proposed closure is more extensive than is necessary for the recovery of the supply which is reported to be exhausted. Ample provision for that being secured, there is no occasion to further restrict the operations of the fishermen. I should be content to have the previous closure reproclaimed, unless cogent reasons for the more extended one proposed by Mr. Benson (and which does not, by-the-way, include an important tributary, Macquarie Rivulet) exist.—L.G.T., 11/8/91.

Submitted to the Commissioners, 12 August, 1891. Commissioners' Minute, No. 10,424:—See Minute 10,413. Smithers to go down and report.—12/8/91.

Mr. Inspector Smithers to The Chief Inspector of Fisheries.

Sir,

Sydney, 5 September, 1891.

In obedience to your instructions I have visited Lake Illawarra and made close examination of it in company with Assistant-Inspector Benson. I must say that I cannot recommend the suggestion of Mr. Benson to close more than half the lake, although I must say that the natural supply of fish has been alarmingly diminished. Yet I am pleased to inform you that parts of the lake are just alive with young fish about an inch long. The closure as suggested by Mr. Benson is too large, and if the waters were allowed to get into such a state through want of closed waters, it would have been better to have recommended the closure of all the lake, as the part of the lake Mr. Benson suggested keeping open could not altogether keep up the local supply, and in northerly weather the men could not work.

I would now recommend that as the supply of fish has been exhausted to such an extent from over netting, that portions of it be closed for two years. To show the fish have diminished the present catch is about 1,500 per annum as against 9,000 to 10,000 previously when you had waters closed there, while now all the lake has to be used to get the 1,500 baskets.

As your previous closures were beneficial I can now but recommend my closures on almost the same lines, with slight differences, as will be seen on attached plan marked by pink tint, viz:—

The sea entrance to the lake and along the north shore of the lake to north-west corner of portion 41; then into the lake west 40 chains; then about south south-west about 120 chains; then about south-south-east 40 chains to Foster's Creek.

This is about the same closure as made by you previously and cannot be improved upon, the second closure being to close the waters westward of a line drawn between David Allen's south-west corner of his portion 53 and Tallanarra Point.

This closure is almost the same as previous one, and I, to save the closure of three separate creeks and long description, have taken one direct line to embrace all, and have kept the flat off Mullet Creek well clear of nets. In this area is included breeding grounds and valuable protection for young fish.

I do not recommend the closure of Macquarie Creek, as it is partly closed by washings out of the creek, and is not much in danger of being netted.

The

The closures I submit for your consideration, I am confident, will allow a complete recovery of the natural supply of fish. That is provided there is better supervision than at present, for at the present time Mr. Benson lives in Wollongong, through his inability to get a house near his duty, thus leaving one of our most valuable fishing grounds almost without supervision.

SCHEDULE.

County of Camden.—The whole of the tidal waters of Lake Illawarra including all creeks, bays, affluents, and tributaries north-west of a line drawn in a southerly direction from the south-west corner of David Allen's portion No. 53 of 2,200 acres, parish of Wollongong, to a point of land on the western shore, known as Tallawarra Point, parish of Calderwood. Also the whole of the tidal waters of the channel entrance into the lake, and that portion of the lake included within the following boundary-lines ; on the east by the sea entrance and part of the foreshore of the parish of Wollongong, extending to the north-west corner of M. Shannon's portion No. 41 of 42 acres ; on the north by a line bearing westerly about 40 chains into the lake ; on the west by a line bearing south-west by southerly about 120 chains ; on the south-west by a line bearing south-easterly about 40 chains to the west point aforesaid of entrance to Forster's Creek, parish of Terragong ; on the south by the northern shores of that parish to the sea entrance aforesaid.

The Acting Principal Under Secretary to The Secretary, Fisheries Commission.

Sir,

Colonial Secretary's Office, Sydney, 12 November, 1891.

With reference to your letter of the 18th September; I am directed by the Colonial Secretary to state, for the information of the Commissioners of Fisheries, that His Excellency the Governor, with the advice of the Executive Council, has been pleased, by a proclamation published in the Government Gazette of the 11th instant, under section 17 of the "Fisheries Act, 1881," to declare that the waters specified in the accompanying schedule shall be closed against the use of fishing-nets for a period of two years from the date thereof.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.

NEW SOUTH WALES.

ATTACK UPON THE SHEARERS AT DUNLOP STATION, NEAR BOURKE.

(PETITION FROM CERTAIN SHEARERS AND SHED HANDS AT PRESENT EMPLOYED ON DUNLOP STATION, NEAR BOURKE.)

Received by the Legislative Assembly, 23 November, 1891.

To the Honorable the Speaker and Members of the Legislative Assembly of New South Wales, in Parliament assembled.

The humble Petition of the undersigned shearers and shed-hands at present employed on the Dunlop Station, near Bourke, in the Colony of New South Wales,—

SHOWETH :—

1. That seventy men, among whom were your Petitioners, engaged under an agreement in due form for the purpose of shearing, and thirty-five for general work, on the terms set out in an agreement at the Dunlop Station, near Bourke.

2. That your Petitioners provided themselves with all necessary kit, and proceeded to the Dunlop Station, travelling from Sydney by rail five hundred miles to Bourke, and thence down the Darling to Dunlop Station.

3. That your Petitioners found, on their arrival, that the owners of the Dunlop Station had provided everything necessary for the shearing and general work.

4. That your Petitioners were perfectly satisfied with the work, with the appliances provided, with the accommodation, and with their employer.

5. That, under the conditions, your Petitioners could earn, and did earn, for the time they were at work, an average wage, as set out herein, and your Petitioners, as shed-hands, were entitled to 25s. per week, besides board and lodging.

6. That, in pursuance of the agreements made, your Petitioners commenced work, and had continued their work for about ten days to the satisfaction of themselves and their employer.

7. That, on the 20th day of July last past, while your Petitioners were quietly and peacefully carrying on their lawful occupations, some three hundred persons assembled at the wool-shed where your Petitioners were, and threatened them with violence and bodily injury unless they desisted from their work and broke their agreements.

8. That your Petitioners refused to break their agreements, and thereupon these three hundred men set upon them and forcibly took them away as prisoners to a place called "The Union Camp," stole their swags, and took forcible possession of your Petitioners, their persons, goods, and property, and detained them in the said Union camp for six days in continual fear and under threat of bodily violence, and many of your Petitioners were seriously injured.

9. That your Petitioners were only released from their imprisonment by the intervention of a strong body of armed police, but their swags, valued altogether at £143 9s. 11d., were not recovered from the persons who stole them, nor has any attempt been made, so far, to punish the thieves by whom the swags were stolen.

10 That the following is a list of your Petitioners and the various sums of money which each has individually lost through their imprisonment and robbery of their swags —

11 That your Petitioners being threatened with violence unless they broke their agreements, and knowing that certain evil-disposed persons had banded themselves together and conspired to attack and deprive your Petitioners of their property and liberty, had urged their employer to ask for protection some time previously to the said 20th July, and have since been advised and believe that such an application was made to the proper authorities

12 That your Petitioners contend that they in common with every law-abiding member of the community were entitled to such protection against criminal attack while engaged in their lawful occupations, and that had it been afforded when asked for your Petitioners would not have suffered the bodily injury, unlawful imprisonment, and pecuniary loss which they have suffered by the failure of the properly constituted authorities to maintain the law in the Bourke District.

13. That your Petitioners have to depend on their employment and labour for the support of themselves, their wives, and families and cannot afford the loss of their respective properties, valued at £143 9s 11d, nor of the wages which, but for the unlawful and tyrannical action of the before-mentioned evil-disposed persons, they would have earned, amounting in the aggregate to £132 9s.

14 That your Petitioners being poor men, and having been put in fear of bodily injury and of loss of their lives, have no other means of obtaining redress for the grievous wrong suffered by them than through the intervention of your Honorable House, whose duty it is to protect those who are oppressed and wronged

And your Petitioners humbly pray that your Honorable House will take into its consideration their grievances and grant them redress.

And your Petitioners will ever pray.

BARQUE ELLEN INQUIRY.

REPORT.

To the Honorable the Colonial Secretary,—

Sir,

Sydney, 11 September, 1891.

Having been appointed to be a Board to make a full and careful investigation into all the circumstances, and to obtain all available knowledge relating to the dispatch from Newcastle in July, 1891, of the barque "Ellen," of which the late John Stephens was master, and her ultimate foundering at sea, we desire to inform you that we have, in the terms of your Commission, extended the investigation to the persons who owned the vessel, and those from whom she was last purchased, and to the nature and particulars of her charters and contracts, and to a number of other important matters having a general relation thereto, and we beg to lay the following facts, deductions, opinions, and recommendations before you for your information and consideration.

The investigation has been protracted beyond the ordinary limits usually prescribed on such occasions, owing to the Board having taken steps to search for and exhaust every source of possible information, in the hope of being able to fully, fairly, and satisfactorily discharge the responsibilities imposed upon it.

No time was lost in entering upon the work of the inquiry, and, during its progress, every person who was known to have ever had any association or connection with the vessel since her arrival in the Colonies was examined either in Sydney or Newcastle.

Altogether, twenty-six witnesses have been examined during the twenty sittings of the Board, and they included the various owners of the "Ellen," the mortgagees, the insurance managers and agents, the marine surveyors, the officers and members of the Marine Board at Newcastle, the Customs and Shipping Officers of the Port of Newcastle, the contractors and workmen who repaired the vessel at various times, the only survivor from the wreck, the second mate who missed his passage, the coal-trimmers who trimmed the cargo prior to the vessel setting out on that and previous voyages, a waterman of the port of Newcastle, and a number of other persons who could throw any light whatever upon the subject, and efforts were made through the columns of the newspapers, and by posting notices at the Shipping Offices in Sydney and Newcastle, and by the police, and by communication with the Seamen's Union, to ensure the attendance of every person in the community who could in any way help the Board to bring its labours to a satisfactory conclusion, and the Board satisfied itself before closing the investigation that it had exhausted every available source of information.

It will be seen from the evidence, which is attached, that the barque "Ellen" was a wooden vessel, twenty-six years old when she left Newcastle on the 6th of July last for Noumea, New Caledonia, laden with coals, she having been built at St. John's, New Brunswick, in 1865. Her register tonnage was 455 net, and 499 gross, and her measurements were—length 153 feet, beam 30 feet 2 inches, depth of hold 17 feet 7 inches. She was the property of Mr. John Henderson, shipowner of Newcastle, who purchased her for £400 in 1887, from Mr. R. B. Wallace, and the master was Captain John Stephens, while the crew consisted of a first mate, six seamen, and a cook. There was no second officer on board, an uncertificated officer who was engaged to act as second mate having missed his passage at the last moment, apparently through having been under

under the influence of drink. She was burthened with 720 tons of coal, and was being taken down to New Caledonia to be used there as a hulk, her owner having sold her for £775, with the condition attached that she should be delivered at Noumea in her then condition. The hull of the vessel was insured by the owner for £400, as also was the cargo by the shippers. Four days after leaving port the "Ellen" encountered a storm, in which she made so much water that she became practically unmanageable, and ultimately foundered six days after leaving Newcastle. The captain and crew succeeded in making their escape from the wreck in one of the two boats which were on board, the other boat having been stove in by the sea, and they steered a course for the land, from which they calculated they were about 200 miles distant, but no care was taken to properly equip or provision the frail craft, and the consequence was that one-half of those on board died either from thirst, exhaustion, or exposure, before the land was sighted, and the others, with the exception of one able seaman named August Emile Peterson, were drowned in the surf while endeavouring to beach the boat at Seal Rocks.

The story of this last voyage of the "Ellen," as told by the only survivor, is contradictory and unsatisfactory, particularly as to the navigation of the ship; but it is clear that there was a total absence of regularity and discipline on board, and that when serious difficulties were encountered those who were charged with the responsibility of navigating the vessel were incapable of discharging their duties. The lax discipline and incapacity were, in our opinion, due to an excessive indulgence in drink, a conclusion which is borne out by the fact that, during the storm in which the "Ellen" foundered, an able seaman named Smith secretly entered the captain's cabin, and, taking possession of a 10-gallon keg of rum which was there, threw it overboard into the sea, to prevent those on board using any more of it.

As to the condition of the vessel at the time of leaving Newcastle we are of opinion that she was too old and too leaky to have undertaken such a voyage with such a burthen as she carried; but it must be admitted that she was legally entitled to carry more cargo than she actually had on board. She was not, therefore, overladen according to the law as it at present stands. Her Plimsoll mark showed a freeboard of 4 ft. 3 in. (which she might legally have reduced to 3 ft. 1½ in.), and it was well above water when she sailed, and, therefore, as far as the load line was concerned, everything appears to have been satisfactory. She appears, though, to have been constantly undergoing a course of repair, and, according to the evidence of the owner, a sum of £2,400 was expended upon her in repairs between February, 1888, and April, 1891, and, indeed, some short time prior to the last voyage, she was put on the slip at Newcastle and many of her butts were stripped, caulked, and resheathed with metal; but, notwithstanding all this, she leaked badly in harbour when loading, and still worse when out at sea in bad weather. The outfit appears to have been complete and in good condition, though the pumps broke down when tested at a critical moment, and the two boats which she carried were in good order and were sufficient to carry the crew. She was, however, undoubtedly undermanned, the nine persons who were on board not being, in our opinion, sufficient under any circumstances to safely navigate a vessel of that description in unfavourable weather, and the only one officer on board was a feeble old man who was addicted to drink and was incapable of great physical exertion.

We have, therefore, after long and careful deliberation, arrived at the conclusion that the foundering of the "Ellen," and the serious loss of life which attended it, were due to preventible causes. The Board is of opinion that the "Ellen" was in a dangerously leaky condition on leaving port—she was undermanned, and without a sufficient complement of officers; she was improperly handled in the gale which she encountered; there was much irregularity and indiscipline on board in consequence, we believe, of the incapacity of the officers through drink at a time when, for the safety of the ship and the preservation of their lives, it was absolutely necessary that every man should have been steady at his post; and, having all these circumstances before us, and in view of the age and leaky condition of the vessel, we desire to emphasise our opinion that it was not prudent for the "Ellen" to have been sent to sea with such a heavy cargo on board, notwithstanding the fact that the owner was well within the law in so loading her and sending her to sea. At the same time the Board is of opinion that the owner had every faith in the stability and seaworthiness of his ship, and that, while he would have been a material gainer by her safe arrival at Noumea, he has undoubtedly sustained a heavy pecuniary loss by her foundering at sea.

Further,

Further, we are of opinion that the Marine Board should be entrusted with larger discretionary powers in dealing with the shipping of the ports, and that it should exercise a more stringent supervision of sailing vessels, particularly in the direction of official periodical examinations of the ship's hull, and the condition of the sails, gear, and boats carried on board; and, in view of possible future legislation on the subject, the Board would recommend that the practice of allowing the owner to practically fix his own load-line should be abolished, and the responsibility be placed upon the Marine Board, so that no vessel could leave port without a certificate from the Board that the load-line was properly adjusted according to her age and carrying capacity; that the carrying capacity of sea-going ships should be gradually reduced with their increasing age, and the load-line lowered accordingly; that the number of the crew to be carried on unclassified vessels should be fixed in all cases, and proportionately increased with the increased age, condition, and trade of the vessel; that the Marine Board should be empowered to fix the number of crew to be carried in all vessels; and that the practice which now obtains, of allowing vessels to go to sea without qualified officers, merely upon the master lodging a declaration at the Shipping Master's that he was unable to obtain them in the port, should be abolished altogether, and that stringent provisions be made to ensure not only the full complement of, but properly-qualified officers being carried in every case.

We have the honor to be,

Sir,

Yours obediently,

A. MONEY FISHER, S.M.,
Chairman.

THE BARQUE "ELLEN," INQUIRY BOARD.

MINUTES OF EVIDENCE.

MONDAY, 3 AUGUST, 1891.

[The Board sat at the Board-room, Colonial Secretary's Office, and took evidence.]

Present:—

CAPTAIN A. M. FISHER, S.M., PRESIDENT.

CAPTAIN TROUTON, | CAPTAIN CARGILL.

Mr. August Emile Petersen examined:—

1. President.] It is necessary to explain to you that this Board has been appointed by the Government, for the purpose of inquiring into the wreck of the barque "Ellen," and as you are the only survivor, we shall be glad if you will tell us all you know about the occurrence? Yes; certainly.

Mr. A. E.
Petersen.

3 Aug., 1891.

2. What are you? I am an able seaman.

3. How old are you? I am 25 years of age.

4. Were you one of the crew of the barque "Ellen," in the last voyage? Yes.

5. When did you join the ship? On the 3rd of July last.

6. What as? An able seaman, to take the barque to New Caledonia.

7. Who was in command of the barque? Captain John Stephen.

8. Was there a mate on board? Yes; his name was M'Kenzie.

9. How many able seamen were there on board? Six.

10. Did you know all their names? No.

11. When did the vessel sail from Newcastle? On the 6th July.

12. Captain Trouton.] Was this your first voyage in the barque "Ellen"? Yes; I have been to sea a longtime.

13. Were you employed pumping ship in the harbour before going to sea? Yes; before we went out of the harbour.

14. Was the windmill pump used? I do not know. After going out to sea we used to have to keep the pumps going for quarter of an hour or twenty minutes in every hour before the bad weather came on; but when the bad weather came we had to stand at the pumps all the time.

