PITT STREET (See "TELEPHONES").
POINTS OF ORDER:—
Reported from Committees, 403, 493, 512.
RULINGS OF SPEAKER:—
That motion for adjournment of House in reference to appointment of Select Committee or Royal Commission on the financial clauses of the Commonwealth Bill anticipated consideration of that Bill, and was out of order, 169.
That the Franchise Extension Bill did not necessarily involve expenditure, and therefore did not require a Message from the Governor, 181.
That discussion on Motion of Adjournment in reference to Administration of Land and Income Taxes must be confined to the subject of the Notice, 190.
That motion to take 3 ^o of the Crown Lands Bill as matter of urgency before other business was in order, 256.
That it be left to the House to decide whether the motion for the suspension of the Standing Orders to take 3 ^o of Crown Lands Bill as matter of urgency, was irregular, 257.
That Totalisator Bill did not originate any tax or impost or appropriate revenue, and therefore did not require to be recommended by Message from Governor, 290.
That Totalisator Bill did not contain provisions beyond the Order of Leave, 290.
That motion relating to Reappraisal of Conditional Purchases and Leases would anticipate debate on Order of the Day already on the Paper, 309.
That Liquor Traffic Local Option Bill was properly included amongst the Government Orders of the Day, having been introduced by a Minister, 317.
That amendment, on motion, in reference to construction of railways through private land to apply betterment principle was not relevant, 323.
That the Standing Orders only permitted the postponement of Orders of the Day, not being Government Orders (on Government days), from one sitting day to another, 341.
That motion for adjournment in reference to the state of the roads of the Colony anticipated discussion on the Estimates or in Committee of Ways and Means, and was out of order, 363.
That while upholding the ruling of the Chairman of the Committee of Supply against allowing a discussion on the constitution of the Works Committee or their fees or travelling expenses on the Vote "Parliamentary Standing Committee on Public Works" the items being fixed by statute the conduct of business of the Committee could be criticised in relation to another item, 403.
That motion for adjournment of House relating to making of Dams and Weirs by the Water Conservation Branch of the Public Works Department was out of order, the matter having been fully discussed in Supply, 471.
That Chairman was incorrect in ruling that the omission of the word "intestate" in the 12th line of the Probate Duties Bill was in order on the ground that it did not increase the area of taxation, because the effect would be an augmentation of the tax, 483.

SPEAKER (continued):—
RULINGS OF (continued):—
That motion to take 3° of the Crown Lands Bill as matter of urgency before other business was in order, 256.
That it be left to the House to decide whether the motion for suspension of the Standing Orders to take 3° of Crown Lands Bill as matter of urgency was irregular, 257.
That Totalisator Bill did not originate any tax or impost or appropriate revenue, and therefore did not require to be recommended by Message from Governor, 290.
That Totalisator Bill did not contain provisions beyond the Order of Leave, 290.
That motion relating to Reappraisal of Conditional Purchases and Leases would anticipate debate on Order of the Day already on the paper, 309.
That Liquor Traffic Local Option Bill was properly included amongst the Government Orders of the Day, having been introduced by a Minister, 317.
That motion to "read Orders of the Day" was obsolete in House of Commons and opposed to Standing Order 211, 274.
That amendment on motion in reference to construction of Railways through private land to apply betterment principle was not relevant, 328.
That the Standing Orders only permitted the postponement of Orders of the Day, not being Government Orders (on Government Days), from one sitting day to another, 341.
That motion for adjournment in reference to the state of the roads of the Colony anticipated discussion on the Estimates or in Committee of Ways and Means, and was out of order, 363.
That while upholding the ruling of the Chairman of Committee of Supply against allowing a discussion on the constitution of the Works Committee, or their fees, or travelling expenses on the Vote "Parliamentary Standing Committee on Public Works," the items being fixed by statute, the conduct of business of the Committee could be criticised in relation to another item, 403.
That motion for adjournment of House relating to making of Dams and Weirs by the Water Conservation Branch of the Public Works Department was out of order, the matter having been fully discussed in Supply, 471.
That Chairman was incorrect in ruling that the omission of the word "intestate" in the 12th line of the Probate Duties Bill was in order, on the ground that it did not increase the area of taxation, because the effect would be an augmentation of the tax, 483.
That the decision of the Chairman of Committees, that a Member was not entitled in discussing the principles of the City and North Sydney Railway Bill on a proposed amendment in the Short Title, was correct, 512.
That subject of motion of adjournment of House in reference to Sunday Trading had been discussed on a previous motion, 518.
That the Minister in moving the reference of the Rosehill to Dural Railway to the Public Works Committee had complied with the Act 519.
DISSENT FROM RULING:—

Present—All the Representatives, except Mr. Trenwith and the Representatives of Western Australia.

NOTICES AND ORDERS OF THE DAY.

THURSDAY, MARCH 25, 1897.

NOTICE OF MOTION—

1. The Honorable Sir G. TURNER to move—That the Honorable Sir Richard Chaffey Baker be appointed Chairman of Committees of the Whole, of this Convention.

ORDER OF THE DAY—

1. Adjourned debate on the question (resolutions moved by Mr. BARTON, March 23rd)—

That, in order to enlarge the powers of Self-Government of the people of Australasia, it is desirable to create a Federal Government which shall exercise authority throughout the Federated Colonies, subject to the following principal conditions:—

- I. That the powers, privileges, and territories of the several existing Colonies shall remain intact, except in respect of such surrenders as may be agreed upon to secure uniformity of law and administration in matters of common concern.
- II. That, after the establishment of the Federal Government, there shall be no alteration of the territorial possessions or boundaries of any Colony without the consent of the Colony or Colonies concerned.
- III. That the exclusive power to impose and collect duties of Customs and Excise, and to give bounties, shall be vested in the Federal Parliament.
- IV. That the exclusive control of the Military and Naval Defences of the Federated Colonies shall be vested in the Federal Parliament.
- V. That the trade and intercourse between the Federated Colonies, whether by land or sea, shall become and remain absolutely free.

Subject to the carrying out of these, and such other conditions as may be hereafter deemed necessary, this Convention approves of the framing of a Federal Constitution which shall establish—

- (a) A Parliament, to consist of two Houses, namely, a States Assembly or Senate, and a National Assembly or House of Representatives: the States Assembly to consist of representatives of each Colony, to hold office for such periods and be chosen in such manner as will best secure to that Chamber a perpetual existence, combined with definite responsibility to the people of the State which shall have chosen them; the National Assembly to be elected by districts formed on a population basis, and to possess the sole power of originating all Bills appropriating revenue or imposing taxation.
- (b) An Executive, consisting of a Governor-General, to be appointed by the Queen, and of such persons as from time to time may be appointed as his advisers.
- (c) A Supreme Federal Court, which shall also be the High Court of Appeal for each Colony in the Federation—(The Honorable J. H. CARRUTHERS).

NOTICES AND ORDERS OF THE DAY.

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 31, 1897.

NOTICE OF MOTION—

1. Mr. BARTON to move—That the Convention shall, at 5.30 p.m. this day, suspend its sitting until 7 p.m., at which hour the Convention shall be resumed and the transaction of business continued

ORDER

ORDER OF THE DAY—

1. Adjourned debate on the question (resolutions moved by Mr. BARTON, March 23rd)—

That, in order to enlarge the powers of Self-Government of the people of Australasia, it is desirable to create a Federal Government which shall exercise authority throughout the Federated Colonies, subject to the following principal conditions:—

- I. That the powers, privileges, and territories of the several existing Colonies shall remain intact, except in respect of such surrenders as may be agreed upon to secure uniformity of law and administration in matters of common concern.
- II. That, after the establishment of the Federal Government, there shall be no alteration of the territorial possessions or boundaries of any Colony without the consent of the Colony or Colonies concerned.
- III. That the exclusive power to impose and collect duties of Customs and Excise, and to give bounties, shall be vested in the Federal Parliament.
- IV. That the exclusive control of the Military and Naval Defences of the Federated Colonies shall be vested in the Federal Parliament.
- V. That the trade and intercourse between the Federated Colonies, whether by land or sea, shall become and remain absolutely free.

Subject to the carrying out of these, and such other conditions as may be hereafter deemed necessary, this Convention approves of the framing of a Federal Constitution which shall establish—

- (a) A Parliament, to consist of two Houses, namely, a States Assembly or Senate, and a National Assembly or House of Representatives: the States Assembly to consist of representatives of each Colony, to hold office for such periods and be chosen in such manner as will best secure to that Chamber a perpetual existence, combined with definite responsibility to the people of the State which shall have chosen them; the National Assembly to be elected by districts formed on a population basis, and to possess the sole power of originating all Bills appropriating revenue or imposing taxation.
- (b) An Executive, consisting of a Governor-General, to be appointed by the Queen, and of such persons as from time to time may be appointed as his advisers.
- (c) A Supreme Federal Court, which shall also be the High Court of Appeal for each Colony in the Federation—(The Honorable J. H. HOWE).

CONTINGENT NOTICES—

1. Contingent on the resolutions moved by Mr. Barton on the 23rd of March being affirmed by this Convention, Mr. BARTON to move forthwith—

- I. That the resolutions on the conditions under which and the powers with which it is desirable to create a Federal Government be referred to three Committees, with power to send for persons and papers: Committee No. 1 to be for the consideration of Constitutional Machinery and the Distribution of Functions and Powers; Committee No. 2 to be for the consideration of provisions relating to Finance, Taxation, Railways, and Trade Regulation; and Committee No. 3 to be for the consideration of provisions relating to the establishment of a Federal Judiciary.
- II. That such Committees do consist of four, three, and two members respectively from each of the Colonies represented; that each of the several delegations do choose the members of its body who are to serve on such Committees; and that the Prime Minister of each Colony represented be ex officio a member of each Committee.
- III. That Committee No. 2 be instructed to specially consider Sub-resolutions III and V of Resolution 1, with the view to their being carried into effect on lines just to the several Colonies.
- IV. That it be an instruction to Committees Nos. 2 and 3 to report their respective conclusions to Committee No. 1.

v.

- v. That, upon the result of the deliberations of the several Committees, Committee No. 1 do prepare and submit to this Convention a Bill for the establishment of a Federal Constitution, such Bill to be prepared with as much expedition as is consistent with careful consideration.
 - vi. That in each Committee a majority do constitute a quorum.
 - vii. That such Committees have leave to sit at any time.
2. Contingent on the resolutions, of which Mr. Barton has given contingent notice, being submitted to the Convention, the Honorable Sir J. FORREST to move— That all the words after “That” in the first line be omitted, and the following words inserted in lieu thereof, viz.:—“this Convention do now resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole to consider the Commonwealth Bill, 1891.”

Standing Orders be suspended to enable him to move a motion without notice, as follows:—That it be an instruction to any Committee of the Whole, to whom the proposed Draft Bill shall be referred, that all provisions relating to Money Bills and the relative powers of the two Houses be first considered:
And a point of order arising as to whether it was competent to move a motion to suspend the Standing Orders, in order to make a further motion anticipating a similar one already on the Notice Paper, and a debate thereon arising:
The PRESIDENT ruled that it was competent for Sir J. Forrest to move the motion, and, if the Standing Orders were suspended, as desired, with the sanction of the Convention, it would be competent to move the further motion indicated, notwithstanding there was a similar motion on the Notice Paper:
And the debate on the original question being resumed:

CONSTITUTIONAL COMMITTEE.

(Appointed March 31st, 1897.)

REPORT of the Committee appointed March 31st, 1897, for the consideration of Constitutional Machinery and the distribution of Functions and Powers, and to prepare and submit to this Convention a Bill for the Establishment of a Federal Constitution.

Your Committee (No. 1), appointed March 31st ultimo, for the consideration of Constitutional Machinery, and the Distribution of Functions and Powers, and to receive Reports from Committees Nos. 2 and 3, appointed respectively for the consideration of provisions relating to Finance, Taxation, Railways, and Trade Regulation; and for the consideration of provisions relating to the establishment of a Federal Judiciary, and upon the result of the deliberations of the several Committees to prepare and submit to this Convention a Bill for the establishment of a Federal Constitution, have to report as follows, that is to say :—

Your Committee have held several meetings for the consideration of the matters committed to them by the Order of Reference, and have received from Committees Nos. 2 and 3 the reports of the conclusions arrived at by these Committees respectively.

Your Committee have further to report that they appointed a Committee of three members, viz. :— Mr. E. Barton, Q.C., the Hon. Sir J. W. Downer, K.C.M.G., Q.C., M.P., and the Hon. R. E. O'Connor, Q.C., M.L.C., to draft a Bill in terms of the Order of the Convention of March 31st ultimo.

The Sub-Committee have, in the preparation of the Bill, used every expedition consistent with the careful consideration which a matter of such gravity demands.

Your Committee submit to this Convention the Draft Bill, as prepared by the Drafting Committee.

Your Committee further present to the Convention the Reports made to them by Committees Nos. 2 and 3.

EDMUND BARTON,
Chairman Constitutional Committee.

Legislative Council Chamber, Parliament House, Adelaide, South Australia, April 12th, 1897.

AUSTRALASIAN FEDERAL CONVENTION.

Held in the Parliament House, Adelaide, South Australia.

REPORT from the Committee appointed for the consideration of Provisions relating to Finance, Taxation, Railways, and Trade Regulation.

THE Committee appointed for the consideration of provisions relating to Finance, Taxation, Railways, and Trade Regulation, who were instructed to specially consider Sub-Resolutions III. and v. of Resolution I. on the Collection of Duties of Customs and Excise, and the giving of Bounties, also on the Trade and Intercourse between the Federated Colonies, whether by land or sea, with a view to their being carried into effect on lines just to the several colonies, and to report their conclusions to the Committee on Constitutional Machinery and the Distribution of Functions and Powers, have agreed to the following Resolutions, which they recommend should be provided for in the proposed Federal Constitution :—

FINANCE AND TRADE.

1. Resolved—That all duties, revenues, and moneys raised or received by the Executive Government of the Commonwealth, under the authority of this Constitution, shall form one consolidated revenue fund to be appropriated for the Public Service of the Commonwealth in the manner and subject to the charges provided by this Constitution. Consolidated Revenue Fund

2. Resolved—That the consolidated revenue fund shall be permanently charged with the costs, charges, and expenses incident to the collection, management, and receipt thereof, which costs, charges, and expenses shall form the first charge thereon. Expenses of collection.

3. Resolved—That no money shall be drawn from the Treasury of the Commonwealth except under appropriations made by law. Money to be appropriated by law.

The Commonwealth to have exclusive power to levy duties of Customs and excise and offer bounties after a certain time.

4. Resolved—That the Parliament of the Commonwealth shall have the sole power and authority, subject to the provisions of this Constitution, to impose Customs duties, and duties of excise upon goods for the time being the subject of Custom duties, and to grant bounties upon the production of the export of goods.

But this exclusive power shall not come into force until uniform duties of Customs have been imposed by the Parliament of the Commonwealth.

Upon the imposition of uniform duties of Customs by the Parliament of the Commonwealth all laws of the several States imposing duties of Customs or duties of excise upon goods the subject of Customs duties, and all such laws offering bounties upon the production of export goods, shall cease to have effect.

The control and collection of duties of Customs and excise and the payment of bounties shall nevertheless pass to the Executive Government of the Commonwealth upon the establishment of the Commonwealth.

Transfer of officers.

5. Resolved—That upon the establishment of the Commonwealth, all officers employed by the Government of any State in any department of the Public Service the control of which is by this Constitution assigned to the Commonwealth, shall become subject to the control of the Executive Government of the Commonwealth. But all existing rights of any such officers shall be preserved.

Transfer of land and buildings.

6. Resolved—That all lands, buildings, works, and materials necessarily appertaining to, or used in connection with, any department of the Public Service the control of which is by this Constitution assigned to the Commonwealth, shall, from and after the date of the establishment of the Commonwealth, be taken over by and belong to the Commonwealth, either absolutely, or, in the case of the departments controlling Customs and excise and bounties, for such time as may be necessary.

And the fair value thereof shall be paid by the Commonwealth to the State from which they are so taken over. Such value shall be ascertained by mutual agreement, or, if no agreement can be made, in the manner in which land taken by the Government of the State for public purposes is ascertained under the laws of the State.

Collection of existing duties of Customs and excise.

7. Resolved—That until uniform duties of Customs have been imposed by the Parliament of the Commonwealth, the powers of the Parliaments of the several States existing at the date of the establishment of the Commonwealth, respecting the imposition of duties of Customs and duties of excise upon goods the subject of Customs duties, and the offering of bounties upon the production or export goods, and the collection and payment thereof respectively, shall continue as theretofore.

And until such uniform duties have been imposed, the laws of the several States in force at the date of the establishment of the Commonwealth respecting duties of Customs, and duties of excise on goods the subject of Customs duties, and bounties, and the collection and payment thereof, shall remain in force, subject nevertheless to such alterations of the amount of duties or bounties as the Parliaments of the several States may make from time to time; and such duties and bounties shall continue to be collected and paid as theretofore, but by and to the officers of the Commonwealth.

On establishment of uniform duties of Customs and excise, trade within the Commonwealth to be free
Audit of accounts.

8. Resolved—That so soon as the Parliament of the Commonwealth has imposed uniform duties of Customs, trade and intercourse throughout the Commonwealth, whether by means of internal carriage or ocean navigation, shall be absolutely free.

9. Resolved—That until the Parliament of the Commonwealth otherwise provides, the laws in force in the several colonies at the date of the establishment of the Commonwealth with respect to the receipt of revenue and the expenditure of money on account of the Government of the colony, and the review and audit of such receipt and expenditure, shall apply to the receipt of revenue and the expenditure of money on account of the Commonwealth in the respective States in the same manner as if the Commonwealth, or the Government or an officer of the Commonwealth, were mentioned therein whenever a colony, or the Government or an officer of the colony, is mentioned or referred to.

Equality of Trade.

No preference to one State over another.

10. Resolved—That preference shall not be given by any law or regulation of commerce or revenue to the ports of one part of the Commonwealth over those of another part of the Commonwealth.

The Parliament may give effect to this prohibition.

11. Resolved—That the Parliament of the Commonwealth may make laws prohibiting or annulling any law or regulation made by any State, or by any authority constituted by any State, having the effect of derogating from freedom of trade or commerce between the different parts of the Commonwealth.

SURPLUS.

12. Resolved—That, until a uniform tariff has come into operation, the following shall be the mode adopted for ascertaining the amount of Surplus Revenue to be returned to each State:—

An account shall be kept for each State in the books of the Federal Treasury, to be designated "Surplus Revenue Account," which shall show:—

- (1) All revenues from Customs and Excise, as well as from all services and powers handed over to the Federal Parliament.
- (2) All expenditure arising out of the collection of Customs and Excise, as well as all expenditure for services and powers handed over.
- (3) From the balance thus accruing shall be deducted, on a per capita basis, the proportion to be paid by each State towards the expenditure arising out of the new machinery brought into existence for the administration of the Federal Government.
- (4) It is, however, further provided that, in estimating the surplus as above, the total expenditure for the new machinery of the Federal Government shall not exceed the sum of £———, and the expenditure for the services handed over by the States, of which the States shall be relieved, shall not exceed the sum of £———; but this limitation shall not apply after a period has elapsed equal to the maximum period prescribed for the life of a Parliament.
- (5) The surplus remaining after the above operation shall be returned, without any further deduction, in monthly instalments to the several States.

13. Resolved—That the uniform tariff shall come into operation within a period not exceeding two years after the establishment of the Commonwealth.

14. Resolved—That during the first five years after an uniform tariff has come into operation, the Federal Government shall continue to keep such statistics as may be necessary to secure the distribution of the surplus to each State on the same basis as that adopted during previous years; but so that the aggregate amount to be returned for any year shall not be less than the aggregate amount returned during the year previous to the uniform tariff having come into operation.

15. Resolved—That after the uniform tariff has been in operation for a period of five years, all future surpluses shall be distributed to the several States on a per capita basis.

DEBTS.

16. Resolved—That the Federal Parliament may assume the full control and responsibility of all existing and future debts of the States, and thereafter shall pay the interest thereon, appropriating for this purpose the surplus revenue, debiting or crediting each State with any balance accruing in the operation; that all net savings made in interest upon any conversion or renewal of any loan shall from time to time be utilised in reducing the debt of the colony interested.

RAILWAYS.

17. Resolved—That, subject to the consent of the State or States interested, the Federal Parliament shall have power to take over the control and responsibility of the railway system of any State or States, on such terms as shall be arrived at by mutual agreement.

18. Resolved—That, in order to deal effectively with all railway matters arising between the States, and to enforce the principles of equality of trade laid down in the Constitution, there shall be established by the Federal Parliament an Inter-State Commerce Commission.

19. Resolved—That the Inter-State Commission shall have power to regulate all trades on such rivers, with their tributaries, which flow through two or more States, whether designated by one or more names in their course towards their ultimate outflow.

FEDERAL CONVENTION.

Report of the Committee appointed to consider provisions relating to the establishment of a Federal Judiciary.

THE Committee appointed to consider provisions relating to the establishment of a Federal Judiciary has the honor to report, as directed, to the Committee on Constitutional Machinery and the Distribution of Functions and Powers, and to suggest that provisions to the following effect be inserted in the Federal Constitution, viz.:—

THE FEDERAL JUDICATURE.

1. The judicial power of the Commonwealth shall be vested in one Supreme Court, to be called the High Court of Australia, and in such other Courts as the Parliament may from time to time create or invest with Federal jurisdiction. The High Court shall consist of a Chief Justice, and so many other Justices, not less than four, as the Parliament may from time to time prescribe. Judicial power and Courts.

2. The Judges of the High Court and of the other Courts created by the Parliament—

I. Shall hold their offices during good behaviour:

II. Shall be appointed by the Governor-General, by and with the advice of the Federal Executive Council:

III. May be removed by the Governor-General with such advice, but only upon an Address from both Houses of the Parliament praying for such removal:

IV. Shall receive such remuneration as the Parliament may from time to time fix; but such remuneration shall not be diminished during their continuance in office.

3. The judicial power shall extend to all cases, controversies, and matters—

I. Arising under this Constitution, or involving its interpretation:

II. Arising under any laws made by the Parliament of the Commonwealth:

III. Arising under any treaty:

IV. Of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction:

v. Affecting the public ministers, consuls, or other representatives of other countries

VI. In which the Commonwealth, or a person suing or being sued on behalf of the Commonwealth, is a party:

VII. In which a writ of mandamus or prohibition is sought against an officer of the Commonwealth:

VIII. Between States:

IX. Relating to the same subject-matter claimed under the laws of different States.

4. The High Court shall have jurisdiction, with such exceptions and subject to such regulations as the Parliament may from time to time prescribe, to hear and determine appeals, both as to law and fact, from all judgments, decrees, orders, and sentences of any other Federal Court, or Court exercising Federal jurisdiction, or of the highest Court of final resort now established, or which may be established, in any State, whether such Court is a Court of Appeal or of original jurisdiction; and the judgment of the High Court in all such cases shall be final and conclusive: Provided that no fact tried by a Jury shall be otherwise re-examined in the High Court than according to the rules of the Common Law. Appellate jurisdiction of High Court.

Until the Parliament makes other provision, the conditions and restrictions on appeals to the Queen in Council from the highest Courts of final resort of the several States shall be applicable to appeals from such Courts to the High Court.

No appeal to the Queen in Council except in certain cases.

5. No appeal shall be allowed to the Queen in Council from any Court of any State or from the High Court or any other Federal Court, except that the Queen may, in any case in which the public interests of the Commonwealth, or of any State, or of any other part of Her Majesty's dominions are concerned, grant leave to appeal to Herself in Council from the High Court.

Jurisdiction of Courts.

6. The Parliament may from time to time —

- I. Define the jurisdiction to be exercised by the Federal Courts other than the High Court :
- II. Prescribe whether the jurisdiction of such Federal Courts shall be exclusive of or concurrent with that which may belong to or be vested in the Courts of the States :
- III. Invest the Courts of the States with Federal jurisdiction within such limits, or in respect of such matters as it thinks fit.

Original jurisdiction of High Court.

7. In all cases, controversies, and matters —

- I. Affecting public ministers, consuls, or other representatives of other countries :
- II. Under any treaty :
- III. Between States :
- IV. In which the Commonwealth or any person suing or being sued on behalf of the Commonwealth is a party :
- V. In which a writ of mandamus or prohibition is sought against an officer of the Commonwealth—the High Court shall have original as well as appellate jurisdiction.

Additional original jurisdiction may be conferred. Actions against the Commonwealth or a State.

The Parliament may confer original jurisdiction on the High Court in other cases, controversies, and matters within the judicial power.

8. Nothing in this Constitution shall be construed to authorise any suit in law or equity against the Commonwealth, or any person sued on behalf of the Commonwealth, or against a State, or any person sued on behalf of a State, by any individual person or corporation, except by the consent of the Commonwealth, or of the State, as the case may be.

Number of Judges

9. The jurisdiction of the High Court, or of any other Court exercising Federal jurisdiction, may be exercised by such number of Judges as the Parliament prescribes.

Trial by jury.

10. The trial of all indictable offences cognisable by any Court established under the authority of this Act shall be by jury, and every such trial shall be held in the State where the offence has been committed, and when not committed within any State the trial shall be held at such place or places as the Parliament of the Commonwealth prescribes.

FEDERAL CONVENTION, 1897.

Return to the Order of the Convention (March 24th, 1897), laid on the Table by the Clerk and ordered to be printed, April 2nd, 1897.

Office of the Railway Commissioners of New South Wales, Sydney, March 30th, 1897.

Sir,

In reply to your minute of the 26th March, forwarded to the Railway Commissioners with copy of resolutions passed by the Federal Convention on the 24th instant, I am directed to send under cover of this letter copies of papers in regard to the abolition of break of gauge and the existence of preferential or differential rates.

With regard to the second question on the list, "Amalgamation under a federal body or otherwise of all or any two of the said colonies," I am directed to say the only minute on the subject is a confidential one addressed by the Chief Commissioner to the Honorable the Premier on the 16th instant, and the Chief Commissioner is communicating with the Honorable the Premier by the mail that carries this letter, asking whether there would be any objection to it being made public; and if there is not, doubtless Mr. Reid will hand a copy to you.

I have, &c.,

H. McLACHLAN, Secretary
(per W.H.C.)

E. G. Blackmore, Esq., Clerk of Convention, Adelaide.

1894-5.—LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.—NEW SOUTH WALES.

Railways.

(Particulars respecting the differential rates existing between the colonies of Victoria, South Australia, and New South Wales.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be printed, May 10th, 1895.

The Deputy Chief Commissioner for Railways to The Minister for Railways.

Office of the Railway Commissioners of New South Wales,
Sydney, May 7th, 1895.

I BEG to enclose, for the information of the Honorable the Minister for Railways, a copy of the agreement entered into by the Railway Commissioners of New South Wales, Victoria, and South Australia, for the purpose of abolishing the differential rates which have for some time existed upon the railways of the respective colonies named, in regard to freights generally, and more particularly in connection with the wool traffic.

The operation of these rates has been fully explained in previous papers, and was more particularly referred to in a statement (copy of which is attached) laid before the Government by the Railway Commissioners of New South Wales in August, 1894, and therefore need not be again referred to in detail.

During the last wool season the New South Wales Railway Commissioners found it necessary, in defence of the legitimate traffic of the railways, to enter into active competition for the purpose of checking the serious abstraction of wool from New South Wales, resulting from undue competition by Victoria; and while being compelled to adopt this course, the Victorian Commissioners were repeatedly requested by the New South Wales Commissioners to come to a friendly settlement without, until recently, any success, and there is reason for believing that the Conference which was held in Melbourne and terminated on the 3rd instant, resulted mainly from the effective steps taken by New South Wales to retain the traffic just previously referred to. Whether this be so or not, it is highly satisfactory that the Conference took place, as, if the agreement which has been arrived at is finally confirmed, all complications in connection with the traffic in question will be removed, and each colony will receive reasonable payment for services rendered, and the producers and consumers will in like manner pay fair and reasonable railway rates.

So far as the agreement affects New South Wales, it may be stated briefly that none of the ordinary published rates will be interfered with, the only alterations being a slight revision in the rates from stations between Table Top and Bomen, which are really anomalies arising from undue Victorian competition, and which have frequently given rise to irritation in adjacent localities which did not participate in the benefits of those rates.

As regards Victoria and South Australia, their rates, so far as relates to the Border traffic, have been put up, the advantage to these colonies being the relief from unremunerative traffic.

As between Victoria and South Australia, a system of "pooling" the traffic has been agreed upon, which does not concern New South Wales.

A special arrangement, however, was made with Victoria and South Australia as regards the traffic carried by river from Hay or east of Hay, which includes wool from districts north of the Lachlan. While the rates under the agreement affecting this traffic are not unfavourable to its coming to Sydney, in the past a considerable quantity of wool has gone to Melbourne; and in consideration of New South Wales making no exceptional effort to secure it for Sydney, beyond quoting the present rates, Victoria and South Australia are to pay New South Wales 40 per cent. of the increased price per ton which is to be charged on the wool from these localities carried by the railways of those colonies.

While it is possible that the New South Wales railways may not carry more wool, or, perhaps, quite so much, a better income will be derived. This statement refers to the direct result of the agreement. There is, however, what may be designated a probable indirect result, and that is, the greater inducement by a general equalisation of rates as between Sydney and Melbourne, which will afford producers an opportunity of sending their wool to Sydney, which has a superior position as a wool-market and a port of shipment.

In

In addition to the actual question of rates, there are other points in the agreement favourable to New South Wales. The abolition of the percentage reduction on dumped wool—which was 15 per cent. and 10 per cent. respectively by Victoria and South Australia, and 5 per cent. by New South Wales—is considerably in favour of the latter colony. Further, the Victorian railway authorities have been in the habit of allowing a discount of 6d. per bale on 10,000 bales of wool and upwards secured by any one person or firm for Melbourne. This concession, which has been a considerable power in the diversion of traffic to Victoria, is to be abolished.

It is difficult, if not impossible, to state what the exact result of an agreement on such a very complicated question will be; but, taken as a whole, it is certainly one which New South Wales can enter upon with confidence, particularly as it is limited to a period of twelve months, subject to renewal by consent.

CHARLES OLIVER,
Deputy Chief Commissioner.

CONFERENCE WITH REFERENCE TO THE DIFFERENTIAL RAILWAY RATES EXISTING BETWEEN THE COLONIES OF VICTORIA, SOUTH AUSTRALIA, AND NEW SOUTH WALES.

Present:—

VICTORIA	Mr. J. SYDER, Chairman, Acting Railway Commissioners.
			Mr. T. H. WOODROFFE } Acting Railway Commissioners.
			Mr. R. LOCHHEAD }
SOUTH AUSTRALIA	Mr. J. H. SMITH, Chairman, Railway Commissioners.
NEW SOUTH WALES	Mr. C. OLIVER, Deputy Chief Commissioner.
			Mr. W. M. FEHON, Commissioner.

1. It was agreed that wool shall be carried at actual weight.

2. It was agreed that the rates for greasy wool shall be as under:—

	s.	d.
Echuca to Melbourne, Port Melbourne, or Williamstown	34	0 per ton.
Yarroweah	34	11 "
Wahgunyah	40	9 "
Cobram...	36	4 "
Yarrowonga	38	0 "
Wodonga	43	10 "
Other stations in proportion to mileage.
Albury, Hay, Jerilderie, Junee, Corowa, and all intermediate stations to Sydney	64	9 "
Morgan to Adelaide and Port Adelaide	25	0 "
Murray Bridge	25	0 "
Milang	25	0 "
Goolwa to Port Victor	5	0 "

and that the scoured-wool rates from the competing places named above shall be 29 per cent. in addition to the greasy-wool rates.

3. It was agreed by the Victorian and South Australian representatives that on all wool carried to the Victorian or South Australian railways by river from Hay, or east of Hay, an allowance of 40 per cent. of the difference between the present rate and the rate as agreed upon should be made to New South Wales.

4. It was agreed by the New South Wales representatives that the differential rates at present in force for wool to Albury should be abolished, and that the ordinary mileage rates should be charged, subject to the existing minimum charge of 4s. 9d. per ton for greasy and 6s. 2d. for scoured wool, exclusive of the junction charge.

5. Darling Wool and Merchandise.—It was agreed by the representatives of South Australia and Victoria that on the gross traffic carried by the railways of those colonies a division of the receipts, in the proportion of three-fifths to South Australia and two-fifths to Victoria, should be made; working expenses at the rate of 25 per cent. to be deducted in each case before division.

6. It was agreed by the representatives of South Australia that the differential rate at present in force between Adelaide and Port Adelaide and Morgan, Murray Bridge, Milang, and Goolwa, should be abolished, and the ordinary tariff rate be adopted. That truck-load rates may be adopted between Melbourne and Echuca of 65s. 9d. per ton, and Swan Hill, 93s. 5d.; between Adelaide and Morgan, 40s. 9d.; Murray Bridge, 24s. 5d.; Milang, 26s. 3d.; and Goolwa, 28s. 6d. The Port Adelaide rates to be in the same proportion.

7. It was agreed by the Victorian representatives that the differential rates at present in force between Serviceton and Dimboola should be abolished, and the ordinary rates charged.

8. It was agreed by the New South Wales representatives that the present differential rate for merchandise between Albury and Wagga Wagga, and Corowa and Wagga Wagga, and all intermediate stations, should be abolished.

9. It was agreed by the Victorian representatives, with respect to the Victorian Border stations, except Swan Hill and Echuca, that Victoria should adhere to the local classification rate to Victorian Border stations, but with liberty to adopt a truck rate for goods based on the existing Victorian 3rd-class rate from Melbourne to Albury, namely, 70s. 4d., including the junction charge, the rate of 70s. 4d. being the proportion which the New South Wales truck-rate is to the Riverina 3rd-class rate. This rate to be the minimum truck-rate for mixed goods to all Border stations, except Swan Hill and Echuca, and to apply locally; as regards Swan Hill and Echuca, the truck-rate to be three-fourths of the existing Victorian 3rd-class rate.

10. It was agreed by all the representatives that the truck-loads herein referred to should consist of not less than 6 tons of goods per four-wheeled truck consigned to one person ; bogie trucks to be charged not less than as for two four-wheeled trucks.

11. The representatives of the three colonies agree that no change whatever shall be made in the existing classifications, or in the agreed rates, so far as they affect the competitive districts, without the concurrence of the colonies concerned. It was also agreed that any alteration in the classification or rates made in either colony should be notified to the other colonies within one month.

12. It was agreed by the representatives of the three colonies that certified copies of the traffic affected by this agreement should be supplied by each colony to each of the other colonies quarterly.

13. The representatives of the three colonies agree that the allowance for dumping be abolished, and that no rebates, passes, or privileges of any kind whatever should be made or granted for the purpose of inducing traffic to be forwarded by any particular railway.

14. It was suggested that these resolutions should take effect from the 1st June next, and should remain in operation for a fixed period of twelve months from that date. At the expiration of nine months another meeting to be held for the purpose of determining as to the continuation or revision of the agreement.

15. It was resolved by all the representatives that a decision should be obtained as to the adoption or rejection of the foregoing agreement, and the result communicated to the Commissioners of each colony on or before the 10th instant.

Melbourne, May 3rd, 1895.

New South Wales Government Railways,
Sydney, August 1st, 1894.

RE SPECIALLY LOW RATES ON THE VICTORIAN RAILWAYS TO SECURE TRAFFIC FROM
NEW SOUTH WALES.

The question of the efforts necessary to counteract the unreasonable preference given over the Victorian railways on goods to and from New South Wales has long been before the New South Wales Railway authorities.

The geographical position has naturally given Victoria a great advantage in regard to traffic for districts in New South Wales contiguous to the Victorian Border ; and exception is not taken to the fact that much of the traffic to and from such districts finds its way over the Victorian railways, but what is reasonably taken exception to is that an extraordinary preferential set of rates exists for the express purpose of attracting trade from places distant from the Border and even from the centre of New South Wales—places within convenient distance from the New South Wales railways.

The following may be quoted as an instance :—A pastoralist writing to the Railway Commissioners under date of 25th June, urging as a reason why a reduced rate should be quoted for the conveyance of his wool to Sydney, states that now the carriage on wool to Melbourne overland is cheaper than sending to Sydney, and as the shearing supplies and general goods generally follow the wool route, all would be lost to New South Wales without a reduction. It may be pointed out that the wool from this station, which is about 80 miles from a railway station on our Western line, had previously come to Sydney. The property referred to lies in the centre of New South Wales, 240 miles from the Victorian Border as the crow flies.

Other instances can be quoted, viz. :—The wool of one station only a short distance from Bourke is being sent to Melbourne this season by river and rail, a distance of about 1,500 miles, or nearly three times the distance from Bourke to Sydney, by reason of the preferential rate given by Victoria.

The maps which the Commissioners have had prepared are attached (Exhibit C), and show at once the extent and scope of the preferential rates allowed by Victoria, and the pastoral districts from which wool grown in New South Wales and return stores are diverted to the adjoining colonies.

The New South Wales Border is tapped at no less than seven places by the Victorian railways, viz., at Swan Hill, Koondrook, Echuca, Yarrawonga, Wahgunyah, Cobram, and Albury, all on the Murray, and to which the railways have been, no doubt, largely extended to attract New South Wales traffic.

The preferential rates appear to have been initiated about the year 1870.

Up to that time South Australia had done practically the whole of the Darling River business ; but in the year named the Victorian Commissioner for Customs made a report to the Victorian Government on the prospects of diverting the Darling and Murrumbidgee traffic to Melbourne. The then Victorian Minister for Railways favourably entertained the proposals ; differential rates were established, and a commission of 6d. per bale was offered to any carrier who was able to bring 10,000 bales of wool from the Darling during one season. This commission was gained by a Victorian firm the very same year ; and from that time out the competition between South Australia and Victoria may be said to have become keener for the trade of the Murrumbidgee, Darling, and Lower Murray districts. But within more recent years the South Australian competition for the Murrumbidgee trade was practically abandoned.

The reductions then in operation were not of the unreasonable character that exist to-day. These have become accentuated from time to time, as the better facilities in the way of railways given by the New South Wales Government naturally caused the people to use the markets of their own colony, and to make use of the facilities provided at great cost and to the great improvement of their properties.

With regard to the latter point, it is useful to turn to the initial circumstances connected with the Hay and Jerilderie railways, which run through districts to which the Victorian railways offer large special rebates, and are thereby affected by the Victorian preferential rates.

The

The Hay line especially was strongly and persistently agitated for by the people of the district, so as to enable them to trade with Sydney. In October, 1876, a petition, influentially signed by the principal residents of Hay and district, was sent through the then Member for the district to the Government. It was represented that if the line were made it would be one of the best-paying in New South Wales, and that the 49,000 bales of wool which were sent from Hay and Narrandera and districts to another colony during the season, they were confident, would be sent to Sydney were a railway extended to Hay. It was also represented that the merchandise imported into the district lying between the junction of the Lachlan River with the Murrumbidgee and Narrandera during 1876 was 10,000 tons; and this, it was represented, would not only be a source of revenue, but an extension of business to the merchants of New South Wales. It was confidently asserted that the line of railway would be able to compete on advantageous terms with the river traffic, as, taking into consideration the delays inseparable from the transshipment of merchandise, and the cost of insurance and forwarding charges, together with the fact that for a portion of the year the river traffic was entirely suspended, at which time the goods have to be brought at a much enhanced cost by teams from Deniliquin, the comparison of the cost would be found to be considerably less by rail from Sydney than from Melbourne.

The statement appended to the petition showed that the average cost of goods by river to Hay (from Melbourne, via Echuca) was £5, and by road, via Deniliquin, £8 per ton, while wool on the back journey cost from £6 to £8 per ton. The petitioners considered that the goods and stock traffic would give an additional revenue between Narrandera and Hay of £150,000, exclusive of passenger traffic, without regard to future developments.

In February, 1879, an influential deputation waited on the then Minister for Works to urge the making of a railway to Hay. It was represented that the line would be of great advantage to New South Wales, inasmuch as it would secure a large traffic then done with Victoria, and that owing to the fiscal policy of Victoria the people were almost unanimously in favour of trading with Sydney.

In November, 1879, further petitions were sent in urging the extension. One largely signed in Hay and district represented that a large portion of the trade of Riverina was lost to New South Wales by the absence of speedy and direct communication, and that the trade would be recovered as the Southern railway was extended westward. It was said that as soon as Hay was connected by rail with Sydney, practically the whole of the wool sent to Melbourne or Adelaide would be forwarded to Sydney, and the line should return a profit of 8 per cent. on the cost of its construction. So pressing was the requirement considered that the petitioners urged that tenders should be immediately called for a line from Narrandera to Hay, and a condition imposed that the line should be completed within twelve months from the date of the petition.

In December, 1879, a deputation waited on the then Minister for Works and presented a petition largely signed in favour of the railway to Hay and Jerilderie, mentioning that "the making of a bridge over the river at Narrandera will enable the Government to run a branch line to Jerilderie and along the banks of the Yanko Creek, on which a very dense population of farmers and small pastoral tenants is now settled, and so afford them railway communication with Sydney, attracting them from Melbourne, and opening up a most important district to the trade and merchandise of Sydney merchants."

These repeated requests and sanguine expectations no doubt largely influenced the Parliament in sanctioning the construction of the line, as it was considered it would return a fair interest on the capital cost; but the unreasonable preference given by the Victorian railways has operated to such an extent as to render this line a most unprofitable one to the State. The magnitude of the loss will be best understood when it is stated that the 232 miles of railway from Junee to Hay, and Narrandera to Jerilderie, have, since the opening of the first section in 1881, notwithstanding the special inducements held out to agriculturists, which have developed a large agricultural traffic, simply paid little more than the operating expenses, leaving the country to bear the interest of the cost of the money borrowed to build the line, this loss to date being about £610,000.

The rates charged by the Victorian railways prior to 1879 for goods and produce to and from New South Wales, while preferential in their incidence, were not of the unreasonable character that now exist; but the opening of the New South Wales line to Wagga Wagga caused the Victorian authorities to offer such attractions as would enable them to divert the New South Wales trade from its own lines, which had, at great expense, been constructed to the districts concerned.

In 1879 the rates over the lines, taking Echuca as an instance, were preferential to the extent shown below:—

	Classes.					Wool per bale.
	Miscellaneous.	1st.	2nd.	3rd.	4th.	Undumped.	Dumped.
	s. d.	s. d.	s. d.	s. d.	s. d.	s. d.	s. d.
Ordinary rates	40 0	52 0	65 0	78 0	91 0	7 0	5 10

Preferential rate to New South Wales district, Murray district between Wakool Junction and Wentworth...	30 0*	48 0	48 0	48 0	48 0

* Wire and rock salt only.

In 1882, however, finding that the extension of the New South Wales railways into the southern and south-western districts was accomplishing what it was intended should naturally be accomplished, viz., the securing of the trade to the New South Wales railways, the Victorian authorities again modified their rates by offering still greater concessions to goods for the inland New South Wales districts, discriminating between between districts which were lying within the influence of the New South Wales railways and those more distant from the lines, offering to the former the greater bonus to withdraw the traffic from its legitimate market. The scope of the reduction was, by the published rates of the 31st January, 1884, as follows:— To Echuca the preferential rates for all New South Wales districts north of Gerogery and embracing the Murrumbidgee and Darling Rivers was 25s. per ton for rock-salt, 30s. per ton for other miscellaneous class traffic, and a uniform rate of 30s. per ton for each class of 1st to 4th, and wool 4s. 6d. per bale of 4 cwt. undumped, and 4s. per bale dumped. The same amount of preferential rates was also made applicable to Wodonga and Wahgunyah, the ordinary rates to which, respectively, were:—

To.	Classes.					Wool per 4-cwt. Bale.
	Miscellaneous.	1st.	2nd.	3rd.	4th.	Undumped.	Dumped.
	s. d.	s. d.	s. d.	s. d.	s. d.	s. d.	s. d.
Wahgunyah	44 6	58 0	72 6	87 0	101 6	7 3	6 1

The rates then in force continued without material alteration for some years. Soon after the present Commissioners took office they, deeming that the rates could be advantageously revised by both sides, opened negotiations with the Victorian Commissioners (Mr. Speight being then Chairman), the outcome of which, while removing anomalies, was mutually advantageous. However, within the last month the rates have been reduced to an extent that had never operated before.

Goods for consumers in the Darling River district are now being conveyed for 22s. 6d. per ton between Melbourne and Echuca, but if the same goods were consumed at Echuca they would cost 87s. 7d. per ton. Sugar, between the same stations for the Darling River district, is conveyed for 11s. 9. per ton, while if consumed at Echuca or anywhere inside the Victorian Border it would cost 53s. 5d. per ton.

Wool from certain districts in New South Wales is carried for 2s. 9d. per bale, and in addition to this a drawback of 5 per cent. is given upon every 10,000 bales secured by any consignor, which, as is well known, could only be secured by carriers canvassing in the district for business, while the same wool if grown in Victoria would cost 6s. 1d. per bale.

It is also to be especially borne in mind that the New South Wales rates apply equally to all traffic without reference to destination, whereas in Victoria no less than six scales of rates prevail to and from the same railway stations for exactly similar traffic, which is carried, so far as the railway service is concerned, under exactly similar conditions.

The importance of this question as affecting New South Wales will be realised when it is stated that during the years 1890, 1891, and 1892, 126,601 tons, or nearly one-third of the whole of the wool grown in New South Wales, was shipped from Victorian and South Australian ports.

Its having come to the knowledge of the Commissioners that the efforts of the Victorian railway authorities and forwarding agents were becoming more and more aggressive, they felt it necessary to bring the matter strongly under the notice of the Victorian Commissioners, and, accordingly, on the 12th June, addressed a letter to them as follows:—

I am directed by the Railway Commissioners to draw the very serious attention of your Commissioners to the improper and unreasonable competition that is in operation for securing to the Victorian railways traffic within the Borders of New South Wales which should properly be carried over the railways of this Colony—railways which have been constructed at great cost for the convenience of the people settled in the districts served thereby. In dealing with the question of the wool traffic of the coming season, the exceptionally low quotations given by Victorian agents to the New South Wales pastoralists for the conveyance of their wool to the Victorian railways, and thence to Melbourne, have brought the whole matter again under review (the quotations for this year being lower than they have ever been), and the Commissioners feel they can no longer remain quiescent in the matter. The rates they have before them (copy of table attached Exhibit A) show that for certain sections of the wool belonging to New South Wales rates as low as 2s. 9d. per bale are quoted from the Border railway stations to Melbourne whereas the ordinary scale of rates applicable to wool grown in Victoria charged from the Border stations ranges from 6s. 1d. to 8s. 9d. per bale. The geographical position of the Victorian railways gives a commanding influence to your colony, and the view held by my Commissioners is that this alone should satisfy your Commissioners in the matter without making reductions in the ordinary tariff, in some instances of as much as 40 to 60 per cent. The competitive rates adopted by Victoria are so unreasonable that wool from squattages 250 miles from the Victorian Border, and within less than 100 miles of the New South Wales Western Line, is influenced thereby; and my Commissioners are threatened with loss of traffic unless reduced rates are quoted by them. I am directed to ask whether your Commissioners are prepared to at once abandon these exceptionally low rates and adhere to the ordinary scale of rates applicable to your own traffic, as, unless this or a somewhat similar course is agreed to, my Commissioners will feel compelled to quote any rate that may be necessary in order to secure the legitimate traffic of this Colony to our own railways; but they think that such a sacrifice of railway revenue (when the difficulties surrounding the railway questions in the colonies require so much caution and care) should not be incurred when a reasonable and fair arrangement could so easily be come to. I am to direct attention, also, to a similar class of unfair competition in regard to the merchandise traffic, which will also require to be dealt with on a more reasonable basis; but as the wool question is so urgent, I do not more than refer to the other point, so as to facilitate a speedy reply being given regarding the wool. As it is of the utmost importance that this question should be decided without loss of time, the Commissioners have directed Mr. Harper, the Goods Superintendent of the New South Wales railways, to visit Melbourne to-morrow, in order that he may, if necessary, give any further information your Commissioners may wish in regard to the details of the rates in question, so as to expedite a settlement, and enable him to bring back the decision of your Board.

The reply received on the 15th June was unsatisfactory, and is as follows:—

* * * With reference to the question of rates, the Acting Commissioners, while sharing the views of your Commissioners as to the necessity for a mutual agreement between the railways of the three colonies, regret that as the rates for this season have already been published by this Department, and persons interested informed that such rates would be strictly adhered to, they cannot see their way to agree to any alteration at present; and, further, as the matter is one of policy, and any change would require the passing of a fresh by-law, the Acting Commissioners are, of course, unable to commit the Government, with whom the final decision rests, to any particular line of action. The Acting Commissioners desire to convey to your Commissioners their assurance that the published tariff of the Victorian railways will be strictly adhered to in the meantime, and would be glad to know that your Commissioners had arrived at a similar decision with respect to the New South Wales rates. I am to add that the Acting Commissioners will be prepared to make recommendations, in time for next season, to the Government of this Colony, after giving the suggestions of Mr. Harper, together with any other that may be submitted in the interim, the fullest consideration.

As

As the Victorian Commissioners declined to come to an understanding regarding the wool rates, the New South Wales Commissioners had no alternative but to take steps to secure the carriage of the New South Wales traffic for the railways of the Colony; but being still anxious to come to a friendly arrangement in regard to the question of the carriage of merchandise, they again addressed the Victorian authorities on June 19th as under, and to date (August 1st) no definite reply has been received.

I am directed by the Railway Commissioners to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of 15th June, in regard to the wool traffic of New South Wales, and to express their extreme disappointment at the question not being dealt with in a practical manner. It is not reasonable to suppose that my Commissioners can continue to allow traffic from the centre of New South Wales to be conveyed to Melbourne in consequence of your rates being reduced by 60 per cent. from the rates paid by your own people. My Commissioners feel that they have done their best to bring the matter to a friendly settlement, which could have been effected in several ways to the advantage of both colonies; but as their efforts in this direction have not met with that reciprocity that should have been the case, they have no alternative but to carry out the decision intimated in my communication of the 12th inst., but this they do with great regret. I am now directed to invite your attention to the merchandise charges for New South Wales traffic conveyed over the Victorian Railways, incidentally referred to in my last communication, as my Commissioners are anxious to know whether your Commissioners will be prepared to abandon the exceptionally low rates adopted for New South Wales traffic as compared with the rates in operation for Victorian traffic conveyed over the same ground. The Commissioners observe from telegrams and paragraphs in the press that at the present moment the merchandise rates are under the consideration of your Commissioners, and trust, therefore, that they will be able to see their way to remove from the rate-book the differential rates now charged for New South Wales goods at the expense of Victoria and to the grave detriment of this Colony. I need only mention in this letter a few instances to show the improper and antagonistic position taken up in regard to this Colony, as I append hereto a printed sheet* (Exhibit D) showing a number of illustrations of the differential rates in question:—

	N.S.W. Traffic.		Victorian Traffic.

These illustrations show how, by unreasonable and improper rates, the Victorian railways are endeavoring to secure traffic belonging to New South Wales; and, as pointed out in my previous letter, my Commissioners feel that the geographical position of Melbourne (which is practically only half the distance from the Border that Sydney is) should give Victoria an advantage with which your Commissioners should be thoroughly satisfied, and that the ordinary rates applicable to the Victorian railways for her own people should be made applicable to any traffic that wishes to find its way to and from Melbourne and New South Wales. I am directed to express the earnest hopes of my Commissioners that your Commissioners will be prepared to treat this merchandise rates question in a fair and reasonable manner, and so avoid the necessity for my Commissioners to make concessions in their rates which can be of no possible advantage to Victoria, and will entail an unnecessary and an uncalled for loss upon the railway revenue of this Colony.

Sydney, August 14th, 1894.

The following reply from the Railway Commissioners of Victoria (through their Secretary), dated August 13th, was received on the above date:—

Adverting to your letters of the 19th June last and 25th ultimo, with respect to the rates on wool to and from Riverina, I am directed by the Acting Commissioners to say, while expressing their regret at the delay which has occurred, that, as before stated, the circumstances have not been such as to admit of their dealing further with the matter than was done in their letter of the 15th June last, which they are sorry to see was regarded as an evidence that the question had not been treated in a practical manner, and as also manifesting a lack of reciprocal feeling.

In view of the fact that any alteration this season would have caused disturbance to business arrangements already entered into, the Acting Commissioners regarded their reply as the only one they could give and also as sufficient. The same applies also to the request that the goods rates should be altered.

The Acting Commissioners regret that they cannot but look upon the request made as tantamount to a demand for a complete surrender, without equivalent, of the principles on which this Department has worked to retain possession of the trade in question, and for which it was the first to afford facilities.

While they admit that the geographical situation is a factor in the question, they would point out that other competition than that of your Colony has to be met.

Finally, they would say, with regret, that they are not in a position to make any alteration at present; but, as previously intimated they will be glad at the end of the present season to confer with your Commissioners as to the rates to be charged in the future.

*Since the letters of 12th and 19th June were written, a new rate-sheet has been published by Victoria, and the tables have been amended to bring them up to date. (See Exhibits B and E.)

Copies of Letters and Papers by the Chief Commissioner for Railways of New South Wales on the Break of Gauge Question.

[Copy of paper handed to the late Hon. Sir Henry Parkes, G.C.M.G., dated November 27th, 1886.]

BREAK OF GAUGE IN AUSTRALIAN COLONIES.

THE gauge of the New South Wales railways is practically the universal gauge of the world, viz., 4 ft. 8½ in.

Victoria, 5 ft. 3 in.
 South Australia, 5 ft. 3 in. and 3 ft. 6 in.
 Queensland, 3 ft. 6 in.

The mileage of each is:—

New South Wales, 2,113.
 Victoria, 2,017¾.
 South Australia, 1,420 (491 miles 67 chains, 5 ft. 3 in.; 928 miles 10 chains, 3 ft. 6 in.)
 Queensland, 1,765.

The question of the break of gauge is not as yet felt to be an inconvenience of any great magnitude, but before many years have passed it will be a source of great inconvenience, delay, and expense in transshipping goods particularly.

When the intercolonial trade of Australia has grown to any magnitude, if the break of gauge is allowed to continue, uniformity of gauge will be insisted upon, but if the mileage has grown to any great extent the cost of altering will be very great, and as this is undoubtedly destined to become a great nation the change of gauge must be made at some time; this being so, the present is undoubtedly the right time to grasp the question and determine what shall be the universal gauge of the future.

In England one of the great trunk lines (the Great Western) adopted for a great part of their system what was known as the broad gauge; the changing of passengers and transshipping of goods became such a great annoyance and expense that a mixed gauge to enable both the broad and the 4 ft. 8½ in. vehicles to run was adopted to a great extent, but, ultimately, nearly all the broad gauge was taken up, and now it only exists in connection with the West of England traffic, and even there it is doomed.

I would therefore recommend that the question should be at once taken up by the Government as a great national question of far-reaching importance for the future of the country; and, as neither colony will be disposed to alter its gauge because of the consequent expense, I would recommend that after it has been agreed which gauge—the 5 ft. 3 in. or 4 ft. 8½ in.—shall become the gauge of the future, that the cost of making the change shall be borne by a special fund created for the purpose, and that the colonies shall contribute the annual interest in agreed proportions, and also set aside an annual sum to act as a sinking fund for the extinguishing of the debt in, say, fifty years.

I need not now lengthen this paper with my views as to how an amicable settlement on the question of what is to be the future gauge may be arrived at, nor in what proportions the burden of the fund should be borne. These questions, which doubtless will be the subject of lengthy negotiations, are capable of being settled satisfactorily if the respective Governments decide to take the question up with a determination of bringing it to successful conclusion.

November 27th, 1888.

E. M. G. EDDY.

[Copy of paper handed to the late Hon. Sir Henry Parkes, G.C.M.G., March, 1889.]

THE IMPORTANCE OF AN UNIFORM GAUGE FOR AUSTRALIA.

IN the early days of railways, the most eminent engineers were divided in opinion as to the best gauge or width between rail and rail of a single line. Some contended for a broad and some for a narrow gauge as most desirable, and the long discussion which took place on this subject is known as the "battle of the gauges." At the head of the broad gauge party was Isambard Brunel, who contended for a width of 7 ft. between the inner sides of the rails; and he constructed the Great Western on that principle. In the front rank of his opponents was Robert Stephenson, who maintained the opinion of his father—the late George Stephenson, the founder of our railway system—that 4 ft. 8½ in. was the most suitable width. The Stephensons carried out their opinions in the series of railways now known as the London and North Western, of which system Stephenson was the engineer.

The inconvenience, however, of different gauges throughout the country threatened to become so serious as railways extended that Parliament enacted, in 1846, that the narrow gauge of 4 ft. 8½ in. should thenceforth be adopted by the future lines in England, Scotland, and Wales, except in the district already served by the broad gauge. By this means facility of communication between the different parts of the country was secured, as the same carriages and waggons could pass from one line to the other. The Great Western, notwithstanding the superior speed then obtained on the broad gauge, found it necessary, to avoid losing traffic, to lay down a third rail, thus enabling narrow-gauge trains to run on its line. This arrangement was, however, but an imperfect palliative to the evil of break of gauge; and after some years' trial the third-rail system was practically abandoned, and at the present time the line is nearly wholly worked on the narrow gauge. The rails for the broad gauge have been gradually taken up, leaving only about 10 per cent. of the mileage as exclusively broad gauge. About another 10 per cent. is mixed gauge, the three rails accommodating both broad and narrow gauge. The remaining 80 per cent. of the length of the system is worked as exclusively narrow gauge. With insignificant exceptions the railways of Great Britain, France, Belgium, Holland, Germany, Austria, Switzerland, and Italy are now on the uniform or standard gauge of 4 ft. 8½ in.

A very similar change has taken place in Canada and the United States. In the former country a large mileage was originally constructed on the 5 ft. 6 in. gauge, which confessedly permits the employment of more powerful and durable engines than the standard, or 4 ft. 8½ in. gauge. The break of gauge was, however, found most inconvenient, and though most ingenious mechanical appliances were used to transfer the bodies of broad-gauge cars to narrow-gauge bogies and vice versa, the delay, loss, and practical inconvenience were found so great that hundreds of locomotives were entirely rebuilt, and many were altered at considerable considerable expense in order to adapt them to the narrower gauge of 4 ft. 8½ in. In the United States the Erie system, one of the four great trunk lines westward, was originally built on the 6 ft. gauge, permitting the employment of the most powerful engines and wide and comfortable passenger cars. The inconvenience of a break of gauge with other railroads was, however, felt to be overwhelming. As in England, a third rail was first laid down, and recently the last of the old broad-gauge rails was taken up. In the Southern States a gauge of 5 ft. prevailed, and was almost universal south of the Ohio. The difference of 3½ in. in gauge was so small that the task of transferring the bodies of the cars from one set of rails to another was easy, and the system used was apparently simple, cheap, and little likely to cause delay. Nevertheless, railroad managers for many years made preparations for a coming change. Locomotives and cars were so constructed that the change could be easily effected, and finally, in May, 1887, the gauge on some 10,000 miles of road was changed to 4 ft. 8½ in. within a week.

The above examples show that in three countries—Great Britain, Canada, and the United States—extensive practical experience has shown that any mechanical advantages possessed by broad gauge have been overpowered by the inconveniences and delays of transferring goods and passengers at the break of gauge; and that this hindrance to traffic practically isolates the broad-gauge lines, depriving them of profitable business.

The disadvantages of break of gauge are also felt in lines narrower than the standard. The supposed advantages of greater cheapness of construction and diminished deadweight of rolling-stock caused some 10,000 miles of 3-ft. gauge lines to be constructed in the United States. It was found, almost without an exception, that such lines could not compete with standard gauge lines, and could not in most cases pay working expenses, for, while the first cost was not very materially lessened, the speed and capacity of the line to haul paying loads were greatly lessened, while the repairs after a few years' working compared very unfavourably with those of lines with stronger and heavier rolling-stock. With one exception, no line of any importance is now worked in the United States on a gauge narrower than 4 ft. 8½ in., and that line, the Denver and Rio Grande, is in part laid with a third rail, and the widening of the whole line is in contemplation. A similar change has taken place in Canada, where many of the narrow-gauge lines have been widened to the standard gauge of 4 ft. 8½ in.

It is evident therefore that the advantages of a standard and uniform railway gauge have been so very manifest that both broader and narrower gauges have been altered on many thousands of miles of railway to conform to the standard gauge. The total mileage in operation in the world at the end of 1885 was 303,058 miles. Of this length 74 per cent. were of the 4 ft. 8½ in. to 4 ft. 9 in. standard, 12 per cent. had larger gauges, and 14 per cent. smaller.

Another important point to be considered is the great advantage that would arise to the country in case we should at any time be involved in war, as the whole of the rolling-stock of the various colonies would be available for use at any point where an emergency arose; beyond this also if troops had to be pushed rapidly from one colony to another (assuming there was sufficient stock in each colony for the purpose) the delay involved by the break of gauge would be a fatal obstacle to the promptness and facility of their movements.

The Gauge Commission of 1845 (England) considered this question in regard to English railways and said in their report:—"The troops (conveyed for sudden emergencies) should be carried with their equipments complete in all their details, and with their artillery and ammunition, and it therefore appears indispensably necessary that the whole should be conveyed in the same vehicles from the beginning to the end of their journey. The effect of a break of gauge might in this view of the case expose the country to serious danger."

Sir John Hawkshaw, a member of the Engineers and Railway Volunteer Corps, in reporting to the War Office on a scheme for moving by railway the entire military forces of England from the various depôts to different arranged points, said:—"Had not the railways in England and Scotland been almost wholly of one gauge and the whole stock nearly everywhere available the problem would have been infinitely more difficult and its solution much less satisfactory. For it is not enough to say (as I am told it has been said) to get over the difficulty of break of gauge that the men—that is the soldiers—where the break of gauge occurred, could easily walk from one train to the other. It is of the last importance that trains once laden should pass onwards to their destination, but break of gauge would render this impracticable, and the amount of stock required would at once be nearly doubled. At every break of gauge the men could not proceed at all unless duplicate trains corresponding in capacity to the trains bringing them to that point were waiting ready to take them forward, thus rendering many duplicate trains necessary to do the work. Those who were engaged in the inquiries I have referred to will understand how difficult it would be to prepare such trains, and to make them meet each other at proper times. Moreover, one of the great difficulties in the operation arose from the vast extent of platform and loading and unloading places required for horses, guns, and ammunition, which would have to be extemporised at the time, and the necessity of which would be vastly increased by the break of gauge. In regard to guns, ammunition, baggage, horses, &c., the evils would be greater than with the men, for these could not be changed without the provision of the most extensive loading and unloading places, and the loss of a great amount of time."

UNIFORM GAUGE FOR THE RAILWAYS OF AUSTRALIA.

WITH reference to what has recently passed on this subject and our conversation yesterday, I have the honor to suggest that the following should be the basis of procedure in connection with this subject:—

That the various colonies should affirm—

- (1.) That the adoption of an universal gauge is absolutely necessary looking at the future growth of the country and the annually increasing intercourse of the people and exchange of goods.
- (2.) That the cost of adopting an uniform gauge shall be borne by the whole of the colonies affected.

- (3.) That it having been decided that the cost of altering the railways to an uniform gauge shall be a national one, the subject of which is the right gauge to be adopted, must be approached without any bias in favour of the gauge at present in operation in any colony, and a decision must be come to from the standpoint of which gauge, 4 ft. 8½ in., or 5 ft. 3 in., can be adopted at the least cost and inconvenience.
- (4.) That it shall be an instruction that the whole of the railways in New South Wales and Victoria, that part of the railways of South Australia now laid to the 5 ft. 3 in. gauge, as well as the line to Cockburn (for Silverton), and all lines in Queensland south of Brisbane leading to New South Wales shall be altered to the standard gauge, and the cost of altering the railway and rolling-stock necessary for working such lines shall be a national charge.
- (5.) That the Chief Commissioner or Chairman of the Railway Board in each colony, with one colleague (to be selected by the Chief Commissioner or Chairman), to be a Commission to consider—
 - (1.) What shall be the gauge of the future.
 - (2.) In what proportions the cost of the change shall be borne by the respective colonies.
 - (3.) The probable cost of carrying out the change.
 - (4.) The number of years the cost of the change shall be spread over, and the amount of money to be set aside each year as a sinking fund.
 - (5.) The date on which the change of gauge shall take place. The Commission to submit a joint report for the consideration and approval of the respective Governments.

That it be a recommendation to each of the colonies finding it desirable for the present to make narrow-gauge lines in outlying districts to arrange its stations, tunnels, and bridges in such a way as to enable the uniform gauge at a later date to be laid down without incurring any additional expenditure in enlarging such works; the wisdom, however, of from the outset adopting the standard gauge, which may be laid down in the cheapest possible way, to be carefully considered.

[Extract from the Supplement to the Railway Commissioners' Annual Reports, dated 19th November, 1894.]

UNIFORM GAUGE FOR THE RAILWAYS OF AUSTRALIA.

This question, which was brought forward by us immediately after taking office, has, we regret to say, made very little progress in the way of giving practical effect to bringing about a settlement. We feel that the question is of vital importance to the future of Australia, and must be dealt with at some time or other, and the longer it is postponed the greater will be the cost of the change.

We would respectfully urge that the question be dealt with without further delay, and action taken somewhat on the lines suggested in a letter dated the 18th May, 1889, from the Chief Commissioner to the Honorable the Minister for Railways, which was as follows:—

[Copy of letter given on previous page.]

We have held the view that great advantage could be obtained by all the railways of Australasia if an annual meeting of the principal officers were held to discuss various matters of importance in connection with the working of the lines; these meetings to be followed by a meeting of the Commissioners, or by the Chairmen of the respective Boards, so as to give executive effect to any recommendations which might be made. At these meetings all questions of importance affecting the economic and efficient working of the various branches of the service could be discussed, and the whole of the colonies would obtain the benefit of the united ability employed by the various Governments. Such meetings would also, in our opinion, bring about a broader view on all railway questions, and promote harmonious working.

Beyond a special meeting in regard to the adoption of an uniform rule-book and the discussion of a uniform classification of goods, nothing has been done, principally owing to the change of system of railway control in Victoria.

The question, however, is of such great importance to the whole of the colonies that it is brought forward again in this manner in the hope that the idea may bear fruit in the future.

[Copy of letter dated 4th January, 1896, from the Chief Commissioner for Railways to the Honorable G. H. Reid, M.P., Premier and Minister for Railways.]

Sir,

UNIFORM GAUGE FOR AUSTRALIA.

I have the honor to draw your attention to the subject of an uniform gauge for Australia, and to the previous communications I have forwarded on the subject.

The question becomes a much more costly and difficult one the longer it is postponed, and I would respectfully urge, if the whole question cannot be dealt with at the present time, that steps should be taken to induce the Victorian Government to agree to alter the line running from Albury to Melbourne, with its connecting branches, to the 4 ft. 8 in. gauge, and so enable the traffic to be passed between Sydney and Melbourne without change.

In making this suggestion, I am aware that I am practically assuming that the gauge of the future should be the gauge already adopted as the standard of the world, as quite 90 per cent. of the railways of the world are now 4 ft. 8½ in.

As a question of cost, too, it will be much cheaper to adopt the 4 ft. 8½ in. gauge than the Victorian gauge of 5 ft. 3 in., as no works would require widening; whereas if the 5 ft. 3 in. gauge were adopted, the cost of altering stations like Sydney, the Suburban Lines, &c., would be exceedingly great. The axles of the rolling-stock would in nearly all cases be available for the 4 ft. 8½ in. gauge, whereas if the 5 ft. 3 in. gauge were adopted, all would have to be abandoned. The permanent way change would also be cheapened and simplified by adopting the narrower gauge.

One

One of the strongest arguments I have heard advanced by those in favor of the retention of the 5 ft. 3 in. as the standard has been that more powerful locomotives can be put upon that gauge than on the 4 ft. 8½ in. road. I attach no importance to this point now, as the improvements in locomotives of late years have been so great that for the grades upon Victorian and South Australian lines engines of the power running in New South Wales will haul trains of as great length as it would be desirable to place behind a locomotive.

Victoria, too, has been devoting much thought of recent years to the question of how to cheapen the cost of construction, and the adoption of a somewhat narrower gauge than that at present in use would afford an opportunity of doing something in this direction.

I would suggest for the consideration of the Government that the cost of this change should be borne by the two colonies affected in equal proportions, and when, later on, the whole question as affecting all the colonies is dealt with, the question could be reopened and the expenditure readjusted on the principle decided upon for the larger expenditure.

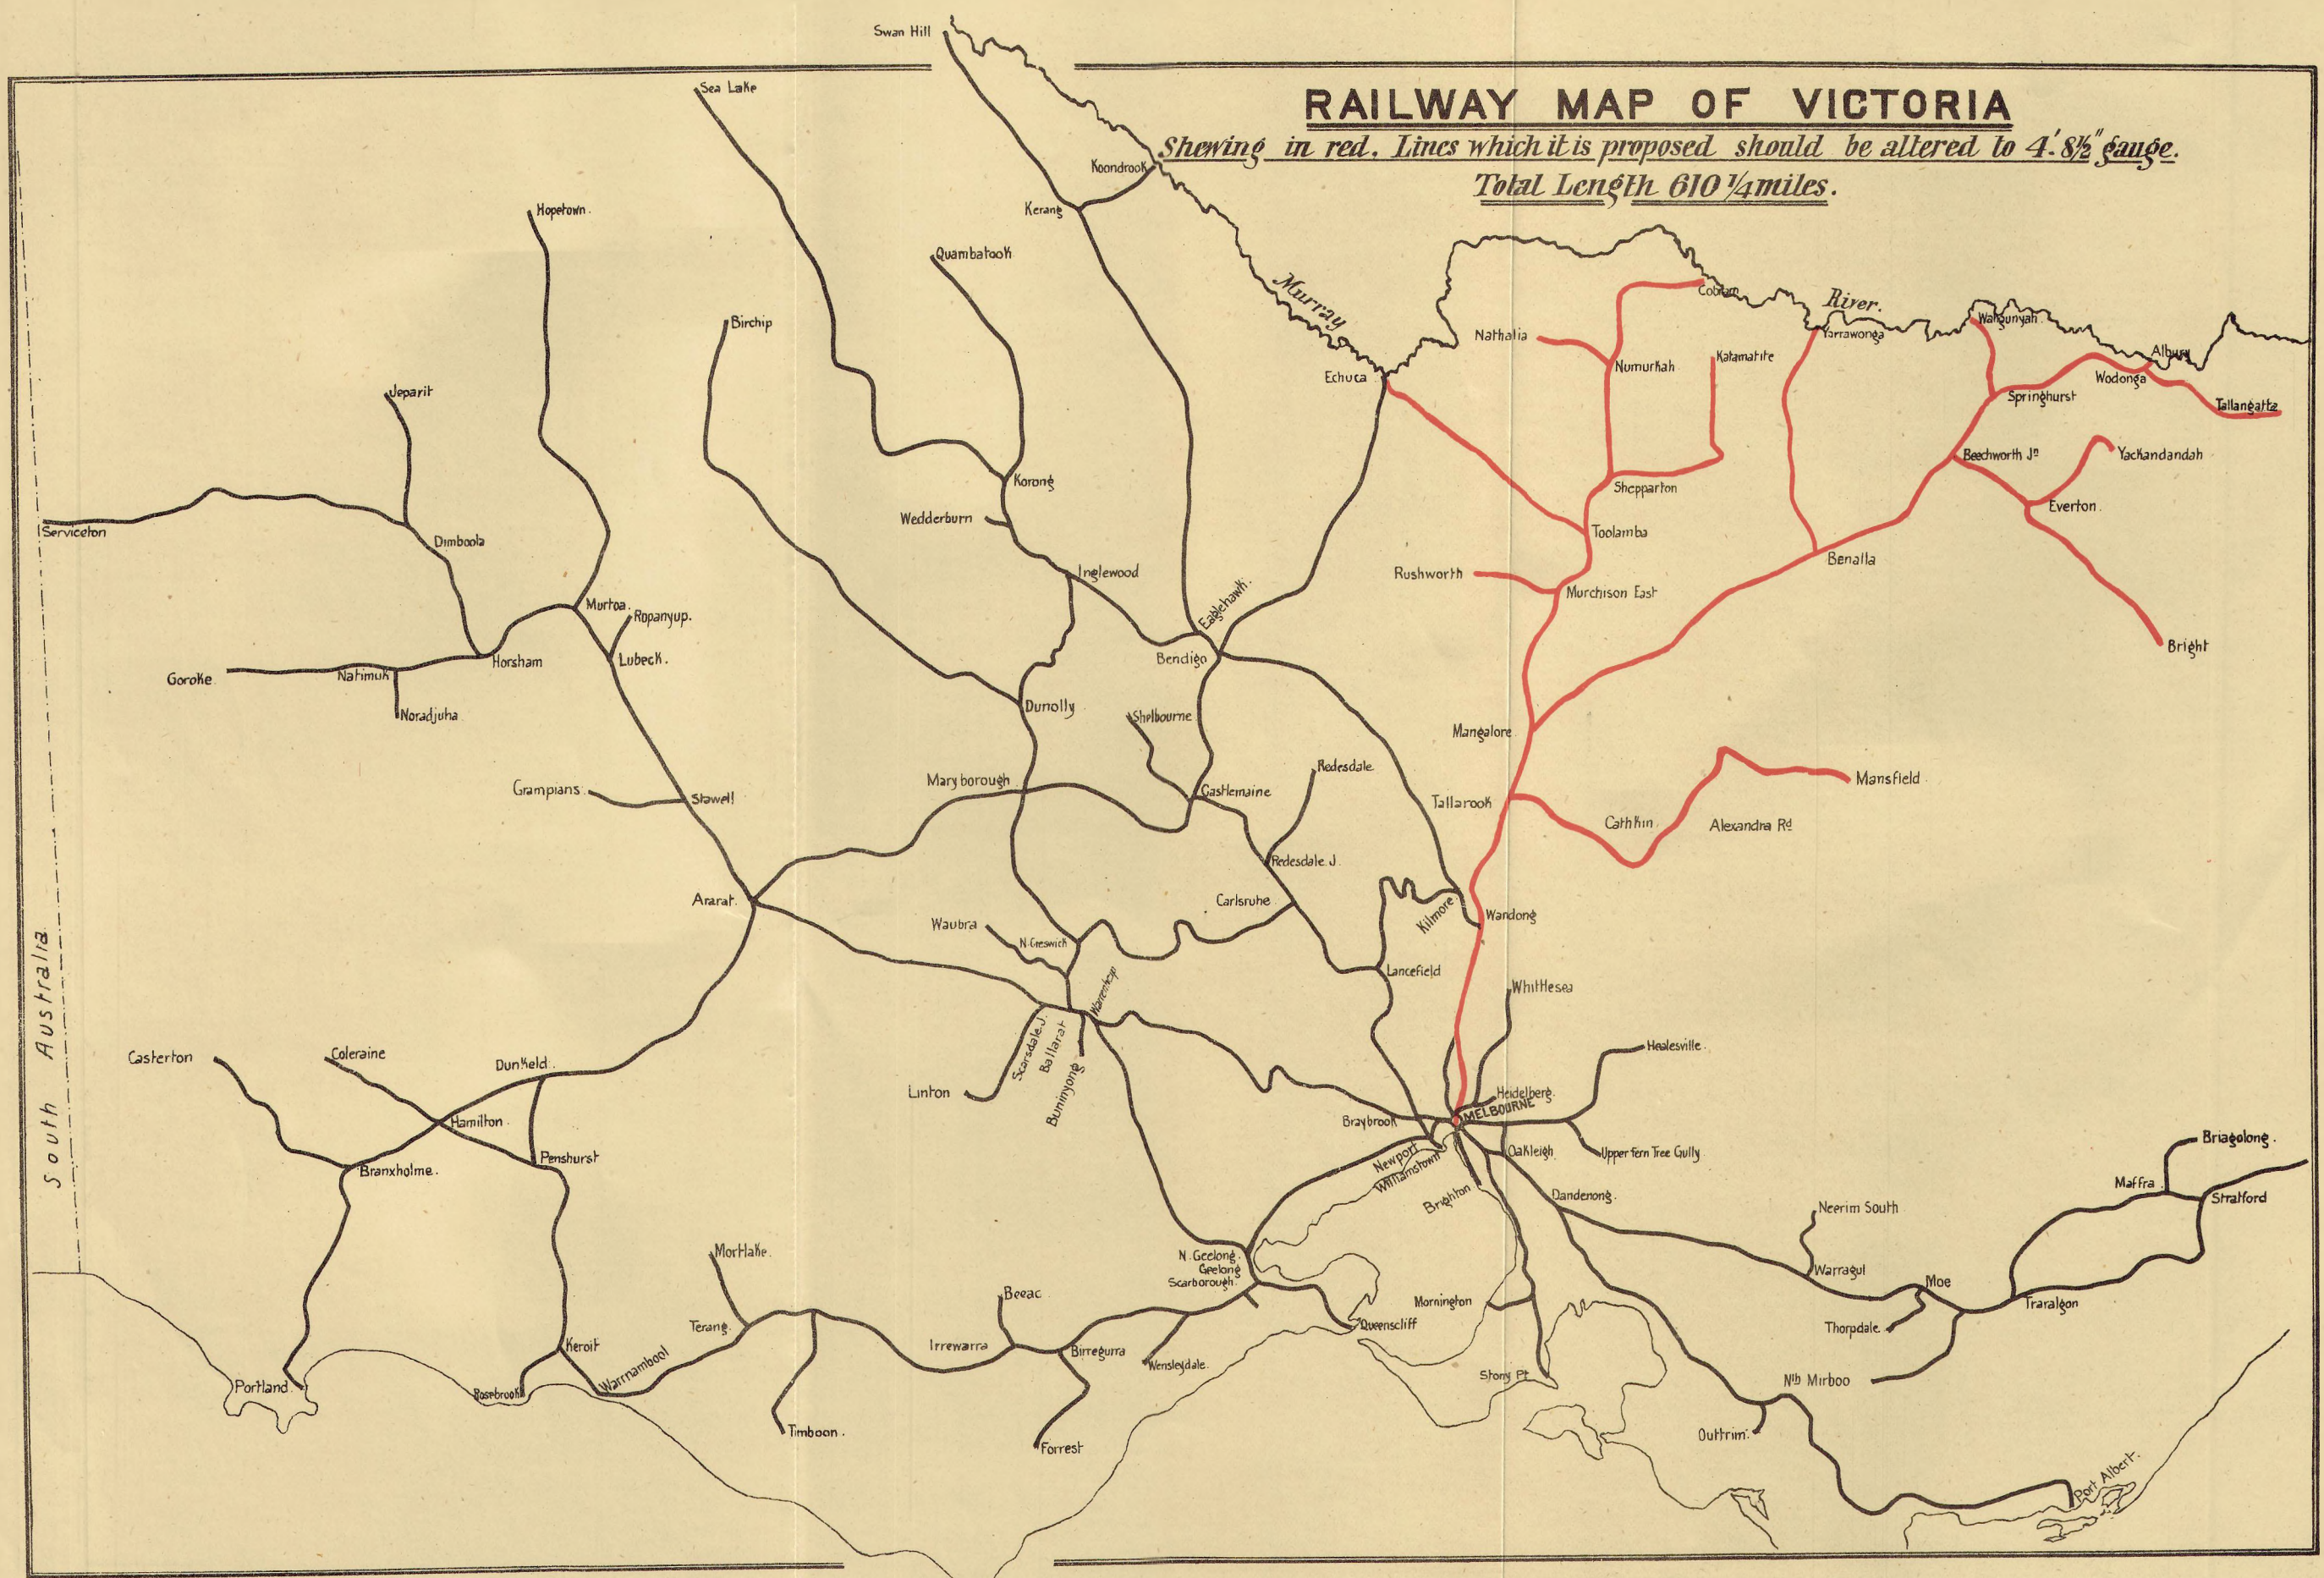

I attach a map of the Victorian railways, and have marked thereon in red the lines suggested to be altered to the 4 ft. 8½ in. gauge. If the two Governments are favourably disposed to consider the matter, a rough estimate of the cost of carrying out the scheme could be speedily prepared and laid before you.

Return to the Order of the Convention (March 24th, 1897), laid on the Table by the Clerk and ordered to be printed, April 2nd, 1897.

Sir,

Commissioner's Office, Adelaide, 27 March, 1897.

Again referring to your memo. of the 24th inst., I now forward such papers as have been presented to Parliament by the Railways Commissioners of this province bearing upon the subjects you mention.

I am, &c.,

ALAN G. PENDLETON,

Railways Commissioner.

E. G. Blackmore, Esq., Clerk Australasian Federal Convention, Adelaide.

SOUTH AUSTRALIAN RAILWAYS.

1.—ABOLITION OF THE BREAK OF GAUGE.

[Extracts from Railways Commissioners' Annual Reports.]

October 30th, 1888.

* This is only one of the many evils, although it is by no means a small one, caused by the unfortunate existence of a dual gauge within the Colony. We feel assured that the disadvantages arising therefrom will become more and more intensified year by year, and that the longer the alteration is deferred the greater will be the ultimate cost, and the greater will be the loss. All previous experience goes to prove that a dual gauge can have no permanent existence, and that difficulty and trouble commence with its very initiation.

The question is undoubtedly one of the utmost importance, not only to South Australia, but to the other Australasian Colonies, and, whatever the result, it is worth an effort to see whether some arrangement cannot be come to as to the future policy which should prevail.

If a conference could be arranged with duly accredited representatives from all the Colonies the whole question could be thoroughly gone into and discussed practically and financially.

With so large a territory and so small a population, we feel the necessity of proceeding with the utmost caution; but as this is a question of railway policy, we have thought it desirable to record our views without entering further into details on the present occasion.

October 30th, 1889.