15. Were the pumps no good? One of the pumps was choked.

16. Were they double pumps? No; two single ones.

17. Captain Cargill.] Were they iron or wooden pumps? I think they were iron.

18. President.] Will you tell us of the voyage up to the time of the vessel sinking? Yes. I shipped on the 3rd of July last in the barque "Ellen," commanded by Captain Stevens, bound from Newcastle to New Caledonia with a cargo of coal. We left Newcastle harbour on Monday, the 6th of July last. The vessel had one windmill pump and two hand-pumps, she also carried two boats. Before leaving Newcastle, the second officer and one A.B. left the vessel, and we started with a crew of nine all told. When the tug-boat came alongside, in Newcastle, we found out we were two hands short, we then told the captain that we would not go to sea without the other men. The captain said, "It is too late now, we will have to go," and we accordingly started. We had fine weather until Wednesday night. On Thursday morning it blew a gale of wind from the westward; we had to heave-to as there was a very high sea running. The vessel beginning to make water, we had to man the pumps. We kept the water under until Friday, after that day it gained on us, although the pumps were kept going. Our best boat, which was on the main hatch, was smashed to pieces by the heavy seas which continually swept the decks. On Sunday morning, 12th instant, the water in the hold being nearly level with the decks, the captain being ill, the mate took charge and ordered us to lower the boat that was on the forecastle. With great difficulty we managed to get the boat in the water. The steward put a small keg of fresh water in the boat, also some tinned meat and a few biscuits. All hands then got into the boat and shoved off from the vessel. About one hour afterwards the vessel went down. We then started for the land, which, I think, was about 200 miles distant, but the sea, which was coming from the westward was too much for us, who therefore had to drop a sea-anchor astern and run before it. On Tuesday morning the wind changed to south-east; we were then enabled to head for the land. Early that morning one of the A.B's., an Englishman called Jerry, went mad through drinking salt water. He was raving for two days before, but on the Tuesday he became worse, and about daylight he jumped over the side and disappeared. Our stock of fresh water and biscuits having been spoilt on Monday through the boat shipping seas, we had nothing but a little tinned meat. Our sufferings were terrible, the hot sun coming down on us, and not a drop of water to drink. On Thursday the captain became delirious through drinking salt water. He died on the Saturday, and we launched him overboard the same day. The next day (Sunday) two A.B's., one a Swede, named Helmer Smith, and an Englishman called Bill were knocked overboard through a heavy sea striking the boat. It was impossible to rescue them, as there was a very high sea running. On Monday the steward died from thirst. We buried him the next morning, Tuesday. There were then only four left, the mate, myself, and two other A.B's. We were suffering intense thirst, and were almost exhausted. On looking around at daylight I sighted land away on the port bow. That put new life into us, and we kept on pulling all that day, that night, and next day, until about 4 p.m., when we arrived at a beach with a very heavy surf breaking on it, close to the lighthouse at Seal Rocks. Some of us suggested to the mate, who was in charge charge of the boat, that we go further to the northward, and look for a smoother place to land, but he said, "It is all right, go on, pull away." We then pulled on, and the boat being caught by the surf threw us all into the water. We all struck out for the shore as well as we were able. It was a case of every man for himself. I was tossed and thrown everywhere with the surf, and when I neared the shore two of the lighthouse keepers ran into the water and dragged me out. Two other A.B's, one named William Campbell, and the other George, surname unknown, were washed ashore drowned, and the mate, who was seen to disappear under water, is supposed to have been washed out to sea.

19. Captain Cargill.] You say that although there was a fair wind the barque was hove-to? Yes—the sea was so bad we had to heave her to and run her before the wind.

20. Captain Trouton.] What draft of water was there on the rudder post? I don't know how many feet there was.

21. Had the barque a Plimsoll mark on the sides? Yes; I saw one of the Plimsoll marks in port, but I could not see the other.

22. Captain Cargill.] How was the one you saw? It was about right, but I could not see the mark on the other side.

23. Captain Trouton.] Was that when you were lying in harbour? Yes—just before leaving Newcastle.

24. Was the boat in which you were saved good? No; it was not a very good boat, and there were no sails belonging to her.

25. And yet you and your companions rowed her nearly 200 miles? No, we did not row, we sailed nearly all the way with make shifts sails; we used a table cloth and other things for sail.

26. Captain Cargill.] A statement has been published to the effect that the boat in which you got away was patched with canvas, was that so? No, it was all right when we left the barque, but we had to patch it on the voyage three or four times.

27. Was she sound when you left the ship? Well, no; she was leaking a little and we had to patch her up.

28. Captain Trouton.] Was the boat good when you left the harbour of Newcastle? She was just the same, but she got struck when we were launching her over the ships side and we had to patch her up.

29. Captain Cargill.] But supposing the boat had not been knocked against the vessels side in launching do you think she would have leaked all the same? I dare say she would.

30. In what sort of condition was the other boat? The other boat was a very good one, but she was smashed to pieces in the storm.

31. President.] When you found that the crew was two hands short did you not decline to go to sea? We complained to the captain and he told us that we would have to go.

32. Captain Cargill.] Was there anything said about wages? Yes; we were to receive the two men's wages and we had to go. We were only going down to Noumea to leave the barque there—she was to be used as a hulk.

33. Were the articles read over to you when you signed them? No.

34. Did you sign them before the shipping master? No.

35. Did you see them or sign them at the shipping office? No.

36. Did you know how many men were going to be on board? Yes; we were told that there were to be eleven hands on board for the voyage.

37. Do you know why the second mate left? I think he had been in the barque the trip before.

38. Did he hold a second mate's certificate? Yes.

39. President.] When did you join the ship? On the 3rd of July—three days before she sailed.

40. Did you come right into Sydney from Seal Rocks? Yes.

41. Where is the boat in which you were saved? I think she is still on the beach at Seal Rocks.

42. Would she be much more knocked about now than when you ran her ashore? No. She is lying on the beach, above the water-mark, at high tide.

43. Captain Trouton.] What canvas was the barque under when the gale came on? We were carrying the lower and upper fore and main topsails—that was all we had on.

44. Were you carrying that canvas during the heavy gale? Yes; and the topsails carried away.

45. Was it a very bad gale? Yes.

46. Captain Cargill.] Seeing how heavy it was, did you make no effort to reef the topsails? I cannot say—I am not very sure.

47. Captain Trouton.] Was the windmill pump in order? Yes—they set it in order and used it in the gale, but it broke down. The captain fixed it up again, but it broke down a second time, and while he was trying to fix it up he was knocked down senseless on the deck, and we all thought he was dead. He got right again after a little while.

48. What gave way in the pumps? The fans.

49. Did you use the pumps in the harbour at Newcastle? Yes.

50. The windmill pump? Yes; but it was used by hand—the whee-gee was working.

51. Had you no fear of the consequences in going to sea under the circumstances? It was a hard object to get a ship. I risked my life, I know, in going to sea in her, because I knew that she was an old ship, but I could not get anything to do.

52. Have you any idea where the leak was? No.

53. Did anybody go into the hold to search for the leak? No; not that I know.

54. Do you know what the scuppers were made of? Lead.

55. Were there any rats in the ship? I do not know.

56. They did not go into the bunks at night? No.

57. Was the ship built of soft wood? I do not know what sort of wood she was built of.

58. Were her decks good? The decks were rather rotten.

59. Were the lower and upper fore main topsails composed of good canvas? Yes; some of it was good, and some of it was no good.

60. From the time you left Newcastle up to the gale, was there any water about the decks? No; there was only one pump going then.

61. Was she not shipping water on board? No.

62. Did the water get down the hatchway at all? No.

63. Were the hatches covered with tarpaulins? There was a new tarpaulin on the main hatch, and the other seemed to be right enough.

THE BARQUE "ELLEN" INQUIRY BOARD—MINUTES OF EVIDENCE.

64. Did you live in the fore-castle or on the deck? We had a house on the deck.
 65. When the barque was found to be leaking, did anybody go below to see where the leak was? They could go down. I believe a man was sent down in the hold to see how high the water was there.
 66. Did you see whether she was leaking at the wood ends? No.
 67. Did you see the barque go down? No.
 68. You have already said that she went down an hour after you left her side? I meant to say that we could not see her an hour after leaving in the boat.
 69. Now about these pumps—had they a whee-gee worked by ropes? They were all worked by handles—there were two pumps—one on each side, and they could be worked together or separately.
 70. When you worked the two pumps how did you manage it? There was a handle on each side, and two shifts of two men each could work them.
 71. Was there a fly-wheel on the pumps? Yes.
 72. Were both pumps always going? Yes; but one got choked, and we could only work one.
 73. Could you detach the pumps? Yes.

THURSDAY, 6 AUGUST, 1891.

[The Board sat at the Colonial Secretary's Office and took evidence.]

Present:—

CAPTAIN A. M. FISHER, S.M., PRESIDENT.

CAPTAIN TROUTON, | CAPTAIN CARGILL.

Captain Samuel Stretch Sustenance examined:—

74. President.] We shall be glad to learn what you know, Captain Sustenance, of the barque "Ellen"—what are you? I am a marine surveyor connected with the Victoria and a number of other Insurance Companies. Captain S. S.
Sustenance.
6 Aug., 1891.
 75. How long have you been in the profession? About nineteen years.
 76. Have you ever surveyed the barque "Ellen"? I looked at her with the view of her purchase as a hulk.
 77. When? In the early part of July.
 78. Where was she when you looked at her? At Newcastle.
 79. Was that the first knowledge you had of her? No—I had known the "Ellen" for a long time.
 80. How long? As long as I have been surveying.
 81. Did you ever survey her before? Yes.
 82. When did you first survey her? I cannot say exactly.
 83. How many times did you survey her altogether? Four or five times.
 84. You cannot recollect how many years you have known her? I recollect her ever since I have been surveying, and that is about nineteen years.
 85. Captain Trouton.] Was she going down to New Caledonia to be converted into a hulk? Yes.
 86. Was the barque insured in your office? She was not.
 87. Why? I do not know.
 88. Did her owner ever apply to have her insured in your company? I am not aware that he applied to have her insured. She was insured in the Victoria Insurance Company before she was burnt in the Newcastle Harbour, and we had nothing to do with her after that occurrence.
 89. Did you give a certificate by which she could have been insured? I could not have done that. I merely looked upon her as a hulk. At a certain price to be delivered in New Caledonia she would have been a bargain.
 90. Was she a soft wood ship? Yes.
 91. Were her timbers "salted"? Yes.
 92. For twenty years? Yes, quite that time.
 93. Do you think that the iron-fastenings would stand the corroding influences of the salt for twenty years? I think the fastenings must have been eaten somewhat, it must be so in every sea-going ship. I only looked at her as a hulk. My instructions were to buy a ship if I could to carry about 500 tons to be used as a hulk, and I was not to spend more than £1,000 to have her delivered in Noumea, New Caledonia. That was all I had in mind in looking at her and buying her.
 94. You did not know what they were going to do with her? No.
 95. Did you make a close inspection? I made an inspection, but did not go poking about for holes. There was no necessity to go to much trouble to find holes—they were there.
 96. Did you go into the fore-peak? Yes.
 97. Was the timber soft? It was very much worn.
 98. Did you happen to look at the boats? Yes, she had one very good boat—it was passable, and the second one was a decent boat enough.
 99. Captain Cargill.] How long is it since she was insured in your company? About five years ago.
 100. Did you inspect her then? Yes; and after she was burnt we took her over and subsequently sold her.
 101. Was she ever classed at Lloyds? I do not know really.
 102. Captain Trouton.] Do you know what the regulations were under the Maritime Laws of 1854 with regard to the manning of ships? Oh, those laws are now obsolete. They have been repealed by new laws which have altered the condition of things altogether. Under the old laws ships had to carry three men and a boy for every 100 tons, but it is not so now.
 103. I thought the Plimsoll Act compelled ships to carry a certain number of men? I am not aware of any such restriction.
 104. Captain Cargill.] Did you buy the vessel? The arrangement was this: For a sum of £800, the owner of the barque, "Ellen," Mr. John Henderson, of Newcastle, was to deliver her to the principals in Noumea, New Caledonia, with her inventory, as attached to the sale-note. 105.

- Captain S. S. Sustenance.
6 Aug., 1891.
105. Captain Trouton.] Then the fewer men he had in the crew taking her down the less would be the cost of bringing them back? Yes; and the greater quantity of coal she carried in her down to Noumea, the more the owner would make. At the same time I bought a little vessel and sent her down safely to Noumea, but I did not have control of the "Ellen."
106. Captain Cargill.] Did not Mr. Henderson publish a letter in the newspapers saying that you had surveyed the "Ellen" before her departure? Yes; but I did not do so. I merely bought her as a hulk, and I took precautions to contradict the statement because it might have done me harm amongst those who did not know me.

Captain Timothy O'Sullivan examined:—

- Captain T. O'Sullivan.
6 Aug., 1891.
107. President.] Did you ever own the barque "Ellen," which was recently lost at sea while on a voyage from Newcastle to New Caledonia? I did; I bought her in Liverpool in November, 1872.
108. Was she surveyed before you bought her? Yes.
109. Was she classed at Lloyds? I think she was classed at Lloyds when she was first built.
110. When was she built? In the year 1865.
111. Who brought her out to the colonies? Captain J. T. Cronin sailed in command of her in December, 1872.
112. When did you cease to own her? In 1881.
113. To whom did you sell her? To Captain Hodge.
114. Captain Trouton.] Are you a master mariner by profession? Yes.
115. Have you superintended the construction of wooden vessels? Yes. I brought the "Victoria" here, and I have commanded the "Shamrock," and the "Duncan Hoyle."
116. You are fully acquainted with the construction of vessels? Yes; and I had a patent slip at Newcastle, which is still doing work there, and is known as T. O'Sullivan & Company's Patent Slip.
117. Did you ever have the "Ellen" in your own slip? I had.
118. Often? Two or three times.
119. What was the "Ellen" built of? She was built of birch up to the high water-mark and the stem and stern posts were of hecmatack. The timbers were bay spruce and she was planked above the high water-mark with hecmatack.
120. Why was that? Because it was the strongest timber.
121. How was she fastened? She was well fastened. A little above the high water-mark there were yellow bolts, but I drew them out and put in iron bolts to strengthen the centre fastenings. All the centre fastenings were iron and they were counted better than the others.
122. Was she "salted"? Yes; and I resalted her before she left Liverpool.
123. Do you think the salt would after twenty-three years seriously affect the fastenings? It always affects the iron but you get two years extra at Lloyds for it. The salt decays the iron after many years.
124. Did you ever repair her? Yes.
125. What did you repair? I repaired her thoroughly, and when Captain Hodge lost his vessel I sold her to him in 1881. She has been metalled since that time. She had been on the coast of China, and was subsequently metalled.
126. How long will the metal last on a ship's bottom? Five or six years on sea-going vessels, on account of the green scum which forms on and covers the metal.
127. What was the last you saw of her? I have seen her frequently, but only casually. I have only looked at her in a casual way.
128. Were her pumps going while she was in harbour? I do not know.
129. Do you think a ship of her nature, after twenty-six years' work, a fair risk to go to sea in? It depends altogether on the state in which she was kept. I could show you a ship called the "Truelove," which was built in 1804, still going to sea.
130. Captain Cargill.] Was she built of red pine? No—I think she was built of live oak and hecmatack. When the "Ellen" was built a ship built of that material would only get four years at Lloyd's, but now they give her nine years. They did not know the durability of spruce in those days as they do now. When I sold the vessel she was 16 years old, and the decks were as good as new, and we dubbed them down.
131. Did you sheath them? No.
132. You have had no close knowledge of the ship since 1881? No; she has been on my slip since, but I have not been underneath her. I always left that to the surveyor. She was one of the best-built ships of the sort. She was lighter than a teak-built ship—she was only 32 lb. while the teak is 43 lb., and the colonial hardwood 65 lb. to the cubic foot, with the same fastenings.
133. Was she iron-kneed? Yes—and she had very heavy bands at each end.
134. You think that originally she was a well-constructed vessel? Yes, certainly.
135. Did you ever have her laden with coal? Yes, I have sent her to China with coal.
136. What quantity did she carry? From 750 to 755 tons of coal, and she brought back three or four cargoes of sugar for the Sugar Company, and on one trip she discharged 781 tons at Lyttleton, New Zealand.
137. Did you know her pumps? Yes; they were iron pumps with brass linings.
138. Were they the ordinary pumps? Yes; they were fitted abaft the mainmast, but since I had the vessel they put a wind-mill up in her to work the pumps. The treadles would not last so long and should have been renewed. Mr. Henderson bought the vessel for £500 or £600, and shortly afterwards she took fire while lying in the harbour at Newcastle, on one New Year's night. He received £500 from the under-writers and bought the vessel back again for £100. Mr. R. B. Wallace, of Newcastle, held a mortgage over her, and mortgagor not being able to release her, sold her to Mr. Henderson. That is about all I know of her.

[The Board then adjourned.]

FRIDAY,

FRIDAY, 7 AUGUST, 1891.

[The Board sat at the Colonial Secretary's Office, and took evidence.]

Present:

CAPTAIN A. M. FISHER, S.M., PRESIDENT.
CAPTAIN TROUTON, | CAPTAIN CARGILL,

Mr. Frederick James Jackson examined:—

139. President.] What is your profession? I am the manager of the Victoria Fire and Marine Insurance Company.Mr. F. J
Jackson.