We consider it desirable to refer again to the question of the gauge. Much has taken place since we reported last year to show the desirability of some practical measures being adopted to get this important question taken up and considered by the respective Governments of the Australian Colonies. It is almost universally admitted that the adoption of a different gauge for the railways in Australia was a huge blunder, and that in South Australia in particular any saving that may have been effected in the first cost of constructing the narrow-gauge lines has been very largely counter-balanced by the expense attending the provision of a duplicate stock and the increased cost of working. It is also freely admitted that sooner or later one uniform gauge throughout will be a necessity and must be adopted, and that the longer a settlement of the question is delayed the more costly will be the alteration when it has to be made.

Military men, regarding the question from another point of view, express but one opinion on the subject, while all railway authorities know only too well the expense, inconvenience, and loss which is sustained in the working of lines that do not permit of the interchange of rolling-stock.

In consequence of the break of gauge it is not possible to move the rolling-stock from one part of the system to another, and when there is a pressure for trucks that is of itself a very great disadvantage, leaving out of consideration the permanent cost of transfer at the break of gauge stations.

To South Australia, with the construction of the Transcontinental railway on her hands, and the existence of a dual gauge within her borders, the question is of more pressing importance than to the other Colonies; but it affects them all to such an extent that we cannot but think that the authorities would be willing to join in any movement having for its object the removal of an evil which must become more pronounced year by year.

This can only be brought about by action on the part of the Government. Without the requisite authority we can do nothing; but we have thought it right to place our views on record, and, as administrators of the railways, to urge, in the interest of the public, full consideration of a question than which there is scarcely any of greater importance.

We.

* Having reference to the duplication of the types of rolling-stock.

We have been told that it is premature to expect that the Colonies which have one uniform gauge within their own territories will be willing to consider the question of one uniform gauge for Australia; but it is very certain that unless inquiry is made and some steps are taken to ascertain the views which prevail elsewhere, no progress will be made, to remove an evil the existence of which is so fully admitted, and the removal of which is so much desired. Now, if at all, is the time for this important question to be considered. We should not wait for some national disaster to bring home to us the urgency of the matter. Twenty-five years is scarcely more than an expression in the life of a country, and yet who will say that long before that period expires South Australia will not be joined by railways with New South Wales and Queensland, when all the evils of a break of gauge would more than ever be felt.

An intercolonial conference on the subject would consider what the gauge should be, the cost of altering the existing stock and appliances, and generally whether such a scheme would be practicable without entailing too heavy a burden upon the taxpayers.

October 29th, 1890.

In connection with the proposed construction of additional railways, we would draw attention to our previous reports in reference to the unification of the gauge throughout Australia.

Although the matter is of such importance, practically nothing has been done to get the question considered in all its bearings, and that this course is more than ever desirable is evident from the fact that proposals have been made in sober earnestness that in South Australia, where the costly evils of a dual gauge are intensified year by year, they should be ameliorated by the introduction of a third gauge.

With whatever specious arguments such proposals may be sustained, we say unhesitatingly that the adoption of any such course could only be attended with the most disastrous financial results.

We urge upon the Government the necessity for a consideration of this question, involving as it does such important issues.

Special Report by the South Australian Railways Commissioners, dated 21st November, 1889.

C.S., 1857/89.

Sir,

Railways Commissioners' Office, Adelaide, 21st November, 1889.

In connection with the various proposals which have been made for abolishing the break of gauge, we beg to submit the following observations:—

If the break of gauge in South Australia is to be abolished the only way in which it can be done is to alter either the broad or narrow gauge to one uniform gauge throughout the Colony.

If the gauge is to be made uniform in this Colony by either of these courses the difficulty still remains as regards Victoria or New South Wales. Therefore, the only effectual and conclusive method of dealing with the difficulty is to decide, in conference with the authorities of all the Colonies, upon the best gauge, and adopt that throughout Australia. Any other course of action will be merely parochial, and not national; it will only remove the difficulty in one place and cause it to arise in another with intensified annoyance.

The various means for partially overcoming the difficulty may be thus stated:—

FIRSTLY—By Mechanical Means, dealing with Goods and Live-stock Vehicles only.—One of the many objections to the adoption of any such scheme is that no inventor has yet been able to show how the alteration of the trucks or vehicles is to be effected. The adoption also of a continuous automatic brake is an absolute necessity if the traffic is to be safely worked, and the adoption of any transfer system would render the use of a continuous brake of any kind most difficult and costly. It is a very open question, also, whether it would not be as costly and as slow to transfer a train after all the appliances are provided as in the case at present. Mechanical appliances will never, in the nature of things, abolish the break of gauge.

SECONDLY—Bringing the Narrow-gauge Lines into Adelaide.—The simplest plan for doing this would be to link the Blyth line with the Port Pirie line, extend the system to Dry Creek and Adelaide, and, from the former station, construct a mixed-gauge line to Port Adelaide. The broad-gauge line to Terowie would then be of use only for passengers to the north and east, and for goods to local stations.

Presuming that rates over the longer narrow-gauge line would have to be fixed by the mileage of the shorter broad-gauge route, which would render the capital outlay practically unproductive, there would still be almost as much delay in getting goods to or from Cockburn as there is at present, owing to the necessarily slower speed on the narrow-gauge system and the longer distance to be travelled.

The annoyance and cost of working mixed-gauge stations of the complexity of Adelaide and Port Adelaide can scarcely be estimated or appreciated; but no railway man with any sense of his responsibilities would recommend such a course.

A new narrow-gauge station might be possible at Adelaide, and the traffic now handled by one staff would then require two; but even this cannot be done at the Port, where the sidings and signalling arrangements would of necessity be very complicated. Such a plan would be more costly, more vexatious, and tedious than the existing arrangements. It would not overcome the difficulties, it would not abolish the break of gauge at Terowie, but it would create another at Adelaide for the south.

Another method of bringing the narrow gauge to Adelaide would be by laying a third rail from Terowie southwards. This would complicate matters still more than the former plan, because there would be all the disadvantages of a mixed gauge at all the stations on the through line as well as the termini.

All trade for distribution over 800 miles would be carried on the narrow gauge, leaving only the trade over 214 miles north of Adelaide to be carried on the broad gauge; thereby practically killing the wider gauge, and rendering its undoubted advantages nugatory.

THIRDLY—Taking up the Broad Gauge north of Adelaide, and substituting the Narrow.—This is approaching the problem from the northern end. There would still be complications at the terminal yards. A single narrow-gauge line would tend to hamper the traffic; the speed would of necessity be slower than at present; and a double line, if not immediately required, would probably have to be provided before very long.

To

To narrow all the lines north of Adelaide would be a decidedly retrograde step. It would only remove the break of gauge from Terowie to Adelaide; and if our lines ever touch those of New South Wales at any other point than Cockburn there would be another break.

The solution of the difficulty, in our opinion, lies in the adoption of a uniform gauge for the whole of the Australian railways; and till this can be brought about the minimising of the difficulties at Terowie lies in the expeditious handling and transfer of goods by manual labour.

In dealing with the question thus far it has only been considered from a railway standpoint, although there are other considerations which demand attention.

3.—THE EXISTENCE OF PREFERENTIAL AND DIFFERENTIAL RATES.

Extracts from Railways Commissioners' Annual Reports.

October 10th, 1894.

During the past year attention has been directed to the attempts which have been made from time to time, and in various districts, to divert traffic from its legitimate channels to other routes through the adoption of special rates. We have been extremely loth to enter upon what has been described as a "war of tariffs"; but at the same time we have felt it to be our duty to take such measures, and put in force such a scale of rates, as would secure to this Colony its proper traffic, which would otherwise have been diverted to competing routes. Such a condition of affairs is, however, as undesirable in the interests of the freighter as it is of the different railway administrations involved. Competition sooner or later must end in combination, and we hold to the opinion that the proper course to adopt is for the respective authorities to enter into an agreement, in the first place as to the rates from competing districts, which should be upon a fair and equitable basis both as regards the freighter and the railways, and in the second place as to a division of the receipts, no matter by what route the traffic may be conveyed.

In other countries where competition is far keener than in Australia, and where the position of the competing railways is much more complicated, such a course was, after a protracted struggle, found to be absolutely necessary, and the only solution of the difficulty if ruin were to be averted. The agreements entered into years ago have stood the test of time, and we can see no reason why a similar course should not be pursued with equally beneficial results in this and the other Colonies interested.

September 26th, 1895.

An effort was made in the early part of 1895, by the Commissioners of the New South Wales, Victorian, and South Australian railways, to arrive at a joint arrangement, whereby competition at absurdly low rates for wool traffic would be obviated, and it is matter for regret that no successful result was arrived at. The competition continues to be as keen as, if not keener than, ever, and it is to be hoped that before the wool traffic of 1896 commences wiser counsels may prevail, and an arrangement be possible whereby the present competition, which leads to serious loss of revenue, and to the carriage of a valuable article at a ridiculously low figure, may be checked.

August 29th, 1896.

In my last report I expressed the hope that at an early date some arrangement might be found possible which would put an end to the extreme competition for wool traffic which existed between the railways of the different Colonies, and it is with regret I have now to add that the hope has not been realised, nor was any approach to negotiations found feasible during the unsettled and subsequent transition state of management in a neighbouring Colony. The competitive rates must continue for the season upon which we are just entering.

2.—AMALGAMATION UNDER A FEDERAL BODY OR OTHERWISE OF THE RAILWAYS OF ALL OR ANY TWO OF THE SAID COLONIES.

The Railways Commissioners of South Australia have not reported on the above subject.

FEDERAL CONVENTION, 1897.

Railway Border Tax Act—Queensland.

RETURN to Order of the Convention of March 24th, 1897, laid on the Table by the Clerk, and ordered to be printed, April 8th, 1897.

Sir,

Commissioner's Office, Brisbane, April 3rd, 1897.

In reply to your memorandum of the 26th ultimo, seeking certain information for the Federal Convention, I am desired to inform you that there are no reports on the questions referred to by you.

We have, however, Differential Rates in force which the Commissioner has been compelled to make for the purpose of retaining traffic from localities within the colony which would have been diverted to the railway lines of other colonies, owing to the action of the neighbouring Commissioners in framing Differential Rates with the object of securing it.

I forward herewith, for your information, two copies of our Border Tax Act, which was passed for the purpose of defeating the object of the Differential Rates which were quoted by the railway authorities in New South Wales to divert traffic within this colony from our own lines.

I am, &c.,

T. S. GRATTEN,

Secretary.

E. G. Blackmore, Esq., Clerk, Federal Convention, South Australia.

[Enclosures.]

Anno Quinquagesimo Septimo Victoriae Reginae.—No. 4.—An Act to aid in securing Queensland Traffic for Queensland Railways.—Assented to July 21st, 1893.

Preamble.

WHEREAS large sums of money have been expended by the Government in extending and maintaining railway communication with the Southern and Western Districts of the Colony, for the purpose of promoting agricultural and pastoral settlement in these districts: And whereas large sums of money have at various times been expended by the Government in harbour and river improvements for the purpose of increasing the shipping facilities of the Colony: And whereas a large sum of money has been, and is being, annually paid by the Government in subsidising direct steam communication with Europe, primarily with the object of facilitating the speedy and direct shipment of goods and produce therefrom and thereto: And whereas it has been ascertained that differential rates on the railway lines of the neighbouring Colonies have been promulgated and otherwise arranged for, which have had, and are continuing to have, the effect of diverting the traffic which ought legitimately to be conveyed over the railway lines of this Colony, thereby entailing a considerable loss in railway revenue: And whereas it is considered desirable to prevent, as far as practicable, this diversion of traffic: Be it enacted by the Queen's Most Excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Legislative Council and Legislative Assembly of Queensland in Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:—

Interpretation.

1. Interpretation—

"Commissioners"—The Queensland Railway Commissioners.

"Station Produce"—Wools, sheepskins, or hides.

"Team"—Any dray or other carriage, together with the animals drawing the same, and any animal under pack.

"Driver"—Any person in charge of a team, whether the proprietor thereof or not.

"Owner"—The owner, manager, or person in charge of any sheep or cattle station or other holding.

Railway Tax to be paid on produce crossing the Border.

2. From and after the passing of this Act there shall be levied, collected, and paid to Her Majesty, by way of Railway Tax, a sum at the rate of fifty shillings for every ton weight or any lesser weight of station produce exported from Queensland across the Border.

For the purposes of this Act, the term "Border" shall mean such portion of the boundary line between the Colony of Queensland and the adjoining Colonies, as the Governor in Council may from time to time define by proclamation.

Waybill for station produce crossing the Border.

3. The owner of every station or other holding shall, before permitting any station produce to leave his station or holding for conveyance across the Border, furnish the driver of each team conveying the same with a waybill containing an exact description and the weight of the station produce being conveyed thereon, and setting forth the route by and the place to which such station produce is to be conveyed; and the driver of every such team shall produce such waybill to any Customs officer, police officer, or other officer of the Government or of the Commissioners, who shall demand the same.

Any owner permitting any station produce to leave his station or holding for the purpose of being conveyed across the Border by any team without furnishing the driver of such team with a waybill containing the particulars herein required, or who furnishes to such driver a waybill containing any false entry, shall be liable to a penalty of one hundred pounds.

Penalty

Penalty for crossing the Border without payment of Railway Tax.

4. Any driver of a team conveying station produce to the Border who fails to produce a waybill, or produces a waybill in which any false entry occurs, or produces a waybill which does not embody an exact account of the loading on the team or teams under his charge, shall be prima facie guilty of an attempt to remove station produce across the Border without paying the Railway Tax herein provided, and such tax shall thereupon be payable by and recoverable from such driver and from the owner, in addition to any other penalty imposed by this Act.

Every person who shall be concerned in removing, or attempting to remove, any station produce across the Border without paying the Railway Tax shall be liable for every such offence to a penalty of one hundred pounds, and in any such case the station produce and the teams conveying the same shall be liable to forfeiture.

Drays, teams, &c., liable to forfeiture may be seized.

5. All teams, station produce, and other things liable to forfeiture under this Act, may be seized in any place by any officer of Customs, or of the Government of Queensland, or of the Commissioners, or any member of the police force; and all such teams, station produce, and other things so seized shall, as soon as conveniently may be, be delivered into the care of the proper officer appointed to receive them, and so disposed of as the Governor in Council may direct.

Penalties, how recoverable.

6. All penalties and forfeitures imposed by this Act may be proceeded for and recovered before any two or more Justices of the Peace in a summary manner, in the name or names of some officer or officers of Customs, or police constable.

Averment.

7. The averment in any information or proceedings under this Act that the person named therein is the owner or person in charge of any station or holding, or is the driver of any team conveying station produce to or across the Border, or that the amount of the tax payable on any station produce conveyed or being conveyed across the Border has not been paid, shall be sufficient proof thereof until the contrary be shown.

Exemptions from payment of Railway Tax in certain cases.

8. Notwithstanding anything hereinbefore provided, it shall be lawful for the Colonial Treasurer, in any case where, owing to unfavourable seasons, or from the geographical position of any station or other holding, it would be impracticable for the owner thereof, without great pecuniary loss, to make use of the railway lines of the colony for the carriage of his station produce from such station or holding, to permit, by notice in Gazette, such owner to convey his station produce across the Border without the payment of the tax hereinbefore provided.

Power to make Regulations.

9. It shall be lawful for the Governor in Council to make such Regulations as may be necessary for the purpose of giving effect to this Act, and all such Regulations not being inconsistent therewith shall, on publication in the Gazette, have the force of law.

Short Title.

10. This Act may be cited as "The Railway Border Tax Act of 1893."

FEDERAL CONVENTION, 1897.

South Australia's Northern Country in relation to Railways.

Laid on the Table and ordered to be printed, with map, April 21st, 1897.

C.S., 329A/97.

Commissioner's Office, Adelaide, April 8th, 1897.

Sir—Referring to C.S., 329A/97, which was returned to you on the 2nd instant, I now beg to state, for the information of the Federal Convention:—

1. That the estimated cost of continuing the Transcontinental line from Oodnadatta to Pine Creek, a distance of 1,063½ miles, would be £7,447,321, or an average of £7,004 per mile; but, as no survey has been completed, this estimate must be considered as only approximate.

2. I am unable to give the cost of making a line from the boundary of South Australia and Western Australia to join the Western Australian system, but the Engineer-in-Chief reports that a 3 ft. 6 in. gauge line from Port Augusta to the boundary of Western Australia, for which no complete survey has been made, would probably be £1,763,000, or £3,187 per mile; the distance being 553 miles.

3. An estimate is asked of the cost of constructing a line between the Northern Territory railway and the nearest railway system in Queensland, but it is not quite apparent when the Territory line is mentioned whether it is intended to connect the existing line at Pine Creek or the proposed Transcontinental line from some point yet to be fixed. A map is, however, forwarded with this report, showing (a) a line from Pine Creek across the South Australian border to Queensland; (b) a line from Reynolds' Range across the border to Longreach; (c) from Reynolds' Range across the border to Charleville; but as no survey of this country has ever been made with a view to construction of a railway, it is impossible to give even an approximate estimate of the cost. On the same plan are shown the proposed lines from Leigh Creek to Innamincka (near the Queensland border), and from Hergott to near Birdsville, for the construction of which approximate estimates have already been made; in the first case the cost being put at £1,317,000, and in the second £1,333,000.

I believe that application has already been made to the Crown Lands Department for a description of the country traversed by each of the schemes mentioned above. This information, so far as known to the Engineer-in-Chief's Department, is given on the face of the plan.

I have, &c.,

ALAN G. PENDLETON,

Railways Commissioner.

The Hon. Commissioner of Public Works, Adelaide.

Enc.—C.S.O., 329/97.]

RETURN in accordance with resolution of the Federal Convention of March 26th.

The character of the country from Oodnadatta to Macumba, a distance of about thirty miles, may generally be described as fair pasture, comprising undulating stony tablelands traversed by rough ranges and intersected by numerous broad watercourses and often extensive flats splendidly grassed after rain, timbered with gum, box, myall, gigea, wattle, &c.

From the Macumba to the latitude of Charlotte Waters, about ninety miles, the country is more open and well grassed, with salt, cotton, and other edible bushes, and patches of Mitchell grass. It is watered with numbers of springs. Some of the flats round the springs, particularly the Dalhousie, are of large extent, and suitable for the growth of dates and semi-tropical plants.

From Charlotte Waters to about lat. 24° 30', on southern side of the Macdonnell Ranges, the country generally comprises open Mulga, fairly grassed plains, and red sandhills, with patches of mulga and blackoak scrub and spinifex.

Along the course of the Hugh and Finke there is good timber, boxwood, gum, mulga, &c.; parts well grassed, and occasional stony ranges. The Macdonnell Ranges, which extend east and west about 400 miles by 100 miles north and south, is a fine stretch of high tablelands, and first-class country.

The climate is good, and water and herbage abundant.

From Macdonnell Ranges to Daly Waters, about latitude 16° 15', the country is generally scrubby, with occasional grassy plains and rough ranges; portions sandy, fairly grassed and well timbered along watercourses.

From Daly Waters to the Pine Creek Railway Station, passing the sources of the Roper and Daly rivers, the country is well grassed and parts thickly timbered; the latter portion very hilly, fairly grassed, and abounding in minerals.

The rainfall varies from about 6 inches at Oodnadatta on the south to about 50 inches at Pine Creek.

The whole of the country is well suited for pastoral occupation, and portions including the Macdonnell Ranges, river flats, and mineral areas would support a large population.

The nature of the country from Lake Torrens, or Port Augusta West, for the first 200 miles to the western end of the Gawler Ranges comprises open plains of good red loam, with salt and blue bush.

Well-grassed, undulating country, and low ranges with spinifex, patches of mallee, myall, and acacia, and an average rainfall of from 8 inches to 10 inches.

For the next 150 miles the country is poor, being chiefly low sandhills and flats of light sandy soil, principally covered with mallee scrub and spinifex.

The

The remainder of the country to the west boundary of the province comprises fairly grassed open plains of salt, blue, and cotton bush; the soil is generally good, but shallow in places; all fairly good pasture land, but the rainfall is light, being from 6 inches to 8 inches per annum.

Nearly the whole of the country is well suited for pastoral settlements, and in fair seasons much of the eastern portion could be cultivated.

From Pine Creek Railway Station to the sources of the Roper the country is hilly, with broken sandstone ranges and well-grassed flats between; open stony tablelands, portions splendidly grassed. Timber—box, stringybark, patches of mulga scrub, &c.

The remainder of the country to the Queensland boundary is alternate low ranges, sandy tablelands, with desert gum, paperbark, stringybark, pandanus, mulga, and other scrubs, and open rolling well-grassed downs, timbered with gum, bloodwood, and other trees.

The country generally is fair to good pasture, and large areas adjacent to the rivers Roper, Limmen, Bight, McArthur, and other streams contain good to first-class rich alluvial soil, well fitted for the growth of tropical plants, and suitable for settlements.

The estimated length of railway lines, and probable cost, have been supplied by the Commissioner of Railways.

DRAFT OF A BILL

To Constitute the Commonwealth of Australia.

WHEREAS the ~~Australasian Colonies~~ people of (here name the Colonies which have adopted the Constitution) have ~~by~~ (here describe the mode by which the assent of the Colonies has been expressed) agreed to unite in one indissoluble Federal Commonwealth under the Crown of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, and under the Constitution hereby established: And whereas it is expedient to make provision for the admission into the Commonwealth of other Australasian Colonies and Possessions of Her Majesty: Be it therefore enacted by the Queen's Most Excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in the present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:—

Preamble.

1. This Act may be cited as The Constitution of the Commonwealth of Australia.

Short title.

2. This Act shall bind the Crown and its ~~The provisions of this Act referring to Her Majesty the Queen~~ shall extend also to the Her Heirs and Successors of ~~Her Majesty~~ in the Sovereignty of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland.

Act to bind Crown.
Application of provisions shall extend to the Queen's Successors.

Constitution of the Commonwealth of Australia.

3. It shall be lawful for the Queen, by and with the advice of Her Majesty's Most Honorable Privy Council, to declare by Proclamation that, on and after a day therein appointed, not being later than six months after the passing of this Act, the ~~Colonies~~ people of (here name the Colonies which have adopted the Constitution) (~~which said Colonies and Province are hereinafter severally included in the expression "the said Colonies"~~) shall be united in one a Federal Commonwealth under the Constitution hereby established, and under the name of "The Commonwealth of Australia;" and on and after that day the said Colonies Commonwealth shall be united in one ~~Federal Commonwealth~~ established under that name.

Power to proclaim Commonwealth of Australia.

Commencement of Act.

4. Unless ~~where~~ it is otherwise expressed or implied, this Act shall commence and have effect on and from the day so appointed in the Queen's Proclamation; and the name "The Commonwealth of Australia" or "The Commonwealth" shall be taken to mean the Commonwealth of Australia as constituted under this Act.

"States."

5. The term "The States" shall be taken to mean such of the ~~existing~~ Colonies of New South Wales, New Zealand, Queensland, Tasmania, Victoria, and Western Australia, and the Province of South Australia as for the time being form part of the Commonwealth, and such Colonies or ~~other~~ States as may hereafter be admitted into or established by the Commonwealth ~~under the Constitution thereof~~, and each of such Colonies ~~so forming~~ parts of the Commonwealth shall be hereafter designated a "State."

Repeal of 48 & 49 Vict., chap. 60.

6. The Federal Council of Australasia Act 1885 is hereby repealed, but such repeal shall not affect any laws passed by the Federal Council of Australasia and in force at the date of the establishment of the Constitution of the Commonwealth.

But any such law may be repealed as to any State by the Parliament of the Commonwealth, and may be repealed as to any Colony, not being a State, by the Parliament thereof.

Operation of the Constitution and laws of the Commonwealth.

7. The Constitution established by this Act, and all Laws made by the Parliament of the Commonwealth in pursuance of the powers conferred by the Constitution, and all Treaties made by the Commonwealth, shall, according to their tenor, be binding on the Courts, Judges, and people of every State, and of every part of the Commonwealth, anything in the laws of any State to the contrary notwithstanding: and the Laws and Treaties of the Commonwealth shall be in force on board of all British ships whose last port of clearance or whose port of destination is in the Commonwealth.

Constitution.

8. The Constitution of the Commonwealth shall be as follows:—

THE CONSTITUTION.

This Constitution is divided into Chapters and Parts as follows:—

PART IV.—Provisions relating to both Houses;

PART V.—Powers of the Parliament:

CHAPTER II.—THE EXECUTIVE GOVERNMENT:

CHAPTER III.—THE FEDERAL JUDICATURE:

CHAPTER IV.—FINANCE AND TRADE:

CHAPTER V.—THE STATES:

CHAPTER VI.—NEW STATES:

CHAPTER VII.—MISCELLANEOUS:

CHAPTER VIII.—AMENDMENT OF THE CONSTITUTION.

Division of Constitution.

CHAPTER I.

THE PARLIAMENT.

PART I.—GENERAL.

Legislative powers

1. The Legislative powers of the Commonwealth shall be vested in a Federal Parliament, which shall consist of Her Majesty the Queen, a Senate, and a House of Representatives, and which is hereinafter called "The Parliament" or "The Parliament of the Commonwealth."

2. The Queen may, from time to time, appoint a Governor-General, who shall be Her Majesty's representative in the Commonwealth, and who shall have and may exercise in the Commonwealth during the Queen's pleasure, and subject to the provisions of this Constitution, such powers and functions as of the Queen as Her Majesty may think fit to assign to him.

Governor-General.

3. Until the Parliament otherwise provides, The Annual Salary of the Governor-General shall be fixed by the Parliament from time to time, but shall not be less than Ten thousand pounds, and shall be payable to the Queen out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund of the Commonwealth. The Salary of a Governor-General shall not be diminished altered during his continuance in office.

Salary of Governor-General.

4. The provisions of this Constitution relating to the Governor-General extend and apply to the Governor-General for the time being or such person as the Queen may appoint to be either the Chief Executive Officer or Administrator of the Government of the Commonwealth, by whatever title he is designated; but no such person shall be entitled to receive any salary from the Commonwealth in respect of any other office during his administration of the Government of the Commonwealth.

Application of provisions relating to Governor-General

5. Every Member of the Senate, and every Member of the House of Representatives, shall before taking his seat therein make and subscribe before the Governor-General, or some person authorized by him, an Oath or Affirmation of Allegiance in the form set forth in the Schedule to this Constitution.

Oath of Allegiance Schedule.

6. The Governor-General may appoint such times for holding the first and every other Session of the Parliament, as he may think fit, giving sufficient notice thereof, and may also from time to time, by proclamation or otherwise, prorogue the said Parliament, and may in like manner dissolve the House of Representatives.

Governor-General to fix times and places for holding Session of Parliament.

Power of dissolution of House of Representatives.

The Parliament shall be called together not later than six months after the date of the establishment of the Commonwealth.

First Session of Parliament.

7. There shall be a Session of the Parliament once at least in every year, so that twelve months shall not intervene between the last sitting of the Parliament in one Session and its first sitting in the next Session.

Yearly Session of Parliament.

8. The privileges, immunities, and powers, to be held, enjoyed, and exercised by of the Senate and by of the House of Representatives respectively, and of by the Members, thereof and the Committees of each House shall be such as are from time to time declared by the Parliament, and until declared shall be those of held, enjoyed, and exercised by the Commons House of Parliament of the United Kingdom, and by the of its Members and Committees, thereof at the date of the establishment of the Commonwealth.

Privileges &c. of Houses.

PART II.—THE SENATE.

9. The Senate shall be composed of eight members six Senators for each State, directly chosen by the Houses of the Parliament of the several States during a Session thereof, and each Senator shall have one vote.

Senate.

The Senators shall be directly chosen by the people of the State as one electorate.

The Senators shall be chosen for a term of six years, and the names of the Senators chosen in by each State shall be certified by the Governor to the Governor-General.

The Parliament shall have power from time to time to increase or diminish the number of Senators for each State, but so that the equal representation of the several States shall be maintained and that no State shall have less than six Senators.

The qualification of electors of Senators shall be in each State that which is prescribed by this Constitution or by the Parliament as the qualification for electors of Members of the House of Representatives, but in the choosing of Senators each elector shall vote only once, and if any elector votes more than once he shall be guilty of a misdemeanour.

Mode of election of Senators.

10. The Parliament of the Commonwealth may make laws prescribing a uniform manner of choosing the Senators. Subject to such laws, if any, the Parliament of each State may determine the time, place, and manner of choosing the Senators for that State by the Houses of Parliament thereof.

Continuance of existing election laws until The Parliament otherwise provides.

Until such determination, and unless The Parliament of the Commonwealth otherwise provides, the laws in force in the several States for the time being relating to the following matters, namely: The manner of conducting elections for the more numerous House of the Parliament of the State, the proceedings at such elections, Returning Officers, the periods during which elections may be continued, and offences against the laws regulating such elections shall, as nearly as practicable, apply to elections in the several States of Senators.

Failure of a State to choose Senators not to prevent business.

11. The failure of any State to provide for its representation in the Senate shall not affect the power of the Senate to proceed to the despatch of business.

Issue of writs.

12. For the purpose of holding elections of members to represent any State in the Senate the Governor of the State may cause writs to be issued by such persons in such form and addressed to such Returning Officers as he thinks fit.

Retirement of Senators.

13. ~~12.~~ As soon as practicable after the Senate is first assembled first meets the Senators chosen for each State shall be divided by lot into two classes. The places of the Senators of the first class shall be vacated at the expiration of the third year, and the places of those of the second class at the expiration of the sixth year, from the commencement of their term of service as herein declared, so that one-half may be chosen and afterwards there shall be an election every third year accordingly.

For the purposes of this section the term of service of a Senator shall begin on and be reckoned from the first day of January next succeeding the day of his election, except in the case of the first election, when it shall be reckoned from the first day of January preceding the day of his election. The election of Senators to fill the places of Senators retiring by rotation shall be made in the year preceding the day on which the retiring Senators they are to retire.

13. If the place of a Senator becomes vacant during the recess of the Parliament of the State which he represented the Governor of the State, by and with the advice of the Executive Council thereof, may appoint a Senator to fill such vacancy until the next Session of the Parliament of the State, when the Houses of Parliament shall choose a Senator to fill the vacancy.

How vacancies filled.

14. If the place of a Senator becomes vacant before the expiration of his term of service the Houses of Parliament of the State he represented shall, sitting and voting together, choose a person to fill the vacancy until the expiration of the term or until the election of a successor as hereinafter provided, whichever first happens. And if the Houses of Parliament of the State are in recess at the time when the vacancy occurs the Governor of the State, with the advice of the Executive Council thereof, may appoint a person to fill the vacancy until the beginning of the next Session of the Parliament of the State or until the election of a successor, whichever first happens. At the next general election of members of the House of Representatives, or at the next election of senators for the State, whichever first happens, a successor shall, if the term has not then expired, be chosen to hold the place from the date of his election until the expiration of the term.

14. If the place of a Senator becomes vacant before the expiration of the term of service for which he was chosen, the Senator chosen to fill his place shall hold the same only during the unexpired portion of the term for which the previous Senator was chosen.

15. The qualifications of a Senator shall be those of a Member of the House of Representatives as follows:—

Qualifications of Senator.

(1) He must be of the full age of thirty years, and must, when chosen, be an elector entitled to vote in some State at the election of Members of the House of Representatives of the Commonwealth, and must have been for five years at the least a resident within the limits of the Commonwealth as existing at the time when he is chosen:

(2) He must be either a natural born subject of the Queen, or a subject of the Queen naturalized by or under a Law of the Parliament of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, or of the Parliament of one of the said Colonies, or of the Parliament of the Commonwealth, or of a State, at least five years before he is chosen.

16. The Senate shall, at its first meeting and before proceeding to the despatch of any other business, choose a Senator Member to be the President of the Senate; and as often as the office of President becomes vacant the Senate shall again choose a Senator Member to be the President; and the President shall preside at all meetings of the Senate; and the choice of the President shall be made known to the Governor-General by a deputation of the Senate.

Election of President of the Senate.

The President may be removed from office by a vote of the Senate. He may resign his office; and upon his ceasing to be a Senator Member his office shall be vacant.

17. In case of the absence of the President, the Senate may choose a Member some other Senator to perform the duties of the President during in his absence.

Absence of President provided for.

18. A Senator may, by writing under his hand addressed to the President, or to the Governor-General if there is no President, or if the President is absent from the Commonwealth to the Governor-General, resign his place in the Senate, and which thereupon the same shall become vacant.

Resignation of place in Senate.

19. The place of a Senator shall become vacant if for two consecutive months of any one whole Session of the Parliament he, without the permission of the Senate entered on its Journals, fails to give his attendance in the Senate.

Disqualification of Senator by absence

20. Upon the happening of a vacancy in the Senate the President, or if there is no President, or if the President is absent from the Commonwealth, the Governor-General shall forthwith notify the same to the Governor of the State which the Senator whose place is vacated represented in the representation of which the vacancy has happened.

Vacancy in Senate to be notified to Governor of State.

21. If Until the Parliament otherwise provides, any question arises respecting the qualification of a Senator or a vacancy in the Senate, the same shall be determined by the Senate.

Questions as to qualifications and vacancies in States Assembly.

22. Until the Parliament otherwise provides, the presence of at least one-third of the whole number of Senators, as provided by this Constitution, shall be necessary to constitute a meeting of the Senate for the exercise of its powers.

Quorum of Senate.

Voting in Senate.

23. Questions arising in the Senate shall be determined by a majority of votes, and the President shall in all cases be entitled to a vote ; and when the votes are equal the question shall pass in the negative.

PART III.—THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Constitution of House of Representatives.

24. The House of Representatives shall be composed of Members directly chosen every three years by the people of the several States, according to their respective numbers ; as nearly as practicable there shall be two members of the House of Representatives for every one member of the Senate and until the Parliament of the Commonwealth otherwise provides, each State shall have one Representative for every thirty thousand of its people.

Until the Parliament otherwise provides for the method of determining the number of members for each quota, there shall be one member for each quota of the people of the State, and the quota shall, whenever necessary, be ascertained by dividing the population of the Commonwealth as shown by the latest statistics of the Commonwealth by twice the number of the members of the Senate, and the number of members to which each State is entitled shall be determined by dividing the population of the State as shown by the latest statistics of the Commonwealth by the quota.

But each provided that in the case of any of the existing Colonies of New South Wales, New Zealand, Queensland, Tasmania, Victoria, and Western Australia, and the Province of South Australia, until the number of the people is such as to entitle the State to four Representatives it shall have four Representatives shall be entitled to five Representatives at the least.

26. When in any State the people of any race are not entitled by law to vote at elections for the more numerous House of the Parliament of the State, the Representation of that State in the House of Representatives shall be reduced in the proportion which the number of people of that race in the State bears to the whole number of the people of the State.

25. In ascertaining the number of the people of any State, so as to determine the number of members to which the State is entitled, there shall be deducted from the whole number of the people of the State the number of the people of any race not entitled to vote at elections for the more numerous House of the Parliament of the State.

Mode of calculating number of Members.

26. 27. When upon the apportionment of Representatives it is found that after dividing the number of the people of a State by the quota number in respect of which a State is entitled to one Representative there remains a surplus greater than one-half of such number quota, the State shall have one additional more Representative.

Representatives in first Parliament.

27. 28. Notwithstanding anything in section twenty-four the number of members to be chosen by each State at the first election shall be as follows : (To be determined according to latest statistical returns at the date of the passing of the Act and in relation to the quota referred to in previous sections).

29. A fresh apportionment of Representatives to the States shall be made after each Census of the people of the Commonwealth, which shall be taken at intervals not longer than ten years. But a fresh apportionment shall not take effect until the then next General Election.

Increase of number of House of Representatives.

28. 30. Subject to the provisions of this Constitution the number of Members of the House of Representatives may be from time to time increased or diminished by the Parliament of the Commonwealth, but so that the proportionate representation of the several States, according to the numbers of their people, and the minimum number of Members, prescribed by this Constitution, for any State shall be preserved.

29. 31. Until the Parliament otherwise provides the electoral divisions of the several States for the purpose of returning members of the House of Representatives and the number of members to be chosen for each electoral division shall be determined from time to time by the Parliaments of the several States. Until division each State shall be one electorate. Electoral divisions.

30. 25. Until the Parliament otherwise provides the qualification of electors of Members of the House of Representatives shall be in each State that which is prescribed by the law of the State as the qualification ~~for~~ of electors of the more numerous House of the Parliament of the State. But in the choosing of such members each elector shall vote only once, and if any elector votes more than once he shall be guilty of a misdemeanour, and no elector who has at the establishment of the Commonwealth, or who afterwards acquires a right to vote at elections for the more numerous House of the Parliament of the State, shall whilst the qualification continues be prevented by any law of the Commonwealth from exercising such right at elections for the House of Representatives. Qualification of electors.

31. 32. Until the Parliament otherwise provides the qualifications of a Member of the House of Representatives shall be as follows :— Qualifications of Member of House of Representatives.

- (1) He must be of the full age of twenty-one years, and must when elected chosen be an elector entitled to vote in some State at the election of members of the House of Representatives or a person qualified to become such elector and must have been for three years at the least a resident within the limits of the Commonwealth as existing at the time when he is elected :
- (2) He must be either a natural born subject of the Queen, or a subject of the Queen naturalized by or under a law of the Parliament of Great Britain and Ireland, or of the Parliament of one of the said Colonies, or of the Parliament of the Commonwealth, or of a State, at least ~~three~~ five years before he is elected.

32. 33. A ~~Senator~~ Member of the Senate shall not be capable of being elected chosen or of sitting as a Member of the House of Representatives. Disqualification of Senators.

33. 34. The House of Representatives shall, at its first meeting after every General Election, and before proceeding to the despatch of any other business, choose a Member to be the Speaker of the House, and as often as the office of Speaker becomes vacant the House shall again choose a Member to be Speaker ; and the Speaker shall preside at all meetings of the House of Representatives ; and the choice of a Speaker shall be made known to the Governor-General by a deputation of the House. Election of Speaker of House of Representatives.

The Speaker may be removed from office by a vote of the House, or may resign his office.

34. 35. In case of the absence of the Speaker, the House of Representatives may choose ~~some other~~ a Member to perform the duties of the Speaker during his absence. Absence of Speaker provided for.

35. 36. A Member of the House of Representatives may, by writing, under his hand addressed to the Speaker, or to the Governor-General if there is no Speaker, or if the Speaker he is absent from the Commonwealth, to the Governor-General, resign his place in the House of Representatives, and which thereupon ~~the same~~ shall become vacant. Resignation of place in House of Representatives.

Disqualification of Member by absence.

36. ~~37.~~ The place of a Member of the House of Representatives shall become vacant if for two consecutive months of any one whole Session of the Parliament he, without permission of the House of Representatives entered on its Journals, fails to give his attendance in the House.

Issue of new writs.

37. ~~38.~~ Upon the happening of a vacancy in the House of Representatives, the Speaker shall, upon a resolution of the House, issue his writ for the election of a new member.

In the case of a vacancy by death or resignation happening when the Parliament is not in session, or during an adjournment of the House for a period of which a part longer than seven days is unexpired, the Speaker, or if there is no Speaker, or if he is absent from the Commonwealth, the Governor-General shall issue, or cause to be issued, a the writ without such resolution.

Quorum of House of Representatives.

38. ~~39.~~ Until the Parliament otherwise provides the presence of at least one-third of the whole number of the Members of the House of Representatives shall be necessary to constitute a meeting of the House for the exercise of its powers.

Voting in House of Representatives.

39. ~~40.~~ Questions arising in the House of Representatives shall be determined by a majority of votes other than that of the Speaker; and when the votes are equal, but ~~not otherwise~~, the Speaker shall have a casting vote but otherwise he shall not vote.

Duration of House of Representatives.

40. ~~41.~~ Every House of Representatives shall continue for three years from the day appointed for the first meeting of the House, and no longer, subject, nevertheless, to but may be sooner dissolved by the Governor-General.

The Parliament shall be called together not later than thirty days after the day appointed for the return of the Writs for a General Election.

Writs for General Election.

41. ~~42.~~ For the purpose of holding General Elections of Members to serve in the House of Representatives, the Governor-General may cause Writs to be issued by such persons, in such form, and addressed to such Returning Officers, as he thinks fit.

The Writs shall be issued within ten days from the expiry of a Parliament, or from the proclamation of a dissolution.

Continuance of existing Election Laws until the Parliament otherwise provides.

42. ~~43.~~ Until the Parliament of the Commonwealth otherwise provides, the laws in force in the several States for the time being, relating to the following matters, namely: The manner of conducting Elections for the more numerous House of the Parliament of the State the proceedings at such elections, the oaths to be taken by voters, the Returning Officers, their powers and duties, the periods during which Elections may be continued, the execution of new Writs in case of places vacated otherwise than by dissolution, and offences against the laws regulating such Elections, shall ~~respectively~~ as nearly as practicable apply to Elections in the several States of Members to serve in of the House of Representatives.

Questions as to
vacancies.

43. ~~44.~~ Until the Parliament otherwise provides any question arises respecting the qualification of a Member or a vacancy in the House of Representatives, the same shall be heard and determined by the House of Representatives.

PART IV.—PROVISIONS RELATING TO BOTH HOUSES.

Allowance to Members.

44. ~~45.~~ Until the Parliament otherwise provides each member whether of the Senate and or of the House of Representatives shall receive an annual allowance for his services, the amount of which shall be fixed by the Parliament from time to time. Until other provision is made in that behalf by the Parliament the amount of such annual allowance shall be ~~Five hundred pounds~~ of Four hundred pounds a year, to be reckoned from the day on which he takes his seat.

5. 46. Any person—

- (1) Who has taken an oath or made a declaration or acknowledgment of allegiance, obedience, or adherence to a Foreign Power, or has done any act whereby he has become a subject or a citizen or entitled to the rights or privileges of a subject or a citizen of a Foreign Power ; or

THE FEDERAL JUDICATURE.

1. The Parliament of the Commonwealth shall have power to establish a Court, which shall be called the Supreme Court of Australia, and shall consist of a Chief Justice, and so many other Justices, not less than four, as the Parliament from time to time prescribes. The Parliament may also from time to time, subject to the provisions of this Constitution, establish other Courts.

71. The judicial power of the Commonwealth shall be vested in one Supreme Court, to be called the High Court of Australia, and in such other Courts as The Parliament may from time to time create or invest with federal jurisdiction. The High Court shall consist of a Chief Justice, and so many other Justices, not less than four, as The Parliament may from time to time prescribe.

Judicial power and Courts.

2. The Judges of the Supreme Court of Australia and of the other Courts of the Commonwealth shall hold their offices during good behaviour, and shall receive such salaries as may from time to time be fixed by the Parliament; but the salary paid to any Judge shall not be diminished during his continuance in office.

72. The Justices of the High Court and of the other courts created by the Parliament:

Judges' tenure, appointment, removal, and remuneration.

- (1) Shall hold their offices during good behaviour:
- (2) Shall be appointed by the Governor-General in Council:
- (3) Shall not be removed except for misbehaviour or incapacity, and then only by the Governor-General in Council, upon an address from both Houses of The Parliament in the same Session praying for such removal:
- (4) Shall receive such remuneration as The Parliament may from time to time fix; but such remuneration shall not be diminished during their continuance in office.

Extent of judicial power.

73. The judicial power shall extend to all matters:—

- (1) Arising under this Constitution, or involving its interpretation:
- (2) Arising under any laws made by The Parliament:

CHAPTER IV.

FINANCE AND TRADE.

Consolidated
Revenue Fund.

81. 1. All duties, revenues, and moneys, raised or received by the Executive Government of the Commonwealth, under the authority of this Constitution, shall form one Consolidated Revenue Fund to be appropriated for the Public Service of the Commonwealth in the manner and subject to the charges provided by this Constitution.

collection.

82. 2. The Consolidated Revenue Fund shall be permanently charged with the costs, charges, and expenses incident to the collection, management, and receipt thereof, which costs, charges, and expenses shall form the first charge thereon; and the revenue of the Commonwealth shall in the first instance be applied to the payment of the expenditure of the Commonwealth.

Money to be
law.

83. 3. No money shall be drawn from the Treasury of the Commonwealth except under appropriations made by law and by warrant countersigned by the Chief Officer of Audit of the Commonwealth.

The Commonwealth
to have exclusive power to levy duties of Customs and Excise and
a certain time.

84. 4. The Parliament of the Commonwealth shall have the sole power and authority, subject to the provisions of this Constitution, to impose Customs duties, and to impose duties of Excise upon goods for the time being the subject of Customs duties, and to grant bounties upon the production or export of goods.

But this exclusive power shall not come into force until uniform duties of Customs have been imposed by the Parliament of the Commonwealth.

Upon the imposition of uniform duties of Customs by the Parliament of the Commonwealth all laws of the several States imposing duties of Customs or duties of Excise upon goods the subject of Customs duties, and all such laws offering bounties upon the production or export of goods, shall cease to have effect.

The control and collection of duties of Customs and Excise and the control of the payment of bounties shall nevertheless pass to the Executive Government of the Commonwealth upon the establishment of the Commonwealth.

This section shall not apply to bounties or aids to mining for gold silver or other metals.

Transfer of officers.

85. 5. Upon the establishment of the Commonwealth, all officers employed by the Government of any State in any Department of the Public Service the control of which is by this Constitution assigned to the Commonwealth, shall become subject to the control of the Executive Government of the Commonwealth, and thereupon any such officer shall, if he is not retained in the service of the Commonwealth, be entitled to receive from the State any gratuity or other compensation payable under the law of the State on abolition of his office; but if he is retained in the service of the Commonwealth he shall be entitled to retire from office at the time and upon the pension or retiring allowance permitted and provided by the law of the State on such retirement, and the pension or retiring allowance shall be paid by the State, and by the Commonwealth respectively in the proportion which his service with the State bears to the whole term of his service, and ~~But~~ all existing and accruing rights of any such officers so retained in the service of the Commonwealth shall be preserved.

86. ~~6.~~ All lands, buildings, works, vessels, ~~and~~ materials and things necessarily appertaining to, or used in connexion with, any Department of the Public Service the control of which is by this Constitution assigned transferred to the Commonwealth, shall, from ~~and after the date of the establishment of the Commonwealth,~~ be taken over by and belong to vest in the Commonwealth, either absolutely, or, in the case of the Departments controlling Customs and Excise and Bounties, for such time as may be necessary.

Transfer of land and buildings.

~~And~~ the fair value thereof or of the use thereof, as the case may be shall be paid by the Commonwealth to the State from which they are so taken over. Such value shall be ascertained by mutual agreement, or, if no agreement can be made, in the manner in which the value of land or of an interest in land taken by the Government of the State for the like public purposes is ascertained under the laws of the State at the establishment of the Commonwealth.

87. ~~7.~~ Until uniform duties of Customs have been imposed by the Parliament of the Commonwealth, the powers of the Parliaments of the several States existing at the date of the establishment of the Commonwealth respecting the imposition of duties of Customs, the imposition of and duties of excise upon goods the subject of Customs duties, and the offering of bounties upon the production or export of goods, and the collection and payment thereof respectively, shall continue as theretofore.

Collection of existing duties of Customs and Excise.

~~And~~ until such uniform duties have been imposed, the Laws of the several States in force at the date of the establishment of the Commonwealth respecting duties of Customs, and duties of excise on goods the subject of Customs duties, and bounties, and the collection and payment thereof, shall remain in force, subject nevertheless to such alterations of the amount of duties or bounties as the Parliaments of the several States may make from time to time; and such the duties and bounties shall continue to be collected and paid as theretofore, but by ~~and to~~ the Officers of the Commonwealth.

88. Uniform duties of customs shall be imposed within two years after the establishment of the Commonwealth.

Uniform duties of Customs.

89. ~~8.~~ So soon as the Parliament of the Commonwealth has imposed uniform duties of Customs have been imposed trade and intercourse throughout the Commonwealth, whether by means of internal carriage or ocean navigation, shall be absolutely free.

On establishment of uniform duties of Customs and Excise, trade within the Commonwealth to be free.

9. The Revenue of the Commonwealth shall be applied, in the first instance, in the payment of the expenditure of the Commonwealth, which shall be charged to the several States in proportion to the numbers of their people, and the surplus shall, until uniform duties of Customs have been imposed, be returned to the several States or parts of the Commonwealth in proportion to the amount of Revenue raised therein respectively, subject to the following provisions:—

- (1) As to duties of Customs or Excise, provision shall be made for ascertaining, as nearly as may be, the amount of duties collected in each State or part of the Commonwealth in respect of dutiable goods which are afterwards exported to another State or part of the Commonwealth, and the amount of the duties so ascertained shall be taken to have been collected in the State or part to which the goods have been so exported, and shall be added to the duties actually collected in that State or part, and deducted from the duties collected in the State or part of the Commonwealth from which the goods were exported:

The Constitution of the Commonwealth of Australia.

- (2) As to the proceeds of direct taxes, the amount contributed or raised in respect of income earned in any State or part of the Commonwealth, or arising from property situated in any State or part of the Commonwealth, and the amount contributed or raised in respect of property situated in any State or part of the Commonwealth, shall be taken to have been raised in that State or part:
- (3) The amount of any bounties paid to any of the people of a State or part of the Commonwealth shall be deducted from the amount of the surplus to be returned to that State or part.

After uniform duties of Customs have been imposed, the surplus shall be returned to the several States or parts of the Commonwealth in the same manner and proportions until the Parliament otherwise prescribes.

Such return shall be made monthly, or at such shorter intervals as may be convenient.

Accounts to be kept.

90. Until uniform duties of customs have been imposed, there shall be shown, in the books of the Treasury of the Commonwealth, in respect of each State—

- (1) The revenues collected from duties of customs and excise, and from the performance of the services and the exercise of the powers transferred from the State to the Commonwealth by this Constitution:
- (2) The expenditure of the Commonwealth in the collection of duties of customs and excise, and in the performance of the services and the exercise of the powers transferred from the State to the Commonwealth by this Constitution:
- (3) The monthly balance (if any) in favour of the State.

Balance to be paid to States after deduction.

From the balance so found in favour of each State there shall be deducted its share of the expenditure of the Commonwealth in the exercise of the original powers given to it by this Constitution, and this share shall be in the numerical proportion of the people of the State to those of the Commonwealth as shown by the latest statistics of the Commonwealth. After such deduction the surplus shown to be due to the State shall be paid to the State month by month.

Expenditure.

91. During the first three years after the establishment of the Commonwealth, notwithstanding anything contained in the last section, the total yearly expenditure of the Commonwealth, in the exercise of the original powers given to it by this Constitution, shall not exceed the sum of Three hundred thousand pounds; and the total yearly expenditure of the Commonwealth in the performance of the services and the exercise of the powers transferred from the States to the Commonwealth by this Constitution shall not exceed the sum of One million two hundred and fifty thousand pounds.

Payment to each State for five years after uniform Tariffs.

92. During the first five years after uniform duties of customs have been imposed the aggregate amount to be paid to the whole of the States for any year shall not be less than the aggregate amount returned to them during the year last before the imposition of such duties.

- (1) Subject to the last paragraph, for a period of five years after the imposition of uniform duties of customs, the total amount of duties of customs and excise collected in each year in any State, or estimated as hereinafter provided, as the case may require, shall be repaid to such State of the Commonwealth, after deducting from the amount, in proportion to the population, the share of the State in the total expenditure of the Commonwealth not provided for by other means of revenue. The repayment shall be made month by month to the several States, in, as nearly as practicable, the proper proportions :

- (2) For the purpose of ascertaining the proportion of revenue from customs and excise collected in each State there shall, for the first year after the imposition of uniform duties of customs, be shown in the books of the Treasury of the Commonwealth the total amount collected in each State for duties of customs and excise :
- (3) During such first year the duty chargeable under the uniform Tariff upon goods which are imported into any State (whether duty has or has not been actually paid thereon), and during that year exported to any other State for consumption therein, shall be deemed to have been collected in, and shall be credited to, such other State only ; and all duties of excise paid in respect of any goods manufactured in any State, and so exported to another State for consumption therein, shall be deemed to have been collected in, and shall be credited to, such other State only :
- (4) For the purpose of estimating the amount of the customs and excise arising in each State during each of the four years next after such first year, an average shall be taken by dividing the total customs and excise collected in the whole Commonwealth during such first year by the total population of the Commonwealth, as shown by the latest statistics of the Commonwealth, and the result shall be deemed to be the amount contributed by each person :
- (5) Where the amount credited to any State during such first year is in excess of the amount of the average so ascertained, there shall in each of the next four years be deducted therefrom one-fifth part of the excess ; and where the amount so credited is less than such average, there shall be added to the amount one-fifth part of the sum by which the amount so credited is less than the average ; and the sums so ascertained shall be the estimated amounts to be repaid in each of the four years to the States respectively.

93. After the expiration of five years from the imposition of uniform duties of customs, each State shall be deemed to contribute to the revenue an equal sum per head of its population, and all surplus revenue over the expenditure of the Commonwealth shall be distributed month by month among the several States in proportion to the numbers of their people as shown by the latest statistics of the Commonwealth.

Distribution of surplus.

94. 10. Until the Parliament of the Commonwealth otherwise provides, the laws in force in the several Colonies at the date of the establishment of the Commonwealth with respect to the receipt of revenue and the expenditure of money on account of the Government of the Colony, and the review and audit of such receipt and expenditure, shall apply to the receipt of revenue and the expenditure of money on account of the Commonwealth in the respective States in the same manner as if the Commonwealth, or the Government or an Officer of the Commonwealth, were mentioned therein whenever a Colony, or the Government or an Officer of a Colony, is mentioned or referred to.

Audit of accounts.

Equality of Trade.

No preference to one State over another.

95. 41. Preference shall not be given by any law or regulation of commerce or revenue to the ports of one State ^{part of the Commonwealth} over the ports ^{those of another part of the Commonwealth} State, and any law or regulation made by the Commonwealth, or by any State, or by any authority constituted by the Commonwealth or by any State, having the effect of derogating from freedom of trade or commerce, between the different parts of the Commonwealth, shall be null and void.

Inter-State Commission.

96. The Parliament may make laws constituting an Inter-State Commission to execute and maintain upon railways within the Commonwealth, and upon rivers flowing through, in, or between two or more States, the provisions of this Constitution relating to trade and commerce.

Powers of Commission.

97. The Commission shall have such powers of adjudication and administration as may be necessary for its purposes and as The Parliament may from time to time determine.

12. The Parliament of the Commonwealth may make laws prohibiting or annulling any law or regulation made by any State, or by any authority constituted by any State, having the effect of derogating from freedom of trade or commerce between the different parts of the Commonwealth.

Consolidation of Public Debts of States.

13. The Parliament of the Commonwealth may, with the consent of the Parliaments of all the States, make laws for taking over and consolidating the whole or any part of the public debt of any State or States, but so that a State shall be liable to indemnify the Commonwealth in respect of the amount of a debt taken over, and that the amount of interest payable in respect of a debt shall be deducted and retained from time to time from the share of the Surplus Revenue of the Commonwealth which would otherwise be payable to the State.

Taking over public debts of States.

98. The Parliament may take over the whole or a rateable proportion of the public debts of the States as existing at the establishment of the Commonwealth, and may from time to time convert, renew, or consolidate such debts, or any part thereof; and the States respectively shall indemnify the Commonwealth in respect of the amount of the debts taken over; and thereafter the amount of interest payable in respect of the debts shall be deducted and retained from time to time from the respective shares of the surplus revenue of the Commonwealth which would otherwise be payable to the States, or if there be no surplus revenue payable, or if such surplus revenue be insufficient, then the amount shall be charged to and paid by the respective States wholly or in part. The rateable proportion of the debts of the several States to be taken over is to be calculated on the basis of the populations of the several States as ascertained by the latest statistics of the Commonwealth.

CHAPTER V.

THE STATES.

Continuance of powers of Parliaments of the States.

99. 4. All powers which at the date of the establishment of the Commonwealth are vested in the Parliaments of the several Colonies, and which are not by this Constitution exclusively vested in the

The Constitution of the Commonwealth of Australia.

Parliament of the Commonwealth, or withdrawn from the Parliaments of the several States, are reserved to, and shall remain vested in, the Parliaments of the States respectively.

100. ^{2.} All Laws in force in any of the Colonies relating to any of the matters declared by this Constitution to be within the Legislative powers of the Parliament of the Commonwealth shall, except as otherwise provided by this Constitution, continue in force in the States respectively, and may be repealed or altered by the Parliaments of the States, until other provision is made in that behalf by the Parliament of the Commonwealth.

Validity of existing laws.

101. ^{3.} When a Law of a State is inconsistent with a Law of the Commonwealth, the latter shall prevail, and the former shall, to the extent of the inconsistency, be invalid.

Inconsistency of Laws.

102. ^{4.} All powers and functions which are at the date of the establishment of the Commonwealth vested in the Governors of the Colonies respectively, shall, so far as the same are capable of being exercised after the establishment of the Commonwealth in relation to the government of the States, continue to be vested in the Governors of the States respectively.

Powers to be exercised by Governors of States.

^{5.} All references or communications required by the Constitution of any State or otherwise to be made by the Governor of the State to the Queen shall be made through the Governor-General, as Her Majesty's Representative in the Commonwealth, and the Queen's pleasure shall be made known through him.

103. ^{6.} Subject to the provisions of this Constitution, the Constitutions of the several States of the Commonwealth shall continue as at the date of the establishment of the Commonwealth, until altered by or under the authority of the Parliaments thereof in accordance with the provisions of their respective Constitutions.

Saving of Constitutions.

^{7.} In each State of the Commonwealth there shall be a Governor.

^{8.} The Parliament of a State may make such provisions as it thinks fit as to the manner of appointment of the Governor of the State, and for the tenure of his office, and for his removal from office.

104. ^{9.} The provisions of this Constitution relating to the Governor of a State extend and apply to the Governor for the time being of the State, or other the Chief Executive Officer or Administrator of the government of the State, by whatever title he is designated.

Application of provisions referring to Governor.

^{10.} A member of the Senate or House of Representatives shall not be capable of being chosen or of sitting as a member of any House of the Parliament of a State.

^{11.} If a member of a House of the Parliament of a State is, with his own consent, chosen as a member of either House of the Parliament of the Commonwealth, his place in the first-mentioned House of Parliament shall become vacant.

105. ^{12.} The Parliament of a State may at any time surrender any part of the State to the Commonwealth, and upon such surrender and the acceptance thereof by the Commonwealth such part of the State shall become and be subject to the exclusive jurisdiction of the Parliament of the Commonwealth.

A State may cede any of its territory.

106. ^{13.} After uniform duties of customs have been imposed A State shall not impose any taxes or duties levy any impost or charge on imports or exports, except such as are may be necessary for executing the inspection laws of the State; and the net produce of all taxes and States not to levy import or export duties, except for certain purposes.

~~duties~~ imposts and charges imposed by a State on imports or exports shall be for the use of the Commonwealth; and any such inspection laws may be annulled by the Parliament of the Commonwealth.

Nor maintain forces nor tax the property of the Commonwealth.

107. 14. A State shall not, without the consent of the Parliament of the Commonwealth, ~~impose any duty of tonnage, or~~ raise or maintain any military or naval force, or impose any tax on ~~any land or other~~ property of any kind belonging to the Commonwealth; nor shall the Commonwealth impose any tax on ~~any land or~~ property of any kind belonging to a State.

State not to coin money.

108. 15. A State shall not coin money, or make anything but gold and silver coin a legal tender in payment of debts.

Nor prohibit any

109. 16. A State shall not make any law prohibiting the free exercise of any religion.

Protection of citizens of the Commonwealth.

110. 17. A State shall not make or enforce any law abridging any privilege or immunity of citizens of other States of the Commonwealth, nor shall a State deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.

Recognition of Acts of State of various States.

111. 18. Full faith and credit shall be given, throughout the Commonwealth, to the Laws, the Public Acts and Records, and the Judicial Proceedings, of the States.

Protection of States from invasion.

112. 19. The Commonwealth shall protect every State against invasion and, on the application of the Executive Government of a State, against domestic violence.

Custody of offenders against laws of the Commonwealth.

113. 20. Every State shall make provision for the detention and punishment in its prisons of persons accused or convicted of offences against the laws of the Commonwealth, and the Parliament of the Commonwealth may make laws to give effect to this provision.

CHAPTER VI.

NEW STATES.

existing Colonies to the Commonwealth.

114. 1. The Parliament may from time to time admit to the Commonwealth Any of the existing Colonies of (name the existing Colonies which have not adopted the Constitution) may upon adopting this Constitution be admitted to the Commonwealth, and shall thereupon become and be a State of the Commonwealth and may from time to time establish new States, and may upon such admission or establishment make and impose such terms and conditions, including the extent of representation in either House of the Parliament, as it thinks fit.

2. The Parliament of the Commonwealth may from time to time establish and admit to the Commonwealth new States, and may upon such establishment and admission make and impose such conditions, as to the extent of representation in either House of the Parliament or otherwise, as it thinks fit.

Provisional
Territories.

115. 3. The Parliament may make such laws as it thinks fit for the provisional administration and government of any territory surrendered by any State to and accepted by the Commonwealth, or any territory in the Pacific placed by the Queen under the authority of and accepted by the Commonwealth, or otherwise acquired by the Commonwealth, and may in any such case allow the representation of such territory in either House of the Parliament to ~~such~~ the extent and on the such terms as which it thinks fit.

116. 4. The Parliament of the Commonwealth may, from time to time, with the consent of the Parliament of a State, increase, diminish, or otherwise alter the limits of the State, upon such terms and conditions as may be agreed to, and may, with the like consent, make provision respecting the effect and operation of any such increase or diminution or alteration of territory in relation to any State affected by it.

Alteration of limits of State.

117. 5. A new State shall not be formed by separation of territory from a State without the consent of the Parliament thereof, nor shall a State be formed by the union of two or more States or parts of States, or the limits of a State be altered, without the consent of the Parliament or Parliaments of the State or States concerned affected.

Saving of rights of States.

CHAPTER VII.

MISCELLANEOUS.

118. 1. The seat of Government of the Commonwealth shall be determined by the Parliament.

Seat of Government.

Until such determination is made the Parliament shall be summoned to meet at such place within the Commonwealth as a majority of the Governors of the States, or, in the event of an equal division of opinion amongst the Governors, as the Governor-General shall direct.

119. 2. The Queen may authorize the Governor-General from time to time to appoint any person or any persons jointly or severally to be his Deputy or Deputies within any part or parts of the Commonwealth, and in that capacity to exercise during the pleasure of the Governor-General such of the powers and functions of the Governor-General as he deems it necessary or expedient to assign to such Deputy or Deputies, subject to any limitations or directions expressed or given by the Queen, but the appointment of such Deputy or Deputies shall not affect the exercise by the Governor-General himself of any power or function.

Power to Her Majesty to authorize Governor-General to appoint Deputies.

120. 3. In reckoning the numbers of the people of a State or other part of the Commonwealth aboriginal natives of Australia shall not be counted.

Aborigines of Australia not to be counted in reckoning population.

CHAPTER VIII.

AMENDMENT OF THE CONSTITUTION.

121. 1. The provisions of this Constitution shall not be altered except in the following manner :—

Mode of amending the Constitution.

Any proposed law for the alteration thereof must be passed by an absolute majority of the Senate and of the House of Representatives, and shall thereupon be submitted to Conventions, to be elected by the electors of the several States qualified to vote for the election of Members of the House of Representatives in each State to the electors qualified to vote for the election of Members of the House of Representatives, not less than two nor more than six calendar months after the passage through both Houses of the proposed law.

The vote shall be taken in such manner as the Parliament prescribes.

The Conventions shall be summoned, elected, and held in such manner as the Parliament of the Commonwealth prescribes by law, and shall, when elected, proceed to vote upon the proposed amendment.

And if the proposed amendment is approved by the Conventions of a majority of the States, and if the people of the States whose Conventions and a majority of the electors voting approve of the amendment proposed law it are also a majority of the people of the Commonwealth, the proposed amendment shall be presented to the Governor-General for the Queen's assent. But until the qualification of electors of Members of the House of Representatives becomes uniform throughout the Commonwealth only one-half the votes for and against the proposed law shall be counted in any State in which adult suffrage prevails.

But an amendment alteration by which the proportionate representation of any State in either House of the Parliament of the Commonwealth, or the minimum number of Representatives of a State in the House of Representatives, is diminished, shall not become law without the consent of the Convention of majority of the electors voting in that State.

REPORT UPON THE FINANCIAL PROPOSALS OF THE BILL TO CONSTITUTE THE COMMONWEALTH OF AUSTRALIA.

Melbourne, 12th July, 1897.

To the Honorable the Acting Treasurer.

SIR,

In compliance with your instructions we have the honour to present to you the following report upon the financial proposals of the Bill to constitute the Commonwealth of Australia.

SECTION 92.

The provision of the first paragraph of section 92 that the aggregate amount payable to the states during the first five years after uniform Duties of Customs have been imposed shall not be less in any one year than the aggregate amount returned to them during the last year before the imposition of such duties might prove difficult to carry out. A Tariff would have to be framed which would produce the same revenue without intercolonial duties as the various state Tariffs produced the preceding years with intercolonial duties. From foreign goods there would, therefore, have to be raised an additional sum which, according to the figures before the Convention, would amount to £909,000, or £849,000 ; and, according to a later estimate prepared for us by the Customs Department, to £988,000. The actual loss from intercolonial free-trade would probably be greater than any of these figures indicate. The larger the sphere embraced by the Commonwealth, the less necessity for foreign imports. The Commonwealth territory would be more self-supporting than any one state ; for instance, intercolonial free-trade in sugar would not entail the loss of duty on sugar which now comes from Queensland only, but the duty on all sugar ; for, with a duty on foreign sugar, Queensland and New South Wales would supply in a very short time the requirements of all the Australian Colonies, and no import duties would be collected. Many other articles would in a lesser degree be affected in the same manner. We cannot but think that intercolonial free-trade would involve an immediate loss of revenue of not less than £1,000,000, and, subsequently, a still heavier loss. If then the test year (the year before uniform duties) should produce £6,086,000 net revenue from Customs and Excise, the new Federal Tariff would have to increase the rates on foreign goods by about 18 per cent., in order that the Commonwealth might fulfil its obligations under the first part of section 92. The revenue of the test year would, however, with no increase of trade or taxation, be about £1,000,000 less than that of the year 1895, which we have adopted as a basis of calculation, owing to the fact that the operation of the free-trade Tariff of New South Wales will lead to a deficiency of that amount in the revenue of that state as compared with 1895. It has been estimated that the Commonwealth will require to impose duties which will realize £2 per head of the population, and this sum is abnormal. From the latest statistics supplied to us by the Assistant Government Statist in regard to some other countries, we find that the amounts collected are as follows :—

United Kingdom	£1·24
India	·04
Cape Colony	·88
Canada	1·05
United States	·97
Argentine Republic	1·47
Belgium	·55
France	1·35
Germany	·6
Switzerland	·56

In none of these does the sum derived per head approach that which is now raised in the Australian Colonies, and which it is proposed to raise in the Commonwealth.

This heavy obligation of the Commonwealth two years after its inception we regard with grave apprehension, and the provision seems somewhat inconsistent seeing that five years later the Commonwealth is left without any kindred obligations whatever.

The sum returnable is to be fixed on the basis of one year only, which year must necessarily be one of convulsions of trade, for an impending Tariff must necessarily have a great effect upon the trade of the year immediately preceding its adoption. If it should be anticipated that the duties in force in any colony will be increased by the uniform Tariff, goods will be imported very largely, and as a consequence the revenue would be much inflated in the test year. If, on the other hand, a decrease of duty be expected, the test year would show a lower revenue than the average. Presuming the free-trade Tariff of New South Wales be not altered in the interval, the Commonwealth would be flooded with goods not only for home consumption but also for exportation to the neighbouring colonies which would have paid no duty, as importers would naturally lay in large stocks in anticipation; but as no duty would be charged upon these heavy imports, the total revenue of the test year would not be affected. It is true that the other states are to be credited with the duty on all goods which may be imported into their territories, whether duty has been paid thereon or not, but the revenue will not be actually collected to aid the Commonwealth to meet its financial obligations.

It is laid down as a condition that the aggregate amount to be returned to the states shall not be less than the amount paid to them in the last year preceding the imposition of a uniform Tariff; but if the revenue suffers largely, as it undoubtedly will, in the first year of the uniform Tariff from the cause mentioned, it seems not unlikely that this condition could not be fulfilled, unless the uniform Tariff were made a very high one. The best (and indeed the only effectual) way to provide against such loss would, of course, be that New South Wales should, on the establishment of the Federation, impose general duties in anticipation of the uniform Tariff, as this course would have the effect of preventing anticipatory importations. Failing this, the next best course would apparently be to continue the collection of intercolonial duties, but at the rates imposed by the new general and uniform Tariff, for a further period of two or three years. By this means the loss would be minimized to a great extent, and would be limited to those goods which were actually consumed in New South Wales only. Even this loss, however, would be considerable. The objection to the first of these suggestions being adopted is that it would render it more difficult to raise a sufficient sum to enable the Commonwealth to pay the fixed sum required for the following five years, and the objection to the last is that it would defer the advantages of intercolonial free-trade for a time.

A further disadvantage, in addition to the loss of duties which possibly would be occasioned by the influx of large quantities of goods into Victoria which had paid no duty, would be the effect such importations might have upon the protected industries of Victoria. It seems to us that some of these might be seriously affected for a time at all events. Taking such articles as clothing, boots and shoes, machinery, furniture, carriages, &c., it is evident that if such came into Victoria duty free the local manufacturers could not compete with them. Boots and shoes from Japan, for instance, would swamp our local manufactures of those goods.

Further, the benefits which Victoria would gain from federation would be to a certain extent lost. As we have here certain industries in full operation and capable at once of immense expansion, the benefit of intercolonial free-trade would otherwise be immediately felt by our manufacturers, as the whole Federation would be open to them as a market. This benefit would of course be for a time neutralized by the influx of free goods from other sources.

Everything points to the fact that the Commonwealth would have under great difficulties to impose duties to produce a large revenue, and that it would be compelled to frame the first Tariff principally for revenue purposes.

At the expiration of the period provided for in section 92, there is absolutely no limit fixed as to the amount of the Customs and Excise duties which shall be retained by the Commonwealth, or returned to the states, except that the sums to be retained by the Commonwealth must, under section 90, be used in the exercise of the powers conferred upon it by the Bill. These powers are enormous, and, in one particular are quite unique. Section 105 makes it clear that territory may be surrendered by a state to the Commonwealth. The Commonwealth may, therefore, use the Customs and Excise revenues to buy territory, and the states no doubt will be ready to sell if the price offered is sufficient to tempt them.

This position is different to that existing in any other Commonwealth of which we have been able to gain information. This question is outside the scope of our inquiry, except in so far as it affects the finances, but the finances and the acquisition of property are so nearly allied that we think we should report briefly on the subject.

In the United States, although no excessive revenue was handed over to the Central Government, yet the Constitution strictly limits the territory over which the Congress can exercise legislative control. This territory consists of a district not exceeding 10 miles square for the seat of Government, and places purchased by consent of the Legislatures of states for forts, magazines, dockyards, arsenals, and other needful buildings. Under this law the Congress has acquired nothing but the district of Columbia, which contains the city of Washington and which is 70 square miles in extent; and the land absolutely necessary for national works.

Constitution -
Art. 1, secs. 8-17

In Canada a large amount of territory and property was at the outset handed over to the Central Government, but a well-defined limit was made regarding the power of acquisition. The public debts were handed over to the Central Government and with them the securities for such debts.¹ The properties constituting these securities were enumerated in a schedule to the Constitution Act. The same Act provides that the several states shall retain all their respective properties not disposed of in the Act, subject only to the right of Canada to assume lands required for fortifications or defence purposes.

In South Africa it is laid down that the Union shall have power to assume only such lands and public property as are required for fortifications or defence; but in spite of this restriction the Union possesses a public estate from which it derives an annual revenue of about £300,000.

South African Act, sec. 45.

In Switzerland the cantons are specifically guaranteed by an article in the Constitution their territory and sovereignty subject only to the right of the Confederation to expropriate property for defence and national works upon payment of an indemnity, but notwithstanding this the Confederation has partly acquired, and will in time have altogether acquired, the Central and Jura-Simplon railways at a cost of about £47,000,000.

Consular reports.

Our Commonwealth will have then a power of acquiring property which is without parallel, and also after eight years the sole control of the Customs and Excise revenues, and unlimited powers of taxation. Under these circumstances the finances of the Commonwealth, or of the individual states, when the former is released from the restrictions imposed by section 92, are not matters of calculation but of pure conjecture. This matter is of vital importance to the states.

In order, on the one hand, to limit the immense financial powers which the Commonwealth will acquire, and, on the other hand, to conserve the limited powers which the states will otherwise probably lose, we put forward the following suggestion for consideration, viz. :—

“That after the expiration of five years from the imposition of uniform Duties of Customs and Excise the Commonwealth shall return to the states a fixed percentage of the net revenue derived from Customs and Excise duties.”

We would, as previously stated, have preferred that this provision should have come into force on the establishment of the uniform Tariff, but refrain from dealing with the policy of the measure.

The following tables have been prepared with the object of illustrating the operation of those sections of the Bill which deal with the adjustment of accounts between the Commonwealth and the various states. In all the calculations we have taken as a basis the estimated mean population of the year 1895; our reason for doing so being that that year is the latest for which complete trade and finance returns are available. The figures are as follow:—

TABLE I.
POPULATION, 1895.

Victoria	1,180,000

South Australia	353,000
Tasmania	159,000

Queensland	453,000
					3,500,000

The following table is intended to show the surplus returnable to the various states in the first and second years of the Commonwealth, in which years we have assumed that the Tariffs of the states will remain as at present:—

* Including Primage.

† Average of three years, 1893-4-5, taken.

In constructing this table we have founded our calculations as regards revenue on the amounts actually received in 1895, but we have found it necessary to make some modifications in the total for New South Wales. That colony was under a general Tariff in 1895, but will probably be under a limited Tariff in the first years of the Commonwealth. It has been necessary, therefore, to take for the New South Wales revenue the amount that would have been collected had the present Tariff been in full force in that colony in 1895. This reduces the amount by £975,000.

We fully recognise that the revenue of 1895 is a very doubtful basis for the revenue of four or five years hence. We are aware that any available basis is unsound, and have adopted that which to us appeared to be most likely to give an approximately correct result. Neither in this nor in the other tables have we made any allowance for increase or decrease in revenue, expenditure, population, or trade.

The total expenditure shown is taken from the Bill, because the Commonwealth has no power to expend a greater amount than that shown in the table, and we have divided the sum amongst the colonies in proportion to their average expenditure in 1893, 1894, and 1895, but our own calculations lead us to the belief that unless the expenditure of the departments transferred be reduced the amount will be insufficient, if interest on the value of public buildings be included.

In the first and second years after federation, the financial position of the colonies would be affected only in so far as they would each have to pay to the Commonwealth their share of the new expenses entailed by the Bill—estimated at £300,000. We have divided this expenditure in proportion to population, in accordance with the provisions of the Bill. That this £300,000 is the only sum to be handed by the states to the Commonwealth is not quite clear. We have taken what we believe to be the reading adopted at the Convention, but suggest that the matter should be considered when perfecting the Bill. In section 91, we read the words in “the exercise of the original powers conferred upon it by the Constitution” to mean

“the new expenditure incurred by this Constitution,” and would suggest the substitution of the latter words. The words, as they now stand, seem to embrace an amount of expenditure which the sum named—£300,000—is not intended to meet. The expenditure in doubt is such as would be entailed by Fisheries, Statistics and Census, Astronomical and Meteorological observations, &c., which we think is unprovided for. We are not certain whether the Commonwealth is responsible for any expenditure entailed by the legislative powers conferred by section 52 which does not pertain to the departments mentioned in section 69.

The initial difficulty in constructing this table has been the impossibility of obtaining data to estimate the revenue of the first year after the imposition of uniform duties. We have studied closely the tables issued at various times, applying various Tariffs to the imports of the different colonies, but we believe them to be comparatively useless. Some of our members have endeavoured to apply the Tariffs of one colony to other colonies, but have given up the task as impossible. There is no uniform system of statistics, and the statistics of each colony are framed to suit its own Tariff. For instance, to apply the Victorian duty on machinery, from which a very large quantity of machinery is exempt, to the whole of the machinery of New South Wales, which is given under one heading, would give a wrong result. Secondly, the system of valuing for ad valorem duties is quite different to the system in colonies where the articles are not subject to ad valorem duties. And further, the quantity of goods imported would alter greatly with any change of duty. The tables have necessarily been made on the assumption that the imports would remain constant, but this assumption renders them practically valueless. It is almost certain that a common Tariff would yield a much more uniform sum per head in the different states than any of the tables show. There are many modifying influences at work, one of which it is necessary to mention. If one colony imports a large quantity of any article which in another is a natural product or manufacture, it does not follow the revenue derived therefrom will bear any relation to the present importation. The importations of the non-producing state would be from the producing states, and not from foreign countries. Take, as an example, the item candles. With a uniform Tariff against foreign countries and intercolonial free-trade this article would produce much less revenue in the other colonies than at present. Victorian duty free candles would supplant the taxed article.

As the tables before the Convention differed materially in regard to the amounts collected on intercolonial imports in 1895, the Customs Department, with the aid of more complete statistics than were available at the time of the Convention, supplied us with the return A annexed hereto, and the totals for each colony as shown in this return are shown in the second column of the above table. By deducting these totals from the revenue received from Customs and Excise, we arrive at the duties on foreign goods and excise duties in each state, which together constitute the actual contribution of each state. From the table it will be seen that the contributions of the colonies, calculated in proportion to population, except those of Queensland and Western Australia, vary much less than has hitherto been supposed.

In Victoria, New South Wales, and South Australia they are practically the same, but it must be remembered that the Tariffs of those colonies in 1895, though all of a protective character, were not alike.

Table IV. applies to the first year of uniform duties, which we have assumed to be the third year of the Commonwealth. We have in this year estimated the total revenue from Customs and Excise at £6,086,000 for the following reasons. The surplus returnable in this year cannot, under the Bill, be less than that returned in the previous year, which was shown in Table II. to be £4,536,000: the expenditure is fixed at £1,550,000, therefore the total receipts must be at least as great as our estimate shows. The uniform Tariff must be so framed as to produce this amount without duties on Australian goods. In this year accounts are kept for each state, so that the duties on all goods to which the uniform Tariff applies entering any state are credited. The total amount credited may exceed £6,086,000, but only the amount received, less the expenditure, can be distributed; the amounts credited to the various states being treated as proportionals. As it is impossible to estimate these proportionals we have adopted those shown in the third figure column of Table III.

As the Bill limits the expenditure to £1,250,000 for services transferred and £300,000 for new expenditure, it has been assumed that these amounts will be actually expended. They have been divided in the table in accordance with the Bill on a population basis.

Should any greater sum than £6,086,000 be raised through increased prosperity or natural growth under the uniform Tariff the advantage will pertain wholly to the states, as the expenditure is fixed, and consequently any increase of revenue must be added to the returnable surplus.

This table shows the effect of the sliding scale. In the first two years the loss to Victoria is shown as £101,000, which represents her contribution to the new expenses of the Commonwealth. In the third year the loss to the Victorian Treasurer is £480,000; this sum gradually diminishes until the eighth year, when the colony will lose £188,000 only. This result is disadvantageous to Victoria. We should have preferred that a surplus that would have secured for her at least the revenue of the years preceding the uniform Tariff should have been allotted to Victoria in the early years of federation. Victoria will eventually be entitled, on the population basis, to a surplus of £1,530,000, and it would be much more convenient if the surplus was in the third year greater than that amount and diminishing gradually. Victoria, we believe, is more dependent than New South Wales on her Customs and Excise revenue, and would feel the loss in the early years much more severely than would the latter colony.

Had the year before the establishment of uniform duties been selected as the basis of the distribution the results would have been more acceptable to all the colonies except New South Wales, for they would have lost comparatively less in the early years, and with a diminishing instead of an increasing surplus would have had time to adjust themselves to their new conditions. If this year had been taken as a basis Victoria would have then received £1,600,000, falling in six years to £1,530,000. All the other colonies except New South Wales would be similarly affected. Another advantage of the adoption of this year would be that the Border custom-houses could be closed one year sooner, and the keeping of accounts in the manner prescribed by the Bill would be unnecessary.

It has already been explained that in constructing the above set of tables the year 1895 has been taken as a basis, and no increase in the revenues of the various colonies has been allowed for. The following table has, however, been constructed on the same lines as the former one, with the object of showing what effects would be produced if a Customs and Excise revenue of £7,030,000, the amount actually collected in 1896, were received in the year before the imposition of uniform duties.

The results shown by this table are more satisfactory than in any other which the Committee has compiled. The Victorian Treasurer loses £233,000 in the third year, £165,600 in the fourth, the loss gradually changing in the seventh to a gain, which in the eighth year amounts to £104,000. There is no doubt that in the first year of uniform duties there will be great uncertainty as to the surplus returned, and the Treasurer of Victoria must with the Treasurers of the other colonies, except New South Wales, be prepared for an immediate loss. Should, however, the expenditure of the Commonwealth prove to be less than £1,250,000, the maximum provided in the Bill, the surplus returned to each state will be proportionately greater.

No attempt has been made to introduce into the tables an adjustment based on the values of the buildings, &c., taken over from the states, as the Committee has found it impossible to obtain reliable figures.

EXCISE.

We have found some difficulty in determining what "excise" includes. The Adelaide Convention evidently intended the word to mean the duties on the manufacture or production of commodities and nothing more, and this definition is supported by standard dictionaries; but it is not at all certain that this reading is established by the Bill. The intention of the Convention is made plain by Sir George Turner's speech (page 858 of the debates), where he spoke in favour of leaving out the words limiting excise to goods "the subject of Customs duties" in order that the Federation might have power to levy duties on goods not subject to Customs duties. In interpreting the Constitution the meaning of the word as used in British legislation will very probably have a preponderating weight, and if this should be the case the Federation Bill will have a different meaning in that respect to that intended by the Convention. It would be well, therefore, to consider the meaning of the word in British law.

In the earliest English Excise ordinance, introduced by Pym, in 1643, the excise duty imposed was on the manufacture of commodities, but since that date there have been constant additions to the taxable list, and every new impost of inland revenue has borne the name of excise. The tax was subsequently extended from the manufacturers to the dealers, and a class of persons came into existence called "Excise Traders," who were compelled to take out licences, the fees for which were excise. The deficit caused by the Napoleonic wars brought with it a host of new imposts all known by the name of excise, many of which were neither on the producers of commodities nor the dealers, but were of the most miscellaneous character. A list of the excise licences in force in Great Britain in 1850 includes about 80 descriptions, and includes those issued to auctioneers, appraisers, and postmasters, and to persons permitted to kill game, to carry guns, to run stage carriages or hackney carriages. Even in the reign of Queen Victoria an Act was passed "To Repeal the Duties of Excise on Sales by Auction," &c. Although in Great Britain the original meaning of the word is being restored to that which it bore in Pym's ordinance, and the substitution of Inland Revenue Commissioners for Excise Commissioners is evidence of this, yet the meaning is not sufficiently certain to allow of the word standing without a definition, and we would suggest that it should be defined as follows:—"Excise shall mean the duty chargeable on the manufacture and production of commodities." In all the tables we have adopted this meaning.

Throughout the Bill we think the same provisions should be applied without distinction to duties both of Customs and Excise. This is by no means the case at present. Under section 52 the duties to be levied by the Commonwealth in regard to Customs and Excise are to be uniform. In section 84 the Parliament of the Commonwealth is granted the sole power to levy Duties of Customs and Excise, but the power is not to be exclusive until uniform Duties of Customs have been imposed. We propose a slight alteration of the words of the clause to make these provisions clearer, but the meaning is, however, already sufficiently plain in this respect that on the imposition of uniform Duties of Customs only the laws of the states in regard to both Customs and Excise cease to have effect. If, therefore, the Commonwealth passes a Duties of Customs Act without an Excise Act all Excise duties will at once cease. This was not, we think, the intention of the Convention, and we suggest that after the word Customs, where it first appears in the third paragraph of section 84, the words "and Excise" should be inserted.

The imposition of uniform Duties of Customs without uniform Duties of Excise would, we think, be disastrous to trade and also to the revenue; commodities would be made in those states in which the excise was lowest, or in which it did not exist, whilst the manufacturers in those states in which the Excise Duties were highest would be ruined. To avoid the possibility of this we suggest the amendment of section 88 in such a manner as to bind the Commonwealth to impose a common Excise Tariff, along with the uniform Customs Tariff, within two years of the establishment of the Commonwealth. This alteration would have a modifying effect upon sections 87, 89, 90, 92, and 93; but to make the meaning clear the words "and Excise" might be inserted after the words "Duties of Customs" in each of those sections.

SUGAR DUTIES.

The question of sugar duties requires a special attention, because the revenues of the colonies will be more affected by intercolonial free-trade in sugar than in any other article. The collections from sugar and molasses were in 1895 as follows:—

Victoria	£266,000
New South Wales	145,000
Queensland	700
South Australia	45,000
Western Australia	10,000
Tasmania	38,000
					£504,700

This position would not be maintained with intercolonial free-trade combined with a Tariff on foreign sugar, as the following facts will at once show:—

In 1895, 280 million pounds of sugar were produced in Queensland and New South Wales, whilst the foreign sugar imported amounted to only 77 millions of pounds. Of the total 357 million pounds 129 million were duty free, being consumed in the colonies in which they were produced, and 151 million of Australian, and 77 million of foreign sugar paid duty. Intercolonial free-trade would, then, at once free 151 million pounds of sugar, producing £359,000; but the loss would not end here. Queensland and New South Wales would, with a duty on foreign sugar, very soon supply the wants of the whole of the Commonwealth, and the sugar duties, amounting to £500,000, would be lost.

This does not affect the total revenue only, but also the distribution amongst the colonies. Assuming that the northern states produced no more in the first year of the uniform Tariff, which is the test year for distribution, than in the year 1895, the colonies would lose credit for sums shown above as revenue collected. The loss to the southern states would thus be disastrously disproportionate to that of the northern states.

By far the greater part of the intercolonial duty collected in Victoria is on sugar, and if Victoria had credit for all the duty on sugar consumed in her own territory she would be the best off of all the colonies in the matter of loss from intercolonial free-trade, for the other intercolonial imports are comparatively insignificant; but, as before stated, the southern states would obtain credit for their foreign imports only, which, it may be anticipated, would be small, whilst the northern states would be credited with practically nothing. The disproportion lies in the fact that the southern states are losing a revenue which they actually possess, whilst Queensland collects practically no duty, and can therefore lose nothing, and New South Wales loses the revenue on her foreign importations only—about half of those of Victoria.

Were an excise duty on sugar imposed each colony would have credit in the distribution of the surplus Customs and Excise duties for the duty on the sugar consumed within its borders, and thus a fair distribution would be established as far as this item is concerned; but we recognise that if the excise rate were as high as the import duties now existing in most of the states, this arrangement would perhaps be unfairly advantageous to Victoria, because in goods other than sugar Victoria is not an importing but an exporting state as regards Australian goods, and would lose much less revenue than the other states. A fair distribution would probably arise if the rate of excise were low and coupled with a somewhat higher import Tariff.

An excise might certainly be arrived at which would equalize the positions of the colonies in the test year, and this fact should, we think, go far to remove any apprehension felt in regard to this matter. A rate of £3 per ton on Australian sugar would neutralize the loss of import duties on the Australian sugar shipped from colony to colony.

SECTION 86.

Section 86 provides that properties appertaining to the Departments to be handed over from the states to the Commonwealth are to be taken over by and vest in the Commonwealth; but a distinction is drawn between the properties belonging to the Departments controlling Customs, Excise, and bounties, and those belonging to other Departments. The former are to be taken over at a fair rental value, and the latter at a fair capital value. This distinction is hard to understand. We gather from the debates that the object was to provide for the handing back to the states the Border custom-houses when there was no longer need for them; but this comparatively small matter could, we think, have been arranged without adopting such a radical difference in principle in regard to the two descriptions of property.

We desire, however, to make some remarks upon the method of handing over the bulk of the properties, namely, those pertaining to Defence, Post and Telegraph Offices, &c. The value of these we cannot ascertain; but the value of the whole of the properties to be handed over was, according to some figures supplied to the Sydney Convention of 1891, £10,500,000; and is, according to an estimate made by the Assistant Government Statist, £10,450,000 including lands. The deduction of the value of custom-houses would not make a great difference; but we do not think these figures represent the present value, and believe that about £6,000,000 worth of property would be handed over to the Commonwealth at its inception. The purchase money for these properties would be due on the date of the establishment of the Commonwealth, when the Treasurer would have no funds. The only way out of the difficulty would be for the Commonwealth to raise a loan to meet its obligation to the states, which loan would, in a sense, be a second mortgage on the same security. Supposing this method to be adopted, the payment to the states would be greatly deranged by the receipt of large sums of money, and the Commonwealth would begin under very bad auspices. The difficulties are so great that we cannot conceive this method of paying for the properties being adopted. Further, we have considered the possibility of the states being reimbursed by the Commonwealth taking over a portion of the debt of each state equal to the value of the properties transferred. This method was adopted in Canada, and proved practicable; but we can find no provisions in the Bill under which a similar course could be taken here.

It should be recognised that, whether buildings, &c., are transferred or not, they remain, in a sense, the property of the state. The cities of Sydney and Melbourne cannot be deprived of the benefits of their post-offices, forts, or other public buildings, unless the Commonwealth should sell them, and this could easily be provided against. The only change made by a transfer without any payment whatever would be that the Central Government would have the duty of maintaining them, and the states would be relieved of that expense.

Presuming, however, that payment of the value is a settled policy, we would hazard a suggestion that, in order to embarrass the Central Government as little as possible, and to provide against a derangement of the state finances by the receipt in a lump sum of the capital value, the properties should be acquired by a system of deferred payments. Such a system we are ready to submit if required, but it is not within the limits of our instructions.

CONCLUSION.

In conclusion, we wish to state that, whilst we have considered it our duty to point out the inequalities which would apparently be caused by the Bill if administered without reference to the varying circumstances of the colonies, we believe that the Commonwealth Parliament could adjust nearly all the difficulties in such a manner as to do justice to all the states. The main alterable factor in solving the difficulties is the uniform Tariff, which could be so framed as to neutralize the losses and gains of each state. It has already been shown that the incidence of the sugar duties can be so arranged as to be an element of adjustment between the states, but almost every item taxed can be used in the same manner as an adjuster of the accounts. There are also many other ways in which the Commonwealth Parliament, in the exercise of its vast powers, could modify the financial position of any state, and we are of opinion that it is not necessary to assume that the losses and gains shown by any calculation will prove to be correct.

PROTEST.

Whilst concurring generally with the opinions expressed in the Report, cannot altogether agree with the figures shown by the tables.

Sufficient distinction is not made in Table II. between the expenditure of the states and that of the Commonwealth; for the expenditure under uniform postal rates and a central executive would probably be reduced, and to some extent de-localized. Hence it is unlikely that under federation the ratio of the expenditure in Victoria to that of New South Wales would be as 3 is to 5, as shown.

Then, in regard to the remission of £1,000,000 in duties on intercolonial products, there are two aspects of the case (which are not, in my opinion, sufficiently emphasized in the tables and Report), viz., (1) assuming New South Wales to continue her free-trade policy; (2) assuming that colony to revert to a protective Tariff before federation. In the former case the Commonwealth, and in the latter event the States, would have to impose fresh taxation to replace the amount named.

Moreover, I consider the fixed expenditure of £1,250,000 is intended to include an allowance for interest on lands and works to be taken over, which item does not find a place in existing accounts, and which I reckon at about £82,000 for Victoria and £313,000 for all the colonies. This circumstance has been ignored in framing the tables.

In any case, I consider the £1,250,000, as fixed by the Bill, wholly inadequate for the six colonies; if interest is to be included, the amount required will be nearer £1,500,000.

I for my part should have preferred to see the tables framed with due regard to the probable growth of revenue and population, and to the changes that would be likely to occur in the future in the abnormal proportions of revenue per head, now raised in certain colonies.

APPENDIX.

Department of Trade and Customs,
Melbourne, 28th June, 1897.

SIR,

In accordance with your verbal request that the Committee appointed by yourself to report upon the financial proposals contained in the Bill to constitute the Commonwealth of Australia should submit a scheme for the transfer of property from the States to the Commonwealth, I have the honour to forward the enclosed, which was approved by the Committee but was not included in our report because the question seemed somewhat outside the scope of our original instructions.

In reference to this subject I would venture to submit, however, that there does not seem to be any adequate reason why the States should expect the Commonwealth to purchase these properties. What difference will it make to Victoria, for instance, if our Post-office in Bourke-street be nominally federal property? It will still be our Post-office, and used as such; it cannot be taken away or disposed of. If the Commonwealth closed it they would have to build another. All that could be argued is that these buildings have been built out of loan moneys and form security therefor. As regards such, the most that could apparently be fairly required would be that on transfer to the Commonwealth the latter should pay the interest on the loan money expended thereon.

I have the honour to be, Sir,
Your obedient servant,

The Hon. I. A. Isaacs, M.P., &c., &c.

H. N. P. WOLLASTON.

TRANSFER OF PROPERTY FROM THE STATES TO THE COMMONWEALTH.

The following scheme is submitted for the transfer of property from the States to the Commonwealth as being better in its working than that proposed in the Bill, and not so likely to disarrange the finances of the various States:—

Assuming that 3 per cent. is the fair annual value of the properties, it is suggested that the Federation should pay to the States 4 per cent. on the capital value thereof until such time as the extra 1 per cent. would, if funded, with compound interest at 3 per cent., amount to the purchase money. This, it is reckoned, would be in a little over 47 years. In other words, the Federation would, under this scheme, pay to the States 4 per cent. on the capital value of the properties taken over from them for 47 years, and those properties would then become the absolute property of the Commonwealth.

FEDERAL FINANCE.

Department of Trade and Customs,
Melbourne, 24th June, 1897.

With reference to our remarks on the subject of loss under the head of sugar duties, I would remind Mr. Isaacs that if the project of making our own sugar from beet turns out successfully we should without federation lose the greater portion (if not all) of our present sugar duties, as the Victorian market would of course be supplied by the locally-made article, to the exclusion of imported sugar.

Under this aspect of the case, the loss which Victoria would suffer from the abolition of intercolonial duties would be very small, as our revenue from that source is principally the duty on sugar.

The Hon. I. A. Isaacs, M.P.

H. N. P. WOLLASTON.

In New Zealand in 1891 the gross revenue was £1,653,843, viz:—From Customs duties, £1,572,467; from Excise, £63,876; and £17,500 from miscellaneous; and in 1895 it was £1,619,970, viz:—From Customs duties, £1,531,181; from Excise, £64,668; and £24,721 from miscellaneous. The gross amount per head was £2 6s. 4d. in 1894, and £2 6s. 9d. in 1895; and the percentages of Imports were 23·17 and 25·31 respectively.

* Exclusive of Wharfage Rates, Harbor and Light Dues, Tonnage Rates, Pilotage, Pearl Shell Licences, and Royalty on Guano.

† Roughly estimated.

‡ Under the free-trade tariff recently adopted, the Customs revenue of New South Wales—based on the Imports of 1895—will fall eventually to about £1,200,000, equivalent to less than 18s per head.

VICTORIA

FURTHER STATISTICAL TABLES

BEARING ON THE

QUESTION OF FEDERATION,

WITH INTRODUCTION.

COMPILED IN THE OFFICE OF THE GOVERNMENT STATIST OF VICTORIA.

INTRODUCTION.

The following tables, being in continuation of a previous series prepared in this office as well as those compiled by the Statisticians at Adelaide, and distributed at the recent Federation Convention at Adelaide, are presented with a view of throwing further light on the financial problems of Federation, and of affording some idea of the financial results that might be expected to follow from the adoption and enactment by the six colonies of Australia and Tasmania of the financial clauses of the Draft Bill to constitute the Commonwealth of Australia, as framed and approved by the Australasian Federal Convention, Adelaide, 1897.

The tables are divided into six sections, namely:—I. Present State Finances; II. Estimated Federal Finances; III. Customs and Excise Revenue, 1896, also consumption of chief dutiable articles for series of years; IV. Public Debts—showing gradual saving that would be effected by replacing loans at maturity with 3 per cent. stock; V. Finances of Chief Federated and other countries; VI. Constitution and Government of leading Federations (the only non-financial table)—showing in a tabulated form the leading features in each.

In the first section an attempt is made in Table (1) to give an idea of the present sources of Public Revenue and of the various branches of Public Expenditure, distinguishing, as far as the available published records would permit, those items which would, under Federation, appear in the Federal Accounts from those which would appertain to the States. The figures, which relate chiefly to the financial year 1894–5, are based on those published in the Australasian Statistics, 1895; but the differentiation referred to must be regarded as somewhat imperfect, owing to the absence of complete information. From this table it will be seen that of the total expenditure of the six Colonies in 1894–5, £2,950,000, or nearly 17s. per capita, was under what may be called Federal heads, and £21,120,000, or £6 1s. 4d. per capita, for purely State purposes. To defray the former amount there was required, in addition to the Postal Revenue, &c., a sum of £1,195,000, equivalent to 6s. 10d. per capita, or to 17 per cent. of the whole revenue from Customs and Excise, thus leaving a balance of Customs and Excise revenue amounting to £5,696,000, or 83 per cent. of the whole, or £1 12s. 9d. per capita, to supplement the other sources of State revenue in defraying the expenses proper of the State Governments. Omitting the Departments of Railways and Water Supply, which may be reasonably expected in a few years to become self-supporting, it will be seen that after Federation the main sources of revenue left to the States will be “other taxation,” consisting chiefly of land and income taxes (£560,000); succession, bank-note, and other stamp duties (£828,000); and business licences (£250,000);* Crown lands—a rapidly diminishing source of income;† fees, fines, &c.; and pilotage, wharfage, and harbor lights. Hence the loss to the States of so important a source of revenue as Customs and Excise will be a matter of serious moment, more especially as there is no provision in the Draft Bill to hinder the Federal authority from gradually absorbing the whole amount after the seventh year of federation. The importance of the subject in the future will be better realized by referring to Table 8, which shows that in less than a century the total revenue from this source will probably be ten times what it is now. There seems, therefore, to be an imperative necessity to safeguard the States by requiring the Federal Government to return either a fixed proportion of such revenue, or, better still, to pay an annual subsidy on a per capita basis, as in the case of Canada, to compensate for the loss.

Moreover, under section 89 of the Draft Bill, which provides for the absolute freedom of all trade and intercourse throughout the Commonwealth (not only between the States), it is questionable whether the revenue from publicans’, auctioneers’, and other business licences, at present bringing in over £350,000 annually, would not be interfered with.

* Exclusive of £106,000 paid direct to Local Bodies in Victoria.

† The Land Revenue declined from £4,320,000 in 1878 to £3,442,000 in 1894–5; that of Victoria alone fell from £957,600 to £473,500; that of Victoria, New South Wales, South Australia, and Tasmania combined from £3,831,000 to £2,729,000; whereas, in the same period, that of Queensland and Western Australia rose from £489,000 to £713,000.

Table 2.

In Table 2 an attempt is made to show more accurately the present revenue from Customs and Excise, and the present expenditure of Departments proposed to be handed over to the Federal Government. As the figures are mainly derived from the clearer and more detailed departmental statements, and relate for the most part to the calendar year, they differ somewhat from those shown in the first table, which are derived from the Treasurer's statements, which, of course, relate to the financial years.

What Departments are to be transferred?

The first difficulty in compiling the table was in finding out what Departments or branches are to be transferred. For, on the one hand, section 52 of the Bill empowers the Federal Parliament to make laws, inter alia, in respect of the following subjects:—

- (1) Customs and Excise and Bounties.
- (2) Postal, Telegraphic, Telephonic, and other like services.
- (3) Military and Naval Defence.
- (4) Ocean Beacons and Buoys, and Ocean Light-houses and Light-ships.
- (5) Quarantine.
- (6) Navigation and Shipping.
- (7) Astronomical and Meteorological Observations.
- (8) Census and Statistics.
- (9) Currency, Coinage, and Legal Tender.
- (10) Bankruptcy and Insolvency.
- (11) Copyrights, and Patents of Inventions, Designs, and Trade Marks.
- (12) Immigration and Emigration.

But, on the other hand, section 69 provides only for the immediate assumption by the Federal Executive of the Departments controlling the five first-named, and has no reference to the Departments or officers concerned with the seven last-named subjects; although in an isolated statement published with the Convention Papers, but otherwise without any apparent sign of authority, showing how the expenditure of £1,550,000 authorized under section 91 was made up, the expenditure for Census and Statistics (8), Mint (9), Bankruptcy (10), and Patents (11), is duly provided for. Provision is still wanting, however, for the officers engaged in the supervision of Navigation and Shipping (6), the Observatories (7), and the Immigration Agents (12); unless, as may possibly be intended, the powers of the Federation be restricted merely to legislation in regard to such matters.

Table 2, however, is compiled on the assumption that the statement referred to is authentic, and gives a correct clue as to how the amount of £1,550,000 was arrived at by the Finance Committee at the Convention, there being no other documentary evidence on the subject.

Advisability of including all lights.

In regard to the third item on the above list, it will be noticed that the Federal authority is restricted to "Ocean Light-houses, &c."; but, according to the report of the Australasian Maritime Conference, held at Hobart in April, 1894—at which all the colonies except Western Australia and New Zealand were represented—it was, by resolution, recommended "that the whole system of lighting the highway, coast, and harbor lights of Australasia be borne pro ratâ on the basis of the population"; and it was also resolved "that in pursuance of the foregoing resolution, and after having carefully considered the questions relating to the light-house system of Australia, and further having ascertained that in many cases lights are most needed in the colonies possessing the smallest population, this Conference is of opinion that the future erection and maintenance of light-houses should be conducted under a Federal system, whereby the cost would be proportionately borne by the colonies that may now or hereafter join such Federation upon a population basis." The report goes on to say that, in the opinion of the Conference, these resolutions were considered to be a simple, equitable, and efficient mode of disposing of this most difficult question; that the yearly cost of maintaining all the light-houses was £64,861, equivalent to about 4 $\frac{3}{4}$ d. per head of the aggregate population (3,329,888) of the colonies represented; whereas under the old arrangements the cost per head of the different colonies varied from 11d. in Queensland to 2 $\frac{3}{4}$ d. in New South Wales. The following return, which was published with the Proceedings of the Conference, shows the cost of maintenance at that time of highway lights (which is believed to be a more accurate designation than ocean lights), and of all lights in the different colonies:—

Colony.					Population.	Maintenance of Highway Lights.	Aggregate Cost of Light Service.
New South Wales	1,223,370	5,650	11,099
Queensland	432,000	9,732	20,000
South Australia	346,874	4,000	10,000
Tasmania	153,144	5,145	7,698
Victoria	1,174,000	4,160	16,064
Total	3,329,388	28,687	64,861

Owing to the difficulty of distinguishing between ocean and other coast and harbor lights, &c., for 1895, the expenditure on all lights has been included in Table 2.

Another difficulty in framing Table 2 was to ascertain the cost of maintenance of the buildings usually defrayed by the Public Works Departments, which is not included in the ordinary departmental expenditure. As the information could not be gathered even approximately from official statements, it has been set down at $1\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. of the estimated capital cost, which has been adopted by the Government Statistician of New South Wales, and has been accepted by the experts of the Victorian Public Works Department as a fair all-round average, although there is reason to believe that in Victoria at the present time—owing to the exercise of rigid economy—it does not exceed 1 per cent.

The results shown by Table 2 are that the present expenditure of Departments likely to be transferred, not covered by other sources of income than Customs and Excise duties, &c., amounts to £1,245,000, or 6s. per head, which would absorb only 18 per cent. of the revenue from Customs and Excise, which averages rather more than £2 per head; and that the division of the surplus on a population basis—under the conditions prevailing in 1895—would result in a gain of £234,000 to Victoria, of £364,000 to New South Wales, and of £94,000 to South Australia; but a loss of £394,000 to Western Australia, £271,000 to Queensland, and £71,000 to Tasmania. This unequal result is brought about mainly by the abnormally high rate of Customs revenue per head in Western Australia, and partly also by the high rate prevailing in Queensland.

The present values of property which will probably be handed over in the event of Federation, as shown in Table 3, must be regarded as only a rough approximation. Returns were sent out to the other colonies asking for detailed information to enable a closer approximation to be made, but no replies have yet been received. The present table, however, will serve as a temporary basis to compute the cost of maintenance and interest on capital outlay. The aggregate capital value of land is set down at £3,363,000, and of buildings at £7,082,000, or a total of £10,445,000. Table 3.

In the first table of Section II. an attempt is made to apportion amongst the various colonies the figures shown in a statement published with the Convention papers, representing the probable expenditure of the Federal Government under various heads, and the result is contrasted with the present expenditure of the colonies, as shown in Table 2, to which interest at 3 per cent. on present value of buildings is added.* By this comparison the proposed expenditure of £1,250,000, according to the Bill, falls short of the present expenditure by over £300,000; and there is no doubt that, unless it be intended that interest on capital value of works taken over shall not be a charge against the Customs revenue, but against the proceeds of special Federal taxation, the expenditure authorized by the Bill will prove inadequate to meet the ordinary engagements of the Federal Government. Table 4.

With a view of showing the effects of the working of the financial clauses of the Draft Bill on the State Finances, two series of tables have been compiled (see Tables 9 to 12, a and b). As New South Wales is at present undergoing a gradual change from a protective to a revenue Tariff, which will eventually result in a loss of Tables 9 to 12.

* See last paragraph in next page.

nearly £1,000,000 in Customs revenue; and whereas according to the Draft Bill the aggregate amount collected by the colonies under their various Tariffs in the year prior to the imposition of the uniform Tariff with intercolonial free-trade practically determines the surplus to be returned in the next five years, it will be a matter of considerable importance to all the colonies whether New South Wales should continue her present policy, or, with the object of bringing her revenue up to a level with the other colonies, should re-impose a protective Tariff. In the former case the colonies as a whole would lose about a million of revenue, and the Federal Government would have no difficulty in raising sufficient revenue in the third year to meet all engagements; but in the latter case, whilst the colonies as a whole would not lose, it would be necessary for the Federal Government, perhaps, to impose an excise duty on sugar, bringing in (say) £375,000, and to raise the duties on foreign goods to cover the loss on intercolonial free-trade—estimated by the Victorian Customs Department at £988,000, or 5s. 8d. per head on the basis of the importation of 1895. The results under each supposition are accordingly worked out in the two series of tables given.

The bases of the calculations in the tables are the assumed populations as shown in Table 7, and the rates per head for 1895 (when all the colonies had protective Tariffs in force), but with modifications in special cases. In the second year of Federation—the year before the uniform Tariff—it is assumed in table 9*a* that under ordinary circumstances the same amount would be collected as in 1895. The proportion per head has, however, been reduced in the case of New South Wales, to allow for the loss of revenue consequent on the gradual remission of duties under the existing free-trade Tariff (as shown in Table 6); and also in the case of Western Australia, Queensland, and Tasmania, as the rates for those colonies in 1895 were, it is considered, abnormally high. In the third year it is assumed that the rates per head will be the same as in 1895, less the proportion collected on Australasian goods (as shown in the first figure column) with modifications in the case of the three last-named colonies as explained in a footnote. The rates for the five subsequent years are arrived at, as directed in the Commonwealth Bill, by continuously increasing or diminishing the rates in the third year by one-fifth of the difference between the rate for each colony and the average for the Commonwealth, whereby a uniform rate per head is reached in the eighth year. The aggregate amount collected in the second year will decide the minimum amount of the surplus; and the amounts credited in the third year, the distribution amongst the various colonies in the four subsequent years. No allowance has been made for disturbances of trade that are likely to take place in the second year, unless some effective means can be provided to counteract them. (See articles by Mr. R. L. Nash in the Sydney Daily Telegraph of the 26th, 27th, and 28th April, 1897.)

In the event of New South Wales reverting to a protective Tariff, before Federation, however (see Table 9*b*), the proportion raised in that colony in the second year would be 15s. per head higher, thus increasing the revenue of that colony and of the Commonwealth by £1,039,000, making the total revenue of the latter £7,534,000, or about £1 19s. per head. In this case it will be necessary for the Commonwealth to raise a further sum amounting to £926,000, equivalent to 4s. 8d. per head (£1 18s. 2d. altogether) in the third year.

In computing the estimated expenditure, Table 10, it has been assumed that the amount required in the performance of the services, and the exercise of the powers to be transferred, viz., £1,250,000, as authorized by section 91 of the Bill, and £300,000 for new expenditure will prove sufficient, although, as previously stated, there is every reason to believe the former sum will be inadequate.

The question of interest on works taken over is raised by this and the next table, but in section 86 of the Draft Bill it is provided that the Commonwealth shall take over from the States all property appertaining to the departments transferred at a valuation, or rental in the case of Customs buildings.* Assuming it will be necessary to raise a loan for this purpose (—for the time being Commonwealth bonds might be handed over to the States), there seems to be some doubt as to whether the interest will be a charge against the Customs revenue, and is to be appropriated out of the fixed expenditure of £1,250,000, or whether it is to be provided out of the proceeds of special Federal taxation. In the latter case the States will receive an addition to their income in the shape of interest on the investment of the amounts handed over.

How is interest on property to be paid for?

* It is suggested that the option of taking over at a rental be restricted to the border Customs houses.

But in the former case, which I believe is contemplated, the income of the States would not be affected, and the property would be virtually handed over to the Government of the Commonwealth as a free gift. The transfer would then amount to merely a matter of adjustment between the States, inasmuch as those colonies which have constructed more than their share of public works per head would be compensated, seeing that the expenditure is on a per capita basis, by others which had done less. If the charge for interest were eliminated altogether the surplus would be correspondingly increased; as it is, the colonies would receive the diminished surplus, plus the interest. Consequently the States may be credited, in addition to the surplus, with amounts equivalent to 3 per cent. on the present valuations of the properties referred to. This has been done in tabulating the results in Tables 12*a* and 12*b*. The total interest is estimated (see Table 2*b*) at £313,000, of which £82,000 was for Victorian property, but it is not known how much the Convention allowed for it. It has therefore been assumed that interest on buildings is included in the expenditure of £1,250,000.

For the first two years after the establishment of the Commonwealth it would naturally be expected that none of the State Treasuries would, under the Bill, be affected, except to the extent of their share of the new Federal expenditure, viz., £300,000, of which, according to Table 4, about £98,000 will be chargeable to Victoria. But this is neutralized by the expenditure fixed by the Bill being so much less than the existing expenditure, combined with the circumstance that the expenditure is fixed at a uniform amount for three years, no allowance being made for natural growth; and the result to the local Treasuries (see Table 12*a*) is a gain of £99,600 in the first year, and £158,000 in the second, although there is a loss in the case of Victoria of £81,000 and £83,000 respectively.

Under the first condition assumed, according to the first series of tables, the loss to the State Treasuries, as a whole, would be £901,000 in the third year (see Table 12*a*), and the loss, which would be continuous, would in the eighth year amount to £1,139,000, although, as a set-off, the colonies have the advantages of intercolonial free-trade, which was not allowed for in computing the "surplus if unfederated." (In the third year the expenditure is for the first time apportioned to the colonies on a population basis.) The results in the cases of Victoria, New South Wales, and South Australia are losses of £387,000, £292,000, and £83,000, gradually falling to £179,000, £58,000, and £4,000 in the eighth year; but in the case of Western Australia a loss of £109,000 in the third year rapidly rises to £476,000 in the eighth; whilst a gain of £35,000 in Queensland in the former is changed to a loss of £332,000 in the latter year; whereas in Tasmania the loss increases from £65,000 to £90,000.

Under the second condition assumed in the second series of tables, however (see Table 12*b*), the result for the colonies as a whole is a gain of £25,000 in the third year; but a loss of only £21,000 in the fourth year, gradually increasing to £120,000 in the eighth. In the third year Victoria would lose £121,000, but Queensland gain £202,000; but the differences to the other colonies would be much less—New South Wales on the one hand gaining £3,000, and Western Australia, Tasmania, and South Australia losing £34,000, £21,000, and £4,000 respectively. By the eighth year New South Wales would gain £302,000, Victoria £146,000, and South Australia £96,000; but Tasmania would lose £43,000, Queensland £201,000, and Western Australia as much as £420,000.

Here reference might be made to clause 85 of the Draft Bill, which may result in an immediate increase in the expenditure of States, apart from circumstances already mentioned. Under this clause it is not obligatory on the Government of the Commonwealth to retain the services of any of the officers of Departments the control of which is assigned to the Commonwealth. This might result in the Federal Government employing an entirely new staff on its own terms, and cast upon the States the liability of having to pay all at once a large amount as compensation or pension, irrespectively of the hardship to competent officers, whose existing rights to continued employment, during good behaviour, should not be overlooked.

Time does not permit of reference to all the remaining tables, which are supplementary to various tables published at the Adelaide Convention. Attention might, however, be drawn to Tables 15*a*, b, and c, which show the depression at present affecting the Customs Revenue of Victoria and New South Wales, but more especially the former; that about half the Customs and Excise Revenue is derived from alcoholic liquors, tobacco, &c.; that under uniform Tariffs about 3s. more could at present be obtained from alcoholic liquors and tobacco, &c., in New South Wales and Victoria; but Table 16*b* indicates this result to be probably due to a more marked decline in the consumption—by reason of the general depression—in Victoria than in New South Wales. Hence there is all the more scope in the former colony for a greater recovery in the future. The same will also probably apply to other dutiable articles of consumption.

From Table 16*a* the following extracts have been taken, showing local production absolutely and relatively of six leading dutiable articles of consumption:—

Table 18.

Table 18, read in conjunction with Table 8, shows the inequity of transferring—on the basis of existing annual amounts—debt raised for purely State purposes as a permanent set-off against the surplus Customs revenue to be credited to the States—a transfer which has been strongly advocated, although not adopted by the Convention. For the Customs revenue is equivalent to an ever increasing annuity, likely to rise from 7 to 72 millions within the next 100 years, as shown in Table 8; whereas, on the other hand, the interest charge on the existing debt is likely to fall gradually—as the securities mature and are replaced by lower interest bearing stocks—from about £6,700,000, as at present, to £5,200,000, showing a total annual decrease, in less than 50 years, of £1,500,000, or by 22½ per cent.

Section 98.

It is suggested that in providing for the transfer of State liabilities to the Commonwealth, provision should also be made in section 98 of the Bill to allow of State securities being converted into Commonwealth securities, on terms to be fixed from time to time by the Commonwealth, and offered to holders of stock; as it may be possible to save a considerable amount by such means, seeing that the security offered by the Commonwealth would be so much better than that of any one State. Otherwise, if the Commonwealth were to take over the debts without some such scheme, the State creditors would get the enlarged security without paying for it.

Section V.

The tables in Section V. are to assist in making comparisons with Foreign countries. By Table 19, it will be seen that the United States has to rely on Customs and Excise duties for over nine-tenths, and Canada for three-fourths of its revenue from all sources; whilst Germany and Switzerland rely on it to the extent of one-half, and the United Kingdom and Argentina of nearly one-half. The proportion of Customs and Excise revenue per head (excepting India, where it is extremely low) varies from 10s. to £1 9s.; whilst the yield was as high as £1 5s. in the United Kingdom under free-trade, as against less than £1 in the United States under protection. In Australia, with intercolonial duties off, the result in 1895 was estimated to be £1 19s., and in the more settled colonies about £1 10s.; and although, considering the present depressed condition of most of the colonies, it may be possible to raise in the early years of free-trade, especially with the aid of an Excise duty on sugar, more than those proportions, a fall to the level of other countries must eventually take place in a manner somewhat similar to that shown in Table 8.

NOTE.—The figures relate to the year 1895, or as near that date as possible, except those for Defences, which are an average of three years. Expenditure on construction of new works, or interest on capital cost, is not included. The cost of maintenance of all Lights is given, as that on Ocean Lights, Buoys, and Beacons is not at present available for all the colonies. No allowance is included for interest on capital outlay.

* Including miscellaneous collections, with the exception of Ports and Harbors, &c.

† Exclusive of amounts credited in some colonies for postage, telegrams, &c., O.H.M.S.; but inclusive of commission on money orders, £17,300 in Victoria, and £52,500 in the colonies as a whole.

‡ The figures for Victoria include Primage duty, £79,000; those for Queensland should, according to later information, be increased to £1,296,000.

NOTE.—The totals in the above table are those shown in a Statement published with the Debates and Proceedings of the Federal Convention; but, as it is not known how they were arrived at, they have been distributed amongst the various colonies proportionately to the amounts of actual expenditure of similar items in each colony except in the case of Posts and Telegraphs, as follows:—Census and Statistics, and Bankruptcy and Patents, according to the amounts expended on General Administration in 1895 (see Australasian Statistics, 1895); Defences, according to the average cost of maintenance of Defences in three years, 1893-5. Customs, according to the average cost of collection in the same three years; Navigation and Quarantine, according to the average expenditure on Coast and Harbor Lights and Quarantine in 1895. The revenue and expenditure of Posts and Telegraphs are distributed on a population basis, as it was found impossible to differentiate the loss or gain to each colony under a uniform postal tariff. The revenue expected, except in the case of Mint, was distributed in the same proportion as the expenditure under each head.

* Including interest on buildings, &c. taken over.

† It is presumed that £10,000 was included in the total amount to provide for a Mint Subsidy in Western Australia.

Excess of present over probable Expenditure, as estimated by Convention	- 3,*	143,	12,	12,	38,	106,	308,

NOTE.—The differences, as shown in the last column of the upper portion of the table, appear to be greater than might be expected under federation—even allowing for an improvement in revenue in the case of Posts and Telegraphs under uniform rates, and economy in expenditure. The excess in the case of Defences—or some portion of it—might be allowed for the further construction of fortifications, not taken into account in the "Present Expenditure." It is believed, however, that there must have been some mistake in arriving at so small an amount as £1,250,000, which would not more than cover the expenditure for five colonies.

* Deficiency.

NOTE.—The total population is assumed to increase at the rate of 2 per cent. per annum, a low proportion; and after allowing for an increase in Western Australia at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum, the balance has been distributed over the other colonies in the proportions prevailing on 31st December, 1896. In the three years 1894-6 the population of Western Australia doubled itself, but it is assumed that the next doubling period will be twelve years, judging from the experience of Victoria at a similar period in its history.

NOTE.—Population has been assumed to increase at the rate of 3 per cent. per annum, starting from 1891. This table is designed to indicate the growing importance of this source of revenue, and the necessity for allowing the States to participate in such growth, on either a revenue or population basis, in order to enable them to cover the corresponding growth of State expenditure.

NOTE.—The only alteration in the amounts or rates per head raised in the second year, as compared with the corresponding figures in the first series, is in New South Wales, for which the total rate per head which prevailed in 1895 has been substituted. In the third year, as the aggregate amount must not be less than in the previous year, viz., £7,534,000 this amount has been inserted, which results in a rate of £1 18s. 2d. per head: but as, under ordinary circumstances, only £6,608,000, or £1 13s. 6d. per head might be expected, as shown in the first series, £926,000 more will have to be raised by increased taxation on foreign imports, combined perhaps with an excise duty on colonial sugar, which, at 3s per cwt. on the output (2,500,000 cwt. in 1895), would realize £375,000. The distribution amongst the colonies of the aggregate amount set down for the third year is, as will be noticed, the same as in the first series.

Victorian Railways,
Commissioner's Office,
Melbourne, 10th June, 1897.

MEMORANDUM RE RAILWAY PROPOSALS OF DRAFT FEDERAL CONSTITUTION.

The proposals in the Draft Bill which directly and indirectly affect the railways are as follows :—

- Clause 52, sub-sections 32, 33, 34.
- Clause 95.
- Clause 96.
- Clause 97.

Clause 52, sub-section XXXII.—“The control of the railways with respect to transport for the military purposes of the Commonwealth.”

This is no doubt absolutely necessary for the proper defence of the Commonwealth.

The existence of a federal military and naval establishment will probably entail considerable additional railway expenditure in the transport of troops. If, however, the railways are not taken over by the Commonwealth, and are to be considered as trading concerns, the question of recompensing them for this service will no doubt be dealt with by the Federal Parliament.

Clause 52, sub-section XXXIII.—“The taking over by the Commonwealth, with the consent of the States, of the whole or any part of the railways of any State or States upon such terms as may be arranged between the Commonwealth and the State.”

As the Commonwealth has power to take over the whole or part of the railways with the consent of the States, I would only remark that the possession by the Commonwealth of a part of the railways of an individual State might be found to create difficulties which do not at present exist, as for instance, were the Commonwealth to agree to take over our main trunk lines only and work them, an alteration of the present gauge might be decided upon, and this would so disorganize the local traffic as to create great public inconvenience. I would, therefore, urge that, so far as the Victorian railways are concerned, there should not be any breaking up of the system which would involve this, and that the condition should be absolute that either the whole system, or no portion thereof, should be handed over by this State.

In connexion with this subject, I have the honour to submit herewith a statement showing the mileage, capital invested, &c., of the railways of the six colonies at the close of the last financial year, and desire to observe that the only colony showing the payment of interest on the capital after working expenses have been met is Western Australia. But this does not give an altogether correct idea of the value of the property, and serious wrong might be done to several of the other colonies should too low a valuation of the lines be made. For instance, in Victoria, the value of the Mallee lines is prospective in the opening up of undeveloped country, and to take their present interest paying value would be most misleading. I am, therefore, strongly of opinion that in the event of the Commonwealth taking over the railways it should be at an amount not less than their actual capital cost.

Clause 52, sub-section XXXIV.—“Railway construction and extension with the consent of any State or States concerned.”

If the Federal Government is to give consent to the construction of any new railways that may be proposed by individual States, it appears to me that occasions might arise when such action would seriously affect the industrial progress of the State, and therefore this power should not be placed in the hands of the Commonwealth until the railways of the State or States concerned are taken over.

EQUALITY OF TRADE.

Clause 95.—“Preference shall not be given by any law or regulation of commerce or revenue to the ports of one State over the ports of another State, and any law or regulation made by the Commonwealth, or by any State, or by any authority constituted by the Commonwealth, or by any State, having the effect of derogating from freedom of trade or commerce between the different parts of the Commonwealth shall be null and void.”

The decision of the Federal Convention to have freedom of trade between the States of the Commonwealth and the necessity for provision of effective means for its accomplishment is recognised in this clause.

As the constituted authorities of the railways of the various States in fixing rates and fares, especially those of a differential and preferential nature, may take such action as would derogate from freedom of trade, the clause above cited is the crux of the situation so far as State management of the railways is concerned.

In dealing with the question of the adjustment of rates to and from the ports there are many important factors which must be taken into consideration, any or all of which may affect the decision as to the port to be used, such as—

Natural advantages possessed by one port over another.

Shorter route.

Speedier route.

Superior and cheaper port facilities.

Superior market for wool.

Superior financial facilities.

Combined rail and water route to port.

All rail route to port.

All water, and therefore relatively cheaper, route to port.

When the means of transport are not entirely in the hands of the Government, and private enterprise (by water and road carriage), provides cheaper transit for part of the route.

Strictly speaking all rates not based on an equal charge per ton per mile, irrespective of distance, are either preferential or differential, but it is a recognised principle on railways that rates per ton per mile shall diminish with distance, and though these in a sense are preferential they are absolutely necessary where traffic is carried long distances. Where differential rates do not apply generally, they may operate as preferential rates in favour of localities, individuals, or commodities, and, under certain circumstances, are quite legitimate.

The special rates given by Victoria for traffic to and from certain districts in New South Wales may be deemed preferential; but they are not, therefore, undue or unwarranted, since it is recognised in railway working that the proportion of one carrier in a through rate on a long haul is frequently considerably less than the local rate for haulage of the same freight over its own line only, without there being any unjust discrimination or unlawful preference. It is contended by New South Wales that Victoria should charge its ordinary local rates for the traffic referred to, ignoring the cost of carrying the goods to, and the wool from, those districts from or to Victorian stations; but this cost must be taken into account, and the rate to or from such stations as Echuca or Albury and Melbourne fixed as part of a through rate, and, therefore, less than the Victorian local rate. In the case of wool, the rate obtainable for Victorian railway carriage is largely determined by the cost of transport, insurance, &c., from the point of production to the Victorian station, and it may be mentioned that as the stores required for station supplies are, as a rule, sent by the route over which the wool has been carried, the principal consideration is the rate to be fixed for carriage of that product.

The geographical position of Riverina and the south-western portion of New South Wales with regard to Victoria and the arrangements made by the Victorian Railways under which that trade now comes through Melbourne fully justify the application of this principle.

The position of the three States interested in the Riverina and south-western New South Wales traffic stands thus—

New South Wales has an all-rail route to its port.

South Australia has both an all-water and long-water combined with short rail route to its port.

Victoria has water with comparatively short rail route to its port ; also, an all-rail route (partly in New South Wales) to its port.

For nearly twenty years Victoria held undisputed control of the whole of the Riverina and south-western New South Wales traffic at its ordinary local rates, and was only forced into the preferential scale now in operation in consequence of the differential rates offered by New South Wales in or about the year 1882, when the line giving connexion between Sydney and Hay was opened.

The dates of opening the various lines of railway in Victoria and New South Wales, in connexion with the districts referred to, are as under:—

VICTORIA.—Lines opened to : Echuca, 19th September, 1864 ; Wodonga, 21st November, 1873 ; Wahgunyah, 29th January, 1879.

NEW SOUTH WALES.—Lines opened to : Albury, 3rd February, 1881 ; Narandera, 28th February, 1881 ; Hay, 4th July, 1882 ; Jerilderie, 16th September, 1884.

It will therefore be seen that up to the years 1881 and 1882 the principal means of communication to and from the whole district was through the Victorian railways, via Echuca, Wodonga, and Wahgunyah, and there was everything to justify the expectations of the Victorians that they would be allowed to retain the advantages which nature had given them and the trade their forethought had enabled them to build up ; additional lines were therefore ultimately constructed to Swan Hill, Cobram, and Yarrawonga.

In connexion with the traffic to and from these districts, I herewith attach returns showing—

1. Comparison of Victorian special and ordinary merchandise rates.
2. Comparison of Victorian special and ordinary wool rates.
3. Comparison of New South Wales special and ordinary merchandise rates.
4. Comparison of New South Wales special and ordinary merchandise rates from Albury to Junee and intermediate stations.
5. Comparison of Victorian and New South Wales ordinary and special mileage rates for wool.
6. Return of merchandise tonnage forwarded from Victoria to the Riverina district for years 1895 and 1896. Amount of revenue also shown.
7. Return of number of bales of wool received from Riverina district for seasons 1894-5, 1895-6, and 1896-7, and the gross amount of revenue derived therefrom.

Attention is specially invited to returns Nos. 6 and 7, in connexion with which it may be stated that the main portion of this traffic is secured and can only be retained by special rates, unless corresponding increases be made by the adjoining colonies.

The result of charging the Victorian local rates would be to divert at least 80,000 out of the 136,066 bales of wool carried last season, with consequent loss of revenue of £19,000. The bulk of the balance of 56,000 bales of wool grown close to the Victorian border is now secured, and would probably be retained at our local rates.

The loss in connexion with the goods traffic would be equally serious, as, roundly, 8,000 tons of merchandise now passing through Melbourne and carried over the Victorian railways would be diverted, representing revenue of £20,500.

The effect of the diversion of this traffic on the interests of Melbourne as a port and commercial centre would be most serious. It is estimated that the loss from the commission on sale, storage, handling, &c., of the reduced number of bales of wool, and the profits derived from the supply and handling, &c., of the stores would reach, in round figures, £160,000 per annum.

Broadly stated, it would therefore appear that a gift by New South Wales to Victoria of the whole amount of freight now earned by the latter, conditionally that it made no effort to secure the Riverina traffic would not compensate for the contingent loss to the city and port.

It is of course obvious that were the Commonwealth to take over all the railways the necessity for an Interstate Commission to adjudicate on rates would not arise, for in that event, trouble of the nature indicated could not affect Victoria, as the rates would then be on a uniform basis for the whole of the States, all the railways would be worked for the common good, and the geographical position of the ports would rule the traffic. But as this is not provided by the Draft Constitution, it has to be considered what proposal can be submitted to meet the case as it is. I think it right to mention here, that at a recent conference on the subject with the New South Wales Commissioners, when proposals were made to avoid as far as possible the cutting of rates, I suggested the exchange, for comparison, of lists of the rebates on wool granted last season; but to this they did not see their way to agree. An agreement was, however, arrived at to cease for the ensuing season to cut rates further. From this position it is desirable to advance; the adjustment of rates on a mileage basis together with an assimilation of the goods classifications of the railways of the States being kept in view.

To accomplish these objects in an equitable manner it may fairly be considered whether an agreement should not be come to, that certain geographical boundaries, instead of the present political ones, shall be recognised by the States concerned.

Clause 96.—“The Parliament may make laws constituting an Interstate Commission to execute and maintain upon railways within the Commonwealth, and upon rivers flowing through, in, or between two or more States, the provisions of this Constitution relating to trade and commerce.”

Clause 97.—“The Commission shall have such powers of adjudication and administration as may be necessary for its purposes, and as the Parliament may from time to time determine.”

The proposal to constitute an Interstate Commission is a serious one requiring the most careful consideration. In creating its powers and prescribing its duties it is, in my opinion, all important that the natural advantages of position and physical features should be preserved, and that the railway rates should not, any more than other ordinary commercial charges, be dependent on merely political divisions.

JOHN MATHIESON.

QUEENSLAND.

NOTES ON THE DRAFT FEDERAL CONSTITUTION FRAMED BY THE ADELAIDE CONVENTION OF 1897.

(A PAPER PRESENTED TO THE GOVERNMENT OF QUEENSLAND BY THE HONORABLE SIR SAMUEL WALKER GRIFFITH, G.C.M.G., CHIEF JUSTICE OF THAT COLONY.)

PRESENTED TO BOTH HOUSES OF PARLIAMENT BY COMMAND.

INTRODUCTORY.

Last year I had the honour of presenting to the Government a paper on the subject of the Nature and Probable Effects of Australian Federation, written in view of the approaching choice of representatives by the several Colonies to a Convention to be held for the purpose of framing a Federal Constitution for Australia.

The first session of that Convention has now been held, but without the presence of any representatives from Queensland, and a draft Constitution has been framed which it submitted for the consideration of the Parliaments of Australia in the interval which must elapse before the second session of the Convention, to be held in September next.

Although the Draft Commonwealth Bill framed by the Convention of 1891 was not formally adopted by the Convention of 1897 as the basis of its labours, it must be highly gratifying to those who took part in the preparation of that instrument to note that it has been so substantially followed. Verbal alterations—some effecting manifest improvement, others of perhaps doubtful advantage—are not infrequent; and in some matters of principle important changes have been made, but the general scheme and arrangement show little variation.

It may be noted also that those provisions of the Bill of 1891 which aroused fierce denunciation as indicating what was called an "Imperialistic tendency," have withstood the criticism of six years, and remain unaltered. Nor has a careful reading of the Official Record of the Debates of the Convention brought to my notice any proposal to modify them. The fact is, of course, that the denunciation was quite without foundation, and that the provisions were objected to from insufficient knowledge of their meaning and effect.

The general familiarity with the nature and problems of Federal Government shown at the Convention was, if I may be permitted to say so, very great, and indeed remarkable. Nevertheless, to an outside observer of parliamentary experience there were occasional signs of apparent weariness—not astonishing when the hours of sitting are considered—and also occasional traces of haste, especially noticeable towards the conclusion of the session, as well as of a disposition on the part of some members to distrust the Federal Parliament and to control its freedom, a disposition manifested for the most part by attempts to embody in a permanent Constitution provisions hitherto untried, or of which there has been only a brief experience. In one or two instances, also, I fear that the constitutional position and functions of the Sovereign as the Head of the Federation were, for the moment, lost sight of.

It is, indeed, much to be regretted that the necessity for the early departure for Europe of some leading members of the Convention prevented full discussion of some important matters, and compelled the transaction of difficult and anxious work within a limited time. Any defects, however, whether attributable to this or any other cause, can, fortunately, be corrected on the re-assembling of the Convention.

In this connexion I may be permitted to express the hope that on the final revision the fundamental distinction between the functions of the Convention and those of the Federal Parliament will be kept in constant view. The distinction may be illustrated by the analogous one, familiar to lawyers, of the difference between an act done without jurisdiction and an erroneous decision in the exercise of actual jurisdiction. It is the function of the Constitution, and of the Convention, as framers of the Constitution, to define to powers of the Federal Authorities, Legislative, Executive, and Judicial, and to prescribe the limits within which those powers are to be exercised. But it is no part of their duty to prescribe the manner in which those powers are to be exercised within the prescribed limits.

I propose now, as a most friendly critic of the work of the Convention, and with the single desire to assist in perfecting that work, to offer some observations on the Draft Constitution, as framed by them.

I will, in the first place, invite attention to some of the more important questions of principle as to which the Convention has provisionally adopted a different rule from that of the Draft Bill of 1891.

I will then refer to some other matters which, although of minor importance, seem to deserve serious consideration.

I.—THE SENATE.

The principle that there should be two Houses of Legislature, one directly and equally representing the States, while the other directly represents the people of the whole Commonwealth, in proportion to population, may, apparently, be taken to be generally accepted as the only basis upon which Federation is at present possible.

The Draft Bill of 1891 proposed that each State should have eight representatives in the Senate. The Draft of 1897 proposes that the number shall be six, with power to increase the number. The proposed reduction is probably an improvement. It may be a question, however, whether the power to increase or reduce the number of members contained in s. 9 should be restricted as proposed, so as not to allow of a further reduction below the number of six.

The Draft Bill of 1891 provided that the Senators should be directly chosen by the Parliaments of the States, as in the United States of America. The Convention Draft proposes that they shall be directly chosen by the people of the State as one electorate. The representatives of four of the colonies represented at the Convention had been sent there by popular election conducted on this basis, and this circumstance undoubtedly had much weight in inducing the change in the Draft. But, with all respects, I venture to think that the generalization was a hasty one. The circumstances of the election were unique, and it by no means follows, because one election so conducted gave eminently satisfactory results, that a succession of elections conducted under quite different circumstances would be equally satisfactory.

It will hardly be disputed that such a basis of election is only applicable with a reasonable hope of good results when the candidates are men already generally known throughout the constituency. Such a knowledge is indeed an elemental idea of the theory of representative government. But when the most capable representative men of a State are divided between the Senate and the House of Representatives, and when, if certain other provisions of the Convention Draft are adhered to, the inducements to seek a seat in the Senate are seriously diminished, can it be expected that a choice of men who have made themselves known to the whole community will be always available? And here the want of general knowledge of the varying conditions of the several Australian Colonies makes itself felt. Who, knowing the conditions, would seriously propose to enact that for all time (until majorities in other States, under quite different conditions, think fit to change their minds on a subject of no immediate interest to them) the people of a State equal in size to France, the German Empire, and Austria-Hungary combined, and populated throughout, shall be a single constituency periodically electing three members by manhood suffrage? If wisdom consists in a fit adaption of means to ends, and the end is to secure the choice of the three men best representing the whole State, the plan is hardly a wise one as applied to such a State. In some States the plan might be the wisest possible. But why, as the effect of a hasty generalization, should it be imposed on a State which it does not suit? There is nothing in history to commend it. Even of the small Swiss Cantons, which are free to adopt it, few have done so. The plan was tried for many years in South Australia, and, although it worked well at first, was found unsatisfactory and abandoned. Few persons actually acquainted with the conditions of Queensland, both as to distribution of population and as to differences in climate, will deny that to make it one constituency periodically electing three members would be likely to effectually prevent, instead of securing, a fair representation of the whole community.

Is not this a matter especially of State concern? If it is said that direct popular election is the only method of choice consistent with true democracy, I reply that in no democracy has direct popular election by such a constituency ever been suggested, unless the prebiscites of Napoleon III. and the election of the President of the United States can be called direct popular election. The choice of a single head of a State is, however, obviously an essentially different thing from the choice of parliamentary representatives. Those who insist on this argument may fairly be asked to point out what are the functions of the Senate which specially require that its members should be so elected.

II.—THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

The principal change proposed in this respect in the Draft of 1897 is a reduction in the number of members to a number equal to about double the number of Senators. A main reason for this change appears to have been a desire for economy in the salaries of members. It may be doubted, however, whether so small a House—if there should be only four Colonies in the Federation it would consist of fifty members only—would be large enough either to represent so vast a territory, or to command the prestige which would attach to a larger body. One of the first criticisms directed against the Federal Council was that its numbers were too small to command prestige or to insure effective debate.

The point of expense seems hardly worthy of a great dominion. There is another incidental objection to the plan proposed by the Convention to which attention should be called. The proposal is to divide the effective population of the Commonwealth by a number equal to double the number of Senators. The quotient is called a quota, and each State is to have a representative for every quota of its population, none having less than five. Assuming that all the six Colonies came into the Federation, the quota would be about 50,000. But, as Tasmania and Western Australia would each have two members in excess of the number to which their population would entitle them, the total number of members would be seventy-six. Suppose, now, that the population of Western Australia increased to such a number as to include five quotas, the result would be that she would no longer have any extra members, and the total number of members would be reduced to seventy-four, necessitating a reduction in the representation of some other State, and a consequent change in the constituencies. If the population of Tasmania increased correspondingly, the number would be reduced to seventy-two, with consequent changes in some other State. It seems open to serious question whether any fixed relation between the number of Senators and the number of members of the House of Representatives should be embodied in the Constitution itself, and whether it would not be better, as proposed in 1891, to leave it to the Federal Parliament to fix a quota from time to time.

It is to be noted that the qualification of a member of the House of Representatives has been extended so as to include all persons qualified to be electors, whether actually registered or not. This seems to require consideration.

As the section (31) stands, women qualified to be electors (as they are in South Australia) are eligible in any part of the Commonwealth for election to either House. If this is intended, it should be clearly stated; if it is not intended, the language should be altered.

It is also proposed that at the election of members each elector shall vote only once. In view of the large size of the constituencies, this provision does not seem to raise any seriously contentious point.

There appears to be a conflict between ss. 21 and 43, which provide that questions of qualification and vacancy shall be determined by the respective Houses until other provision is made, and s. 50, which provides that questions of disputed elections shall be determined by a Federal Court. The two classes of cases may easily run into one another. Moreover, there cannot be a Federal Court until the Federal Parliament has made the necessary provision for its constitution, and in the meantime questions of disputed elections would remain undetermined. Until a Federal Court is established and intrusted with such duties, they must of necessity be performed either by the State Courts or by the respective Houses of Parliament.

The most singular change in this part of the Constitution is a provision that, until the Parliament otherwise provides, a member of either House shall be disqualified from accepting any office of profit under the Crown for six months after he ceases to be a member (s. 48). It may be hoped that men fitted for the highest Judicial and Executive offices will be induced to seek seats in the Legislature. If, however, this provision stands, they will seek election to Parliament at the cost of practical disqualification for such offices both in the Commonwealth and in the States. The Commonwealth will be the loser by their exclusion either from Parliament or from office. What good reason can be given for artificially limiting the field of choice for the most important offices? And even if such a limitation is a good thing in itself, is it a matter to be embodied in a Constitution intended to be permanent? Cannot the people and the Parliament of the future be trusted to be as honest as the people and the Convention of to-day? I hope this provision will be reconsidered.

III.—POWERS OF THE PARLIAMENT

The provisions of s. 52 of the Draft Bill of 1891, enumerating the subjects with respect to which the Parliament is to have jurisdiction, have been left substantially unaltered, but a few additions have been made.

With regard to the second of these subjects, "Customs and excise and bounties, but so that duties of Customs and excise and bounties shall be uniform throughout the Commonwealth, and that no tax or duty shall be imposed on any goods exported from one State to another," which remains unchanged, I venture to suggest that it may be worth while to consider whether the rigour of the rule might not be modified. It is conceivable at least, and I think probable, that there will be parts of the Commonwealth separated by sea from the Continent of Australia. Western Australia is at present for all practical purposes as effectually separated from the rest of the Continent as if it were an island. It is the present fact, and it may at any time occur, in the case of a part so situated, that the only convenient mode of raising an essential part of the revenue is by Customs duties on imports. Why should it not be competent for the Federal Parliament to impose, or allow the State Legislature to impose, higher or extra duties on goods imported into such a territory, the excess being credited to the State in which they are collected? Goods imported from the Commonwealth would, of course, bear only a duty equal to the excess:

Or, again, why should it not be possible to establish a free port at a place such as Thursday Island or Port Darwin, for instance?

Another serious question, which was touched upon, but not settled, at the Convention, arises in this connexion. What is to happen in the event of a State by its domestic legislation prohibiting or seriously restricting the consumption of dutiable articles from which a large Federal Revenue is derived? Should the Federal Parliament be empowered, in such a case, to impose special taxation upon the people of the State to make up the deficiency? Or should the loss fall on the rest of the Commonwealth? This matter ought to be carefully considered and dealt with.

Attention will be invited, later, to other suggested modifications of this paragraph, both in form and substance.

Paragraph XXIV., "Parental rights and the custody and guardianship of infants," is new. While there can be little room for difference of opinion as to the advantage of a uniform law regulating the status of marriage and the conditions of divorce, it is not so obvious that the same considerations apply to the case of children. This may well be contended to be a matter of domestic concern, as I believe it is considered in most Federal States.

The powers of the Parliament with respect to railways and to the River Murray will need attentive consideration in connexion with the proposal to establish an Inter-State Railway Commission, to which I will refer later.

Upon the subject of the exclusive powers proposed to be given to the Parliament with respect to inferior races, I have nothing to add to the observations contained in my Notes of last year. The Convention have left the Draft of 1891 unaltered on this point.

IV.—RESPECTIVE POWERS OF THE TWO HOUSES WITH RESPECT TO FINANCE.

On this subject there was great difference of opinion in the Convention, and further debate may be expected on its re-assembling. Some difficulty was naturally found in accurately defining the proposed laws which the Senate may not amend, and the definitions adopted cannot, perhaps, be regarded as quite satisfactory.

Many laws are passed in every legislature which impose taxation in so far that they require the payment of fees for services rendered, or for licences, or similar purposes, but which are not in substance laws relating to the Revenue. For instance, the Patent Laws, the Licensing Acts, and Registration Acts of various kinds. It is not suggested that the Senate should not have full power to deal with such laws merely because they impose taxation. They would, however, I fear, fall within the definition as now framed (s. 55).

A more serious question is whether provisions regulating the collection of taxes should be allowed to form part of the same laws by which the amount of the tax is fixed. This point should be clearly settled and expressed.

Whether the mode in which the Senate should express its desire for an alteration in Money Bills is by an amendment in which they request the concurrence of the House of Representatives, as in other cases, or by a suggestion that the desired amendment should be made by the latter House as of its own motion, seems to be a matter of minor importance. A strong Senate will compel attention to its suggestions; a weak one would not insist on its amendments.

Perhaps the only Bills with regard to which this point is likely to be important in practice are Tariff Bills and Bills providing for the expenditure of Loan Moneys. I may observe, in passing, that moneys raised by Loan appear not to have been regarded as forming part of the Consolidated Revenue, which surely is an oversight. (Note the omission of the words "and moneys" from s. 81.)

It seems to have been thought by some of the members of the Convention that the maintenance of the system of Responsible Government would be largely dependent on giving paramount powers to the House of Representatives with respect to Money Bills. It may be remarked, however, that the exclusive right of originating Supply Bills and the power to refuse supplies are the real basis of the power which the popular House exercises over the Executive Government. The extent to which the Senate's power of veto will be used for the purpose of claiming a share in the choice of the Executive Government will not depend upon the form in which they are required to express their wishes, but upon the resoluteness with which they are prepared to insist upon them. And this will depend upon public opinion. So long as no other mode of coercion of the Senate is proposed—and no other is proposed in the Draft Constitution—these matters are more of form than of substance.

If, however, it is seriously contemplated that the life of a Ministry is to depend solely upon the pleasure of the popular House, all that is involved in the position should be considered. The whole business of the Executive Government, all patronage, all appointments to judicial offices, all dealings with external affairs, would be in the hands of the popular majority, and the actual power of the Senate would be limited to amending or vetoing proposed new laws. Will the less populous States regard this prospect with equanimity? I have in a previous paper called attention to the difficulties attendant upon an attempt to impose the present phase of Responsible Government, which may prove a passing one, upon a Federation. These difficulties do not diminish with further discussion on the subject. If, indeed, it is seriously intended that the power of the popular House is to be so preponderant, it might be well to consider whether appointments to judicial offices, at least, should not, as in the United States, be made with the approval of the Senate.

V.—THE EXECUTIVE GOVERNMENT.

The only material change made by the Convention in the Draft Bill of 1891 with respect to the Executive Government is the introduction of a provision that "after the first general election no Minister of State shall hold office for a longer period than three calendar months unless he shall be or become a member of one of the Houses of the Parliament." Cannot, then, the Federal Parliament be trusted to insist upon Ministers being members if it thinks fit to do so? Why this want of confidence in the Parliament? They will have to work the machine which is now being constructed. Why should the use of a recent invention, never tried in a Federal State, be prescribed for all time? And why, in the case of what is, admittedly, a mere experiment, prohibit the use of a safety valve? In truth, the reason for the insertion of this provision seems to be a fear that the sacred ark of "Responsible Government" may not find a secure anchorage in the unknown sea of a Federal Constitution and a desire to establish an artificial shelter for it. But, surely, if the institution in its present form is good it will last, and if it is not good it ought to be modified. Precedent, with one or two exceptions, is distinctly against the proposal. The history of most countries where Responsible Government has been tried is against it. In regard to Law Officers especially, who in the Australian Commonwealth will have to discharge most important functions, there have been frequent instances in which the necessity has arisen of appointing a lawyer not a member of Parliament. With the proposed small number of members of both Houses the difficulty is extremely likely to occur. If it is desired that the best men should be appointed Ministers of State, why arbitrarily limit the field of choice? It may be noted that the provision is distinctly objectionable in form as being a limitation of the Royal Prerogative. (This term, it may be well to observe, really expresses the embodiment of the Sovereign Power of the whole people, and does not signify the personal privilege of an individual.) But perhaps the strongest objection to such attempts to fetter the freedom of a nation is their futility. The exclusion of Ministers of State from Congress in the United States has not prevented the practical exercise of important functions, which under our system of government properly appertain to the Executive Government, by Committees of Congress. And a law which required that executive functions should be formally exercised by a member of Parliament would not prevent the real exercise of them in the name of a member by a person not a member, if the State desired that they should be so exercised. The result might be the establishment of a bureaucracy under the disguise of Responsible Government. It is manifestly desirable that the person who really exercises authority should, as far as practicable, be the same person who is formally responsible for its exercise.

VI.—THE FEDERAL JUDICATURE.

Chapter III., which deals with this subject, has been to a great extent re-drawn, and evidently by a different hand from that responsible for the rest of the Draft Constitution, the result being a somewhat abrupt change of style, which I venture to think a serious blemish. The new style adopted is what may be called the catalogue style of drafting, which, although familiar to the draftsmen of 1891, and suitable to the case of an enumeration of a large number of subjects (as, for instance, in s. 52), was not considered by them to be compatible with the dignity of a great instrument of government. There is an obvious difference between the enumeration in separate paragraphs of a series of subjects, specifically and completely described, and a succession of predicates following in catalogue fashion a single nominative (as in ss. 72 and 76), or a list of adjectival expressions (as in ss. 73 and 77).

The most important formal change consists in substituting the formula of the United States Constitution, which declares that the judicial power of the State shall be vested in a Supreme Court, for the provision of the Draft of 1891 that the Federal Parliament might establish such a Court. The change is, however, of no practical importance, for, until Parliament provides salaries for the Judges and the necessary machinery for the exercise of their jurisdiction, the judicial power will necessarily remain in abeyance.

It would appear that, according to the words of the Draft, which makes the provision that the Federal Supreme Court (now proposed to be called the "High Court") shall consist of a Chief Justice and not less than four other Judges part of its description (s. 71), the authority of the Court would be suspended in the event of a vacancy in the office of Chief Justice or any other vacancy by which the number of the other Judges became reduced below four. This, of course, is not intended.

The new Draft provides in express terms that "no appeal shall be allowed to the Queen in Council from any Court of any State or from the High Court or any other Federal Court" except by special leave in matters of public concern. The policy of this provision is, of course, open to much argument. The form of it is, I venture to submit, objectionable. There are certain recognised rules, which may be called rules of courtesy, usually followed in the language of the Statutes relating to the Sovereign and the Prerogative. Thus it is not usual to enact that the Sovereign or her Representative "shall" or "shall not" do an act. In the first case the word used is "may," and in the latter the act itself is declared unlawful. In the Draft of 1891 it was declared that the judgment of the Federal Court of Appeal should be "final and conclusive," with a proviso that the Queen might give leave to appeal in certain specified cases. The legal effect was the same, but the expression was not open to the charge of discourtesy or disregard of established usage.

An important and valuable alteration in substance is contained in s. 76, which provides that the Parliament may invest State Courts with Federal jurisdiction. This will obviate the immediate necessity of establishing Federal Circuit Courts. The omission of the provision contained in the Draft of 1891, that neither the Commonwealth nor a State can be sued without its consent, is a change of more doubtful character. It is a general rule that a Sovereign State cannot be made amenable to the jurisdiction of any Court without its own consent. And, indeed, in the absence of some express law, it is difficult to see how process to compel appearance could be made effectual against a State. If this provision is omitted it would seem necessary to embody some other express provision dealing with the subject. The Eleventh Amendment of the American Constitution indicates one way of treating the matter, which in the early history of the United States gave rise to some trouble.

The Draft of 1891 allowed an appeal to the Federal Supreme Court from the "highest Court of final resort" in any State, "whether such Court is a Court of Appeal or of original jurisdiction." In the new Draft (s. 74) the term "Supreme Court" is substituted for the expression "highest Court," but the words, "whether, &c." are retained, although the necessity for them in the altered context is not clear. There appear, however, to be good reasons for the retention of the expression "Court of final resort," although in view of the law of South Australia they would probably be insufficient standing alone.

Unless it is intended that the High Court should sit in the capital only, some provision should be made for the exercise of jurisdiction by the Federal Judges in other places. A proposal to this effect made in the Convention was apparently misunderstood.

A remarkable provision has been introduced into this Chapter of the Constitution. Section 80 provides that no judicial officer shall be appointed to administer the government of the Commonwealth.

The objections that may be urged to a Judge holding such an office temporarily are on the surface. What are the arguments on the other side? I will indicate some of them:

1. If the Sovereign is to retain any Prerogative rights with respect to the Commonwealth, the choice of her own representative would surely be included amongst them.

2. If it is desired by the Parliament at any time that the Prerogative should not be exercised by the Sovereign in a particular way, an Address indicating their desires is more in accordance with usage and constitutional theory than an enactment purporting to limit its exercise.

3. The appointment of an Administrator is an act that is to take effect on a sudden emergency, and it is necessary that the form of appointment should be such that it is sure to take effect when the emergency arises.

In the absence, therefore, of both Governor and Lieutenant-Governor (if any) there must, in order to insure the immediate occupancy of the office, be a dormant Commission in favour of some person who is certain to be in existence. In most of the Colonies the Judges have for many years been designated in succession in order of seniority. In some Crown Colonies the members of the Executive Council are designated in like order.

In the case of the Commonwealth the members of the Executive Council are manifestly not available. It is equally plain that the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives would be unsuitable. The Commander of the Forces, who used sometimes to be designated, would be the servant of the Executive. By a process of exclusion, therefore, it appears almost necessary to follow the precedents of so many years.

Before leaving this branch of the subject I take leave to submit, as a question deserving of serious consideration, whether the work that would fall to a Federal Supreme Court is likely for some years to be sufficient to warrant the immediate creation of a complete separate judicial establishment. The arguments in favour of an independent Federal Judiciary are obvious, and are no doubt very cogent. It might, indeed, be necessary to have one or two exclusively Federal Judges to preserve the continuity of the tribunal and to organize and supervise its machinery. But it is, I think, worthy of consideration whether it might not be wise to empower the Federal Parliament, if they think fit, to make laws authorizing the provisional constitution of the High Court, in whole or part, by Judges of the State Courts.

VII.—FINANCE AND TRADE.

During the last twelve months much attention has been directed to the question of the financial aspects of Federation. The Convention of 1897 has entirely abandoned the proposals of 1891, and has formulated a new scheme which demands close examination. Before offering any observations on the details of the scheme now submitted, I desire again to revert to the fact that the time available for discussion of the subject was unfortunately limited, so that it would not be surprising to find that the scheme proposed is incomplete or unsatisfactory.

One very important alteration which has been made in the language of Chapter IV. appears to have passed almost without notice. The reference in this Chapter in the Draft Bill of 1891 to duties of excise was limited to duties of excise "on goods for the time being the subject of Customs duties." In s. 52, however (perhaps by inadvertence), this limit was not expressed. The limit is now altogether omitted. The effect of this alteration is very great, as will appear from a consideration of the fact that after the imposition of uniform Customs duties the powers of the State Legislatures to raise money by indirect taxation will be practically gone unless they retain power to impose duties upon production or export. Such duties, if not imposed on goods the subject of Customs duties, cannot prejudice freedom of trade in the only sense in which that term is used in connexion with Federation. If a State, in order to raise necessary revenue, thinks fit to impose an excise or export duty on, say, gold or wool, or any other product (and such duties have been in force or proposed within quite recent times), they may hamper their own people in competition with the rest of the world, but do not hamper the rest of the world in competition with them. Such a power may be absolutely necessary. If, however, any danger is feared from its exercise, it might be provided that it shall not be used without the consent of the Parliament of the Commonwealth, as in the case of taxes on Federal property (s. 107).

Attention has already been directed to the omission of a provision that moneys raised by loan shall form part of the Consolidated Revenue. It is obviously necessary that the safeguards respecting the expenditure of money should apply to Loan Funds as well as to ordinary revenue. Moreover, the expenditure can only be authorized by an Appropriation Act. In connexion with this point, it may be pointed out incidentally that a new provision, that money shall not be drawn from the Treasury except by warrant countersigned by the Chief Officer of Audit, appears to be either superfluous or inadequate. If a counter signature is prescribed, whose is to be the primary signature? And how could such a provision be carried out in a territory as vast as that of Australia unless by means of cash credits? Could not this detail be left to the Federal Parliament?

Passing from details, the substantive provisions of Chapter IV. may be divided into the provisions for distribution of surplus Federal Revenue and the provisions for regulating Railway and River Traffic.

These provisions are, however, introduced by a provision that uniform duties of Customs shall be imposed within two years after the establishment of the Commonwealth. Surely this is a singular proposal. The first comment that suggests itself is—What is the "sanction" of this law? Apparently the only sanction is that after two years the power of the Parliament would be gone, and that the Constitution would have to be amended in order to confer a fresh power. This could hardly have been intended. But suppose that the Federal Parliament is unable to agree to a uniform tariff within two years—an event easily conceivable. A dissolution of the House of Representatives on the question of the tariff is, indeed, a not unlikely contingency. What then? Surely it is not the province of the Convention to impose upon the Parliament of a free people, elected to discharge specific duties, and directly responsible to their constituents, any conditions either as to the time or the mode in which they are to discharge them. It may be doubted, perhaps, whether an attempt to prescribe a limit within which an intellectual or concensual work is to be perfected is, in the nature of things, more rational than an attempt to prescribe a period for the gestation of an animal or the ripening of a fruit.

A task may be set to a child or servant, and a failure to perform the task within the allotted time may be visited with displeasure or punishment. But such considerations are not applicable to the task of Sovereign Legislatures.

An examination of the proposed method of distributing the surplus revenue will, I think, be found to confirm the view that this proposed limit should be abandoned. This method may be briefly stated as follows:—

1. Until uniform duties of Customs are established, separate accounts are to be kept of the transactions of the Commonwealth with respect to the States, showing the revenue actually collected in each State, and the disbursements actually made within it in the discharge of the duties transferred from the State to the Commonwealth.

The collections would include Customs and Excise duties and postal and telegraphic receipts. The disbursements would include the cost of collection of this revenue, and the cost of administration of the Post and Telegraph Department, Defence, Ocean Beacons and Buoys, Ocean Light-houses and Light-ships, and Quarantine. The rest of the Federal expenditure is to be apportioned to, and charged against, the States in proportion to population, and the balance is to be paid to the States monthly. Subject to a doubt whether the expenditure on Defence, Buoys, Light-houses, and Quarantine should not be included in the expenditure to be borne from the beginning in proportion to population, this proposition seems to be reasonable, and to be adapted to cause the least possible disturbance to the finances of the Colonies until the financial policy of the Commonwealth has been determined. But it is evidently only a provisional arrangement. The objection that the "new" Federal expenditure may be made so large as to impose serious loss upon the States is met by a proposal that this expenditure shall not exceed £300,000 a year for the first three years. With all respect for the propounders of this proposal, it appears somewhat incongruous to establish a Sovereign Legislature, and in the same breath to tell them that they shall not have the command of more than £300,000 a year. Such a sum in the event of any sudden emergency would be wholly inadequate. It would indeed be certainly inadequate in the event, which must be contemplated as both possible and desirable, of the establishment of a Federal Capital within three years. The risk to the State Revenues is indeed unavoidable, but so long as the scheme for a monthly return of the surplus revenue actually collected is in force, it is practically not a serious one, having regard to the fact that until the financial policy of the Federation is settled, there is little probability of any large expenditure on Federal account.

The provision just referred to (in s. 91) is followed by another, that the total yearly expenditure of the Commonwealth in the performance of the services and exercise of the powers transferred from the States shall not exceed £1,250,000. This amount is an evident error, the average total expenditure of the six Colonies on Posts and Telegraphs for the past ten years being (according to the Convention Tables) £1,944,541, and for 1896, £2,273,037 (including £200,771 for interest on works), while the average annual cost of collection of Customs and excise has been £249,508, and the present annual cost of defence is £460,777. In any case the Federal Parliament must be trusted to authorize such expenditure as it may think necessary. A Sovereign State with an annual allowance for pocket money would certainly not need two Houses of Parliament and an elaborate Constitution.

2. After the imposition of uniform duties of Customs, the following arrangements are proposed:—

During the first year after the imposition, separate accounts are to be kept in the Treasury of the amounts collected in each State for duties of Customs and Excise, credit being given to each State for goods which are actually consumed in it, but on which duty is paid in another State.

The total amount of Customs and Excise revenue collected in the Commonwealth during the first year is to be divided by a number equal to the total population of the Commonwealth, and the quotient is to be "deemed to be the amount contributed by each person."

During the first year, therefore, the actual contribution of each State and the average contribution of the inhabitants of the Commonwealth will be known.

After the first year these separate accounts are to be discontinued, and the several States are to be deemed to contribute an amount ascertained as follows:—

The average amount contributed by each person in the Commonwealth in the first year is to be multiplied by the numbers representing the population of the several States.

If the actual contribution of any State during the first year exceeds the sum arrived at by multiplying the average contribution by the number of its population, one-fifth of the excess is to be deducted in each of the succeeding four years from the amount credited to the State in the first year.

If the actual contribution is less than the sum so arrived at, one-fifth of the difference is to be added in each of those years to the amount credited to the State in the first year. And the sums so arrived at are to be taken to be the actual contributions of the several States in these four years. After the fifth year it is to be assumed that all the States contribute rateably per head of population.

It will be noticed that this arithmetical basis requires that the amount available for distribution shall not be diminished during the four years, and it is accordingly so provided (s. 92). It also appears to assume that that amount will not be increased. Otherwise there will be a sum not apportioned to any of the States and undisposed of.

Having arrived at the amounts thus deemed to be contributed by the several States by Customs and Excise duties, it is proposed that the amounts so raised shall be repaid to them,* "after deducting from the amount in proportion to the population the share of the State in the total expenditure of the Commonwealth not provided for by other means of revenue.

These words require careful scrutiny. It will be noticed that the "expenditure provided for by other means of revenue" is to be deducted from the total expenditure, and the deficiency is to be charged to the States in proportion to population. The only other considerable means or sources of revenue during the five years will probably be the revenue from Posts and Telegraphs, which will consequently form a common fund applicable, as far as it goes, to the expenditure of the Commonwealth upon Posts and Telegraphs and other matters. As, however, the receipts from Posts and Telegraphs would not be equal to the expenditure on those services alone, it will be sufficient to compare the receipts and expenditure upon them. The annual average expenditure of the last ten years has been £1,944,541, while the annual average receipts have been £1,672,045, leaving an average deficiency of £272,496.

But this deficiency does not fall upon the Colonies equally. South Australia has made an average profit of £26,531, while the others have made average losses as follows:—

New South Wales	£80,773
Victoria	87,704
Queensland	98,971
Tasmania	13,136
Western Australia	18,443

By the proposed scheme South Australia would lose the whole of her profit, and would contribute with the other colonies, in proportion to population, to the net deficit.

This arrangement would, of course, produce results very different from those now existing.

The contributions to this deficiency, taken on the basis of the estimated population for 1896, would be approximately as follows:—

New South Wales	£97,900
Victoria	88,600
Queensland	35,700
South Australia	27,300
Tasmania	12,600
Western Australia	10,400

Queensland would consequently gain to the extent of over £63,000 a year, while South Australia would lose to the extent of about £54,000.

Those figures do not, apparently, include interest on the cost of works, nor, being based on the average of ten years, do they allow for the recent largely increased expenditure of Western Australia, where the average cost was only £75,029, while the actual cost for 1896 was nearly £270,000, the average deficiency being only £18,443, while that for last year amounted to upwards of £80,000, exclusive of interest on the cost of works.

A comparison of the actual receipts and expenditure for 1896 gives the following results in each Colony (the plus sign indicating a surplus, and the minus sign a deficiency, on the year's transactions):—

			Including Interest on Works at 3 per cent.	Exclusive of Interest.
New South Wales	— £120,109	— £68,675
Victoria	— 24,646	+ 13,904
Queensland	— 103,376	— 58,376
South Australia	+ 26,239	+ 63,214
Tasmania	— 10,804	— 5,972
Western Australia	— 106,841	— 82,871

Showing a net deficiency of £339,567, including interest, and £138,776 exclusive of interest.

* The words of the Draft (s. 92 (1) are, "shall be repaid to such State of the Commonwealth." There is evidently a printer's error of some kind.

If, however, the proposal now under consideration is adopted, the result on the basis of the figures of 1896 would be approximately—

				Including Interest on Works.		Exclusive of Interest.
New South Wales	— £122,000	...	— £49,500
Victoria	— 111,000	...	— 45,500
Queensland	— 44,000	...	— 18,000
South Australia	— 34,000	...	— 14,000
Tasmania	— 16,000	...	— 5,500
Western Australia	— 13,000	...	— 6,500

This Table compared with the preceding one shows that the comparative gains and losses to the several Colonies in respect to the Post and Telegraph Services would be as follows (the actual advantage to the revenue being represented by the plus sign, and the actual disadvantage by the minus sign):—

				Including Interest on Works.		Exclusive of Interest.
New South Wales	— £1,891	...	+ £19,175
Victoria	— 86,354	...	— 59,404
Queensland	+ 59,376	...	+ 40,376
South Australia	— 60,239	...	— 77,214
Tasmania	— 5,196	...	+ 472
Western Australia	+ 93,871	...	+ 76,371

It may be remarked here that the Draft Constitution does not say whether the liability for interest on the works is to be taken over by the Commonwealth, or whether the works themselves are amongst those to be paid for under s. 86. This point should be clearly dealt with.

The change in the incidence of the charges for Defence, assuming the total expenditure to remain the same, would cause some, but lesser, disturbance to the State finances. The principal loser would be Tasmania, which on a population basis would contribute £26,900, including interest, and £21,204 exclusive of interest, as against £12,219 and £8,577.