140. Do you know anything about the barque "Ellen" which was recently wrecked on the voyage to New Caledonia? Yes; she has been insured by us a good many times. The last oversea policy issued by us was in 1886, when she went to sea, but she was insured with us on a harbour risk since that time. She was lying in the harbour, at Newcastle, for two years. When she was going to sea the insurance policy was for £1,500, but the harbour risk was much smaller. She was then owned by Captain Anthony, and in 1886 the Marine Surveyor reported that she was in very good order. She was trading with China, and made one or two voyages, but got into trouble once or twice, in one way and another, and her owner ultimately mortgaged her to Mr. Wallace, of Newcastle. It was through Mr. Wallace that the business came to us. The ship was laid up for two years or so, and I fancy that the affair was closed with our office after that. The in-harbour policy was then reduced to £700, and the vessel remained in that position for twelve months, when she was partially burnt, and Mr. John Henderson, the owner, sent in a claim on the policy. It was in November, 1887, I think, and the vessel being in harbour, and not going to sea, no special survey was made. We would not have allowed her to go out to sea without a special survey. Captain Cross is our surveyor at Newcastle. It was very shortly after Mr. Henderson obtained his first insurance on the vessel with us that she caught fire in the Newcastle harbour. I went up to see her myself, after the fire, and took Captain Sustenance, our marine surveyor, with me, and we had a look at her. At that time Captain Sustenance made the following report upon the vessel:—

Mr. F. J
Jackson.

Aug., 1891;

I, the undersigned, hereby certify that on the 19th January, 1888, I examined the barque "Ellen" as she lay afloat in the harbour of Newcastle, New South Wales, and found her to be in the condition hereinunder described:—The forward deck-house was completely destroyed by fire. The foremast was much charred. Heel of the bowsprit much burnt, maintop-gallant mast, upper and lower topsail yards, and spare spar included. The whole of the deck, waterways, covering boards, stanchions, rails, and bulwarks, extending from the main hatchway to the stern on both sides were burned. Coamings of main and fore hatchways, topsail sheet belts, windlass, carrick bitts, pawl bitt, bitts at heel of bowsprit, fore rigging, and several dead eyes belonging to the same were all much burned. The fire appears to have originated in the forward deck-house. I consider that the whole of the fore part of the vessel, from the main hatch to the stem (commencing with the deck), must be removed on both sides in order to repair the vessel, the whole of which will have to be replaced by new. It is also very probable that some of the beams and heads of timber may prove to have been burned where exposed, and I am of opinion, in the interest of all concerned, that the ship be sold for a hulk as she now lies, rather than incurring the expense of such heavy repairs. The cost of which, when completed, will probably exceed her then value.

Sydney, New South Wales, 20th January, 1888.

There was another report sent in by Captain Cross, of Newcastle, which was to the following effect:—

Dear sir,

Newcastle, 9 January, 1888.

At your request I have this day examined the barque "Ellen," damaged by fire yesterday morning. Without going into details (more than to say that the whole forward portion of the vessel, from main hatchway on upper deck has been consumed) I have estimated the cost of repair of damage roughly at about £1,000. I do not think that the previous condition and worth of the vessel would warrant this expenditure upon her (taking into consideration the market value of such vessels of her class), and certainly cannot advise repairs, because the vessel when repaired would scarcely have a market value at present commensurate with the cost of repairs.

I remain, &c.,

HERBERT CROSS,

Surveyor.

P.S.—With regard to the cause of the fire I am of opinion that it originated in the galley (situated in after part of deck-house) the fire of which had been carelessly attended to.

R. B. Wallace, Esq., Agent Victorian Insurance Company.

The Newcastle police made the following report on the fire:—

Re Inquiry of Fire on board the Barque "Ellen."

Police Station, Newcastle, 24 January, 1888.

SENIOR Sergeant Dick reports for the information of Mr. Inspector Brennan, that the barque "Ellen" was discovered to be on fire by the crew of the steam dredge "Vulcan," at about 3.15 o'clock, a.m., on the morning of 8th January instant. The crew of the "Vulcan" proceeded on board "Ellen" when they saw the fire, when they got on board they found the galley and deck-house on fire; the fire had the appearance of having broken out in the galley; the galley was under the same roof as the deck-house. When the "Vulcan's" crew went on board they found the ship-keeper, named Thomas Mackenzie, helplessly drunk in the cabin, with the remains of a bottle of brandy alongside of him, they lowered Mackenzie over the ship's side, and took him on board the "Vulcan," and was handed over to the police at 6.30 o'clock, a.m.; he was then drunk. Mackenzie stated at the Watch-house that he was on shore on the night before the fire, and went on board about 10 o'clock p.m.; he also said he was suffering from neuralgia, and that he purchased the brandy to ease the pain; he further stated that he did not light a fire in the galley when he went on board at 10 p.m. The sergeant has been informed that the ship's copper ridding lantern was found burst in the galley after the fire was put out, which would lead one to infer that he was trimming the light in the galley, and either let it fall or left it burning in the galley. Mackenzie was employed as ship-keeper from the time Mr. Henderson purchased the "Ellen," which was about one month previous to the fire, and he was recommended to Mr. Henderson as being a teetotaler.

WILLIAM DICK,

Senior Sergeant.

Martin Brennan, Esq., Inspector.

P.S.—Forwarded for the information of the Secretary of the Victorian Insurance Society. From a knowledge of the circumstances, I am convinced that the ship caught fire through the downright carelessness of the caretaker, Mr. Mackenzie, who was found on board in such a helpless state that he must have been burnt to death had he not been rescued in time. The vessel altogether appeared to be extremely dry owing to the extreme heat of the last two months. An inquest could elicit nothing prejudicing to any one concerned.—MARTIN BRENNAN, Inspector, Newcastle, 24/1/88.

When I got up to Newcastle I found that Mr. Wallace had sold the "Ellen" to Mr. Henderson for £100. I made an examination of the vessel to see what was the cause of the deterioration and ultimately Mr. Henderson admitted that it was an oversight to insure her for the £700 as he had done and we settled by taking over the vessel and paying him £326 6s. We put the vessel up to auction and endeavoured to dispose of her to Captain O'Sullivan, the owner of the ship at Newcastle, Mr. Ellis, and two or three others through Fraser's but without result, and ultimately she was sold back to Mr. Henderson himself for £100. It was on Captain Sustenance reporting that she could only be turned into a hulk that the insurance was reduced to £400.

141.

- Mr. F. J. Jackson. 141. Was she very much injured by the fire? It was considered that it would take £1,000 to make her seaworthy. We never dreamt of anything happening.
- 7 Aug., 1891. 142. Have those repairs been made to her since the fire? I do not know.
143. Has the owner of the "Ellen" ever applied to your office since the fire for a new insurance? No, I do not think so—if he did we would have declined the risk.
144. When you saw the "Ellen" had she a windmill pump on board? No.
145. Were the decks burnt through? All the fore parts of the deck were burnt through, but not the main decks. It struck us as a very suspicious circumstance that they tarred the whole of the decks a day or two before the fire took place. There were a number of vessels laid up at the time for want of work, and I fancy that Captain Anthony being unable to pay his way Mr. Wallace, the mortgagee, would not let her go to sea. They tried to sell her but could not, and you know a vessel does not improve by being laid up for two years or so. When I saw her after the fire she was a terrible wreck, but a little paint does a lot in the appearance of a vessel. She was a fairly good vessel and she had been to sea just before that and her cargo turned out very well, he had no cargo insurance in her since 1874, but in 1880 she was surveyed for us by Captain Cross. She was classed A1 at German Lloyds and was valued at £2,600.
146. Captain Cargill.] What is the difference between the German and English Lloyds? The standard of the German Lloyds is not so high. Many vessels get classed in the German Lloyds which would not be classed at all under the English Lloyds standard. They do not come up to the English standard.
147. Captain Trouton.] Do you always send a surveyor on board before taking a risk upon a ship? No, not always. If she is on the slip we send a man to survey her, but if she is afloat there is no use, as he could not see what she was like.
148. Would it not be a good thing to have a properly constituted Board of Surveyors to pass all such vessels? Yes; but it would only be removing the risk and responsibility from the shoulders of the owners to somebody else.
149. Would your Company have accepted a risk in this vessel? No; I think not.

Mr. Francis Edward Joseph examined:—

- Mr F. E. Joseph. 150. President.] What are you? I am a member of the firm of Montefiore, Joseph, & Co., ship-brokers and insurance agents, as well as general merchants.
- 7 Aug., 1891. 151. Do you know anything about the barque "Ellen," which was recently lost at sea? We acted as agents for the charterers, as well as for the Insurance Company with which we insured the cargo. On the three previous voyages which she made we chartered her—that was on the 4th of June, 1889, the 20th of March, 1891, and the 21st of May, 1891, when she was to run to Noumea with coal as on the previous voyage. The two previous trips were very successful. On each occasion when she was chartered the ship was insured as well as the cargo—on the first occasion in the Globe Marine Insurance Company, and for the two subsequent occasions in the Straits Insurance Company. The terms of the charters were on each occasion that the ship was guaranteed to be "tight, staunch, and strong."
152. How many tons of coal did she carry on those voyages? On the first occasion she carried 710 tons, on the second occasion 720 tons, and on the third occasion 723 tons.
153. Do you know what the condition of the ship was? When we underwrote the cargo on the last voyage, the policy was dated 3rd of July, and it was not till two or three days after the policy was issued that we received from the Sydney Underwriters' Association their monthly report of hulls from Captain Brooks, of Newcastle, and in that report we then noticed the following:—"Ellen," barque, 499 tons, surveyed on slip, she requires stripping and caulking to make her a fair risk." This report did not reach us until after we had effected the insurance, and had received our second policy on the 6th of July. We acted in the interest of both parties, and would not have effected the insurance if the report had reached us in time.
154. Captain Trouton.] Was she going to sea then? I cannot say that. We did not receive Captain Brooks' report, which was dated the 2nd July, until the 6th of that month. It did not come into our hands until then. I mention that because we were acting in the dual capacity for the charterer, Mr. Pelletier, and on behalf of the Société des Transports Maritimes Company, Noumea.
155. Captain Cargill.] Were the previous cargoes delivered in a satisfactory condition? Yes; but it must be remembered that nearly all the vessels trading as colliers have ceased to be passed by the underwriters as fit to carry perishable produce in the terms of the charter, which sets out that they must be "tight, staunch, and strong."
156. They should be well manned? Yes—they have to be well manned as a matter of course. I notice in the newspapers some severe comments on this class of vessels. There are only three classes of vessels in the collier trade. As "class" is understood generally there is no class, but as "class" is understood by the insurance offices the "Ellen" was third-class, which is the lowest risk that there is. The men going to sea in such vessels know very well what class she is.
157. They ought to be third-class men too? Yes, they ought. If Mr. Montefiore had not bought the "Ellen" as a hulk, to be delivered in Noumea this voyage, there were others in the coal trade in New Caledonia who were likely to buy her.
158. Captain Trouton.] Do the underwriters usually rely upon the reports of their surveyors? Yes—invariably, but this report did not reach Sydney in time to be of any service.

[The Board then adjourned.]

MONDAY, 10 AUGUST, 1891.

[The Board sat at the Colonial Secretary's Office, and took evidence.]

Present:—

CAPTAIN A. M. FISHER, S.M., PRESIDENT.

CAPTAIN TROUTON.

CAPTAIN CARGILL.

Captain O'Sullivan recalled:—

- Captain O'Sullivan. 159. President.] I understand you wish to add something to the evidence which you have already given with respect to the barque "Ellen?" I only wished to state that I sold the barque in March, 1880, to 10 Aug., 1891. Captain Hodge. She was not solely mine at the time. 160.

160. How much did you give for the "Ellen" originally? £2,950. I bought her in 1874.
 161. Captain Trouton.] Was Captain Punch part owner with you from the first? Yes—we bought several vessels together.
 162. Was she a good ship? Yes; she was not a clipper nor a very fast sailer, but she was a good trader. Captain Hodge sold her to Captain Anthony, who took her to China in 1885, and he afterwards got into financial difficulties and she was sold to Mr. Henderson.
 163. She must have had extraordinary well fitted decks to last sixteen or seventeen years without showing a sign of wear? Yes, Captain Hodge carried a cargo of sugar to Queensland and it turned out all right.
 164. Captain Cargill.] Was she classed at German Lloyd's? Yes; I overhauled her on the slip and sold her. She was on the slip in Newcastle before going to sea this time, but I did not see her. She must then have been in a very leaky condition.

Captain
O'Sullivan.
10 Aug., 1891.

[Other witnesses having failed to attend, the Board adjourned.]

TUESDAY, 11 AUGUST, 1891.

[The Board sat at the Court-house, Newcastle, and took evidence.]

Present:—

CAPTAIN A. M. FISHER, S.M., PRESIDENT.

CAPTAIN TROUTON,

CAPTAIN CARGILL.

Mr. John Henderson examined:—

165. President.] What is your occupation? I am a ship-owner, carrying on business in Newcastle.
 166. Were you the owner of the barque "Ellen" which was recently lost at sea? Yes.
 167. When did you purchase her? On the 13th of December, 1887.
 168. Where? At Newcastle, from Mr. R. B. Wallace.
 169. What did you pay for her? I paid £400 for her altogether.
 170. Have you owned the vessel ever since? Yes.
 171. Has she made many trips since you purchased her? Yes, a good many.
 172. Where has she been trading? At first she traded between San Francisco and Newcastle.
 173. Did you expend anything on her in the way of repairs? Yes; I spent upwards of £1,000 upon her.
 174. Where? Here, in Newcastle.
 175. Who did the work? A carpenter named Rapson.
 176. Was it a contract job? No; I did the work myself—Rapson carried it out.
 177. What was done to the vessel? My carpenter will be best able to tell you.
 178. When did she make her first trip under your ownership? She sailed for San Francisco in May, with a cargo of 755 tons of coal.
 179. Was she insured on that trip? No; I do not think she was.
 180. Was the cargo insured? Yes, but the freight was not. I have got five ships not insured.
 181. How many trips did you make with her? She sailed for San Francisco and loaded at Puget Sound for Melbourne, and after delivering her cargo she went to Bluff Harbour, New Zealand, and loaded timber for Port Pirie, and then returned to Newcastle with produce. On June 26, 1889, she sailed for New Caledonia.
 182. What was her cargo? It consisted of 710 tons of coal, 35 tons of coal and one ton of nickel bags.
 183. Was the cargo insured? Yes; but not the ship. She next went to Townsville with 747 tons of coal.
 184. Was the cargo insured? Yes.
 185. What did she do next? The next voyage commenced on the 20th April, 1891, when she went to New Caledonia with 725 tons of coal.
 186. Was the cargo insured then? Yes. She left on her last trip on the 6th of July, 1891, for New Caledonia with 720 tons of coal.
 187. Was the ship insured on this occasion? Yes. She was insured for £400. Prior to May 13, she was insured for twelve months.
 188. What office was she insured in? In the office of the British and Australian Insurance Company.
 189. What was the cargo insured for? It did not belong to me.
 190. Captain Trouton.] Were you ever insured—or rather did you ever have the "Ellen" insured in the Victoria Insurance Company? No; I never had.
 191. Do you know whether previous to your ownership she was insured in that company? Yes; when she belonged to Mr. Wallace, she was insured in the Victoria Company.
 192. Did she belong to you at the time that she was burnt? Yes; the fire broke out in the galley-house on deck, and as the wind was blowing aft it burnt right down. All the fire went forward.
 193. Were the decks burnt? No; but they were pretty well singed.
 194. Did the fire get into the hold? No; it did not get down below at all; there was no damage below.
 195. How long was this before she went to sea? That was when I spent the £1,000 in repairing her. I was putting a main mast in and had the yards all down to take the old main mast out when she went on fire.
 196. How long was this before the last voyage? The fire occurred in January, 1888.
 197. Did you put her in the slip prior to the last voyage? Yes.
 198. What to do? To see that she was all right underneath. Some of the copper was off and it was replaced.
 199. Did you have her caulked? No.
 200. You knew her to be a leaky ship? Oh, no, I did not know that.
 201. Is it a fact that she had the windmill going in the harbour prior to going to sea? No—she had a windmill put in to work the pumps, but it was not at work.
 202. How? Was it working at any time while she was lying in the harbour? No.

Mr. J.
Henderson.
1 Aug., 1891.