It is, of course, impossible to predict what will be the actual financial operations of the first year after the imposition of a uniform tariff with respect to these branches of the Public Service. It is unlikely, however, that the figures respecting the Post and Telegraph Service will relatively be much altered from those of last year. There would consequently be a serious interference with the finances of the States, though not so serious as under the scheme of 1891. It might happen that in the succeeding years an increasing share of surplus arising from Customs and Excise revenue would compensate for this equality. But this is quite conjectural, and the contrary result might happen.

It is further to be observed that the scheme assumes (1) That the result of the first year's operations after the imposition of a uniform tariff will be a fair basis for dealing with and distributing the surplus revenue in succeeding years; (2) that the average collections per head in succeeding years will tend to assimilate in the several States; and (3) that the average cost of the Post and Telegraph Services and the average revenue derived from them will also tend to assimilate. But the question may fairly be asked—Is there any real ground for either of these assumptions?

The most important factors in determining the average contributions through the Customs and Excise are climate, distribution of population, and relative proportion of women and children. These conditions are hardly likely to be materially changed, relatively, in the next ten years, except, perhaps, in the case of Western Australia, of which Colony it may be said just now that one thing only is certain—that nothing is certain.

The conditions governing the relative revenue and expenditure of the Postal and Telegraph Services, dependent, as they are, upon area, distances, and distribution of population, are equally unlikely to be materially altered for many years. And the assumption that the first year's operations of the tariff will be a fair basis seems to be quite contrary to probability, especially in the event of a large revenue tariff being imposed. In that event New South Wales would certainly contribute much less per head in the first year than her future average.

This provisional solution of the problem appears, therefore, to have been worked out upon data which, at best, are wholly uncertain, even if they are not probably erroneous. But there is another unknown quantity which enters into the problem, and which is likely to be one of the most important factors in its solution.

I mean the tariff itself. Until it is known what the tariff is, how is it possible to form anything more certain than a speculative guess as to the revenue which will be raised by it in the different parts of Australia?

It may be said that this is merely destructive criticism, and that similar objection may be urged against any scheme that can at present be propounded for the future distribution of surplus revenue. That is precisely the point I desire to make. After considering, I believe, all the proposals that have hitherto been made, I have come to the conclusion that the problem of devising and formulating an equitable, or even reasonably equitable, plan for the future distribution of Customs and Excise Revenue is at the present time insoluble, by reason of the want of the necessary data.

I am tempted to suggest that the probability of the fairness of the proposed scheme should be tested by the Canon of Probability laid down by the late Professor Romanes: "The value of any probability, in its last analysis, is determined by the number, the importance, and the definiteness of the relations known as compared with those of the relations unknown." Tried by this test I fear that the value in the present case would be of a negative character.

After the expiration, however, of a year or two from the establishment of the Commonwealth the state of things will be very different. The Federal Departments will be in full operation; their probable cost for some years to come will be capable of estimation within narrow limits, as well as the actual contributions to be raised within the several States in respect of Federal services.

The comparative burden of a tariff in different countries will obviously differ according to the principal subjects selected for taxation. These might be (1) stimulants; (2) luxuries in general; (3) clothing; (4) food; or (5) manufactures. It is quite easy to see that the contribution per head of two Colonies such as, say, Queensland and Tasmania would be very different according as one or another of these subjects was a principal source of revenue.

The incidence of a concrete Federal Tariff actually submitting to the Parliament could be approximately estimated. And with such data it would be possible (though no doubt difficult) for the Federal Treasurer, in negotiation with the several State Treasurers, to devise and submit a scheme which, no longer mainly based upon conjecture, would be probably just in its operations and acceptable to the several States.

Is this too great a responsibility to be intrusted to the Federal Parliament? That body will have more information, more time at its disposal, and more real sense of immediate responsibility, than a Convention can have. Moreover, its mistakes can be corrected, while those of the Convention cannot, without serious trouble, delay, and danger. It will be noted also that, if the duty of providing for the future distribution or disposition of surplus Federal Revenue is to be discharged coincidentally with or before the imposition of the Federal Tariff, the whole of the questions relating to Finance and Trade, which are so intimately connected, and some of which are not now susceptible of satisfactory treatment, will fall under consideration together. The Federal Parliament, when dealing with the Tariff proposals, will be in a position to deal also with all these other questions, and may, if it thinks fit, deal with the public debts of the States in whole or part, as well as the question of the Railways.

But, if this view is adopted, it would probably be necessary to provide that, so long as not more than four States are included in the Federation, any Tariff Bill should be finally passed by an absolute majority of the Senate. With this precaution I see no danger in intrusting the Parliament of the Commonwealth with authority to deal with the whole question of finance as it thinks fit. It might, perhaps, be thought desirable to stipulate that before the imposition of a uniform tariff the Parliament shall make provision for the disposition of the proceeds of taxation not required for ordinary Federal expenditure, and that such provision made be made either by way of distribution amongst the several States or by assuming the burden of the States in respect of their public debts in whole or part. But it would probably be preferable, and sufficient, merely to confer power on the Parliament to assume any part of the State debts (not limited to an equal amount per head of the population as proposed in s. 98), and "to make such provision as may be necessary for preserving the equilibrium of State finances from any disturbance caused by the establishment of the Commonwealth or the operations of its laws."

Before leaving this branch of the subject, I desire to point out that a power to assume a larger share per head of the public debt of one State than that of another might afford the easiest, and perhaps the only practicable, way of adjusting the inequalities arising from the differences in the relative revenue and expenditure connected with the same branches of the Public Service in different States, as well as the inequalities arising from the varying amounts of the average contributions through the Customs—inequalities which, as already pointed out, arise, to a great extent, from varying natural conditions of a permanent character.

If the view now suggested is adopted, Chapter IV. of the Draft Constitution will, of course, have to be remodelled, but the task will be a comparatively easy one.

VIII.—RAILWAYS AND RIVERS.

Sections 96 and 97 of the Draft Constitution provide as follows:—

"The Parliament may make laws constituting an Inter-State Commission to execute and maintain upon railways within the Commonwealth, and upon rivers flowing through, in, or between two or more States, the provisions of this Constitution relating to trade and commerce.

"The Commission shall have such powers of adjudication and administration as may be necessary for its purposes, and as the Parliament may from time to time determine."

A further provision that the Commission should have no power in reference to the rates or regulations of any railway in any State except in case of rates or regulations preferential in effect, and made and used for the purpose of drawing traffic to that railway from the railway of a neighbouring State, was, after a good deal of discussion, omitted. It is plain from a perusal of the Debates that the Convention was not agreed upon the powers which the members were willing to leave to the Commission. The words as they now stand are undoubtedly ambiguous.

The provisions of the Constitution relating to trade and commerce include s. 89, which provides that as soon as uniform duties of Customs have been imposed, "trade and intercourse throughout the Commonwealth, whether by means of internal carriage or ocean navigation, shall be absolutely free," and s. 95, which provides that "preference shall not be given by any law or regulation of commerce or revenue to the ports of one State over those of another," and that "any law or regulation having the effect of derogating from freedom of trade or commerce between the different ports of the Commonwealth shall be null and void."

On the one hand, it is contended that preferential railway rates intended to attract trade, say, to Sydney or Melbourne, which would otherwise go to the other port, are regulations of commerce derogating from freedom of commerce. On the other hand, this position is disputed. But, as the words stand, it would be open to the Commission and to the Supreme Court to adopt the former view, in which case the control of the main trunk lines would to a great extent be in the hands of the Commission, and the revenue of the States might be materially affected. It is most important, therefore, first of all, to have a clear idea of what power it is intended should be conferred on the Commission and surrendered by the States.

The difficulty is well illustrated by the Southern Railway of New South Wales and the Victorian Railways. It was said in debate that certain goods are carried from Melbourne to Echuca en route for New South Wales at 11s. 9d. a ton, while the rate for the same goods to the Victorian border only is £2 13s. 5d. In other cases the respective difference was said to be 22s. 6d. and £4 8s. 7d. Conversely, wool from New South Wales was said to be carried from the Murray River to Melbourne for 2s. 9d. a bale, while the charge for wool not coming from New South Wales is 6s. 1d. In New South Wales, on the other hand, in some instances the rate charged to and from Riverina to Sydney were said to be the same as to and from other places 200 or 300 miles nearer port. Similar difficulties arise between Victoria and South Australia, and between New South Wales and Queensland. When, however, it was suggested that the Commission should have power to deal with such a case as that of the New South Wales rates, it was answered that the rates which a State may think fit to impose for the carriage of goods carried entirely within its own borders are matters of purely domestic concern.

If a Commission were appointed with such powers "as may be necessary" to maintain freedom of commerce, it might come about that they would arrive, for instance, at any of the following determinations :—

1. That all tolls shall be at all times charged equally to all persons and at the same rate per ton or mile in respect of all goods and passengers passing over the same portion of the line under the same circumstances. (This is the English provision (8 and 9 Vic. c. 20, s. 90), and would effectually meet the complaint of New South Wales against Victoria if the place from which the goods originally come, or their ultimate destination, were held not to be an element in the "circumstances." But it would not meet the complaint of Victoria against New South Wales).

2. That the rates to be charged for a longer distance should always be greater, and, except for terminal charges, proportionately greater, than for shorter distances.

3. That the rate for the same kind of goods should be the same both ways over the same portion of line. (Either of these determinations would, to some extent, meet the Victorian complaint.)

But the question is—Are the colonies prepared to leave these powers to a Federal authority? If they are, the Draft should be so framed as to leave no doubt as to the powers of the Commission.

If they are not, the Draft should be so framed as clearly to exclude the powers not intended to be conferred.

Similar considerations apply to the proposed powers to be exercised with respect to rivers.

I venture, before passing from this subject, to suggest a doubt whether the words of s. 89 (which are the same as in the Draft Bill of 1891) are, in their modern sense, quite apt to express the meaning intended to be conveyed. It is, clearly, not proposed to interfere with the internal regulation of trade by means of licences, nor to prevent the imposition of reasonable rates on State Railways. I apprehend that the real meaning is that the free course of trade and commerce between different parts of the Commonwealth is not to be restricted or interfered with by any taxes, charges, or imposts. Would it not be better to use these or similar words? If it is also intended to prohibit such interference by the imposition of preferential or differential rates on railways or rivers, suitable words should be added. The following are submitted for consideration :—"Nor by the imposition or remission of rates or charges in respect of the carriage, upon any railway or river, of goods coming from any part of the Commonwealth which are not also charged or remitted in respect of the carriage of the like goods coming from any other part of the Commonwealth; nor by the imposition of unequal rates in respect of the carriage of goods of the same kind upon the same part of a railway or river in different directions, except so far as such inequality is in proportion to the difference in the actual cost of conducting traffic upon the railway or river in such different directions."

IX.—THE STATES.

The principal changes made in Chapter V. from the Draft of 1891 consist in the omission of some provisions of doubtful necessity or doubtful advantage.

There is, however, one alteration which suggests a question of considerable importance. The Draft of 1891, following the American Constitution, prohibited the imposition by a State of duties of Tonnage. These words are omitted, but the provision that a State shall not levy any charge on imports or exports except such as may be necessary for executing the inspection laws of the State, and that the net produce shall be Federal Revenue, is retained. I fear that the section (106) as it stands might have the effect of prohibiting the collection of Harbor Dues, such as are now collected in Queensland and Victorian ports for the purposes of local improvements. The provision ought apparently to be modified to allow of such a charge. I will, later, suggest a form of modification.

X.—ADMISSION OF STATES.

An important change is made in Section 114. The Draft of 1891 provided that all the existing Colonies might come into the Federation on the terms provided by the Constitution. It is now proposed that, as soon as the Commonwealth is established, the door shall be shut upon all the Colonies not already included, and that the terms of their subsequent admission shall be a matter for special legislation by the Federal Parliament.

May I be allowed to suggest as a via media that the right of admission on the original terms shall continue for a specified time? There will then be room for conciliation and for the education of the public opinion of a reluctant Colony. But, if the door is shut, I apprehend that before it could be opened negotiations would be necessary between the Commonwealth and the Colony desiring to enter, and that the terms of the proposed arrangement would have to be submitted to the several Legislatures and adopted by both without modification—a process which might cause indefinite delay. If, however, the present proposal is preferred, express power should be given to the Colonial Parliaments to pass an Act for adopting the Constitution and joining the Commonwealth.

XI.—SOME SUGGESTED AMENDMENTS.

I have adverted to some of the more important questions of principle raised by the work of the Convention. I proceed briefly to refer to some matters of detail which seem to require further attention.

ACT: Section 2.—This Section begins with the words "This Act shall bind the Crown"—an expression which is at least unusual in Statutes, and which is, surely, unnecessary. How can it be suggested that an Act in which the Crown is continually mentioned, and which establishes a new Dominion under the Crown, does not bind the Crown?

Section 4.—It is suggested that this Section should read as follows :—"The provisions of this Act relating to the Constitution of the Commonwealth shall commence and have effect on and from the day appointed," &c., the introductory words, "Unless it is otherwise expressed or implied," being omitted and replaced by the following provision at the end of the Section :—

"But the Parliaments of the several Colonies may at any time after the passing of this Act make any such laws, to come into operation on the day so appointed, as they might have made if the Constitution had been established at the passing of this Act."

The need of such a provision is apparent, having regard to the necessity to constitute electoral divisions for the first election of members of the House of Representatives (s. 29). And, if a suggestion previously made is adopted, a power to provide for the first election of Senators will be equally necessary.

Section 5.—If the alteration made in s. 114 is adhered to, this Section requires consequential amendment. If it is not adhered to, the mode by which a Colony is to join the Commonwealth should be specified.

CONSTITUTION: Sections 3, 4.—The theory of the "Civil List" is that there is placed at the disposal of the Sovereign a sufficient sum to defray the salaries of the officers mentioned; the time at which, and conditions under which, it is drawn being determined by the Sovereign. Thus we know that Governors receive half-pay from the date of embarkation and while on leave. These sections, as now framed, appear to be inconsistent with the existing practice, or, if construed in conformity with it, might, in the event of a reduction of the Governor-General's salary, lead to the anomaly of an Administrator of the Government having his emoluments actually reduced by reason of his discharge of the duties of that office. It is suggested that Section 3 should read as follows:—

"There shall be payable to the Queen out of," &c., "for the salary of the Governor-General, an annual sum which, until The Parliament otherwise provides, shall be £10,000," and that the concluding sentence of Section 4 should be omitted. This is, surely, a matter with which the Federal Parliament can deal, as the Parliament of Queensland did many years ago.

Sections 9, 10.—In order to give effect to the arguments already urged, with as little interference as possible with the Draft, it is suggested that the second paragraph of Section 9, which reads, "The Senators shall be directly chosen by the people of the State as one electorate," should be transferred to follow the first paragraph of Section 10, which provides that the Parliament of the Commonwealth may make laws prescribing a uniform manner of choosing the Senators, and that, subject to such laws, the State Parliaments may determine the time, place, and manner of choosing the Senators for their respective States; with introductory words limiting the provision for direct election to the absence of any general provision by the Federal Parliament and of any special provision by the Parliament of the State.

The succeeding Sections would need consequential amendments.

In Section 9 as well as in Section 30 is contained a provision that a person voting more than once shall be guilty of a misdemeanour. I venture to suggest that the Constitution of a Federal State is not an appropriate place for an addition to the Statutory Criminal law. The matter is, I believe, already effectively dealt with by State legislation in the provisions incorporated by ss. 10 and 42. (Qu. Should not these Sections be consolidated and transferred to Part IV. of Chapter I.?)

Sections 19, 36.—It is proposed that the place of either House shall become vacant in the event of absence without leave for two months. May I respectfully suggest that some members of the Convention do not appear to have realized the enormous extent of the territory of Australia?

Sections 20 and 37 provide that, upon the happening of a vacancy, the necessary steps are to be taken for the election of a new member, without any resolution of the House declaring the vacancy, as was provided in the case of the House of Representatives by the Draft of 1891 (s. 38), and as is provided by the several Australian Constitutions. If the only mode of vacating a seat were by death or resignation, this might be quite satisfactory, but sections 45, 46, and 47 prescribe other cases in which a seat may be vacated, and in which the happening of the event must, from the nature of the case, be established to the satisfaction of some tribunal. Until a Court exercising Federal Jurisdiction is in existence, this tribunal can only be the House itself. In Sections 21 and 43 this fact is recognised, but Sections 20 and 37 are apparently inconsistent with them. In Section 50, dealing with disputed elections, the fact has been lost sight of, and consequently no provision is made for questions arising at the first elections.

It is suggested that the provisions of the several Australian Constitutions may safely be followed in all these matters.

Sections 22, 38.—The Draft of 1891 left the quorum of members of either House entirely within the control of the Federal Parliament, which was probably a mistake. The present Draft fixes it absolutely at one-third of the whole number, without power of increase by the Parliament. Is not this a mistake in the other direction? It is suggested that the minimum number should be fixed, but that the Parliament should have power to increase it.

Section 24.—Apart from any question of principle, it is suggested that the words "As nearly as practicable there shall be two members of the House of Representatives for every one member of the Senate," and "Until the Parliament otherwise provides for the method of determining the number of members for each quota," be omitted and replaced by the words "so that." The section will then read: "The House of Representatives shall be composed of members directly chosen by the people of the several States, according to their respective numbers, so that there shall be one member for each quota of the people of the State. Until the Parliament otherwise provides the quota shall be ascertained," &c. The words proposed to be omitted are open to the charge of inaccuracy, and they add nothing to the sense.

If section 114 stands as now drawn, this section should also be altered by mentioning only the Colonies which originally form the Commonwealth.

Section 25.—It is suggested that this section, which is somewhat ambiguous, should read as follows:—

"When by the law of a State the people of any race are not entitled to vote at the elections for the more numerous House of the Parliament of the State, then, in ascertaining the number of the people of that State so as to determine the number of members to which the State is entitled, the number of the people of that race shall be deducted from the whole number of the people of the State."

Section 45.—This section (which is not altered from the Draft of 1891) needs verbal amendment. The words "until," &c., at the end are not applicable to the whole of the cases mentioned. The word "felony" also is, it is suggested, an inappropriate one. Apart from the fact that the word no longer bears any definite descriptive meaning, the use of it has the effect of making the disqualification in question dependent upon State law. In New Zealand the term is no longer used in criminal law, and it may be disused in other Colonies. Moreover, the same offences are felonies in some Colonies and misdemeanours in others. In all, I believe, manslaughter by negligence is felony.

On this point I submit three alternative suggestions—

1. To leave the imposition of disqualifications to the Federal Parliament ;
2. To establish disqualifications until that Parliament otherwise provides ;
3. To substitute for "felony" words to the effect following :—"An offence of such a nature that by the law of the State of which he is a representative a person convicted of it is liable to undergo penal servitude or imprisonment with hard labour for a term of three years."

Section 47.—The second paragraph of this Section should be amended to harmonize with the first paragraph and with s. 46.

Section 52, Par. II.—It is suggested that the principle expressed by the words "but so that," &c., should form the subject of a substantive provision in Chapter IV., as part of s. 84.

Par. VI.—The words relating to the calling out of the Forces to execute and maintain the laws "of any State or part of the Commonwealth," which were in the Draft of 1891, are omitted. Section 112, however, which deals with the same subject, is not altered. The only effect of the omission, so far as I can see, is to create an ambiguity which may afterwards give rise to discussion and trouble.

Par. X.—Do not "Astronomical and meteorological observations" fall within the term "Statistics" in Par. XIII.?

Par. XVI.—It is suggested that this should read thus : "Insurance, but so as not to include State Insurance relating only to the people of the State concerned or the things within that State, and not extending to persons or things beyond the limits of the State."

Section 54.—It is suggested that this section should read as follows :—

"Proposed laws for appropriating any part of the public revenue or moneys, or imposing any tax or impost, shall originate in the House of Representatives.

"But this section shall not extend to a proposed law by which a tax or impost is imposed incidentally only, and for the purpose only of securing the execution of the law, or in respect only of benefits taken or services rendered under the law, or by which any tax or impost imposed for such purposes only is appropriated."

A recommendation from the Crown as to expenditure should in all cases be required, and the words omitted from the Draft Bill of 1891 (s. 56), "or of the produce of any tax or impost," should be restored in Section 56.

It is suggested also to qualify the references to "laws imposing taxation," in the first and second paragraphs of Section 55, by adding—"which are required to originate in the House of Representatives."

Section 66.—The omission of the power of delegated appointment contained in the Draft of 1891 is, surely, inadvertent. It could not have been seriously intended that the temporary appointment of a telegraph messenger, for instance, at Normanton, could not be made without the authority of the Governor-General in Council.

In Section 69, bounties and telephones should, apparently, be mentioned.

Section 78.—It is suggested that, for reasons already given, the words "and in such parts of the Commonwealth" or "and in such place or places" (as in the following section) should be inserted.

Section 84.—It is suggested that the first three paragraphs of this section should read as follows:—

"All Customs duties and duties of excise imposed by the Parliament, and all bounties offered by the Parliament upon the production or export of goods, shall be uniform throughout the Commonwealth.

"As soon as the uniform duties of Customs have imposed by the Parliament, all laws of the several States imposing duties of Customs or duties of excise upon goods for the time being the subject of Customs duties, and all such laws offering bounties upon the production or export of goods shall cease to have effect.

"And thenceforth the Parliament shall have the sole power and authority to impose Customs duties, to impose duties of excise upon goods for the time being the subject of Customs duties, and to grant bounties upon the production or export of goods."

Then might follow, if thought fit, a proviso dealing with the case of duties on goods imported into isolated parts of the Commonwealth, as already suggested.

Section 86.—All the property mentioned in this section is already vested in the Crown. The provision should be that the property (which would, perhaps, be the better word to use, as in s. 107) shall vest in Her Majesty in right of the Commonwealth.

The words "the like" introduced before "public purposes" at the end of the section will, if they remain, have the effect of making it inoperative in some cases.

Section 90.—It is suggested that the words "in the State" be inserted after "collected" and "Commonwealth" in the first line of the first and second paragraphs. The words "and in payment of bounties" ought evidently to be added to the second paragraph. In the concluding paragraph it is suggested that the words "in respect of other matters than those hereinbefore specified" be substituted for the words "in the exercise of the original powers given to it by this Constitution," which are open to the charge either of ambiguity or of want of comprehensiveness. A similar amendment is suggested in s. 91.

Section 106.—It is suggested that, for reasons already given, this section should read as follows :—

"After uniform duties of Customs have been imposed, a State shall not, nor shall any authority constituted by a State, except as provided by this Constitution, levy any impost or charge on imports or exports except such as may be necessary for executing the inspection laws of the State or by way of payment for services actually rendered in the improvement or maintenance of ports or harbors or in aid of navigation; and the net produce of all imposts and charges imposed by a State on imports or exports by way of payment for such services shall be applied for the support of such services only, and the net produce of all such imposts and charges imposed for the purposes of inspection laws shall be for the use of the Commonwealth; and any laws imposing any such imposts or charges may be annulled by the Parliament of the Commonwealth." The words in italics are new.

Section 121.—It is suggested that the third paragraph of this section should read thus—

"And if in a majority of the States a majority of the electors voting approve the proposed law, and if a majority of all the electors voting also approve the proposed law, it shall be presented," &c.

I have now referred to the principal question raised in the Draft Constitution which appeared to invite special comment, and I venture to hope that my observations may be of assistance in arriving at a sound conclusion on a matter which, however decided, involves issues of the highest importance to the welfare of the people.

I venture also, in conclusion, to express the opinion that the vast extent of many of the Australian Colonies require the application of different considerations from those which might properly prevail in the case of States of smaller and more equal areas and of similar climate, and the further opinion that an acquaintance, on the part of members of the Convention, even with the coast line of Queensland would be likely to modify some conclusions arrived at in Adelaide.

FEDERAL FINANCE.

ADDRESS BY MR. McMILLAN, M.P.

MR. PRESIDENT, YOUR EXCELLENCY, AND GENTLEMEN,—

In dealing with the question of Federal Finance, I do not want to pretend that I have any absolute solution of this intricate question. The question will be debated by yourselves; it will be debated by the Parliaments of the different colonies, and it will be considered in the press. It will not be absolutely necessary for me as a member of the Convention to deal with it in the concrete until we meet again in September. At the same time I cannot help feeling that in many of these financial questions, such as the Budget Speech that we hear annually, and this intricate question of Federal Finance, there has been such an enormous mass of suggestions, and such an ocean of figures placed before the people of the different colonies that most men are absolutely bewildered. Therefore, it seems to me that although the thing is surrounded by enormous difficulties, and although the intricacies of the case are difficult to understand, still, as antecedent to the solution of those difficulties, there must be a clear statement and a clear comprehension of the case. (Hear, hear.)

In dealing with this question I shall take it for granted that the great colony of Queensland is to be included in our Federation. (Applause.) I hold that no federation is worth having, comparatively speaking, unless it includes every state in the island continent of Australia. (Hear, hear.)

The figures that I give are taken mostly from Coghlan's invaluable book called "The Seven Colonies, 1895-6," and the other figures not contained in that book are taken from the documents which were prepared at the Federal Convention.

In dealing with this great question of Federation there are large political issues which must be more or less left to men who are trained in constitutional law, and whenever the time is ripe for Federation, and whenever the enthusiasm of the populace demands it, they will be perfectly satisfied, as to nine-tenths of the Constitution Bill, to leave these great questions to the leaders of the people. But when we come to deal with what is called Federal Finance—and even in the expression Federal Finance there may be a difficulty, not the Federal Finance of the future Federal Parliament, but more properly speaking the adjustment of the accounts between the various colonies—it is there that the people more or less will demand a clear exposition of the subject. And rightly so too, because the question of how these accounts are adjusted will, to a certain extent, affect the taxation of the different colonies, and especially with regard to New South Wales, which at present is probably the most lightly taxed colony in Australasia. It is a matter of vital importance to her, standing as she does in a rather unique position among all the other colonies of Australia. As I am addressing a number of gentlemen from various colonies, I hope they will not consider, when I dwell to a certain extent upon the peculiar position of New South Wales, that I in any way reflect upon the other colonies or upon their fiscal systems. (Hear, hear.)

In the first place it is well to look at the history of the different colonies. Up to a few years ago they were isolated groups in the different parts of Australia, absolutely separated from each other, and with very little knowledge of the political and social life of each other. That being so, unfortunately, certain social habits, but particularly certain fiscal systems, arose differentiating one from the other. The tariff of Victoria was, I think, the first practically protective tariff. Whether it was good or not, is not a question for me to decide, but there is no doubt that protection, whether it is good or bad, always leads, such is our frail human nature, to what is called retaliation. When Victoria became protective South Australia retaliated, and one by one, with the exception of New South Wales, more or less highly protective tariffs became the fiscal policy of the different States. But these tariffs were all different, and hence at the present time, when we come to consider the question of Federation, there is a highly scientific differentiation between all the colonies in their tariffs and their fiscal systems; and it is the result of this differential system, arising out of our isolation, which produces all the difficulties to-day with regard to the finance of Federation. (Hear, hear.)

I have said that we must make this matter clear before the people. There are some who say on the one hand—"Trust the people," and on the other hand they try to throw dust in their eyes. I am an ardent Federationist. I have been true to the cause from the very inception of the movement under Sir Henry Parkes. (Hear, hear, and applause.) But I believe no federation is right and without danger in the future unless the people of the several States know exactly the conditions under which they are going to federate. (Hear, hear.)

The difficulty in regard to Federal Finance arises, as you all know, from the fact that in forming a Federal Government or Parliament we give over to that Parliament or Government all those large concerns of national life which can be better done by one central administration than by isolated units. Most of us, I think, are agreed upon the principal matters that should be transferred to the Federal Government. We believe that the great necessity for Federation arises out of the fact that if we are to be an Australian nation we must have free-trade throughout all our borders. (Applause.) But if we are to have that, we must give over as essentially one of the powers of this Federal Parliament the regulation of Trade and Commerce. When we admit that, we admit the fact that we must give over to Australia, as an absolutely sovereign national power, that great elastic machine of taxation, the Customs and the Excise. That is the first thing.

Then, as a nation, we must give over the Defences of Australia.

Besides that, to complete the inter-communication and to make Australia one, we must give over our Posts and Telegraphs.

Besides that, we also give over the Quarantine regulations and the Light-houses.

Now, those four contain all the salient things that are given over, as at present agreed upon by most men, to the Central Government.

You will see that as the post offices and telegraphs almost entirely pay their way, with the exception of a loss in all the colonies of about £100,000, there is no difficulty in giving over a service in which the debit and the credit absolutely balance. In other words, if we give over the revenue derived from that great service, we also get rid of the expenditure, which is almost equivalent.

In the matter of defence, the total amount spent up to the present time by all the different Governments, is about £715,000. That of course will have to be borne by the Central Government, but deducted in the adjustment of the accounts from the State Governments who had to carry it on before.

Then we have got as a necessary expenditure the quarantine regulations and the light-houses—an item of about £81,000.

Then you have to pay of course for the collection of your customs.

These are the different items of expenditure which are necessary; but while necessarily getting rid of these items of expenditure, we give over, as I said before, this great elastic machinery of taxation called the Customs and Excise.

The position can be very clearly stated. I have taken the figures with regard to the Customs, first as regards New South Wales, from the last "Ways and Means" of the Premier and Treasurer; for Victoria, South Australia, Tasmania, and Queensland, I have the figures from the paper prepared for the Federal Convention, which gives the mean Customs and Excise Revenue for the years 1893, 1894, and 1895, but the figures practically work out as for 1895. For Western Australia, as it is in an abnormal condition and rapidly increasing from year to year, we have taken the figures of 1895. Taking it for granted that those figures are as near as we can get them for the present purpose, the total amount of Customs revenue for all Australia at the present time can be stated at £6,129,000. Then the total amount which we estimate for the expenses of the Federal Government, including Defence, the loss on the Post Offices, the expenditure on Quarantine, &c., together with about £380,000 for the new administration necessary for a Federal Government which is created anew, is about £1,500,000. Consequently, if the services taken over by the Federal Government are confined to those special services to which I have referred, you have left, after making the necessary payments, a balance of £4,629,000.

Now the whole question of Federal Finance rests upon the disposal of that £4,629,000.

Of course, if by any happy coincidence you had certain other services in the different colonies which were more federal than local, and in which the expenditure and revenue were almost equal, and if that expenditure in the different colonies were equal to £4,629,000, then you could say to the Federal Parliament—"Take those services, take the revenue derived from them, pay the expenditure, and we will carry on our local government by our own resources." But, unfortunately, as I said before, the differentiation arising partly out of the natural conditions and partly out of different tariffs is so great that whenever you touch this question of the surplus revenue of £4,600,000—whenever you try to adjust it by any mechanical or scientific means, you are absolutely thwarted at every point, and you are almost inclined to give it up in despair. I will just take, in the first place, these different tariffs, and show you what they yield per head of the population, and that one instance will give you a key to some of the difficulties which surround this question. I have made out a series of tables, and have put them in a certain order. They will be printed, no doubt, in connexion with this address. There are not very many, but they cover, to my mind, all the salient points in connexion with this greatest conundrum.

The tariff of New South Wales at the present time yields £1 4s. per head of population; Victoria, £1 13s. 1d.; South Australia, £1 11s. 7d.; Tasmania, £1 19s. 10d.; Queensland, £2 12s. 9d.; and Western Australia, £6 11s. 8d.; but as to the latter colony the whole position is so abnormal that, in the attempt to solve these difficulties, it has almost been proposed to leave her out of the question.

I will now touch lightly on the question of the public debt. Some people have proposed that the whole of these Customs duties should be allotted to cover the public debt; and they come very near to the total amount of the public debt of Australia; but you will find this result: The interest on the debt of Australia is £6,928,000. The total Customs and Excise revenue is £6,129,000; but before you try to cover it with the debt at all, that £6,129,000 has got to bear £1,500,000 expenditure, reducing it to a surplus of £4,629,000. So that if you try to put the debt of Australia against the surplus which arises after certain payments you have got this result, that the whole interest of the six colonies is £6,928,000, the surplus revenue £4,629,000, and the amount that the Federal Parliament would have to collect from the States is £2,299,000. This shows us the two ends of the difficulty. If the Federal Parliament only takes over the amount of services which has been agreed upon up to the present time, then it will be in the very awkward position of having to give back an enormous surplus. If, on the other hand, in order to meet the difficulty, you say—"Why should not the debts be given over for the Customs and Excise?" you will see that on the other hand Parliament will have to get from the States the large amount of about £2,000,000, and one of the difficulties that will always arise between a Federal Government and a State Government will be the question of getting money either from one or the other. I think it was the great Burke who said—"You cannot draw an indictment against a nation," and although some men in the Convention proposed that certain legal processes should be set in action against a State to recover a debt, I know of no means except that of the policeman and the soldier, which, if once attempted, would mean civil war in the community.

The next point I wish to draw your attention to is this. It is very easy for us, under present conditions, before there is intercolonial free-trade, to adjust this balance. It is a very simple thing, the moment we are federated with the present tariffs continuing, to keep bookkeeping entries, to see what should be charged and what should be credited to each State and to return the surplus. That can be done by the easiest possible process, and we will take it for granted that that will be done during the first two years. But, unfortunately, in this question we have to deal with absolutely unknown quantities. We have to deal, not with the tariff of the present, but with the tariff of the future, and no man can tell what that tariff will be. Here comes the question, not so much of compromise, but of absolute and essential sacrifice on the part of New South Wales. Putting aside Western Australia, whose tendencies we cannot foresee, all the Colonies of Australasia outside New South Wales are strongly protective in their fiscal policy, and it is not likely that because we come together in federation that, as by a magician's wand, all these differences will cease. It is not reasonable to imagine that when these colonies come together—while they may have the utmost respect for New South Wales, they will change their fiscal systems in order to meet her present policy. Possibly the little leaven of New South Wales may, in years to come, leaven the whole lump; but it will take time. Therefore, whether the policy of the future for raising the revenue is by what are called revenue producing duties pure and simple, or by an essentially scientific protective system, what all these States will say when they meet together in the Federal Parliament will be—"We must have very nearly the same volume of Customs and Excise under the Federal Parliament as we had in the aggregate under the separate States."

This brings me to another point. The principle which was laid down by those connected with financial matters in the Convention was this:—They presumed that it would take £300,000 or £400,000 for the new administration of the Federal Government, apart altogether from the services that were transferred, and they said—"We don't mind sacrificing our fair proportion of that on a per capita basis. We think that the per head of population principle is the safest in order to apportion that amount; but after we have agreed to pay that £300,000 or £400,000, you must put us in exactly the same position by the surplus revenue that we were in before." I will put it in a few figures, so that it may be more easily understood. We will take it for granted that the amount of money produced by Customs and Excise taken over by the Federal Government is £6,000,000; we will say that the amount of services which have been handed for defence, and otherwise, equals about £1,000,000—that of course is a mere transfer. If you give over those services, and the money is spent by the Federal Parliament, it is not spent by you. We will take it for granted in order to get at round numbers, that the Central Administration costs £500,000. The £6,000,000 will have as a first charge upon it the £1,000,000 for the services that are handed over, and as a second charge the £500,000 for the special expenses of the Federal Government. The position taken up by the different States is this—"You must give us back £4,500,000, and whatever the future tariff may be, upon what principle soever it may be based, you must create that volume of money which will give us that result."

In order that there may be no mistake about this I will give you exactly the items which make up this result. The total Customs and Excise duties amount to £6,129,000. The first charge is £209,000 for the collection of Customs; the second charge is £109,000, the loss on the Post and Telegraph Offices; the third charge is 81,000, the cost of Navigation and Quarantine; the fourth charge is defence, £715,000; and the fifth charge is the special expenditure of the Federal Government, £386,000. That makes £1,500,000 to be deducted from the £6,129,000. This is the attitude now assumed by all the statesmen of all the different colonies outside of New South Wales. You must give us back that £4,629,000 surplus or we will not agree to federate. Now, why do they do that? They do it for the simple reason that almost every colony except Western Australia has a deficiency more or less, or at any rate they could not afford to allow any great gap in their finances, because it would mean, to a certain extent, insolvency. But you naturally say to these people—"The Customs is not the only mode of raising revenue; you can go to direct taxation." Then a gentleman from Tasmania tells me—"We have taxed so much that if we were to attempt to raise £50,000 more by direct taxation we would be ruined as a political party." (Laughter.) That is exactly the position, and it is of no use shutting our eyes to it. The actual position is this, that in some of these colonies—and the delegates speak with all the knowledge and experience of their people gained by their political position—that there is no means of forcing direct taxation any further than it has gone. It is a very unfortunate thing for us in New South Wales, because you will clearly see that if there is embodied in this Constitution—as there is in the Draft Bill up to the present time—a clause by which a certain surplus must be returned, a surplus based upon present actual conditions, it means that you must, whether you like it or not, create a Federal tariff to bring in a certain volume of revenue. And what does that mean for us? It means this, that New South Wales, if she joins the Union, must agree to the reimposition to a large extent of Customs duties, whether they are purely for revenue or for protective purposes, which will be going back upon her present system of free-trade. There is no use shutting your eyes to that fact. People will say that we can create a tariff which is not protective, but only revenue producing. I would like to ask the common sense of Australia whether, when six colonies join together and five are of one fiscal character, the sixth is likely to produce any effect upon that character when numbers are against it? (Hear, hear.) I say all this not because I want to say anything against Federation, but I say we want to go into this Federation with our eyes open. (Applause.)

The next difficulty is this. If you want to deal with this question of the distribution of the surplus in the future, you will have to deal with it within a certain period on some scientific principle. Of course the most scientific and simplest system is on a per capita basis. But you know that even if you create a tariff of a certain character, say of a protective character, it will not create the results immediately. Victoria has been under a protective tariff for many years, and the result of that protective tariff is that thousands of pounds worth of articles which come in here through our ports, never come in through her ports at all, because they are either produced or manufactured in the country. Now supposing for one moment that when the Federal Parliament meets the average tariff of Australia—which may be called, more or less, the Victorian tariff, is adopted. You will see clearly that this colony, having been for many years under a free-trade system, must take years before it works out the results of a protective system. Even if you introduce a high tariff at once, you will not rush into existence manufacturers of all kinds, and you will not make people produce all kinds of articles which they have hitherto had imported. But you must recollect this too, when we come to deal with the tariff, for several years there will be great unrest and great uncertainty, and it is probable that even with a protective tariff like that of Victoria, New South Wales would continue to import largely out of proportion to the sister colony.

I have figures here in which a calculation is made of a very interesting character. It has been made by the Government Statistician of New South Wales. We eliminate from the tariff as being practically the same in each colony all the duties on spirits and narcotics, and we produce a tariff on the Victorian basis, and then taking the Victorian imports as they are at present and the duties arising therefrom, we calculate how that tariff would effect the other colonies if it were imposed to-morrow. The result is very startling. Of course if we were not going to abolish our border duties, if we were going to keep up a strict system of bookkeeping for years to come, then each colony could be credited with the actual amount of dutiable goods consumed within its own borders. But you will see that once you remove the boundaries of the different colonies, and once you allow goods to come free from one colony to another, it does not follow that because goods are imported into New South Wales, say through Port Jackson, that they are consumed in New South Wales; or, on the other hand, that because they are imported into Melbourne that they are consumed in Victoria. I will put a concrete case. When we have got intercolonial free-trade, which means not merely free-trade across the borders but free-trade between the ports, it is possible that the great bulk of Riverina will be supplied through Melbourne, and those goods will pass the borders without any Customs entry, and Melbourne or Victoria would be credited not only with the dutiable goods that came in there for Victoria, but with all the dutiable goods that came in for New South Wales or South Australia. (Hear, hear.) Consequently, if you want to see where the incidence of this taxation is, it is not sufficient to look simply at the port of entry, but you have got to trace the goods right into their consumption. You can only do that by a system of bookkeeping which would be absolutely alien to the spirit of Federation, and the whole of this problem which we have got to deal with for some years to come is this: How are you going to make a scientific basis for the adjustment of this surplus when one colony in a particular article consumes, say, 2s. per head, another colony 1s. per head, another colony only 6d. per head, and yet another colony only 3d. per head? If you want to do it on a per capita basis, you can see clearly that certain colonies, either because they produce these things themselves, or because they take back by federation their natural geographical boundaries, would get a much larger share of the Customs duties than the colonies to which they belonged. I have got a table here based on the Victorian tariff, and I will show you exactly how it will affect the different colonies. We will take it for granted that the colonies remain as they are, and that the new tariff does not affect them materially for some time to come. Under the Victorian tariff New South Wales would have duties equal to—these are very startling figures—£3,314,000. Victoria, under the same tariff, would have £1,704,000. New South Wales and Victoria have almost exactly the same population; yet under the present tariff Victoria would only get through her Customs in duties £1,704,000, while New South Wales would get £3,314,000. In other words, Victoria would have £1 9s. per head in duties, and New South Wales £2 13s. 7d. per head. Now if this surplus was distributed on a per capita basis, the result of that would be this: that New South Wales would lose £668,000, and Victoria would gain £812,000.

Of course it may be said that these are only the figures of statisticians, and I do not want to make any more out of them than they are worth, because it is natural that the policy that reduced the Customs duties in Victoria, if allowed to have full sway in any other colony, would in a certain period of time bring about probably the same results. But the period which we have put in the Federal Bill is five years, and does anybody in his senses think that in five years the differences represented by £2 13s. 7d. and £1 9s. per head of population would be brought into line?

I should have said, to preface this, that in order to get over this difficulty the following is the proposal of the Federal Convention Bill: It is proposed—and of course it is only natural—that up to the time when the uniform tariff is brought in, and while the border duties still continue, there should be the ordinary debit and credit account kept, and the adjustment of the surplus would then be on absolutely true lines. But it is clearly seen that some of the colonies would be put to a great disadvantage if the per capita system came into operation at once, and the proposal to get out of the difficulty is this:—Let the border machinery remain, not for the purpose of collecting money, but for the purpose of statistics, and for the first twelve months of the uniform tariff let there be statistics kept both at the ports and on the borders of the goods that have been transferred from one colony to another, and by that means you will have the result not on the basis of where the goods were landed, but on the basis of where they were consumed. It is proposed that that should be made the basis for the remaining four years, and that by a sliding scale which is very fair in itself, New South Wales would each year have deducted from her results a certain percentage till it came on a level at the end of the five years with what is called the per capita basis.

Now that is perfectly correct as far as the mechanical working is concerned, but the weak spot of that arrangement is this: Commercial men, even the pure minded gentlemen I see before me, are not averse to helping themselves to the disadvantage of any Government. Taken for granted that it would be two years before a uniform tariff would be brought into operation—during those two years, and especially during the year previous to that uniform tariff, there will be a large amount of speculation. Now what will go on? New South Wales will be a free port. She will know most clearly that she is not going to be a free port in the next twelve months, and she will largely forestall the following year by the imports of the last year under the old tariff. Victoria probably will see her advantage too, and she will import into New South Wales, a free-trade country, and leave those goods lying pleasantly aside until the new uniform tariff comes in, because when the new uniform tariff comes in there will be no intercolonial duties. (Laughter.) Consequently New South Wales, in the first year of the uniform tariff, will probably import hundreds of thousands of pounds less than she would under ordinary circumstances, because she has protected herself against the probable future; and Victoria, during that year of bookkeeping, would be getting hundreds of thousands of pounds in goods across the border free, but still reckoned in the statistics. So the result would be simply this, that in the first place, during the first year, Victoria would probably have an enormous amount of importations, New South Wales would have a lessened amount of importations; and putting aside even that clever technicality, anybody that understands commerce must know that during the last year of the old régime and the first year of the new régime, there must be absolute chaos and unsettlement in commercial life. (Hear, hear.) Consequently, without going in the technicality of the thing, the first year of the new uniform tariff must be absolutely unreliable as a basis for the future. Consequently, if this system is to be carried out I am very much afraid that the bookkeeping must go on for two years. At the same time this continuance of the bookkeeping system is not more repugnant to any one than to me.

I have stated the case with regard to New South Wales, but New South Wales will have to make a sacrifice more or less. You cannot expect to convert five other colonies to your fiscal system because you intend to federate, and we New South Welshmen must make some compromise, so long as it is not disastrous in regard to this fiscal matter, or we cannot federate at all. (Hear, hear.) The more clearly that is seen, and the more people begin to realize it, the less dissatisfaction will there be when the federation comes about; because you must recollect this, that this is one of the most difficult federations that has ever taken place in the world, notwithstanding all the difficulties of Swiss and Canadian federation. We have here five or six large unwieldy States in this great island continent of Australia, separated so far from one another that there is the danger in the early periods of our federation that certain contingencies may occur which will strain that union to the very utmost. Therefore, it is an absolutely necessary condition precedent that in all matters that affect the industrial life and the pockets of the people, they should know clearly and fully the bargain that they are about to make. (Applause.) Now, I say most unmistakeably, in spite of all these difficulties, that union is worth the price. (Applause.) And, speaking as a free-trader, and without any disrespect to others, I believe that the way of looking at the tariff of the future when we come together as one great Australian people will be far higher, more national and broader than we have looked at that question in our isolated communities. (Cheers.) If we do not have free-trade with the outside world, we will have free-trade among ourselves; and as population increases—although probably not to such an extent for many years as in the United States of America, we will have the same great factor which we find there, and which to a certain extent has kept protection from its evil effects, the fact that although they have protection against the outside world, they have a world in themselves in which trade is absolutely free. (Cheers.)

I am afraid I have trespassed too long upon your time (Cries of "No, no"), but I will pass lightly over another phase of the subject. You will find this phase included in these tables. It is a very great question whether we should not take over the railways of the different States, and there is no doubt that in taking over the railways you do get rid of a large amount of surplus, and reduce the matter to a smaller compass. But when you consider the position of the different railways of these colonies; when you consider that the New South Wales railways pay 3·60 per cent. on capital invested, Victoria 2·74, South Australia 3·12, Western Australia (entirely abnormal) 5·44, Tasmania 0·61 (they run then for nothing over there), and Queensland 2·68, you will see that the railway question opens up an enormous difficulty. It may be said—"How easy it is to take over the railways under one central authority, and work them as separate railways, only in some kind of uniformity and under one head." But you will see, if you look into this question, that there are only two ways of dealing with the railways. Either you must leave them practically as they are, as great feeders to the outlying portions of the various colonies, and as practically identified with the land and other policy of each colony; or you must absolutely vest them in the Federal Parliament, and run them as one Federal system. There is no other course, because if we in New South Wales, for instance, are going to give over our railways to a Federal Parliament, and at the same time this system of book-keeping is to be kept up, and if that Federal Parliament or any inter-state commission said—"We will run your outlying lines entirely on Federal principles, and the man who lives at Cootamundra shall have a through fare to Melbourne for his goods in the same way as you have a through fare from Albury to Sydney," then the result will be this, that the large outlying lines that border upon other colonies—lines which we have projected to meet our own producers, which nobody else could project because they had nothing to do with the colony, lines which do not pay of themselves, but which pay as part of one system—would practically be handed over for the goods of another colony to run upon them, or for our goods to run upon them to the ports of another colony, and we, the people in the portion of New South Wales where the population is congested, would practically have to pay for the loss on all those outlying lines that would be used entirely to divert the produce from our own ports. (Hear, hear.) Therefore the giving over of the railways to a central authority in order to reduce the surplus does not get you out of the difficulty at all, because you might get rid of the objectionable surplus and find large portions of your railway lines run for the benefit of other people, while you had to pay the loss. Therefore I say, that if the railways are to be given over at all, it must be done under some system of absolute vesting, and the capital must be absolutely amalgamated. But you cannot expect to amalgamate the railways on the same terms absolutely as far as capital is concerned, if one pays 3½ per cent. and the other 2½ per cent. And is Victoria ready at the present time to knock some millions of money off her railway capital, and add it to the other portion of her debt, in order to amalgamate with the lines of New South Wales? Certainly not. Victoria would say, reasonably enough—"You were in a very bad position a few years ago. You appointed Commissioners who have been worthy of their trust. (Hear, hear.) And after a certain number of years you have raised your percentage from 2½ to 3½, and we intend to do the same." Consequently this railway question is not a matter, I believe, to be decided by this Convention at all. It is a question too intricate for the Convention. It is a question that would delay the Convention for months and months, and one which, if it is not settled upon absolutely equitable lines, would endanger this Bill before the people of the country. I quite sympathize with some of my commercial friends and others who desire to see a complete system of railway management, and as a business man I desire it myself; but I desire union above all things, even if I do not at present get the union of the railways; and I say that we cannot settle that question at the present time, for if we were to settle it upon any but the most absolutely just lines to New South Wales, the Bill would be rejected at the polls. Therefore, in this matter of railways, I say, give the Federal Parliament the power to take them over, subject to the consent of the States, and then when, instead of these wretched Conferences of half-a-dozen colonies, each trying to create a status for itself, you have one great central administrative power, a great negotiator between the different colonies, with all the best men of Australia, as I trust, in that Parliament, and with the picked men of that Parliament in its executive, with all the conditions surrounding this great question, and all its intricacies thoroughly reviewed, and with the uprising of a truly federal spirit, you will be able to solve the difficulty. (Cheers.)

THE CONVENTION DILEMMA.

(R. L. NASH.)

SYDNEY DAILY TELEGRAPH, 26TH, 27TH, 28TH MAY, 1897.

FEDERAL FINANCE.

THE CONVENTION DILEMMA.

(By R. L. Nash.)

I.

IS THE PROBLEM SOLVED.

Compromise and concession have certainly played their parts at the Adelaide Convention, as they should have done. If, therefore, it can be found that a fairly equitable, fairly workable, basis has been arrived at in the 1897 Bill—one which does not press too heavily on the people either of New South Wales or the other colonies, one which will adjust itself to the differences in growth which must necessarily be discernible between them in the future—surely it ought to be accepted, even though it does not realize in full measure those standards which some of us consider Federation should attain.

In these remarks upon the provisions of the 1897 Bill it will be understood that they are, so far, confined entirely to the machinery clauses; and we start with the recognition of the fact that in any Federation, even of the complete type realized in the Dominion of Canada, the richer provinces must concede something to the poorer ones. We in New South Wales must also concede something of the absolute freedom of trade we now enjoy, and pay something more than an average to the cost of the joint government. It is all a question of degree.

As the Draft Bill now stands, upon its adoption by certain colonies the Federation is to be proclaimed by the Queen; and thereafter, keeping entirely to the 1891 limits, the departments of Customs and excise, posts and telegraphs, defence, light-houses, and quarantine will be taken over by the Federation, and the revenues will then form one consolidated fund, upon which the expenditure of the Commonwealth will be a first charge. Uniform Customs duties must be imposed within two years, and until such uniformity is attained each State will be credited with the duties collected within its boundaries. But on the establishment of uniform duties, we shall enter into a five years' period during which a process of adjustment will be in progress. First, there is a guarantee that the aggregate Customs and excise duties paid to the whole of the States shall not be less than that returned in the year preceding uniformity. This is a collective, not an individual, guarantee. Consequently, if, as last year, those duties realized (taking the six colonies) some £7,000,000, that amount would in the aggregate be guaranteed. Hence it follows that though on the introduction of uniformity, and with it intercolonial free-trade, there would on the six colonies be a loss of about £1,100,000 to the revenue, the States are not in the aggregate to suffer. However, that might not matter, as uniform duties would mean, under ordinary conditions, that fully that sum would be added to the duties in New South Wales.

However, in the first year of uniformity we in this colony shall get back very much what we pay into the Federal Treasury. In that year, and in that year only, will accounts be kept, or estimates made, of the imports for consumption of dutiable goods; and thereafter in each of the four following years an adjustment will be made, until at the expiration of the five years' period each State will be credited with Customs duties at a uniform rate of so much per head. If in the first year of uniformity 40s. per head were collected in the Commonwealth on Customs and excise, the proportions might possibly, under ordinary conditions, stand as under over the five years' period:—

In (say)	N.S. Wales.			Victoria.			Queensland.			S. Australia.			W. Australia.			Tasmania.
	£	s.	d.	£	s.	d.	£	s.	d.	£	s.	d.	£	s.	d.	£	s.	d.
1900	2	5	0	1	12	6	2	10	0	1	10	0	4	10	0	1	10	0
1901	2	4	0	1	14	0	2	8	0	1	12	0	4	0	0	1	12	0
1902	2	3	0	1	15	6	2	6	0	1	14	0	3	10	0	1	14	0
1903	2	2	0	1	17	0	2	4	0	1	16	0	3	0	0	1	16	0

This arrangement practically guarantees the States certain rates, to be ascertained, of Customs and excise duties during the five years 1900 to 1904 inclusive, but in and after 1905 there is apparently no guarantee. The only provision is that thereafter in perpetuity it shall be understood that each State shall be deemed to have paid an equal sum per head towards these forms of taxation. Everything will stand on a population basis.

HOW IT WILL OPERATE.

Such, in brief, is the arrangement. Now let us see how it may be expected to operate. In the first place, West Australia and Queensland could not accept such an arrangement. The former could not enter into a Federation definitely cutting down her revenue per head to one-third or one-fourth of its existing level, her Customs at present realizing nearly £8 per head. That there will be a material reduction in that colony as time goes on is certain, but it will not be so violent as this arrangement would necessitate. Queensland could not join for much the same reason. At present her Customs and excise yield something like £3 per head, and they may be expected always to yield a larger return per capita than in the southern colonies. Hence a loss of probably £1 per head in the amount credited to her would mean a loss of nearly £500,000 in revenue, while, in addition, she would have to bear the part cost of the Federal Administration. A loss, therefore, of something over £500,000 in her net revenue would be too great a sacrifice to expect from her, and the Commonwealth is left with the four less productive colonies. The two colonies might, however, partially join the Federation for purposes of defence and the post and telegraph services. The Commonwealth tariff per capita would, under those conditions, be slightly less productive.

But these considerations do not disclose the true gravity of the situation. From the date of Federation trade would be in a state of entire dislocation. During the interval preceding tariff uniformity, the imports into all the colonies, except New South Wales, would be cut down to an absolute minimum. They would be so for this reason. New South Wales ports would be free, and Sydney merchants, Melbourne merchants, Adelaide merchants would store all their goods here awaiting the time when the barriers between the States were certain to be removed. The inducement to do so would be enormous. It does not matter what the Federal tariff would be, beyond a knowledge that it is bound to be far-reaching and the free list restricted. Victoria, of course, could load up with certain descriptions of piece-goods, but the great rush would be here. To save probably 3d. per lb. on tea, 5s. a cwt. on sugar, 20 or 25 per cent. on clothing, and so on throughout the list, would be a sufficient inducement to store many millions worth of goods in New South Wales, to be rushed all over the Commonwealth as soon as inter-State free-trade was established.

THE STATE GUARANTEES.

The best of it is the States would not suffer, but only the finances of the Commonwealth. The following provisions, when analyzed, show this to be the case :—

3. For the purpose of ascertaining the proportion of revenue from Customs and excise collected in each State, there shall for a period of one year after the imposition of uniform duties of Customs be kept in the books of the Commonwealth accounts showing the total amount collected in each State for the duties of the Customs and for the duties of excise.

4. The duty chargeable under the uniform tariff upon goods which are imported into any State, whether any duty has or has not been actually paid thereon, and which goods are, during such first year exported to any other State for consumption therein, shall be deemed to have been collected in, and shall be credited to, such last-mentioned State only; and all duties of excise paid in respect of any goods manufactured in any State, and so exported to another State for consumption therein, shall be deemed to have been collected in, and shall be credited to, such other State only.

These regulations are really momentous. In the year preceding uniformity, the Customs revenues will, as we have said, in most of the States be starved, and apparently the diminished aggregate thus obtained will be the nominal basis of the collective guarantee. But the 3rd sub-section above quoted in reality sets up a very different guarantee for the five years following. In that year (say 1900) the then dutiable goods stored in Sydney will be distributed throughout the Commonwealth probably to the extent of many millions sterling, and they will actually pass free of duty. But in the 4th sub-section it is provided that though those goods never paid duty on entering New South Wales, and though from thence they pass free into Victoria, South Australia, and Tasmania, each of those States into which they pass will be credited with the full duty "whether any duty has, or has not, been actually paid thereon." Now, it is quite within the range of possibility that £4,000,000 or £5,000,000 worth of goods will in this manner be smuggled free into neighbouring provinces in that first year, and that those provinces may be credited with a good £1,000,000, or more, of Customs duties for which the Commonwealth had never received sixpence. New South Wales, on the other hand, will receive no such advantage. She will have loaded up very extensively on her own account in the year prior to uniformity, and thus her imports in that first year will be particularly small. The probability is, therefore, that in that standard year the Customs duties credited to New South Wales will actually be the lowest per head of any State in the group. Our consumption will be greater, possibly even our actual Customs payments will be greater, but the goods transferred from New South Wales, for which the Commonwealth will be liable for duties never received, will so handicap us that we shall probably range at the bottom of the list. This, too, is not the end of it. That standard year (1900) fixes the duties for the four following years, during which we may be receiving from a million downwards less than is our due.

But the establishment of uniformity will be a grand time for the merchants. In the other colonies there will be no remission of duties, and yet there will be this exceptional opportunity of entering any quantity of goods free. That they will take advantage of this opportunity is inevitable. Victorian manufacturers will suffer; but the revenue of the Commonwealth will suffer most of all. It will even be in the power of the States other than New South Wales to manipulate the Customs duties to some extent in this standard year. They are themselves large purchasers of dutiable articles, and why should not the Governments themselves lay in good stocks in that year? They will thereby secure higher returns in the following four years quite irrespective of their subsequent purchases. Mr. McMillan foresaw this at the Convention when he stated that "the result would be that whilst New South Wales would have a comparatively bad year at the commencement of the uniform tariff, Victoria would have a good one." But it will, beyond that, tell upon our receipts for the following four years, and tell heavily against them.

Apparently the collective guarantee to the States will be small, as it is based upon the year's receipts prior to uniformity; but in reality that collective guarantee will be swept away in favour of a separate guarantee to each State. It is entirely in the region of surmise how the figures will come out, but if we indulge in a forecast we should incline to something like the following as the entire product of Customs and excise :—

		Year prior to Uniformity.	First year of Uniformity.
			Payment to States.	Treasury. Receipts.
New South Wales	...	£1,700,000	£1,700,000	£1,700,000
Victoria	...	1,600,000	2,500,000	1,500,000
South Australia	...	450,000	650,000	450,000
Tasmania	...	250,000	400,000	300,000
		£4,000,000	£5,250,000	£3,950,000

It may be said that this is a fancy picture. But what are the probabilities? In New South Wales we shall do well in the year prior to 1900; and after the common tariff has been introduced our consumption of dutiable goods will very probably reach, possibly exceed, the equivalent of £2,500,000 in duties. But we shall be stocked to repletion, and beyond stimulants and narcotics, duties will come in very slowly. In the instance of Victoria, where her present duties are yielding £2,100,000, we have allowed for a restriction of £500,000 in the year prior to uniformity, and a still heavier restriction in the actual duties paid in the first year of uniformity. But the Commonwealth will have to credit her with duties on all the goods coming from New South Wales, and though those duties may be lower than those now exacted in Victoria, there is a certainty that they must be largely revenue-producing under normal conditions. And this £5,250,000, or whatever may be its equivalent, will be the guarantee to the States for the five years—not the £3,900,000 stipulated in the previous clause. So, then, the collective guarantee in the 1897 Bill is apparently waste paper.

SHORTAGE IN THE ACTUAL REVENUE.

Taking the population of the four colonies at 3,000,000, it will be seen that if this £5,250,000 becomes the total guarantee, it would only be an average of £1 15s. per head, while the actual revenue would be far less. But even £1 15s. per head would not be enough in 1905, though in the first two or three years the three other colonies would be abundantly secured. What is the present position? Not one of the four colonies is over-supplied with revenue, and included in those revenues are Customs and excise, as follows:—

New South Wales	£1,570,000*
Victoria	2,031,000
South Australia	552,000
Tasmania	323,000
					£4,476,000

* Estimates for 1896-7.

In addition there will be the added expense of the Federal Government, say, £300,000; and the remission of inter-provincial Customs duties (between the four States only) means a loss of £500,000 a year. Hence the duties collected at present on oversea goods must be increased by some £800,000 or £900,000 a year, and if we in New South Wales are content to contribute that amount to the Commonwealth, Federation is easy. The whole difficulty is solved. The adoption of the Federal Tariff can readily be made to mean that sum in additional taxation to New South Wales. The other three States would be more lightly taxed than at present.

But the 1897 Bill provides for everything being dealt with on a population basis. South Australia and Tasmania are to contribute more towards defence than at present, and with their proportion of the added cost of Federal Government, South Australia will require to see Customs and excise credited to her to the total of £600,000 a year, and Tasmania to that of about £350,000. Victoria, too, will need about £2,100,000. Therefore, South Australia would be very content with a guarantee of £1 15s. per head, as her requirements are only £1 13s., and the prospects are that she would pay Customs and excise only to about 4s. or 5s. per head less than the lower figure. Victoria, however, would require £1 16s. to £1 17s. per head, and Tasmania £2 1s. Tasmania is, therefore, the weakest link in the chain, and for all the colonies to raise Customs and excise to satisfy Tasmanian needs, there would have to be a total taxation imposed in this form of £6,150,000. We are very much of opinion that any possible tariff imposed in the four colonies would not yield that amount; and, if it could, New South Wales would have to contribute over £3,000,000 of the total. Mr. Reid, at the Convention, offered to assist Tasmania, and a £2 per head average tariff was also mentioned. After the abnormal conditions surrounding the establishment of uniformity had subsided, a £2 per head tariff, if it were possible, might be expected to be contributed to in about the following proportions:—

	Population.	Customs and Excise in 1895-6.	Probable contributions to yield £2 per head.	Division per capita .
	£	£	£	£
New South Wales	1,300,000	*2,097,000	3,000,000 (£2 6 0)	2,600,000
Victoria	1,175,000	2,031,000	2,120,000 (£1 16 0)	2,350,000
South Australia	360,000	593,000	600,000 (£1 13 4)	720,000
Tasmania	165,000	322,000	280,000 (£1 14 0)	330,000
	£3,000,000	£5,043,000	£6,000,000 (£2 0 0)	£6,000,000

* When the Dibbs duties were partly in operation.

We have no faith whatever in the supposition indulged in at the Convention that uniform rates of duties will mean uniform contributions per capita, and consider that a £2 per head tariff would involve us in an addition to our present scale of Customs and excise taxation of £1,500,000 a year, of which we should contribute about £400,000 a year in aid of the less wealthy colonies.

Is this acceptable? Is New South Wales prepared for Federation on any such terms? Mr. Reid says he does not know, and trusts that the second session will set matters right. It has been argued that the Convention has effected great savings in the cost of Federal Government, and it has actually placed narrow limits upon the Federal expenditure, limits which will bind it hand and foot. But the fact does not appear to be realized that the Convention has been dealing with the whole question upon really impossible lines. No Federation has ever yet been started which financially was little more than a tax collector for the States. The big surplus is just as much a bugbear now as it was under the 1891 Bill, and were such a basis possible as is now arranged, we should far prefer the per capita division starting with the first year of uniformity, no impossible accounts being kept from the outset. There are practically no savings under the 1897 Bill. The added cost of the Federation is somewhat less than under that of 1891. It is more fettered; and in the first year of uniformity an enormous Federal deficit would be an absolute certainty. This could probably be obviated by making the short Customs collections in the year preceding uniformity the absolute basis of taxation; but in that year the yield of the Customs and excise would probably range from £1 5s. to £1 10s. per head, and then the three southern States would be saddled with large deficits.

The Adelaide Convention has served to show what we have all along contended for—that two conditions are essential to a satisfactory basis. First, the whole of the added cost of Federal Government and the loss by the remission of inter-State duties must be saved. Federal finance cannot stand these added burdens, unless New South Wales pays the entire bill. Secondly, the surplus, if any, for division amongst the States must be so small that the per capita arrangement will be of little consequence to any of us.

PROVISIONS OF THE 1897 BILL.

(By R. L. Nash.)

II.

THE DEBTS AND THE RAILWAYS.

Our advocacy of the inclusion of the debts and the railways in the Federal compact could hardly at the outset have won acceptance from those trained to political life, which in Australia includes a grave distrust of all neighbouring communities. At the Convention, the politicians had it very much their own way; and yet, at the close, we venture to say there was a distinct majority in favour of federating the debts, and a number of converts to railway federation—Mr. Deakin included. Mr. Reid told the delegates in effect that the people of New South Wales would not have either; and if he has received such a mandate from the people he was quite justified in saying so. But has he? How, too, about Mr. Carruthers, who was also well up on the voting list? He received no such mandate, nor yet did Mr. Walker or Mr. Wise, who were elected distinctly on their advocacy of an extended basis of Federation. Not one of them, however, was permitted to sit on the Finance Committee, and when Mr. Eddy was examined before that committee he was told at the outset that they did not wish to hear him upon railway federation. Such obstacles were quite to be foreseen. But if the arguments in favour of consolidating the debts and federating the railways are so incontrovertible, as we have maintained, they will win their way in time, simply because all the alternatives must be unacceptable.

Our closing statement yesterday was that "Federal finance within existing limits cannot stand these added burdens—the extra cost of the Federal Government and the loss by the remission of inter-State duties—unless New South Wales pays the entire bill." That fact has met the delegates at every turn, and will continue to do so. Beyond this, we gave reasons yesterday why Queensland would not join the Commonwealth under the conditions now imposed, and without Queensland it is open to question whether we in this colony are prepared to do so either.

THE PROVISIONS OF THE 1897 BILL.

But neither the debts nor the railways have been ignored in the 1897 Bill. Under the 1891 draft there was a provision that the State debts could at any time be taken over wholly or in part by the Commonwealth by agreement with each State. That has now been strengthened by a provision that the Commonwealth may at its own initiative take over such debts. Still there were, until the last, some very curious provisions in the clause, and it is greatly to the advantage of the Bill that they were struck out. We did not expect to see more than the following powers embedded in the 1897 Bill:—

The Parliament may take over the whole or a rateable proportion of the public debt of the States as existing at the establishment of the Commonwealth, and may from time to time convert, renew, or consolidate such debts or any part thereof; and the States respectively shall indemnify the Commonwealth in respect of the amount of the debts respectively taken over, and thereafter the amount of interest payable in respect of the debts shall be deducted and retained from time to time from the respective shares of the surplus revenue to the Commonwealth, which would otherwise be payable to the States; or if there be no surplus revenue payable, or if such surplus revenue be insufficient, then the amount shall be charged to the respective States, wholly or in part. The rateable proportion of the debts of the several States to be taken over is to be calculated on the basis of the population of the several States, as ascertained by the latest statistics of the Commonwealth at the time they are so taken over.

That the Commonwealth would act upon this power there can be very little doubt. We should have preferred a definite provision that the debts should be transferred at the outset. But the prestige of the Commonwealth will so depend upon the enlargement of its control over the purse strings that a year or two, especially if heavy deficiencies were to accrue, would render the consolidation of the debts on the most economical basis inevitable. Thus, part of the saving for which we have contended is within reach.

But this raises another difficulty. To take over the liabilities without the assets is unsound. Besides which, if the Commonwealth is answerable for the debt interest, it must be placed in command of additional revenues, as the debt interest is a very heavy item indeed. Again, it was absolutely certain that some check would have to be placed upon the control of the rival railways by the rival States; and, shrinking from a really effective provision, powers have been given to appoint an Inter-State Commission by the Commonwealth, which, to secure freedom of trade upon railways within the Commonwealth, "shall have such powers of adjudication and administration as may be necessary for its purposes, and as the Parliament may from time to time determine." This means that the railways will have two masters. The result bids fair to be that, more and more, the State management will be checked and overruled by the Inter-State Commission, which is really the Federal Government. And where is the gain secured by this divided control over and above that obtained from the definite inclusion of the railways under the Commonwealth? This conundrum would probably puzzle many of the delegates. Still, there is no power whatever to take over the railways as the Bill stands, and this is a blot upon it, which ought to be removed.

THE REASONS FOR FEDERATING DEBTS AND RAILWAYS.

Now what are the reasons why the debts and the railways should be taken over by the Commonwealth, and taken over together? It would, as we have said, be wrong on economic grounds to separate the debts from their chief assets, and it would, moreover, be well nigh impossible to construct a workable scheme whereby the borrowing powers would be Federal, and the right to construct railways with borrowed money would be provincial. The Commonwealth has, as it is, to take over indebtedness representing telegraphs, post-offices, Custom-houses, and so forth, and the acquisition of the railways would place the great bulk of the reproductive works in Federal hands. But the reasons for thus enlarging the powers of the Commonwealth are many, and they may be briefly enumerated:—

1. Railway federation and debt consolidation place it in the power of the Commonwealth to recoup itself forthwith for the loss of inter-State Customs duties, and the additional cost of Federal Government. This is the key to the whole position. Mr. Reid has said that in the end we shall gain more by letting the debts mature and then renewing them. But is this certain? If, say, we have some £3,000,000 of 4 per cents. repayable in 1910, who can tell what will be the terms on which we shall renew that loan? It might be $2\frac{1}{2}$, or it might be 5 per cent., and we have no more knowledge of the rates which will then be current than we have of the European conflicts which may take place between this and then. If, however, we can convert that loan now on terms which will secure an annual payment of only $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cent., there is a thirteen years' saving secured of $\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. per annum, and the £15,000 a year on that one loan is tangible. But, quite apart from this, Federation greatly needs the immediate saving, and that of itself should turn the scale.
2. In Federal hands, too, the railways would be distinctly more productive. In our recent articles on "Federal Finance" we estimated the gain from this source at £350,000 per annum, and the estimate was not made haphazard. Moreover, with the railways there would be no such difficulty in keeping separate accounts for each colony as there would be in keeping records of Customs and excise.
3. It is the Federal Government only which can deal with the breaks of gauge, either directly or through the States Commission, and in either case it would create a direct Federal interest in the railways.
4. Direct control of both debts and railways should, for additional reasons, be inseparable. The power to carry on a vigorous railway extension policy and the power to borrow unlimitedly are very dangerous powers in the hands of States. In America, so great has become the dislike to States, counties, and townships running into debt, that limits have been placed upon their borrowing powers which we should regard as absurdly low. But Americans are quite right in this, and we should view the uncontrolled power of the State to load up posterity with rival debts with grave alarm. The provincial politician may be loath to relinquish his hold over the money market, but it is clearly in the interests of Australia that it should.
5. To reduce the status of our debts to a provincial form would result in their gradually losing caste. The credit of any Federal Government worthy of the name must be greater than that of any province within its borders.
6. There are risks attached to our State debts which could be avoided by consolidation. It has always been an error to make our loans repayable on a given day, however far that day is removed. What is needed is a debt of the nature of British Consols, repayable at Government option after a certain date.
7. A large consolidated stock is certain to command a higher market value than a great number of smaller ones; and Australasia would, therefore, be able to borrow on better terms in the future.
8. A special effort should be made to obtain the inclusion of the Federal debt on the Trustees' List in the United Kingdom, and Federation would afford a favorable opportunity.
9. The transfer of the debts and railways to the Commonwealth would afford the power to materially reduce the cost of provincial government. This saving could not be effected, say, in New South Wales while its control over the purse-strings exceeded by two and three times that which the Federal Government controlled. We should in that case learn to look down on the Commonwealth.
10. Beyond this, in the interests of immediate Federation, the Commonwealth Government could at once, and without detriment to itself, afford the guarantees needed by the States that their financial position shall not be injured by Federation. It is, we repeat, essential that the Commonwealth itself should be placed in a position to save sufficiently at the outset to cover the entire loss of the remission of inter-State duties and the new cost of Federal Government. The railways and the debts in the hands of the Commonwealth will afford that power, even a greater power of economy; and it will at the same time afford a safeguard to Australians that a number of inter-State railway connexions will be constructed which ought to have been effected long ago. What we want is that every facility shall be afforded for that full development of traffic between the States which Federation ought to secure.

THE REVISION OF THE 1897 BILL

(By R. L. Nash.)

III.

WHAT ARE THE ESSENTIALS?

Under the present financial provisions of the 1897 Bill we have stated that neither West Australia nor Queensland can join the Commonwealth, and it is open to question whether New South Wales should do so. Those provisions involve (1) additional taxation to the people of New South Wales, probably to the extent of £1,500,000—a total which would tend to expand as years went on; (2) a fiscal policy of which we disapprove; and (3) a very heavy contribution in aid of the taxation of other States. There is nothing new in this position. It was quite certain before the Convention met that Federation on 1891 lines meant all this, and within similar bounds, and with similar data, the problem must work out to a similar result, however the Convention manipulated the details.

THE PRESENT POSITION.

That our inquiry into Federal finance carried weight amongst the members of the Convention was due to the fact that it dealt with facts. It broached no new theories, but confined its scope to actual position. What was, and is, that actual position?

1. The six colonies are spending £25,000,000 annually; or, if we take four colonies only, the expenditure is £19,600,000, and that expenditure, in the recent depression, has practically been cut down as far as actual necessities will permit.

2. There is some reserve power of taxation in New South Wales and Queensland, but nothing worthy of the name in Victoria, Tasmania, or South Australia. West Australia will need all the revenue she can make available for years to come.

3. Intercolonial free-trade involves a loss of revenue for the six colonies of £1,100,000; for the four colonies of £500,000.

4. Federal government will cost, according to the Convention estimate, £245,825 in new expenditure, plus a loss of £109,000 on uniform postal and telegraph rates. This estimate is probably under the mark, but together it involves new charges to the extent of £350,000.

5. It follows that, if in Victoria, Tasmania, and South Australia there is no reserve power of taxation, and the expenditure in those colonies is reduced as far as it will go, this total cost of Federation (£1,500,000 for the six colonies, or £850,000 for the four colonies) must be paid by New South Wales and Queensland, or by New South Wales alone.

Taking up the position we have done that this result is unsatisfactory, we added the following:—

6. Any acceptable scheme of Federation can only be one which secures savings to the amount practically of £1,500,000 for the six colonies, or £850,000 for the four colonies.

7. The only possible savings are under the following heads:—

(a) Reducing the Federal representation and remuneration. This the 1897 Bill has done, and the saving is £38,000.

(b) Amalgamating the Agents-Generals' offices. Does the 1897 Bill provide for such an amalgamation? There is a doubt about it.

(c) Cutting down the cost of public instruction. This would have small chance of acceptance.

(d) Consolidating the debts. We showed that it would be possible to cut down the debt charge by about £900,000 a year, or, if a sinking fund were established, by about half that amount.

(e) Federating the railways. Our inquiry pointed to £350,000 a year being obtained from this source.

(f) Cutting down the cost of provincial government, including Governors and Legislature. There is room for a reduction of possibly £100,000 in these items.

8. The possible savings are, therefore, small, except in the two items of the debts and the railways. But, altogether, the £1,500,000 can be saved; and the saving would be more than £850,000 if only four colonies federated.

9. This would permit of the establishment of the Commonwealth without charging New South Wales and Queensland with the entire expense, or if Queensland stands out, then without New South Wales bearing the entire burden of the Federal Government.

This summarizes the position, and the Convention has in no wise shaken the evidence.

Consequently, if the Convention takes up the position that the debts are not to be consolidated, and the railways are not to be federated, what follows is sufficiently evident to need no further explanation.

THE PROVISIONS OF THE 1897 BILL.

As explained yesterday, the 1897 Bill does not ignore either the debts or the railways. The consolidation of the former is optional with the Commonwealth, but no power to absorb the railways is given. The States may get rid of their liabilities, but not their assets. It may be held, however, that this power to take over the debts secures the largest saving to the Commonwealth. This would be the case if the Commonwealth announced at the outset that it would take over the debts. The two years prior to the introduction of the uniform tariff would be sufficient to carry out the consolidation. But if the option is deferred, the result will be that the tariff will be settled first, leaving the debt consolidation as a possibility afterwards, and the effect upon the tariff will be serious.

The position is this. Secure the saving at the outset, and very nearly the whole of that £1,500,000 may be written off the tariff at the outset. Defer the savings, and practically the whole amount must be added to the Customs duties upon over-sea goods. Let us see what this means:—

				Existing Customs Duties.*	Probable Remission of Inter-State Duties.	Net Yield.
New South Wales	1,825,000	400,000	1,425,000
Victoria	1,734,000	300,000	1,434,000
South Australia	553,000	80,000	473,000
Tasmania	304,000	50,000	254,000
Four colonies	4,416,000	(500,000†)	(3,916,000†)
Queensland	1,291,000	140,000	1,151,000
West Australia	615,000	120,000	495,000
Six colonies	£6,322,000	£1,090,000	£5,232,000

* In 1895-6, when only part of the Dibbs duties had been remitted in New South Wales.

† These amounts represent the probable remission of duties if four colonies only enter into Federation; whereas the amounts placed against each colony are estimated on the basis that six colonies federate.

A tariff which would yield £5,232,000 for the six colonies would be a comparatively simple affair. It would be so for this reason—that stimulants and narcotics would pay £2,700,000 out of it, or more than one-half, leaving £2,532,000 to be made up from all other over-sea imports. This reduction in the total Customs collections would use up, we will say, £1,100,000 of the possible savings, leaving £400,000 for the additional cost of the Federal Government.

Now let us take the position without these savings. The Federal Customs would not only have to be written up to the extent of this £1,090,000, but by an additional £350,000, or more, and it would be necessary to impose a tariff to yield £6,700,000, of which £2,700,000 would be provided by stimulants and narcotics, and £4,000,000 by over-sea goods. Now, the over-sea imports, exclusive of stimulants and narcotics, do not reach more than £20,000,000, and such a tariff would mean 20 per cent. over the entire amount—raw materials, cotton piece goods, railway stores—everything except gold and silver. We look upon this very much as an impossible tariff, one which does not suit even the "protected" colonies—and certainly not New South Wales. We in Australasia talk of our imports being over £50,000,000, but we must bear in mind that Federation will cut them down by more than one-half, and that the taxable quantity is limited, and can readily be made yet more limited by high taxation. We are even doubtful whether it would be possible to raise a Customs revenue of £6,700,000 amongst the six colonies in these depressed times.

This subject has been dealt with in our columns at such length and in such detail for the reason that we are contending for what is really a great principle. To, at the outset, impose a maximum revenue tariff—one allowing of no expansion in case of need—is to fetter federation from the start. For the States, in addition to tie Federation down to a fixed expenditure, is to withdraw from it all rights of sovereignty. To restrict its financial initiative to defence and the post and telegraphs (because under such conditions its fiscal policy would be dictated to it, certainly under the 1891 Bill, and most probably under that of 1897) is to render the powers of the Commonwealth from a financial point of view too weak for words. "You must not spend more than £300,000 a year on Federal government, nor draw more than £1,250,000 for all services from the gross product of Customs and excise." That is the mandate of the 1897 Bill; and it adds—"You must guarantee to each State for a period of years that its surplus from Customs and excise shall not be less than in a given year, when the States will inevitably be credited with a far larger sum than the Commonwealth will actually receive." This can hardly be regarded as the basis upon which a supreme Government can work effectively. It may be said that there is the power to impose direct taxation, but in some States that power is almost fully appropriated, and in West Australia direct taxation could hardly be collected. It remains, therefore, for the people to decide whether the conditions imposed by the present revision of the Commonwealth Bill are such as we can accept, or whether the enlargement of Federal powers advocated in these columns does not provide us with a basis at once more acceptable, more workable, and less seriously burdensome.

It is a question of importance in the consideration of Federal finance how far the cost of provincial government can be cut down. Here in New South Wales, if the 1891 lines were adhered to, we should transfer about £1,150,000 of our expenditure to the Commonwealth, and retain £8,250,000 under State control. It would never do to place the distribution of this latter sum in the hands of a small provincial body. There is not room for reduction under such conditions, especially as the State would also retain the supreme right to borrow money and to pledge the future. But the transfer of the control over a further £4,000,000 of current expenditure, and of the right to borrow, to the Commonwealth would be to reduce its financial control to within true provincial limits, and the cost of provincial administration could then rightly be reduced in corresponding proportions.

FEDERAL FINANCE.

MEMORANDA prepared and Statistics collected for the basis of an Address delivered to Members of Hobart Chamber of Commerce, 27th May, 1897, with subsequent amendments, additions, and explanatory text:

BY

SIR PHILIP FYSH, K.C.M.G.

The Report of the 1891 Finance Committee of the National Federal Convention recommended to pool Customs and Excise and all expenditure, and distribute surplus per capita.

The results based on Coghlan's figures, p. 39, No. V., would be as follows:—

On mean of Imports, 1893-4-5.	156,129
On mean of mean population, 1893-4-5, Tasmania	156,129
Tariff of Tasmania, 1894, on basis of Intercolonial free-trade—
Revenue for five Colonies, Customs and Excise	£6,887,189
Expenditure, original services of Commonwealth	£300,000
Transferred services	1,250,000
	1,550,000
	£5,337,189
Population, 2,994,276, five Colonies—
New South Wales,)	} = 35s. 8d. per head.
Victoria,)
South Australia,)
West Australia,)
Tasmania,)
Surplus returnable to Tasmania on basis mean population, 156,129	£278,372

The Convention of 1891 refused to adopt that part of the Report of the Finance Committee; made the keeping of accounts between the State and the Commonwealth permanent; and giving back any surplus on basis of Revenue actually collected, and charging all Expenditure per capita.

The first year of Uniform Tariff on that basis gives following results:—

See p. 39, No. V., Coghlan—

Returns to Tasmania in first year	£265,518
But subject to deduction of our share of expenditure on per capita basis, see page 2	64,743
	£200,775

The 1891 Bill and 1897 Bill produce same results for first year, but for that year only, the 1897 Bill making a sliding scale provision for five following years.

The example which Tasmania gives on her actual accounts (her own bookkeeping) for same mean of years, 1893-4-5, is as follows:—

Customs and Excise	£308,699
But subject to loss by Intercolonial Free-trade, estimated	40,072
					<hr/>
And, subject to the more economical actual expenditure of 1896—					£268,627

					236,521
But taking credit for our present profit on Post and Telegraph, of which there appears every likelihood of continuance	15,000

					£251,521

In the above three examples there are discovered—

First, the result to Tasmania of working upon the recommendations of the financial experts of 1891, a surplus of	...	£278,372
Second, the results to Tasmania of uniform Tariff after deducting per capita share of Commonwealth expenses	...	200,775
Third, the results to Tasmania if Convention had adopted my very serious contention that there is no method other than keeping of Inter-State accounts which will divide a surplus without great sacrifice made by some States	...	251,521

Tasmania's example of how the five subsequent years work out under provisions of Clause 92 of Commonwealth Bill, giving to Tasmania annually one-fifth of the difference (namely, 12s. per head—see table, page 5) between the actual Customs and Excise collected per head of population in Tasmania and that collected per head of population over the whole Commonwealth, as shown by table, page 6 = £18,735—

1st Year—Customs and Excise as discovered by bookkeeping, the mean of years 1893-4-5	£
Less Expenditure per capita	265,518
					<hr/>
					64,743
					£200,775

In this year and thereafter Revenue and Expenditure are both distributed on the per capita basis, and Tasmania shares in all the prosperities or adversities of the more populous and more wealthy colonies,

The Expenditure of Commonwealth, £1,550,000, is the limitation for three years only, but thereafter such greater or lesser sum as the Federal Parliament may vote.

* At pages 5 and 6 the per capita expense is stated at £80,321, on a mean of three years' population; £82,082 is on population December, 1896.

LOSS TO TASMANIA BY INTERCOLONIAL FREE-TRADE.

The £40,072 estimated as the loss by free Intercolonial Trade may be estimated to be increased to £50,000 when Queensland sugar is enabled to monopolize the supply, which it would do on a difference between our present duty of £6 per ton and excise of £3 per ton, if imposed by the Commonwealth.

If an excise of £3 per ton be imposed, then the £50,000 loss to Tasmania will be probably reduced to near £30,000. A loss to the Commonwealth revenue of about £700,000 per annum would ultimately result from free sugar consumed in the five States of New South Wales, Victoria, South Australia, West Australia, and Tasmania, an amount which is £450,000 in excess of the loss by uniform and intercolonial free-trade allowed for in these tables.

It may be assumed that there is a need for the Federal Parliament to maintain as nearly as practicable the Customs revenue which will cause the least embarrassment to the States, and that Queensland will be contented with the differential advantage between £5, the present mean of duty on sugar, and an excise of £3 per ton.

The Federal Executive is charged under the Commonwealth Bill 1897 to maintain for five years such revenue as will produce a divisible surplus among the States of not less than the aggregate amount divided for the first year of the Uniform Tariff.

The great difference between the cost of Tasmanian services and those of the Mainland Colonies, which causes a per capita distribution of Commonwealth expenditure to be such a serious loss to Tasmania as £64,743, is seen in the following figures:—

Cost of Defence: Mean of 1893, 1894, 1895—
	N. S. Wales.	Victoria.	S. Australia.	W. Australia.	Tasmania.
Per head	3s. 8d.	3s. 1d.	2s. 2d.	3s.	1s. 6d.
Cost of collection Customs and Excise—
	N. S. Wales.	Victoria.	S. Australia.	W. Australia.	Tasmania.
Per cent.	£3 6s. 1d.	£3 15s. 9d.	£4 7s. 10d.	£2 4s. 3d.	£2 6s.

Mr. Henry cautions the public against all figures, yet commits himself to none. He will take Federal Union regardless of cost.

"Timotheus" of the Argus, Mr. R. L. Nash, financial editor of Sydney Daily Telegraph, and Mr. R. M. Johnston, all accept the statistics of Mr. Coghlan, of Sydney; but Mr. John Henry says Mr. Reid, the Premier of New South Wales, has "bluffed" us with such figures!!

I join those who accept Mr. Coghlan's figures as enabling an approximate reliable calculation to be made.

The most reasonable comparison to make is Z with Z, showing a loss of £63,557, but that is on a bookkeeping basis, i.e., of Inter-State accounts kept.

If we had no deficiency, which on 31st December, 1897, will probably be £330,000, we could afford to federate at once.

But before we federate, that floating debt must be disposed of.

The difference between Annual Customs, Excise, &c., Revenue of Tasmania—

but that difference diminishes annually at the rate of £18,735 in each of five following years.

The Annual Revenue to be made good in Tasmania in each of those five years respectively, is therefore—

First year	£103,629
Second year	84,894
Third year	66,159
Fourth year	47,424
Fifth year	28,689
						£330,795

If such financial embarrassment cannot be met by fresh taxation, there are alternatives. They are—

1. Enter the Federation on a bookkeeping basis for five years, until population and Revenue further grow, when we can, without further taxation, maintain our present annual surplus of £60,000, until, in five years and a half, that deficiency of £330,795 can be liquidated.
2. Stand out of Federation with the continental tariffs against us.
3. Fund our floating debt, 31st December, 1897, of £330,000 and so put that out of the way.
4. Or, what will be more righteous, make terms with the Federation to relieve us of that responsibility, and join on terms of 1897 Bill.

also discriminating further annual payments "in settlement of all present and future demands," by way of recompense to Mineral Wealth and Revenue transferred, and equalization respecting Debts taken over.

5. There is another alternative which may work equitably if West Australia be relied upon to produce from Customs and Excise the amount per annum for five years stated on page 11, viz.:—£996,313.

In the year immediately preceding the adoption of a Uniform Federal Tariff ascertain the exact amount of Revenue collected from Customs and Excise in each colony, and, after deducting the net cost of services to be transferred to Federal Government, ascertain the proportion which the balance of such Revenue of each colony bears to the corresponding aggregate for the five colonies. Let the proportions so ascertained determine the proportion of Federal surplus to be returned to each colony through the five years in lieu of the sliding scale.

The following is an example :—

ILLUSTRATION OF DISTRIBUTION OF FEDERAL SURPLUS BY THE ABOVE METHOD.

Let it be assumed that in the year preceding the adoption of Uniform Tariff the Customs and Excise Revenue—less net cost of services transferred—for each State, bore the following percentage proportions of the corresponding aggregate for the five colonies, viz. :—

New South Wales	29·76 per cent.
Victoria	34·82 "
South Australia	10·82 "
West Australia	17·24 "
Tasmania	7·36 "

If in the first year after adoption of Uniform Tariff it is found that the Federal surplus available for distribution amounted to, say, £4,780,745, then the amount to be received by each State, based upon the above proportion, would be in exact proportion to its local needs and to the exact proportion of loss of Revenue sustained by each State by the transfer of its Revenues and functions; thus :—

		Per cent
New South Wales receives	...	29·76	} of £4,780,745
Victoria	...	34·82
South Australia	...	10·82
West Australia	...	17·24
Tasmania	...	7·36
Five Colonies	...	100·00
			= £1,422,701
			= 1,664,574
			= 517,132
			= 824,144
			= 352,194
			= £4,780,745

By this method an unnecessary surplus or disastrous loss to any State is avoided. A modification of this alternative method might also be considered, by basing the said proportions upon the relative amounts collected or due to each State during the first year under a uniform Federal Tariff.

6. The sliding scale provided by clause 92 of Commonwealth Bill is a defective method, inverting the slide, which should be a down grade into an up grade. A correct and natural method for affording aid by a sliding scale should be on a down grade—(vide illustrations, page 13). The money value of both is the same, but instead of Tasmania having to provide £103,629 the first year, and £28,689 the fifth year, these amounts will be inverted, the smaller falling into the first, and the larger into the last year.

Federation on alternatives Nos. 1, 5, and 6 can be recommended.

This table is compiled to supply the information necessarily precedent to making a distribution of the annual surplus to the States of the Commonwealth, and of which distribution examples will be found on this and the following page :—

* Owing to details of population not being exactly given in Mr. Coghlan's Tables, the population was estimated on the capita tax as shown by him. As the fractional parts of pence per head were eliminated, the exact population could not be determined, and hence there is involved a slight difference in the Grand Total, as compared with the details of each colony.

It will be seen by a comparison of the divisible surplus of—

New South Wales for the first year of uniform Tariff, page 5	...	£2,665,866
And that of Victoria	1,487,636

with the divisible surplus on page 5 after five years' operation of the sliding scale, that Victoria overtakes New South Wales to the amount of £1,066,525, a result in favour of Victoria which may be largely discounted—and the same is equally applicable to all the other States—by the operation of the uniform Tariff regulating trade between the colonies, where there will no longer be ports of preference, nor the great disparity which exists between the value of manufactured goods which are preferred in the free ports and of raw material, of which the imports to protected ports are mostly composed.

The excessive protectionist Tariff of Victoria prohibited imports, with the result that the—Average Imports for Home Consumption for the three years, 1893-4-5,

was, for Victoria	£7,027,408

While the moderate Dibbs' Tariff of that period resulted in the larger Imports of New South Wales for the same period of ... 11,186,187

The difference between the consuming power of States whose populations are engaged in similar agricultural, pastoral, mining, and manufacturing pursuits is not so important as the difference of surpluses, for New South Wales and Victoria discloses, unless indeed the condition of the working classes in New South Wales can be proved to be so much superior to the same in Victoria; and if that be so, then trade regulated by uniformity of Tariff, will in all probability speedily remedy the great disparity which is disclosed by these figures. If that be a reasonable conclusion the fiscal aspect of Federation is most promising to Victoria, and her surplus per capita will be levelled up to that of New South Wales by the ordinary course of trade, without any such serious sacrifice of revenue to the latter State as the foregoing figures represent. That conclusion animated the Representatives at the Convention, and the determination that artificial barriers to trade must necessarily be removed as a condition precedent to Federation; and the belief in such conclusion lent weight to the purpose of the Representatives to cut the Gordian knot, equitably if possible, but arbitrarily if necessary. The latter has been done.

To the table on page 6, showing distribution of aggregate surplus, the following explanation appears necessary :—

Clause 92, sub-section 5, does not fully express the intention of the sliding scale adjustment which was originated by the Hon. Premier and Treasurer of New South Wales.

The surplus ascertained by the first year of uniform Tariff is to be annually divided on the principle set forth in this clause, which is, that after ascertaining the mean of Revenue collected in the Commonwealth, all States contributing more than the mean shall in each of the five succeeding years be reduced by one-fifth of that excess, and in like manner all States contributing less shall be raised by one-fifth of their deficiency.

Example on page 5 shows New South Wales to contribute to the first year's uniform Tariff 7s. 5d. per head more than the 46s. which is the Commonwealth mean, and Tasmania is shown to contribute 12s. less than the mean.

To make clear the intention that the excess contributed by some States, and the deficiency discovered in other States shall, during the five years be adjusted so that at the end of the fifth year all shall alike, by the five annual distributions, reach the same per capita Revenue, the sub-section 5, in my opinion, must be read thus—$\frac{1}{5}$ th for the first year, $\frac{2}{5}$ ths the second, $\frac{3}{5}$ ths the third, $\frac{4}{5}$ ths the fourth, $\frac{5}{5}$ ths the fifth year.

The word "four" in that sub-section 5 is a mistake, as it would only distribute four-fifths, and "four" is inconsistent with the context. I urged this on the attention of the Treasurers at the Convention, but any necessary amendment was left for final Convention.

The surplus ascertained in the first year's operation of uniform Tariff is as given, page 10, £5,337,189.

No other method of distributing that surplus by addition or subtraction of $\frac{1}{5}$ th annually of the difference between the mean and the separate State Revenues will conform to the provision of clause 93, that after five years "Each State shall be deemed to contribute to the Revenue an equal sum per head of its population."

NEW SOUTH WALES COMPENSATED.

On page 2 is shown the effect on Tasmania's Finance of the per capita distribution of Federal Expenditure.

The table, page 5, showing the per capita distribution of Expenditure of the Commonwealth, enables examples to be set out of the operation as it affects each State.

It shows how New South Wales is largely compensated by the transfer of much of her Service Expenditure to other States for the loss she makes by the sliding scale over five years applied to Revenue from Customs and Excise, which is, as stated on page 6—

For the First year	91,819
Second year	183,638
Third year	275,457
Fourth year	367,276
Fifth year	459,095
Being a loss in the five years of					1,377,285
As a set-off there is the saving to New South Wales by a transfer of existing Expenditure upon services transferred to Commonwealth, which on the mean of years 1893-4-5, as set forth on page 8					£649,269
as against the per capita distribution of the £1,250,000 of					517,099
an annual saving for five years of					£132,170 = 660,850
thus reducing the loss to or £143,305 per annum.					716,525

In the case of Victoria, the corresponding figures are—

Her gain by the sliding scale for the 1st year	121,486
2nd year	242,972
3rd year	364,458
4th year	485,944
5th year	607,430
A gain in the five years of					1,822,290

Unlike New South Wales, which loses Revenue but gains by per capita distribution of Expenses, it will be seen that Victoria gains Revenue by the sliding scale, but loses by the per capita distribution of Expenses per annum—

For five years	£35,837 = 179,185
Being a total gain in the five years of					1,643,105

In the case of South Australia—

Five years' loss of Revenue by the sliding scale is	8,715
Her loss by the per capita distribution of Expenditure per annum for five years, £37,817	= 189,085
Being a loss on the five years of					197,800

In the case of West Australia—

Five years' loss of Revenue by the sliding scale is	718,905
Her gain by the per capita distribution of Expenditure per annum for five years, £11,963	= 59,815
Being a loss in the five years of					659,090

In the case of Tasmania—

Five years' gain of Revenue by the sliding scale is	281,025
Her loss by the per capita distribution of Expenditure per annum for five years, £48,856	= 244,280
Being a gain in the five years of					36,745

The figures produced for each colony as the loss or gain in the five years do not represent the amounts by which individual States will need to supplement the present revenues. Each is affected by the loss of revenue by Intercolonial Free-trade, and one example, that of Tasmania, will suffice to show the full effect of all changes—

Loss for five years years by Intercolonial Free-trade	40,072	200,360
Five yearly contributions and share of new expenditure
£300,000 	= 15,889	= 79,435
		279,795
Less gain in the five years between sliding scale additions of revenue and per capita distribution of expenditure	...	36,745
		243,050

This can be reconciled with the examples given of Tasmania's loss by Federation in five years on page 4, £330,795, by the fact that these calculations are in actual Customs and Excise of 1897, £370,000, while the latter are based on mean of Customs 1893-4-5 = £265,518.

The larger amount, £330,795, and not the smaller, £243,050, is what confronts us now.

All such figures are subject to the influences of freedom of Intercolonial Trade, and whether we may look for a declining or increasing power of our people to consume dutiable goods, and to our Post and Telegraph Department to maintain the surplus Revenue.

Necessitating the issue of precept or claim on the Five Colonies of £2,122,123 per annum.

In course of time this would be reduced by unification and consolidation of debt at possibly Three per cent.

How would each colony make up its share?

Testing New South Wales by its Free-trade Tariff, now producing $1\frac{1}{4}$ millions, Mr. Reid exclaimed—"How can I ask my people to agree to a proposal which forces the Federal Executive to adopt a maximum Tariff, and reverse in New South Wales our Free-trade policy"?

Testing West Australia by her Customs, where a population of 150,000 now yields beyond one million sterling, she could not agree.

The Committee wished to fix upon 1895 Customs Revenue of the Commonwealth as the basis to establish surpluses. Mr. Henry favoured this, but Tasmania could not consent to it.

Comparing 1895 with 1897, as a proof that no one year can safely be taken as a basis—

	1895.	1897.
Customs for Tasmania £304,000 £350,000

Forced back upon book-keeping between the States, the Committee adopted my proposals, viz., each State receive of Revenue in proportion to its contribution, and pay the local expenditure. No State could complain; none would make any sacrifice.

The Convention ultimately adopted Mr. Reid's proposal of the sliding scale to equalize the Revenue in five years, shown on page 6.

It is noteworthy that two persons working upon different lines, and producing dissimilar tables, arrive so nearly at similar conclusions. Mr. Johnston arrives at £99,026 per annum as an amount necessarily to be found by Tasmania in consequence of Federation. I have, in the difference between First and Third Examples, on page 3, estimated the amount at £103,629.

The analyses shown in the preceding tables show the insuperable difficulties involved in any scheme which, as in the proposed Draft Bill, attempts to distribute the necessary Federal Surplus on the basis of population.

Tasmania would require to double nearly her existing heavy Land and Income Tax (an impossibility) to make good loss of income, viz., £99,026, while the loss of West Australia of £613,874 (or, corrected for unequal burden of service, £736,801), would only leave her £88,063 to carry on local functions, which in the year 1896 required from her an outlay of £824,144. It is a luxury of choice with the other colonies whether they accumulate their surpluses or abate their direct taxes. Tasmania, on the other hand, cannot increase her already overburdened direct taxes, and, therefore, to her also the finance proposals are impossible. The only feasible way out of the difficulty is for a limited number of years, say five or six, to return the Federal surplus on the percentage proportion which each State's loss of income by transfer bears to the aggregate loss—see Item 1. This would be the only way to practically overcome the difficulty involved. The sliding scale provided by the Convention is altogether inadequate to adjust differences and losses of this kind; and, moreover, it assumes that in five years the difference would be so far removed as to render this aid of no further use. The arrangement, too, of diminishing or increasing State surpluses and deficiencies during the five years after the introduction of a uniform tariff is also open to the serious objection that inverts the natural order of necessary aid to the colonies who are in the greatest strait. It surely must be conceded that if we reckon upon the conditions of West Australia and Tasmania on the basis of population, assuming normal proportion at the end of five years, the need of relief to each colony ought to diminish as we approach the end of the quinquenniad; and consequently the maximum of relief from the sliding scale should begin with the first year and gradually diminish to zero when the term for such a provision ceases—that is, five-fifths for the first year, four-fifths for the second year, three-fifths for the third year, two-fifths for the fourth year, and one-fifth for the fifth year, coming to zero in the sixth and future years.

Obviously this is the true natural course, and not that proposed.

The immediate years are those which it may be expected to be most hardly borne, and which should be afforded corresponding relief if the sliding scale is to be of any use.

DRAFT OF A BILL

To Constitute the Commonwealth of Australia.

WHEREAS the people of [here name the Colonies which have Preamble. adopted the Constitution] have agreed to unite in one indissoluble Federal Commonwealth under the Crown of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, and under the Constitution 5 hereby established: And whereas it is expedient to make provision for the admission into the Commonwealth of other Australasian Colonies and Possessions of Her Majesty: Be it therefore enacted by the Queen's Most Excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in the present
10 Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:—

1. This Act may be cited as "The Constitution of the Short title.
Commonwealth of Australia."

Act to bind Crown.
Application of provisions shall extend to the Queen's Successors.

2. This Act shall bind the Crown, and its provisions referring to Her Majesty the Queen shall extend to Her Heirs and Successors in the Sovereignty of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland.

Constitution of the Commonwealth of Australia.

Power to proclaim Commonwealth of Australia.

3. It shall be lawful for the Queen, by and with the advice of Her Majesty's Most Honorable Privy Council, to declare by Proclamation that, on and after a day therein appointed, not being later than six months after the passing of this Act, the people of [here name the Colonies which have adopted the Constitution] (hereinafter severally included in the expression "the said Colonies") shall be united in a Federal Constitution under the name of "The Commonwealth of Australia"; and on and after that day the Commonwealth shall be established under that name.

Commencement of Act.

4. Unless it is otherwise expressed or implied, this Act shall commence and have effect on and from the day so appointed in the Queen's Proclamation; and the name "The Commonwealth of Australia" or "The Commonwealth" shall be taken to mean the Commonwealth of Australia as constituted under this Act.

"States."

5. The term "The States" shall be taken to mean such of the Colonies of New South Wales, New Zealand, Queensland, Tasmania, Victoria, and Western Australia, and the Province of South Australia, as for the time being form part of the Commonwealth, and such Colonies or States as may hereafter be admitted into or established by the Commonwealth, and each of such parts of the Commonwealth shall be hereafter designated a "State."

Repeal of 48 and 49 Vict., chap. 60.

6. "The Federal Council of Australasia Act, 1835," is hereby repealed, but such repeal shall not affect any laws passed by the Federal Council of Australasia and in force at the establishment of the Constitution of the Commonwealth.

But any such law may be repealed as to any State by the Parliament of the Commonwealth, and may be repealed as to any Colony, not being a State, by the Parliament thereof.

Operation of the Constitution and laws of the Commonwealth.

7. The Constitution established by this Act, and all Laws made by The Parliament of the Commonwealth in pursuance of the powers conferred by the Constitution, and all Treaties made by the Commonwealth, shall, according to their tenour, be binding on the Courts, Judges, and people, of every State, and of every part of the Commonwealth, anything in the Laws of any State to the contrary notwithstanding; and the Laws and Treaties of the Commonwealth shall be in force on board of all British ships whose last port of clearance or whose port of destination is in the Commonwealth.

Constitution.

8. The Constitution of the Commonwealth shall be as follows:—

CHAPTER I.

CHAPTER I.

THE PARLIAMENT.

THE PARLIAMENT.

10 PART I.—GENERAL.

PART I.

1. The Legislative powers of the Commonwealth shall be vested in a Federal Parliament, which shall consist of the Queen, a Senate, and a House of Representatives, and which is hereinafter called "The Parliament," or "The Parliament of the Commonwealth."

Legislative powers.

15 2. The Queen may, from time to time, appoint a Governor-General, who shall be Her Majesty's Representative in the Commonwealth, and who shall have and may exercise in the Commonwealth during the Queen's pleasure, and subject to the provisions of this Constitution, such powers and functions of the Queen as Her Majesty 20 may think fit to assign to him.

Governor-General.

3. Until The Parliament otherwise provides, the annual salary of the Governor-General shall be Ten Thousand Pounds, and shall be payable to the Queen out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund of the Commonwealth.

Salary of Governor-General.

25 The salary of a Governor-General shall not be altered during his continuance in office.

30 4. The provisions of this Constitution relating to the Governor-General extend and apply to the Governor-General for the time being, or such person as the Queen may appoint to be the Chief Executive Officer or Administrator of the Government of the Commonwealth, by whatever title he is designated; but no such person shall be entitled to receive any salary from the Commonwealth in respect of any other office during his administration of the Government of the Commonwealth.

Application of provisions relating to Governor-General.

35 5. Every Member of the Senate, and every Member of the House of Representatives, shall before taking his seat make and subscribe before the Governor-General, or some person authorised by him, an Oath or Affirmation of Allegiance in the form set forth in the Schedule to this Constitution.

Oath of Allegiance.

Schedule.

40 6. The Governor-General may appoint such times for holding the first and every other Session of The Parliament, as he may think fit, giving sufficient notice thereof, and may also from time to time, by proclamation or otherwise, prorogue The Parliament, and may in like manner dissolve the House of Representatives.

Governor-General to fix time and places for holding Session of Parliament.

Power of dissolution of House of Representatives.

45 The Parliament shall be called together not later than six months after the establishment of the Commonwealth.

First Session of Parliament.

50 7. There shall be a Session of The Parliament once at least in every year, so that twelve months shall not intervene between the last sitting of The Parliament in one Session, and its first sitting in the next Session.

Yearly Session of Parliament.

Privileges, &c., of Houses.

8. The privileges, immunities, and powers of the Senate and of the House of Representatives, and of the Members and the Committees of each House, shall be such as are from time to time declared by The Parliament, and until declared shall be those of the Commons House of Parliament of the United Kingdom, and of its Members and Committees, at the establishment of the Commonwealth. 5

PART II.

PART II.—THE SENATE.

The Senate.

9. The Senate shall be composed of six Senators for each State, and each Senator shall have one vote.

The Senators shall be directly chosen by the people of the 10 State as one electorate.

The Senators shall be chosen for a term of six years, and the names of the Senators chosen by each State shall be certified by the Governor to the Governor-General.

The Parliament shall have power, from time to time, to increase 15 or diminish the number of Senators for each State, but so that the equal representation of the several States shall be maintained and that no State shall have less than six Senators.

The qualification of electors of Senators shall be in each State that which is prescribed by this Constitution or by The Parliament 20 as the qualification for electors of Members of the House of Representatives, but in the choosing of Senators each elector shall vote only once, and if any elector votes more than once he shall be guilty of a misdemeanour.

Mode of election of Senators.

10. The Parliament of the Commonwealth may make laws 25 prescribing a uniform manner of choosing the Senators. Subject to such laws, if any, the Parliament of each State may determine the time, place, and manner of choosing the Senators for that State.

Continuance of existing election laws until The Parliament otherwise provides.

Until such determination, and unless The Parliament of the Commonwealth otherwise provides, the laws in force in the several 30 States for the time being, relating to the following matters, namely: The manner of conducting elections for the more numerous House of the Parliament of the State, the proceedings at such elections, Returning Officers, the periods during which elections may be continued, and offences against the laws regulating such elections 35 shall, as nearly as practicable, apply to elections in the several States of Senators.

Failure of a State to choose Members not to prevent business.

11. The failure of any State to provide for its representation in the Senate shall not affect the power of the Senate to proceed to the despatch of business. 40

Issue of writs.

12. For the purpose of holding elections of Members to represent any State in the Senate the Governor of the State may cause writs to be issued by such persons, in such form and addressed to such Returning Officers, as he thinks fit.

Retirement of Members.

13. As soon as practicable after the Senate first meets the 45 Senators chosen for each State shall be divided by lot into two classes. The places of the Senators of the first class shall be vacated at the expiration of the third year, and the places of those of the second class at the expiration of the sixth year, from the commencement of their term of service as herein declared, and afterwards there 50 shall be an election every third year accordingly.

For the purposes of this section the term of service of a Senator shall begin on and be reckoned from the first day of January next succeeding the day of his election, except in the case of the first election, when it shall be reckoned from the first day of January 55 preceding preceding the day of his election. The election to fill the places of Senators retiring by rotation shall be made in the year preceding the day on which they are to retire.

14. If the place of a Senator becomes vacant before the How vacancies filled.
5 expiration of his term of service the Houses of Parliament of the State he represented shall, sitting and voting together, choose a person to fill the vacancy until the expiration of the term or until the election of a successor as hereinafter provided, whichever first happens. And if the Houses of Parliament of the State are in recess at the 10 time when the vacancy occurs the Governor of the State, with the advice of the Executive Council thereof, may appoint a person to fill the vacancy until the beginning of the next Session of the Parliament of the State or until the election of a successor, whichever first happens. At the next general election of Members of the House of 15 Representatives, or at the next election of Senators for the State, whichever first happens, a successor shall, if the term has not then expired, be chosen to hold the place from the date of his election until the expiration of the term.

15. The qualifications of a Senator shall be those of a Member Qualifications of Member.
20 of the House of Representatives.

16. The Senate shall, at its first meeting and before proceeding Election of President of the Senate.
to the despatch of any other business, choose a Member to be President of the Senate; and as often as the office of President becomes vacant the Senate shall again choose a Member to be the President;
25 and the President shall preside at all meetings of the Senate; and the choice of the President shall be made known to the Governor-General by a deputation of the Senate.

The President may be removed from office by a vote of the Senate. He may resign his office; and upon his ceasing to be a 30 Member his office shall become vacant.

17. The Senate may choose a Member to perform the duties of Absence of President provided for.

40 Senate.

20. Upon the happening of a vacancy in the Senate the Vacancy in Senate to be notified to Governor of State.
President, or if there is no President, or if the President is absent from the Commonwealth, the Governor-General shall forthwith notify the same to the Governor of the State in the representation of which the 45 vacancy has happened.

21. Until The Parliament otherwise provides, any question Questions as to qualifications and vacancies in States Assembly.
respecting the qualification of a Senator, or a vacancy in the Senate, shall be determined by the Senate.

22. The presence of at least one-third of the whole number of Quorum of Senate.

55 negative.

PART III.
HOUSE OF
REPRESENTATIVES.
Constitution of
House of Representatives.

PART III.—THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

24. The House of Representatives shall be composed of Members directly chosen by the people of the several States, according to their respective numbers; as nearly as practicable there shall be two Members of the House of Representatives for every one Member of the Senate. 5

Until The Parliament otherwise provides for the method of determining the number of Members for each quota, there shall be one Member for each quota of the people of the State, and the quota shall, whenever necessary, be ascertained by dividing the population of the Commonwealth, as shown by the latest statistics of the Commonwealth, by twice the number of the Members of the Senate; and the number of Members to which each State is entitled shall be determined by dividing the population of the State, as shown by the latest statistics of the Commonwealth, by the quota. 10 15

But each of the existing Colonies of New South Wales, New Zealand, Queensland, Tasmania, Victoria, and Western Australia, and the Province of South Australia shall be entitled to five Representatives at the least.

Provision for case of persons not allowed to vote.

25. In ascertaining the number of the people of any State, so as to determine the number of Members to which the State is entitled, there shall be deducted from the whole number of the people of the State the number of the people of any race not entitled to vote at elections for the more numerous House of the Parliament of the State. 20

Mode of calculating number of Members.

26. When upon the apportionment of Representatives it is found that after dividing the number of the people of a State by the quota there remains a surplus greater than one-half of such quota, the State shall have one more Representative. 25

Representatives in first Parliament.

27. Notwithstanding anything in section twenty-four, the number of members to be chosen by each State at the first election shall be as follows: [To be determined according to latest statistical returns at the date of the passing of the Act, and in relation to the quota referred to in previous sections.] 30

Increase of number of House of Representatives.

28. Subject to the provisions of this Constitution, the number of Members of the House of Representatives may be from time to time increased or diminished by The Parliament. 35

Electoral Divisions

29. Until The Parliament otherwise provides, the electoral divisions of the several States, for the purpose of returning Members of the House of Representatives, and the number of Members to be chosen for each electoral division, shall be determined from time to time by the Parliaments of the several States. Until division each State shall be one electorate. 40

electors.

30. Until The Parliament otherwise provides, the qualification of electors of Members of the House of Representatives shall be in each State that which is prescribed by the law of the State as the qualification of electors of the more numerous House of the Parliament of the State. But in the choosing of such Members each elector shall vote only once, and if any elector votes more than once he shall be guilty of a misdemeanour, and no elector who has at the establishment of the Commonwealth, or who afterwards acquires a right to vote at elections for the more numerous House of the Parliament of the State, shall, whilst the qualification continues, be prevented by any law of the Commonwealth from exercising such right at elections for the House of Representatives. 45 50

31. Until The Parliament otherwise provides, the qualifications of a Member of the House of Representatives shall be as follows:—

Qualifications of Members of House of Representatives.

(I) He must be of the full age of twenty-one years, and must when chosen be an elector entitled to vote in some State at the election of Members of the House of Representatives or a person qualified to become such elector, and must have been for three years at the least a resident within the limits of the Commonwealth as existing at the time when he is elected;

(II) He must be either a natural born subject of the Queen, or a subject of the Queen naturalised by or under a law of Great Britain and Ireland, or of one of the said Colonies, or of the Commonwealth, or of a State, at least five years before he is elected.

32. A Member of the Senate shall not be capable of being chosen or of sitting as a Member of the House of Representatives.

Members of States Assembly ineligible for House of Representatives.

33. The House of Representatives shall, at its first meeting after every General Election, and before proceeding to the despatch of any other business, choose a Member to be the Speaker of the House, and as often as the office of Speaker becomes vacant the House shall again choose a Member to be the Speaker; and the Speaker shall preside at all meetings of the House; and the choice of the Speaker shall be made known to the Governor-General by a deputation of the House.

Election of Speaker of the House of Representatives.

The Speaker may be removed from office by a vote of the House, or may resign his office.

34. The House of Representatives may choose a Member to perform the duties of the Speaker during his absence.

Absence of Speaker provided for.

35. A Member may, by writing addressed to the Speaker, or to the Governor-General if there is no Speaker or if the Speaker is absent from the Commonwealth, resign his place, which thereupon shall become vacant.

Resignation of place in House of Representatives.

36. The place of a Member shall become vacant if for two consecutive months of any Session of The Parliament he, without permission of the House entered on its Journals, fails to attend the House.

Vacancy by absence of Member.

37. Upon the happening of a vacancy in the House of Representatives, the Speaker shall issue his writ for the election of a new Member; or if there is no Speaker, or if he is absent from the Commonwealth, the Governor-General shall issue the writ.

Issue of new writs.

38. The presence of at least one-third of the whole number of the Members of the House of Representatives shall be necessary to constitute a meeting of the House for the exercise of its powers.

Quorum of House of Representatives.

39. Questions arising in the House of Representatives shall be determined by a majority of votes other than that of the Speaker; and when the votes are equal the Speaker shall have a casting vote, but otherwise he shall not vote.

Voting in House of Representatives.

40. Every House of Representatives shall continue for three years from the day appointed for the first meeting of the House, and no longer, but may be sooner dissolved by the Governor-General.

Duration of House of Representatives.

The Parliament shall be called together not later than thirty days after the day appointed for the return of the Writs for a General Election.

41. For the purpose of holding General Elections of Members to serve in the House of Representatives, the Governor-General may cause Writs to be issued by such persons, in such form, and addressed to such Returning Officers, as he thinks fit.

Writs for General Election.

The writs shall be issued within ten days from the expiry of a Parliament, or from the proclamation of a dissolution.

Continuance of existing Election Laws until The Parliament otherwise provides.

42. Until The Parliament otherwise provides, the laws in force in the several States for the time being, relating to the following matters, namely: The manner of conducting Elections for the more numerous House of the Parliament of the State, the proceedings at such elections, the Returning Officers, the periods during which Elections may be continued, the execution of new Writs in case of places vacated otherwise than by dissolution, and offences against the laws regulating such Elections, shall as nearly as practicable apply to Elections in the several States of Members of the House of Representatives. 5 10

Questions as to qualifications and vacancies.

43. Until The Parliament otherwise provides, any question respecting the qualification of a Member or a vacancy in the House of Representatives shall be determined by the House.

PART IV.

PART IV.—PROVISIONS RELATING TO BOTH HOUSES.

Allowance to members.

44. Until The Parliament otherwise provides, each member, whether of the Senate or of the House of Representatives, shall receive an allowance for his services of Four Hundred Pounds a year, to be reckoned from the day on which he takes his seat. 15

Disqualifications of Members.

45. Any person—

- (I) Who has taken an oath or made a declaration or acknowledgment of allegiance, obedience, or adherence to a Foreign Power, or has done any act whereby he has become a subject or a citizen or entitled to the rights or privileges of a subject or a citizen of a Foreign Power; or 20
- (II) Who is an undischarged bankrupt or insolvent, or a public defaulter; or 25
- (III) Who is attainted of treason, or convicted of felony or of any infamous crime;

shall be incapable of being chosen or of sitting as a Member of the Senate or of the House of Representatives until the disability is removed by a grant of a discharge, or the expiration or remission of the sentence, or a pardon, or release, or otherwise. 30

Place to become vacant on happening of certain disqualifications.

46. If a Member of the Senate or of the House of Representatives—

- (I) Takes an oath or makes a declaration or acknowledgment of allegiance, obedience, or adherence to a Foreign power, or does any act whereby he becomes a subject or citizen, or entitled to the rights or privileges of a subject or citizen, of a Foreign Power; or 35
- (II) Is adjudged bankrupt or insolvent, or takes the benefit of any law relating to bankrupt or insolvent debtors, whether by assignment, composition, or otherwise, or becomes a public defaulter; or 40
- (III) Is attainted of treason or convicted of felony or of any infamous crime; 45 his place shall thereupon become vacant.

Disqualifying contractors and persons interested in contracts.

47. Any person who directly or indirectly himself, or by any person in trust for him, or for his use or benefit, or on his account, undertakes, executes, holds, or enjoys, in the whole or in part, any agreement for or on account of the Public Service of the Commonwealth, shall be incapable of being chosen or of sitting as a Member of the Senate or of the House of Representatives while he executes, holds, or enjoys the agreement, or any part or share of it, or any benefit or emolument arising from it. 50

Any

Any person, being a Member of the Senate or of the House of Representatives, who, in the manner or to the extent forbidden in this section, undertakes, executes, holds, enjoys, or continues to hold, or enjoy, any such agreement, shall thereupon vacate his place.

5 But this section does not extend to any agreement made, entered into, or accepted by an incorporated company consisting of more than twenty persons if the agreement is made, entered into, or accepted for the general benefit of the company. Proviso exempting members of trading companies.

10 Any person being a Member of the Senate or of the House of Representatives who, directly or indirectly, accepts or receives any fee or honorarium for work done or services rendered by him for or on behalf of the Commonwealth, whilst sitting as such Member, shall thereupon vacate his place.

15 48. If a Member of the Senate or of the House of Representatives accepts any office of profit under the Crown, not being one of the offices of State held during the pleasure of the Governor-General, and the holders of which are by this Constitution declared to be capable of being chosen and of sitting as Members of either House of The Parliament, or accepts any pension payable out of any of the revenues of the Commonwealth during the pleasure of the Crown, his place shall thereupon become vacant, and no person holding any such office, except as aforesaid, or holding or enjoying any such pension, shall be capable of being chosen or of sitting as a Member of either House of The Parliament: Place to become vacant on accepting office of profit.

25 Until The Parliament otherwise provides, no person, being a Member, or within six months of his ceasing to be a Member, shall be qualified or permitted to accept or hold any office, the acceptance or holding of which would, under this section, render a person incapable of being chosen or of sitting as a Member.

30 But this section does not apply to a person who is in receipt only of pay, half-pay, or a pension, as an Officer or member of the Queen's Navy or Army, or who receives a new Commission in the Queen's Navy or Army, or an increase of pay on a new Commission, or who is in receipt only of pay as an Officer or member of the Military or Naval Forces of the Commonwealth and whose services are not wholly employed by the Commonwealth. Exceptions.

35 49. CHAPTER IV.

CHAPTER IV.

FINANCE AND TRADE.

FINANCE AND TRADE.

81. All revenues raised or received by the Executive Government of the Commonwealth, under the authority of this Constitution, shall form one Consolidated Revenue Fund to be appropriated for the 50 Public Service of the Commonwealth in the manner and subject to the charges provided by this Constitution. Consolidated Revenue Fund.

82. The Consolidated Revenue Fund shall be permanently charged with the costs, charges, and expenses incident to the collection, management, and receipt thereof, which costs, charges, and expenses Expenses of collection.

expenses, shall form the first charge thereon; and the revenue of the Commonwealth shall, in the first instance, be applied to the payment of the expenditure of the Commonwealth.

Money to be appropriated by law.

83. No money shall be drawn from the Treasury of the Commonwealth except under appropriation made by law and by warrant countersigned by the Chief Officer of Audit of the Commonwealth.

The Commonwealth to have exclusive power to levy duties of Customs and Excise and offer Bounties after a certain time.

84. The Parliament shall have the sole power and authority, subject to the provisions of this Constitution, to impose Customs duties, to impose duties of Excise, and to grant Bounties upon the production or export of goods.

But this exclusive power shall not come into force until uniform duties of Customs have been imposed by The Parliament.

Upon the imposition of uniform duties of Customs all laws of the several States imposing duties of Customs or duties of Excise, and all such laws offering Bounties upon the production or export of goods, shall cease to have effect.

The control and collection of duties of Customs and Excise and the control of the payment of Bounties shall nevertheless pass to the Executive Government of the Commonwealth upon the establishment of the Commonwealth.

This section shall not apply to Bounties or Aids to mining for gold, silver, or other metals.

Transfer of officers'

85. Upon the establishment of the Commonwealth, all officers employed by the Government of any State in any Department of the Public Service the control of which is by this Constitution assigned to the Commonwealth, shall become subject to the control of the Executive Government of the Commonwealth; and thereupon any such officer shall, if he is not retained in the service of the Commonwealth, be entitled to receive from the State any gratuity or other compensation payable under the law of the State on abolition of his office; but if he is retained in the service of the Commonwealth he shall be entitled to retire from office at the time and upon the pension or retiring allowance permitted and provided by the law of the State on such retirement; and the pension or retiring allowance shall be paid by the State and by the Commonwealth respectively in the proportion which his service with the State bears to the whole term of his service, and all existing and accruing rights of any officers so retained in the service of the Commonwealth shall be preserved.

Transfer of land, buildings, vessels, &c.

86. All lands, buildings, works, vessels, materials, and things necessarily appertaining to, or used in connection with, any Department of the Public Service, the control of which is by this Constitution transferred to the Commonwealth, shall, from the establishment of the Commonwealth, be taken over by and vest in the Commonwealth, either absolutely, or, in the case of the Departments controlling Customs and Excise and Bounties, for such time as may be necessary.

The fair value thereof, or of the use thereof, as the case may be, shall be paid by the Commonwealth to the State from which they are taken over. Such value shall be ascertained by mutual agreement, or, if no agreement can be made, in the manner in which the value of land, or of an interest in land, taken by the Government of the State for the like public purposes is ascertained under the laws of the State at the establishment of the Commonwealth.

Collection of existing duties of Customs and Excise.

87. Until uniform duties of Customs have been imposed, the powers of the Parliaments of the several States existing at the establishment of the Commonwealth, respecting the imposition of duties of Customs, the imposition of duties of Excise, and the offering of Bounties upon the production or export of goods, and the collection and payment thereof respectively, shall continue,

Until

Until uniform duties have been imposed, the Laws of the several States in force at the establishment of the Commonwealth respecting duties of Customs, duties of Excise, and Bounties, and the collection and payment thereof, shall remain in force, subject to such alterations of the amount of duties or bounties as the Parliaments of the several States may make from time to time; and the duties and bounties shall continue to be collected and paid as theretofore, but by the Officers of the Commonwealth.

88. Uniform duties of Customs shall be imposed within two years after the establishment of the Commonwealth. Uniform duties of Customs.

89. So soon as uniform duties of Customs have been imposed, trade and intercourse throughout the Commonwealth, whether by means of internal carriage or ocean navigation, shall be absolutely free. On establishment of uniform duties of Customs and Excise, trade within the Commonwealth to be free.

90. Until uniform duties of Customs have been imposed, there shall be shown, in the books of the Treasury of the Commonwealth, in respect of each State— Accounts to be kept.

(I) The revenues collected from duties of Customs and Excise, and from the performance of the services and the exercise of the powers transferred from the State to the Commonwealth by this Constitution. 20

(II) The expenditure of the Commonwealth in the collection of duties of Customs and Excise, and in the performance of the services and the exercise of the powers transferred from the State to the Commonwealth by this Constitution. 25

(III) The monthly balance (if any) in favour of the State.

From the balance so found in favour of each State there shall be deducted its share of the expenditure of the Commonwealth in the exercise of the original powers given to it by this Constitution, and this share shall be in the numerical proportion of the people of the State to those of the Commonwealth as shown by the latest statistics of the Commonwealth. After such deduction, the surplus shown to be due to the State shall be paid to the State month by month. Balance to be paid to States after deduction.

91. During the first three years after the establishment of the Commonwealth, notwithstanding anything contained in the last section, the total yearly expenditure of the Commonwealth, in the exercise of the original powers given to it by this Constitution, shall not exceed the sum of three hundred thousand pounds; and the total yearly expenditure of the Commonwealth in the performance of the services and the exercise of the powers transferred from the States to the Commonwealth by this Constitution shall not exceed the sum of one million two hundred and fifty thousand pounds. Expenditure.

92. During the first five years after uniform duties of Customs have been imposed the aggregate amount to be paid to the whole of the States for any year shall not be less than the aggregate amount returned to them during the year last before the imposition of such duties. Payment to each State for five years after uniform tariffs.

(I) Subject to the last paragraph, for a period of five years after the imposition of uniform duties of Customs, the total amount of duties of Customs and Excise collected in each year in any State, or estimated as hereinafter provided, as the case may require, shall be repaid to such State of the Commonwealth, after deducting from the amount, in proportion to the population, the share of the State in the total expenditure of the Commonwealth not provided for by other means of revenue. The repayment shall be made month by month to the several States, in, as nearly as practicable, the proper proportions: 50

- (II) For the purpose of ascertaining the proportion of revenue from Customs and Excise collected in each State there shall for the first year after the imposition of uniform duties of Customs be shown in the books of the Treasury of the Commonwealth the total amount collected in each State for duties of Customs and Excise. 5
- (III) During such first year the duty chargeable under the uniform tariff upon goods which are imported into any State (whether duty has or has not been actually paid thereon), and during that year exported to any other State for consumption therein, shall be deemed to have been collected in, and shall be credited to, such other State only, and all duties of Excise paid in respect of any goods manufactured in any State, and so exported to another State for consumption therein, shall be deemed to have been collected in, and shall be credited to, such other State only. 10
- (IV) For the purpose of estimating the amount of the Customs and Excise arising in each State during each of the four years next after such first year, an average shall be taken by dividing the total Customs and Excise collected in the whole Commonwealth during such first year by the total population of the Commonwealth, as shown by the latest statistics of the Commonwealth, and the result shall be deemed to be the amount contributed by each person. 20
- (v) Where the amount credited to any State during such first year is in excess of the amount of the average so ascertained, there shall in each of the next four years be deducted therefrom one-fifth part of the excess; and where the amount so credited is less than such average, there shall be added to the amount one-fifth part of the sum by which the amount so credited is less than the average; and the sums so ascertained shall be the estimated amounts to be repaid in each of the four years to the States respectively. 25 30

Distribution of surplus.

93. After the expiration of five years from the imposition of uniform duties of Customs, each State shall be deemed to contribute to the revenue an equal sum per head of its population, and all surplus revenue over the expenditure of the Commonwealth shall be distributed month by month among the several States in proportion to the numbers of their people as shown by the latest statistics of the Commonwealth. 35 40

Audit of Accounts.

94. Until The Parliament otherwise provides, the Laws in force in the several Colonies at the establishment of the Commonwealth with respect to the receipt of revenue and the expenditure of money on account of the Government of the Colony, and the review and audit of such receipt and expenditure, shall apply to the receipt of revenue and the expenditure of money on account of the Commonwealth in the respective States in the same manner as if the Commonwealth, or the Government or an Officer of the Commonwealth, were mentioned therein whenever a Colony, or the Government or an Officer of a Colony, is mentioned or referred to. 45 50

Equality of Trade.

No derogation from freedom of trade.

95. Preference shall not be given by any law or regulation of commerce or revenue to the ports of one State over the ports of another State, and any law or regulation made by the Commonwealth, or by any State, or by any authority constituted by the Commonwealth, or by any State, having the effect of derogating from freedom of trade or commerce between the different parts of the Commonwealth shall be null and void. 55

96. The Parliament may make laws constituting an Inter-State Commission to execute and maintain upon railways within the Commonwealth, and upon rivers flowing through, in, or between, two or more States, the provisions of this Constitution relating to trade and commerce.

97. The Commission shall have such powers of adjudication and administration as may be necessary for its purposes and as The Parliament may from time to time determine.

98. The Parliament may take over the whole, or a ratable proportion, of the public debts of the States as existing at the establishment of the Commonwealth, and may from time to time convert, renew, or consolidate such debts, or any part thereof; and the States respectively shall indemnify the Commonwealth in respect of the amount of the debts taken over, and thereafter the amount of interest payable in respect of the debts shall be deducted and retained from time to time from the respective shares of the surplus revenue of the Commonwealth which would otherwise be payable to the States, or if there be no surplus revenue payable, or if such surplus revenue be insufficient, then the amount shall be charged to and paid by the respective States wholly or in part. The ratable proportion of the debts of the several States to be taken over is to be calculated on the basis of the populations of the several States as ascertained by the latest statistics of the Commonwealth.

CHAPTER V.

CHAPTER V.

25

THE STATES.

THE STATES.

99. All powers which at the establishment of the Commonwealth are vested in the Parliaments of the several Colonies, and which are not by this Constitution exclusively vested in The Parliament of the Commonwealth, or withdrawn from the Parliaments of the several States, are reserved to, and shall remain vested in, the Parliaments of the States respectively.

100. All Laws in force in any of the Colonies relating to any of the matters declared by this Constitution to be within the Legislative powers of The Parliament of the Commonwealth shall, except as otherwise provided by this Constitution, continue in force in the States respectively, and may be repealed or altered by the Parliaments of the States, until provision is made in that behalf by The Parliament of the Commonwealth.

101. When a Law of a State is inconsistent with a Law of the Commonwealth, the latter shall prevail, and the former shall, to the extent of the inconsistency, be invalid.

102. All powers and functions which are at the establishment of the Commonwealth vested in the Governors of the Colonies respectively, shall, so far as the same are capable of being exercised after the establishment of the Commonwealth in relation to the government of the States, continue to be vested in the Governors of the States respectively.

103. Subject to the provisions of this Constitution, the Constitutions of the several States of the Commonwealth shall continue as at the establishment of the Commonwealth, until altered by or under the authority of the Parliaments thereof in accordance with the provisions of their respective Constitutions.

104. The provisions of this Constitution relating to the Governor of a State extend and apply to the Governor for the time being of the State, or other the Chief Executive Officer or Administrator of the government of the State, by whatever title he is designated.

A State may cede any of its Territory.

105. The Parliament of a State may at any time surrender any part of the State to the Commonwealth, and upon such surrender and the acceptance thereof by the Commonwealth such part of the State shall become and be subject to the exclusive jurisdiction of the Commonwealth.

States not to levy import or export duties, except for certain purposes.

106. After uniform duties of Customs have been imposed, a State shall not levy any impost or charge on imports or exports, except such as may be necessary for executing the inspection laws of the State; and the net produce of all imposts and charges imposed by a State on imports or exports shall be for the use of the Commonwealth; and any such inspection laws may be annulled by The Parliament of the Commonwealth.

Nor maintain forces, nor tax the property of the Commonwealth.

107. A State shall not, without the consent of The Parliament of the Commonwealth, raise or maintain any military or naval force, or impose any tax on property of any kind belonging to the Commonwealth; nor shall the Commonwealth impose any tax on property of any kind belonging to a State.

15

State not to coin money.

108. A State shall not coin money, nor make anything but gold and silver coin a legal tender in payment of debts.

Nor prohibit any religion.

109. A State shall not make any law prohibiting the free exercise of any religion.

20

Protection of citizens of the Commonwealth.

110. A State shall not make or enforce any law abridging any privilege or immunity of citizens of other States of the Commonwealth, nor shall a State deny to any person, within its jurisdiction, the equal protection of the laws.

Recognition of Acts of State of various States.

111. Full faith and credit shall be given, throughout the Commonwealth, to the Laws, the Public Acts and Records, and the Judicial Proceedings, of the States.

Protection of States from invasion and domestic violence.

112. The Commonwealth shall protect every State against invasion and, on the application of the Executive Government of a State, against domestic violence.

30

Custody of offenders against laws of the Commonwealth.

113. Every State shall make provision for the detention and punishment in its prisons of persons accused or convicted of offences against the laws of the Commonwealth, and The Parliament of the Commonwealth may make laws to give effect to this provision.

35

CHAPTER VI.

NEW STATES.

New States may be admitted to the Commonwealth.

114. The Parliament may from time to time admit to the Commonwealth any of the existing colonies of [name the existing colonies which have not adopted the Constitution] and may from time to time establish new States, and may upon such admission or establishment make and impose such terms and conditions, including the extent of representation in either House of The Parliament, as it thinks fit.

Provisional government of Territories.

115. The Parliament may make such laws as it thinks fit for the provisional administration and government of any territory surrendered by any State to and accepted by the Commonwealth, or any territory placed by the Queen under the authority of and accepted by the Commonwealth, or otherwise acquired by the Commonwealth, and may allow the representation of such territory in either House of The Parliament to the extent and on the terms which it thinks fit.

116. The Parliament of the Commonwealth may, from time to time, with the consent of the Parliament of a State, increase, diminish, or otherwise alter the limits of the State, upon such terms and conditions as may be agreed to, and may, with the like consent, 5 make provision respecting the effect and operation of any increase or diminution or alteration of territory in relation to any State affected.

Alteration of limits of States.

117. A new State shall not be formed by separation of territory from a State without the consent of the Parliament thereof, nor shall a State be formed by the union of two or more States or parts of 10 States, or the limits of a State be altered, without the consent of the Parliament or Parliaments of the State or States affected.

Saving of rights of States.

CHAPTER VII.

MISCELLANEOUS.

CHAPTER VII.

MISCELLANEOUS.

118. The seat of Government of the Commonwealth shall be 15 determined by The Parliament.

Seat of Government.

Until such determination The Parliament shall be summoned to meet at such place within the Commonwealth as a majority of the Governors of the States, or, in the event of an equal division of opinion amongst the Governors, as the Governor-General shall direct.

20 119. The Queen may authorise the Governor-General from time to time to appoint any person or any persons jointly or severally to be his Deputy or Deputies within any part or parts of the Commonwealth, and in that capacity to exercise during the pleasure of the Governor-General such of the powers and functions of the Governor-General 25 as he deems it necessary or expedient to assign to such Deputy or Deputies, subject to any limitations or directions expressed or given by the Queen, but the appointment of such Deputy or Deputies shall not affect the exercise by the Governor-General himself of any power or function.

Power to Her Majesty to authorise Governor-General to appoint Deputies.

30 120. In reckoning the numbers of the people of a State or other part of the Commonwealth aboriginal natives shall not be counted.

Aborigines of Australia not to be counted in reckoning population.

CHAPTER VIII.

AMENDMENT OF THE CONSTITUTION.

CHAPTER VIII.

AMENDMENT OF CONSTITUTION.

35 121. The provisions of this Constitution shall not be altered except in the following manner:—

Mode of amending the Constitution.

40 Any proposed law for the alteration thereof must be passed by an absolute majority of the Senate and of the House of Representatives, and shall thereupon be submitted in each State to the electors qualified to vote for the election of Members of the House of Representatives, not less than two nor more than six calendar months after the passage through both Houses of the proposed law.

The vote shall be taken in such manner as The Parliament prescribes.

45 And if a majority of the States and a majority of the electors voting approve the proposed law, it shall be presented to the Governor-General for the Queen's assent. But until the qualification of electors of Members of the House of Representatives becomes uniform throughout the Commonwealth only one-half the votes for and against the 50 proposed law shall be counted in any State in which adult suffrage prevails.

But an alteration by which the proportionate representation of any State in either House of The Parliament or the minimum number of Representatives of a State in the House of Representatives, is diminished, shall not become law without the consent of the majority of the electors voting in that State. 5

THE SCHEDULE.

Oath.

I, A.B., do swear that I will be faithful and bear true allegiance to Her Majesty Queen Victoria, Her heirs and successors, according to law. So HELP ME GOD!

Affirmation.

10

I, A.B., do solemnly and sincerely affirm and declare that I will be faithful and bear true allegiance to Her Majesty Queen Victoria, Her heirs and successors, according to law.

PREFACE.

WHEN I was commissioned by the late Sir Henry Parkes to write explanatory notes for an official edition of the Draft Bill of 1891, my task had but one object—that of removing certain misapprehensions with respect to its leading provisions which had been widely circulated at the time by an adverse critic. It was no part of my duty to discuss the merits of the Bill, nor did I attempt to do so. But my examination of it having led me to doubt whether the Convention had wisely taken the Constitution of the United States as the basis of their work, and subsequent consideration having strongly confirmed this doubt, it seemed to me that, on the eve of another Convention, the question might be fairly submitted for public consideration, especially as nothing had been said about it up to that time.

The editor of the Evening News having allowed me a perfectly free hand for this purpose, I availed myself of it to discuss the question from an independent point of view. It will be manifest to my readers, I think, that the "Notes" have not been written in any spirit of hostility to the federal movement, or with any leaning to provincialism. If I have not been able to feel unbounded faith in the American constitution as a model for our own, it is certainly not from any insensibility to its merits. I can truly say that the more I study it, the more I admire it—and the less I like it. Admitting its excellence, I feel in much the same position when contemplating it as the Rev. Sydney Smith felt towards the planet Jupiter, when he formed one of a brilliant party assembled for the purpose of examining it through an unusually powerful telescope. In the midst of a chorus of admiration he was asked what he thought of it, when he replied—"Well, it certainly looks to me like a bad shilling."

The great objection to the adoption of such a constitution here does not lie, I take it, in the doctrine of equal State representation, of which we have heard so much, or in any other federal principle. It lies rather in the introduction of a complex form of government, of which we have had no experience; one which obviously calls for statesmanship of an order not yet seen in these colonies, and which may not be seen for many generations to come; one, moreover, which may be expected to develop all the known vices of Australian politics, combined with others that are purely American—inevitable corruption, incessant strife between the federal and the local Parliaments, the omnipotent caucus, and perpetual agitation. While such unpleasant eruptions may break out in the body politic, corresponding symptoms may show themselves in the nervous centres of commercial and industrial activity, resulting from organic disturbances in our trade relations on the railways and the rivers, and the paralysing uncertainty which must for many years surround the question of a federal tariff.

To these and other trials, of course, Australians might get accustomed in course of time, even as Americans have got used to theirs. But these Notes have been written in the hope that, before they commit themselves finally to a system which may be expected to produce them, they will consider whether it is not possible to obtain the benefits of united action by some simpler and less risky machinery.

Notes on Federation and the Draft Bills.

I.—11th February.

OUR THIRD CONVENTION.

WE are now living in an era of Conventions; most of us without knowing it. They have taken the place of the intercolonial Conferences which used to meet for twenty years in Sydney and Melbourne, and they are now running a race for supremacy with the Federal Council of Australasia. Many candidates for the coming Convention appear to be under the impression that it is bound to settle the Federation question right off, and that a Federal Constitution will result from its labours, under which we Australians are destined to live happily ever after. They have unlimited faith in the glowing prediction of his Eminence the Cardinal, when speaking at the Bathurst Convention the other day, that the close of this century will be marked by the meeting of a Federal Parliament, "strong as a fortress, sacred as a shrine."

But when we turn to the past—our only guide to the future—we can see but too clearly the causes which have combined to defeat every effort of this kind hitherto; and turning to the present, we can see as clearly that they are not only in active operation still, but our working with a vigour that has never been seen before. Has any one of them been removed? Has any one of them been sensibly diminished? And until they are all either removed, or very sensibly diminished, how can we expect to see the colonies united under one Government? The prospect was never so bright, nor so full of promise, as it was in '91, when the delegates of all the Parliaments, including that of New Zealand, assembled in Sydney and adopted the Draft Commonwealth Bill. But what happened? The whole movement gradually melted away, leaving nothing behind it but a big volume of speeches and the skeleton of a constitution.

VAULTING AMBITION.

Can we reasonably hope to animate that skeleton now? This is our third Convention. The first was held here in '83, and gave birth to the present Federal Council; but it has long since been utterly forgotten, although its proceedings were in many respects memorable. One of the delegates was Sir William Des Voeux, Governor of Fiji, who brought over with him a petition from the white Fijians, setting forth their desire to be incorporated with "Federated Australasia." They were very hopeful then about it; but observe the changes that have taken place since. Fiji has lost all interest in the movement; New Zealand has dropped out of it; Queensland has turned its back on it; and Western Australia is playing a game of make-believe. The chance of seeing a "Federated Australasia" at the present time has faded away into the dimmest distance. It can only be regarded as one of the possibilities of a remote future.

Every one may see now that the men who conducted the movement at that period were much too ambitious in their designs. They might as well have gone a few steps further, and attempted to incorporate the whole of the Western Pacific. Some of the Victorians, by-the-way, would have been quite prepared to do it. Experience compels us to reduce the dimensions of their scheme; and the most sanguine federationists of the present day would be glad to get a small portion of it, in the shape of a union of three adjoining colonies on the mainland—as proposed by Sir Henry Parkes in the seventies. Even that amount of success, I take it, will not be accomplished by the coming Convention. It will give us another Draft Bill, which will probably share the fate of its predecessor. It will go under for a while, and then come up again at another Convention some years hence, when public opinion will be better prepared to deal with the subject.

THE DISABLING ACT.

Is it possible to feel hopeful about the prospects of the Convention when we turn to the Australasian Federation Enabling Act, under which it is to live its little life? One might be excused for saying that if the Conference of Premiers, at which it was framed, had met for the purpose of devising a scheme which would place unnecessary difficulties in the way of federation, a more ingenious one could not have been devised. Under the guise of an ultra-popular measure, designed to rouse the sympathies of apathetic electors, it constructs a series of obstacles which remind one of a steeplechase, with a number of jockeys and horses rolling over and under in the dust.

GRAND NATIONAL STEEPLECHASE.

The first hurdle we come to is the election of candidates. Is there not some ground for a little suspicion when we find Sir Hugh Nelson telling the Assembly at Brisbane that this part of the Act is a perfect farce in their case, on account of their immense area and the scattered nature of their inland population? Although he was a consenting party to it, he rejected it in his own bill, and substituted election by members of the Assembly, voting in three divisions, representing North, Central, and South Queensland.

If these objections do not apply with quite equal force to the other colonies—they certainly do in the case of Western Australia—they must be felt everywhere more or less, especially in New South Wales. Then what a ridiculous picture this scheme suggests—some two hundred candidates setting forth on a stumping tour in their several colonies, such as was never attempted nor even imagined before; all of them, like John Gilpin, "citizens of credit and renown," but most of them coming back with as little éclat as he did from his famous trip to Edmonton. Their personal inconvenience may not be a matter of national concern, but how are the electors, especially those in the distant places, likely to come off?

Is

Is the substitution of a general election for Parliamentary selection likely to secure a better class of representatives? Election leaves everything to chance; selection implies the exercise of judgment without leaving anything to chance. The success of the Convention will depend, of course, on the qualifications of the men who compose it. We have been told by Mr. Reid that it is not "the best men" who are wanted for the work it has to do, but the men who will vote for certain principles supposed to be in vogue just now. But as we know that the men who lay down this maxim would not choose their own cooks or gardeners in accordance with it, we may doubt whether the public will be at all inclined to adopt it when a national constitution has to be framed.

A BIG PILL.

The next hurdle that will have to be negotiated—supposing that the bill should survive the amendments made in Parliament—will be the voting on it. The electors will be called upon to say "Yes" or "No" to it. No one will be allowed to say "Yes, excepting such and such clauses." It must be swallowed holus bolus, or rejected altogether; and unless 50,000 electors consent to swallow it, the votes of 49,999 will go for nothing.

If this scheme is to be taken as a specimen of the referendum, there need be no hesitation in saying that the first trial of it will be the last, for many a long day to come. It is asking too much and too little in the same breath: too much, because it denies the elector any opportunity of exercising his judgment on the merits of the bill, while professing to do so; and too little, because it is absurd to say that if 50,000 men out of 300,000 can be found to vote for it, the rest are to count for nothing, unless they roll up and vote against it. Is not this tantamount to telling the country districts that they will have very little show in this matter? There are only three centres, it is said, at which heavy voting can be expected; 50,000 votes might be easily polled in Sydney and the suburbs; but if, owing to those accidents which usually interfere with voting in the country districts, a larger number should not be polled against the bill, they might find themselves hopelessly bound by a measure they disliked and disapproved.

THE FINISH.

The third and last hurdle presents itself in the provision requiring an address from both Houses to Her Majesty—supposing that the bill has been accepted by the electors—praying that it may be passed into law by the Imperial Parliament. This step will not be taken unless it has been accepted in two other colonies; if, for instance, 50,000 have voted for it in Victoria, 6000 in Tasmania, and a bare majority in South Australia. Then, if their Parliaments adopt similar addresses, the Federal Constitution may become fact.

Supposing that the bill should succeed in reaching both Houses, does our past experience afford much encouragement with respect to its prospects there? Will it stand a better chance of being adopted than the Commonwealth had? Although everything seemed in favour of the latter, we have seen its melancholy fate—pigeon-holed by three successive Ministries, nobody knew why, and nobody seemed to care.

II.—18th February.

UNDER WHICH FLAG?

PERHAPS there is nothing wonderful in the fact that some of the most important questions connected with the Federation problem have hitherto received the least attention, and that the energies of candidates are mainly directed to the development of small electioneering points, to the neglect of broader issues. In that view of the subject, one can understand how it is that nothing has yet been heard about the main principles on which the proposed federal constitution is to be built up; in other words, what are its national characteristics to be—English or American? Up to the present time, the tendency of events has been just the reverse of what might have been expected. We have been silently adopting American usages, principles, and precedents wholesale, retaining a few of the old English ones, as if to preserve our character for loyalty.

For instance, we have adopted the system of Conventions as the proper sort of machinery for formulating a constitution—a clear imitation of American practice. Then the Draft Bill of '91 shows a decided preference for the constitution of the United States, as the working model on which our own is to be framed. From it the two chambers derive their names—House of Representatives and Senate—and also the methods by which each is to be created; from it is taken the scheme for the distribution of Parliamentary powers between the central Government and the colonies—called States; and from it we have the proposal to set up a Federal Judiciary as a component part of the Government, with abolition of the appeal, in private cases, to the Privy Council. On many minor questions, and even in the phraseology of the bill, there is similar evidence of American influence; and, consistently with it, the title chosen for the united colonies—the Commonwealth of Australia—carries with it a distinctly American flavour.

STARS AND STRIPES.

All this has been done without any direct expression of public opinion on the subject. The public has never been asked whether it has any choice in the matter; it has been sometimes gently led, sometimes roughly driven, along the path over which it now finds itself going. That may be only one of the consequences of its own apathy; but now that it is beginning to wake up a little, it would be interesting to know whether its political sympathies are so strongly American as they would appear to be. It has not shown a similar tendency on any other occasion to desert the old English principles of constitutional government; it would probably resent the idea of having having deserted them in this. But there is the plain fact before us that, while the framers of the Draft Bill of '91 might have followed an English precedent in the case of the Canadian Federation, had they pleased to do so, they practically set it aside in favour of an American one. The Act by which the Canadian provinces were united embodied the results of many consultations between their delegates and the Queen's Ministers, was drafted by Lord Henry Thring, the chief of the parliamentary draftsmen, and has now successfully stood the test of thirty years' experience.

A TEST CASE OR TWO.

There is not much resemblance; certainly, between the circumstances of the Australian colonies and those of Canada; but, granting that, there is infinitely less between them and those of the United States. There is so little analogy with the latter that one might well ask—Can we safely venture to adopt any one principle of the American constitution, seeing that we have had no experience of its actual working? Take one of the most successful as a test—the method of choosing a Senate. According to the theory of the constitution, the best available men in a State are selected by the Legislature to represent it in Congress; but in practice it is found that this method of election is merely nominal, the senators being chosen by the wire-pullers of the Republican or Democratic party at a caucus. If experience goes for anything in such a case, it may be supposed that a similar result would follow here in time; the election would, to all intents and purposes, revert from the local Legislature to the electors at large; but, instead of being conducted openly as elections are now, it would rest in the hands of a class who form the worst features of the electoral system.

We are told, too, by persons who ought to know, that the practice of parliamentary elections here, when members are candidates for vacant seats on the Committee of Public Works, does not commend itself by its results. The tactics resorted to on those occasions might not be adopted or countenanced in the case of an election to the Senate; but the old maxim, ex pede Herculem, might possibly apply even there.

Or we may take another test—the principle which governs the distribution of parliamentary powers. Following the American model, the Draft Bill enumerates the powers of legislation to be conferred on the Federal Parliament, leaving all other powers to be exercised by the State Legislatures. This principle was adopted because the States forming the Union were independent commonwealths, each possessing sovereign powers, and each naturally jealous of any encroachment on them. It was for the same reason, by the way, that the States obtained equal representation in the Senate. But there is no analogy in this respect between colonies and states; colonies are not sovereign commonwealths; and as the reason for reserving the residuum of power to the former does not apply, why should it be reserved?

IMPLIED POWERS.

Experience soon showed the impossibility of rigidly defining the powers of a national Government, or tying it down to any hard and fast rules of legislation. Conflicts of authority between the Federal and the State Governments became unpleasantly frequent, until the Supreme Court of the United States came to the aid of the Union by laying down the doctrine of "implied powers." The list of enumerated powers seems such a very simple affair at first sight that no idea of difficulty in their interpretation occurs to the casual reader; but in matters of this kind, simplicity often means everything that is vague and indefinite to the last degree. The Court got rid of the difficulty by holding that every power of a general character must include also all the powers naturally and reasonably implied in it, and deemed requisite to enable the Government to carry out the object in view. By means of this little rule of interpretation, Congress exercises in the present day a degree of power never dreamed of by the framers of the constitution.

INCOME TAXES.

A remarkable instance of the manner in which its legislative powers have been expanded under this influence occurred in the case of the income tax. Under two sections of the constitution, declaring that "direct taxes" shall be apportioned among the several States; and that "all duties, imposts, and excises shall be uniform throughout the United States," it is held that Congress may levy income taxes, because they are duties or excises, and not direct taxes, the latter including only poll taxes (without regard to property, profession, or any other circumstance), and taxes on real estate. This conclusion was arrived at by a legal scrutiny of the clauses referring to taxation; but the belief that direct taxes included those on income was so general that the ruling came as a sweet surprise to the States when they found that the Federal Government had forestalled that part of their revenue. Apply this construction to the clause in the Draft Bill, copied from the American constitution, which authorises the Federal Parliament to levy duties of "customs and excise," and then consider the effect in the event of an Act being passed here under its authority.

TROUBLES AHEAD.

These considerations are enough to show that the choice of a working model is not a mere matter of national feeling and prejudice; it involves many questions of great importance in the daily life of a federal government. In the discussion now going on, no one stops to ask, how will the proposed constitution work when it is once set going? Every one seems to assume that it will go with beautiful precision and unbroken harmony among all its parts, and that no special precautions are required to insure that result. The idea might prove to be an enormous delusion, as any one may see who will take the trouble to make himself acquainted with the history of federal government in Canada and the States. From the earliest years of its existence in both countries, its course has been marked by the frequent occurrence of constitutional uproars, arising out of the disputed interpretation of a line here or a word there in the text of the Constitution.

We have not yet had much experience of such troubles; the only one of any importance we have seen relates to the right of the Upper House to deal with money bills, which generally turns up in the silly season. Our law courts have never been occupied with cases in which the constitutional validity of a local Act of Parliament has been called into question, as if it was a municipal by-law; but when federal government comes into play, this class of cases will assuredly attract the ingenuity of our too ingenious lawyers, and keep the commonwealth in a flutter of nervous agitation from one year's end to another.

III.—25th February.

A SPEECH ON FEDERATION.

EVERYONE likes Mr. Reid's jokes. His faculty for making them under the most unfavorable circumstances has often been put to the test, and has never failed him. However dry the subject he has to handle may be, he contrives to tickle his audience by some unexpected play of humorous fancy, which relieves the mind while it amuses it. Look, for instance, at his recent speech on the federation question, and contrast it with those of the forty-eight rival candidates who have been haranguing the public for weeks together. While they have been treating it in a serious, in some cases a dreadfully serious, manner, he has looked at it from quite a different point of view. He has shown us how easy it is, for him, to talk about State Rights, federal finance, and all the other problems that are puzzling men's minds, as pleasantly as Charles Lamb could write about "Some of the inconveniences of being hanged." There is not a dull line in the whole of his speech; every paragraph presents a comic phase of the subject; and you feel at the end of it as if he had really turned the whole thing into a joke!

A TWO-SIDED AFFAIR.

It is quite true that some of his funny things are not so palpable that everyone can see them at a glance; but that, of course, arises from the peculiar nature of the subject. Federation is such a double-banked affair that you find yourself compelled to look at both sides of a question at one and the same time. To arrive at sound conclusions, you must consider the federal and the provincial side together; and to do that successfully requires a good deal of practice. Suppose, for instance, that two men are carrying on a discussion on any given question, one a federalist and the other a provincialist; each is usually so full of his own views that he does not stop to consider his opponent's, and consequently they never agree. Everyone must have remarked this peculiarity when reading the speeches delivered by our candidates.

But when a man has to express the convictions of a provincialist in the language of an enthusiast in the cause of Federation, he is placed in a bit of a dilemma. How can he avoid puzzling his audience under such circumstances, seeing that they never know on which side to take him? There would be no difficulty about it if he could do as the old Greek actors did on the stage—wear a mask representing two different side-faces, so that he could adapt his facial expression to his words by simply turning his head to one side or the other. A simple arrangement of that kind would enable a speaker to get over the most difficult ground with ease; but that not being possible here, his audience is left to find out for themselves what his opinions really are.

A CRIPPLED GOVERNMENT.

There can be no doubt on that subject in Mr. Reid's case. Although he does not say so in express words, his proposals make it clear enough that his line of policy is a strictly provincial one. The Federal Parliament, as he would construct it, would be little more than an enlarged edition of the present Federal Council, limited in its jurisdiction to certain federal matters of a harmless kind, and limited in its powers of taxation and borrowing. That is not the sort of government implied in federation. To limit the taxing and borrowing power is to cripple it, and a national government crippled in its infancy can never be good for anything. When he dwells on the necessity of "a sound scheme of federal finance," he does not contemplate such a government as we see in the United States or in Canada, but a small central body virtually controlled by several large ones representing provincial interests, and subject to their dictation. This scheme is seen in another proposal of his—to cut down the number of members allotted to the two Houses in the Draft Bill. He would confine the House of Representatives to sixty or seventy members, and the Senate to thirty; while he would leave the local Parliaments as they are—our own Houses, for instance, with 125 members in one, and an unlimited number in the other.

SWAMPING.

His determination to keep the Federal Parliament under the thumb of the States comes out even more distinctly in his views on the relations between the two Houses. He enlarges on the necessity of subjecting the Senate to the House of Representatives in the case of a deadlock. Nothing could be more antagonistic to the federal form of Government. I need not say that no precedent can be found for such a proposal, for how could any precedent exist? Bearing in mind that while the Senate represents the States and the other House the people, anyone may see that the argument used in justification of swamping does not and cannot apply to them; because any conflict that might arise between the Houses would not be one between the people and the privileged classes, but between the people and the States—a very different thing, calling for very different treatment.

SIR

SIR LEICESTER DEDLOCK.

Here we have one of his best jokes, and it is worth while to see by what train of thought he travelled to it. For many years past, it seems, he has lived in a nervous state of mind with respect to "deadlocks"—so nervous, indeed, that he reminds one of the railway traveller who is always talking about collisions; or, again, of Sir Leicester Dedlock in "Bleak House," described as "an honorable and truthful gentleman, but of such fossilised ideas that no tongue of man could shake his prejudices." When he condemned the Draft Bill in '91, one of his chief reasons for doing so was that it contained no provision to meet the case of a deadlock. The plain answer is that there is no provision of the kind either in the American or the Canadian constitutions, which nevertheless have got on very well without it; and further, that there is none either in the English or our own constitutions, which also have got on very well without one. These facts are enough to show that there is no necessity for any such provision; and again, that you cannot devise any kind of machinery for the purpose without doing violence to the free play of constitutional government.

A NORWEGIAN PATCH.

But Mr. Reid is still of opinion that some machinery of the kind is essential to the success of federal government in Australia; and to supply the deficiency he proposes to take a leaf out of the Norwegian Constitution and incorporate it with ours—More patchwork! In Norway, he tells us, it is the custom for both Houses, when they cannot agree on a bill, to sit together as one House and settle the question by a majority vote. He suggests an amendment of this plan. In the case of a money bill, rejected in two sessions by the Senate, the two Houses should be made to sit together, and the question should then be put—"That this bill do now pass." But in the case of any other bill rejected in two sessions, the two Houses should sit together and go over it, clause by clause, in order to come to a decision upon it.

TELESCOPING THE HOUSES.

This might be called a provision for telescoping both Houses; but what does it amount to but another form of swamping, performed in such a manner as not only to destroy the dignity and independence of the Senate, but to subvert the very basis of federal government? How could we make two Houses sit together when one represents the people and the other the States, without ignoring that distinction? The two bodies are so essentially different in point of structure, that they could not be amalgamated in that fashion and survive it.

The practice of the Norwegian Parliament cannot be dragged into the discussion with any chance of extracting a suitable precedent from it, and a very short explanation will be sufficient to show why. It is elected, every three years, as one chamber, called a Storting, consisting of 114 members; and when it meets it divides itself into two sections, called Odelsting and Lagting—the former consisting of three-fourths, and the latter of one-fourth, of the total number. If they disagree on any bill passed by the Odelsting, then they sit together again, and the Storting decides the question. If the bill is not supported by two-thirds of the total number, it is held to be rejected.

Where is the analogy between this sort of constitution and the one we propose to adopt? There are not two Houses in Norway, but one, and the two sections into which it divides are nothing more than two grand committees, which sit apart or sit together for the convenience of business. Where there is only one House there can be no deadlock, and consequently the practice recommended to us cannot apply to a dilemma of that kind. And if it could be made to apply, what would happen in the case of the bill being rejected? Would the Premier send in his resignation? Or would he be entitled to a dissolution or a referendum, at his option?

A SWISS PATCH.

It is unfortunate that Mr. Reid did not develop his ideas on the subject of the referendum at greater length than he did. He told his audience that it would be impossible to carry it out in federated Australia at any other time than that of a general election. Is not that enough to show how unfitted it is to our circumstances? And would it be possible to carry it out even then, with any chance of success? No argument in its favour can be drawn from the practice in Switzerland, because the circumstances of the two countries do not permit of any comparison. There it has been part of the national government for centuries; the electors have been trained to its use from childhood, and they are as familiar with it as they are with any other national custom. Dwelling, as they do, in small, compact cantons, where the electoral machinery can be worked quickly and cheaply, it is suited to their circumstances, and for that reason chiefly it has maintained its ground.

If we are to take a patch from the Swiss constitution, as well as the Norwegian one, let us have the thing in its proper form. No referendum takes place in Switzerland, on any federal law or resolution, unless 30,000 voters, or eight cantons, demand it. In those cases it is optional. But in the case of a revision or alteration of the federal constitution, to which both Houses have agreed, the matter must be submitted to the people. It is also submitted if the two Houses disagree in such a case; or if 50,000 voters demand an amendment of the constitution. What would be the chance of obtaining a referendum here, if a requisition from 30,000 electors were required to bring it into existence?

FAIR PLAY.

In another point, too, the Swiss practice should not be lost sight of by those who advocate its adoption here. The people's vote is not used in the cantons as a weapon of class or party warfare, directed against one of two Houses which has its rights and responsibilities as well as the the other. It is used solely as a legitimate means of expressing the national will on a measure of public importance. Subject to these two conditions, there could not be much objection to it in practice. The objections in point of principle would still remain—that it is foreign to our constitution, and unfitted to our circumstances.

But how has it been discussed here, and in what language has it been recommended by our popular statesman? As far as I can recollect, it has been something in this style :—

When troubles with the Lords begin,
I'll show you how to end 'em ;
Not by a fair discussion, but
A simple Referendum.

If after that they still hold out,
To glory I will send 'em ;
I'll blow them from the guns at once
With another Referendum.

But don't suppose that ever I
Would willingly offend 'em ;
I'll only let 'em see " what's what,"
When I try a Referendum !

IV.—4th March.

MUDDLED.

ANYONE who can honestly say that he has read all the speeches of the forty-nine candidates, as they appeared from day to day in the newspapers, might be reasonably excused for feeling considerably muddled on the subject of federation, and the great national issues hanging to it. And supposing that he wished to reduce the discordant mass of opinion they contained to some sort of shape, how would he set about it? With the exception of a few of the most notable among them, the competitors for public favour look, to the mind's eye, like the ruck of horses sweeping by on a race-course, at such a pace that no one can tell one jockey's colours from another's. If we are to take these speeches as indications of public opinion, it would seem as if the only questions of importance in the electoral eye were purely local ones—such as federating the railways, the choice of a federal capital, and the election of Cardinal Moran.

SIXES AND SEVENS.

After all the speechifying we have had, the polling that takes place to-day does not promise to throw much light on public opinion as to the main questions involved. Who can pretend to say even now what opinions the electors, or a majority of them, hold on any one of them—say the constitution of the Upper House, or the relations between the Federal and Provincial Parliaments, on such matters as taxing and borrowing? Whoever the ten men may be who will be sent to Adelaide to represent us in the Convention, it is safe to predict that they will hold all sorts of contradictory theories on these and other points in the construction of a Federal Government.

If this process of "natural selection" has been going on in the other colonies, as no doubt it has, it will be interesting to observe the further process by which so many conflicting elements will be reduced to harmony. The plan we have adopted seems much like that of giving a contract for the building of a big ship to a number of men who are known to differ on all the mechanical and engineering questions that make up the science of naval architecture. Well for us that the Primate, with most excellent foresight, has already framed a prayer to be used in the churches during the sittings of the Convention!

THE RAILWAYS.

The paramount topic of the day appears to be the federation of the railways, which has evidently proved a delicate one to handle on the platform. On one side we are told that it would be suicidal policy to hand them over to the Federal Government under any circumstances whatever; while on the other it is urged that if the debts are to be consolidated, the railways must necessarily go with them; and moreover, say some, they ought to be handed over whether the debts are consolidated or not. This is clearly an administrative, not a constitutional, question; and the time that has been spent in discussing it might possibly have been employed to better purpose. It may be assumed that the Convention will leave it for the local Parliaments to settle at their leisure among themselves; but it may also be assumed that the time will arrive when both the railways and the debts will be taken over, by common consent of all concerned.

This is one of the many matters that show the necessity of looking a long way ahead when we talk of federation. It is not so much a question for us to settle, as for those who will come after us. Anyone who can realise what a Federal Government means in action, will readily see that any such question will present itself in a very different light then, from that in which we see it now. A totally new body of public opinion will come into existence, which will have more to do with the settlement of these disputes than any power of the present day.

A NEW POINT OF VIEW.

Who can tell us now, for instance, what the exigencies of a Federal Government may be, even in the first years of its existence? And until we can clearly comprehend what those exigencies may be, how is it possible to feel justified in laying down the law so peremptorily as some good people would do? Judging from the way in which the subject has been treated on all all sides, one might suppose that railway construction is already at an end, except for some branch lines here and there; whereas the probability is that it will receive a wholly new impetus in the hands of a central Government, and reach a point of development barely dreamed of nowadays.