- Mr. J. Henderson.
11 Aug., 1891.
203. Did you know any weak point of her? No—I thought her a strong ship, but put a windmill upon her. It had one arm broken and the carpenter was sent aboard to repair it and when he completed the work he set the windmill going to see if it would work all right. That was the day before she went to sea.
204. Did you have her surveyed before she went to sea? Not this time.
205. When did you have her surveyed last? I think it was in May of the present year.
206. Did Captain Sustenance survey her? Yes—I was ordered to have her placed on the slip by Mr. Montefiore so that Captain Sustenance could see her. I put her on the slip and he came down to Newcastle and saw her.
207. Did he say anything about her? He never spoke a word to me.
208. Did he not purchase her from you? No, she was purchased in Sydney upon Captain Sustenance's report.
209. You did not write to him to look at her? No.
210. Were her boats in good order? Yes.
211. How many of a crew had she on board for the last voyage? Ten men shipped at the shipping office in Newcastle.
212. President.] Had you to deliver her at New Caledonia? Yes.
213. Captain Trouton.] Were you to receive the freight? Yes—I was under a contract to deliver the vessel at New Caledonia for a certain price. I took the freight and I had to pay all hands and return the crew to Newcastle.
214. Captain Cargill.] When you purchased the vessel originally was she insured? Yes.
215. When she caught fire was she still covered by insurance? Yes, in the Victoria Insurance Company.
216. Who insured her? I do not know, but she was insured. When I purchased her I paid £200 down as part of the purchase money.
217. Who got the hull after the fire? I gave her up to the insurance company.
218. Was she purchased by the insurance company? No, I simply gave her up and afterwards when she was offered for sale I repurchased her.
219. It has been stated that you expended £1,000 in repairing the vessel? Yes, that is true.
220. That would make her cost to you £1,400—including the purchase money? Yes.
221. Did you try to get her insured? No, but before she was burnt she was insured for £1,100.
222. When you insured her at last, who arranged it for you? Captain Finlayson.
223. Did he make any inspection of the vessel? No.
224. Did you ever have any directions from him or the company to do certain repairs in the ship? No.
225. When Captain Sustenance saw the ship were there any listings cut out? No.
226. Nor any of the fastenings driven out? No, when she was inspected she appeared to be in nice order from the condition of the little bits that were chipped off.
227. You say the crew consisted of ten all told? Yes, but I heard afterwards that only nine shipped.
228. Do you know why the one man left the ship? I think he got on the spree and missed his berth.
229. President.] What were you to get for the vessel upon delivering her at New Caledonia? £800.
230. You only had her insured for £400? That was all.
231. Then you ran the risk of losing £400? Yes, and the freight.
232. Captain Cargill.] Did you hear any complaints about her having been undermanned? No. I saw the Captain the night before he sailed and he said nothing about it.
233. How long had the captain been in your service? For nearly twenty-five years.
234. In what capacity? He occupied the position of captain all that time.
235. How long was he in command of this ship? Ever since I bought her. One of the men who was drowned was in her when she traded with San Francisco, and the second mate, who lost his passage, gave two watermen either £1 or £2 to try and catch her, and they followed her for 5 miles outside, but could not come up with her, and they had to return to Newcastle with him.
236. Had you a second mate on board? It was the second mate who lost his passage.
237. Was he a certificated second mate? No—he was the boatswain. I would like to say that before she went to New Caledonia I expended £300 on her in repairs. She had been making a little water on the top course, and I told the carpenter to do what was necessary. He strapped four courses of metal, and drove three or four bolts. The knees were all renewed, and refastened.
238. Captain Trouton.] Were those bolts eaten away at all? No; but a good many of them were out. I told them that whatever was wanting in the ship, they were to do it under the captain's orders. Mr. Rapson, of Rapson Bros., Newcastle, refastened and caulked her, or rather dubbed her down and re-coppered her.
239. Did you put her on the slip to have all that done? No; the work was above the water-mark, and it was not necessary to slip her.
240. That was in April of the present year? Yes; she has only made one voyage since.
241. Have you ever carried anything but coal and timber? No, nothing with the exception of a cargo of produce once from Port Pirie.
242. When was that? Two years ago.
243. Who placed the Plimsoll mark upon her? I do not know; it was on the vessel when I bought her. I saw the Plimsoll mark on her just before she sailed, and it was 2 inches above the water on one side.
244. Then she must have had a list? No, I do not think so; the water was very fresh.
245. Would she rise another inch in the saltwater? I have known her to rise 4 inches. I was in Sydney when the ship was loading for this voyage. I went up to see Mr. Montefiore, and when I returned she was loaded.

Mr. James Stewart examined:—

- Mr. J. Stewart.
11 Aug., 1891.
246. President.] What is your occupation? Well, I both go to sea and work ashore. When I cannot get a ship I work as a riveter ashore.
247. How long have you been going to sea? About twelve years constantly.
248. Have you ever "ed in the barque "Ellen"? Yes.
249. When? I did my first voyage in her on the 23rd of March this year.

250.

250. Where to? To Noumea, with coal.
251. What kind of weather did you experience on that voyage? Oh, it was pretty bad weather all through.
252. How did the ship behave? She laboured pretty badly sometimes. She never shipped any very heavy seas.
253. Having got back safely you reshipped? Yes; I was going back to Neumea with her.
254. How was it that you did not go? I came ashore for a pair of blankets which I had left behind me, and meeting one and another, I got a "drop" too much, and missed my passage.
255. Were you afraid to go in her this time? No; if I had been sober I would have gone, and no doubt I would have been pretty sorry for it by this time.
256. Did you try to catch the ship? Yes. I got a man to go guarantee to pay two watermen £1 if they put me on board, but when outside the Nobbies, and they saw her setting the topgallant sail, they said it was no good going any further, and turned back.
257. Captain Cargill.] Did you give them anything for what they did? No; they failed to put me on board.
258. Was there anything wrong on board the vessel? No; nothing extra, she made a little water, that was all.
259. What do you mean by saying she made "a little water"? About an inch an hour. Sometimes we would pump her out at 4 in the afternoon, and again in the morning.
260. Did you always use both pumps in the harbour? Yes.
261. Was that when she was empty? No; when she was loaded down.
262. Did she make more water at sea than she did when in harbour? Yes.
263. You are sure that you were not afraid to go to sea in her? Oh, no; not in the least.
264. Did you ever hear any of the other hands on board complain of the condition? No.
265. Had the chief mate been in her before? No; only on the previous voyage.
266. How many hands were there on board on the previous voyage? Ten, all told—including the captain.
267. Was that number of hands sufficient to work the ship? Yes; and it was light enough work at sea.
268. Captain Trouton.] Did you sign the ship's articles? Yes.
269. What were you rated in them? Boatswain.
270. Did you see the windmill pump at work at all? Yes; on the previous voyage, but it did not work very well then. They cut six or seven inches off it, and made a new fan the day before she left this time.
271. Was that always going? Not always—in fine weather we would usually pump her every two hours.
272. How long would the crew pump her each time? From a quarter of an hour to twenty minutes.
273. Did the crew live in a house on deck or down in the forecabin? The forward hands lived in a house on deck—I lived aft.
274. Were you ever down in the fore peak? No; there was nothing there but water-tanks and dunnage wood.
275. Did you not keep any ropes down there? No, all the gear was kept aft.
276. Did she shake her rudder? No; she went very easily.
277. Had you no idea where this leakage came from? No; unless it came from amidships.
278. Captain Cargill.] Were you on board when she came off the slip? Yes; she came off all right, but I did not think it did her any good, as it gave her a bit of a shaking.
279. Captain Trouton.] What were the boats like? There were two very good boats on the ship, one of which, the whale boat, was repaired in Noumea. This boat was on the forward house, and the other was lashed on the main hatch.
280. The crew got away in the whale boat? Yes; it appears that the boat on the main hatch got smashed up.
281. Were your sails and gear good? Yes; pretty fair.
282. You were on board after she was launched and formed the opinion that it did her no good? Yes. I thought she should not make so much water.
283. How often were you pumping? Night and morning.
284. And did you have a good spell at the pumps each time? Yes.
285. Was the windmill going? Yes, but it did not work very well. It was working the day before she went to sea, and they had to keep a man to help her.
286. Captain Cargill.] Did you see the Plimsoll mark? Yes—the sounder of the disc was two inches above water. I saw nothing wrong in that respect.
287. Were there any sails for the boats? Only the one set—mainsail and jib.
288. What boat were they for? They were square cut and would suit either boat. Both boats were about the same length.

Mr. Augustus Bertram examined:—

289. President.] What is your occupation? I am an Inspector for the local Marine Board at Newcastle.
290. Did you make an inspection of the barque "Ellen" prior to her leaving Newcastle on her last voyage? Yes, I saw her when she was loading and subsequently inspected her before she went to sea.
291. Did you make any official report of her condition as the result of that inspection? I entered the matter in my official book from which I see that I was on board the "Ellen" on the 3rd of July last when she was ready for sea. She had a free board of 4 feet 1 or 2 inches below her mark—the free board was 4 feet 3 inches.
292. The mark was two inches submerged? Yes—less rather than more, but when she got in the salt water she would rise again.
293. Did you see both the Plimsoll marks? Yes.
294. And on both sides she was two inches below the water mark? Yes, but the Harbour Master told me that when she went to sea both marks were clear. I saw her when the flood was just making.
295. Captain Trouton.] Under what instructions do you inspect vessels? I am supposed to take cognisance of the equipment of vessels, to see how they load, and if there are any complaints to report them to the local Marine Board.
296. President.] Were any complaints made in the case of the barque "Ellen"? No—none at all. I have kept a good look out after the "Ellen."

Mr.
J. Stewart.
11 Aug., 1891

Mr. A.
Bertram.
11 Aug., 1891.

Mr. A.
Bertram.
11 Aug., 1891.

297. Why? Oh, because we know these old vessels and look more carefully after them.
298. Captain Trouton.] Were you on board the "Ellen"? Yes; I went on board when she was loading and noticed that the Plimsoll mark was not painted on. The line was there but no mark, and I told the Captain to have it painted on and he did so.
299. Captain Cargill.] Was that just prior to the present voyage? Yes.
300. Captain Trouton. How do you know that the mark was put on in the proper place? They have to indicate when it is put on and to show the free board and we cannot alter it.
301. Do I understand that the Plimsoll mark may be put on by the owner and where he likes so long as he gives notice to the Customs of the free board? I think so. There was a case in this harbour recently of a barque from Adelaide where the mark being below water mark, the captain painted the mark out and placed it higher up, and having given notice to the Customs of the free board, went to sea without taking out an ounce of coal.
302. What was the name of the barque? The barque "Athena." The Plimsoll mark was submerged 3 inches, and I called the captain's attention to the fact. The crew refused to go to sea, but after the mark was altered a new crew was shipped and she went to sea. These are the official entries in my book on the subject:—
- January 21st, 1891, barque "Athena"—port of registry Adelaide, 412 tons, draught 15·8 forward, 16·3 aft. This vessel's marks submerged a mean of 3 inches. Called the captain's attention to state of vessel. The crew also refusing to go to sea on account of the mark being submerged.
- January 22nd—New crew have been shipped under fresh articles, and the free board has been reduced from 3 feet 10 inches to 3 feet 6 inches, and sailed for her destination this day.
303. Was nothing done to prevent her going to sea? No, nothing that I know. She could not be stopped it appears. The free board in articles was 3 feet 4 inches.
304. Did you know of anything being wrong with the "Ellen"? No.
305. If there had been could you have acted? No. Unless complaints are made to the Marine Board nothing can be done. The Marine Board then directs me to go on board. When the "Ellen" was caulked after she was run down by the "Conference" she seemed very sound.
306. President.] Was her gear all right? Yes, I saw her boats and they were in very good order.
307. Captain Cargill.] Were there sails for both boats? No, only for one of the boats. The other boat was a very fair harbour boat, but it had no sails.
308. Have you seen the boat that was patched with canvas? I have not seen her bottom, but she looked a very fair boat.
309. Captain Trouton.] The barque "Ellen" was run into by another ship while at her moorings? Yes, she was run into by the barque "Conference" and after Lloyds Surveyor saw her she had some planks put in amidships.
310. Had she any new timbers put in? No, only some planking. I think there was only one timber put in—the barque did not strike her very heavily. Some of the planking was cut and it had to come out.
311. How many planks were cut? Six or seven—from the waterway down—about 30 feet.
312. Was all the damage in the "Ellen" above water? Yes; there was no damage below.
313. How do you know? They did not go below.
314. Was it not necessary to go below to take these six or seven planks out? They did not go below the water line. The planks were not cut below. Captain Brooks inspected her at the time. My impression was that she was better than ever after the collision—the planks all looked so sound. There was no excessive pumping. I must have been on board not once but a dozen times.
315. Do you go on board ships occasionally to see the crew and ascertain the ship's fitness to go to sea? Yes; when a ship comes into port I go and see that everything is right. I have no power to order anything that may be complained about, but if I see anything glaringly wrong, I report it to the local Marine Board.
316. Were the sails all right? I did not see the sails.
317. It has been stated that there were no spare sails on board? I do not know. I believe they had some spare sails.
318. Was it not your duty to see that she had spare sails on board? No; not as regards sailing ships.
319. Captain Cargill.] Do I understand that your powers extend to passenger steamers rather than to cargo sailing vessels? Yes; we have no power to do much with sailing vessels. You remember the legal proceedings in connection with the schooner "Lark," which was stopped for having a rotten mast.
320. What was the result? The result was that the Board was beaten and had to pay. I have done a good deal by moral suasion, but I have had no power to enforce my views.
321. Have you specific instructions how to act in all cases? Yes; our powers are specified in the Act from which we take our instructions.
322. In the case of a steamer, when you recommend something to be done, and it is not done, what course do you pursue? I report the matter to the local Marine Board, and a letter is written to the agents or the captain.
323. Are steamers ever detained under such circumstances? No; they would not be detained, but notice would be taken of the matter.
324. Are they ever fined? No.
325. Where is the penalty, then? That is because the Act does not go far enough. Now, in the case of the steamer "Wastwater," her Plimsoll mark was submerged on one occasion as much as 9 inches, but when she got away she rose 5 inches. We allowed 4 inches for the fresh water, but when she got into the ocean the mark was still 2 inches under water. The "Gannymede" barque was submerged 4 inches, and she was lightened 3 inches by the removal of the cargo. I always notice in the book whether the water is fresh or half fresh, and make the allowances accordingly.
326. You say you have observed a difference of 7 inches? Yes.
327. Is there not a great difference made by the difference in the build of vessels? Yes.

Mr. Richard Lynn examined :—

328. President.] What is your occupation? I am a shipwright by trade, and am now foreman carpenter Mr. R. Lynn, at O'Sullivan's patent slip in Newcastle.
329. Did you know the barque "Ellen"? Yes. We took her on to the slip on the 30th of June this ^{11 Aug., 1891.} year, and launched her again on the following day.
330. What was done to her? They simply patched her copper.
331. What state did you find her in? The copper did not look bad at all.
332. How much had you to take off? Principally on the bottom of the keel and a few of the butts had to be taken off.
333. Was that the only time you had her on the slip? Yes, that was the only time I saw her.
334. What did that overhaul cost? There were eight shipwrights at work on her for half a day.
335. Captain Trouton.] Did you strip the butts to caulk her? Yes, they stripped a few of them and caulked them.
336. Were you ever down below—in the peak, for instance? No, I was not below at all.
337. Did they touch her stem and stern? No.
338. Only just where she showed the leak? Yes, that was all. Just where the leak showed on the copper.
339. Did the "Conference" run into her before or after she was launched? After.
340. In the case of a wooden ship being run into, is it not necessary to look at her below the water-mark? I did not see her; it occurred after she was launched.
341. Do you think they ought to have put her in the slip again? I certainly do.
342. More especially a ship of her age? Yes.
343. Was she a North American ship? Yes.
344. Was she "salted"? Yes.
345. Have you seen a great many ships like that? Yes.
346. Has the "salting proved detrimental to the iron bolts? Well, there is a rumour that it eats away the bolts. In a similar barque I had to take out the bolts, but I could not see anything wrong as regards the salt.

Mr. John Henderson further examined :—

347. President.] We understand you wish to add something further to the evidence which you have already given? Yes; I want to say that when the "Ellen" was run into by the "Conference," she was cut down to the water's edge, and eight rows or heights of planking had to be taken out. Captain Brooks was appointed by both sides to say what repairs should be made. He had the ship opened up 50 feet ^{Mr. J. Henderson.} lengthwise, and 8 feet from the covering board down. When he examined the timber he found it as fresh ^{11 Aug., 1891.} as when the ship was first built.
348. Did you drift the bolts? No; cut them off. The iron bolts were beautiful.
349. Captain Cargill.] You bought the vessel from Mr. Wallace for £400? Yes.
350. Did she subsequently catch fire? Yes.
351. Was she yours when she caught fire? Yes.
352. Who held the insurance policy then? Mr. Wallace.
353. With whom did the insurance company settle? It settled with Mr. Wallace.
354. How much did the company pay? I do not know. They settled on the basis of £400.
355. You got £300 less the price you paid for her when you bought her back? Yes.
356. Did you ascertain what the cost of the repairs were consequent upon the collision? No; I had not to pay the damage. The "Conference" paid the damage. I left the matter to Captain Brooks entirely, as I did not want to increase the cost to Captain Lusher of the "Conference," who was a personal friend of mine.

[The Board then adjourned.]

WEDNESDAY, 12 AUGUST, 1891.

[The Board sat at the Court-house, Newcastle, and took evidence.]

Present:—

CAPTAIN A. M. FISHER, S.M., PRESIDENT.

CAPTAIN CARGILL,

CAPTAIN TROUTON.