For one thing, it is clear that the railway question will by-and-bye be identified with those of defence and the opening up of the interior, on a scale far beyond the power of any local Government. Our statesmen will then say that, from the moment federation is accomplished, there will be a coast-line of some 8,000 miles to guard, the responsibility of which cannot be met without efficient means of railway transport in all necessary directions; and further, that measures must be promptly taken—not only by means of railway extension, but by irrigation and other works—for the purpose of affording still greater facilities for settlement than we yet have, introducing streams of population from abroad, and finding some sort of use for part at least of the enormous territory on our hands, as much a waste now as it was fifty years ago.

LOOK AT CANADA.

The readiness with which projects of this size may be expected to start up under federation has been shown in the case of Canada. Until 1867, when they were united, her provinces were contented with their own separate lines, with 2,250 miles open for traffic; but in ten years there was an increase of 3,300 in the mileage; in 1888, there were 12,160 miles in operation; and in 1895, the total number had increased to 16,000. The largest of these lines—the Intercolonial and the Canadian-Pacific—owe their existence entirely to the federal movement.

The first, over 1,380 miles in length, was mainly a political and military one, constructed in accordance with a stipulation made by Nova Scotia and New Brunswick previous to the union. It cost over £8,000,000, and running as it does through the wilderness which separates Halifax from Quebec, it involved an annual loss to the Dominion Government for many years. Its prospects of commercial success are limited by the fact that there is no trade of any importance between Canada and the maritime provinces. It is much such a line, in fact, as we may expect to see here, when Western Australia—following their example—bargains for a junction between Perth and Adelaide as one of the conditions on which she will consent to join the other colonies.

The Canadian Pacific line, which added British Columbia and the North-West Territory to the Dominion, was also a political and military one. It is a work that Canada may well be proud of, and shows the sceptic what federation can do for a country—in more ways than one. When the Government undertook it, it was supposed that its construction would not involve any additional taxation; but its cost to the country, amounting to over £20,000,000 in money, land grants, guarantees, and surveys, exceeded their calculations to such an extent that additional taxation became inevitable. We are not likely to have any parallel line here in point of scenery and engineering; but it is conceivable that, for political, military, and general reasons combined, our Federal Government may some day entertain proposals from the syndicates that will shadow it for trunk lines to Perth, Port Darwin, and the head of the great gulf in Queensland, with extensions, of course, in many profitable directions.

THE AVERAGE AUSTRALIAN.

Projects of this kind look very visionary on paper; but with Canadian experience before our eyes, they should not be omitted from our estimate of probabilities. There is as great a field for them here as there was in Canada, and the arguments that prevailed there might be urged here with at least equal force. The six Governments have already shown what they are capable of doing in the construction of ambitious public works, and their example would not be lost on a Federal Government, with unlimited power of taxing and borrowing. It would soon begin to show its capabilities in the same direction; and unless it did, its proceedings would not have much attraction for the average Australian, who is much too practical in his notions to be impressed by vague declamation about his country's future greatness. What evidence of greatness would there be in his eyes if things were to go on, after federation, in much the same sleepy fashion as they do now? It would not interest him greatly to know that border duties had been abolished, and that the post-offices, ocean-beacons, quarantines, and other matters of the kind had been amalgamated, if everything continued as dull as ditch-water. Such changes would be made without leaving any visible or tangible mark behind them; and where, then, he would ask, does the greatness come in?

A NEW AUSTRALIA.

Let him see, on the other hand, a Federal Government with a few such spending departments as the thirteen they have in Canada—e.g., a Minister for Railways, another for Public Works, a third for Militia and Defence, a fourth for Marine and Fisheries, and a fifth for Agriculture—and he would then admit that, with good luck and plenty of money, there was a chance of his seeing a new Australia, without going to Paraguay for it. The prospect would operate so powerfully on the average Australian, from north to south and from east to west, that there would be no difficulty in securing the hearty co-operation of Queensland and Western Australia. And he might fairly say that, unless some energetic movement all along the line is to be made, by means of united resources, it is hard to see how national greatness can be attained, in our time, by a mere change of constitution. Major-General Hutton told us, not long ago, that no country ever became great except through war—a very natural sentiment for a soldier. But that road not being open to us at present, what other have we got to travel by but that of public works and public spirit? It was not federation alone, but the federation railways, that made Canada what she is.

FEDERAL.

FEDERAL POLICY.

Viewed from this standpoint, the arguments we have heard on the railway question may be very good so far as they go, but they do not go quite far enough—in fact, they only go half-way. We are all in the dark about it until we know what the policy of the first Federal Government is likely to be. If it should not include the construction of any large public works, then there would be some reason on the side of those who are afraid to part with the railways. Each colony might well be left to manage its own, as now. But a national administration of affairs, which would not include railway works on a large scale, is barely conceivable in a country trained to look upon them as the most important branch of public business.

Probably the indifference that has prevailed so long on the general subject may be traced to the fact that federation has hitherto been put before the public as a mere change in the form of government, without any certainty attaching to it in the shape of material advantages. The state of feeling would have been very different if it had been understood, from the first, that the change of constitution would be immediately followed by an immense upheaval throughout the colonies, giving to trade and industry a stimulus they have never felt since the discovery of the gold-fields.

V.—11th March.

OLD PARLIAMENTARY HANDS.

The fact that the electors of New South Wales did not go outside members or ex-members, except in one instance, for a representative at the Convention, may be taken to mean that, in their opinion, well-known members of Parliament are the best men for the purpose. They have mostly chosen "old Parliamentary hands," whose names have become familiar in their mouths as household words. The additional fact that they have not recognised any party lines in their choice, shows that they wished to get the best men they could for a special occasion.

THE ENEMY.

If the movement has really become a national one, and if the desired ends are to be attained in reasonable time, the good work begun by the electors should be carried through in the same spirit. It will be so in the Convention, no doubt; but when the Draft Bill adopted by that body gets into the hands of the Assembly here, it will necessarily have to encounter a good deal of opposition; and strenuous efforts may be expected in some quarters either to defeat it, or to insert such amendments in it as may have the effect of defeating it, even after the labours of the Convention are over. In war, no good general will affect to despise the enemy, or to neglect any precautions to guard against surprise or treachery, or any of those extraordinary accidents by which the best and most carefully considered plans are so often upset in a moment. There are signs of danger already ahead. If the Premier, for instance, should leave for England before the Bill has been considered in both Houses, opportunities would be afforded for undermining it which might not otherwise arise. And even if he should not leave it to the mercy of the winds and waves, it would be none too safe at any time.

Oft expectation fails, and most oft there
Where most it promises.

CÆSAR AND POMPEY.

Notwithstanding the defection of Queensland, the Convention of '97 promises to stand some comparison in point of capacity with that of '91. In point of number, at any rate, there is not much difference between them. There were fifty-one delegates in the latter, including three from New Zealand; there will be fifty representatives in the present one. But although the first lot were delegates appointed by their Parliaments, and the second are representatives chosen by the people, the leading spirits of the two are, with few exceptions, of essentially the same mould—that is to say, they are all Parliamentary veterans. The similarity of choice on the two occasions is remarkable, and it points to the conclusion that, if the selection had been left to the Parliaments, as before, there would not have been very much difference in the results.

EXPERIENTIA DOCET.

The present selection would have been all the better if it had contained more of those men who had worked on the former Convention. The experience gained on that occasion, and, above all, the insight acquired into the mysteries of federal constitutions, would have been of signal service in the coming debates. The subject is one not to be mastered in a hurry, as the speeches delivered during the recent campaign abundantly proved, and that in more than one instance. There was a good deal in some of them to show that the speakers had either forgotten the debates of the last Convention, or never read them, or mixed up their recollections of them with those of the local Hansard. Perhaps it would be too much to expect from a candidate that he should digest the contents of the big folio volume in which these debates are officially recorded; but undoubtedly the task would prove a short road to the subject for anyone who desired to make himself at home in it. He would find himself in the same position as the college student who has gone through the five books of Euclid as a preliminary grind to his mathematical studies.

THE DRAFT BILL.

The new members of Convention will see the necessity for a little cramming of this kind, when they consider that its proceedings will be based on the Draft Bill adopted by their predecessors. No one is likely to propose that it should be cast aside in favour of some new basis, to be thought out by some inspired person in the dark, like Paradise Lost. There would not be any great difficulty in drafting a constitution; but if the door were once opened to amateur draftsmen, the Convention might be flooded with their productions. The adoption of the Draft, as a basis of discussion, would save a great deal of time that would otherwise be spent to little purpose. The Convention of that year sat from March 2 to April 1 discussing general principles. On the latter day it began the consideration of the Draft Bill brought up by the drafting committee, and finished it on the 9th. By tackling it at once, there would not be any need to devote a month to another all-round-the-compass discussion of general principles.

to

MOSAIC WORK.

It is not, however, by any means to be supposed that the Bill is beyond criticism, as some of its admirers seem inclined to think. It is open to a good deal of it, though not of the kind that has been most loudly and persistently urged in certain quarters. The framers of it, to my mind, made a cardinal mistake when they looked for inspiration to the constitution of the United States, and adopted not only its leading principles, but even its terms of art. That plan would be well enough if the country wished to pave the way to a Republic, and to be ready, at a given signal, to substitute an elected President for a Governor-General. But as it has not yet shown any sign of even a leaning in that direction, the plain course is to put American principles on one side for the present, and take strictly English ones instead. It would avoid a lot of complication in the practical working of our constitution. The Bill was constructed like a piece of Mosaic work, some of its provisions being taken from the American constitution and some from the Canadian. But the two systems are so radically opposed to each other that they cannot be amalgamated in practice, however nicely they may seem to dovetail on paper. Is it not possible to frame a constitution with some pretension to originality about it—original so far, at least, that it would not be open to the imputation of being patch-work?

VI.—18th March.

AN OBJECT LESSON.

They that have eyes to see have a good opportunity at the present time for observing the working of federal machinery, particularly as regards the constitution, character, and policy of the Upper House. The fifty members of the Convention who are about to meet in Adelaide will form just about the same sort of body, so far as policy is concerned, that we may expect to see in the second Chamber, when the constitution is in full swing. Each colony sends the ten best men it can get, in the opinion of electors, to represent its interests; and each man goes forth as the champion of his own particular division of the territory. His duty is to see that no clause in the constitution to be framed shall be so worded as to afford even a loophole for attack upon it, on the part of jealous or covetous neighbours; to see also that, in the event of any hostile intrigues taking place among them, it shall not be swamped or overpowered by unholy combinations; and further that, in the distribution of revenue as well as the division of power, no unfair advantage shall be taken of its resources, and no injustice done to its claims.

BULLS AND FROGS.

To secure these ends, the members will probably accept as an undoubted maxim of the federal system that each colony should have an equal number of representatives in the second Chamber. They have learned from their "Federalist" that this allotment of representation was adopted in the American constitution, because it was the only means by which the smaller States could be induced to join the Union. It was opposed by the larger States in the first instance, and they conceded it only when they had no choice left. Each State, moreover, being a perfectly independent community, there seemed to be some colour for a claim which at first sight appeared to be extravagantly unfair.

The delegates will not, probably, stop to consider that the position here, so far from being analogous to that of the American States, might be described as quite the reverse. Our small colonies, as they are called, are not in the least degree afraid of being swamped or overpowered by their larger neighbours; simply because they have little to lose, while they have everything to gain, by uniting with them.

On the other hand, in the large colonies, which think they have something to lose and not so much to gain by the process, many level-headed people appear to entertain a good deal of suspicion about the ultimate designs of their small friends in the south. They have not scrupled to proclaim their fears on that point openly and in the strongest terms; so much so, in fact, that their view of New South Wales reminds us of the position of a bull whale surrounded by swordfishes and threshers. Although they were ignominiously defeated in the general election—

Let this be put upon their graves,
They did their level best.

POLITICAL INTRIGUES.

It seems to be largely taken for granted that in every movement towards federation there will be a succession of intrigues on the part of the southern politicians, in which they will be aided by the western, for the purpose of acting in concert against New South Wales. The choice of Adelaide as a place of meeting, without any reference to our Government, is quoted as an instance. Movements of this kind, by the way, are highly suggestive of the politics of chessplayers, when desperate efforts are made to give checkmate with the knight, the bishop, and a pawn or two.

But

But in this instance there does not seem to be anything more than suspicion to go upon. The delegates of Western Australia, having so short a time at their disposal for the journey, were naturally anxious that the place of meeting should be the nearest to them; and an equally natural feeling of courtesy would be sufficient to account for the action of the other Governments. If it were really the case, as suggested, that the three secretly combined for the purpose of snatching an unfair advantage from Victoria and New South Wales, it would certainly be advisable to watch their proceedings in future with some care.

THE UPPER HOUSE.

Returning to the question of the Upper House, it will be interesting to compare the conclusions arrived at by the Convention on this subject with those of its predecessor. The recent elections gave no substantial clue to the opinions of the electors on its composition; but the candidates generally appeared to favour the scheme set out in the Draft Bill, as to equality of State representation, substituting election by the people for election by the local Parliament. The proposal to give an equal number of members being one of the points in which the Draft Bill follows the lead of the American Constitution, without regard to the very different circumstances of the two countries, there is no reason why the question should not be reconsidered, in the light of surrounding facts. If we look at the table of figures representing the territory and population of the six colonies at the close of last year, it is difficult to see how the claim for equality can be justified:—

	Square miles.	Population.
Tasmania	26,215	166,113
Victoria	87,884	1,174,888
New South Wales	310,700	1,297,640
Queensland	668,497	472,179
South Australia	903,690	360,203
Western Australia	975,920	137,966
	<hr/>	<hr/>
	2,972,906	3,608,989

NUTS TO CRACK.

In the case of Tasmania, at any rate, the proposition is reduced to an absurdity. The case was well put by a Tasmanian settler, in a letter I received the other day:—"Here's an island, about as large as one of your sheep runs, with a Government big enough for Russia, and a national debt to match. Why England ever allowed it anything more than local government, is a question I am unable to answer." Seeing that New South Wales and Victoria alone can face each other on equal terms as to population, common sense and justice seem to combine in condemning the doctrine of equality as untenable.

It is not so easy to see how the principle of election by the people can be applied to the Upper House. The adoption of large electorates would not meet the difficulty, because the member for an electorate, however large it might be, would not be a member for the whole colony, as he ought to be. If the elections could be carried out on the same plan as those for the Convention, the difficulty would be got over to a great extent, though not wholly; because the members would only represent majorities even then. And again, it could hardly be expected that the men best qualified to represent the colony as a whole, would be anxious to canvas such gigantic electorates as the five colonies on the mainland.

VII.—26th March.

CANADIAN VIEWS.

It is worth while to note the fact—because it seems to have escaped notice—that when the Canadian statesmen were laying down the lines of their Dominion Government in 1864, they rejected the constitution of the United States as a model on which to frame it. On the other hand, when our statesmen met in the Convention of 1891 for a similar purpose, they virtually adopted it. This little fact is a remarkable one, and deserves to be borne in mind for many reasons.

In the first place, the Canadians, being on the spot, and having ample opportunities for observation, may be taken to have known a great deal more about the American system than our men, whose knowledge of it was practically confined to what they had read about it. In the second place, although one of the most powerful provinces in Canada was occupied by the descendants of an alien race, who in previous years had given many proofs of their sympathy with American institutions, and moreover had, in 1837, broken out in rebellion against the British Government, there was no evidence of any faith in those institutions, or of any desire to imitate or copy them. In the third place, although there were many considerations which might have led strangers to predict a very different result—such as the intimate relations between the two peoples to which social and commercial intercourse had given rise, and the existence of a party in Canada favouring annexation—none of these circumstances had the smallest weight in determining the ultimate form and character of the Canadian federation.

A FEDERAL MIXTURE.

One would suppose that the significance of this fact would not have been lost sight of in the last Convention. It was equivalent to a deliberate judgment of the Canadians on the merits of the American Union, as a guide in framing one for themselves, and that after it had been at work for nearly eighty years. The case was summed up in a sentence by Sir John Macdonald, when he said of the resolutions arrived at in the conference of delegates at Quebec:—"I am strongly of opinion that we have, in a great measure, avoided in this system, which we propose for the adoption of the people of Canada, the defects which time and events have shown to exist in the American constitution."

What

What the special defects were which they endeavoured to avoid, may be seen by comparing the two constitutions. The Canadian statesmen began by discarding the idea of setting up a Republic with an elected President, and substituted a federal union of their four chief provinces under the Crown, "with a constitution similar in principle to that of the United Kingdom." The task which they set themselves, of adapting the principles of the British constitution to a federal form of government—in other words, mixing up federal and monarchical theories—was not an easy one; and in the effort to accomplish it they were forced to depart not only from the American precedent, but in a great measure from every other.

GLORIFIED MUNICIPALITIES.

The Dominion Government, in fact, is a federal one rather in appearance than in reality. The provincial Governments are so completely overshadowed by it that they are lost to the view of the outside spectator. All he can clearly distinguish is an ambitious structure, framed and decorated in close imitation of the Houses at Westminster, but bearing no resemblance to those at Washington. Sir John Macdonald's original conception of the true system needed for the country was one Parliament exercising supreme power, with enlarged municipal institutions in each province—in other words, seven "glorified municipalities" in place of seven provincial Legislatures. As a matter of form, this theory was not carried out, since the provinces retained their separate Legislatures as before; but as a matter of fact, they do not possess anything like the power which has made the States so conspicuous an element in the American Union.

The essential feature of a Federal Government is, of course, the House in which the States or provinces are represented; but the seven provinces which make up the Dominion of Canada are not represented as such in the Senate of their Parliament. The fact that the members of that body are nominated by the Crown—that is, by the political head of the Government—shows that they are not intended to represent them; for how can nominees of the Government be their representatives, in any sense?

STATE RIGHTS.

The delegates at Quebec made short work of the question of State Rights. It had led to the civil war in the United States, which came to an end in '65, soon after they were in session; and as they could not be blind to the dangerous tendencies of the doctrine of sovereign powers, they naturally excluded it from their scheme of a federal union. There was no clamour for equality of representation on the part of the several provinces; for one thing, there was no foundation in fact for it, owing to the relative disproportion of population among them. They were in much the same condition as ourselves, two of their provinces having a comparatively large population, while the others were very thinly peopled. The census of 1861 showed their position as follows:—

Upper Canada	1,396,091
Lower "	1,111,566
Nova Scotia...	330,857
New Brunswick	202,047
Newfoundland	122,635
Prince Edward Island	80,857
								3,244,053

LUMPING THE STATES.

Ten years later this total had increased to 3,833,000. The fact that there was no contention among the delegates on the subject of equal representation speaks volumes for their common sense; for what could have been more ridiculous than a claim from Prince Edward Island to the same number of members as Upper or Lower Canada? The claim would, no doubt, have been made, if the delegates had shown themselves ready to listen to it. The absurdity of equal representation was avoided by lumping together the small provinces, known as the Maritime Provinces, and creating three territorial divisions, of which they made one, with an equal representation. The Union Act of '67 gave each division twenty-four members.

Now, if we were to lump together Queensland, Western, South Australia, and Tasmania, their united population would amount to 1,136,461, and then it would be less than that of either New South Wales or Victoria. Looking at the matter from this point of view, it is not easy to see why the claim of equal representation should be so readily conceded as it was in the last Convention.

THE CANADIAN SENATE.

The nomination principle has grown into so much disfavour here of late years, that one may well ask how the Canadian delegates came to the conclusion that a nominated House would suit the purposes of a federal constitution better than an elective one. They were in a particularly good position to compare the merits of the two systems, having their own experience of both, as well as that of the United States, to guide them. The old Legislative Council of Canada, created by the Union Act of 1840, was a nominated one; but in 1856 its constitution was altered in order to please the people, who preferred an elective one. Their experience of the latter system was so unsatisfactory that the delegates in 1864 decided, by an overwhelming majority, not to repeat the experiment. The Liberal leaders were the loudest in condemning it; but both parties were of one mind as to the impolicy of having two Houses elected by the same constituencies. Such a system was considered an inevitable source of conflict between the two, not to be avoided by any qualifying conditions as to the franchise or the electorates, or any provisions for meeting deadlocks.

RESPONSIBLE GOVERNMENT.

With the successful experience of the United States in the matter of a Senate before them, it might be supposed that they would have been tempted to follow that example, and to leave the election of their senators to the provincial Legislatures. But they found themselves blocked there also; for having determined on continuing the system of responsible government with which they had been afflicted since 1840, they held that it would not be possible to work it in conjunction with an Upper House of such a character as that. The danger of conflict between the Houses would be intensified to such a degree that the federal structure would never be able to bear the strain, and either one thing or the other would have to go.

Their political sagacity was not at fault in this instance. They had seen enough of American politics in their day to justify their conclusion, and later experience goes a long way to confirm it. Mr. Bryce's account of the relations between the two Houses at Washington enables us to see what the position of a responsible government would be, under such circumstances as he describes.

BRYCE ON THE TWO HOUSES.

"Collisions between the two Houses are frequent. Each is jealous and combative. Each is prone to alter the bills that come from the other; and the Senate in particular knocks about remorselessly those favourite children of the House—the appropriation bills. The fact that one House has passed a bill goes but a little way in inducing the other to pass it; the Senate would reject twenty House bills as readily as one. . . . In a contest the Senate usually, though not invariably, gets the better of the House. It is smaller, and can, therefore, more easily keep its majority together; its members are more experienced, and it has the great advantage of being permanent, whereas the House is a transient body. The Senate can hold out, because if it does not get its way at once it may do so when a new House comes up to Washington. The House cannot afford to wait, because the hour of its own dissolution is at hand. Besides, while the House does not know the Senate from inside, the Senate, many of whose members have sat in the House, knows all the 'ins and outs' of its rival, can gauge its strength, and play upon its weakness."

SIR SAMUEL GRIFFITH.

Some consciousness of the difficulty that might arise in connection with responsible government seems to have been felt by the framers of the Draft Bill, when defining the functions of the Federal Executive. They provided for seven ministers, who might sit in either House, but were not required to do so. Their presence in Parliament would not be a matter of course, as it is under the present system; it would be a matter of choice for the Parliament to decide. The opinion held by the draftsmen on this point may be taken to be explained in Sir Samuel Griffith's "Notes on Australian Federation," published by the Queensland Government last year:—

"When, therefore, it is a question of applying this system to a federal commonwealth, the rule should be so to frame the constitution that responsible government may—not that it must—find a place in it. . . . Would the states, as states, be content to be bound by the executive acts of Ministers merely because they possessed the confidence of the popular House? And if they insisted on withholding that confidence, and refused to provide the necessary supplies until a change was made, it is hard to see what alternative there would be to a change of Ministers. . . . A succession of such difficulties would, conceivably, lead to the adoption in practice of some other mode of determining their tenure of office."

WENTWORTH.

The Canadian delegates were not quite such fools as they looked when they chose what seemed to them to be the lesser of two evils. Not being able to see any way by which responsible government could be carried on with a Senate of the American type, grand as it was on its native ground, and having definitely abjured the elective Upper House, what other course was open to them but the one they took? It is a curious fact in political history that, at the very time when Canadian statesmen had resolved to abandon nomination for election, our own leaders decided in favour of the former. In the debate on the second reading of the Constitution Bill in '53, Wentworth made some remarks on the subject which are not without significance at the present moment:—

"An elective Upper House is as yet a matter of mere theory, so far as the British Empire is concerned. . . . If Sydney and the other towns were thrown into one, two, or even three great electoral divisions, the rural population would be swamped, and the urban population would be all predominant. The inevitable result of such a combination as this would be that the Upper House would be more democratic than the Lower. We should then have a double democracy, or a democracy in the Upper House for a revision of the deliberations of the more conservative element in the Lower House. Now, what chance would there be that these two bodies would pull different ways on any popular question? They could coerce the Governor into giving the Royal assent to any measure, however destructive."

THE STRUGGLE FOR MASTERY.

"Whatever may be the desire of any member of this House, or of any of the people of the country at large, to have a body among us assimilated to the Senate of the United States, it is impossible, for the reasons I have stated. If there was within us a federal principle which could be represented in the same way, who would think of introducing such a constitution into this colony?"

colony? The great and insuperable objection to all these elective bodies is that they are inflexible; their numbers are unalterable, and can neither be added to nor diminished. The third estate of the realm can exercise no authority over them, but the authority of dissolution. That is not sufficient to preserve the vessel of the State from wreck; the elective element, doubly represented as it would be in any such constitution, must and will become too powerful to be controlled."

VIII.—1st April.

CONVENTIONAL IDEAS.

It is truly refreshing to observe the spirit of conciliation, as it is called, in which the members of the Convention have met together in Adelaide. The representatives of once jealous, if not hostile, colonies have approached each other like Frenchmen after a long absence. Embrassons-nous! they cry, and rush into each other's arms. No more intercolonial conflicts after this. No more unholy combinations against a powerful neighbour. Under the sobering influence of open-air concerts, good dinners, and plentiful champagne, they have laid aside all the petty provincial feelings which have hitherto distinguished them in their local Parliaments, and addressed themselves to their work in an atmosphere of universal brotherhood. Compromise is the order of the day. The small colonies have got all they want, with scarce the trouble of asking for it. They are to have equal representation in the Upper House, and with it they are to have the trade of Riverina and Broken Hill by the abolition of preferential rates.

COMPROMISES.

Compromise is undoubtedly a good thing, and often a necessary thing as well; in fact, all civilised life is made up of compromises. At the same time, it is a proof of weakness, and therefore ought to be narrowly watched and guarded against as far as possible. Nothing is more common in political history than to find some discreditable thing explained on the ground that it was a compromise. There is a remarkable instance of the kind in that inhuman clause in the constitution of the United States, which guaranteed the State rights of the slave-holding sections:—"No person held to service or labour in one State, under the laws thereof, escaping into another, shall, in consequence of any law or regulation therein, be discharged from such service or labour, but shall be delivered up on claim of the party to whom such service or labour may be due."

WHAT IT COST.

That is a good specimen of a compromise; but what did it cost the United States before they had done with it? It was agreed to by the delegates of the northern states in the Convention which framed the Union simply to pacify their southern neighbours, who relied on the "carpet bag" argument as a means of obtaining it. Judge Story, the learned commentator, skips over the ground with the penitent remark that "many sacrifices of opinion and feeling are to be found" in the constitution, made by some States to please others. And the Convention which was responsible for these sacrifices apologised for them by saying that "the constitution which we now present is the result of a spirit of amity, and of that mutual deference and concession which the peculiarity of our political situation rendered indispensable." In plain English, if they had not been driven into a corner, they never would have made the concessions.

They basely yielded upon compromise
That which their noble ancestors achiev'd with blows.

LEGISLATIVE UNION.

The more closely we look into the American and Canadian constitutions, the more clearly it appears that a "federation under the Crown" is a very different thing from a federation of independent States. It is common enough to talk of the two systems, American and Canadian, as if they were essentially the same, differing only in certain particulars. So far from that being the case, the fact is that the Canadian Government is not a federation at all, in the proper meaning of the term. It is nothing more than a legislative union of its provinces—an enlarged edition of the union effected in 1840, when Upper and Lower Canada were united by an Act of the British Parliament.

A FEDERAL PHANTOM.

What else could it be, when its framers found themselves virtually compelled to form their constitution on the lines of the British? With a Governor-General appointed by the Crown, an Upper House composed of nominee members, and responsible government to work the machinery, they had as close an imitation of it as they could well get. But as there is nothing whatever of a federal nature in the British Constitution, so there is nothing whatever of it, except in name, in the Canadian. The provinces are not represented in it, as provinces; their rights, as separate and independent political entities, are not protected by members appointed or elected by them; although their powers, except for strictly local purposes, are transferred to the Dominion Government. What becomes, then, of "the fundamental rule of a federation," as the learned call it, that every law submitted to a Federal Parliament must receive the assent of a majority of the people, and also of a majority of the States? It is complied with there in name and appearance, but not in fact. Not one of the provinces has the smallest chance of asserting itself in the Dominion Senate, either in support of or in opposition to any law that may be passing through it.

Goldwin Smith, who lives in Toronto, has given us a pen-and-ink sketch of the Canadian Senate, which deserves to be remembered while we are forming one for ourselves: "The Senate is treated with ironical respect as the Upper House, and surrounded with derisive state. The decorations of its chamber surpass those of the Commons Chamber, as the decorations of the Lord's Chamber surpass those of the Commons Chamber at Westminster. The members sit in gilded chairs, are styled honorable, and on all ceremonial occasions take precedence of the holders of real power. But these, like the observance paid to the Governor-General and his vicegerents, are merely the trappings of impotence.

"The Senate neither initiates nor controls important legislation. After meeting for the session, it adjourns to wait for the arrival of Bills from the Commons. About once in a session it is allowed to reject or amend some measure of secondary importance, by way of showing that it lives. . . . At the end of the session, the measures passed in the Lower House are hurried through it, with hardly time enough for deliberation to save the semblance of respect for its authority. Nobody dreams of looking to it for the second thought of the nation, or imagines that, in any political emergency, it could serve as the sheet-anchor of the State."

AN ELECTIVE SENATE.

Clearly this is not federation, but union. And the question arises, can the Australian colonies accomplish anything more than a similar union? When they resolve to have nothing to do with nomination by the Crown, or even nomination by local Parliaments, as a means of providing an Upper House, will they then obtain the model chamber considered the crowning glory of all federalism? Will they not be led as far astray in one direction, as the Canadians have been in another? A House elected by the colonies, voting as single electorates, would not represent the colonies, whatever we might say about it, but simply the majorities in each of them; in other words, it would represent the people, and would be composed of much the same class of men as those in the Lower House. The election, as we have recently seen, would be mainly in the hands of city and suburban electors. Does not this, by the way, show the absurdity of equal representation?

There would, probably, be this element of difference between the two Houses: the lower would contain all the most active and best known politicians in each colony—all the men, in fact, who have held office and who still aspire to hold it; while the rank and file of each party—the men who had no chance of success in that way, and little chance of obtaining even a seat in it—would seek election in the Upper House.

THE TWO CHAMBERS.

The result of this arrangement would soon show itself in the character and reputation of the two bodies. While one would become more and more predominant, the other would sink into comparative insignificance. And then the Federal Parliament would present the very reverse of the American Congress, in which the Senate forms the great centre of attraction to all observers. The short reason why it does so is, that the Government does not sit in the House of Representatives, and consequently a seat in the latter is not such an object of ambition as it is here. Whichever party may be in power, Republican or Democratic, there is never any difficulty in finding a crowd of able, wealthy, and distinguished men to fill vacancies in the Senate; while the plan of nomination by the State Legislature renders it an easy matter to secure the appointment of their candidates. The prize itself is sufficient to ensure competition of the best kind—a seat in the Senate being considered, next to the Presidency, "the highest prize of American ambition."

DUAL REPRESENTATION.

Another matter which will necessarily tend to affect the character of both Houses requires to be considered. The Draft Bill does not leave it open to a member of any local Parliament to become a candidate for election to either House in the federal one—in other words, it prohibits dual representation. Under that system, it may be considered tolerably certain that nearly every seat in the latter would be occupied by some member of the local Legislature. For one thing, a free railway pass has become such a powerful electioneering agent nowadays, and gives such an advantage to him who has it, that it practically restricts the choice of electors to the lucky men who can show the golden talisman; and for that reason the privilege ought, in common fairness, to be either abolished during an election for the colony, or extended to candidates who do not possess it.

ALL THE YEAR ROUND.

Many other peculiar circumstances will probably arise out of a federal constitution. In the first place, if all the Parliaments are to be triennial, we shall either have a general election for the federal and local Parliaments every three years, if they are to be run together; or else there will be one every eighteen months or so, the local and the federal elections taking place alternately. With the chance of a dissolution thrown in, there may peradventure be two general elections in one year. Imagine the whirl of political excitement in which we may some day be caught, and think of the mental strain involved in the study of federal-cum-provincial stump-oratory!

In the second place, if the local Parliaments are to continue the present custom of a winter session, the Federal Parliament will be obliged to sit in the summer time—which would give Tasmania another chance for the federal capital. They cannot have concurrent sessions, for the simple reason that the leading politicians and their tails would be found in both; and in that case we shall have parliamentary debates going on nearly all the year round. Another Another consideration occurs here : How would Ministers be able to get through their work, if they should have seats in both Parliaments? We are led to understand that even now the demand made on their constitutional energies by office work, night sittings, and the preparation of Cabinet measures, too often reaches the point of exhaustion. What would become of those who might hold two portfolios, one federal and the other provincial? Would a double salary, with double privileges, enable them to stand the strain?

PROFESSIONAL POLITICIANS.

To obviate these inconveniences, would it not be as well to prohibit dual representation altogether in express terms? The system made such an unpleasant impression on the public mind in Canada that, after five years' experience of it, it was extinguished by Act of Parliament in 1872. Goldwin Smith says that the change was not one for the better, because it increased the demand on the not very abundant stock of legislative capacity in the country, and lowered the quality of the provincial Legislatures. Bourinot, on the other hand, tells us that the local Assemblies are filled for the most part with an excellent class of men, and that the provinces are not inclined to have their members under the influence of the Dominion Parliament. In his latest production, however, he expresses a similar opinion to that of the Professor.

With 215 members in the House of Commons, and 310 in their local assemblies, or 525 altogether, the demand for politicians is certainly considerable. But here we have already a total of 512 elected members in our local Parliaments, and will probably have some 100 in the federal, or a total of over 600 altogether.

DEADLOCKS AGAIN.

The dreadful picture drawn by Mr. Reid, in a speech at the Convention, of a Federal Parliament suddenly exploding at some unhappy moment and scattering ruin over the whole continent, as the consequence of a deadlock, recalls to mind some lines by Emerson :

Some of your ills you have cured ;
The worst you still have surviv'd ;
But what torments of grief you've endur'd
From evils that never arriv'd.

We have not yet seen our Parliament suddenly exploding under such circumstances, and therefore have to draw on our imaginations to realise the scene. But I can point out a much simpler and more effectual means of getting out of a deadlock than that of a general election all over Australia. The discussion reminds me of an anecdote told by Greville in his "Memoirs," as an illustration of the Duke of Wellington's mode of dealing with similar problems :

"During the battles of the Pyrenees, General Cole proposed to the Duke and his staff to go and eat a very good dinner he had ordered for himself at his house in the village he occupied, as he could not leave his division. They went and dined, and then the Duke went into the next room and threw himself upon a bed without a mattress, on the boards of which he presently went to sleep, with his dispatch-box for a pillow. Fitzroy Somerset (afterwards Lord Raglan) and the aides-de-camp slept on chairs, or on the floor, scattered about.

"Presently arrived, in great haste and alarm, two officers of artillery, Captain Cairne and another, who begged to see the Duke ; the former saying that he had just brought up some guns from the rear, and that he had suddenly found himself close to the enemy, and did not know what to do. They went in and woke the Duke, who desired him to be brought in. The officer entered and told his story, when the Duke said, very composedly, 'Well, sir, you are certainly in a very bad position, and you must get out of it the best way you can!' turned round, and was asleep again in a moment."

Would not that do ?

IX.—8th April.

A SUM IN PROPORTION.

"THE result of the deliberations of all collective bodies," wrote Hamilton of the American constitution, "must necessarily be a compound as well of the errors and prejudices, as of the good sense and wisdom of the individuals of whom they are composed." This is an undeniably sound proposition, which it is just as well to bear in mind while we are considering the labours of the Adelaide Convention. The main question is, what sort of proportion will the errors and prejudices bear to the good sense and wisdom? That cannot be answered until their labours have been brought to a head in the shape of a Draft Bill ; but it may be admitted that, so far as they have gone, there has been a plentiful display of both sets of ingredients. Of course the errors and prejudices will strike everyone much more forcibly than the good sense and wisdom ; and it is quite conceivable, too, that what one man will consider sensible and wise, another will look upon as erroneous and prejudiced. Everything depends upon your point of view.

CLOSED DOORS.

Take for instance, the squabble—fancy a Convention squabbling?—about closed doors during the sittings of the three committees. Was it error and prejudice to insist on closing them, or to contend that they should be thrown open? Sir Henry Parkes said on one occasion that, when he was on a visit to Washington, he was amazed to find the doors of the Senate chamber locked, while its members were discussing the provisions of a treaty ; and he gave that incident, I think, as a specimen of a very anti-democratic custom that had grown up in the States. It would naturally seem so to the English politician, accustomed to the open doors of Parliament House and to public meeting of all kinds; but there is nothing in it at all inconsistent with American democracy. It is a maxim of our common law that "the law of England abhors secrecy"; but democracy in the States seems to have a decidedly strong relish for it.

and

A SECRET AFFAIR.

The doors were locked when the delegates of the thirteen States met in the Convention of 1787 to frame a Constitution; and from that time to this, no one has had any knowledge of what took place during their deliberations, except in outline. They followed the practice set by previous Conventions from the time that the colonies threw off their allegiance to England; and the practice was observed by other bodies of the same nature assembled in later times. It never occurred to those early democrats that newspaper reporters ought to be present when they met to frame a constitution. Their course of action was probably grumbled at by many persons who thought that, when the interests of the people were at stake, they ought to know everything that was going on from day to day. But Washington and his friends had no manner of doubt as to the good sense and wisdom of their procedure on so solemn an occasion. What the people were concerned to know was, not what any delegate said in debate, but what sort of constitution he had helped to frame. And it was absurd to suppose, they thought, that men entrusted with so delicate and difficult a task could do justice to it, while exposed to a running fire of criticism in the Press.

THE CAUCUS.

The practice thus established in the earliest days of democratic government soon got into vogue, and kept its ground to such an extent that it now prevails in every branch of legislative business. The rules of the House of Representatives provide for secret sessions, under certain circumstances; the Senate holds a secret session whenever it proceeds to consider the ratification of a treaty or an appointment; the President and his Cabinet frame their policy without reference to either. More powerful, perhaps, than they, the legislative caucus, which has been in power for nearly a century, meets in secret to determine the fate of men and measures, even in the most critical times. It has transferred the decision of every question from the halls of Congress to its own unknown corner, and has defeated the policy of the constitution by placing the control of legislation in the hands of men who may, in fact, be a minority. The choice of a Speaker of the House, or a senator in a State Legislature, is settled by the omnipotent and irresponsible caucus in its own way; and the formal act of election in the House is nothing more than the registration of its dark decree.

"BUNCOMBE."

The precedent set by the American Conventions was followed by the thirty-three delegates who met in Quebec in 1864 to form a constitution for the united provinces of Canada. Before they set to work, they discussed the question whether they should sit with closed or open doors, and they decided that the public should not be admitted to their deliberations. One of their reasons was, that public discussions would inevitably involve such an amount of "buncombe" eloquence as to defeat the object they had in view. They wanted to get through their work without any waste of time, and to save themselves the labour of making brilliant speeches from day to day—or the greater labour of listening to them. Another reason which weighed with them was, that the privilege of absolutely free discussion could only be secured by secrecy; for otherwise any delegate might find himself censured in the newspapers, on the ground that he had advocated in the Convention a doctrine he had formerly denounced, or condemned a principle to which he had solemnly pledged himself in his own province.

By adopting this plan, they succeeded, in less than three weeks, in fixing the terms of a confederation in seventy-two resolutions, to be submitted to their Parliaments. But is it probable that they could have done that, or anything like it, had they opened their doors to the public? Certainly, they were not representatives elected by their constituencies to frame a constitution; they were simply commissioners appointed by their respective Governments to draw up a report on the subject. But that difference in their position hardly effects the question at issue—which is the best method of transacting the business?

THE POWER OF FAD.

It must be admitted that, so far at least as despatch of business is concerned, the practice followed in America and in Canada contrasts favourably with our own. The Convention of 1891 was distinguished by the too evident desire of some delegates to address their constituents through the daily newspaper reports; and the same love of display may be seen in the present one. In each instance they seem to have largely misconceived their functions, by indulging in an extravagant amount of parliamentary speaking, and that on topics really foreign to the purpose of their meeting. This weakness manifests itself in the introduction of all the popular fads of the day, each of them elaborated with as much apparent earnestness as if the speaker stood on the hustings, and really believed in them.

THE REFERENDUM.

Take the Referendum as a specimen. It is hardly possible to conceive any proposal of the kind being seriously entertained here in connection with a federal constitution, for very obvious reasons, one of which is that it would be practically impossible to work it in such electorates as ours. We have just seen, for instance, that Queensland and Western Australia abandoned the idea of electing their representatives in the Convention, on the plan set out in the Enabling Acts of the other colonies—that is, by voting in one electorate—and substituted nomination by their Parliaments. This is a pretty clear proof that the system could not be worked by the federated colonies without an intolerable amount of inconvenience and expense. Besides

Besides that objection, there is the equally clear proof that the plan would not answer the end in view, afforded by our own experience in the late election. Large as the voting was, it did not represent forty per cent. of the total number of electors, and was mainly confined to Sydney and the country towns. The item of expense, too, cannot be overlooked. In this colony it is estimated at £20,000; and for the four colonies which indulged in the luxury of election, the total expenditure was probably not less than £50,000. The cost of a Referendum for the six colonies might be roughly put down at not much less than £60,000.

ALEXANDER HAMILTON.

In the face of these facts, fresh in every one's memory, the Convention was nevertheless urged to adopt this proposal as a means of restoring harmony between the two Houses, in the event of a deadlock arising between them. In a stream of impassioned eloquence, we are told, Mr. Reid described the horrors that might result in such a case, unless this particular "safety-valve" was inserted in the constitutional machinery.

Now let us look for a moment at the reason of the thing, apart from any local considerations. No democrat will question the authority of Alexander Hamilton, one of the founders of the American constitution, and one of the fathers of democracy, not only in his own country but in Europe. When the Union was in the first year of its existence, it was proposed that whenever any constitutional trouble might arise the question should be referred to the people, represented in a Convention to be elected for the purpose. This method of settling the difficulty was promptly condemned by him, for reasons which apply to the Referendum—of which he had conception as a constitutional doctrine—with still greater force than they did to the Convention.

HIS OBJECTIONS TO IT.

He admitted that, as the people are the only legitimate fountain of power, it seems strictly consonant to the republican theory to refer constitutional questions to that authority; and that there is force in the reasoning that a constitutional road to the decision of the people ought to be marked out and kept open, for certain great and extraordinary occasions. But, he said, there are insuperable objections to it as a provision, in all cases, for keeping the several branches of government within their proper limits.

In the first place, as every appeal to the people would imply some defect in the Government, frequent appeals would, in a great measure, deprive it of that respect which time bestows on everything, and without which the best of governments would not possess the requisite stability. Each of these appeals would, in effect, be an attack upon the constitution, weakening its hold on public opinion, and leaving it in the end like a beleaguered city, with so many breaches in its walls that its safety would be seriously threatened.

In the second place, the danger of disturbing the public tranquillity, by exciting public dissensions, was a still more serious objection to a frequent reference of constitutional questions to the decision of the people. Referring to their own experience in the States, he felt that, notwithstanding the success which had attended their Conventions, the experiments were of too ticklish a nature to be unnecessarily multiplied. They were held in the midst of external dangers, when the confidence felt by the people in their leaders stifled the ordinary difference of opinion on public questions, and when no party spirit connected with the changes to be made, or the abuses to be reformed, could mingle its leaven in the operation. But there would not be any equivalent security in times of peace, when the influence of party spirit would be everywhere at its height, filling every man with prejudice and passion, and blinding him to the real question for decision.

THE TWO HOUSES.

It does not appear that this most sagacious critic had any suspicion that the Senate would seek to enlarge its power at the expense of the representative House; the only apprehension he had was, that the two Houses would join in committing trespasses on the executive and the judiciary, and that appeals to the people would be resorted to as a means of resisting their inroads on the constitution. But his argument in the latter case applies with equal force to the former. The decisions which would probably result from such appeals, he said, would not answer the purpose of maintaining the constitutional equilibrium. Whether made by one side or the other, would each side enjoy equal advantage on the trial? The members of the Lower House are the more numerous of the two, and the nature of their public trust makes them more immediately the confidential guardians of their rights and liberties. They would be more in touch with the whole body of electors, than the members of a House created for the purpose of conserving those of the States. In such a conflict the public decision could never be expected to turn on the true merits of the question. It would inevitably be connected with the spirit of party and the war of classes. The passions, therefore, not the reason of the public, would sit in judgment.

A SINGLE HOUSE.

His views on the subject of a single House were expressed in a very few words, evidently written with a sense of the absurdity of such a scheme. He thought it would be inconsistent with all the principles of good government to entrust a single assembly with those powers which ought to reside in a national government. Either the machine, from the intrinsic feebleness of its structure, would moulder into pieces in spite of all our ill-judged efforts to prop it up, or by successive enlargements of its force and energy, as necessity might prompt, we should finally accumulate in a single body all the most important prerogatives of sovereignty; and so entail upon posterity one of the most execrable forms of government that human infatuation ever contrived. We should create in reality that very tyranny which its advocates appear to think is exercised by a second chamber.

THE SMALL STATES.

On another point of interest at the present moment, his opinions were equally strong. When pointing out the defects which existed in the confederation that existed up to the time of the Union, he dealt with the question of equal representation of the States. When the new constitution was being framed, the small States claimed this equality in both Houses, and it was only as a compromise that they were finally allowed it in the Senate. It is clear that, in the absence of necessity, he would not have consented even to that.

“Every idea of proportion, and every rule of fair representation, conspired to condemn a principle which gave to Rhode Island an equal weight in the scale of power with Massachusetts, and to Delaware an equal voice in the national deliberations with Pennsylvania. Its operation contradicts that fundamental maxim of republican government, which requires that the sense of the majority should prevail.

“Sophistry may reply that Sovereigns are equal, and that a majority of the votes of the States will be a majority of confederated America. But this kind of logical legerdemain will never counteract the plain suggestions of justice and common sense. It may happen that this majority of States is a small minority of the people of America; and two-thirds of the people could not long be persuaded to submit their interests to the management and disposal of one third. The larger States would, after a while, revolt from the idea of receiving the law from the smaller. To acquiesce in such a privation of their due importance in the political scale would be, not merely to be insensible to the love of power, but even to sacrifice the desire of equality. It is neither rational to expect the first, nor just to require the last. Considering how peculiarly the safety and welfare of the smaller States depend on union, they ought readily to renounce a pretension which, if not relinquished, would prove fatal to its duration.”

Written as they were over a century ago, these words do not seem to have lost a fraction of their weight.

X.—17th April.

MONS PARTURIT.

So far as constitutional machinery is concerned, it does not seem that there is any very substantial difference between the new Draft Bill and the old one. Whether this agreement between the two is the result of the brilliant speeches made in the Convention, or whether it shows that there was no occasion for any brilliant speeches at all, who shall say? Whichever way we look at it, the points of difference seem a mighty small result for the tremendous exertions made to bring it about—to say nothing of the expense. Could not as much have been accomplished, say, at a Conference of Premiers? If, after all the mountain's labour, the new Bill should in the end go the way of the old one, how long would it be before the colonies would be prepared to go through the same painful experience again?

The clause relating to the constitution and election of the Senate represents the chief point of difference, and is, therefore, the “ridiculus mus” of the Latin adage. The vicious principle of equal representation is retained; but, instead of eight members for each State, there are to be six; and instead of their being nominated by the local Parliament, they are to be directly chosen by the people of each State, voting as one electorate. The term of membership is to be six years, and the principle of retirement by rotation is also preserved.

SHOWING THEIR HANDS.

Perhaps it is a fortunate thing, in the interests of federation itself, that the course of events in the Convention has so clearly demonstrated the unwisdom of the delegates of 1891 in conceding equal representation. From an early stage in the present movement, we are told that the members representing the small colonies formed a combination, or rather a caucus, and grasped at every advantage that their greater number enabled them to secure at the expense of their bigger neighbours. The elections were no sooner over than we heard that they had settled the place of meeting among themselves, without even consulting us about it. This little stretch of authority might be excused on the score of urgency in the case of Western Australia; but is there any reasonable excuse to be found for their subsequent action in the matter of the money bills?

LOOKING AHEAD.

With these indications of their probable line of action before us, it is not likely that the small colonies will hesitate to use their power in the same spirit whenever they get the chance. When, for instance, the question of a federal capital comes up by and by, some choice spot within their borders—say Mount Gambier or Mount Wellington—will probably be marked out, and its claim supported through thick and thin by a block vote of eighteen members. Applying the same tactics to every other question that might turn up, they would be able either to mould the course of legislation to suit their special interests, or to produce a state of friction between the two Houses which would seriously interfere with parliamentary business. It would soon come to be a recognised fact that the small States were a power to be reckoned with by every Government; and what effectual means of dealing with such a contingency is to be found, or can be found, in the proposed constitution?

ABOUT QUEENSLAND.

It is not much consolation to say that Queensland will probably take part in the Convention, and ultimately join the union. No one can speak, at the present time, with much authority on the point. The indications are the other way; but, assuming that she will join it, what solid ground ground is there for supposing that her senators would assist ours in opposing a southern combination? And again, even taking it for granted that they would generally act with us, still that would do no more than produce an equal division of power between the northern and southern senators—eighteen on each side—which would not be enough to counteract the possible danger arising from a small, compact, and organised body, bound together by mutual interest and resolved to aggrandise themselves at the expense of others.

ABOUT VICTORIA.

All this time we are assuming that Victoria would act cordially with us in the Federal Parliament, as she has done in the Convention; but what reason is there for that assumption either? Up to the present time, her intercolonial policy has generally been antagonistic to ours, and directed mainly to the promotion of her mercantile interests by cutting us out of our trade, especially with Riverina. On that point she must necessarily sympathise with South Australia, which has similar objects in view on the river Darling.

The Riverina question is a traditional one with Victorian statesmen, dating from the time when they claimed the Murrumbidgee as the true boundary line between the two colonies. They have not forgotten that Lord John Russell, when Secretary for the Colonies, actually agreed to give it to them in 1840; and that, but for the obstinate stand made by our Legislative Council at the time, it would have been theirs ever since. They have never ceased to think that they were unjustly dealt with in that matter; but being deprived of the territory, they have adopted the very natural course of seeking to monopolise its trade. They are only consistent when they require the abolition of our preferential rates as one of the conditions on which they are willing to federate with us; and now they are likely to get it through the agency of an Inter-State Commission. The simple little clause—some might call it simple-minded—which proposes to abolish them will give them all that they have been striving to obtain by vigilant statecraft and immense expenditure, for nearly fifty years. What will it give us in return?

ON BOUNDARIES.

There seems to be a good deal of confusion in the minds of some people when discussing the question of intercolonial boundaries. They are nothing more, they say, than so many lines drawn across a map for the sake of political convenience, and therefore ought to be disregarded when the higher question of federation has to be considered. This is a fanciful rather than a logical way of looking at them. Although they are not natural boundaries, yet as a matter of fact they are boundaries, and carry the same results.

It would be more correct to discuss the question on the supposition that the colonies were so many islands. In such a case, is it conceivable that one of them would consent to forego any of its natural or acquired advantages, without receiving an equivalent, in order to facilitate a legislative union of the group? When neighbouring states or colonies establish freetrade with each other, they assume that they will lose nothing, because each is supposed to get an equivalent for what it gives up; but there is no analogy between intercolonial freetrade, and the cession or surrender of a trade acquired by means of an immense expenditure. For that there could be no equivalent. There might be compensation, if all the expenditure were recouped; but even that would only amount to a fraction of the total loss in such a case.

THE BORDER WAR.

Looked at from an outside point of view, nothing would seem more absurd than the construction of long trunk lines of non-paying railways for the purpose of fighting a neighbouring people with them; and yet this has been the recognised policy of three colonies for some thirty years past. When Sir Hercules Robinson paid his first visit to Albury in 1876, he expressed the opinions of an impartial observer on the subject in the course of a speech, in which he pointed out the advantages of federation. At that time there were only 440 miles of railway open in the colony.

A HERCULEAN POLICY.

“It must be obvious that, looking to the probable future of this great country, the railways should be designed with a view of hereafter forming links in the chain of railway communication, which will some day extend throughout the length and breadth of Australia. But the question has never been even considered in this light, and much that is now being done will, I fear, have to be undone in the future. Different gauges have been adopted by the neighbouring colonies of New South Wales, Victoria, South Australia, and Queensland; and the policy of their railway extensions, so far, has been almost solely one of isolation, being directed mainly to the object of securing, by one device or another, for their rival capitals, as much of the traffic as possible. The fares are manipulated in the same interest. Victoria established special rates to the Riverina districts, in competition with South Australia, for the traffic of the Murray. New South Wales follows suit in self defence, and to secure what she conceives to be her fair share of the traffic of her own territory.

“THE COUNTRY AT LARGE.”

“Where this ‘beggar-my-neighbour’ policy is to end, is difficult to say. Mind, I do not seek to impute blame to any Government. The result is simply the natural outcome of the system of disintegration and of isolation, under which each colony is almost necessarily led to seek its own aggrandisement at the expense of its neighbours. But such aims are not for the common good of the country. Railways should be designated by the routes best suited for uniting the great centres of population, and for developing the resources of the country.

“With railways over the whole of Australia, projected and managed on these broad general principles, it would be a matter of as complete indifference to the country at large, whether the produce of Riverina found its way to Sydney, Melbourne, or Adelaide, as it is in England whether the products of Birmingham make use of London or Liverpool as the port of shipment. Of course, such a question affects the personal interests of the traders of Sydney, Melbourne, and Adelaide; but it is to the interest of the country at large that traffic should flow through its natural and most economical channels, and any attempt to divert its course by artificial regulations and restrictions is simply a waste of wealth and power, and consequently a common loss to mankind.”

A PROPHET OF EVIL.

The case for federated railways could not be more effectively put by an outside spectator than it is here. A similar line of argument was used by Earl Grey in '48, when he predicted that “if these three portions of the mainland—New South Wales, Port Phillip, and South Australia—should be placed under distinct and independent Legislatures, the almost inevitable result will be . . . lines of internal Custom Houses on the frontier of each,” involving them all in extreme inconvenience and loss. To prevent such a waste of wealth and power, he proposed to unite them at once under a federal government; but his efforts were defeated. The war of tariffs took place exactly as he predicted, and our Convention is now taking up the policy which he sought to establish fifty years ago.

Are not these facts enough to show that the logic of events is an essentially different thing from the logic of philosophers? Among the statesmen of the three colonies who have devised and carried on this conflict of rates and tariffs, there is not one probably who would not cordially assent to the truly philosophic principles laid down by Sir Hercules Robinson and Earl Grey. In fact, we all assent to them. As principles, we admit that they are simply beautiful; but we plead that surrounding conditions did not permit us to put them in practice.

TWO VERY DIFFERENT THINGS.

The reason why we have done these things may be seen in the argument used by Sir Hercules, when he distinguished between the interests of “the country at large” and those of a particular city. To the people of Australia, as a whole, it would not matter two straws whether the trade of Riverina was monopolised by Sydney or Melbourne; but to the people living in either of those cities it would mean a difference of several millions of money every year, which might mean the difference between stagnation and prosperity. Nor is it “the personal interests of the traders” only that would be affected by the diversion of trade; the employment of large numbers of working men is equally at stake in the matter. However strong it might be, no local Government, when it came to the point, would feel itself strong enough to neglect or to prejudice local interests, even to promote the welfare of “the country at large.”

XI.—22nd April.

THE NAVIGABLE RIVERS.

One of the most edifying debates that have yet taken place in the Convention turned on a sub-clause in the Draft Bill, in which it was proposed to give the Federal Parliament “the control and regulation of the navigable streams and their tributaries within the commonwealth, and the use of the waters thereof.” It brought out Mr. Gordon, the champion advocate of his province, in his very best form; but it left him in a very battered and uncomfortable state of mind. Suspecting that its object was to enable South Australia to secure its hold on the trade of the Murray and the Darling, it was unfeelingly ridiculed by New South Wales; and then Mr. Gordon blandly explained that he had obtained the insertion of the clause in committee. To make the matter clearer, he proposed to amend it so as to give Parliament “control over the navigation of the Darling, Murray, and Murrumbidgee, and the use of the waters thereof.”

NAVIGATION VERSUS IRRIGATION.

He did not make any secret of his intention, which, plainly stated, was to prevent New South Wales from interfering with the navigation of those rivers by carrying out the large irrigation works it has long had in view in connection with them. Acting on a neat little axiom laid down by one of our engineers—that the chief function of our western rivers is not so much the carrying of produce as the production of something to carry—the Government has been engaged for some ten years past in making surveys, drawing up reports, and devising schemes for a regular water supply to prospective settlers on the river-banks. But inasmuch as the more water is taken from the rivers for irrigation, so much the less will be available for navigation, it is confronted by a very serious problem—whether navigation is to be sacrificed to irrigation, or vice versa.

Taking the case of the Darling, which runs for 1,200 miles from Walgett to Wentworth, the position seems to be this: The country lying near the river consists, for the most part, of rich alluvial plains, which, with an adequate water supply, would be capable of sustaining a large population settled on farms and orchards. The rainfall being far too small and too uncertain for that purpose, it is proposed to follow the example set by the western States of North America, in which large tracts of barren country have been fertilised by means of systematic irrigation; but as private enterprise is not equal to the occasion here, as it is there, the responsibility of construction falls upon the Government.

CHANCES OF PROFIT.

It is estimated that the revenue to be derived from the proposed works, in the shape of pumping licenses at 5s. per acre and other sources, would yield a fair direct return on the necessary outlay, after payment of working expenses. At the same time, the works would provide two indirect sources of profit of the highest value. First, they would afford complete insurance against the effects of drought by the growth of cereals and fodder along the course of the river; secondly, they would bring about an immense increase in the value of the land held under irrigation.

On the other hand, the construction of the works necessary to secure permanent navigation of the river offers no such captivating prospect. The expenditure is calculated at over £1,000,000; but as the only direct service of revenue would be the tolls collected on it, there would be practically nothing in the shape of a reasonable return. Under these circumstances, it is held here that the interests of navigation cannot take precedence of those of irrigation; in other words, the river steamers will have to take their chance during the dry seasons, when the water will be absorbed by the farms in the Darling River district. As navigation represents commerce, there is consequently a coming conflict between a commercial policy and one of agricultural settlement.

RIPARIAN RIGHTS.

The South Australian claim to restrict the diversion of the water for irrigation purposes by another colony is based on the doctrines of the old English law of "riparian rights," which does not permit an owner of land with river frontage to interfere with his neighbour's use and enjoyment of the water. Taking that view of the matter, they contend that New South Wales has no right, legal or moral, to drain the channel of a river flowing through her territory, and leave her neighbours lower down without the means of either running their steamers on it, or irrigating their soil. Mr. Gordon goes a good bit farther, and asserts that no colony has any right to the exclusive use of a river, any more than it has to the sun or moon. Rivers are "the channels of God," he says, meant for the common use of mankind.

SOUTH AUSTRALIA DEFEATED.

Seeing no chance of that view being adopted, his colleague, Sir John Downer, moved an amendment limiting their control to "rivers running through, or on the boundaries of, two or more States, so far as it is necessary to preserve the navigability thereof"; but even that proposal was defeated, on a division, by nearly two to one. The dispute was finally settled by another amendment, moved by Mr. Carruthers, which limits the power of Parliament to the control of the Murray "from where it first forms the boundary of Victoria and New South Wales to the sea." This method of settlement greatly disgusted the South Australians, because, as Sir John Downer said, "it left them in a worse position than ever with regard to the Murray," by depriving them of their local control. In order to avoid that calamity, he proposed to strike out the clause altogether, but that was not agreed to.

As the matter stands now, therefore, South Australia is virtually cut out of the business altogether. The Federal Parliament gets exclusive control of the river, not only in the whole of its course between New South Wales and Victoria, but in its course to the sea through South Australia; and at the same time New South Wales retains her exclusive right to deal with the Darling as she pleases. Such a result might well have tried Mr. Gordon's temper.

A LITTLE AMERICAN LAW.

Perhaps he may find himself not so badly off after all, when he comes to look a little more closely into the terms of the Draft Bill. The sub-clause enabling the Federal Parliament to "regulate trade and commerce among the several States" would probably be held to give it the very power which they sought to give it in the case of these rivers. In his commentary on the corresponding clause in the constitution of the United States, Story expresses an opinion to that effect:—

"How far any State possesses the power to authorise an obstruction of any navigable stream or creek, in which the tide ebbs and flows, within its territorial limits, as by authorising the erection of a dam across it, has been a subject of much recent discussion. If Congress, in regulating commerce, should pass any Act, the object of which should be to control State legislation over such navigable streams or creeks, there would be little difficulty in saying that a State law in conflict with such an Act would be void.

A DORMANT POWER.

"But if Congress have passed no general or special Act on the subject, the invalidity of such a State Act must be placed entirely on its repugnancy to the power to regulate commerce in its dormant state. Under such circumstances, it would be difficult to affirm that the sovereignty of a State, acting on subjects within the reach of other powers, besides that of regulating commerce, and which belonged to its general territorial jurisdiction, would be intercepted by the exclusive power of commerce, unexercised by Congress, over the same subject-matter.

"The value of the property on the banks of such streams or creeks may be materially enhanced by excluding the waters from them, and the adjacent low and marshy grounds, and the health of the inhabitants in general. Measures calculated to produce these objects, provided they do not come into collision with the powers of the general government, are undoubtedly within those which are reserved to the States."

COMMERCE OR AGRICULTURE.

Applying this interpretation of the clause to the facts before us, it may be inferred that if the Federal Parliament, acting in the interests of commerce, should prohibit any diversion of the waters of the Darling calculated to prejudice it, the irrigation policy of New South Wales would either be brought to a standstill, or restricted to much narrower limits than are now proposed. That policy would not be affected so long as the power of the central government remained dormant; but how long would it remain in that state if the South Australians should get a chance of wielding it?

If the draftsmen of the Convention had paid a little more attention to this matter than they had time to do, they would probably have seen the expediency of saying nothing about the rivers in the Bill. Nothing is said on that subject in the text of the American constitution, although they have a few small rivers in the United States, and the regulation of internal commerce was certainly not overlooked when the constitution was framed. "The power of Congress to regulate commerce," says Story, "reaches the interior of a State"; and again, "The importance of the power of regulating commerce among the States for the purposes of the Union is scarcely less than that of regulating it with foreign States." How clearly the necessity for a regulating power was foreseen, is evident in the remarks made by Hamilton on the subject of intercolonial conflicts:—

"The competition of commerce would be another fruitful source of contention. The States less favourably circumstanced would be desirous of escaping from the disadvantages of local situation, and of sharing in the advantages of their more fortunate neighbours. Each State would pursue a system of commercial policy peculiar to itself. This would occasion distinctions, preferences, and exclusions, which would beget discontent. We should be ready to denominate injuries those things which were in reality the justifiable acts of independent sovereignties, consulting a distinct interest. It is not at all probable that the unbridled spirit of commercial enterprise would pay much respect to those regulations of trade by which particular States might endeavour to secure exclusive benefits to their own citizens."

HOW THE CAP FITS.

Every line in this passage may be said to apply as closely to New South Wales, Victoria, and South Australia at the present moment, as they did to the particular States which the writer had in view. They had fought the same battles which our colonies are fighting now; and from those very contests arose the necessity of arming a central government with exclusive power to settle every question that gave rise to them. If they had had railroads in operation at the time, they would have seen the same struggle to secure traffic by means of preferential rates that we see here; and unquestionably they would have dealt with the railroads as they did with every other agency affecting commerce between the States.

"What have you to do with the Darling River?" said Mr. Reid to Mr. Gordon, evidently feeling that the question was a poser. He might have shown that he had a good deal to do with it, if he could only have seen the matter in a proper light. It is all very well to assert State rights, but in the present case the right to divert the waters of the Darling cannot be held to override the right to regulate commerce, unless it is reserved in express terms. On general grounds, it is difficult to see why a proposal to leave the question in the hands of the central government should have been so strongly opposed as it was in the Convention.

What better course could be taken with any question that has caused dissension among three colonies for so many years? There is no great difference between a war of river navigation and a war of border tariffs; and since it is agreed that one shall be dealt with by the Federal Parliament, why keep the other as a cause of everlasting feud? There is little prospect of forming a successful federation unless all these causes of hostility can be extinguished by the act of union. La Fédération, c'est la Paix!

SADLY OUT OF TUNE.

But simple as this proposition is, Mr. Carruthers, for one, does not seem to see it. "The moment we hand over the control of the rivers to the Federal Parliament," he is reported to have said, "we shall bring in an authority which has no sympathy with the desire of the Government of New South Wales to settle the people on the land. You cannot hope to see New South Wales join in a federation that handed over the great arteries of that colony to the federal control." Mr. Reid, on the other hand, held that "the true power to give the commonwealth was the navigation of rivers, so far as they form boundaries between the States." Neither one nor the other position is consistent with the true policy of a federal union, the first object of which should be the extinction of every cause of discontent between the contracting parties. To describe a national Government as one having no sympathy with that of a State in settling people on the land, surely indicates a temper sadly out of tune with the federation music. The simple fact that the State in this case has never been able to make up its mind about its policy in connection with the rivers, might well lead one to doubt the wisdom of permanently leaving them on its hands.

Anyone who wishes to test the progress of opinion, or rather feeling, on this question down south, would do well to refer to the debate on it in the Convention of 1891. It was very short and very mild. When they came to the sub-clause giving Parliament power to legislate on "river navigation with respect to the common purposes of two or more States," no exception was taken to it by any member. But as soon as Mr. Deakin casually mentioned the subject of "conservation of water for the purpose of irrigation," Mr. Playford, of Adelaide, cried out, "Leave that to the States!"

XII.—29th April.

JEALOUS SOVEREIGNS.

The distribution of powers between the federal and the local Parliaments is another matter in which the Draft Bills have followed the lead of the American constitution in rather a blindfold fashion. The former will have exclusive power to deal with a list of specified subjects, and also with "any matters necessary or incidental" for carrying its powers into execution. The latter will retain all the powers they possess at the present time, with the exception of those vested in the central Government. The precise form which this division of power took in the American case was a concession to the doctrine of State sovereignty, a delusion which made the people of the different States excessively jealous with respect to the surrender of those powers on which their fancied sovereignty seemed to depend.

In order to conciliate them, the ingenious fiction of a "residuum" was started by the lawyers, giving them the idea that, as long as they retained it, they had not parted with their sovereignty. It was a sort of amulet, in fact, like the charm worn round the neck by devout believers in the middle ages. As long as a State-right man knew that he had this "residuum" in safe keeping, his mind was at ease about Congress.

FEDERAL FICTIONS.

So sensitive were the people on this subject that, in the very first Congress after the Union was ratified, they insisted on an amendment of its terms by the addition of a clause stating that "the powers not delegated to the United States by the constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people." This reservation was, in effect, what the lawyers called the "residuum"; but the people were not to be satisfied with a legal fiction. They wanted to have it in black and white, so that there would be no fear of Congress stealing a march on the States some day, and getting possession of the precious "residuum." They were not inclined to listen to the lawyers who told them that there was no occasion for any such amendment, seeing that the Federal Government could only have the powers granted to it, expressly or by necessary implication—no more and no less. The amendment was carried in the face of their argument, and became part and parcel of the constitution.

GORGONS AND HYDRAS.

Simple and harmless as the residuum theory appeared to be at first sight, it became, in course of time, a very formidable affair. The "nullification" theory grew out of it, under which it was held by some States that they had a constitutional right to nullify, or declare null and void, any law passed by Congress which, in their judgment, violated their powers of independent action. The doctrine of "State rights" grew out of it, according to which every State is sovereign within the limits of its own sphere of action, and is made so by the declared will of the nation, as expressed in the Constitution. Then came the crowning doctrine of absolute "State Sovereignty," as it stood at the close of the war of independence, with the corresponding right of seceding from the Union, and resuming all the elements and insignia of sovereignty.

Out of all these fictions came at last the civil war of 1861, which virtually put an end to them, leaving nothing but a shadowy remnant of their former splendour. State sovereignty has almost passed out of sight, and even State right has a very limited and uncertain meaning in the present day. All the world knows that the Government of the United States is a sovereign one, but it knows nothing of any other sovereignty within the Union. The Supreme Court of the United States now holds that the Federal Government possesses all the powers incidental to sovereignty—e.g., the power to make Treasury notes a legal tender; and the Inter-State Commerce Act of '87, vesting the supreme control of railways running through several States in five commissioners appointed by the President, is a practical illustration of the changes brought about in the relations between the States and the Union.

PROVINCIAL INSTINCTS.

In this view of the matter, it seems rather farcical in us to embody a lot of exploded theories in our constitution, with the certain knowledge that they will beget all kinds of misconception as to its real nature. This is perhaps the most serious of all the inconveniences flowing from the blind devotion with which the American precedent was followed in '91. It was considered necessary to revive the fiction of the "residuum" in order to conciliate our provincial party, who stoutly objected to endow a Federal Parliament with powers stripped from their own local Legislature. Their political instincts told them that such a Government, once set in motion, would certainly enlarge its powers of action from day to day at their expense, and that in course of time the local Legislature would find itself hemmed in on all sides, until it was little more than a "glorified municipality."

FEDERAL POWERS.

In the Bill of that date, accordingly, the Federal Parliament was invested with power to make laws on certain subjects set out in over thirty sub-clauses, most of which are such as might be safely handed over to a body like the present Federal Council in Hobart; while another clause—evidently a copy of the amendment tacked on to the American constitution for the purpose of preserving the "residuum"—expressly reserves to the States all their existing powers, not exclusively vested in the Federal Parliament.

Reading the two together, the provincial politician might, it was thought, be soft enough to believe that federation could hardly touch provincial politics at any tangible point. He would be quite willing to give a Federal Government exclusive control over "postal and telegraphic services," services, military and naval defence, munitions of war, navigation and shipping, ocean beacons and buoys, quarantine, fisheries, census and statistics, currency, coinage and legal tender, banking, weights and measures, bills of exchange, and pro. notes," with other matters of a similar kind, for the purpose of uniform legislation. His mind would not be disturbed by any doubt as to the integrity or vitality of the state rights, which he regarded as essential to the welfare of his province and the perennial dignity of its Parliament.

GOING TO LAW.

It would not take many years' experience of active federation to enlighten him on this subject, and make him feel the difference between a national government and a local one. His "residuum" would gradually find its way into the melting pot, as it did in the United States, and little by little he would see one form of government gradually extending its powers in all directions, while the other—like the prisoner in Poe's story, shut up in the shrinking walls of a dungeon—was enclosed within a narrow and still narrowing compass.

Impatient of the impending revolution, he might either resign himself calmly to the inevitable, or he might resolve to ventilate his woes in an appeal to the Federal Supreme Court—as Sir John Downer threatened to do, when he found the Convention against him on the right of South Australia to use the waters of the Darling. But litigation would not afford him much comfort. Even if the letter of the constitution were in his favour, the spirit of it would be dead against him; and the learned Judges of the Federal Court, while admitting that his interpretation of it was a very reasonable one indeed, would knock it on the head with the doctrine of implied powers.

They might support their view of the question by quoting a judgment of the Supreme Court of Canada, to the effect that the Federal Parliament must have "a free and unfettered exercise of its powers" with respect to matters placed under its control, even though such exercise may interfere with some of the powers left under provincial control. In such cases, the exercise of the powers of the local Legislatures must necessarily be subject to such regulations as the Federal Parliament might prescribe.

SIR JOHN MACDONALD'S PLAN.

When the Canadian statesmen met in conference at Quebec in 1864, they came to the conclusion that the plan of distribution adopted in the American Union was one of its most serious defects, and that it could not be applied to their provinces without the risk of entailing similar inconveniences to those which had strained the Union so severely. They saw, as Bourinot tells us, that certain States had persistently asserted the doctrine of State Sovereignty, and the right of nullifying, or refusing to be bound by, certain Acts of the national government; and further, that those doctrines had been justified by lawyers and statesmen as the last resort of sovereign States, when their inherent rights, as they thought them, were invaded by it.

The Canadians traced the rebellious dogmas to their source in those provisions of the constitution, which made the national government alone one of enumerated powers, and left to the States all the powers not expressly taken from them. In short, they held that the residuum of power had been put in the wrong box; and instead of leaving it with the provincial Legislatures, they determined to place it in the hands of the Dominion Parliament.

PROVINCIAL POWERS.

Acting on this principle, they first gave it all the general powers necessary to a federal system, and then specified the subjects over which the provincial Legislatures should retain an exclusive jurisdiction. This precedent not having been followed in our Draft Bills, the public has not had an opportunity of comparing one system with the other, and therefore it seems advisable to show the difference between the two. The list of subjects reserved to the provincial Legislatures was as follows:—

1. Amendment of the constitution of the province, except as regards the Lieutenant-Governor.
2. Direct taxation within the province, in order to the raising of a revenue for provincial purposes.
3. Borrowing money on the sole credit of the province.
4. Establishment and tenure of provincial offices, and appointment and payment of officers.
5. Management and sale of public lands and timber thereon.
6. Public and reformatory prisons.
7. Hospitals, asylums, and charitable institutions.
8. Municipal institutions.
9. Shop, saloon, tavern, auctioneer, and other licences for revenue purposes.
10. Local works, excepting—(a) lines of steam and other ships, railways, canals, telegraph and other works connecting the province with other provinces; (b) lines of steamships between the province and any country abroad; (c) such works as, although situate within the province, are declared by the Dominion Parliament to be for the general advantage of Canada, or of two or more provinces.
11. Incorporation of companies with provincial objects.
12. Solemnisation of marriage in the province. (The general subject of marriage and divorce is reserved to the Dominion Parliament).
13. Property and civil rights.
14. Administration of justice, civil and criminal.
15. Imposition of punishment by fine or imprisonment for breach of provincial law.
16. Education, subject to certain provisions.
17. Generally all matters of merely local or private nature.

There are certain subjects, such as agriculture and immigration, in which the general and the local Governments in Canada are jointly interested, and in those cases they exercise concurrent powers of legislation. Our Draft Bills give exclusive power with respect to "immigration and emigration" to the Federal Parliament, but say nothing about agriculture, which is consequently left under local control.

LIGHTS AND BEACONS.

The relative merits of the two plans of distribution would form a neat subject for a debating society. The light of experience which guided the Canadians in framing their system does not seem to have attracted our statesmen at all; they prefer to be guided by the American precedent, with all its defects, patent and latent. And yet anyone who will shut his eyes for a time to the weight of American authority, and consult his common sense about the matter, may see some good reasons for the course adopted in Canada. He will see, that the arguments which weighed most with the founders of the American Union had relation to the desperate situation in which they were placed, and the consequent necessity of making desperate compromises, which would not have been entertained in happier times. Thirteen States, each full of dissension and jealousy, and of all kinds of extravagant notions as to its sovereign powers, had to be appeased somehow; and the general discord was reduced to harmony only by means of concessions which would have been fatal to the Union, but for the action of the Federal Court in maintaining its supremacy. It is hard to see how a plan of government, framed under such exceptional circumstances, can possibly serve as a guiding light for communities so differently situated as these colonies are; but it is equally easy to see that, as a warning beacon, it may be useful indeed.

XIII.—7th May.

A NICE-LOOKING BILL.

Looking at a copy of the new Draft Bill, fresh from the Government Printing Office at Adelaide, I am reminded of a remark made by Edmund Burke in one of his letters—"how much a constitution in fact differs from a constitution on paper!" The Bill looks as nice as a new sovereign fresh from the Mint, or a newly-painted landscape by an eminent artist, or anything else you please that wears the bloom of virgin loveliness. And what immense potentialities it suggests for the future! Think of the grand new Parliament House that will be built somewhere for the accommodation of the statesmen, orators, and patriots employed at £400 a year and upwards in making laws for us all; think of the clash of parties and contending States, the brilliant speeches, the gorgeous banquets, the gigantic public works, the unrivalled national debt! All these things, and more, crowd upon the imagination as I turn over the thirty pages of smooth quarto. Will not everyone see the fitness, as well as the novelty, of the lines—

As in a cradled Hercules, we trace
The lines of Empire in thy infant face?

THE COMMONWEALTH.

Turning from the hopes and visions suggested by this paper constitution, let us consider what we are likely to get from the thing itself. The title tells us that its object is "to constitute the Commonwealth of Australia;" and the preamble that "the people of * * * * have agreed to unite in one indissoluble Federal Commonwealth under the Crown," etc. How this bit of antiquated and Puritanical English—"Commonwealth"—came to be revived here in the Convention of 1891 is still a puzzle to many good people; and they are even more puzzled to understand how it came to be endorsed by the present one. Seeing that our people have not, during the six intervening years, shown the slightest inclination to "catch on" to it, one would have thought that it stood self-condemned before the Convention, and that it would have been incontinently rejected. It is of much more importance to secure a popular title for your federation than it is to get a good flag, an appropriate motto, or a handsome coat of arms; for the simple reason that the name may be in everyone's mouth by-and-bye, while the other things will not be.

AN UNPOPULAR BRAND.

Up to the present moment, no one has been heard to ask his neighbour for news about the Commonwealth; not a horse has been entered for a race under that name; the public has not been called upon to "smoke commonwealth tobacco," or to "drink commonwealth whisky," in alluring placards with a portrait of the Lord Protector enjoying a long clay and a glass of toddy. These being the surest, if not the only sure, tests of popularity among our "commonalty," it is clear that the word has not received the stamp of popular approval; and in face of that fact, is it not idle to try and force it into popular use through the medium of a Draft Bill?

A YANKEE TERM.

The reason why the word was adopted in the first instance is not difficult to understand, when it is taken in connection with the rest of the Bill. It is quite in keeping with a measure which bears the stamp of American influence on every page. The Puritans who founded the New England States were all commonwealth-men, habituated to the daily use of the word; they retained it when they crossed the Atlantic, and it has never lost its place in the political phraseology of the country. To an American of the present day, it means what it meant to his forefathers—a republic pure and simple. Every State that was founded was known as a commonwealth; and when they were united they formed, as they still form, one commonwealth. Bryce used the word in its proper sense when he published his review of their political system under the title of "The American Commonwealth."

AS OTHERS SEE US.

It is quite true that, in modern literary English, it is occasionally seen in print—like any other quaint phrase of the Elizabethan era—in its original sense of a state or community, without reference to any particular mode of government; but at the same time it is equally true that its technical technical meaning, among modern jurists, points distinctly to a republican constitution. Any European Puffendorff, for instance, who might chance to see the Draft Bill would infer from its title that the commonwealth is designed on republican principles. He would say, "what do you mean by a "commonwealth under the Crown?" An American would certainly do so. Bourinot, the Canadian author, gives his opinion on the point in a recent essay contrasting the Dominion with our commonwealth:—

"No doubt the word has come to mean a pure republic or democracy, when used in a specific and definite sense by publicists of these days. Shakspeare might use all the license of the poets in his dramas; for he was not bound by those rules of correct expression which one would expect from Australian statesmen, engaged in framing a new constitution for countries not yet separated from England, or governed on a purely republican system of institutions.

"When we consider the choice of this word of dubious significance, as well as the selection of the word 'state' instead of 'province,' of 'House of Representatives' instead of 'House of Commons,' of 'Executive Council' instead of 'Privy Council,' we may well wonder why the Australians—all English by origin and aspiration—should have shown so steady an inclination to deviate from the precedents established by a dominion only partly English, with the view of carving ancient historic names on the very front of its political structure."

AUSTRALIAN PREJUDICE.

It is natural enough that a Canadian patriot should feel mortified on finding the type of federal government chosen by his own countrymen discarded by Australian statesmen in favour of the American, especially when so much trouble had been taken to model the former on strictly British lines. We may go further than that. We may ask—where is the reason for copying either one or the other? A federal constitution for Australia ought to be distinctively Australian, and not in choice of words merely. It should be so far original in its structure and principles, as well as its language, as to be proof against any insinuation that it is largely a product of scissors and paste; and if our legislators are not equal to the task of producing a genuine Australian article, it may be feared that the time for federation has not yet come. Perhaps our experience may justify the remark that a popular Convention, sitting with open doors, is not the best of places in which to frame a constitution.

SIR SAMUEL GRIFFITH.

It is not to be supposed that either the choice of words, or the selection of principles, was made without a full appreciation of probable consequences. Sir Samuel Griffith, the draftsman of 1891, has not concealed his leaning towards the American constitution, or his reasons for it; and it may be fairly inferred, from his published opinions on the subject, that he looked forward to the time when his commonwealth would become a counterpart of the American one, in fact as well as in theory. Impressed with the certainty of coming changes, he framed his constitution in such a manner that its external form might serve as a sort of timber scaffolding for the erection of a building of a totally different and much more durable nature; so that when the proper time should arrive, the poles and planks might be thrown down, and the granitic interior left free to view. In proof of this, it will be sufficient to give two illustrations—one relating to parliamentary government, the other to the State Governors.

RESPONSIBLE GOVERNMENT.

The obvious difficulty of working responsible government in connection with federal machinery he meets by saying, as already mentioned, that the constitution should be so framed as to leave it open to substitute a Cabinet on the American plan for an Executive of the present kind. The present Bill, by the way, requires that Ministers shall be members of either one House or the other. His main reasons for this view are that the Senate, in all probability, would not consent to be bound by the executive acts of Ministers, merely because they had the confidence of the popular House; and that they might mark their want of confidence in them by refusing to provide supplies until a change was made—as the French Senate did on a recent occasion, when they compelled the Government to resign. But if Ministers resigned and others took their places, the Lower House might possibly prefer the old to the new, withhold their confidence from their successors, and refuse supplies.

HIS CURE FOR DEADLOCKS.

This state of things would give rise to what is called a deadlock, from which he does not see any means of escape in the shape of a dissolution or a referendum. "Under a federal constitution," he says, "the popular House would probably not be dissoluble at the wish of Ministers who failed to secure its confidence. This fact may, in course of time, introduce considerable modifications into the working of the system of responsible government." The fact, as he terms it, does not seem to have attracted any notice in the Convention, where it was apparently taken for granted that the practice of dissolving Parliament would exist under federation as it does now.

As a substitute for it, he suggests two methods of procedure—one derived from the American and the other from the Swiss constitution. When the President of the United States proposes to appoint the seven members of his Cabinet, he is required to submit their names to the Senate, and if that body approves, he can put them in office. Reasoning by analogy, he thinks that "it might come to be adopted as a working rule that the original choice of Ministers should should be approved by the Senate, with the understanding that they would not afterwards withdraw that approval; while, on the other hand, the Ministers should be bound to retire if they did not retain the confidence of the House of Representatives." Judging from the experience we have had here, the Premier would be hard put to it sometimes, if he had to secure the approval of thirty-six Senators for every name in his list.

The other way out of the difficulty is the Swiss practice, which leaves the choice of Ministers to the two Houses for a fixed term. On that plan, the Governor-General would have to accept the nomination of his advisers directly at their hands, instead of indirectly at the Premier's.

ELECTED GOVERNORS.

As to the appointment of a Governor for each colony or State, he thinks that it should not be left, under a federal constitution, to the English Ministers, but to the local Parliament; in other words, that he should be elected by the people. In accordance with this view, his Bill proposed that the Parliament of a State might make such provisions as it thought fit as to the manner of his appointment and removal, and as to the tenure of his office. The present Bill does not retain this proposal, the Convention having apparently seen the unwisdom of going that length at the present stage of our development. The impression made upon people abroad by such an explicit avowal of republican sentiments may be seen in Bourinot's remarks upon it:—

"In leaving to the 'States' the right of appointing or electing their 'Governors'—not Lieutenant-Governors, as in Canada—we see also the desire to follow the methods of the States of the American Republic; and we may also be sure that, when once the commonwealth is in operation, it will not be long before the heads of the executive authority will be chosen by popular vote." The precedent, he thinks, would sooner or later be followed by an extension of the elective principle to all other important offices in the State, including the judicial.

THE DOCTRINAIRES.

These specimens of his political opinions are not only sufficient to account for the endeavour to embody republican terms and principles in the Bill, but, at the same time, they display the unmistakable features of the doctrinaire. The opinions may be perfectly sound in themselves; but it is quite another question whether they are adapted to our circumstances, and likely to be successful when put in practice. Common sense tells us that, on such an occasion as this, we should carefully adapt our doctrines to our circumstances; but the doctrinaires would have us blindly adapt our circumstances to their doctrines. It may be freely admitted that, looking at the matter from that point of view, the course taken was perfectly reasonable in itself. If the American type of constitution was considered the best for our purposes, the framers of the Bill were justified in acting on their convictions, although one could wish that they had explained their views a little more clearly at the outset.

WORDS ARE THINGS.

"Was it Mirabeau, Mr. President," asked Daniel Webster in the Senate, "or some other master of the human passions, who has told us that words are things? They are, indeed, things, and things of mighty influence, in the discussion of legal and political questions; because a just conclusion is often avoided, or a false one reached, by the adroit substitution of one word, or one phrase, for another." We have more than one illustration of this truth to offer; and on the strength of them we may say—let our law-makers adroitly substitute one word for another, and in time they will succeed in turning the channel of national thought in any direction they may desire.

Tell the people openly that you propose to have a federal constitution of a republican character, and they will revolt; but first accustom them to the use of words which, innocent enough to look at, are intimately associated with that kind of government, and you will soon clear the way to any change of constitution you may have in view. The artifice has already succeeded to some extent in the case of the "referendum." It has also added the words "State," "State right," and even "State sovereignty," to our political vocabulary. It promises to embellish it with many more. But what have we gained by these triumphs of political art, beyond an evident debasement of the constitutional currency? The mischief may be slight at present; but it is one of a kind that is certain to spread from day to day.

THE KINGDOM OF AUSTRALIA.

Let us see what might be accomplished in another direction. Bourinot mentions, on the authority of Sir John Macdonald, that when the Canadian delegates met the English Ministers at a conference in Westminster in 1866, some of the former suggested that their federation should be described in the Union Act as "the Kingdom of Canada"; but that the proposal was rejected on the ground that it would give offence to the people of the United States, in whose eyes monarchy is an abominable thing. They had recently protested against the French occupation of Mexico during the Maximilian trouble. Now, supposing that when the six Premiers meet Mr. Chamberlain in conference, they should suggest the erection of a "Kingdom of Australia," with one of the Royal Princes at the head of it; would such a title be less acceptable to Englishmen than "the Commonwealth of Australia"? The idea may be funny; but not half so much as that of six commonwealthmen going to kiss hands in Windsor uniforms.

XIV.—13th May.

A QUESTION OF TITLES.

The inconveniences, as well as the absurdities, which must inevitably follow any attempt to frame a federal constitution for these colonies on the American plan, may be seen at a glance by any attentive reader of the Draft Bill. The two Houses, for instance, are termed respectively the Senate and the House of Representatives; and these being the well-known titles of two divisions of Congress, one would suppose that they were intended to resemble them in constitution as well as in name. For surely the choice of names on such an occasion would not be regarded by a Convention as a matter of little or no importance; and it must be assumed that every name in the Bill, of persons as well as of things, is intended to carry with it some appropriate meaning.

But when the reader turns to the clauses defining the constitution of the two Houses, he learns that the Senate is to be "directly chosen by the people of the State as one electorate," and that the House of Representatives is to be "composed of members directly chosen by the people of the several States, according to their respective numbers." Seeing, then, that both are to be composed of members directly chosen by the people, why is one only to be known as "The House of Representatives"? It would be no answer to say, "because it will represent the people, while the other will represent the States"; for clearly men directly chosen by the people are representatives, whatever they may be called, or whatever electorates they may represent. They are equally entitled to the name, and to the exercise of all the powers of representatives, as defined by the constitution. To appropriate the title to one House exclusively is calculated to give rise to very erroneous ideas with respect to the character and functions of the two Chambers.

"REMEMBER MARCH."

Recollecting the great impression made by the elections in March last, it might be said that, provided the men chosen by the colonies as single electorates were of the right stamp, they would form the real House of Representatives; and that public opinion would be much more effectively represented in such a body than it would be in one composed of men returned by small divisions. The conclusion is justified by the fact that the former would represent the whole population of the united Colonies, while the other would represent it in sections. A Federal Parliament would not be concerned in local matters, it is true; but men returned to it for particular localities would just as certainly represent the local feeling of their constituents as they do now.

COLONY OR STATE.

A far more serious objection may be taken to the use of the word "State," which meets us in every page of the Bill. Each of the colonies, when it becomes law, will cease to be a colony in name; it will be called a State, and the combined States—sovereign States, of course—will form so many "sovereigns without subjects," as the American Chief Justice Jay said.

It is a matter for some surprise that any Australian statesman, acquainted with the course of American politics, should propose to introduce such a term here, knowing, as he must, that it would sooner or later be followed by angry discussion on State rights, of the kind which caused so much dissension in their native home. Federation is recommended to us on the ground that, under its influence, the colonies will bury the hatchet and live in peace with one another; but if the very first thing it does is to set men arguing on State rights, we may expect to see the jealous spirit of antagonism develop itself as rapidly in a Federal Parliament as ever it did in a local one. The Canadians avoided that calamity by omitting the fateful words from their constitution. If we retain them, we may chance to revive the time—

When civil dudgeon first grew high,
And men fell out, they knew not why;
When hard words, jealousies, and fears
Set folks together by the ears.

Another ground of objection presents itself in the fact that the term "State" has a specific and ascertained meaning in constitutional and international law. Among jurists, it is universally understood to mean an independent nation. So John Austin defines it in his work on Jurisprudence. "An independent political society," he says, "is often styled a 'State,' or 'a sovereign and independent State.'" The words commonwealth and republic, by the way, he treats as meaning the same thing—"Republic, or Commonwealth."

TEACHING THE YOUNG IDEA.

Now, if it were the avowed object of the Convention that the colonies should prepare themselves to follow the lead of the United States still more openly, by declaring their independence of the Crown at some future time, the substitution of the word "State" for the historical title might serve a well-defined purpose; because its natural effect would be to spread the idea of independence abroad among the people, and teach them to look forward to the time when the "Commonwealth of Australia" would take its place among the great republics of the world. Each colony might in such a case be excusably termed a State, and its people might talk, with laudable pride, of their State rights and their State sovereignty, without making themselves ridiculous in the eyes of critical observers abroad.

THE

THE FOURTH OF JULY.

It will help to make their position as political communities clearer than it seems to be, if we consider how it was that the word "State" came to be adopted by the British colonies in North America. Until the 4th of July, 1776, they called themselves colonists, and their respective territories colonies; but on that day their representatives, in Congress assembled, assented to a Declaration of Independence, in which they said:—

"We, therefore, do, in the name and by the authority of the good people of these colonies, solemnly publish and declare that these United Colonies are, and of right ought to be, free and independent States; that they are absolved from all allegiance to the British Crown; and that all political connection between them and the State of Great Britain is, and ought to be, totally dissolved".

It is common enough to hear of people "taking time by the forelock"; but when were such remarkable instances of it ever seen in our history as we have in this matter? It does not need much argument to show that, in taking the course he did, Sir Samuel Griffith set the federation movement in a wrong track, and that it will be found a very difficult matter to work a constitution in which American principles are incorporated with British, in the proportion of two to one.

OUSTING THE CROWN.

The second section of the present bill begins with the words—"This Act shall bind the Crown." One can imagine how quickly they would attract Mr. Chamberlain's eyes, should he see the Bill, and set him thinking on the changed relations coming over the mother country and these colonies. It is an old maxim among the Judges that the Crown is not bound by any statute, unless it is expressly named in it—laws being made for subjects, not for kings; so that it cannot be deprived of any prerogative right, title, or interest by a sidewind. To meet this rule, it is usual to specify in any Act of Parliament, by which the prerogative is abridged, the precise extent to which the abridgment is to go. The Bill does not enter into details, but says plumply—"This Act shall bind the Crown." Taking the words in connection with its general tenor, and the proposal to abolish appeals to the Privy Council, they might be roughly translated as meaning that "This Act shall oust the Crown."

NEW COLONIES.

Compare, for instance, the provision in the Bill relating to "New States," with the corresponding clauses in the American and Canadian constitutions. They are taken from the American, which gives Congress the same powers that the Bill proposes to confer on the Federal Parliament. Here is the text:—

"New States may be admitted by the Congress into the Union; but no new States shall be formed or erected within the jurisdiction of any other State, nor any State be formed by the junction of two or more States, or parts of States, without the consent of the Legislatures of the States concerned, as well as of the Congress."

The political connection between the colonies and Great Britain having been totally dissolved, it was wise and proper to arm Congress with this power. But where the political connection between the colonies and the mother country has not been dissolved, such a precedent cannot be properly or wisely followed. The terms used in the Act of Parliament by which the Canadian provinces were united, will show us what the Crown lawyers consider the constitutional methods of dealing with similar cases. The Queen is empowered, on address from the Parliament of Canada and from the respective Legislatures of certain colonies or provinces, to admit them into the Union; and also to admit Rupert's Land and the North-western Territory into it, on such terms and conditions in each case as may be expressed in the address.

THE PREROGATIVE.

The Crown has recently shown that it has no disposition whatever to surrender its prerogative right to erect new colonies. The Act of Parliament passed in 1890, conferring a constitution on Western Australia, provides in section 6, that Her Majesty may, by Order in Council, divide that colony by separating any portion of it, and either erecting it into a new colony or colonies or uniting it to any other colony, and also may subdivide such portion and establish in it any form of government she may think fit, or reunite it to Western Australia.

Provisions of this kind may be seen in every Act of Parliament passed for similar purposes during the last fifty years; they form, in fact, an essential part of the established procedure of the Colonial Office. Bearing that in mind, anyone can imagine the sort of sensation the Bill would cause in that eminently old-fashioned department. The Permanent Under Secretary would point out to his chief that it proposes to strip the Crown of one of its most cherished prerogatives, so far as Australasia is concerned. It would leave it entirely to the Parliaments sitting at Brisbane, Adelaide, and Perth to say whether the immense territories placed under their several jurisdictions should remain under them to the end of time, or whether they should be divided into separate colonies, to meet the need of local government as population increases.

The wisdom of such a provision may well be questioned when we consider the state of affairs in Queensland, where the Central and Northern districts have long agitated for separation from the Southern. The local Parliament, animated no doubt by some such feeling as that which showed itself in the Sydney Legislature up to '42 and '59 in the cases of Port Phillip and Moreton Bay, will not listen to the cries of its dissatisfied settlers; nor is it likely to listen until the Home Government indicates its intention to act on their behalf.

"A

"A NEW BRITANNIA."

A proposal to oust the Crown in such a matter as this shows the extent of folly into which men may be led by devotion to precedents and formulas. If any one thing is more patent than another in the progress of this country, it is the certainty that new colonies will be erected in it, and that those which now occupy the continent will hereafter form a small minority of the whole—as small, perhaps, in proportion, as the thirteen original States of the Union when compared with those which flourish in the present day under the Star-spangled Banner. Where, then, is the wisdom or propriety of saying that a new colony shall not be formed by separation of territory from an old one, without the consent of its Parliament? Because a similar thing was said in America over one hundred years ago, it does not follow that we should act wisely in saying it here now. While our own experience has so forcibly shown that a division of territory will never be cheerfully accepted by any local Parliament, it ought not to be a matter for regret that there is a higher power to which colonists may appeal, when struggling to avoid the evils of a centralised government.

XV.—22nd May.

BARKING UP THE WRONG TREE.

The learned persons who have been puzzling themselves over the meaning of the word "Legislature" in the Enabling Act, seem to have overlooked the golden rule laid down by Lord Coke for their guidance in such cases:—" Qui hæret in litera, hæret in cortice," which may be freely translated into "he who sticks at the letter is barking up the wrong tree." Is it not as clear as daylight that the word, as it appears in the Act, is a blunder? And is it the only one? Not by a good many.

When the Draft Constitution has been submitted for consideration to each House of Parliament in committee, it is left to the two Houses to deal with it as they please. When they have made their amendments, they may either remit them separately to the President of the Convention, or they may hold conferences and agree, if they can, about them. What would it matter whether they did one thing or the other? It would be a little absurd to see them engaged in such a conference; but that would be their business. And is it conceivable that the Convention would reject the amendments of either House, on a point of order touching the word "Legislature"?

A very learned person, writing on this subject in a contemporary, tells us that "in Imperial statutes the words 'Parliament' and 'Legislature' are never used interchangeably or as equivalents." And yet the British North America Act speaks of the Parliament of Canada and the Legislature of Ontario. The Imperial Judges use the terms as equivalent every day. "No doubt the colonial Legislature," said Mr. Justice Blackburn, "cannot make a law which would be binding in contradiction to the Imperial Legislature."

A truce to quiddities. Let us hear a little common sense from Herbert Broom:—"The meaning of particular words in statutes is to be found, not so much in a strict etymological propriety of language, nor even in popular use, as in the subject or occasion on which they are used, and the object that is intended to be attained." That simple test brings us to the proposition with which I started—that the word in question means whatever the two Houses choose to make of it.

A PROBLEM.

One of the underlying questions of the federal movement which will require to be considered, is whether the constitution outlined in the Draft Bill is intended to establish a general government, acting directly on individuals and founded on the will of the people, or whether it is to represent an agreement or compact between certain colonies, for the purpose of delegating specified powers to a central authority.

If we may judge from the general tenor of the speeches delivered by candidates at the March elections, and by politicians on many previous occasions, the latter view of the case seems to be the prevailing one. It has been said over and over again that the immediate necessity for federation arises from the fact that there is no means, without it, of providing for the exclusion of coloured races, or for defence against invasion; and as a secondary reason, that there is no means without it of establishing uniformity in tariff and other laws.

VOX POPULI.

The "compact" theory is calculated to spread not merely imperfect, but very inaccurate notions on the subject. Its influence may be seen in the opening lines of the Draft Bill of '91, in which we read: "Whereas the Australasian Colonies of . . . have agreed to unite in one federal commonwealth under the Crown." To say that such and such colonies have agreed to unite, obviously implies that the agreement has been arrived by their respective Parliaments without any direct reference to the people concerned, with the view of carrying out some specific legislation beyond their own sphere of action.

Turning to the present Bill, we find that this recital has been amended by substituting for it the words, "Whereas the people of . . . have agreed to unite in one indissoluble federal commonwealth under the Crown." Here it is equally obvious that the Convention intended to show, by their amendment, that the constitution will not represent a mere federal agreement, but will establish a general government, supported by an express vote of the people. The two things being essentially different, the chief points of difference between them deserve to be carefully borne in mind.

NATIONAL OR FEDERAL.

When the constitution of the United States was submitted to the States for approval, it was warmly attacked by the advocates of state rights, on the ground that it formed a national government instead of a federal one. As they put it, it did not present the federal form of constitution, which regards the Union as a confederacy of sovereign States; but it framed a national government, which regards the Union as a consolidation of the States. By what authority, they asked, was so bold and radical an innovation made by the Convention?

This was one of the many similar nuts which Hamilton was called upon to crack in the Federalist; and the manner in which he did it shows the dilemma in which he was placed, in his effort to conciliate the opponents of the constitution. By a series of ingenious see-saw arguments, he endeavoured to show that it was neither a national nor a federal one, but a composition of both. It was federal, for instance, because it was to be ratified by Conventions elected by the people, not as individuals composing one entire nation, but as composing the distinct and independent States to which they respectively belonged. And on the other hand, it was a national one, because the government would operate on the individual citizens composing the nation in their individual capacities, and not on the political bodies composing the confederacy in their political capacities.

A SLEEPING GIANT.

While the fate of the constitution was hanging in the balance, the strongest advocates of a national government were compelled to shape their arguments in this half-hearted fashion, instead of openly and boldly admitting that the main object they had in view was the establishment of such a government. Had they not been compelled, while sitting in Convention, to frame the constitution on a fictitious theory of delegated powers, leaving an imaginary "residuum" in the hands of the sovereign States? They had to take what they could get, for the state-rights men were difficult to deal with, and every inch of ground they yielded was stubbornly contested. They knew that they were creating a giant power, and they sought to fetter its limbs in every way they could—as vainly as the Lilliputians tried to fetter Gulliver in his sleep. Instinct told them of their danger.

A VIRGINIAN ORATOR.

"It has been repeatedly said here," argued Patrick Henry in the Virginian Convention of 1788, "that the great object of a national government is national defence. That power which is said to be intended for security and safety may be rendered detestable and oppressive. If you give power to the general government to provide for the general defence, the means must be commensurate to the end. All the means in the possession of the people must be given to the government, which is entrusted with the public defence."

From that basis he proceeded to show, in a curiously prophetic strain, how the interests of Virginian slaveholders might be jeopardised at any moment by the Northern abolitionists. "Has not Congress power to provide for the general defence and welfare? May it not think that these call for the abolition of slavery? May it not pronounce all slaves free, and will it not be warranted by that power? They have the power in clear, unequivocal terms, and will clearly and certainly exercise it."

STATE RIGHTS.

Time fought so steadily on the side of the national government that, when the question was argued in the Senate forty-five years later between the great orators of the day, Webster and Calhoun, its defence was conducted on very different lines from those laid down by Hamilton. Calhoun, the ablest leader of the state-rights party, moved resolutions declaring, in effect, that the constitution was a constitutional compact between sovereign States; that when the general government assumed to exercise any power not delegated to it, its acts were void, and the States might choose the mode and measure of redress; that the people of the States had never been formed into one nation by the Union, nor had they transferred their allegiance to the general government; that the States retained their sovereignty, and with it the right of judging, in the last resort, as to the extent of the powers delegated and those reserved.

The doctrine of state rights was thus carried to its extreme verge, the essence of the argument being a declaration of the right to secede from the Union. It was called at the time the Nullification theory. Calhoun's view of the constitution was repudiated by Webster, whose genius as a constitutional lawyer—in which our Wentworth greatly resembled him—gained him the name of "Expounder of the Constitution."

A NATIONAL GOVERNMENT.

He did not say, like Hamilton, that the government was partly national and partly federal; he maintained that it was wholly and entirely national. The constitution was not a compact between the States, but a government founded on the will of the people. Everywhere it was understood, from the first, to be a popular constitution. It came to the people for their adoption, and was to rest on the same deep foundation as the State constitutions themselves. They had no power to dissolve the relations it established, and nothing could dissolve them but revolution.

The first resolution adopted by the Convention of 1787 said: "That a National Government ought to be established, consisting of a supreme Legislature, Judiciary, and Executive." The object in view was to supersede the old Confederation, because it could only make requisitions on the States when it wanted money; and if they refused to comply, there was no remedy but war.

war. The constitution was adopted to avoid that necessity, by establishing a government which should act directly on individuals by taxation and other laws, without borrowing aid from the States. The powers of a national government were thus substituted for a military force.

NO COMPACT.

There were no words in the constitution, he said, that were applicable to a confederation of states. If they were parties to it as States, where were their rights expressed? They engaged for nothing, they promised nothing. The reason was that, in the constitution, it was the people who spoke and not the States. It began with the words, "We, the people of the United States, do ordain and establish this constitution." They addressed themselves to the States in the language of injunction and prohibition. The constitution uttered its commands in the name and by the authority of the people. It did not exact from the States any plighted public faith to maintain it. It made its own preservation depend on individual duty. It incapacitated any man to sit in the Legislature of a State who should not first have taken his solemn oath to support the constitution of the United States.

EXPLODED THEORIES.

No one in the present day would consider this argument open to question. The course of subsequent events has only served to demonstrate its soundness, by scattering the doctrine of state-rights to the winds. Applying Webster's construction to our Draft Bill, and reading it in that light, it is surely absurd in us to revive the exploded doctrines embodied in the terms state and state-rights. The form of government proposed to be erected here will be a general one, armed with similar powers to those exercised by the Government of the United States, consistently with its position as subordinate to the Crown. It will not owe its existence to any compact between the united colonies, but to the will of their people, as expressed in the preamble. Was it not with the view of giving it the sanction of the people, from first to last, that the Enabling Act provided for the election of representatives at a Convention, and also for the submission of the Bill to the electors, for acceptance or rejection?

FENCING THE WRONG Paddock.

Here we are met by the question, whether we can safely or consistently follow the American precedent in reviving the theory of a delegation of powers by the States, and enumerating those to be conferred on the general government? Would it not be safer and more consistent to fence in the little local paddocks? It is notorious that every clause in the American constitution containing a definition of powers has proved a snare and a trap—a source of endless conflict and litigation; and as we cannot but expect to see similar results here, our Federal Court will probably find its chief occupation for many years to come in striving to determine the exact boundaries between the general and local jurisdictions. Questions of this kind would be much more serious affairs for the Federal Government than they would be for the others. The judgments of the American courts would be referred to for enlightenment, and in course of time we should have a large body of American law incorporated with our own.

Calhoun's argument shows that the enumeration of powers formed the backbone of the state-rights doctrine. It was pointed out by its advocates as a proof that the powers of Congress were limited to certain subjects, and that any act in excess of them would be unconstitutional. All this, they contended, went to show that the government of the Union was never intended to be a national one, and that the general mass of powers not included in the enumeration was still left as a "residuum" to the States.

DANGER SIGNALS.

If we recollect that this question of construction gave rise to fiery discussions, which lasted for over seventy years, and were only ended by war, it is surely worth while to consider whether we are as wise as we might be in embodying it in our constitution. Two Conventions have agreed to do so, as contentedly as if the domestic peace of the Union had never been disturbed by any question of the kind. They have provided all the materials for dissension, and they take it for granted that dissension will never arise out of them. We have no slave-holding interest, but that is not enough to ensure peace, when the opponents of the constitution are invited, by its terms, to enlist themselves under the banner of state-rights, and to use all the weapons in the armoury of the law for the purpose of involving it in unpleasant complications.

It may have been with the view of averting the danger of civil discord that the word "indissoluble" was inserted in the preamble; but as any constitution may be dissolved by a revolution, or by common consent of all concerned, it is not likely to prevent either one thing or the other. When experience has shown us where danger lies in our path, it would be more prudent to choose another, than to neglect the warning.

THE RULE OF MINORITIES.

There are some matters, it may be admitted, in which a hint might have been usefully taken from American precedents. The assent of nine States out of thirteen represented in their Conventions was required for the Union; here the assent of three out of six is to be sufficient, to be given by a direct vote of the people to the extent of not less than 50,000 in New South Wales and Victoria respectively, 6,000 in Tasmania, 6,000 in Western Australia, and a bare majority in South Australia. Supposing, for example, that the Bill should be accepted by the minimum number of electors in the first-mentioned three colonies, the total number of votes polled for it would be 106,000, out of a total population of 2,638,000 people. Great Great Spirit of Democracy! What is there to justify such an outrageous want of proportion, combined with such a violation of the fundamental rule, that no law should be passed unless it has the support of a majority of the States, as well as a majority of the population? Sydney Smith said of some learned person with a very lean frame, that his intellect was indecently exposed. Will not our "Commonwealth" run a risk of similar exposure, should it come into the world with such a very thin covering of popular support? Considering that we have only six "States" to deal with, would it have been too much to require that five of them should assent to the constitution, by at least two-thirds of their electors, before sending it to England?

XVI.—27th May.

THE CLASSES AND THE MASSES.

One of the many amusing delusions which have apparently taken possession of the federal imagination relates to the character and functions of the Upper House, or Senate. We have been told by one politician after another that it is not intended to represent the conservative element in society, but simply the colonies or States, and moreover that it is not even to act, except incidentally, in the usual capacity of a check on hasty legislation. This view of it requires us to throw overboard at once all our preconceived notions about the intrinsic dignity and value of a second chamber, which has proved such a prolific theme for constitutional writers, and to adopt an entirely new theory on the subject.

The leading idea seems to be shortly this: All distinctions between classes, so far as the two Houses are concerned, are to be wiped out; the members of each will be directly chosen by "the people," and will consequently belong to the same class, hold the same opinions, and represent the same interests. There will be only one broad line of distinction between the two sets—one will be returned to represent the people, and the other to represent the States. This doctrine is supposed to be an essential feature of an up-to-date democratic federal constitution, and the authority quoted for it is the constitution of the United States.

THE AMERICAN SENATE.

If we trace this matter up to the fountain head, there will be no difficulty in seeing that the doctrine is a misconception of the facts from beginning to end. The founders of the great Union did not start with the intention of forming a second House to represent the States exclusively; their design was to form one which would act as an efficient check or drag on the first, by composing it of essentially different materials. The necessity for doing so had been forced on them by their experience of a Congress composed of one House only, under the old Confederation. Then came the struggle between the large and the small States for equal representation in both Houses, ending in a compromise, by which the latter obtained equal representation in one only. To carry out the plan of a two-chambered Legislature, which in effect meant a Conservative House controlling a Democratic one, they had to devise a different mode of election for the conservative members, and to strengthen their position by giving them a longer term of office—six years instead of two.

JAMES MADISON.

This point can be made perfectly clear by quoting a passage from a speech by James Madison, "the father of the constitution," in the House of Representatives, delivered during the first session of Congress, in support of a proposal to give senators higher "wages" than representatives:—

"It was evidently contemplated by the constitution to hold out some distinction in favour of the Senate, as an inducement for men of staid and fixed principles, whom habits of retirement might render averse from the active scenes of public life, to devote the experience of years and the acquisitions of study to the service of their country. Except something of this kind is done, we may find it difficult to obtain proper characters for the Senate; as men of enterprise and genius will naturally prefer a seat in the House of Representatives, which will be considered a more conspicuous situation."

The President, George Washington, was of quite the same mind, as he showed in a note to Madison, written in anticipation of an adverse note on the question before the House:—"Being clearly of opinion that there ought to be a difference in the wages of the members of the two Houses of the Legislature, would it be politic or prudent in the President, when the bill comes to him, to send it back, with his reasons for non-concurring?"

CONSERVATIVE SENATORS.

What sort of persons had Madison in his mind's eye when he spoke of "men of staid and fixed principles," if it was not the same class that nowadays we call conservatives? They were to be men of experience and men of study, in whom only can staid and fixed principles be found. In his opinion, a House composed of such men was not only essential but indispensable to the stability and permanence of the constitution. He thought so little of their functions as representatives of the States, compared with the far higher responsibilities attaching to their position, that he did not even refer to them. It was no argument in favour of higher wages that they represented the States; the claim rested entirely on the other ground. Similar views were taken by other members of the House; one, for instance, contending that the senators "ought to have permanent salaries, that they might be placed in an eligible and independent situation." They were all, in fact, looking at the Senate as a House of an entirely opposite character to their own. If they had only agreed to call things by their right names, they would have called one the House of Democrats, and the other the House of Conservatives.

DUPLICATE

DUPLICATE HOUSES.

It is not difficult to imagine the kind of reception that a proposal to form a Senate, on the lines laid down in our Draft Bill, would have met with from Madison and his friends. Probably they had some such scheme submitted to them, since every conceivable project was discussed before they arrived at the end of their labours. They would have pointed out at once that a Congress composed of two Houses, one of which was a mere duplication of the other, differing more in name than in anything else, would be a self-evident absurdity. Where both Houses are to be chosen directly by "the people," voting under the same franchise, both must prove to be of much the same character—a dangerous experiment in a federal or any other constitution. Let me apply the words used by one of the members of the Massachusetts Convention, met to ratify the Union:—

"The senators represent the sovereignty of the States; the representatives are to represent the people. The senators are in the quality of ambassadors of the States, and some permanency in their office is necessary to a discharge of their duties. If chosen by the people at large, they would represent, not the Legislatures, but the people. This would totally obliterate the federal character of the constitution. A consolidation of the States would ensue, for who would defend them against the encroachments of the Federal Government?"

AN ELECTORAL PUZZLE.

This objection goes to the root of the whole thing. Our Convention appears to have satisfied itself that, by making the whole colony one electorate in the case of the Senate, the federal character of the constitution would be preserved; but how is a mere difference in the size of the electorate to do that? The difficulty is increased by the fact that until an Electoral Act is passed for the House of Representatives, each State is to be an electorate for that House also. For some time to come, therefore, the members of the two Houses would be chosen directly by the people, in precisely the same manner and under the same conditions. The difficulty is still further increased by the fact that there is no difference in point of qualifications for membership of either House; anyone may be a member of either who is twenty-one years of age, holds an elector's right, or is "qualified to become an elector," and has resided for three years within the Commonwealth. Under these generous provisions, any lady qualified to become an elector in South Australia may become a member of either House.

QUALIFICATIONS FOR SENATE.

In the matter of qualifications, the Draft Bill has not adopted either the American or the Canadian policy, in placing some substantial restrictions on elections to the Senate. No one can be a senator in the Dominion unless he is thirty years of age, is a freeholder to the value of £800, and is worth that amount over and above his debts and liabilities. And no one can be a senator in the United States unless he is thirty years of age, and has been a citizen for nine years. In both cases, it was considered a matter of vital importance to form the two chambers of essentially different materials; in both it was assumed that it would be a fatal mistake to make one a mere double of the other. It was owing to the necessity of avoiding, at all cost, a duplication of the Lower House, combined with their own unsatisfactory experience in the matter of an elective Upper House, that the Canadian statesmen resorted to nomination by the Crown as a means of forming their Senate.

THE COMING RACES.

One of the meritorious qualities which it has pleased Heaven to deny to our Conventions is that of being far-sighted. The vision and the faculty divine of looking into futurity by the light of experience, and providing for probabilities, was not among their otherwise abundant gifts. There were many in their number trained, like Sir Hudibras—

"To sever and divide
A hair, 'twixt north and north-west side," but there were few who seemed to reflect that constitutions are not made for the present, but for all time. If men and things were to be always as we see and know them now, their scheme of government might peradventure stand some chance of lasting for two or three generations, without being knocked out of shape by successive amendments. But how would it be likely to fare when "the people" of this country will mean not the three millions—mostly British—it now holds, but twenty or thirty millions made up of all sorts of European and other races, from the Jew to the Jap—among which possibly the British element may not be the greatly predominant one? Who can be blind to all the indications of coming changes in the identity of "the people?" While on the one hand we see the densely-populated countries of Europe, India, China, and Japan, rapidly increasing their numbers, and on the other the means of transit across the seas as rapidly being cheapened and enlarged, it is useless to shut our eyes to the inevitable consequences, as they must sooner or later affect Australia.

EQUALITY OF HUMAN RIGHTS.

It is all very well to talk about "the exclusion of coloured races," but the coloured races may not, after all, be those we shall have most reason to fear. The internal troubles in the United States arising from the immigration of people from all parts of the world, at the rate of nearly half a million a year, have for many years past notoriously formed one of the greatest evils of their political system. The new arrivals from Europe, protected by the national maxim that "all men are created equal," found no obstacle in obtaining possession of the franchise, and even without it it made their influence felt at elections in many disastrous ways. Their political rights were secured by the constitution itself, which declared that "the right of citizens of the United States to vote, shall not be denied or abridged, by the United States or by any State, on account of race, colour, or previous condition of servitude." Even aliens are allowed to vote in thirteen States at the present day.

UNIVERSAL SUFFRAGE.

Looking forward, as we must when talking of constitutions, to the time when all sorts of nationalities, including every type of race and colour, will become domiciled here, we may well feel uneasy at the prospect when we see the doors of our constitution virtually thrown open to all comers. As it is, manhood suffrage is not much more than a nominal restriction: But even that is likely to be succeeded by adult suffrage at no distant date, and finally by universal suffrage, with or without some shadowy condition of residence. Could we but feel sure of realising the dream that a Federal Government would enable us to prevent the introduction of alien races in large masses, we might look the future in the face with some confidence. But inasmuch as, from the tendency of the age, the example of the United States, and the pressure of internal forces, such a dream is not likely to be realised, it is surely unwise to invite, by the very words of the constitution, the deluge of political troubles with which this country is already threatened.

XVII.—3rd June.

THE BATTLE OF THE STATES.

It is quite in the natural order of things that the discussion of state rights should show some confusion of ideas all round, seeing that any attempt to follow the intricacies of two opposite systems of government, at the same time, must tend to beget confusion in any mind not familiar with both. When, for instance, the question of equal representation in the Upper House is debated, both sides appear to overlook the fact that, under responsible government, the real battle ground for the States, as well as the people, will not be the Upper House but the Lower.

It is not so in America, of course, because there the Executive is not represented in either House of Congress, and consequently its fate does not depend on the voting in either. But here it does, and as the vote which puts a Government in office, or puts it out, must directly affect the State as well as the people, it is in the Lower House that they will seek to concentrate their power. It is there that politicians, like gamblers, struggle for the stakes; and as the keenest struggle will take place over financial questions—that is, the expenditure of money—it is there that the state-rights party will be found most strongly in evidence.

MONEY BILLS.

It does not need much argument to establish this point. We have only to refer to the agonised debates on the subject of money bills to see how the political winds are likely to blow, when a financial question comes to be raised. Speaking in the Assembly the other day, the leader of the Opposition unconsciously showed how the theory of equal representation presents itself to his mind, by giving this illustration:—

"Supposing there was a desire on the part of Western Australia, South Australia, and Tasmania, that the Federal Government should spend £1,000,000 in these colonies, or one of them, and the Federal Government or House of Representatives said: 'No, we will not allow it. We will spend the money in some place other than those colonies.' Under such circumstances, those three colonies could combine and block all legislation, until they obtained their way. I saw quite enough at the Convention to convince me that that could be done."

This is the fashion in which political questions may be said to crystallize themselves by a natural process in the minds of our statesmen. Most of them protest in the most excited manner against any proposal to give the Upper House a right to amend money bills; and why? Seeing that amendments are usually made in the interests of the country, while the bills represent those of a party, the right does not seem a priori dangerous, or even objectionable; while in this particular case there is a special reason in its favour. The States would have to look to the Federal Government for their shares of the Customs "surplus," and therefore would have a vital interest in checking the notorious extravagance of a Lower House.

POLITICAL FINESSE.

Why then should so much and such violent opposition be offered to the bare proposal of an amending power? An innocent student of constitutional history might suppose that our democrats oppose it for the same sort of grave and politic reasons as those that led one House of Commons after another, in the olden time, to protest against any amendment of their money bills by the Lords. "A fico for the phrase!" They are not in the least afraid of the Crown exercising a corrupt influence in the other House for the purpose of screwing taxes out of the people; nor are they troubled about any other constitutional figment.

What they are thinking of is not an empty question of privilege, but a substantial one as to the rights of men in office. Knowing that their House has secured the sole power of levying taxes, authorising loans, and expending the money, they are determined not to yield an inch of ground to the conservative chamber. For where would Ministers of the Crown be if their power of expenditure, on which their popularity, if not their existence, hangs as by a thread, were liable to be checked or thwarted at any moment by a House over which they have no control?

DESPERATE REMEDIES.

Holding such views, or rather animated by such fears and prejudices as these, is it to be supposed that any Minister in esse or in posse, still less his supporters, would calmly agree to "hand over the power of the purse" to the Upper House, composed, as it would be, of independent state-rights men? Not for one moment, whether the small States had equal representation or not, for the simple reason that, in their eyes, office would not be worth having on such terms. Their convictions are so strong on this subject that they even protest against giving it the ancient power to reject a Bill which it may not amend, unless it can be instantly overriden in some manner at present unknown to the constitution.

The operation of this instinct on the political mind is as curious as the movements of an insect under the microscope. The head of the Government and the leader of the Opposition usually agree to differ on every question of the day; but they are both of one mind in thinking that the rejection, or even amendment, of a money bill would cause nothing less than a national crisis in the shape of a deadlock—an evil which could only be cured, they say, by resorting to some desperate remedy. Each paints the disaster in the most lurid colours; and like quack doctors, one urges the patient to try his Magic Referendum medicine, while the other seeks to force his unequalled Norwegian Mixture down his throat.

THE HUNTER AND HIS HOUNDS.

The paramount importance of financial questions, under the form of government presented in the Draft Bill, would in time, no doubt, become its distinguishing feature. The energies of the Federal Parliament would not be absorbed in the discussion of purely political problems, such as the tariff or the franchise, or of simply federal matters, such as uniform laws and river navigation. The central point of interest would be found in the tremendous struggle for money among the States, occasioned by the financial scheme in the first instance, and afterwards by the expenditure of moneys raised on the credit of the Commonwealth.

The position of a Federal Government under such a system would be something like that of the hunter in the picture, seated at dinner and surrounded by his faithful hounds, all waiting for their bones. Squabbles of this kind would assert themselves so continuously every session that no question of "the high politics" could enter into competition with them. We have only to consider the case of a State with a financial grievance to see the sort of complication that might arise at any moment; and as everyone admits the difficulty of devising a satisfactory scheme for the distribution of revenue, the prospect before us is full of confusion and discord.

THE SEVEN WISE MEN.

Since it may, therefore, be considered certain that the smaller States will strive to secure whatever share of power they can, if only as a measure of precaution, it follows that they will use every effort, when the constitution is proclaimed, to obtain equal representation in the Executive. The Draft Bill provides for seven Ministers of State, and to secure one at least of those appointments, every kind of pressure would be brought to bear by each of the six States—supposing there were six in the union. It goes without saying that a Premier, in forming an administration, would see the expediency, or rather necessity, of making himself as strong as possible in the Upper House; and as the easiest way of doing it would be to give each State a representative in his Cabinet, that course would probably be taken. He might depend upon it that any State not so represented would be dissatisfied; and supposing that two or three of them were left out in the cold, he might calculate on having trouble with each and all of them. They would take steps to avenge their wrongs by forming a combination among themselves, ostensibly for the purpose of protecting their State rights. Strong as they would be in the Upper House, they would have it in their power to obstruct his financial measures; and being absolutely indifferent to public opinion in the larger States, their plan of campaign might be carried out in any shape and to any extent that parliamentary forms would allow.

CABINET INTRIGUES.

With such probabilities before us, the doctrine of equal representation in the Upper House seems still more questionable than before. The founders of the American Union never contemplated giving anything more than they did to the smaller States; but here there is every probability that they would in effect get a vast deal more than they do in America, since they would have equal representation in one House, plus an equal share of the Executive power. It is not so stated in the bond, to be sure; but according to our experience of parliamentary government, it would be the probable result. It would be the only means, in fact, by which that form of government could be successfully worked, under such a constitution.

It would come to be a recognised thing that no administration could be formed with any chance of success, unless it had a working majority in both Houses; and if that could be accomplished by any other means than by giving each State a share in it, perhaps someone will point out what those means may be. Under that plan, we might expect to see four Ministers from the larger colonies sitting in one House, and three from the smaller in the other. A Cabinet so formed might go into office with good prospects of success, but what prospect would any Cabinet have before it, if its members were taken exclusively from the larger colonies? Its majority in one House would not enable it to hold office for any length of time, in the face of a determined opposition in the other. A dissolution would not help it.

WRIXON AND GILLIES.

The question of State representation in the Executive Council was alluded to by several speakers in the Convention of 1891; but apparently it was either lost sight of in the clouds of discussion on larger topics, or it was considered too delicate a matter for that stage of the business. Sir Henry Wrixon, a former Attorney-General of Victoria, brought it forward as a means of conciliating the smaller colonies, whose fears had been aroused by the prospect of being over-ridden by a Government formed by New South Wales and Victoria. It was well worth consideration, he thought, whether some provision might not be made in the constitution that not more than a certain number of members from the larger States should be Ministers of the Crown. Something might be done in that direction, he added, to facilitate the formation of a Government composed partly of members from the north, and partly of members from the south.

His colleague, Mr. Duncan Gillies, was inclined to ridicule this idea. He thought that the best check against the over-riding tendency of a Government formed by New South Wales and Victoria, would be found in the opposition that would certainly be offered by jealous rivals from those colonies. His official experience satisfied him that, as soon as any Government was formed, even if it comprised the very best men under Heaven, it would be immediately met with an organised opposition. "If some gentlemen from Victoria were placed in the Government, a number of representatives from that colony would go straight into opposition. That would be the case with respect to every other colony."

A little further on, he succeeded in giving a reason why the smaller States should be represented in the Government: "It is said that, if two large colonies came together, the Ministry would be too powerful for the small ones. But that is not at all likely. There would be a large amount of opposition to a Ministry composed in such a manner. Probably every member from the smaller colonies would consider it such a rank injustice, that he would go into opposition at once."

SIR HENRY PARKES.

Here we have a clear recognition of the difficulties that might be expected by any Government, if the smaller colonies were not satisfied with its composition. They would immediately join the opposition in the larger ones, and in such a case the Government would be placed in a very awkward position. Sir Henry Parkes condemned the idea that a Premier should seek their support by any such means. He could not be justified in taking men into his Cabinet who were personally strangers to himself.

"If he were compelled to take three, four, or five colleagues of whom he had no knowledge, I can only say that no man of high spirit and clear discernment of his duties would accept the office. It would be impossible. How could the administration of affairs be conducted, under our form of Government, unless it was conducted by men who each in the other had the completest confidence?"

It might be very inconvenient for a Premier to form a Cabinet of men who had to be introduced to each other; but it would be much more inconvenient to form one of old chums, who would be met with uncompromising opposition as soon as they took their seats on the Treasury benches. Federation makes strange bedfellows.

XVIII.—10th June.

AN UNPOPULAR SUBJECT.

Speaking of the three great divisions in which the powers of the State are concentrated—the Legislative, the Executive, and the Judicial—the learned Frenchman, Montesquieu, said: "Of these three the Judiciary is next to nothing." That is not exactly the view which a man takes of it when he has to fight his way through one of the law courts, to obtain what he considers his bare right; still less when he has to stand in a dock and plead to an indictment aiming at his life or liberty. But from a political point of view, their Honours the Judges certainly don't count for much, seeing that they have neither honours nor billets to bestow upon their friends, nor any means of getting at the public purse on their behalf.

This little explanation will serve to account for the wonderful indifference shown by the public generally to that part of the federal scheme which provides for the establishment of a new system of judicature, to be administered by a new set of judges. Hardly a word has been said about it outside the Conventions, and even there it seems to have been disposed of in rather a sleepy fashion.

The fact seems to be that the public confines its attention to questions likely to affect its pockets, and only wakes up when the control of the railways, the veto on money bills, the distribution of a Customs "surplus," or some other matter of the kind, is under discussion. All the financial experts in the country start up, as at the sound of a drum, when they hear of debtor and creditor accounts between the federal and the local Governments; and then for weeks together we are deluged with schemes for national bookkeeping "on a sound basis of finance," which somehow or other come to nothing. If only half of the brain labour wasted in this manner were devoted to constitutional questions, the federation problem might have been much further on the road to a solution than it is.

FEDERAL LAW.

The part which the judicial system will play under a Federal Government, so far from being an insignificant or unimportant one, will be quite the reverse. It will, in fact, be the backbone of the whole thing; and if that portion of the federal anatomy should not prove equal to its work, a break-down might lead to a break-up. Under our present form of government, it

it is quite possible to get along comfortably with courts of law in which no one expects to find any signs of eminent judicial power; because whatever blunders they may make affect individuals only, who may seek redress by appeal to the Privy Council. In any case, private wrongs don't make a public calamity.

But the case will be very different when we erect a Court, of a genus hitherto unknown in the country, for the purpose of determining complex questions of constitutional and international law. The consequences of any blundering there would not fall upon individuals, but upon the whole constitution, which might feel the effects of it to its uttermost ramifications. And the evil would be greatly intensified by the fact that there would be no remedy for it in the shape of an appeal to the Privy Council, seeing that all such appeals are to be cut off, except in cases of a purely public nature.

JUDICIAL BUFFERS.

The clauses in the present Draft Bill with reference to the Federal Judicature having been framed on the model of the corresponding sections in the American constitution, it is to be inferred that the "High Court of Australia" is intended to serve similar purposes to those of the Supreme Court in the United States. Its primary function will be the exercise of a veto on all legislation, either of the federal or the local Parliaments, which may be pronounced unconstitutional—that is, inconsistent or conflicting with the text of the federal constitution.

The origin of the Federal Judicature in the United States is matter of history, and deserves to be remembered. The founders of the Union, seeing the necessity for protecting the national Government against the attacks or encroachments of the State Legislatures, had to choose between two courses—either giving the Government a direct veto on their legislation, or establishing a Federal Court for the purpose of interpreting the constitution. They chose the latter, because it averted the conflict between the two Governments, which would have certainly followed from the former.

Bearing in mind that the powers to be conferred upon the High Court are almost word for word the same as those exercised by the Supreme Court in America, a passage from one of Daniel Webster's speeches in the Senate will throw some light on its functions as a buffer between conflicting forces:—

OUR AMERICAN MODEL.

"The Convention of 1787 saw the absolute necessity of some control in the national Government over State laws. Different modes of establishing this control were suggested and considered. At one time it was proposed that the laws of the States should from time to time be laid before Congress, and that Congress should possess a negative over them. But this was thought inexpedient and inadmissible; and in its place, and expressly as a substitute for it, the existing provision was introduced—that is to say, a provision by which the Federal Courts should have authority to overrule such state laws as might be in manifest contravention of the constitution.

"By this provision Congress escaped the necessity of any revision of State laws, left the whole sphere of State legislation quite untouched, and yet obtained a security against any infringement of the constitutional powers of the general government. Indeed, sir, allow me to ask, if the national judiciary was not to exercise a power of revision on constitutional questions over the judicatures of the States, why was any national judicature erected at all? Can any man give a sensible reason for having a judicial power in this Government, unless it be for the sake of maintaining a uniformity of decision on questions arising under the constitution and laws of Congress, and insuring its execution?"

STORMY PETRELS.

The necessity for protecting the Federal Government against invasion may be readily understood by anyone who has observed the temper of our Assembly, in its present session, towards the Convention. Barely eighteen months have gone by since it passed the Enabling Act, which brought that body into existence; and although many members spoke on the subject when it was before them, there was hardly a breath of opposition to the measure. The Draft Bill they have now to consider is essentially the same as that of 1891. The main point of difference between the two lies in the constitution of the Senate; but as that body is now to be elected by the people, instead of by the local Legislature, the difference is not one that can be consistently opposed by any democrat. And yet we see the democratic forces suddenly bursting out in opposition to it, like the fires of a volcano. The moral of the tale is clear enough. If so much antagonism can be shown before this scheme becomes law, how much shall we have afterwards?

STATE REPRESENTATION.

Nothing is said in the Draft Bill about the composition of the High Court, except that it "shall consist of a Chief Justice and so many other justices (not less than four) as the Parliament may from time to time prescribe." But it may be assumed that the same condition of expediency will apply to its composition as to that of the Federal Government; in other words, that each of the united colonies will claim the right of nominating one of the Judges. The claim might be made on two grounds—one, that such a course would be necessary in order to ensure public confidence in the bench; and the other, that local knowledge would be an indispensable qualification in any case.

Everyone can appreciate the feeling which would arise here, for instance, if the Court were constituted without a single Sydney lawyer in it, and a similar feeling would of course exist as strongly in the other colonies. There would be a nice sensation among our people if an Act, passed passed by our Parliament, authorising the Government to divert the waters of the Darling for irrigation purposes, were challenged as unconstitutional before a Court composed exclusively of lawyers from the southern colonies.

No doubt it seems absurd to talk of Judges representing anybody or anything on the bench ; but a hard-headed public would not allow its interests to be jeopardised in deference to a conventional belief in judicial impartiality. The recent appointment of an Australian Judge to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council was conceded by the Home Government on the strength of similar representations ; but they would have much greater force and effect in the case of a local court than in that of a distant tribunal.

On the other hand, it might be said that the chance of judicial harmony prevailing on a bench composed of such materials would be a doubtful one, in cases involving State interests. Each of its members might be supposed to have the usual share of local prejudice, and might even consider it a paramount obligation to look after the interests of his own province.

BUILDING MATERIALS.

This outline of the work to be done by the High Court in maintaining the integrity of the constitution makes it obvious that there will be a great and manifest difference between it and our Supreme Courts ; so great, indeed, that one may be excused for asking, where are the materials for it to come from ? The Draft Bills say nothing about it, and we are left to our own conjectures on the subject.

The court might be shortly defined as a court for the trial of constitutional and international causes, and for hearing appeals from other courts in place of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. Such an institution presupposes that a body of lawyers, of great learning and experience in all branches of the law, more particularly in constitutional and international law, may be found at any moment when required ; and we must assume that the Convention was not troubled by any doubts on the matter, when it framed these remarkable provisions. We are to take it that our High Court, which is henceforth to supplant the Privy Council, will be found quite on a par with it, and also with the Supreme Court of the United States.

HIGH LIVING AND PLAIN THINKING.

So, at least, it would appear on the face of the Bill. But many will recollect that, when this part of it was under discussion in the Convention, and a suggestion was made that the court should be composed of the Chief Justices of the united colonies, the reply was that it would be unwise to tie the hands of the Federal Government in that manner, because, in some instances, the gentlemen holding that position had utterly disappointed the expectations formed of them on their appointment. If this can be publicly said of a Chief Justice, what estimate are we to form of the puisnes ?

Putting that aside, is it not a manifest delusion to suppose that a stronger court can be formed out of existing materials than our present Supreme Courts ? In each colony the members of that court are supposed to be the best men obtainable for their positions ; but if that is a merely conventional idea, how is a similar result to be avoided in the case of the High Court ? The Bill offers no special temptation in the shape of salary ; and there could not be any in the shape of work—except that there might be very little to do—seeing that questions of constitutional and international law are precisely those with which common law and equity barristers are least qualified to deal.

A VERY HIGH COURT.

We are all tolerably familiar with the standing of the Privy Council as a Court of Appeal for the colonies and other possessions of the Empire. But that of the American Court will be better understood than it probably is in this part of the world, if looked at in the light of a description by Webster :—

“It is the peculiar relation of the Supreme Court to the Federal and the State Governments, it is the power which it rightfully holds and exercises of revising the opinions of other tribunals on constitutional questions, as the great practical expounders of the powers of the Government, which attaches to this tribunal the greatest attention, and makes it worthy of the most deliberate consideration. Duties at once so important and so delicate impose no common responsibility, and require no common talent and weight of character. These duties, though essentially judicial, partake something of a political character. The judges are called upon to sit in judgment on the acts of independent States ; they control the will of Sovereigns ; they are liable to be exposed, therefore, to the resentment of wounded sovereign pride ; and from the very nature of our system, they are sometimes called on, also, to decide whether Congress has not exceeded its constitutional limits. Sir, there exists not upon the earth, and there never did exist, a judicial tribunal clothed with powers so various and so important.”

XIX.—18th June.

THE LAWYERS ARE COMING.

Any one who may chance to amuse his leisure hours by dipping into the “Official Report of the National Australasian Convention Debates,” just issued from the Government Printing Office in Adelaide, will probably be struck by the overwhelming predominance of the lawyers who took part in them. Not predominance in point of numbers—although both here and in Victoria six out of the ten delegates were of that class—but in point of volubility and general speaking power. Some of the laymen made more or less vigorous efforts to assert themselves now

now and then—like men struggling in a flood—but the result was rarely effected by their speeches. The professional gentlemen had evidently got the whole thing into their hands, from first to last. But it must be admitted that they listened to their lay brethren most affably; one feels that they——loved to give their little Senate laws,

And list attentive to their own applause.

If they could only have made a special jury of the laymen, and argued each resolution with three counsel on each side, the latter would, perhaps, have felt a little more comfortable, because they would have had the final say on each occasion. This suggestion might be worth considering when the next Convention comes round.

There were lawyers enough at the Convention of '91, but they did not carry everything before them so completely as they did on this occasion. There were some notable figures among the laymen there—as, for instance, Sir Henry Parkes, Sir George Grey, and the other New Zealanders; and the parts they played in it gave a good deal of general interest to it. For one thing, they brought the broader questions involved in federation more prominently into view than their professional colleagues did, and consequently the debates were not so remarkably lopsided as those of '97. If anyone would take the trouble to compare the professional speeches with the non-professional, he would find the difference, in point of space, something like three to one, at the very least.

Perhaps he would also observe a corresponding difference in their material, such as we might expect to find in a conflict between such opposite classes of mind. He could hardly fail to observe the insatiable love of precedent in the legal intellect, manifested in the quiet assumption from the start that the American constitution must be followed here under any circumstances; and that where it does not answer our purposes we must fall back upon the Swiss, the Norwegian, the Canadian, or some other foreign model, to get what we want.

PROFESSIONAL SKILL.

This predominance of the legal element in our federation politics is a sign of the times which requires to be taken into account. It is remarkable for many reasons; mostly so, perhaps, for the fact, that while lawyers in general readily admit their want of experience in those matters which make up nine-tenths of Australian politics—such as the commercial, financial, and industrial questions of the day—political lawyers are notwithstanding accepted by the people as authorities on each and all of them. Their professional capacity for speaking on every question, and on any side of it, at the shortest notice, gets them credit for matured opinions and statesmanlike views on all questions; while their agility in turning double somersaults on a platform naturally begets confidence in their readiness of resource and capacity for meeting emergencies.

Now if they are found to be so predominant as they are in our Conventions, it is perfectly certain that they will not be less so in the Federal Parliament, the Federal Executive, and the Federal High Court. The probability is that they will be a good deal more so. The patriotic spirit in which they have taken up the cause of federation all through the colonies, proves that they are animated by the noble ambition of serving their country in the highest positions it can offer them; and as a federal government would certainly have some very high positions at its disposal, there is reason to believe that they will not have laboured in vain.

A POLITICAL COURT.

Let us take the High Court as a sample. It is to consist of a Chief Justice and not less than four other justices—which will probably mean one for each colony in the Union. When the question of appointments comes up, it will, of course, be held that the most competent men in the country must be selected; and then, as a natural corollary, that the most competent men are those who have most distinguished themselves as federation lawyers. Who so competent to expound the constitution, it will be said, as the men who have had a hand in making it? Such a Court would be of little value unless it was composed of men who, above all things, were constitutional lawyers; but that definition would be held to apply only to those whose names were familiar to the public ear in connection with federation. There might be lawyers on the bench or at the bar who had made that branch of law their special study; but if they had not publicly identified themselves with the national movement, their claims to consideration would hardly be noticed. The whole court, therefore, would most probably be composed of well-known political lawyers, holding seats in the Federal Parliament, with certain claims for services rendered to the commonwealth. In other words, it would be a distinctly political court, and as such a perfectly novel institution.

A DELICATE MATTER.

This estimate of the relative position in which the lawyers would stand towards the first Federal Government is supported by their own view of it, as expressed by some of them in the Convention. An amendment of clause 48, moved by Sir William Zeal, providing that no member of the Federal Parliament should be appointed to any paid office, either while he continued to be one, or within six months of his ceasing to be one, was opposed on the ground that it would tend to prevent certain eminent lawyers from seeking seats in Parliament, because they would thereby imperil their chances of obtaining a judgeship.

“I will point out some very strong reasons,” said a Sydney Q.C., “why we should not put any restrictions of this kind in the measure. I do not think any feeling of false delicacy ought to prevent any member of the legal profession giving expression to his opinions on this matter, and

I intend to very freely. It must be obvious, if you have a limitation of this kind, it will have this effect—it will prevent men of great ability and eminence in the legal profession from seeking positions in political life.

“ I am speaking in the public interest, which demands that you should have on the bench not only men of high legal attainments, but men of broad views and general knowledge; and it would be a sorry day indeed for the commonwealth if they were restricted in the choice of their judges to men who had followed law, and devoted themselves to nothing else. One of the most important qualifications of a judge is that he should have that knowledge of affairs and of human nature which a man acquires in politics, and which, perhaps, in no other school can be gained so well as in the school of politics. If you pass this, you will restrict your selection to men who have had their ambitions restricted to the narrow groove of following the law, and the law only.”

POLITICAL JUDGES.

In support of this claim to a pre-emptive right, the learned delegate asserted that there was no instance, either in England or in these colonies, in which political lawyers, known to be incapable men, had been appointed to the bench. That negative fact, if fact it be, was, in his opinion, sufficient to show that such appointments were not open to question. Here we have a very straightforward contention that political lawyers are the best qualified men for the bench at all times, and that appointments to the High Court should be made exclusively from their ranks. This view of the matter—a new one in judicial ethics—has not been put before the public, certainly not with so much candour, on any former occasion. Novel as it was, it was apparently accepted without any demur by the other delegates. Sir Edward Braddon, so far from seeing any objection to it, in principle, considered it a perfectly fair thing for the political lawyers to claim the appointments in question.

TRUST IN PROVIDENCE.

“ If eminent men who happened to be in Parliament are to be excluded from holding appointments in the first instance—that is, the appointments effected by the first Federal Executive,—this will in all probability exclude a large number of eminent men from that Parliament. There might be, throughout the colonies, half a dozen men who might consider that they would make capable High Commissioners, and they would all stand out by reason of this provision. They would prefer to remain in private life rather than, by entering the Legislature, debar themselves of the worthy object of their ambition. And inasmuch as it is only a partial preventive, as it is only applicable until otherwise ordered by the Federal Parliament, I think we might avoid it altogether, and rather place that confidence in the Federal Parliament and Executive that they at any rate are entitled to, until they show by their actions that they are unworthy of it.”

A VICIOUS PRACTICE.

This lucid argument did not prevent the amendment from being carried on a division by nineteen to eighteen, the Victorian lawyers voting for it and ours against it. There are several points in this discussion which will strike an attentive reader. Some will consider it singular that any lawyer should set forth the claims of his profession upon the Federal Government so boldly, and at so early a stage of the business. Others may feel surprise at any serious attempt to justify one of the most vicious practices of parliamentary government—that of making judicial promotion a reward for political services. Others again, may smile at the assertion that men who divide their time between law and politics, are better qualified for judicial duties than those who confine their attention to law alone.

A NEW FORUM.

But there is another point of far greater importance than any of these things. We have hitherto been accustomed in these colonies to see lawyers of indifferent reputation, whom accident has placed in responsible positions, suddenly elevated to the bench of the Supreme Court for no other reason than the fact that they had rendered political services to a struggling Government. In some of these cases the appointment has passed without public comment; in others it has not; but in all of them the act has more or less shocked the public sense of right and wrong. It is precisely to this practice that the gradual deterioration of the judicial standard in all the colonies may be traced; there is nothing else to which it can be traced.

Now we are met with the assertion that this practice ought to be taken as a precedent by the first Federal Government, and that it ought to begin its career by adopting it as a constitutional principle. Political services ought virtually to become the sole test of judicial qualifications. The High Court of Australia ought to be converted into an exclusively political court—one composed of men who have been half politicians and half lawyers all their lives, and who would owe their appointments to their political rather than their legal merits. No such tribunal has ever been seen before; and should it ever be seen here, it would neither command public confidence, nor fail to be the source of manifold evils in our public life.

XX.—12th July.

CHALK AND CHEESE.

Seeing the prominent part which the political lawyer is likely to play in our federal politics, it may be worth while to consider the possible, as well as the probable, effects of his influence on them when he comes to the fore. Already he has secured such a hold on public confidence that he is everywhere accepted as an authority, even on commercial and financial questions; while his opinions

opinions carry all but judicious weight on constitutional puzzles. Now, as a matter of fact, although it is common enough to see political and constitutional questions jumbled up together as if they were essentially the same, the two things are as different as chalk from cheese.

The training which the political lawyer gets in public life makes him an adept in parliamentary forms, as well as a master of party tactics and electioneering topics; but the very facility he acquires in handling party questions seems to distort his vision, when he comes to face the abstract principles underlying constitutional problems. Perhaps without knowing it, he sees everything through the haze of party politics. Where principles come into conflict with political interests, they are strained and twisted to suit the views of the moment. All the resources of legal ingenuity are brought to bear upon the task, and the real question at issue is so adroitly handled that the public mind is hopelessly muddled about its true bearings.

A CASE IN POINT.

Should anyone be inclined to charge this statement with exaggeration, let him suspend his judgment until he has fully considered the ever-memorable case of George Higinbotham, late Chief Justice of Victoria, and father of all the Tacks and Deadlocks. Among all the political lawyers who have figured in Australian history, no one has taken higher rank, either on the score of ability or character. In his own colony, no local politician ever approached him in point of popularity; nor was anyone ever credited by his admirers with higher powers of eloquence and argument. The influence he acquired was so great that he became pre-eminently the preux chevalier of Victorian politics; and the weight of authority attaching to his name, especially on those constitutional questions with which he was identified, was unequalled. And yet there is abundant evidence, in his own acts and speeches, to show that he was not only a most unconstitutional politician when in office, but that his constitutional theories were mere delusions.

According to the accounts we have of him, there never lived a more amiable character in private life; and yet he had not been three years in office as Attorney-General (in the M'Culloch Ministry of 1863-68) before he contrived to bring about a conflict between the two Houses which split the whole country into hostile factions, ruined the Governor, and inflicted dreadful suffering on society. Nor was he satisfied with these triumphs. Enraged with the adverse criticism of the Colonial Office, he turned his weapons on that department, and attacked it with as much violence as if he had no other end in view than the separation of the colony from the mother country.

Throughout these extraordinary proceedings, his contention was, in a word, that the action of the Government was strictly constitutional, but that it was opposed in a most unconstitutional manner by a contemptible faction in the Legislative Council, seeking to override the will of the people, as expressed by the Government majority in the Assembly.

THE FIRST TACK AND DEADLOCK.

The whole of this wretched struggle turned on a question as to the constitutional right of the Council to reject a money bill—a dispute which has lasted from that day to this, and forms his greatest contribution to Australian history. Entering the House in 1861 as a professed free-trader—a policy he had advocated as editor of the Argus for three years before—he supported a protectionist tariff, carried through the Assembly by his Government early in 1865; and when it became known that there would be a majority against it in the Council, he advised that it should be tacked to the Appropriation Bill.

The Bill being rejected by the Council in July, a nine months' deadlock set in, during which his legal ingenuity was taxed for the purpose of devising ways and means for carrying on the Government. The salaries of certain high officials, including the Ministers, being secured by law, were regularly paid; but no salaries could be lawfully paid to others. There was no money legally available even to keep up the gaol and police establishments.

In the face of such extremities, a constitutional lawyer would have advised his colleagues either to resign or to retrace their steps, abandon their tack, and send the tariff to the Council to be dealt with in the ordinary way. But, although both courses were repeatedly pressed upon him, he stood to his guns resolutely for nine long months, regardless of all the dissension, anxiety, and distress he had brought about.

Acting on his advice, the Government obtained money by collecting the new duties on the resolution of the Assembly for nearly six months, until the illegality of the levy was decided by the Supreme Court. Then they borrowed money from a Melbourne bank, agreeing that the Attorney-General should confess judgment in nominal actions brought by the bank against the Government, to recover the amounts advanced.

CONFERENCE AND COMPROMISE.

The discredit brought upon the Government by these devices at last forced them to abandon their tack. In November, '65, the tariff was brought into the Assembly, and a separate measure passed and sent on to the Council, where it was thrown out. Having obtained a dissolution, they came back in February with a large majority—58 in a House of 78. The tariff was again passed separately and sent on to the Council, where it was thrown out on a point of order. Then they resigned; but the Opposition being unable to form an Administration, M'Culloch was asked to remain in office, and did so. The bill was introduced again in a new session, when a conference was held between the Houses, resulting in a compromise, and in April, '66, the bill became law. But Higinbotham would have nothing to do with a policy of conciliation. He declined to take part in the conference, on the lofty ground that he could not be a party to a compromise, where principle was at stake.

SIR

SIR CHARLES DARLING.

The evil effects of all this strife did not pass away when the deadlock came to an end. It had engendered a state of animosity between the democratic and conservative classes, as well as between the Tack and Deadlock party and the constitutionalists; and there was no disposition on either side to bury the hatchet. In the same month that the tariff was passed, it was announced that the unfortunate Governor, Sir Charles Darling, who had all along acted on the advice of his Ministers, was recalled.

The punishment was no doubt inflicted for the long course of indiscretion he had shown in taking it; but the reason alleged by Mr. Cardwell was a technical one. In a letter covering a petition to the Queen, protesting against his acts and those of his Ministers, which he had received from a number of Executive Councillors, Sir Charles charged them with having treacherously suppressed material facts; and he added that it would be impossible to receive advice from any of them in the capacity of Ministers, without distrust. This was taken to incapacitate him from holding office any longer.

THE SECOND TACK AND DEADLOCK.

M'Culloch and his colleagues could not well do less than champion the cause of a man they had ruined, and accordingly the matter was referred to a select committee of the Assembly. They brought up an address to the unfortunate Governor in which, among other things, they thanked him "for having saved the colony from anarchy;" and they recommended that a grant of £20,000 should be made to Lady Darling. Sir Charles having intimated that the grant could not be accepted until the Home Government had been consulted, the Assembly adopted a petition to the Queen, praying that Lady Darling might be permitted to accept it. The reply was that the acceptance would be regarded as a final relinquishment of the service.

Sir Charles having relinquished, the Government proceeded to carry out the proposal by sending a formal message to the Assembly from the new Governor, Viscount Canterbury, in July, 1867, as a necessary preliminary to a vote. It was pretty well known that the proposal would not be acceptable to the Council; but without any intimation on that point, Higinbotham determined to make them swallow another tack, if possible. The amount was included in the Appropriation Bill, instead of being introduced as a separate measure. The bill was rejected in August, twenty-three members voting against it, and six for it.

Then began the second deadlock, which lasted very nearly a year. During that time the Attorney-General's ingenuity was again exercised to provide ways and means. The old game of confessing judgments was revived and carried on for three or four months, until it was stopped by a decision of the Supreme Court, to the effect that a judgment in such cases did not authorise payment unless Parliament had voted the amount. The Government was then reduced to a state of absolute insolvency, and neither salaries nor other claims were paid. A constitutional lawyer, who had twice led his colleagues into a cul de sac and seen them ignominiously thrashed, might have been expected to resign at that point; but the Attorney-General was made of sterner stuff, and the war went on.

END OF THE DEADLOCK.

Meanwhile there had been a resignation of Ministers, followed by their return to office and a new session, in which the Appropriation Bill was again sent up to the Council with the obnoxious tack, and again rejected. The next move on the board was a dissolution, followed by a general election in February, 1868, and the return of Ministers with a majority of sixty. Before the House met there was another resignation, occasioned by the receipt of a despatch from the Colonial Office, in which the Governor was told that he ought not again to recommend the Darling vote to the Assembly.

Pending the formation of a new Ministry, Higinbotham acted as leader of the House; but no business was done until May, when Sir Charles Sladen took office. The new Government offered to introduce the Darling grant in a separate Bill, as it was understood that it would be passed by the Council in that shape. While this proposal was under consideration, news arrived from England that Sir Charles Darling had re-entered the service. That put an end to the whole dispute; the proposed grant was dropped, and the Appropriation Bill became law.

DON QUIXOTE.

There was only one disappointed person in the colony when the faction fights were over, and that was Higinbotham. Feeling very much like Don Quixote when he had been battered by the mule-drivers, he did not hesitate to express his disappointment. It was eminently unsatisfactory to him that the grand constitutional question he had raised had not been decided in his favour, and that the Council carried off all the honours of war. The Home Government evidently thought they were right, and that was enough to set him against the Home Government; and in several speeches of enormous length—"great political orations," say his admirers—he developed the most extravagant of all his theories.

The grant of parliamentary government to Victoria, he argued, carried with it absolute independence in the conduct of its internal affairs; the Governor became a constitutional Sovereign, bound to act on the advice of his Ministry, and the "person named Rogers" had no right whatever to interfere in their local politics by criticising his conduct in despatches, still less by censuring or recalling him. Interference of this kind was most unlawful, and ought to be resented. They should suspend their diplomatic relations with the Colonial Office, until it agreed to address its communications solely to the Victorian Ministers.

ON MONEY BILLS.

Extravagant as all this declamation was, it was quite in a line with his views on the money bill question. He held that, although the Council had a legal right to reject such a bill under the Constitution Act, they had no constitutional right to do so—that being the view held by the House of Commons as regards the Lords. But, even taking that to be the received doctrine in England, what had the usage of the English Parliament to do with the matter as it stood in Victoria, where the law, framed as it was with full knowledge of English usage, expressed itself in clear terms?

The Act which gave the Council the right to reject, gave it both the legal and the constitutional right. How could a Constitution Act give a legal right that was not also a constitutional one? It could not be construed as giving one without the other—the form without the substance—especially when defining the rights of an elective body. The analogy on which he rested his contention did not apply; for what analogy could there be between two Houses framed on such opposite principles—one governed by ancient usage, the other by written law?

It was an equally unfounded contention that because the Council was elected on a narrower franchise than the Assembly, it was not entitled to exercise its legal rights. If it was not intended to do so, the Constitution Act might as well have declared that all money bills passed by the Assembly should become law on receiving the Royal assent.

CHECKS AND BALANCES.

The reason, as well as the necessity, for giving a power to reject, must be apparent to any one who will look into the question with unprejudiced mind. Every constitution of the English type implies a system of checks and balances, as indispensable to its proper working. If a certain power be given to one branch of the Legislature, there must be a corresponding power in the other to act as a check, and so produce an even balance between the two.

In the case of money bills, the sole power to originate, vested in one House, is expressly made subject to the power of the other to reject, for otherwise there would be no means of checking the known tendency of a popular Assembly to an extravagant use of its powers in matters of finance. A second Chamber without any power of the kind would have little more than a nominal existence, stripped as it would be of its most important and most necessary function. Had our Council, for instance, exercised its undoubted right in these matters, as it should have done during the last forty years, it might have saved the colony something like half its public debt.

DEADLOCKS AND STRIKES.

Of no man could it be more truly said than of Higinbotham that “the evil men do lives after them; the good is oft interred with their bones.” It would have been well for Victoria if, when he finally retired from politics in '76, utterly disgusted with the waste of fifteen years, all the evil work he had done had been buried and forgotten. The colony might then have escaped the terrible struggles brought about by the efforts of his successor, Graham Berry, to carry out his policy of tacks and deadlocks.

It might have escaped, too, all the agony of the maritime strike of '90, to say nothing of many similar conflicts between labour and capital. There is no difficulty in tracing the connection between strikes and deadlocks; for what was a deadlock in Higinbotham's hands but a strike? He showed his sense of the identity of the two things when he, then Chief Justice of Victoria, sent his cheque for £50 to be placed “to the credit of the strike fund,” with a promise of £10 a week while the strikers were awaiting a conference with the Employers' Union. Did any judge ever so forget himself?

A FETISH.

A ludicrous proof of the infatuation with which party politicians cling to their constitutional theories—some might call them fads—may be seen in the debates of the two Conventions, when the old war-cry of the sixties was raised again by the Victorian delegates. One of them, writing his eulogy of the departed leader not long since, attributed the greater command of the question shown by them in '91 to his masterful and never-to-be-forgotten influence. The words are worth quoting:—“Even in the Convention of 1891, it was noticeable that the relations of the two Houses were discussed coldly, and on mere academic grounds, by all the representatives of the other colonies, with perhaps two exceptions; while the Victorians, one and all, flung themselves into the discussion con amore, and with the readiness of men experienced in the question.”

Experience hadn't made them wise, at any rate; and we might infer that they would be equally ready, one and all, to fling themselves into another deadlock in the first session of the Federal Parliament. The best thing said about the question in '91 came from Sir Samuel Griffith. The discussion reminded him of a mysterious fetish of great sanctity, brought from New Guinea to Brisbane, and opened in his presence. It was wrapped up in a great many folds of sacred cloth which, when carefully unrolled, with trembling fingers, was found to contain nothing more dreadful than an ordinary pebble.

XXI.—22nd July.

CUTTING THE PAINTER.

One of the many remarkable features in the Draft Bills is the proposed abolition of the right of appeal to the Privy Council, except in cases of a public nature. It was opposed in both Conventions. In 1891 Sir Henry Wrixon made an effort to retain the right in private cases, but was was defeated by a small majority of two, the votes being nineteen to seventeen. In 1897 a similar effort was defeated by a larger majority, the votes being twenty-two to twelve. On both occasions the lawyers were divided in opinion, but the abolition party had apparently gained some strength in numbers in the interval, without a corresponding strength in argument.

Their train of reasoning was much more amusing than one would expect to find it. Sir John Downer appeared to think that, as we are going to form a nation, we ought to begin by cutting the connection with the Privy Council as far as possible. Mr. Reid despaired of ever getting scientific law by means of appeals to that body, and would therefore be prepared to take unscientific law from the Federal Court. Mr. Symon insisted that, if we allowed litigants to choose between it and the Privy Council, it might as well shut up, because it would have little or nothing to do. Mr. Higgins asserted that "the object of the clause was simply to stereotype in the Act what has already existed in Canada, where there is a general right of appeal to Her Majesty-in-Council, but that right is not allowed unless the cases are of public interest." (Mr. Bourinot, on the other hand, who ought to know something about the Canadian constitution, states that there is no such provision in it, but that appeals are allowed in all civil cases, public and private.) Mr. Higgins also referred to the case of a poor woman in Victoria who had recovered damages for injuries sustained on a railway; but on appeal to the Privy Council the judgment was reversed, and the poor woman was ruined!

THE BILL OF COSTS.

These points appear to be a fair sample of the views held by the abolition party. That they did not offer more substantial reasons for them may possibly have been owing to accidental circumstances—such as those referred to by Sir John Downer when he said, speaking of judges and their decisions, that sometimes "it depends almost on the meal a man may have had, as to the manner in which he shall decide." The argument on this question may, therefore, have been seriously affected by the banquet of the night before. Taking it as we find it, it does not appear to be altogether worthy of the occasion.

One of the first points that ought to have been made clear, relates to the question of expense. It ought to have been shown that the public interest, as represented by the litigants, would not be seriously prejudiced by the change. But on that point the evidence was altogether against it, and no attempt was made to rebut it. The Chief Justice of Tasmania, in the course of a letter in which he stated his objections to the change, referred to the question of expense as follows:—

"The appeal (to the High Court) would be more expensive. The expense of counsel coming from one colony to another is heavy—150 guineas is the lowest sum paid for counsel coming from Melbourne to Tasmania, and I have known £800 paid. In England, £25 to £50 are fair leaders' fees in ordinary appeals to the Privy Council. The solicitors' costs in England, as well as the counsels' fees, are more moderate than those charged and allowed in Australia."

OUR LAWYERS.

Appellants in New South Wales seem to be a good deal worse off in that respect, according to Mr. Carruthers, than they are in Tasmania. He said:—

"When you come to the question of fees to be paid to counsel, I will undertake to say that they will be much higher than you would have to pay in London. You will have to pay them for travelling. We have so few men at the Bar to take great cases in hand, that they almost put whatever fee they like upon their services, and those fees are often enormous. If you go to the English Bar, you have the choice of two thousand men of great ability; and our experience is that the Privy Council cases are not expensive. The reverse is the case; the great bulk of the expense is incurred in the trial of the cases here."

Mr. Dobson, of Tasmania, gave his experience on the subject to the same effect:—

"The fees at home are one-third less than they are here. I can show my bills going back for the last thirty years; and on the question of cheapness it is much better to go to England than to go to an Australian Court of Appeal."

FREETRADE IN LAW.

From this point of view, therefore, one result is that the litigant appealing to the Federal Court would have to pay at least fifty per cent. more than he does now, and that for the privilege of going to an inferior court, with an increased risk of losing his case. In the face of this awkward fact, it is difficult to understand what Mr. Reid meant when he said: "We have to look at this matter in the interests of the mass of persons who are engaged in litigation. Looking at this mass of persons and their interests, I believe that the Federal Court would be a decided boon to those persons."

Perhaps it would be more correct to say that, looking to the mass of lawyers all over Australia and their interests, the new court would be a decided boon to some of them. It would at least be a step in the direction of Mr. Reid's favourite policy, of encouraging native industry, excluding foreign competition, and keeping the money in the country. But as political lawyers do not look at broad public questions in the light of class interest, or professional prejudice, his argument makes it all the more difficult to understand their action in this matter.

A PLEA FOR UNITY.

Observe, again, how lightly the argument on the importance of maintaining unity of law throughout the Empire was treated. It was urged by Sir Joseph Abbott, and supported by an ably written letter from the late Mr. Justice Richmond, of New Zealand. He dwelt upon the advantages advantages arising from it as between England and the colonies, and the inconvenience that would be felt if conflicting rules of law were suffered to grow up between them. The probable effect of establishing a court not bound to follow English precedents was described as follows:—

“There will always be the feeling that we have two final courts; one in England for the whole British Empire, with the exception of Australasia; and one in Australia for the Commonwealth alone. This will cause a feeling in Australasia amongst a large class of people that they have not got the same rights as the rest of the people of the Empire. The Supreme Courts at present are not free to give their opinions as they think fit, for they have to follow the law as laid down in England.

“If we establish this Federal Court, and take away the right of appeal to the Privy Council, it will have to establish its own precedents and its own laws, following or disregarding the Privy Council as it thinks proper. The Privy Council is the Supreme Court of the British Empire; all its decisions are held in respect, and although they may not be agreed with, our courts must follow them. They have not got to strike out a path for themselves; but this Federal Court will do just as it likes, when it knows that there is no review of its decisions. Let us once set up this court of our own, not bound by any decisions of the Privy Council, and it will never command the respect which the Supreme Courts at present command throughout Australia.”

He might have asked whether it was quite consistent on the part of those who offer “uniformity of laws” among the colonies, as one of the advantages to be obtained by federation, to destroy the far more important uniformity hitherto maintained between England and the colonies. This is just the sort of exchange that Abe Lincoln had in view, when he advised his friends not to swop horses in the middle of a stream.

AN UNBRIDLED COURT.

Sir John Downer met the argument on uniformity by pointing to the experience of America, which had set up its final Court of Appeal as a part of its constitution, and yet had shown no tendency to provoke a conflict between American and English law. This was a candid admission of the influence of American example; but he qualified it by saying, “We shall follow English precedents.” A similar declaration was tendered by Mr. Symon.

The majority of twenty-two were satisfied with these assurances; but surely vague assurances do not touch the question. It is likely enough that the Federal Court would treat the judgments of the Privy Council with respect; but if it were not bound to follow them, what security would the public have for the soundness of its law? There would be none at all. It is not to be taken for granted that a new colonial court, holding itself free to act as it might please, and not subject to any sort of check, would command anything like the confidence inspired by the Privy Council.

THE AMERICAN MODEL AGAIN.

We do not need Sir John’s admission to see the source of all this trouble. The debate makes it evident that the framers of the constitution found themselves in a little dilemma in their efforts to construct a federal court on American lines. Taking the Supreme Court of the United States as their model, how could they avoid making it a final Court of Appeal, as far as possible? They would have been only consistent if they had proposed to abolish the appeal to the Privy Council altogether. To allow it in public and not in private cases is to make a compromise; but it was the only way out of the dilemma. For what would the position of the High Court be, if the right were allowed to continue as it is? Possibly its performances might not prove equal to its pretensions; and if it should chance to be overruled, even in one important case, the whole federal constitution might be shaken by the blow.

It would not take much experience of that kind to shake public confidence in a court which, at the outset, would be regarded as a risky experiment. A Court of Appeal is supposed to be composed of judges of higher standing and larger experience than those whose judgments it is authorised to review; but here there are no materials for such a court. Five men taken from the Bar would not command more weight than the six Supreme Court Judges in Victoria, or the seven in New South Wales; and the position would not be improved if the five were selected from the different benches. It would necessarily be a weak court in comparison. An imposing title would not make it a strong one; nor could it become strong in public estimation until, in the course of years, it had made a record for judicial power.

JUDICIAL WEAKNESS.

If, indeed, the abolition party had opened up new ground by saying plainly that they were not satisfied with the Supreme Courts, and that they proposed to set up a stronger tribunal, specially qualified to deal with constitutional and international law, there would have been some reason for their action. It could not be denied that these courts have shown, in several well-known instances, a singular degree of weakness when called upon to determine cases of that kind—singular enough, at any rate, to create a general feeling of thankfulness that they are subject to the jurisdiction of the Privy Council. It will be sufficient to mention one or two of these cases, just to show the difference between English and colonial methods of administering law.

AH TOY’S CASE.

In the year 1888, a ship having arrived in the port of Melbourne with 268 Chinamen on board, being 254 in excess of the number she was entitled to carry, the Government prohibited any of them from landing who were not British subjects. The Collector of Customs carried out this instruction, whereupon an action was commenced against him by one of the excluded, known as Ah Toy, to recover damages for having been wrongfully prevented from landing. It was agreed that the result of the action should be determined by the decision of the Full Court on a question of law raised by the pleadings—whether, as the defendant alleged, the plaintiff had been rightfully prevented from landing by virtue of the prerogative of the Crown to exclude aliens, duly exercised by Her Majesty's responsible Ministers for Victoria; either party to have leave to appeal.