Mr. Thomas Brooks examined :—

357. President.] What are you? I am a marine surveyor representing Lloyd's Registry in the port of Newcastle.
358. Have you ever surveyed the barque "Ellen," which was recently lost at sea? Yes, several times. On the first occasion about ten years ago, and on the last occasion on the 9th of January, 1890. I also surveyed her just after the fire, which took place on board of her in January, 1889. ^{Mr. T. Brooks.}
359. What survey did you make of her on the 9th of January, 1890? I saw her on the slip at Newcastle. Mr. Henderson, the owner, required to effect an insurance upon her, and as I represented the underwriters, I surveyed her and reported to the Association. I made a minute examination of the whole ship, and, to wind the thing up in a few words, there were several bad bolts, and she wanted stripping and caulking. Her decks were more or less injured at the time of the fire. They were dubbed down and sheathed, and she was to receive new scuppers. The rudder was unshipped and the braces were refastened. Some of her beams in the way of the mainmast were defective, and in my report, I stated that if the owner renewed these beams, I considered her a fair risk for insurance. The next survey I made upon her was on the 3rd of April. That was made necessary by the "Conference" running into her. ^{12 Aug., 1891.}
360. Captain Cargill.] She was run down amidships and was cut down eight beams to the water's edge? Yes; she was down at the buoy, loaded up ready for sea when the collision took place, and they came to me

- Mr. T. Brooks.
12 Aug., 1891.
- me to estimate the damage, and agreed to abide by my decision. I am a practical shipwright as well as a surveyor. I made a specification for the repairs and estimated the cost, and advised the master of the "Conference" to compromise the matter with the owner of the "Ellen," which he did. The owner of the "Ellen" having been satisfied by the master of the "Conference" in the matter, and the master shipwright having executed the repairs, the matter was ended; but although my duties were long since done, I still kept the vessel in view.
361. Captain Trouton.] Did you direct the repairs for the owner? Yes; for the owner as well as on behalf of the master of the "Conference."
362. Were you satisfied? I knowing that the owner had received a sufficient sum to make the repairs, I went on board to see if they were all done.
363. Finally were the repairs done to your satisfaction? Yes; as well as a ship of her class could be repaired. I marked the shifts of plank and made them longer and stronger.
364. You were satisfied as Lloyd's surveyor that the repairs were properly done? Yes; I also represented the Sydney underwriters, which is more important.
365. Captain Cargill.] Before and after this collision was she insured in the Sydney office? No; I do not think so.
366. You stated that the owners wished to insure her? Yes, but the office would not insure her. I reported just as I found her, and let them do as they liked afterwards.
367. You stated that if new timbers were put in she would be a fair risk? Yes; but they would not take her.
368. Has she not been insured by them since then? I do not know.
369. Captain Trouton.] Did she go to sea after this collision? Yes, she made a voyage to Noumea. When I saw her she was down to her copper and they had to list her to allow the repairs to be done.
370. Captain Cargill.] How many streaks of planks were there cut down? Eight streaks altogether.
371. Do you know whether she made more water than usual after the collision? No; she made 3 or 4 inches, but not more than usual. Previous to the collision the ship was lying in the harbour, and she was very well repaired. They stripped four courses of copper all round and re-coppered her all round.
372. Do you happen to know how long the copper had been on? Yes—my report states that she was re-metalled in November, 1885. I think I got these particulars from Mr. Wallace. He had a lien on the ship when she belonged to Captain Anthony.
373. Was your last survey made on the 9th of April? No; I surveyed her on the 1st of July, 1891, when she was on the slip. I do not know that you can call it a survey, but I went to see her in the slip.
374. What was she like then? She was placed on the slip on the 30th June, and I went to see her on the 1st July, and had a look at her. I met the owner and asked him what he was going to do with her, and he said, "Nothing; I have only put her in to let Captain Sustenance have a look at her. I think I have sold her to go to New Caledonia as a hulk." I said, "It is a very risky thing to send her to New Caledonia without looking at her bottom. The water is running out of her butts, and she should be stripped and caulked before going to sea." He replied that he was not going to do it, and I said, "Well, I cannot compel you." I reported the matter to the Underwriters Association. She required to be stripped and caulked before she could be considered a fair risk. I thought it a ridiculous thing to send any ship even as a hulk down to Noumea in that condition, particularly as there is no means of overhaul and repair down there. The water ran out of the butts of garboard and at the keel.
375. Do you know anything about her insurance? No.
376. The cargo was insured with your association? Well, all I can say is that I reported as early as possible, and if they insured after that is their look out, not mine. The metal on the ship is six years old—it should not be on a ship's bottom more than four years.
377. She was originally a good ship? She was a good ship of her class. She was water-worn and discoloured, and as regards her age she was well preserved.
378. What length of planks was taken out of her? About eight planks, some 30 feet long. The wood seemed sound, and the fastenings good.
379. Captain Trouton.] Does salting eat or preserve the bolts? It eats the bolts away a little, but preserves the timber. Without it the timber would go into snuff. It undoubtedly preserves the timber.

Mr. Robert Barclay Wallace examined:—

- Mr. R. B. Wallace.
12 Aug., 1891.
380. President.] What is your occupation? I am a ship agent and general merchant, carrying on business in Newcastle.
381. Do you know anything about the barque "Ellen," which recently foundered at sea? The "Ellen" was mortgaged to me some four years ago, and Mr. Henderson, the present owner, bought her from me. She was then insured in the Victoria Insurance Company for £1,500, but in December, 1887, it was reduced to £700 on his account on a harbour risk, as the vessel was laid up. She was insured for one month at 5s. per cent. in the Victoria Company. That was the last insurance effected. She was sold to Mr. Henderson on the 13th of December, 1887, for the sum of £400 cash. He paid £100 down on account of the purchase, and the balance was to be paid within ten days. She was laid up in the harbour for a long time. She belonged to an old friend of mine, Charles Hodge, and I helped Captain Anthony to buy the "Ellen." I lent him £800 or £900, and he put all he had into her. Indeed, he sold his house to purchase her from Captain Hodge. When he came back with her he had to spend money on her. I extended the time, but I could not lend any more money on the ship, and she was laid up for two years. I put a man on board of the ship as a caretaker, but my honest conviction was that almost everything was taken off of her while she was lying up.
382. Captain Trouton.] When was she laid up? In the year 1886. She was insured for £1,500, but in February it was reduced to £700.
383. Did you ever try to sell her in Sydney? Yes; I tried to sell her in Newcastle and Sydney, and I was at one time offered £1,400 for her through Fraser & Co., but Captain Anthony's friends came to me and asked me not to sacrifice her, and I foolishly listened to them. Mr. Henderson paid £100 on the 13th and £160 on the 26th December, as part of the purchase money, and I allowed the balance to stand over for some time. When the fire occurred I forwarded the full particulars of the sale to the Victoria Insurance

Insurance Company, and I told them that I was satisfied that Mr. Henderson had nothing to do with it. She was insured for £700. He bought her from me for £400, and would have had to spend £300 on her the first month, and he insured her for £700 for one month only.

384. When did the fire take place? On 8th January, 1888.

385. And you sold her to Mr. Henderson in December, 1887? Yes; but I am sure that there was nothing wrong about the fire.

386. Captain Cargill.] There must be some mistake, or Mr. Henderson must have forgotten—he told us yesterday that he did not hold that policy of insurance? He held the cover note.

387. Captain Trouton.] When the ship was yours and she was laid up for two years, had you to keep her pumped out? I do not think I had; I have no recollection of it.

388. Had you a windmill pump on board then? No; I do not think so.

Mr.
R. B. Wallace.
2 Aug., 1891.

Mr. Robert Herbert Cross examined:—

389. President.] What are you by occupation? I am at present the legal manager of the Wallsend Coal-mining Company and Chairman of the local Marine Board; I was formerly a master mariner.

390. Captain Trouton.] Are you a sailor? Yes; I am a sailor by education and experience.

391. What steps are taken by the local Marine Board to see that vessels going to sea, not only with passengers, but with crews, are sound and seaworthy? Do you take notice of ships which do not sail under the Passengers Act? Only so far as the Act provides.

392. Does the local Marine Board look to sailing vessels which do not carry passengers? No; not unless it is required to do so by receiving complaints from the crew of defects in the vessel—not unless defects are brought under the notice of the Board.

393. President.] In the event of complaints being made, would you have power to stop a vessel from going to sea? The Act does not give special powers to stop vessels, but we would have power to hold an inquiry.

394. Captain Cargill.] You can give vessels notice not to go to sea, but cannot stop them? Were we to give notice that a ship was unseaworthy, we could only caution the owners and captain, but could not stop her. The Act gives the Board power to send officers on board, but the captain can defy the powers and go to sea.

395. Captain Trouton.] The Act says that you may go on board any ship or vessel whatsoever for the purpose of examining the ship or machinery, and reporting on them? As a matter of fact, our inspector's powers are limited to his approval of the loading of the ship—that is to say, he has to see that she is not loaded beyond her Plimsoll mark, the quantity and quality of the life-saving apparatus, and the condition of the boats, but unless his attention is called by the crew to something that is wrong, we have no power to stop the ship.

396. You did stop a ship once in the harbour? Yes.

397. What was the result? Well, the result was that the Government had to pay damages, and the local Marine Board was pretty well sat on by the Chief Justice.

398. President.] What was the name of the ship? The "Lark." We may have omitted something in the legal forms in going about our work, but we were acting in the interest of the public. It was on Sunday, and we tried to stop the ship, but in consequence of us not having gone through a legal technical course we were out of court and the ship got damages.

399. Captain Trouton.] Do your officers lay before your Board the names of all ships, showing whether the Plimsoll mark is on them or not? Yes.

Mr.
R. H. Cross
12 Aug., 1891

Mr. John Bain examined:—

400. President.] What are you? Assistant Harbour-master at the port of Newcastle.

401. What are your duties in connection with the ships visiting and leaving the port; such, for instance, as in the case of the barque "Ellen"? I take notice of the Plimsoll mark, the draft of water, and so on.

402. Did you note them in the case of the "Ellen"? Yes.

403. On what date? On the 4th of July.

404. Did you make any report on the subject? No; I merely entered it in my official book, "Centre line of disc level with water."

405. Was that the last time you saw her? I saw her on two other occasions when she came down on the 3rd of July.

406. Is that all you know about her? I saw her on the morning before she sailed, and noticed the marks level with the water.

407. Captain Cargill.] Was she upright;—did you see the marks on both sides? Yes.

408. President.] What is the floating difference between salt and fresh water? It depends to a very large extent upon the size of the ship, but it can be marked out. I have known vessels to rise from 2 to 3 inches on going outside.

409. Captain Trouton.] Have you ascertained the reason for the particular power of this one part of the harbour? It is on account of the large quantity of fresh water coming down.

Mr. J. Bain.
12 Aug., 1891.

Mr. Henry Newton examined:—

410. President.] What are you? Harbour-master at the port of Newcastle.

411. Did you know the barque "Ellen"? Yes; I passed her an hour before she went to sea—about 8 o'clock in the morning.

412. How was she? The lower edge of the bar of the Plimsoll mark was just clear of the water.

413. Would she rise on getting into the salt water? Yes; she would rise fully an inch in deeper water.

414. Captain Trouton.] Can you tell us why vessels in shallow water are submerged and afterwards rise? It is owing to the fresh water coming down the river.

415. When there is lots of fresh water then the vessels lie low? According to size and build of the ships. Vessels like the "Ellen," with 4 or 5 feet under their bottom during half fresh would very likely rise 3 or 4 inches on getting into salt water. I can quote the instance of the "Beeswing." The Plimsoll mark was submerged 2 inches, and the crew knocked off and refused to turn to again; but when she was taken off to the buoy, she lifted 2 inches, and went to sea the same day.

Mr.
H. Newton.
12 Aug., 1891.

416. Does the Assistant Harbour-master report all such cases to you? Yes; as inspector to the Local Marine Board.

Mr. William Robert Logan examined:—

Mr. W. R. Logan. 417. President.] What is your position in the public service? I am Collector of Customs for the port of Newcastle.

12 Aug., 1891. 418. Do you know anything in connection with the loss of the barque, "Ellen"? No; all such matters are dealt with by the Local Marine Board. I know nothing about her.

419. Do you mean to say that you had nothing to do with the departure of the "Ellen" from the port? Except occasionally in filing certain documents provided for by the Navigation Act. We clear the vessels and have power to stop the clearance at the instance of the local Marine Board.

420. Does the Marine Board give any reasons? Yes; they give us notice that such a vessel has been stopped for certain reasons, and if they apply to us, we refuse to issue the clearance.

421. Captain Trouton.] When a captain is clearing his ship, has he to produce any documents from the local Marine Board? No. He gives us documents from the Harbour Department, which are understood to have been given by the Marine Board, as to his having paid certain pilotages, but it is not directly from the Marine Board. If they wanted to stop a vessel they would write to me, and it would then be a question for consideration as to whether I possessed the power to comply. If I am at all uncertain I do not do so, because I may be made liable.

422. Captain Cargill.] Have you no rule as to the position of the Plimsoll mark? Simply what the Navigation Act provides. The captain must lodge a document with me, fixing the Plimsoll mark, in certain cases, and it is also set out in the ship's articles.

423. Is that always done? Foreign-going vessels and coast-trade ships do trade differently. The coast-trade ships have not to lodge the Plimsoll mark except at the port of entry once a year, while foreign vessels have to lodge it each time the vessel goes to sea. There was no such document lodged in the case of the "Ellen." The clerk has accidentally treated her as an intercolonial or coastal vessel, which means that it has been lodged for the last twelve months. There should have been such papers lodged in the case of the "Ellen," but in their absence the information could be obtained from the ship's articles at the shipping office. She was treated as a coast-trade ship, and should have been considered a foreign vessel.

424. Captain Trouton.] The officers of the port say that the mark was not submerged? It is the duty of the Local Marine Board Inspector to see that the mark is not submerged.

425. You are the responsible officer under the Government for stopping vessels, and nobody else? Oh, yes—the Marine Board. It was decided sometime ago. If the Marine Board wrote to me and asked that I should stop a vessel, it would be very difficult for me to say whether I could stop her or not. In the case of the "Lark" they wrote to me, and asked me to stop her, and before replying I wrote to the Collector of Customs in Sydney, and he said that I was not justified, and that I did right in not interfering. In the case where documents are to be produced, and they are not, I can stop a vessel, but in no other case.

426. When does the captain get the document? He fills up the Plimsoll mark, and hands it in himself. The onus of handing that document in to me is upon the captain.

427. If the captain and the Marine Board send in different reports, what do you do? If the Marine Board appealed to me on the ground that the information supplied by the captain was wrong, I should stop the ship at once.

428. Would you stop her if the Inspector reported that the Plimsoll mark was submerged? Yes; I would take that responsibility at once, but I had no mention of that from the Marine Board in the case which I referred to.

429. What would you do if the Marine Board reported that a vessel was rotten and not fit to go to sea? I would hesitate before giving the captain his clearance, I would stop him in the interest of life, and would not give him his papers. In the case of the "Lark," I did not stop her, but I held her papers until I consulted the authorities in Sydney.

THURSDAY, 13 AUGUST, 1891.

[The Board sat at the Court House, Newcastle, and took evidence.]

Present:—

CAPTAIN A. M. FISHER, S.M., PRESIDENT.

CAPTAIN TROUTON,

CAPTAIN CARGILL.

Mr. John Williams examined:—

Mr. J. Williams. 430. President.] What are you? I am a coal trimmer.

13 Aug., 1891. 431. Were you employed on board the barque "Ellen" trimming coal prior to the last voyage? Yes. I have trimmed her for the last three or four years, and when she was burnt.

432. When were you last on board? I cannot give the date.

433. Well, can you tell us anything about her condition? I can only tell you that on the last voyage she had 20 tons of coal less than on the two previous occasions. She had 760 tons last time and 749 tons this time, and she "paid" 730 tons. The vessel had been lying in the harbour for a long time, and she had some water in her, but they did not pump her.

434. Did you notice whether she was very leaky or not? No—no more than usual—she always made some water, but it was not as bad this time as it was two years ago. She has been very leaky always.

435. Captain Cargill.] Did you say she was oot pumped while you were trimming her? She was not pumped from the afternoon till next night—then I told them to pump her.

436. Did you see the water in her? Yes, I could see the water in her. The old mate seemed very restless, and when I asked him to pump her, he said, "Damn her," and went away.

437. How much was the water over the skin? About 6 inches.

438. In the fore-hatch? There was no water in the fore-hatch.

439. That would not mean very much water on an even keel? No; not much.

440. Were you an individual trimmer or a contractor? I had the contract for trimming her.

441. Did you think she was making more water? Oh, no. I heard the water running into her one time.
 442. Was she ever much worse than in this last loading? No. I have never seen her much worse, but she was not worse this time than last. I heard Captain Brooks say that her old planks were better than new ones. They wanted to take some planks out, and Captain Brooks said they could not put better ones in. The water was running into her for the last four or five trips.
 443. Did you see the Plimsoll mark? Yes; it was about an inch under water.
 444. Captain Trouton.] Do you mean that it was submerged an inch? Yes; but the vessel would rise two or three inches in the salt water.
 445. Did you trim the coals after the damage that was done by the "Conference" running into the "Ellen"? No; the sailors took the coal out and listed her.
 446. Did you hear any complaints among the crew about the condition of the vessel? I heard one of the crew named Jerry say that he could not get a ship, and could not starve, and that he might just as well go in her and die as starve ashore.

Mr. J.
Williams.
13 Aug., 1891.

Mr. Edward Rapson examined:—

447. President.] What are you? I trade as Rapson Brothers, shipbuilders, Newcastle.
 448. Did you know the barque "Ellen"? Yes; we repaired the vessel in 1888, after she caught fire, for Mr. Henderson. She was burnt from the galley forward to the forepart part of the windlass.
 449. What was the nature of your contract with Mr. Henderson? It was not a contract, but a labour job.
 450. How long did it take? Two months—from six weeks to two months.
 451. Captain Trouton.] How many men were employed at the work? Six to eight men.
 452. What did you receive for your work—how much did you get for carrying out the work? £350 altogether.
 453. Captain Cargill.] Did that include the material? No; it was for the labour only.
 454. Captain Trouton.] Did you dub the deck down? Yes.
 455. Was it burnt? No.
 456. Did you sheath it? Yes.
 457. How was the windlass? It was very slightly injured. We dubbed it over and took the "bits" out.
 458. Did you sheath the deck right aft? No; we sheathed from the fore-hatch.
 459. Was she sheathed when she went down? Yes.
 460. When was that done? In January, 1890.
 461. Did you repair the windmill pump? Yes.
 462. What did you do to it? Put a new arm to it, and fixed it up in the presence of Mr. Henderson, who set it working.
 463. Did it throw the water? Yes; very satisfactorily, indeed.
 464. Captain Cargill.] Can you account for the windmill breaking down very shortly after the vessel started? I cannot. I put iron knees in to stiffen it up.
 465. Did you do anything to the pumps? They were all taken out and new brasses and new chambers put in.
 466. Was that at the time of the fire? No; that was on the 23rd of February last.
 467. Did you repair her after she was run into by the "Conference"? Yes.
 468. How much did you get for the work you did in her on that occasion? My labour for that job was £125.
 469. Captain Trouton.] When you opened her up you said her timbers were all firm, and in good order? They were in splendid order, and there was no particle of rot.
 470. You "drifted" some of the bolts? Yes; but the other bolts I saw we had to cut.
 471. Were they in good order? Yes; I was very much surprised to see them in such good order in view of her age.
 472. Did you ever look at the boats? No; but once, when I was on board, the captain called my attention to the large boat which he had repaired in New Caledonia. He told me the repairs cost £9.
 473. Did you consider her a good sound boat? Yes; she was a good boat.
 474. Did you see the other boat? Yes.
 475. Was she sound? She was in very good order.
 476. Had the ship a new mainmast put in? Yes.
 477. Was it a good spar? Yes; it was good all through.

Mr.
E. Rapson.
13 Aug., 1891.

Mr. Clarence Henson Hannell examined:—

478. President.] What are you? I am the shipping-master of the port of Newcastle.
 479. Captain Trouton.] Can you give us some information about the vessel "Athena," which is stated to have altered her Plimsoll mark after the crew knocked off because it was several inches submerged, and to have then shipped another crew and gone to sea? I am not aware of anything of the kind having occurred. The captain must have brought his crew to the shipping office and shipped them in the ordinary way.
 480. Do you know anything about the barque "Ellen"? I have never heard anything about her. There was one of her crew who got into trouble some time ago for misconduct on board.
 481. President.] How many certificated officers should she have had on board? Going to New Caledonia she should have had a captain and first and second officers with certificates, but on this voyage the captain made a declaration that he could not obtain a second officer, and he was allowed to take a man without a certificate.
 482. Then ships are allowed to go to sea without proper officers on merely making a declaration that they cannot get them? Yes; on making a declaration. In this case I knew he could not get a second officer in Newcastle.
 483. Captain Cargill.] That is very extraordinary? It is the rule here.
 484. Then, if he could neither get a mate or a second mate, would he be allowed to go to sea without any officer? Yes. It would rest with the Customs to stop the vessel. I have known cases in Sydney when they could not get proper officers and vessels were allowed to go to sea without them.

Mr.
C.H. Hannell,
13 Aug., 1891.

- Mr. C. H. Hannell. 485. Did you produce the ship's articles? Yes.
 486. How many had she of a crew? Ten men are on the articles, but I believe one lost his berth.
 487. Captain Trouton.] Is there no rule with regard to the number of men that should be on board the various descriptions of vessels? No; there is no such rule in the shipping offices or anywhere else that I know of.
 13 Aug., 1891. 488. President.] It has been stated that some of the men on board were on the vessel previously? It is not shown on the articles.
 489. The witness Stewart stated that he was on board the "Ellen" before? Yes; but not on the previous voyage.
 490. Captain Trouton.] Is the free board given on the articles? Yes.
 491. Does the captain fill up the form showing the free board himself? Yes.
 492. You give him the form? Yes.
 493. And he fills it up himself? Yes.
 494. Do I understand that you got a certificate from Captain Stephens, signed by himself, saying that the free board was 3 feet 9 inches? No; he only filled in the figures.

Mr. Henry Trelevan examined:—

- Mr. H. Trelevan. 495. President.] What are you? A waterman, residing in Newcastle.
 13 Aug., 1891. 496. Did you know anything about the barque "Ellen"? I took the captain on board the "Ellen" in my boat about 20 minutes to 5 o'clock on the morning that he sailed.
 497. Captain Cargill.] Was it quite dark then? No, it was not quite dark.
 498. Well, what did you see, or rather what did you hear;—did you hear any complaints from the men on board? Yes, I did. I waited on board all the morning until she sailed. We were waiting for the steam-tug to take her out to sea, but she did not come till after breakfast. All hands were turned to and were pumping ship.
 499. Captain Trouton.] Did they pump much water? They were about five or six minutes at the pumps. She has a fly-wheel. The crew all came aft, and they all stopped talking to the captain, and I heard them say that they were short handed. Captain Stephens said, "All right, I'll pay you for the extra man," and they turned to.
 500. President.] Did you hear them say anything about the unseaworthiness of the ship? No; I heard one man say that he was not afraid and that he had no fear, and we had some talk, but I heard no complaints. I said to Old Bill, "She does not make as much water as last time;" he replied, "No, Harry, I do not think she does; there is not so much coal in her."
 501. Captain Cargill.] You say they pumped her for five or six minutes;—did they pump her dry? Yes; she sucked.
 502. Do you know if she was pumped during the night? No.
 503. Would you have gone and taken the place of the man who was absent? No. I would not have gone to sea for £40 a month.
 504. Were you afraid of the ship? No.
 505. Captain Trouton.] Did you see the Plimsoll mark that morning? Yes.
 506. Where was it? The disc was about 1 inch out of water.
 507. Have you ever known any crews object to sail in this ship? I do not think so. I knew "Old Bill" and Jerry Daley, and they were not frightened. I never heard anybody say they would not go with her.
 508. Captain Cargill.] Did you ever hear her called "a coffin"? Well, that is the term usually applied to all old vessels—they are always called an "old dug out" or "a coffin."
 509. Was Mr. Henderson on board the vessel that morning? No.

Mr. Augustus Bertram recalled:—

- Mr. A. Bertram. 510. President.] We want to know something further about the barque "Athena," of which you told us?
 13 Aug., 1891. Yes.
 511. When did she alter her Plimsoll mark? On the 21st January, 1891. I would like to say that if they raised the mark at all I would report it to the Marine Board. In this instance they raised it 4 inches, and, as a matter of fact, the occurrence was reported in the ordinary way.
 512. Captain Cargill.] Had the crew only just been shipped? No; I think their articles were out.
 513. You have no power to interfere in such a case? Yes; there is certain power, but unless something very extraordinary is the matter nothing is done.
 514. What freeboard should be on the "Ellen"? From 3 feet 1½ inches to 3 feet 3 inches for that class of vessel.

Mr. Frederick Christensen examined:—

- Mr. F. Christensen. 515. President.] What are you? A coal-trimmer, working at Newcastle.
 13 Aug., 1891. 516. Did you help to trim the "Ellen"? Yes.
 517. Do you know anything about the condition of the vessel? Well, no; nothing particular.
 518. Did you notice her making water? Well, of course, she was leaky a little.
 519. Did you trim her before the last voyage? Yes.
 520. Was the water more than usual? As far as I know it was about the same, but I never took much notice of it.
 521. Was it fairly averaged? I did not see much difference.
 522. Captain Cargill.] Were they in the habit of pumping her? Oh, yes; I saw the men pumping her.
 523. How much? For about two hours in the forenoon, and then they would start in the evening about 6 o'clock, and take spell about.
 524. What do you mean by "spell about"? Two men at a time on each side, and the other four men standing by, waiting to help them.

Mr.

Mr. Joseph Lovett examined:—

525. President.] What are you? I am a coal-trimmer, employed at Newcastle.
 526. Did you help to load the barque "Ellen"? Yes.
 527. How many tons of coal were put on board last time? I cannot say.
 528. Did you ever notice anything peculiar about the "Ellen"? Well, during the time we were working in the main hold they started the pumps after breakfast—9 o'clock. The vessel leaked so badly I could not work where I was.
 529. Did it come through the decks? Yes; it came through from the pumps.
 530. Was there very much water? It was coming very freely through the decks.
 531. Captain Cargill.] Would that be only near one spot? It was right across the deck. I told the boss trimmer that I would not work down there while she was in that condition.
 532. How long did they pump? All the time—from 9 o'clock to 11 o'clock right along.

Mr.
J. Lovett.
13 Aug., 1891.

Mr. William Robert Logan recalled:—

533. President.] The inspector of the local Marine Board has told us a story about the barque "Athena," altering her Plimsoll mark, shipping a new crew, and going to sea. Do you know anything of the matter? I know nothing whatever about it. The document giving the Plimsoll mark would not be lodged with us, as she was only a coastal trade ship, and it was only necessary for her to lodge it at the port of registry. The document would not be required here at all.
 534. Then what is the use of this document at all? I do not know, except to have it in evidence somewhere. The Local Marine Board has full powers of detention without placing the responsibility on the shoulders of the Customs.
 535. But would you not be the instrument of detention? Well, I suppose so; but we would be slow to act without instructions.
 536. Captain Cargill.] Could you not withhold the clearance? Yes; if necessary.
 537. In the "Athena" documents the free board was given as 3 feet 4 inches, but when she went to sea it was 3 feet 6 inches? I knew nothing about that. It is for the Marine Board to take action. We are only concerned as a departmental record. It is not the captain who is required to lodge this notice at all but the owner, and it is the shipping-master who is charged with the responsibility to have it registered.
 538. Captain Trouton.] You get a certificate from the postmaster that all mails have been delivered, and then from the shipping-master about pilotage, but the Marine Board does not tell you whether the draft of water is right—you have to get a statement from the captain himself that it is so? Yes; we got a statement from the captain, certifying the load-line, but we got nothing from anybody to say that it is all right.
 539. Do you think that your certificate should come from the Marine Board, and not the captain? No. There is no doubt some good reason for the present arrangement, but it might be verified.
 540. Then there is nothing to prevent vessels going to sea with their Plimsoll mark under water? Nothing, for all we know. All we have to do with the matter is to record the document which the owners of the ship hand in.

Mr.
W. R. Logan.
13 Aug., 1891.

Mr. Clarence Hewson Hennell recalled:—

541. President.] Do you know who were the men who refused to go with the "Athena?" I believe the £4 a month men stood out for £4 10s., and when they had shipped a whole new crew, three backed out.
 542. Was there nothing in the men's objection about the Plimsoll mark being raised? I do not know—the mark was given at 3 feet 4 inches, which was sufficient for a vessel of her size.

Mr. C. H.
Hennell.
13 Aug., 1891.

Mr. John Henderson recalled:—

543. President.] We understand you wish to say something further? Not unless you wish to question me.
 544. Captain Trouton.] What rate of freight had you down to New Caledonia in this voyage? 12s. 6d. a ton.
 545. Was the freight insured? No.
 546. Then you are a loser by it? Yes. The following is a list of the moneys I have spent on the vessel, and the voyages she has done:—

Mr. J.
Henderson.

547. Captain Cargill.] Was the captain a sober man? Yes, at sea.
 548. How do you know that? By what I have been told; the seamen have told me so.
 549. Was there any drink on board this voyage? Yes, a keg of rum.
 550. What quantity? 10 gallons.
 551. The mate has been a long time in your service? Yes, off and on.
 552. Was he a sober man? Well, he was like the rest; I would not trust him.
 553. Why did not you get a certificated second mate? I could not get one and so made a declaration.
 554. Captain Brooks stated that he remonstrated with you, and said that if you sent the ship to sea without having her stripped and caulked she would not be a fair risk? He never said so to me. I never saw him when the vessel was on the slip the last time.
 555. There was another point. It was stated in one of the papers that you said it was a fine weather voyage, and that she was good enough to go down? No, I never said anything of the kind. I was at Waratah at the time I was reported to have said that in Newcastle.

MONDAY, 17 AUGUST, 1891.

[The Board sat at the Colonial Secretary's Office, and took evidence.]

Present:—

CAPTAIN A. M. FISHER, S.M., PRESIDENT.

CAPTAIN TROUTON.

CAPTAIN CARGILL.

Mr. Harry Bathurst Hughes examined:—

- Mr. H. B. Hughes.
17 Aug., 1891.
556. President.] What are you? I am the Marine Clerk at the British and Australian Insurance Companies Office Sydney.
557. Did you effect any insurance on the barque "Ellen"? Yes; I proposed the risk.
558. When was that? On the 6th May, 1890. I was then acting as an insurance agent.
559. What was the amount of the insurance? £400.
560. Who was your surveyor then? Captain George Finlayson.
561. Did he survey her for that insurance? Yes, for my company.
562. Have you his report? I think it might be in the office. I remember that he recommended the risk to be taken if a donkey-engine was put on board at once.
563. Was that done? No, it was not done.

The following correspondence took place on the subject:—

SYDNEY UNDERWRITERS' ASSOCIATION.

MARINE SURVEYOR'S REPORT.

I HEREBY certify that I have surveyed the "Ellen," barque, 499 tons, previous to her sailing for New Caledonia. She had the four upper courses of metal stripped all round, refastened, thoroughly caulked, and new metalled. After this work was completed and ship ready for sea, the "Conference," barque, ran into her, cutting through several streaks of plank amidship. These damaged planks were taken out, exposing the timbers which were found in a good state of preservation. I consider the ship a fair risk for a sum not exceeding £100.

14 May, 1891.

THOMAS BROOKS,
Surveyor to the Sydney Underwriters' Association.

W. J. Smith, Esq.,
Dear Sir,

Newcastle, 2 August, 1890.

The barque "Ellen" arrived here this morning from Townsville, and is fixed to load for Townsville again. My reason for writing you is with reference to the writing on the margin of the policy of Insurance on the hull (by that, a steam-engine to be put on board first opportunity). Up to the present time I have not put one on board, as the vessel does not require one in this trade, as the steam winch on board of the hulk at Cleveland Bay hoists out the cargo, and to put an engine on board at the present time would only be spending money to no purpose, as the vessel does not require one; therefore I would like this clause taken out of the policy. Let me know if I will send it up to get it put out, or notify me to do it myself.

Yours, &c.,
JOHN HENDERSON.

W. J. Smith, Esq.
Dear Sir,

6 August, 1891.

I herewith forward you the policy of the barque "Ellen," to erase the steam-engine.

Yours, &c.,
JOHN HENDERSON.

John Henderson, Esq., 95A, Scott-street, Newcastle.

4 August, 1890.

Dear Sir,

I am duly in receipt of yours of the 2nd inst., and note your remarks, re donkey steam winch. If you are perfectly satisfied that the vessel can do without it, I have no objection to strike out the clause as asked. Please, therefore, send me the policy.

Yours, &c.,
W. J. SMITH,
General Manager.

John Henderson, Esq., 95A, Scott-street, Newcastle.

8 August, 1890.

Dear Sir,

Yours of the 6th inst. I herewith return you the policy, No. 25., £400, on the "Ellen," having cancelled the guarantee re placing donkey engine on board as asked.

I am, &c.,
W. J. SMITH,
General Manager.

564. The policy lies in the bank? Yes. She was mortgaged to the bank of New South Wales, and the policy was in the name of the bank.

565. How long was the insurance for? For twelve months.

566. Then the policy was just out when she was lost? No, we took her again for another twelve months from the 5th of May, 1891, for £400. Before taking the risk we asked Mr. Henderson to send us a surveyor's report, and he did. With my experience of ships I should never have had any insurance upon her at all.

567. But did you not propose the risk to the Company yourself? That was when I was in the capacity of an insurance broker—but I insisted upon the donkey engine.

568. Captain Trouton.] Has anybody sent in a claim for the insurance? Yes; the bank has sent in a claim in the ordinary way.

569. Captain Cargill.] Was the freight insured? We insured the freight, but as Mr. Henderson had not sent in the premium until after the vessel was lost we declined to recognise it. I suppose he got an advance on the risk.

[The Board then adjourned.]

THURSDAY,

THURSDAY, 20 AUGUST, 1891.

[The Board sat at the Colonial Secretary's Office, and took evidence.]

Present:—

CAPTAIN A. M. FISHER, S.M., PRESIDENT.

CAPTAIN TROUTON,

CAPTAIN CARGILL.

Mr. James Powell examined:—

570. President.] What are you? I am the Collector of Customs for the Port of Sydney.571. Captain Trouton.] In case it is necessary to stop a ship going to sea, how do you do it? We have power under the 17th section of the 45 Victoria—the Navigation Act—to do what is necessary.Mr.
J. Powell.
20 Aug., 1891.

572. Is that the last Act? Yes.

573. President.] Who gives the order for detention? The officers of the Marine Board would instruct us and we would act.574. Captain Trouton.] Have you ever stopped a ship in this way? I have not, but the regulations provide for it.

575. Who places the Plimsoll mark on the ship? I presume the owner or agent. We only have a declaration from the owner or master or agent, giving the distances and position of the mark, and that is all we know about it. Penalties are imposed for any infringement of the Act.

576. President.] Then, you do not think it possible that the "Athena's" mark was altered? No; it was not possible to do it without the knowledge of the Customs.577. Captain Trouton.] The Act imposes a penalty, but does not give you power to stop the ship? Oh, yes; we have power now to stop the ship.

578. Then you think the Marine Board has sufficient power now to stop a ship? Yes; undoubtedly.

579. Do you get a certificate from the Marine Board before a ship clears? No; not a certificate, but we get a note showing the load line. If it is wrong, the officer of the Marine Board should report it and he could stop the vessel—detain her if necessary. It is the duty of the Marine Board officer to see that the water line is all right and to report it. If no vessel was allowed to leave without a certificate it would make matters easier. There is now special legislation under which we may stop ships. I can stop them for non-payment of tonnage dues and for wharfage. Indeed, I have been asked to stop a ship for the butcher's account; but the item was not provided for in the Act, and I did not comply.

580. What would the penalty be for a ship going to sea without her papers? There are many cases where there is no risk, but if ships are found at sea by a man-of-war it would be rather awkward.

581. The Marine Board would be responsible for detaining a ship? Yes.

582. Should the Marine Board have power to stop a ship on the ground that she had not enough men on board? Yes; I think so.

583. You think the Marine Board should have full powers to stop ships from going to sea? Yes.

584. Captain Cargill.] Would such powers not be opposed to the Merchants Shipping Act? I am not sure.

[The Board then adjourned.]

FRIDAY, 21 AUGUST, 1891.

[The Board sat at the Colonial Secretary's Office and took evidence.]

Present:—

CAPTAIN A. M. FISHER, S.M., PRESIDENT.

CAPTAIN TROUTON,

CAPTAIN CARGILL.

Octavius L. Montefiore, Esq., examined:—

585. President.] Do you remember the barque "Ellen," which was recently lost at sea? Yes; I purchased her, but I never saw her.

586. What did you give for her? I gave £775 for her—she being delivered at Noumea. She was only bought as a hulk. I sent Captain Sustenance, who had surveyed her on two occasions, to see her.

587. Did he report that she was worth the amount? His report was satisfactory, and upon his report I bought her.

588. Captain Cargill.] Was it a written report? No; only a verbal report.

589. Did you say that Captain Sustenance surveyed her twice for you? Yes; once afloat, and once when she was on the slip.

590. Captain Trouton.] Did she ever carry cargo for you before? No; she carried coal.591. Captain Cargill.] Did Captain Sustenance say she was a good ship? He never said anything, but that she would be a good ship for the purpose for one or two years.

592. Did he say anything about her being leaky? No.

593. Did you deal directly with Mr. Henderson? Yes; I dealt with him in my office. He had to deliver the ship at Noumea, and unless that was done I was not to pay for the ship.

[The Board then adjourned.]

O. L.
Montefiore,
Esq.
21 Aug., 1891.

MONDAY,

MONDAY, 24 AUGUST, 1891.

[The Board sat at the Colonial Secretary's Office, and took evidence.]

Present:—

CAPTAIN A. M. FISHER, S.M., PRESIDENT.

CAPTAIN TROUTON,

CAPTAIN CARGILL.

Mr. John Hall examined:—

Mr. J. Hall. 594. President.] What are you? I am a surveyor to the Underwriters' Association.

595. Do you remember ever having surveyed the barque "Ellen"? No. I know nothing whatever about her.

24 Aug., 1891.

[The witness' attendance was dispensed with.]

Mr. August E. Peterson recalled:—

Mr. A. E. Peterson. 596. President.] We want to learn something further from you about the progress of the "Ellen" up to the time of her foundering. Now, when did she leave Newcastle? On the 6th of the month.

597. Did anything particular happen on the 6th? No.

598. Was there any grog—rum—on board? Yes.

599. When was it broached? It was broached before we left port.

600. By whom was it broached? By the owner and the captain.

601. How did you know it was broached? Because there was rum on board before we left.

602. Did you all have some of it? I did not have any, but most of the men had.

603. When did the bad weather commence on the voyage? On the third day after leaving port.

604. Captain Trouton.] Do you remember the day you left port? Yes, it was on a Monday morning.605. President.] Was there much rum knocking about when the bad weather commenced? I cannot tell.

606. Well, did you see anybody drunk on board? Yes, the mate was drunk; he was the only one I saw drunk.

607. What became of the rum;—did it go down with the ship? No. One of the men went aft when the gale was on and threw the keg overboard.

608. Why? Because he thought they had already too much of it.

609. Captain Cargill.] Who was it threw the keg overboard? A seaman named Smith.

610. How much was there in the keg when he threw it overboard? I do not know.

611. How did he get the keg to throw it overboard? It was in the cabin, and in the storm he went in there and got it and threw it overboard.

612. Did anybody see him do it? It was just at the time when the captain was struck down. The mate was then drunk, and Smith went into the cabin and threw the keg overboard.

613. Was the captain capable of doing his duty? Yes.

614. Was he seriously injured by the blow from the windmill? Yes.

615. When was the rum broached? The night before we went to sea.

616. Was the owner on board when you went away? Yes; he was on board on the night before we left.

617. Did you see him on the morning that the vessel left? No.

618. Are you sure that the captain was capable of taking charge of the vessel after the accident? Yes.

619. Had he to go to bed at all in consequence of the accident? Yes, the day after he went to bed the mate had to go to bed, and the captain went to bunk afterwards.

620. Captain Trouton.] When did you have to go to the pumps first? Before leaving harbour she was leaking heavily.

621. Who kept the watch? The captain and the mate kept their respective watches.

622. What weather had you on the Tuesday after leaving port? Fine weather, and the captain kept the watch, because the mate was laid up.

623. Who kept the watch all through Tuesday night? The captain.

624. He must have had a long watch? Yes; but he went and had a lie down in the daytime.

When it was fine the ship was left in charge of the crew.

625. When the captain was below did the crew pump the ship thoroughly? Yes; we were at the pumps for three days without stopping.

626. Was the windmill going? No.

627. Now, on the Wednesday after leaving port, where was the mate? He was on deck keeping his watch.

628. Was he sober? I think so.

629. Was the captain on duty? Yes; they kept their respective watches.

630. Was the weather fine on Wednesday? Yes.

631. When did you get the first of the bad weather? On the Wednesday evening.

632. Did you keep watch and watch? Yes.

633. Did all hands shorten sail when the bad weather came on? Yes.

634. What sail did you shorten? The two topsails, the fore staysail, the lower foresail, and the square foresail.

635. Where did the wind shift to when you shortened sail? I cannot say, but I know we could not lay her on her course, and that we had to lay her off.

636. On which side of the ship was the wind blowing? On the starboard side.

637. Was there a heavy sea when you lay on your course? Yes; she commenced to creak as the sea began to rise.

638. What did you do on board? We steered our course to the wind, but it blew so hard that we could not steer, and then the topsails carried away, and we only had the fore lower topsail, the foresail, and the fore-topsail left.

639. Captain Cargill.] Had you no tri-sail on the ship? No.640. Captain Trouton.] Did you lay your course to the wind? Yes.

641. And still kept the foresail on her? Yes.

642. Had you hands enough to get it off? Oh, yes, we could have taken it off.
643. Were the captain and mate both on deck? Yes.
644. Were they perfectly sober? I do not know—that is more than I can say.
645. Now, what happened on the Thursday after leaving port—did you keep all that sail on? Yes, until Friday. Yes, it was kept on the Friday, and Saturday, and Sunday. And when she would not lie to, the captain ran her before the wind.
646. Captain Cargill.] When did you keep her away? On Thursday; the sea was too heavy for her to keep her course.
647. Captain Trouton.] Where were you on Thursday? At the wheel.
648. How were you heading? About N.N.E.
649. How many points did you keep her away? I do not know; it is so long since, I cannot remember.
650. She went away? Yes; we did not reduce any sail.
651. When did you bear away? On Thursday night.
652. Then you must have run all Friday before the wind? Yes, and all Saturday, and, indeed, until we left the vessel on Sunday morning.
653. If you were running Thursday, Friday, Saturday, and Sunday away N.N.E., how could you possibly have landed where you did? I do not know. We did not have any sails in the ship; she was only steering.
654. Captain Cargill.] Were you running before the wind? Yes.
655. She had no way on? No.
656. How many knots was she going? Four or five knots.
657. Was the sea running over her? Yes.
658. Right over the stern? Yes.
659. Captain Trouton.] How much water was she making? You could see it in the fore-hatch.
660. Had you the fore-hatch off? Yes.
661. Surely you must be mistaken? No; the fore-hatch was off.
662. Was the hatch left open then? No; but we had to take it off to see if we could see the water, and when we took it off we could see that it was so high that it was no use to try and save the ship.
663. Had you made all preparations to leave the ship on Friday and Saturday? There was no use doing anything but to leave the ship. We got no orders, but we remained until the mate told us to get the boat right—that was on Sunday.
664. Did the mate help at the pumps? Yes.
665. I thought the mate was so feeble that he was no good at the pumps? He did his best.
666. How long was the crew pumping? Two days and three nights.
667. What was the captain doing when he got the blow on the head? Standing on the main deck doing nothing. When he was knocked down he was taken to the cabin, where he remained for half an hour, and then came on deck again.
668. Was that the last you saw of him? No; he came away with us—he was the last man to leave the ship.
669. When was the keg of rum thrown overboard? I cannot say—Thursday or Friday.
670. Where was the captain when Smith went into the cabin and threw the rum overboard? The captain had just been knocked down, and the mate was trying to bring him to, and while they were so engaged Smith took away the rum. I did not see him, but he told me that he did so.
671. Captain Cargill.] Do you remember when the boat was smashed in on the main hatch? It was on Thursday when we shipped a heavy sea.
672. Was anything said about putting the sails into the boat? No; nothing was said, but the sails were not fit for her.
673. Did you take any clothes with you in the boat? Yes; but some one in the boat put them out again.
674. Was anything said about provisions? Yes; the steward was at work getting the provisions.
675. Why did he not get more? I don't know.
676. Captain Trouton.] How much water did you take in the boat? Three or four gallons of water altogether.
677. It is not strange when you know that you would be three or four days out that you did not take more? I don't know I saw nothing to take any more water in.
678. From the evidence you have given us it appears that the vessel was running towards the Australian coast? No, she was running towards New Caledonia.

[The Board then adjourned.]

THURSDAY, 27 AUGUST, 1891.

[The Board sat at the Colonial Secretary's Office, and took evidence.]

Present:—

CAPTAIN A. M. FISHER, S.M., PRESIDENT.

CAPTAIN TROUTON,

CAPTAIN CARGILL.

Mr. George James Finlayson examined:—

679. President.] What are you? A master marine and marine-surveyor.
680. Did you inspect the barque "Ellen"? To a certain extent.
681. When was that? I did not make a regular survey.
682. How do you mean? I just looked at her without a fee for an Insurance Company.
683. What company? The British and Australian Company.
684. You are a qualified Marine-Surveyor? Oh! yes. I acted on this occasion in an honorary way, and I kept no notes, as I was not paid. I only gave a verbal report.
685. When did you inspect her? In May or June, 1890.
686. Where was she on the slip? She was then lying at the old P. and O. Company's Wharf in Sydney.
687. Did you make a regular survey of her? No; she was in ballast, and I just had a casual look at her down below.

Mr. G. J.
Finlayson.
27 Aug., 1891.

- Mr. G. J. Finlayson. 27 Aug., 1891.
688. What for? They wanted to insure the vessel.
689. What was your idea of the vessel, then? Well, I have been acquainted with that style of craft, and I summed her up very quickly. She wanted two or three sails, and on looking at the log-book I told the captain that I would report to the company in favour of an insurance of £400 on the hull, provided they put a donkey engine on board, and only carried 700 tons of coal. It was not necessary to do this going to Townsville with coals, but if she was to leave the coast she would have to get a donkey engine, to take no more than 650 tons of coal, and get two or three new sails.
690. Captain Trouton.] You were a director of the company? Yes; I went on behalf of my colleagues on the board to get an idea of the ship, because I had heard that the underwriters would have nothing to do with her.
691. Did you inspect the log? Yes; but I cannot tell now what it was. I know that class of vessel. I did not think her unseaworthy, but recommended the additions as a matter of safety.
692. Do you think these old vessels should be allowed to carry the same load as when they were new? No; certainly not. When these vessels get old they should alter the Plimsoll mark.
693. Do you think the cargo she carried on the last voyage was too much for her? I certainly do, without a pumping engine. At that time I distinctly reduced the cargo 50 tons.
694. Was that included in the policy? No; only the engine was mentioned.
695. What is the tonnage of your vessel? It is 946 tons register.
696. How many hands have you on board? I have fourteen hands, including eight able seamen, a captain, a mate, a second mate, the carpenter, the cook, and the steward.
697. Was she barque-rigged? No, she was ship-rigged at first, but I afterwards barque-rigged her.
698. Do you think it right for a barque of 499 tons to go to sea with eight or nine hands all told? No, you have to carry the same number of hands on the "Ellen" as on a barque of 1,000 tons.
699. Do you think she was undermanned with nine men? Well, I think she should have carried the same number of men as my vessel.
700. Were nine men all told a fit crew? No, I do not think so, and it was a very great mistake not to have put a donkey engine on board of her.

[The Board then adjourned.]

No. 1.

Messrs. Brown Bros. & Co. to The Postmaster-General.

Sir,

151, Castlereagh-street, Sydney, 1 August, 1890.

We beg to offer for your consideration the purchase of the lease of our premises.

In doing so we would desire to give some reasons which we think will make it clear that the premises are most suitable for the Department, and that the purchase of same will be a saving of many hundreds of pounds per year, as against the present system of stabling the post and telegraph horses.

The premises have a fine frontage of 102 feet to Castlereagh-street by a depth of 160 feet, and the area is the largest and most compact of any horse bazaar in Sydney. The accommodation of stalls, loose-boxes, large gallery, fodder lofts, and all the necessaries of a livery establishment, besides clear ground space, will be ample to keep conveniently all the horses of both the Postal and Telegraph Departments.

The lease has about fifteen years to run. The ground rent is £650 per annum. Our sublets—three shops fronting Castlereagh-street, and one long room overhead—bringing in at the present reduced rentals, £7 10s. per week. The set of offices now in use by our firm would let readily at £5 per week, making a total for sublets of £12 10s. per week, or a sum equal to the ground rent.

The improvements were erected by ourselves at a cost of about £6,000.

This street is improving very rapidly in traffic and a superior class of buildings is being erected on every side, and we anticipate that very shortly we shall be able to obtain for our frontage shops rents at least 50 per cent. higher.

We beg to offer the lease and buildings to the Department for £8,000.

These premises will, therefore, cost the Department merely interest on the purchase price. There is ample room for storing all sorts of materials. We understand that the Department pays some £500 per year to outside persons for storing materials belonging to the Telegraph Department. This again shows where £500 per year may be saved the Government should they decide upon purchasing the lease.

As the property is entailed there is every probability that the Government could retain possession, under rental, of the bazaar for many years, which would no doubt suit their purpose, and preferable to either purchasing or building premises, and far more economical than the present system of paying between £3,000 and £4,000 every year for the feeding of the horses.

Trusting this matter will have your favourable consideration.

We have, &c.,
BROWN BROS. & CO.

Refer to Mr. Lambton.—D.O.C., 2/8/90.

If funds were available, I think this proposal would be worth consideration, but in the first place it would take some time to make a calculation as to the financial effect of renting these premises as compared with the present plan of letting the stabling and foraging of horses out by tender. Besides which, I doubt if £8,000 could be obtained from Treasury Advance, and it would perhaps be thought inadvisable to close with such an offer as this until money were voted by Parliament.—S.H.L., 4/8/90.

I will bring this matter before the Cabinet if I like the premises, which I intend to visit with you during the week.—D.O.C., 4/8/90.

No. 2.

Précis for Cabinet.

Messrs. Brown Brothers & Co.'s offer to sell the lease of their stables to the Department.

THE tender of Messrs. Schroeder, Mandelson, & Co., was recently accepted for foraging and stabling about fifty-two post and telegraph horses for one, two, or three years (at the option of the Postmaster-General), at 18s. per week per horse, to date from the 22nd ultimo.

18s. × 52 = £46 16s. per week, or £2,433 12s per annum; the contract for this service with Mr. Garling at 22s 6d per week per horse, or about £3,042 per annum, having expired on the 21st ultimo.

Soon after the negotiations with Messrs. Schroeder, Mandelson, & Co. had been completed, an offer to sell to the Department the lease of their stables or bazaar in Castlereagh-street was made by Messrs. Brown Bros. & Co., the Department to arrange, of course, as regards foraging.

This is the question for consideration.

Summarised

Summarised, Messrs. Brown Bros. & Co.'s offer and their representations are as follows:—
 Messrs. Brown's lease has about fifteen years to run.
 The ground rent is £650 per annum.
 They offer the said lease and buildings to the Department for £8,000.
 Their present sublets are three shops, fronting Castlereagh-street, and one long overhead room, which, at present reduced rentals, bring in £7 10s. per week.
 Their present offices would readily let at £5 per week.
 Total sub-lets £12 10s. per week, or a sum equal to the ground rent.
 Improvements erected by them have cost £6,000.
 Castlereagh-street is improving in traffic, consequent on erection of improved buildings.
 Their frontage shops will shortly probably be let at 50 per cent. higher rental.
 The premises would only cost the Department interest on the purchase price.
 They understand that the Telegraph Department pays £500 a year for storing material. This would be saved, as their premises provide every accommodation for storing all sorts of materials.
 The property is entailed, and the Department could probably retain it on a rental for many years.
 Messrs. Brown state that their bazaar is the most complete establishment in Sydney, and would satisfactorily accommodate the whole of the post and telegraph horses.
 In conclusion, they express the opinion that the purchase of their lease would be far more economical than the present system of paying £3,000 or £4,000 every year for the forage of our horses.

No. 3.

Messrs. Holmes and Brown to The Secretary to the Post Office.

Sir, Sydney, 16 September, 1890.
 We have the honor to address you for the purpose of drawing your attention to an omission we believe we have inadvertently made in the details embodied in the written offer of our premises in Castlereagh-street to you. The lease in existence is for twelve years, being the balance of the original lease. An arrangement, however, was made some time ago for an extension of four years, for which we pay a bonus amounting to a considerable sum. As the advantage is a very important one, and will give you a lease of sixteen years instead of fifteen, as stated, the last four years will bear an additional rental of £200 per annum.

Sir, 151, Castlereagh-street, Sydney, 17 September, 1890.
 We have the honor to inquire if you can give us a reply to our offer of the lease of our premises in Castlereagh-street?
 We have strong reason to ask for a reply, and shall feel favoured if you will be good enough to communicate with us on this subject at your earliest convenience.
 We have, &c.,
 GEO. H. HOLMES,
 NUGENT W. BROWN.

No. 6.

Messrs. Brown Bros. & Co. to The Postmaster-General.

Dear Sir, 175, Castlereagh-street, Sydney, 24 September, 1890.
 As you are fully aware of our reason for offering the whole of our premises to your Department, we are particularly anxious to know what progress has been made since we last heard from you.
 If you have any suggestions to make we shall be glad to meet you, and if inconvenient to take immediate possession of the premises, this no doubt can be arranged.
 We need not press upon your notice again the adaptability of the bazaar to the requirements of the Department, and the cheapness of the purchase price as compared with any other property in Sydney.
 We have, &c.,

Gentlemen,

General Post Office, Sydney, 7 October, 1890.

I am directed by the Postmaster-General to state that the Government, having considered your offer to dispose of the premises in Castlereagh-street, occupied by you as stables, for a sum of £8,000, are unable to purchase the same, as the price is considered excessive.

Messrs. Brown Bros. & Co. to The Secretary to the Post Office.

Sir,

151, Castlereagh-street, Sydney, 13 October, 1890.

In reply to your letter of the 7th instant, stating that the Honorable the Postmaster-General was under the impression that the price we asked for our premises was excessive, we are willing to reduce the same to £7,250, in hopes the matter may be closed.

We have previously been offered £7,000, with a fourteen years' lease, but refused same.

We are in a position to give sixteen years or thereabout. The price now asked is small, considering the low rate of rent and the cost to us in erecting the buildings.

The purchase must prove of great advantage and a saving to your Department, not only in stabling your horses, &c., but also in the storage of telegraphic material, &c.

Messrs. Brown and Holmes to The Secretary to the Post Office.

Sir,

Sydney, 18 October, 1890.

Referring to our previous correspondence re our bazaar premises, in order to have the matter settled we have decided to meet your views and reduce our price down to £7,000. We have the honor to repeat that on two occasions we declined offers of the same amount from private persons, but under the impression that you had decided to purchase the said premises at the price named in previous offers, we made arrangements accordingly and declined business in connection with the premises that would have interfered with immediate disposal of the premises.

Trusting that the present offer will meet with your approval and tend to immediate settlement,

We have, &c.,

NUGENT W. BROWN,
G. H. HOLMES.

Submitted.—S.H.L., 20/10/90.

Will submit this offer to the Cabinet this afternoon. I am not aware of any circumstances that could induce the vendors to say they were under the impression that this Department was going to purchase at a former price which they named.—D.O'C., 20/10/90.

Messrs. Brown and Holmes.—A.F., 24/10/90.

The Crown Solicitor to The Secretary to the Post Office.

Sir, Crown Solicitor's Office, Sydney, 10 December, 1890.
 Adverting to your letter of date the 5th November, B. 90-16,346, in which you informed me that in order to provide stabling and storage required, the Postmaster-General has accepted an offer of Messrs. Nugent W. Brown and George H. Holmes to dispose of the sixteen years' lease of their premises in Castlereagh-street for the sum of £7,000, I have the honor to inform you that I have been in communication with Messrs. Fisher, Ralfe, and Salwey, who are acting as solicitors for the vendors in the matter, with reference to the latter's title to the leasehold in question.

I find on perusing the documents of title that the freehold of the premises originally belonged to James Holmes, who, by his will, made many years ago, devised his real estate to trustees upon certain trusts. The will contained no express clause empowering the trustees to lease, but the testator directed that this will should contain all "usual clauses, indemnifications, and appointments usually contained in wills of a like nature."

It appears that the question of the trustees' power to lease was raised some time back, and a case was submitted to Mr. Owen, Q.C., now the Chief Judge in Equity, who advised that, as the object of the trustees was to lease for twenty-one years on a building lease, so as to get a larger income, and to improve the property for the remainder-men, the trustees could, in his opinion, lease for twenty-one years.

I have perused the lease, dated 17th November, 1884. It is to Messrs. Herbert Harrington Brown, Nugent Wade Brown, George Henry Holmes, and Charles Bruce Lowe, for a term of eighteen years from the 13th October, 1884, at the rent of £650 per annum, payable quarterly on the 13th days of January, April, July, and October, in each year, the lessees paying all rates and takes imposed by the City Corporation, and covenanting to expend at their own cost at an outlay of £4,000, within twelve months from the date of the lease, in certain improvements and alterations, and to keep premises insured in the name of lessors in the sum of £2,500.

The lease, in addition to other usual covenants and conditions on the part of the lessees, contains covenants by them not to underlet without the license in writing of the lessors; or to make any alterations or additions, externally or internally; or without the consent in writing of the lessors, use the premises or any part thereof, or permit the same to be used for the purposes of any trade, business, or manufacture, other than the business of general auctioneers or salesmen. The lease also contains a proviso for abatement of rent in case of fire, disputes as to amount to be settled by arbitration.

It will be observed that the lease is only granted for the special purpose of the premises being used as an auction and sales room, and it therefore cannot be devoted to the object which your Department has in view. Moreover, the lease, instead of having sixteen years, has only twelve years to run, and is not vested solely in the vendors. It is stated that the vendors can obtain an extension of the lease, so as to enable them to assign the full term of sixteen years, but I entertain considerable doubt whether it would be lawful for the trustees of James Holmes' will to grant such an extension.

For the reasons stated, I cannot advise the acceptance of the title unless the lease and any extension were confirmed under the Settled Estates Act.

In view of the large consideration proposed to be paid, I think in any case that the trustees of James Holmes' will would be guilty of a breach of trust unless they insisted on the larger part of the purchase money going to the trust estate. From a perusal of the correspondence, copies of which you have supplied me with, it seems clear that Messrs. Brown & Co., were cognisant of the fact that your Department required the premises for purposes to which the premises could not be applied under the terms of the lease.

I shall await your further instructions in the matter.

I have, &c.,
 JOHN WILLIAMS,
 Crown Solicitor

No. 19.

The Secretary to the Post Office to Messrs. Brown and Holmes.

Gentlemen, General Post Office, Sydney, 15 December, 1890.
 Referring to previous correspondence respecting your offer to dispose to the Postmaster-General of the sixteen years' lease of your premises in Castlereagh-street, to be used for stabling and storage purposes, for the sum of £7,000, I am directed to inform you that the Crown Solicitor was communicated with as regards preparing the transfer of the lease mentioned, and he has addressed a communication to this Department on the subject, of which the following is the substance:—

On

On perusing the documents of title, the Crown Solicitor finds that the freehold of the premises originally belonged to James Holmes, who by his will, made many years ago, devised his real estate to trustees upon certain trusts. The will contained no express clause empowering the trustees to lease, but the testator directed that this will should contain all "usual clauses, indemnifications, and appointments usually contained in wills of a like nature."

It appears that the question of the trustees' power to lease was raised some time back, and a case was submitted to Mr. Owen, Q.C. (now the Chief Judge in Equity), who advised that, as the object of the trustees was to lease for twenty-one years on a building lease, so as to get a larger income, and to improve the property for the remainder-men and trustees could, in his opinion, lease for twenty-one years. The Crown Solicitor has perused the lease dated 17th November, 1884. It is to yourselves and others for a term of eighteen years from the 13th October, 1884, at the rent of £650 per annum, payable quarterly in each year, the lessees paying all rates and taxes imposed by the City Corporation, and covenanting to expend at their own cost at an outlay of £4,000 within twelve months from the date of the lease in certain improvements and alterations, and to keep premises insured in the name of lessors in the sum of £2,000.

The lease, in addition to other usual covenants and conditions on the part of the lessees, contains covenants by them not to underlet without the license in writing of the lessors; or to make any alterations or additions externally or internally; or, without the consent in writing of the lessors, use the premises or any part thereof, or permit the same to be used for the purpose of any trade, business, or manufacture other than the business of general auctioneers or salesmen. The lease also contains a proviso for abatement of rent in case of fire, disputes as to amount to be settled by arbitration.

It will be observed, the Crown Solicitor here points out, that the lease is only granted for the special purpose of the premises being used as an auction and sales room, and it therefore cannot be devoted to the object which this Department had in view; moreover, the lease, instead of having sixteen years, has only twelve years to run, and it is not vested solely in the vendors. It is stated that the vendors can obtain an extension of the lease, so as to enable them to assign the full term of sixteen years; but the Crown Solicitor entertains considerable doubt whether it would be lawful for the trustees of James Holmes' will to grant such an extension.

For the reasons stated the Crown Solicitor cannot advise the acceptance of the title, unless the lease and any extension were confirmed under the Settled Estates Act.

In view of the large consideration proposed to be paid, the Crown Solicitor thinks in any case that the trustees of James Holmes' will would be guilty of a breach of trust, unless they insisted on the larger part of the purchase money going to the trust estate.

Messrs. Brown and Holmes to The Secretary to the Post Office.

Sir,

151, Castlereagh-street, Sydney, 18 December, 1890.

We have to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 15th instant, and herewith enclose the answers to the objections raised by the Crown Solicitor, from our solicitors, Messrs. Fisher, Ralfe, and Salwey.

The objections, we contend, have been, or can be, satisfactorily disposed of, as will be seen by the replies enclosed, and which will practically get rid of all the objections raised.

The new lease proposed will not contain the clause against under-letting or using the premises for specific purposes; and we propose to submit a draft of same to the Crown Solicitor for his approval, and which, we contend, will be found entirely satisfactory.

As we understand the Crown Solicitor is awaiting further instructions from you, please communicate with him, and instruct him to proceed with the matter.

We have, &c.,
NUGENT W. BROWN,
GEORGE H. HOLMES
(Per A. K.)

P.S.—We arranged with the trustees some eighteen months ago to surrender the old lease, and they were to execute a fresh lease for the full term of sixteen years, and this fresh lease we propose to assign to the Crown.

I presume the only thing to be done is to send these documents on to the Crown Solicitor. It appears to me that it would be more convenient if the usual course were pursued—of leaving the matter in the hands of the solicitors on either side, as regards the settlement of any legal points. Should the Crown Solicitor's queries not be satisfactorily replied to by the other side, it would, I think, be then time enough to communicate with this Office.—S.H.L., 19/12/90.

Referring to your letter of the 10th instant, 90/a1358, on the subject of the lease of Messrs. Brown and Holmes' premises in Castlereagh-street, I am directed to inform you that the purport of your communication was forwarded to Messrs. Brown and Holmes, and they have replied, enclosing answers furnished by their solicitors, Messrs. Fisher, Ralfe, and Salwey, to the objections raised by you in the matter, and they seem to think that these answers will satisfactorily dispose of the objections referred to. The Postmaster-General desires me to forward these documents to you, and he thinks it would be convenient if the usual course were pursued, of leaving the matter in the hands of the solicitors on either side as regards the settlement of any legal points. Should your queries not be satisfactorily replied to by the other side, Mr. O'Connor thinks it would be then time to communicate with this Office.

Re lease of Brown Bros. & Co.'s Bazaar.

Sir,

Sydney, 5 February, 1891.

We desire to bring under your notice some difficulties that have arisen in regard to the above-mentioned lease, and will feel obliged by your kindly laying the matter before the Honorable the Postmaster-General.

As you are aware, the Government agreed to purchase our premises, upon having assigned to them the lease we hold, and a further four years promised by the trustees of the Holmes Estate, subject of course, as is usual in all cases of the kind, to a clear title being given. The matter has been for some time in the hands of the Crown Law Officers, and objection has been taken as to the power of the trustees to grant such an extension, or to grant a new lease for sixteen years on the present lease being surrendered.

It appears the facts are these:—On the 17th November, 1834, the trustees of the Holmes Estate granted to us a lease for eighteen years, at a rental of £650 per annum, with a covenant by us to expend £4,000 in building improvements, and at the time of taking this lease we took the opinion of Mr. Owen, now Primary Judge in Equity, and he gave it as his opinion that, as the object of the lease was for the improvement of the property, the trustees could grant a lease for twenty-one years, although you will observe we took it for eighteen years only. Since then we applied to the trustees for a four years' extension, or a new lease having a currency equal to the unexpired term of the present lease, and a four years in addition, which they agreed to grant if we paid them a bonus of £200, and paid them for such four years an additional rent of £200 per annum. This we agreed to do.

We are advised that the trustees have such power, as they are getting an increased rental of £200 per annum, which is £5 per cent. on the amount expended by us in building, and especially so, because the property under the will cannot be divided until the youngest child of the children of the testator is 21 years old, and as the youngest child of Mr. George Holmes is now only three years old, the Estate cannot be realised, or the property sold and divided for eighteen years.

We are anxious to have this matter settled with as little delay as possible, and we wish, in order to cover any possible risk which the Government may run by accepting the title, to make the following proposal:—That we should obtain a guarantee from the English, Scottish, and Australian Chartered Bank, by which the Bank will guarantee to the Crown peaceable and quiet possession during the last four years of the said lease. We think that this will remove any possible objection, and hope you will see your way to instruct the Crown Law Office to accept the title, provided it is guaranteed in the way proposed.

Crown Solicitor's Office, Sydney, 28 February, 1891.

In reply to your letter of the 23rd instant, returned herewith, I have the honor to state that on examination I found, and the vendors' solicitors admitted, that they had not a good title to the property proposed to be sold by Messrs. Brown and Holmes.

As the vendors, however, were very anxious to carry out the sale they proposed to cure the objections by getting an amended title—for this purpose I conferred with the vendors' solicitors and they submitted to me certain drafts of documents on which they proposed to build up a fresh title, but on examining them I feared the title was not one which the Crown should be a party to accepting, as the interests of infants were involved and might be prejudicially affected. I accordingly submitted the title to Mr. A. H. Simpson, the standing Conveyancing Counsel to the Crown, the result of whose opinion leads me to the following conclusions:—

1. That the title as it stands cannot be accepted.
2. That if the new title as proposed is built up, it will have to be at a higher rent, and therefore for a reduced consideration.
3. That in any case the present contract falls through, and there will have to be a new contract which cannot be entered into until the proposed new title is obtained.
4. That as the interests of infants are involved, and may be prejudiced, the Crown ought not to be a party to such a lease.

[Enclosure.]

Re MESSRS. BROWN BROS.—OPINION ON TITLE.

I HAVE perused the papers in this case.

The Government has, I understand, agreed to purchase from Messrs. Brown Bros. their leasehold interest in the premises in question, which is described as a term having fifteen or sixteen years to run, with a ground rent of £650. On investigation it turns out that the lease under which the Brown Bros.' hold was granted on the 17th November, 1884, and had only some twelve years to run.

This lease was granted by the trustees of the will of James Holmes. The will, which is in the form of instructions, contained no power of leasing, but directed that the will to be made pursuant to the instructions should contain "all usual clauses, indemnifications, and appointments usually contained in wills of like nature."

I agree with the opinion expressed by Mr. Owen, Q.C., that the Court would probably construe this as importing a power to grant a building lease for twenty-one years, but advising trustees that the Court would probably construe a clause in a certain way is a very different thing from advising an intending purchaser that he can safely expend his money in buying.

In the absence of a decision by the Court, I think the validity of the existing lease is open to doubt (though not perhaps great doubt) and I cannot advise a purchaser to run the risk.

It is intended, it appears, that the lessees shall surrender the existing lease, and that the lessors shall grant a new lease for sixteen years at the old rent of £650 for the first twelve years, and after that of £850 for the last four years. I think the validity of such new lease would be open to still graver doubts.

In the absence of express words in the power the rent should not be progressive, Hallet to Martin, 24 Ch. D. 624, 632, and it is open to much doubt whether the usual power of leasing would justify a lease at a progressive rent, or the taking into account in estimating the rent the value of a surrendered lease (see Davidson's Settlements, p. 491).

Under these circumstances, I can only suggest an application to the Court under the Settled Estates Act.

If the Court authorises the new lease the purchaser would be safe in taking it, but the question of purchase money would remain to be settled.

The contract was made on the footing of a uniform ground rent of £650; if, during the last four years, the ground rent is to be £850, there must, of course, be a reduction in the purchase money to compensate for the increased rent.

Re our Bazaar Premises.

Sir, Sydney, 11 March, 1891.
We feel that we are labouring under a great disadvantage by the expressions of opinion of the Crown Solicitor in this matter.

The trustees have the written opinion of Mr. Owen (now Equity Judge), and his opinion clearly shows that the trustees have full power to grant leases of this estate. The opinion is among the papers handed to the Crown Solicitor. Added to this, the E. S. and A. C. Bank is willing to guarantee the Government peaceable possession during the balance of the four years.

We would esteem it a favour if you will grant Mr. Ralfe (of Messrs. Fisher, Ralfe, and Salwey), our solicitor, the opportunity of explaining the position with regard to the lease.

Your acceptance of our offer (18th September, 1890) induced us to relinquish business, and as it became known that the Government had purchased, we were unable to invite business, consequently we have lost it beyond recovery. Under the circumstances we beg to express a hope that you will be good enough to complete the purchase without delay, and we believe an interview with Mr. Ralfe (who is also the bank's solicitor) would fully satisfy you that the Government will not incur any risk in taking over the premises on the lines agreed. Soliciting your favourable consideration.

Referring to previous correspondence, I am directed to inform you that the Postmaster-General is prepared to accept the premises described in your letter of 1st August last on the following terms:—

• Lease to be for sixteen years, as stated in your further letter of 13th October, but, as the Postmaster-General is advised that you have no power to grant a lease for more than twelve years, the additional four years to be guaranteed by the English, Scottish, and Australian Chartered Bank under a bond for £5,000. The sum of £7,000 to be paid to you for the leasehold interest and improvements in addition to a ground rent of £650 a year.

Be good enough to intimate if you agree to these terms.

I am desired to mention that a document, dated 16th September, 1890, addressed to me and marked "copy," was received yesterday from the Crown Solicitor with the papers, but the original never reached this Department,* although one dated the following day was received pressing for a reply to your offer of the lease of the premises in question.

Referring to the recent contract between Messrs. The lease we are prepared to sell has a currency of twelve years from the 13th day of October last, and the ground rent is £650 per annum, payable in equal quarterly instalments of £162 10s.

In addition, there is a promise for a renewal of the lease for four years at a rental of £850; but, as you are aware, the Crown Solicitor has advised against the validity of this promise, and the bank will merely assign its right (if any) to the said extension.