The six judges assembled to hear the arguments pro and con, as they were advanced from day to day by several learned counsel on each side, and afterwards delivered their reserved judgments. They were divided in opinion, four of them being in favour of plaintiff's claim, and two against it. Their Honours, treating the matter as one involving the powers of Victorian Ministers under the Constitution Act, entered into a very profound and very lengthy examination of the subject. The question whether the constitution conferred such powers as those exercised by her Majesty's Ministers in England, and whether the Victorian Ministers were responsible Ministers or not, were answered in the negative by a majority of four to two, mainly on the ground that the Constitution Act did not describe them in those terms. And so Ah Toy had judgment against the Crown, subject to appeal as aforesaid.

COLONIAL LAW.

There was joy in Little Bourke-street when this great decision became known among the Chinamen. The bosses who had found the money for the lawyers served out opium to all hands; for were there not 253 other actions ready to be brought against the Crown, with heavy damages in sight? It was "all Lombard-street to a China orange" that they would win the day; and they smiled as they thought of the Government that their lawyers had put in a hole. But, as Confucius says, he who goeth gleefully to law in the morning, cometh back at night with a heavy heart; and so it happened even in this simple case.

ENGLISH LAW.

When it came before the Privy Council, and the learned judgments of the Victorian judges had been read, the Lord Chancellor asked the learned counsel for the Chinamen what authority there was for contending that an alien had a right, enforceable by action, to enter British territory against the will of the local Government? The question puzzled them; for there was nothing about it in their briefs. It had not been asked in the court below, the judges and the lawyers having confined themselves to the Constitution Act. Neither had thought of looking beyond it, or outside it. Counsel for the Chinamen made the best fight they could for their clients; but as they could not show any kind of precedent for such an action, the bottom was knocked out of their case, and their lordships reversed the judgment.

There was no more joy in Little Bourke-street when this view of the case was cabled out to the newspapers; and to this day it is said that no Chinaman in Victoria can be found to place any faith in Melbourne lawyers. "No savee," they say, when the subject is touched upon. But the Melbourne lawyers are not so sensitive. During the High Court debate in the Convention, Mr. Higgins had the courage to contend that the Privy Council is not to be compared with our Supreme Courts in point of legal ability. "It is not an English court; it is like a back-water of the English law, and the English courts refuse to be bound by its decisions. It must not be thought that, by this proposal, we are cutting ourselves off from the stream of British law."

Here a happy thought struck him, and he asked: "Is it true that these colonies can get better law and justice from the Privy Council than from their own Supreme Courts? I remember the case of a poor woman," &c.

Did he remember Ah Toy's?

XXII.—30th July.

RESPONSIBLE MINISTERS.

The scare created among Melbourne politicians by the decision of the Victorian Supreme Court in Ah Toy's case, on the question whether Ministers of the Crown were responsible Ministers or not, was one of those things which, as novelists say, can be better imagined than described. If they could not stop an alien Chinaman from landing on their territory, what was there they could do, outside ordinary departmental business?

It was true that Chief Justice Higinbotham held that they were not only responsible Ministers, but that "they, and they alone, had the right to influence, guide and control the Governor in the exercise of his constitutional powers"—by which he meant that the Colonial Office had no right to do so; "that their functions were co-extensive with those of Ministers in England; and that they had a legal right and duty to do everything which, in their opinion, was necessary or expedient for the conduct of public affairs and the welfare of the people."

But, as he was in a minority, and this question did not come before the Privy Council, the matter remained as it stood before it went to England; and it still remains in the same position. In other words, Ministers in Victoria do not stand on the same footing as Ministers in England; they are not responsible in the eye of the law.

To avert such a calamity in the case of the Federal Executive, Sir Henry Wrixon urged in the '91 Convention that the word "responsible" should be inserted in the clause of the Draft Bill dealing with the functions of Ministers. He referred to Ah Toy's case in support of his motion; but Sir Samuel Griffith, not being much in love with responsible Government, objected to use that particular word, and substituted the rather roundabout phrase "and they shall be the Queen's Ministers of State for the Commonwealth." These words are retained in the present Bill.

INTERNATIONAL

INTERNATIONAL LAW.

Ah Toy's case may be taken as a fair specimen of the style in which constitutional law is administered in Victoria. Let us now see how a simple question of international law may be dealt with in New South Wales. Luckily there is at hand a specimen case, which presents some interesting features.

In the year 1872 one John McLeod was married at Darling Point, near Sydney, to Mary Manson; but the marriage did not prove a happy one, and after some years he left the colony and his wife behind him, travelled to the United States, obtained a decree of divorce, and in 1889 was married to Mary Elizabeth Cameron in Missouri. From the States he travelled back to the South Seas, and settled in the little town of Napier, in New Zealand.

Post equitem sedet atra cura. In the following March he was arrested on a warrant issued in Sydney under the Fugitive Offenders Act, and charged with bigamy. An application for a writ of habeas corpus was made to the Chief Justice, who, after hearing the facts and arguments on both sides, ordered his discharge, on the ground that the offence, if committed at all, was not committed within the jurisdiction of the courts of New Zealand or of New South Wales. He was no sooner released than he was again arrested on a charge—apparently fictitious—of having attempted to commit a rape, put on board a steamer, and taken to Sydney. This charge was dismissed; but he was again arrested on the original one of bigamy, and committed for trial.

THREE YEARS' HARD.

The case was heard at the Quarter sessions at Darlinghurst, before District Judge Forbes and a jury, when his counsel endeavoured to get an acquittal on the strength of the American decree of divorce; but the judge refused to admit it in evidence, and a verdict of guilty was returned. He was sentenced to three years' imprisonment, with hard labour; but several points of law having been raised on his behalf, the case was sent up to the Supreme Court, where it was argued in July, 1890, before three judges. The conviction was confirmed; but, luckily for the prisoner, the learned judges got up an argument on quite another question—to wit, whether they had power, when evidence was improperly admitted, to confirm a conviction, if they were of opinion that there was sufficient proof of the crime, apart from such evidence. Having differed in their opinions on this knotty point, two holding that they had the power and one that they had not, the prisoner obtained leave to appeal to the Privy Council.

WHEN IS A FLAW NOT A FLAW?

Thus the case passed through two courts here without any objection having been taken to the jurisdiction in either, although it was manifest on the record that the alleged offence had been committed in another country, and therefore could not be within their jurisdiction. Such a flaw in the indictment could hardly have escaped the notice of a lawyer's clerk; but the reason why it was not noticed in our courts was that all the lawyers concerned were satisfied that the flaw was not a flaw, and that the courts had jurisdiction by statute to try such cases. The chain of reasoning by which they arrived at that singular conclusion requires a little explanation.

GRETNA GREEN.

An Act of Parliament, passed in '28 for the purpose of consolidating some branches of the old criminal law of England, and expressly limited to England, contained a clause to the effect that, if any person committed bigamy in England or elsewhere, and should afterwards be apprehended in any "county" in England, he might be tried in that "county." The main object of this provision was to check the prevalent practice of crossing the Border in order to contract a second marriage, and to facilitate the trial of such offenders by rendering it unnecessary to send the cases for trial to the place in which the offence was committed. An ancient rule of the common law required that all crimes should be tried in the place where they were committed, before a jury chosen from the neighbourhood.

Later in the same year, Parliament passed another Act—a sort of Constitution Act for New South Wales—which directed that all laws then in force within the realm of England should be applied in the administration of justice in the colony, so far as the same could be applied. From that time to the trial of McLeod's case our Judges, altogether misconceiving the purport of the Acts, have held that the bigamy clause was in force here. They interpreted it as meaning that if any person committed that offence, either in New South Wales or in any other part of the world, and was caught in this colony, he might be forthwith tried for it in Sydney.

JUDGE-MADE LAW.

This is, perhaps, the most remarkable specimen of judge-made law to be found in our history. By simply substituting "New South Wales" for England, and "country" for "county," the judges assumed a jurisdiction in cases of bigamy which they would not have done in cases of murder, and thus the courts at Darlinghurst exercised a power unknown to the Queen's Bench. In how many cases the law was administered on this principle, or how many men were sent to gaol under it, is known only to the Recording Angel; but a fair sample of the lot may be seen in Packer's case, reported in our law reports. He was tried and sentenced in Sydney, in 1864, on a charge of bigamy committed in Tasmania. Three Judges laid down the law in the most absolute terms:—"The word England must be read as if it were New South Wales." And so a man whom they had no legal right to touch was sent to gaol for seven years, absolutely without any valid warrant of law.

A BIT OF BACON.

Some such cases as these were probably present to the mind's eye of Francis Bacon when he penned this passage :—

“There is an inconvenience of penal laws obsolete and out of use, for that it brings a gangrene, neglect, and habit of disobedience upon other wholesome laws that are fit to be continued in practice and execution ; so that our laws endure the torment of Mazentius—the living die in the arms of the dead.”

It was a natural consequence of these decisions that when our criminal laws came to be consolidated and amended in '83, the extravagant claim of jurisdiction thus set up was embodied in it. As if to add to the absurdity of the thing, the language chosen was as ungrammatical as the principle was unsound :—

“Whosoever, being married, marries another person, during the life of the former husband or wife, wheresoever such second marriage shall take place, shall be liable to penal servitude for seven years.”

BEFORE THE PRIVY COUNCIL.

McLeod's appeal was heard in July, '91, before five judges—Lord Chancellor Halsbury, Lord Watson, Lord Macnaghten, Lord Hobhouse, and Sir Richard Couch—both sides being represented by counsel. The case for the appellant turned on the question of evidence sent up by the Supreme Court ; but as soon as the facts were stated, the judges asked for argument as to the jurisdiction. The Crown counsel, fully instructed from the Crown Solicitor's Office in Sydney, exhausted their ingenuity in supporting it, contending that the courts had jurisdiction by virtue of the several statutes mentioned.

The absurdity of the claim was mildly exposed in their lordships' judgment, delivered by Lord Halsbury, in which they endeavoured to let the Supreme Court down as gently as possible. Construing these words as they stand, they said, they mean that any married person who marries a second time anywhere in the habitable globe is amenable to the criminal jurisdiction of New South Wales, if they can catch him. That seems a construction so entirely absurd that no one can gravely put it forward ; they can have no such jurisdiction, nor could the colonial Legislature enlarge their jurisdiction to such an absurd extent. It would be equally inconsistent with their powers, and with the most familiar principles of international law.

To avoid so ridiculous a conclusion, their lordships would construe the words “whosoever” and “wheresoever” in a strictly local sense, as applied to persons amenable to the jurisdiction, and to offences committed within the colony. On any other interpretation, the clause would be ultra vires and invalid. All crime is local ; the jurisdiction over it belongs to the country where it is committed.

AN ANGRY JUDGE.

All this seems such very elementary law that the idea of the Privy Council being called upon to expound it, seems ludicrous. It seems still more ludicrous that, after the decision was made known here, one of the Supreme Court judges who heard the case should have rushed into print with a letter, in which he attacked the Privy Council on the score of its ignorance of New South Wales law. For some years previously, he had publicly deplored its need of instruction on that subject, and had urged the appointment of an Australian judge in the capacity of colonial adviser to the Judicial Committee.

“This case,” he remarked, “singularly confirms what I said in the case of Tooth v. Power, as to the importance of the colonies being represented on the Judicial Committee by a colonial judge or judges, having such an acquaintance with colonial laws as would prevent that final Court of Appeal from falling into mistakes so grave as that now before us.”

At the time this remarkable letter was written (September, '91) the proceedings of the Convention were fresh in men's minds, and he referred to them in connection with this case :—

“It would be well if our legislators,” he wrote, “when dealing with the proposal of the Convention to establish a Federal Court of Appeal, the decisions of which should be final in dealing with cases of purely colonial concern, were to examine the decision of the Privy Council in the case of the Queen v. McLeod.”

AFTER MANY DAYS.

How aptly those words, written nearly six years ago, apply at the present moment ! Our legislators are about to deal with the proposal of another Convention to establish a Court of Appeal of the kind described, and it would be well indeed if they would take the trouble to examine the case. It might be fairly taken as a test case on the question, whether our people should be deprived of the right of appeal to the Privy Council when life, liberty, or property is at stake, and left to take their chance at the bar of a local court. Had such a case gone before any Australian Court of Appeal, it is fair to assume that it would have been disposed of as it was in the Supreme Court here, and that the vital principle at stake would have been left untouched.

NARROW GROOVES.

The case is especially valuable for the light it throws on the genesis of judge-made law in the colonies, as well as its probable value ; and also for the proof it affords of the tendency of colonial judges to get into narrow grooves of thought, from which they cannot extricate themselves. The tenacious character of their own precedents shows itself with peculiar force in the judge's letter, in which he boldly justified the claim to jurisdiction, in the face of the Privy Council's decision. Here are some of his reasons :—

“The British Legislature doubtless saw that bigamy was a crime very likely to be committed abroad after a man had deserted his wife, and that it would very likely go unpunished if the injured spouse had to go to a foreign court to prosecute for the crime ; hence the very reasonable provision of the statute that any British subject may be prosecuted for bigamy in England, though his offence be committed abroad.”

This

This is exactly what the Privy Council said could not be done by any statute, English or colonial. The statute in question, moreover, did not use the word "abroad," or any word equivalent to it. The letter went on to say:—

CRIMINAL LOGIC.

"This statute having come into force in this colony on its foundation, by virtue of the provisions of the New South Wales Act, 1828, the Supreme Court held in Packer's case, 27 years ago, that the provisions of the English Act as to bigamy were in force here; and ever since that case this most salutary provision has been acted upon. Were it otherwise, the roaming class which is so common in the colonies would be able to commit bigamy with comparative impunity, by doing so outside the colony, and might then return with bigamous partners to outrage by their presence the lawful spouse, who might be unable to travel a thousand miles to a neighbouring colony to punish the wrongdoer."

Apply this line of reasoning to other crimes, and see where it lands us. The roaming class, it might be said, can now go to other colonies, commit burglaries there, and then return to outrage us by their presence in Sydney. Therefore, burglaries being much more common than bigamies, let us by all means have a salutary provision to guard against that danger. If the judge's reasoning is good in one case, it must be good in all. There cannot be an unlimited jurisdiction for a particular crime, and a limited one for all the rest.

There is a nice subject for reflection in the fact that this sort of thinking machinery should have been at work for so many years, in making and administering our laws; and that with such experience before us, it is now seriously proposed to do away with the only safeguard that exists against similar experience in years to come.

XXIII.—10th August.

MORE NUTS TO CRACK.

It is not necessary to multiply such cases as Ah Toy's and McLeod's, in order to show that, when questions of constitutional and international law come to be dealt with, the Australian courts are not always as reliable as they should be. The reason is plain. Such questions are of comparatively rare occurrence in them; they are almost exclusively occupied with private litigation and criminal business, and consequently there is no field for the specialists found in Europe and America, who are recognised authorities on public law. In other words, we have many lawyers but no jurists.

A different state of things would, in course of time, arise under federation. The relations between the central and the local governments would inevitably give rise to complicated questions as to the interpretation of the constitution, and the validity, or constitutionality, of laws passed by the different Parliaments, which would come before the Federal Court. But, inasmuch as that court would be composed of the same material as the present benches, what prospect would there be of its proving better qualified for the work than any Supreme Court of the present day?

A BACK WATER.

On the other hand, the same line of reasoning that justifies a distrust of an Australian Court of Appeal, impels us to place confidence in the Privy Council. There we have a body of men specially trained to handle those questions which lie outside the domain of an ordinary court of justice, occupied with contracts and torts all the year round—men whose long experience in connection with them gives a weight to their decisions that could not attach to those of any colonial court. When Mr. Higgins spoke of the Judicial Committee as being "like a back-water of the English law," and not the main stream, his image, pictorial but deceptive, showed a complete misapprehension of their functions.

As a Court of Appeal, their primary duty is to interpret local constitutions and local laws—in other words, to form a body of colonial law for the guidance of local courts; and in that respect they might be said to resemble a "back-water." But since the law they lay down is, so far as principles are concerned, the same as that of the superior courts, they represent the main stream fully as much as they do. How can it be otherwise, considering the men of whom the committee is composed? The Lord Chancellor and the four Lords of Appeal, who take part in their work, sit also in the House of Lords on appeal cases; and unless they so lay down different law in the two courts, the decisions of the Privy Council must necessarily proceed pari passu with those of the House of Lords. It would be just as correct to speak of the Lords as a "back-water," because they take appeals from Scotland and Ireland.

OLD JOKES.

Some of the lawyers in the Convention indulged in a good deal of joking at the expense of their lordships, representing them as a collection of worn-out old judges altogether behind the time. These jokes belong to a period when the Judicial Committee was in its infancy, and had not achieved the reputation it now holds throughout the Empire. But even fifty years ago, Lord Brougham, who framed the Act which brought it into existence, was justified in saying what he did of it in his "History of the Constitution":—

"It has been admitted, even by those who first objected, that this body has worked admirably. From the variety of its judges, and from some being always present, uniformity of decision is preserved; while, whatever be the nature of the case coming before it, judges may easily be obtained of the peculiar qualifications required well to decide each."

ALL

ALL-ROUND JUDGES.

In this respect the Privy Council possesses an advantage that no other court in the world can be said to have. Here, for instance, the ordinary rule is that cases of a special nature are taken by judges without any special qualifications to match, generally with the result of increased litigation in the shape of appeals. Just as we may see judges who never held a brief in a criminal case, when at the Bar, presiding over a criminal court with perfect composure, so it happens in civil cases involving all kinds of technical knowledge to which lawyers are strangers. The litigant, like the prisoner, has to take his chance, instead of his choice, of the judge's qualifications; hence the uncertainty that surrounds decisions in special cases, and the longing for appeal to a higher court.

But this objection does not apply to the Privy Council, for the reason stated by Brougham—that from the very nature of its constitution, the judges can avail themselves of any kind of judicial experience that may be wanted. The legal profession in the colonies cannot furnish specialists of high renown to meet every class of cases that may arise, because the same division of labour does not exist in them that is found in England. This defect, or deficiency, is just as visible in law as it is in the arts and sciences, in which it is often found that certain processes cannot be worked here, because the requisite skill and appliances are not obtainable on the spot.

THE LOCAL KNOWLEDGE THEORY.

Comparisons may be odious; but when so many persistent attempts are made to disparage the Judicial Committee, it becomes necessary to consider not only the grounds on which they are made, but the prospect of obtaining a better class of judges in their place. When an outcry was first raised against them in some quarters, the cause of dissatisfaction was said to be the want of local knowledge displayed in their judgments. Their lordships, it was said, did not know anything about our Land Acts, and consequently made many "grave mistakes" in interpreting them. But in all that was said on this subject, not one instance was pointed out which would really justify the charge. The sort of argument that prevailed may be seen in the following passage of a letter published by a learned Q.C. in a Sydney daily three years ago. Just at that time, by the way, a movement was on foot for the appointment of one of our judges to the Privy Council.

A QUEER COVE.

"It seems to me impossible that gentlemen, however highly trained legally, can, without a fair knowledge of the conditions existing in the interior of Australia, interpret laws which have been made with a full knowledge of those conditions. And that their knowledge (i.e., the Judicial Committee's) is somewhat limited, is shown by the case of Barton v. Muir, in which their lordships said in their judgment: 'The circumstances of climate and soil and products in New South Wales are essentially different from those of Queensland.'"

This is such a comical illustration that at first sight it might be taken as a sly dig at the movement it professed to support. But the learned Q.C. was not a humourist. He solemnly believed in his own mind that the circumstances of climate, soil, and production in New South Wales are essentially the same as those of Queensland, and that bananas would grow and ripen as plentifully round Sydney as they do at Brisbane. But how the opinions of their lordships on the point could possibly affect the value of their judgment on the totally different question presented for their decision, he did not attempt to show.

PROOF OF THE PUDDING.

If there were any substantial ground for this objection, it would not have been difficult to establish it beyond all shadow of doubt. We have seen what it came to in M'Leod's case, and probably it would not come to much more than that in any other. But whatever it might come to, impartial critics would not shut their eyes to the fact that mere local knowledge goes a very short way in the ultimate determination of legal questions. It would not be difficult to show that it has not saved our Court from many a "grave mistake," in cases where it might have been supposed to act as a specific.

A DUMMY DEED.

Some years ago a certain Mrs. Messer, owner of lands in Victoria, sailed away from it to Scotland, leaving in her husband's hands her duplicate certificates of title, with a power of attorney authorising him to sell or mortgage the property. He followed her in 1884, leaving the documents in the hands of their attorney, Cresswell. While they were out of the colony the lawyer forged a transfer of the lands by Messer, as his wife's attorney, to "Hugh Cameron," whom he described as a grazier. There was no such person in existence; but that did not prevent him from getting a certificate from the Land Titles Office in the name of Hugh Cameron, nor from getting £3,000 from one M'Intyre, a money-lender, on a fictitious mortgage from the fictitious Cameron, with which money he disappeared.

In the following year Messer returned, discovered the frauds, and began a suit in equity, praying for cancellation of the certificates issued to Cameron, for a new certificate free from encumbrance, or else for right to redeem, the money to be paid out of the assurance fund. There was nothing in the Act to make indefeasible the registered right of a mortgagee under a void deed. The judge held that the mortgage was valid, but allowed the plaintiff to redeem, with payment of all moneys, including costs, out of the fund. On appeal to the Full Court his decision was affirmed. On appeal to the Privy Council both judgments were reversed; the mortgage was declared invalid, the lands reverted in Mrs. Messer, and the mortgagee ordered to pay her costs.

SADDLING

SADDLING THE WRONG HORSE.

The questions raised in this case involved the construction of the local Land Transfer Act; and so far as local knowledge was concerned, the Victorian judges gave no reason for complaint. But it needed something more than local knowledge to get at the true meaning and policy of the Act, and to do justice between the parties. Lord Watson pointed out in his judgment, among other things, that they had made a radical mistake in saying that Creswell had "assumed" the name of Hugh Cameron. He did nothing of the kind; on the contrary, he put Cameron forward as a real person, having no connection with himself, except as a client for whom he was acting. If he had "assumed" the name and used it fraudulently, he would not have been a forger; his offence would have been that of obtaining money under false pretences. But in representing Cameron to be a real person, in registering him as proprietor, and then executing a mortgage in his name, he committed forgery, and the deed was a nullity.

"Plain as a pike-staff," one might say; but the Victorian judges did not see it; and from not being able to see it, they made the common mistake of putting the saddle on the wrong horse. They did not even see that the man who lends money on a deed ought to exercise some caution in lending it.

A FRIGHTFUL CASE.

The poor woman's case which Mr. Higgins brought before the Convention as a specimen of Privy Council incapacity affords another instance of the tendency of colonial judges to start novel theories of their own. While Mrs. Coultas and her husband were driving out in their buggy one day, somewhere about Victoria, they came to a railway crossing; the porter in charge opened the gate for them, and they drove through; but just as they did so a railway train came up, passing them so closely that the lady, as we say, was "nearly frightened out of her life."

The train did not touch the buggy; but her health, it was said, was seriously injured, and an action against the Railway Commissioners for negligence resulted in a verdict of £342 for the gentleman and £400 for the lady, subject to the decision of the Full Court on certain points reserved. A majority of the judges held that the damages were not too remote, and that it was not necessary to prove a collision. The Government appealed to the Privy Council, when the judgment was reversed on the ground that the damages were too remote. Without saying that proof of collision was necessary, their lordships held that, were they to decide otherwise, every case of nervous shock might be made a ground for an action, and a wide field would be opened for imaginary claims. If that isn't sound law and sound sense, too, it looks uncommonly like both; but it didn't satisfy Mr. Higgins.

PRIVY COUNCIL PLUMS.

Cases of this kind make one feel the absolute need for a higher jurisdiction in order to hold the colonial courts within decent bounds. While it is satisfactory to note that in many instances their decisions have been affirmed—they cannot be always wrong—there is nevertheless such a heavy balance against them, that one might tremble for the consequences of leaving them to themselves. It would be like steering our ships by dead reckoning instead of by chart and compass. It is hardly a laughing matter, but who can resist such jokes as these?

Application for leave to appeal from the Supreme Court of Canada—"On examining the judgment, it turns out that, upon the question of law, the learned judges were two to two, and the decision went upon the ground that a fifth judge, the learned Chief Justice, was of opinion that the point upon which the other judges had differed did not arise in the case!"

Appeal from the Supreme Court of New South Wales—"After an award had been made by arbitrators, the Court directed the taxing officer, on a question of costs, to examine them in order to ascertain on what issues the defendant had succeeded. Their lordships held that this direction was not only unwarrantable in itself, but in direct contravention of the agreement between the parties. The judgment of the House of Lords, on which Mr. Justice Windeyer relied in delivering the judgment of the Court, is, when rightly understood, a direct authority to the contrary!"

Perhaps the crowning absurdity of the whole collection is the judgment of the same Court in the celebrated case of the Apollo Candle Company. It was held by Sir James Martin and his colleagues that a section of our Customs Act, authorising the Collector of Customs to levy certain duties, was beyond the powers granted to the Legislature by the Constitution Act, because it violated the old maxim, delegatus non potest delegare—a delegated authority cannot be delegated to anyone else! On this principle, the whole of our governmental machinery might have been brought to a standstill, seeing that all powers exercised under the authority of the Legislature are of the same kind.

APPEALS IN CANADA.

The learned delegate who sought to justify the excision of the right of appeal in private cases on the ground that it is not allowed in Canada, did not state the facts correctly. It is true that the Act passed by the Dominion Parliament in '75, establishing the Supreme Court of Canada, declared that its judgment should in all cases be final and conclusive, and that no appeal should be brought from it to any Court in England; but in the same clause it saved the right of appeal by the exercise of the Royal prerogative. In other words, it confined appeals to cases in which leave might be granted by the Judicial Committee.

But that provision does not prevent any appeal from being brought, in public or private cases, in which the subject matter is of a substantial character. It simply prevents frivolous appeals. Nor does it abrogate the direct right of appeal enjoyed by the several provinces, some under under local statutes, and others under Orders in Council; as the result of which, litigants in the provincial courts have the choice of an appeal either to the Supreme Court or to the Privy Council. This is a very different state of things from that proposed here. Speaking of the Convention of '91, Bournot remarks that "that body in this, as in other matters, appears to have been largely influenced by a desire to make Australia independent of England, as far as practicable."

NATIONAL LIFE.

Is it a desire to make Australia independent of England that leads the political lawyer to adopt the American constitution as his model for a federal government; or has the excessive study of that constitution led him to formulate theories which otherwise he would not have listened to? Judging from the fact that no delegate has openly avowed a desire for independence, unless he means that when he speaks of "national life," it might be inferred that the two Conventions have turned their backs on old English principles from a belief that the Great Republic forms the only safe model of a federal form of Government. Why, otherwise, should they adopt so many American principles—including the method of amending the constitution by State Conventions? Such a provision presents the mania in its most extreme form; it is intelligible only on the theory that the constitution must be consistent.

ONE EMPIRE, ONE LAW.

It was with this topic that I began these little essays just six months ago; and in closing them now, I have the satisfaction of knowing that they have succeeded in drawing public attention to it. It is the basis of the whole structure. It should be obvious that colonies, not being sovereign States, cannot form a federal government of the American type; and that if any attempt to do so should be carried out, it would involve them in a succession of political disasters. Putting all other considerations aside, let me ask whether the loss of our connection with the Privy Council would not, in itself, be too heavy a price to pay for the privilege of possessing American institutions? Consider for a moment what it means:

The Act passed in '33, by which the Judicial Committee was established, probably owed its origin to the suggestions of convenience; but it has accomplished a great deal more than an improved system of dealing with appeals. In remodelling the ancient plan, it brought together all the colonies and possessions of the Crown, with all their different systems of law and government, and virtually united them under the rule of English law. Cæsar could not have hit upon a wiser or more enduring plan for subjecting the whole Roman world to the touch of his sceptre. No better machinery could have been devised for the purpose of holding them to their allegiance, while furnishing them with an appellate tribunal in which they could all alike place implicit confidence. The relations thus established between the Privy Council and the colonial courts remind us of the language in which Burke described the relative position of Parliament and the colonial Legislatures. It was one—"in which, as from the Throne of Heaven, she superintends all the inferior Legislatures, and guides and controls them all, without annihilating any. As all these provincial Legislatures are only co-ordinate with each other, they ought all to be subordinate to her."

Railways.

Return to the Order of the Convention (March 24th, 1897), laid on the Table by the Clerk and ordered to be printed, April 2nd, 1897.

Sir,

Commissioner's Office, Adelaide, 27 March, 1897.

Again referring to your memo. of the 24th inst., I now forward such papers as have been presented to Parliament by the Railways Commissioners of this province bearing upon the subjects you mention.

I am, &c.,

ALAN G. PENDLETON,
Railways Commissioner.

E. G. Blackmore, Esq., Clerk Australasian Federal Convention, Adelaide.

SOUTH AUSTRALIAN RAILWAYS.

1.—ABOLITION OF THE BREAK OF GAUGE.

[Extracts from Railways Commissioners' Annual Reports.]

October 30th, 1888.

* This is only one of the many evils, although it is by no means a small one, caused by the unfortunate existence of a dual gauge within the Colony. We feel assured that the disadvantages arising therefrom will become more and more intensified year by year, and that the longer the alteration is deferred the greater will be the ultimate cost, and the greater will be the loss. All previous experience goes to prove that a dual gauge can have no permanent existence, and that difficulty and trouble commence with its very initiation.

The question is undoubtedly one of the utmost importance, not only to South Australia, but to the other Australasian Colonies, and, whatever the result, it is worth an effort to see whether some arrangement cannot be come to as to the future policy which should prevail.

If a conference could be arranged with duly accredited representatives from all the Colonies the whole question could be thoroughly gone into and discussed practically and financially.

With so large a territory and so small a population, we feel the necessity of proceeding with the utmost caution; but as this is a question of railway policy, we have thought it desirable to record our views without entering further into details on the present occasion.

October 30th, 1889.

We consider it desirable to refer again to the question of the gauge. Much has taken place since we reported last year to show the desirability of some practical measures being adopted to get this important question taken up and considered by the respective Governments of the Australian Colonies. It is almost universally admitted that the adoption of a different gauge for the railways in Australia was a huge blunder, and that in South Australia in particular any saving that may have been effected in the first cost of constructing the narrow-gauge lines has been very largely counter-balanced by the expense attending the provision of a duplicate stock and the increased cost of working. It is also freely admitted that sooner or later one uniform gauge throughout will be a necessity and must be adopted, and that the longer a settlement of the question is delayed the more costly will be the alteration when it has to be made.

Military men, regarding the question from another point of view, express but one opinion on the subject, while all railway authorities know only too well the expense, inconvenience, and loss which is sustained in the working of lines that do not permit of the interchange of rolling-stock.

In consequence of the break of gauge it is not possible to move the rolling-stock from one part of the system to another, and when there is a pressure for trucks that is of itself a very great disadvantage, leaving out of consideration the permanent cost of transfer at the break of gauge stations.

To South Australia, with the construction of the Transcontinental railway on her hands, and the existence of a dual gauge within her borders, the question is of more pressing importance than to the other Colonies; but it affects them all to such an extent that we cannot but think that the authorities would be willing to join in any movement having for its object the removal of an evil which must become more pronounced year by year.

This can only be brought about by action on the part of the Government. Without the requisite authority we can do nothing; but we have thought it right to place our views on record, and, as administrators of the railways, to urge, in the interest of the public, full consideration of a question than which there is scarcely any of greater importance.

We have been told that it is premature to expect that the Colonies which have one uniform gauge within their own territories will be willing to consider the question of one uniform gauge for Australia; but it is very certain that unless inquiry is made and some steps are taken to ascertain the views which prevail elsewhere, no progress will be made, to remove an evil the existence of which is so fully admitted, and the removal of which is so much desired. Now, if at all, is the time for this important question to be considered. We should not wait for some national disaster to bring home to us the urgency of the matter. Twenty-five years is scarcely more than an expression in the life of a country, and yet who will say that long before that period expires South Australia will not be joined by railways with New South Wales and Queensland, when all the evils of a break of gauge would more than ever be felt.

An intercolonial conference on the subject would consider what the gauge should be, the cost of altering the existing stock and appliances, and generally whether such a scheme would be practicable without entailing too heavy a burden upon the taxpayers.

October 29th, 1890.

In connection with the proposed construction of additional railways, we would draw attention to our previous reports in reference to the unification of the gauge throughout Australia.

Although the matter is of such importance, practically nothing has been done to get the question considered in all its bearings, and that this course is more than ever desirable is evident from the fact that proposals have been made in sober earnestness that in South Australia, where the costly evils of a dual gauge are intensified year by year, they should be ameliorated by the introduction of a third gauge.

With

* Having reference to the duplication of the types of rolling-stock.

With whatever specious arguments such proposals may be sustained, we say unhesitatingly that the adoption of any such course could only be attended with the most disastrous financial results.

We urge upon the Government the necessity for a consideration of this question, involving as it does such important issues.

Special Report by the South Australian Railways Commissioners, dated 21st November, 1889.
C.S., 1857/89.

Sir,

Railways Commissioners' Office, Adelaide, 21st November, 1889.

In connection with the various proposals which have been made for abolishing the break of gauge, we beg to submit the following observations:—

If the break of gauge in South Australia is to be abolished the only way in which it can be done is to alter either the broad or narrow gauge to one uniform gauge throughout the Colony.

If the gauge is to be made uniform in this Colony by either of these courses the difficulty still remains as regards Victoria or New South Wales. Therefore, the only effectual and conclusive method of dealing with the difficulty is to decide, in conference with the authorities of all the Colonies, upon the best gauge, and adopt that throughout Australia. Any other course of action will be merely parochial, and not national; it will only remove the difficulty in one place and cause it to arise in another with intensified annoyance.

The various means for partially overcoming the difficulty may be thus stated:—

FIRSTLY—By Mechanical Means, dealing with Goods and Live-stock Vehicles only.—One of the many objections to the adoption of any such scheme is that no inventor has yet been able to show how the alteration of the trucks or vehicles is to be effected. The adoption also of a continuous automatic brake is an absolute necessity if the traffic is to be safely worked, and the adoption of any transfer system would render the use of a continuous brake of any kind most difficult and costly. It is a very open question, also, whether it would not be as costly and as slow to transfer a train after all the appliances are provided as in the case at present. Mechanical appliances will never, in the nature of things, abolish the break of gauge.

SECONDLY—Bringing the Narrow-gauge Lines into Adelaide.—The simplest plan for doing this would be to link the Blyth line with the Port Pirie line, extend the system to Dry Creek and Adelaide, and, from the former station, construct a mixed-gauge line to Port Adelaide. The broad-gauge line to Terowie would then be of use only for passengers to the north and east, and for goods to local stations.

Presuming that rates over the longer narrow-gauge line would have to be fixed by the mileage of the shorter broad-gauge route, which would render the capital outlay practically unproductive, there would still be almost as much delay in getting goods to or from Cockburn as there is at present, owing to the necessarily slower speed on the narrow-gauge system and the longer distance to be travelled.

The annoyance and cost of working mixed-gauge stations of the complexity of Adelaide and Port Adelaide can scarcely be estimated or appreciated; but no railway man with any sense of his responsibilities would recommend such a course.

A new narrow-gauge station might be possible at Adelaide, and the traffic now handled by one staff would then require two; but even this cannot be done at the Port, where the sidings and signalling arrangements would of necessity be very complicated. Such a plan would be more costly, more vexatious, and tedious than the existing arrangements. It would not overcome the difficulties, it would not abolish the break of gauge at Terowie, but it would create another at Adelaide for the south.

Another method of bringing the narrow gauge to Adelaide would be by laying a third rail from Terowie southwards. This would complicate matters still more than the former plan, because there would be all the disadvantages of a mixed gauge at all the stations on the through line as well as the termini.

All trade for distribution over 800 miles would be carried on the narrow gauge, leaving only the trade over 214 miles north of Adelaide to be carried on the broad gauge; thereby practically killing the wider gauge, and rendering its undoubted advantages nugatory.

THIRDLY—Taking up the Broad Gauge north of Adelaide, and substituting the Narrow.—This is approaching the problem from the northern end. There would still be complications at the terminal yards. A single narrow-gauge line would tend to hamper the traffic; the speed would of necessity be slower than at present; and a double line, if not immediately required, would probably have to be provided before very long.

To narrow all the lines north of Adelaide would be a decidedly retrograde step. It would only remove the break of gauge from Terowie to Adelaide; and if our lines ever touch those of New South Wales at any other point than Cockburn there would be another break.

The solution of the difficulty, in our opinion, lies in the adoption of a uniform gauge for the whole of the Australian railways; and until this can be brought about the minimising of the difficulties at Terowie lies in the expeditious handling and transfer of goods by manual labour.

In dealing with the question thus far it has only been considered from a railway standpoint, although there are other considerations which demand attention.

We are, &c.,

J. H. SMITH.

A. S. NEILL.

3.—THE EXISTENCE OF PREFERENTIAL AND DIFFERENTIAL RATES.

Extracts from Railways Commissioners' Annual Reports.

October 10th, 1894.

During the past year attention has been directed to the attempts which have been made from time to time, and in various districts, to divert traffic from its legitimate channels to other routes through the adoption of special rates. We have been extremely loth to enter upon what has been described as a "war of tariffs"; but at the same time we have felt it to be our duty to take such measures, and put in force such a scale of rates, as would secure to this Colony its proper traffic, which would otherwise have been diverted to competing routes. Such a condition of affairs is, however, as undesirable in the interests of the freighter as it is of the different railway administrations involved. Competition sooner or later must end end in combination, and we hold to the opinion that the proper course to adopt is for the respective authorities to enter into an agreement, in the first place as to the rates from competing districts, which should be upon a fair and equitable basis both as regards the freighter and the railways, and in the second place as to a division of the receipts, no matter by what route the traffic may be conveyed.

In other countries where competition is far keener than in Australia, and where the position of the competing railways is much more complicated, such a course was, after a protracted struggle, found to be absolutely necessary, and the only solution of the difficulty if ruin were to be averted. The agreements entered into years ago have stood the test of time, and we can see no reason why a similar course should not be pursued with equally beneficial results in this and the other Colonies interested.

September 26th, 1895.

An effort was made in the early part of 1895, by the Commissioners of the New South Wales, Victorian, and South Australian railways, to arrive at a joint arrangement, whereby competition at absurdly low rates for wool traffic would be obviated, and it is matter for regret that no successful result was arrived at. The competition continues to be as keen as, if not keener than, ever, and it is to be hoped that before the wool traffic of 1896 commences wiser counsels may prevail, and an arrangement be possible whereby the present competition, which leads to serious loss of revenue, and to the carriage of a valuable article at a ridiculously low figure, may be checked.

August 29th, 1896.

In my last report I expressed the hope that at an early date some arrangement might be found possible which would put an end to the extreme competition for wool traffic which existed between the railways of the different Colonies, and it is with regret I have now to add that the hope has not been realised, nor was any approach to negotiations found feasible during the unsettled and subsequent transition state of management in a neighbouring Colony. The competitive rates must continue for the season upon which we are just entering.

FEDERAL CONVENTION, 1897.

Return to the Order of the Convention (March 24th, 1897), laid on the Table by the Clerk and ordered to be printed, April 2nd, 1897.

Office of the Railway Commissioners of New South Wales,

Sir,

Sydney, March 30th, 1897.

In reply to your minute of the 26th March, forwarded to the Railway Commissioners with copy of resolutions passed by the Federal Convention on the 24th instant, I am directed to send under cover of this letter copies of papers in regard to the abolition of break of gauge and the existence of preferential or differential rates.

With regard to the second question on the list, "Amalgamation under a federal body or otherwise of all or any two of the said colonies," I am directed to say the only minute on the subject is a confidential one addressed by the Chief Commissioner to the Honorable the Premier on the 16th instant, and the Chief Commissioner is communicating with the Honorable the Premier by the mail that carries this letter, asking whether there would be any objection to it being made public; and if there is not, doubtless Mr. Reid will hand a copy to you.

I have, &c.,

H. McLACHLAN, Secretary.
(per W.H.C.)

E. G. Blackmore, Esq., Clerk of Convention, Adelaide.

1894-5.—LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.—NEW SOUTH WALES.

Railways.

(Particulars respecting the differential rates existing between the colonies of Victoria, South Australia, and New South Wales.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be printed, May 10th, 1895.

The Deputy Chief Commissioner for Railways to The Minister for Railways.

Office of the Railway Commissioners of New South Wales,

Sydney, May 7th, 1895.

I BEG to enclose, for the information of the Honorable the Minister for Railways, a copy of the agreement entered into by the Railway Commissioners of New South Wales, Victoria, and South Australia, for the purpose of abolishing the differential rates which have for some time existed upon the railways of the respective colonies named, in regard to freights generally, and more particularly in connection with the wool traffic.

The operation of these rates has been fully explained in previous papers, and was more particularly referred to in a statement (copy of which is attached) laid before the Government by the Railway Commissioners of New South Wales in August, 1894, and therefore need not be again referred to in detail.

During the last wool season the New South Wales Railway Commissioners found it necessary, in defence of the legitimate traffic of the railways, to enter into active competition for the purpose of checking the serious abstraction of wool from New South Wales, resulting from undue competition by Victoria; and while being compelled to adopt this course, the Victorian Commissioners were repeatedly requested by the New South Wales Commissioners to come to a friendly settlement without, until recently, any success, and there is reason for believing that the Conference which was held in Melbourne and terminated on the 3rd instant, resulted mainly from the effective steps taken by New South Wales to retain the traffic just previously referred to. Whether this be so or not, it is highly satisfactory that the Conference took place, as, if the agreement which has been arrived at is finally confirmed, all complications in connection with the traffic in question will be removed, and each colony will receive reasonable payment for services rendered, and the producers and consumers will in like manner pay fair and reasonable railway rates.

So far as the agreement affects New South Wales, it may be stated briefly that none of the ordinary published rates will be interfered with, the only alterations being a slight revision in the rates from stations between Table Top and Bomen, which are really anomalies arising from undue Victorian competition, and which have frequently given rise to irritation in adjacent localities which did not participate in the benefits of those rates.

As regards Victoria and South Australia, their rates, so far as relates to the border traffic, have been put up, the advantage to these colonies being the relief from unremunerative traffic.

As between Victoria and South Australia, a system of "pooling" the traffic has been agreed upon, which does not concern New South Wales.

A special arrangement, however, was made with Victoria and South Australia as regards the traffic carried by river from Hay or east of Hay, which includes wool from districts north of the Lachlan. While the rates under the agreement affecting this traffic are not unfavourable to its coming to Sydney, in the past a considerable quantity of wool has gone to Melbourne; and in consideration of New South Wales making no exceptional effort to secure it for Sydney, beyond quoting the present rates, Victoria and South Australia are to pay New South Wales 40 per cent. of the increased price per ton which is to be charged on the wool from these localities carried by the railways of those colonies.

While it is possible that the New South Wales railways may not carry more wool, or, perhaps, quite so much, a better income will be derived. This statement refers to the direct result of the agreement. There is, however, what may be designated a probable indirect result, and that is, the greater inducement by a general equalisation of rates as between Sydney and Melbourne, which will afford producers an opportunity of sending their wool to Sydney, which has a superior position as a wool-market and a port of shipment.

In addition to the actual question of rates, there are other points in the agreement favourable to New South Wales. The abolition of the percentage reduction on dumped wool—which was 15 per cent. and 10 per cent. respectively by Victoria and South Australia, and 5 per cent. by New South Wales—is considerably considerably in favour of the latter colony. Further, the Victorian railway authorities have been in the habit of allowing a discount of 6d. per bale on 10,000 bales of wool and upwards secured by any one person or firm for Melbourne. This concession, which has been a considerable power in the diversion of traffic to Victoria, is to be abolished.

It is difficult, if not impossible, to state what the exact result of an agreement on such a very complicated question will be; but, taken as a whole, it is certainly one which New South Wales can enter upon with confidence, particularly as it is limited to a period of twelve months, subject to renewal by consent.

CHARLES OLIVER,
Deputy Chief Commissioner.

CONFERENCE WITH REFERENCE TO THE DIFFERENTIAL RAILWAY RATES EXISTING BETWEEN THE COLONIES OF VICTORIA, SOUTH AUSTRALIA, AND NEW SOUTH WALES.

Present:—

VICTORIA	Mr. J. SYDER, Chairman, Acting Railway Commissioners.
	Mr. T. H. WOODROFFE } Acting Railway Commissioners.
	Mr. R. LOCHHEAD }
SOUTH AUSTRALIA	Mr. J. H. SMITH, Chairman, Railway Commissioners.
NEW SOUTH WALES.....	Mr. C. OLIVER, Deputy Chief Commissioner.
	Mr. W. M. FEHON, Commissioner.

1. It was agreed that wool shall be carried at actual weight.

2. It was agreed that the rates for greasy wool shall be as under:—

	s.	d.
Echuca to Melbourne, Port Melbourne, or Williamstown	34	0	per ton.
Yarroweyah	34	11	„
Wahgunyah	40	9	„
Cobram... ..	36	4	„
Yarrowonga	38	0	„
Wodonga	43	10	„
Other stations in proportion to mileage.
Albury, Hay, Jerilderie, Junee, Corowa, and all intermediate stations to Sydney	64	9	„
Morgan to Adelaide and Port Adelaide	25	0	„
Murray Bridge	25	0	„
Milang	25	0	„
Goolwa to Port Victor	5	0	„

and that the scoured-wool rates from the competing places named above shall be 29 per cent. in addition to the greasy-wool rates.

3. It was agreed by the Victorian and South Australian representatives that on all wool carried to the Victorian or South Australian railways by river from Hay, or east of Hay, an allowance of 40 per cent. of the difference between the present rate and the rate as agreed upon should be made to New South Wales.

4. It was agreed by the New South Wales representatives that the differential rates at present in force for wool to Albury should be abolished, and that the ordinary mileage rates should be charged, subject to the existing minimum charge of 4s. 9d. per ton for greasy and 6s. 2d. for scoured wool, exclusive of the junction charge.

5. Darling Wool and Merchandise.—It was agreed by the representatives of South Australia and Victoria that on the gross traffic carried by the railways of those colonies a division of the receipts, in the proportion of three-fifths to South Australia and two-fifths to Victoria, should be made; working expenses at the rate of 25 per cent. to be deducted in each case before division.

6. It was agreed by the representatives of South Australia that the differential rate at present in force between Adelaide and Port Adelaide and Morgan, Murray Bridge, Milang, and Goolwa, should be abolished, and the ordinary tariff rate be adopted. That truck-load rates may be adopted between Melbourne and Echuca of 65s. 9d. per ton, and Swan Hill, 93s. 5d.; between Adelaide and Morgan, 40s. 9d.; Murray Bridge, 24s. 5d.; Milang, 26s. 3d.; and Goolwa, 28s. 6d. The Port Adelaide rates to be in the same proportion.

7. It was agreed by the Victorian representatives that the differential rates at present in force between Serviceton and Dimboola should be abolished, and the ordinary rates charged.

8. It was agreed by the New South Wales representatives that the present differential rate for merchandise between Albury and Wagga Wagga, and Corowa and Wagga Wagga, and all intermediate stations, should be abolished.

9. It was agreed by the Victorian representatives, with respect to the Victorian border stations, except Swan Hill and Echuca, that Victoria should adhere to the local classification rate to Victorian border stations, but with liberty to adopt a truck rate for goods based on the existing Victorian 3rd-class rate from Melbourne to Albury, namely, 70s. 4d., including the junction charge, the rate of 70s. 4d. being the proportion which the New South Wales truck-rate is to the Riverina 3rd-class rate. This rate to be the minimum truck-rate for mixed goods to all border stations, except Swan Hill and Echuca, and to apply locally; as regards Swan Hill and Echuca, the truck-rate to be three-fourths of the existing Victorian 3rd-class rate.

10. It was agreed by all the representatives that the truck-loads herein referred to should consist of not less than 6 tons of goods per four-wheeled truck consigned to one person; bogie trucks to be charged not less than as for two four-wheeled trucks.

11. The representatives of the three colonies agree that no change whatever shall be made in the existing classifications, or in the agreed rates, so far as they affect the competitive districts, without the concurrence of the colonies concerned. It was also agreed that any alteration in the classification or rates made in either colony should be notified to the other colonies within one month.

12. It was agreed by the representatives of the three colonies that certified copies of the traffic affected by this agreement should be supplied by each colony to each of the other colonies quarterly.

13. The representatives of the three colonies agree that the allowance for dumping be abolished, and that no rebates, passes, or privileges of any kind whatever should be made or granted for the purpose of inducing traffic to be forwarded by any particular railway.

14. It was suggested that these resolutions should take effect from the 1st June next, and should remain in operation for a fixed period of twelve months from that date. At the expiration of nine months another meeting to be held for the purpose of determining as to the continuation or revision of the agreement.

15. It was resolved by all the representatives that a decision should be obtained as to the adoption or rejection of the foregoing agreement, and the result communicated to the Commissioners of each colony on or before the 10th instant.

New South Wales Government Railways,
Sydney, August 1st, 1894.

RE SPECIALLY LOW RATES ON THE VICTORIAN RAILWAYS TO SECURE TRAFFIC FROM
NEW SOUTH WALES.

The question of the efforts necessary to counteract the unreasonable preference given over the Victorian railways on goods to and from New South Wales has long been before the New South Wales Railway authorities.

The geographical position has naturally given Victoria a great advantage in regard to traffic for districts in New South Wales contiguous to the Victorian border; and exception is not taken to the fact that much of the traffic to and from such districts finds its way over the Victorian railways, but what is reasonably taken exception to is that an extraordinary preferential set of rates exists for the express purpose of attracting trade from places distant from the border and even from the centre of New South Wales—places within convenient distance from the New South Wales railways.

The following may be quoted as an instance:—A pastoralist writing to the Railway Commissioners under date of 25th June, urging as a reason why a reduced rate should be quoted for the conveyance of his wool to Sydney, states that now the carriage on wool to Melbourne overland is cheaper than sending to Sydney, and as the shearing supplies and general goods generally follow the wool route, all would be lost to New South Wales without a reduction. It may be pointed out that the wool from this station, which is about 80 miles from a railway station on our Western line, had previously come to Sydney. The property referred to lies in the centre of New South Wales, 240 miles from the Victorian border as the crow flies.

Other instances can be quoted, viz.:—The wool of one station only a short distance from Bourke is being sent to Melbourne this season by river and rail, a distance of about 1,500 miles, or nearly three times the distance from Bourke to Sydney, by reason of the preferential rate given by Victoria.

The maps which the Commissioners have had prepared are attached (Exhibit C), and show at once the extent and scope of the preferential rates allowed by Victoria, and the pastoral districts from which wool grown in New South Wales and return stores are diverted to the adjoining colonies.

The New South Wales border is tapped at no less than seven places by the Victorian railways, viz., at Swan Hill, Koondrook, Echuca, Yarrawonga, Wahgunyah, Cobram, and Albury, all on the Murray, and to which the railways have been, no doubt, largely extended to attract New South Wales traffic.

The preferential rates appear to have been initiated about the year 1870.

Up to that time South Australia had done practically the whole of the Darling River business; but in the year named the Victorian Commissioner for Customs made a report to the Victorian Government on the prospects of diverting the Darling and Murrumbidgee traffic to Melbourne. The then Victorian Minister for Railways favourably entertained the proposals; differential rates were established, and a commission of 6d. per bale was offered to any carrier who was able to bring 10,000 bales of wool from the Darling during one season. This commission was gained by a Victorian firm the very same year; and from that time out the competition between South Australia and Victoria may be said to have become keener for the trade of the Murrumbidgee, Darling, and Lower Murray districts. But within more recent years the South Australian competition for the Murrumbidgee trade was practically abandoned.

The reductions then in operation were not of the unreasonable character that exist to-day. These have become accentuated from time to time, as the better facilities in the way of railways given by the New South Wales Government naturally caused the people to use the markets of their own colony, and to make use of the facilities provided at great cost and to the great improvement of their properties.

With regard to the latter point, it is useful to turn to the initial circumstances connected with the Hay and Jerilderie railways, which run through districts to which the Victorian railways offer large special rebates, and are thereby affected by the Victorian preferential rates:

The

The Hay line especially was strongly and persistently agitated for by the people of the district, so as to enable them to trade with Sydney. In October, 1876, a petition, influentially signed by the principal residents of Hay and district, was sent through the then member for the district to the Government. It was represented that if the line were made it would be one of the best-paying in New South Wales, and that the 49,000 bales of wool which were sent from Hay and Narrandera and districts to another colony during the season, they were confident, would be sent to Sydney were a railway extended to Hay. It was also represented that the merchandise imported into the district lying between the junction of the Lachlan River with the Murrumbidgee and Narrandera during 1876 was 10,000 tons; and this, it was represented, would not only be a source of revenue, but an extension of business to the merchants of New South Wales. It was confidently asserted that the line of railway would be able to compete on advantageous terms with the river traffic, as, taking into consideration the delays inseparable from the transhipment of merchandise, and the cost of insurance and forwarding charges, together with the fact that for a portion of the year the river traffic was entirely suspended, at which time the goods have to be brought at a much enhanced cost by teams from Deniliquin, the comparison of the cost would be found to be considerably less by rail from Sydney than from Melbourne.

The statement appended to the petition showed that the average cost of goods by river to Hay (from Melbourne, via Echuca) was £5, and by road, via Deniliquin, £8 per ton, while wool on the back journey cost from £6 to £8 per ton. The petitioners considered that the goods and stock traffic would give an additional revenue between Narrandera and Hay of £150,000, exclusive of passenger traffic, without regard to future developments.

In February, 1879, an influential deputation waited on the then Minister for Works to urge the making of a railway to Hay. It was represented that the line would be of great advantage to New South Wales, inasmuch as it would secure a large traffic then done with Victoria, and that owing to the fiscal policy of Victoria the people were almost unanimously in favour of trading with Sydney.

In November, 1879, further petitions were sent in urging the extension. One largely signed in Hay and district represented that a large portion of the trade of Riverina was lost to New South Wales by the absence of speedy and direct communication, and that the trade would be recovered as the Southern railway was extended westward. It was said that as soon as Hay was connected by rail with Sydney, practically the whole of the wool sent to Melbourne or Adelaide would be forwarded to Sydney, and the line should return a profit of 8 per cent. on the cost of its construction. So pressing was the requirement considered that the petitioners urged that tenders should be immediately called for a line from Narrandera to Hay, and a condition imposed that the line should be completed within twelve months from the date of the petition.

In December, 1879, a deputation waited on the then Minister for Works and presented a petition largely signed in favour of the railway to Hay and Jerilderie, mentioning that "the making of a bridge over the river at Narrandera will enable the Government to run a branch line to Jerilderie and along the banks of the Yanko Creek, on which a very dense population of farmers and small pastoral tenants is now settled, and so afford them railway communication with Sydney, attracting them from Melbourne, and opening up a most important district to the trade and merchandise of Sydney merchants."

These repeated requests and sanguine expectations no doubt largely influenced the Parliament in sanctioning the construction of the line, as it was considered it would return a fair interest on the capital cost; but the unreasonable preference given by the Victorian railways has operated to such an extent as to render this line a most unprofitable one to the State. The magnitude of the loss will be best understood when it is stated that the 232 miles of railway from Junee to Hay, and Narrandera to Jerilderie, have, since the opening of the first section in 1881, notwithstanding the special inducements held out to agriculturists, which have developed a large agricultural traffic, simply paid little more than the operating expenses, leaving the country to bear the interest of the cost of the money borrowed to build the line, this loss to date being about £610,000.

The rates charged by the Victorian railways prior to 1879 for goods and produce to and from New South Wales, while preferential in their incidence, were not of the unreasonable character that now exist; but the opening of the New South Wales line to Wagga Wagga caused the Victorian authorities to offer such attractions as would enable them to divert the New South Wales trade from its own lines, which had, at great expense, been constructed to the districts concerned.

In 1879 the rates over the lines, taking Echuca as an instance, were preferential to the extent shown below:—

	Classes.					Wool per bale.
	Miscellaneous.	1st.	2nd.	3rd.	4th.	Undumped.	Dumped.
	s. d.	s. d.	s. d.	s. d.	s. d.	s. d.	s. d.
Ordinary rates	40 0	52 0	65 0	78 0	91 0	7 0	5 10

Preferential rate to New South Wales district, Murray district between Wakool Junction and Wentworth..	30 0*	48 0	48 0	48 0	48 0

* Wire and rock salt only.

In 1882, however, finding that the extension of the New South Wales railways into the southern and south-western districts was accomplishing what it was intended should naturally be accomplished, viz., the securing of the trade to the New South Wales railways, the Victorian authorities again modified their rates by offering still greater concessions to goods for the inland New South Wales districts, discriminating between between districts which were lying within the influence of the New South Wales railways and those more distant from the lines, offering to the former the greater bonus to withdraw the traffic from its legitimate market. The scope of the reduction was, by the published rates of the 31st January, 1884, as follows:— To Echuca the preferential rates for all New South Wales districts north of Gerogery and embracing the Murrumbidgee and Darling Rivers was 25s. per ton for rock-salt, 30s. per ton for other miscellaneous class traffic, and a uniform rate of 30s. per ton for each class of 1st to 4th, and wool 4s. 6d. per bale of 4 cwt. undumped, and 4s. per bale dumped. The same amount of preferential rates was also made applicable to Wodonga and Wahgunyah, the ordinary rates to which, respectively, were:—

To.	Classes.					Wool per 4-cwt. Bale.
	Miscellaneous.	1st.	2nd.	3rd.	4th.	Undumped.	Dumped.
	s. d.	s. d.	s. d.	s. d.	s. d.	s. d.	s. d.
Wodonga	48 0	62 6	78 0	93 6	109 0	7 6	6 4
Wahgunyah.....	44 6	58 0	72 6	87 0	101 6	7 3	6 1

The rates then in force continued without material alteration for some years. Soon after the present Commissioners took office they, deeming that the rates could be advantageously revised by both sides, opened negotiations with the Victorian Commissioners (Mr. Speight being then Chairman), the outcome of which, while removing anomalies, was mutually advantageous. However, within the last month the rates have been reduced to an extent that had never operated before.

Goods for consumers in the Darling River district are now being conveyed for 22s. 6d. per ton between Melbourne and Echuca, but if the same goods were consumed at Echuca they would cost 87s. 7d. per ton. Sugar, between the same stations for the Darling River district, is conveyed for 11s. 9. per ton, while if consumed at Echuca or anywhere inside the Victorian border it would cost 53s. 5d. per ton.

Wool from certain districts in New South Wales is carried for 2s. 9d. per bale, and in addition to this a drawback of 5 per cent. is given upon every 10,000 bales secured by any consignor, which, as is well known, could only be secured by carriers canvassing in the district for business, while the same wool if grown in Victoria would cost 6s. 1d. per bale.

It is also to be especially borne in mind that the New South Wales rates apply equally to all traffic without reference to destination, whereas in Victoria no less than six scales of rates prevail to and from the same railway stations for exactly similar traffic, which is carried, so far as the railway service is concerned, under exactly similar conditions.

The importance of this question as affecting New South Wales will be realised when it is stated that during the years 1890, 1891, and 1892, 126,601 tons, or nearly one-third of the whole of the wool grown in New South Wales, was shipped from Victorian and South Australian ports.

Its having come to the knowledge of the Commissioners that the efforts of the Victorian railway authorities and forwarding agents were becoming more and more aggressive, they felt it necessary to bring the matter strongly under the notice of the Victorian Commissioners, and, accordingly, on the 12th June, addressed a letter to them as follows:—

I am directed by the Railway Commissioners to draw the very serious attention of your Commissioners to the improper and unreasonable competition that is in operation for securing to the Victorian railways traffic within the borders of New South Wales which should properly be carried over the railways of this colony—railways which have been constructed at great cost for the convenience of the people settled in the districts served thereby. In dealing with the question of the wool traffic of the coming season, the exceptionally low quotations given by Victorian agents to the New South Wales pastoralists for the conveyance of their wool to the Victorian railways, and thence to Melbourne, have brought the whole matter again under review (the quotations for this year being lower than they have ever been), and the Commissioners feel they can no longer remain quiescent in the matter. The rates they have before them (copy of table attached Exhibit A) show that for certain sections of the wool belonging to New South Wales rates as low as 2s. 9d. per bale are quoted from the border railway stations to Melbourne whereas the ordinary scale of rates applicable to wool grown in Victoria charged from the border stations ranges from 6s. 1d. to 8s. 9d. per bale. The geographical position of the Victorian railways gives a commanding influence to your colony, and the view held by my Commissioners is that this alone should satisfy your Commissioners in the matter without making reductions in the ordinary tariff, in some instances of as much as 40 to 60 per cent. The competitive rates adopted by Victoria are so unreasonable that wool from squattages 250 miles from the Victorian border, and within less than 100 miles of the New South Wales Western Line, is influenced thereby; and my Commissioners are threatened with loss of traffic unless reduced rates are quoted by them. I am directed to ask whether your Commissioners are prepared to at once abandon these exceptionally low rates and adhere to the ordinary scale of rates applicable to your own traffic, as, unless this or a somewhat similar course is agreed to, my Commissioners will feel compelled to quote any rate that may be necessary in order to secure the legitimate traffic of this Colony to our own railways; but they think that such a sacrifice of railway revenue (when the difficulties surrounding the railway questions in the colonies require so much caution and care) should not be incurred when a reasonable and fair arrangement could so easily be come to. I am to direct attention, also, to a similar class of unfair competition in regard to the merchandise traffic, which will also require to be dealt with on a more reasonable basis; but as the wool question is so urgent, I do not more than refer to the other point, so as to facilitate a speedy reply being given regarding the wool. As it is of the utmost importance that this question should be decided without loss of time, the Commissioners have directed Mr. Harper, the Goods Superintendent of the New South Wales railways, to visit Melbourne to-morrow, in order that he may, if necessary, give any further information your Commissioners may wish in regard to the details of the rates in question, so as to expedite a settlement, and enable him to bring back the decision of your board.

The reply received on the 15th June was unsatisfactory, and is as follows:—

* * * With reference to the question of rates, the Acting Commissioners, while sharing the views of your Commissioners as to the necessity for a mutual agreement between the railways of the three colonies, regret that as the rates for this season have already been published by this department, and persons interested informed that such rates would be strictly adhered to, they cannot see their way to agree to any alteration at present; and, further, as the matter is one of policy, and any change would require the passing of a fresh by-law, the Acting Commissioners are, of course, unable to commit the Government, with whom the final decision rests, to any particular line of action. The Acting Commissioners desire to convey to your Commissioners their assurance that the published tariff of the Victorian railways will be strictly adhered to in the meantime, and would be glad to know that your Commissioners had arrived at a similar decision with respect to the New South Wales rates. I am to add that the Acting Commissioners will be prepared to make recommendations, in time for next season, to the Government of this Colony, after giving the suggestions of Mr. Harper, together with any other that may be submitted in the interim, the fullest consideration.

As

As the Victorian Commissioners declined to come to an understanding regarding the wool rates, the New South Wales Commissioners had no alternative but to take steps to secure the carriage of the New South Wales traffic for the railways of the colony; but being still anxious to come to a friendly arrangement in regard to the question of the carriage of merchandise, they again addressed the Victorian authorities on June 19th as under, and to date (August 1st) no definite reply has been received.

I am directed by the Railway Commissioners to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of 15th June, in regard to the wool traffic of New South Wales, and to express their extreme disappointment at the question not being dealt with in a practical manner. It is not reasonable to suppose that my Commissioners can continue to allow traffic from the centre of New South Wales to be conveyed to Melbourne in consequence of your rates being reduced by 60 per cent. from the rates paid by your own people. My Commissioners feel that they have done their best to bring the matter to a friendly settlement, which could have been effected in several ways to the advantage of both colonies; but as their efforts in this direction have not met with that reciprocity that should have been the case, they have no alternative but to carry out the decision intimated in my communication of the 12th inst., but this they do with great regret. I am now directed to invite your attention to the merchandise charges for New South Wales traffic conveyed over the Victorian Railways, incidentally referred to in my last communication, as my Commissioners are anxious to know whether your Commissioners will be prepared to abandon the exceptionally low rates adopted for New South Wales traffic as compared with the rates in operation for Victorian traffic conveyed over the same ground. The Commissioners observe from telegrams and paragraphs in the press that at the present moment the merchandise rates are under the consideration of your Commissioners, and trust, therefore, that they will be able to see their way to remove from the rate-book the differential rates now charged for New South Wales goods at the expense of Victoria and to the grave detriment of this Colony. I need only mention in this letter a few instances to show the improper and antagonistic position taken up in regard to this Colony, as I append hereto a printed sheet* (Exhibit D) showing a number of illustrations of the differential rates in question:—

	N.S.W. Traffic.		Victorian Traffic.
	Per ton.		Per ton.
	s.	d.	s.	d.
Melbourne to Swan Hill—
Galvanised iron in cases, and sugar in 5-ton lots	43	0	72	11

	To Wodonga.
2nd class goods	66	10	82	4
3rd class goods	66	10	99	6
4th class goods	66	10	116	8

These illustrations show how, by unreasonable and improper rates, the Victorian railways are endeavoring to secure traffic belonging to New South Wales; and, as pointed out in my previous letter, my Commissioners feel that the geographical position of Melbourne (which is practically only half the distance from the border that Sydney is) should give Victoria an advantage with which your Commissioners should be thoroughly satisfied, and that the ordinary rates applicable to the Victorian railways for her own people should be made applicable to any traffic that wishes to find its way to and from Melbourne and New South Wales. I am directed to express the earnest hopes of my Commissioners that your Commissioners will be prepared to treat this merchandise rates question in a fair and reasonable manner, and so avoid the necessity for my Commissioners to make concessions in their rates which can be of no possible advantage to Victoria, and will entail an unnecessary and an uncalled for loss upon the railway revenue of this Colony.

Sydney, August 14th, 1894.

The following reply from the Railway Commissioners of Victoria (through their Secretary), dated August 13th, was received on the above date:—

Adverting to your letters of the 19th June last and 25th ultimo, with respect to the rates on wool to and from Riverina, I am directed by the Acting Commissioners to say, while expressing their regret at the delay which has occurred, that, as before stated, the circumstances have not been such as to admit of their dealing further with the matter than was done in their letter of the 15th June last, which they are sorry to see was regarded as an evidence that the question had not been treated in a practical manner, and as also manifesting a lack of reciprocal feeling.

In view of the fact that any alteration this season would have caused disturbance to business arrangements already entered into, the Acting Commissioners regarded their reply as the only one they could give and also as sufficient. The same applies also to the request that the goods rates should be altered.

The Acting Commissioners regret that they cannot but look upon the request made as tantamount to a demand for a complete surrender, without equivalent, of the principles on which this Department has worked to retain possession of the trade in question, and for which it was the first to afford facilities.

While they admit that the geographical situation is a factor in the question, they would point out that other competition than that of your colony has to be met,

Finally, they would say, with regret, that they are not in a position to make any alteration at present; but, as previously intimated they will be glad at the end of the present season to confer with your Commissioners as to the rates to be charged in the future.

Since the letters of 12th and 19th June were written, a new rate-sheet has been published by Victoria, and the tables have been amended to bring them up to date. (See Exhibits B and E).

Copies of Letters and Papers by the Chief Commissioner for Railways of New South Wales on the Break of Gauge Question.

[Copy of paper handed to the late Hon. Sir Henry Parkes, G.C.M.G., dated November 27th, 1886.]

BREAK OF GAUGE IN AUSTRALIAN COLONIES.

THE gauge of the New South Wales railways is practically the universal gauge of the world, viz., 4 ft. 8½ in.

Victoria, 5 ft. 3 in.

South Australia, 5 ft. 3 in. and 3 ft. 6 in.

Queensland, 3 ft. 6 in.

The mileage of each is:—

New South Wales, 2,113.

Victoria, 2,017¾.

South Australia, 1,420 (491 miles 67 chains, 5 ft. 3 in.; 928 miles 10 chains, 3 ft. 6 in.)

Queensland, 1,765.

The question of the break of gauge is not as yet felt to be an inconvenience of any great magnitude, but before many years have passed it will be a source of great inconvenience, delay, and expense in transshipping goods particularly.

When the intercolonial trade of Australia has grown to any magnitude, if the break of gauge is allowed to continue, uniformity of gauge will be insisted upon, but if the mileage has grown to any great extent the cost of altering will be very great, and as this is undoubtedly destined to become a great nation the change of gauge must be made at some time; this being so, the present is undoubtedly the right time to grasp the question and determine what shall be the universal gauge of the future.

In England one of the great trunk lines (the Great Western) adopted for a great part of their system what was known as the broad gauge; the changing of passengers and transshipping of goods became such a great annoyance and expense that a mixed gauge to enable both the broad and the 4 ft. 8½ in. vehicles to run was adopted to a great extent, but, ultimately, nearly all the broad gauge was taken up, and now it only exists in connection with the West of England traffic, and even there it is doomed.

I would therefore recommend that the question should be at once taken up by the Government as a great national question of far-reaching importance for the future of the country; and, as neither colony will be disposed to alter its gauge because of the consequent expense, I would recommend that after it has been agreed which gauge—the 5 ft. 3 in. or 4 ft. 8½ in.—shall become the gauge of the future, that the cost of making the change shall be borne by a special fund created for the purpose, and that the colonies shall contribute the annual interest in agreed proportions, and also set aside an annual sum to act as a sinking fund for the extinguishing of the debt in, say, fifty years.

I need not now lengthen this paper with my views as to how an amicable settlement on the question of what is to be the future gauge may be arrived at, nor in what proportions the burden of the fund should be borne. These questions, which doubtless will be the subject of lengthy negotiations, are capable of being settled satisfactorily if the respective Governments decide to take the question up with a determination of bringing it to successful conclusion.

THE IMPORTANCE OF AN UNIFORM GAUGE FOR AUSTRALIA.

IN the early days of railways, the most eminent engineers were divided in opinion as to the best gauge or width between rail and rail of a single line. Some contended for a broad and some for a narrow gauge as most desirable, and the long discussion which took place on this subject is known as the "battle of the gauges." At the head of the broad gauge party was Isambard Brunel, who contended for a width of 7 ft. between the inner sides of the rails; and he constructed the Great Western on that principle. In the front rank of his opponents was Robert Stephenson, who maintained the opinion of his father—the late George Stephenson, the founder of our railway system—that 4 ft. 8½ in. was the most suitable width. The Stephensons carried out their opinions in the series of railways now known as the London and North Western, of which system Stephenson was the engineer.

The inconvenience, however, of different gauges throughout the country threatened to become so serious as railways extended that Parliament enacted, in 1846, that the narrow gauge of 4 ft. 8½ in. should thenceforth be adopted by the future lines in England, Scotland, and Wales, except in the district already served by the broad gauge. By this means facility of communication between the different parts of the country was secured, as the same carriages and waggons could pass from one line to the other. The Great Western, notwithstanding the superior speed then obtained on the broad gauge, found it necessary, to avoid losing traffic, to lay down a third rail, thus enabling narrow-gauge trains to run on its line. This arrangement was, however, but an imperfect palliative to the evil of break of gauge; and after some years' trial the third-rail system was practically abandoned, and at the present time the line is nearly wholly worked on the narrow gauge. The rails for the broad gauge have been gradually taken up, leaving only about 10 per cent. of the mileage as exclusively broad gauge. About another 10 per cent. is mixed gauge, the three rails accommodating both broad and narrow gauge. The remaining 80 per cent. of the length of the system is worked as exclusively narrow gauge. With insignificant exceptions the railways of Great Britain, France, Belgium, Holland, Germany, Austria, Switzerland, and Italy are now on the uniform or standard gauge of 4 ft. 8½ in.

A very similar change has taken place in Canada and the United States. In the former country a large mileage was originally constructed on the 5 ft. 6 in. gauge, which confessedly permits the employment of more powerful and durable engines than the standard, or 4 ft. 8½ in. gauge. The break of gauge was, however, found most inconvenient, and though most ingenious mechanical appliances were used to transfer the bodies of broad-gauge cars to narrow-gauge bogies and vice versa, the delay, loss, and practical inconvenience were found so great that hundreds of locomotives were entirely rebuilt, and many were altered at considerable expense in order to adapt them to the narrower gauge of 4 ft. 8½ in. In the United States the Erie system, one of the four great trunk lines westward, was originally built on the 6 ft. gauge, permitting the employment of the most powerful engines and wide and comfortable passenger cars. The inconvenience of a break of gauge with other railroads was, however, felt to be overwhelming. As in England, a third rail was first laid down, and recently the last of the old broad-gauge rails was taken up. In the Southern States a gauge of 5 ft. prevailed, and was almost universal south of the Ohio. The difference of $3\frac{1}{2}$ in. in gauge was so small that the task of transferring the bodies of the cars from one set of rails to another was easy, and the system used was apparently simple, cheap, and little likely to cause delay. Nevertheless, railroad managers for many years made preparations for a coming change. Locomotives and cars were so constructed that the change could be easily effected, and finally, in May, 1887, the gauge on some 10,000 miles of road was changed to 4 ft. $8\frac{1}{2}$ in. within a week.

The above examples show that in three countries—Great Britain, Canada, and the United States—extensive practical experience has shown that any mechanical advantages possessed by broad gauge have been overpowered by the inconveniences and delays of transferring goods and passengers at the break of gauge; and that this hindrance to traffic practically isolates the broad-gauge lines, depriving them of profitable business.

The disadvantages of break of gauge are also felt in lines narrower than the standard. The supposed advantages of greater cheapness of construction and diminished deadweight of rolling-stock caused some 10,000 miles of 3-ft. gauge lines to be constructed in the United States. It was found, almost without an exception, that such lines could not compete with standard gauge lines, and could not in most cases pay working expenses, for, while the first cost was not very materially lessened, the speed and capacity of the line to haul paying loads were greatly lessened, while the repairs after a few years' working compared very unfavourably with those of lines with stronger and heavier rolling-stock. With one exception, no line of any importance is now worked in the United States on a gauge narrower than 4 ft. $8\frac{1}{2}$ in., and that line, the Denver and Rio Grande, is in part laid with a third rail, and the widening of the whole line is in contemplation. A similar change has taken place in Canada, where many of the narrow-gauge lines have been widened to the standard gauge of 4 ft. $8\frac{1}{2}$ in.

It is evident therefore that the advantages of a standard and uniform railway gauge have been so very manifest that both broader and narrower gauges have been altered on many thousands of miles of railway to conform to the standard gauge. The total mileage in operation in the world at the end of 1885 was 303,058 miles. Of this length 74 per cent. were of the 4 ft. $8\frac{1}{2}$ in. to 4 ft. 9 in. standard, 12 per cent. had larger gauges, and 14 per cent. smaller.

Another important point to be considered is the great advantage that would arise to the country in case we should at any time be involved in war, as the whole of the rolling-stock of the various colonies would be available for use at any point where an emergency arose; beyond this also if troops had to be pushed rapidly from one colony to another (assuming there was sufficient stock in each colony for the purpose) the delay involved by the break of gauge would be a fatal obstacle to the promptness and facility of their movements.

The Gauge Commission of 1845 (England) considered this question in regard to English railways and said in their report:—"The troops (conveyed for sudden emergencies) should be carried with their equipments complete in all their details, and with their artillery and ammunition, and it therefore appears indispensably necessary that the whole should be conveyed in the same vehicles from the beginning to the end of their journey. The effect of a break of gauge might in this view of the case expose the country to serious danger."

Sir John Hawkshaw, a member of the Engineers and Railway Volunteer Corps, in reporting to the War Office on a scheme for moving by railway the entire military forces of England from the various depôts to different arranged points, said:—"Had not the railways in England and Scotland been almost wholly of one gauge and the whole stock nearly everywhere available the problem would have been infinitely more difficult and its solution much less satisfactory. For it is not enough to say (as I am told it has been said) to get over the difficulty of break of gauge that the men—that is the soldiers—where the break of gauge occurred, could easily walk from one train to the other. It is of the last importance that trains once laden should pass onwards to their destination, but break of gauge would render this impracticable, and the amount of stock required would at once be nearly doubled. At every break of gauge the men could not proceed at all unless duplicate trains corresponding in capacity to the trains bringing them to that point were waiting ready to take them forward, thus rendering many duplicate trains necessary to do the work. Those who were engaged in the inquiries I have referred to will understand how difficult it would be to prepare such trains, and to make them meet each other at proper times. Moreover, one of the great difficulties in the operation arose from the vast extent of platform and loading and unloading places required for horses, guns, and ammunition, which would have to be extemporised at the time, and the necessity of which would be vastly increased by the break of gauge. In regard to guns, ammunition, baggage, horses, &c., the evils would be greater than with the men, for these could not be changed without the provision of the most extensive loading and unloading places, and the loss of a great amount of time." UNIFORM GAUGE FOR THE RAILWAYS OF AUSTRALIA.

WITH reference to what has recently passed on this subject and our conversation yesterday, I have the honor to suggest that the following should be the basis of procedure in connection with this subject:—

That the various colonies should affirm—

- (1.) That the adoption of an universal gauge is absolutely necessary looking at the future growth of the country and the annually increasing intercourse of the people and exchange of goods.
- (2.) That the cost of adopting an uniform gauge shall be borne by the whole of the colonies affected.
- (3.) That it having been decided that the cost of altering the railways to an uniform gauge shall be a national one, the subject of which is the right gauge to be adopted, must be approached without any bias in favour of the gauge at present in operation in any colony, and a decision must be come to from the standpoint of which gauge, 4 ft. $8\frac{1}{2}$ in., or 5 ft. 3 in., can be adopted at the least cost and inconvenience.
- (4.) That it shall be an instruction that the whole of the railways in New South Wales and Victoria, that part of the railways of South Australia now laid to the 5 ft. 3 in. gauge, as well as the line to Cockburn (for Silverton), and all lines in Queensland south of Brisbane leading to New South Wales shall be altered to the standard gauge, and the cost of altering the railway and rolling-stock necessary for working such lines shall be a national charge.

(5.)

(5.) That the Chief Commissioner or Chairman of the Railway Board in each colony, with one colleague (to be selected by the Chief Commissioner or Chairman), to be a Commission to consider—

- (1.) What shall be the gauge of the future.
- (2.) In what proportions the cost of the change shall be borne by the respective colonies.
- (3.) The probable cost of carrying out the change.
- (4.) The number of years the cost of the change shall be spread over, and the amount of money to be set aside each year as a sinking fund.
- (5.) The date on which the change of gauge shall take place. The Commission to submit a joint report for the consideration and approval of the respective Governments.

That it be a recommendation to each of the colonies finding it desirable for the present to make narrow-gauge lines in outlying districts to arrange its stations, tunnels, and bridges in such a way as to enable the uniform gauge at a later date to be laid down without incurring any additional expenditure in enlarging such works; the wisdom, however, of from the outset adopting the standard gauge, which may be laid down in the cheapest possible way, to be carefully considered.

The Hon. W. McMillan, M.P.

[Extract from the Supplement to the Railway Commissioners' Annual Reports, dated 19th November, 1894.]

UNIFORM GAUGE FOR THE RAILWAYS OF AUSTRALIA.

This question, which was brought forward by us immediately after taking office, has, we regret to say, made very little progress in the way of giving practical effect to bringing about a settlement. We feel that the question is of vital importance to the future of Australia, and must be dealt with at some time or other, and the longer it is postponed the greater will be the cost of the change.

We would respectfully urge that the question be dealt with without further delay, and action taken somewhat on the lines suggested in a letter dated the 18th May, 1889, from the Chief Commissioner to the Honorable the Minister for Railways, which was as follows:—

[Copy of letter given on previous page.]

We have held the view that great advantage could be obtained by all the railways of Australasia if an annual meeting of the principal officers were held to discuss various matters of importance in connection with the working of the lines; these meetings to be followed by a meeting of the Commissioners, or by the Chairmen of the respective Boards, so as to give executive effect to any recommendations which might be made. At these meetings all questions of importance affecting the economic and efficient working of the various branches of the service could be discussed, and the whole of the colonies would obtain the benefit of the united ability employed by the various Governments. Such meetings would also, in our opinion, bring about a broader view on all railway questions, and promote harmonious working.

Beyond a special meeting in regard to the adoption of an uniform rule-book and the discussion of an uniform classification of goods, nothing has been done, principally owing to the [change of system of railway control in Victoria.

The question, however, is of such great importance to the whole of the colonies that it is brought forward again in this manner in the hope that the idea may bear fruit in the future.

[Copy of letter dated 4th January, 1896, from the Chief Commissioner for Railways to the Honorable G. H. Reid, M.P., Premier and Minister for Railways.

Sir,

UNIFORM GAUGE FOR AUSTRALIA.

I have the honor to draw your attention to the subject of an uniform gauge for Australia, and to the previous communications I have forwarded on the subject.

The question becomes a much more costly and difficult one the longer it is postponed, and I would respectfully urge, if the whole question cannot be dealt with at the present time, that steps should be taken to induce the Victorian Government to agree to alter the line running from Albury to Melbourne, with its connecting branches, to the 4 ft. 8 in. gauge, and so enable the traffic to be passed between Sydney and Melbourne without change.

In making this suggestion, I am aware that I am practically assuming that the gauge of the future should be the gauge already adopted as the standard of the world, as quite 90 per cent. of the railways of the world are now 4 ft. 8½ in.

As a question of cost, too, it will be much cheaper to adopt the 4 ft. 8½ in. gauge than the Victorian gauge of 5 ft. 3 in., as no works would require widening; whereas if the 5 ft. 3 in. gauge were adopted, the cost of altering stations like Sydney, the Suburban Lines, &c., would be exceedingly great. The axles of the rolling-stock would in nearly all cases be available for the 4 ft. 8½ in. gauge, whereas if the 5 ft. 3 in. gauge were adopted, all would have to be abandoned. The permanent way change would also be cheapened and simplified by adopting the narrower gauge.

One of the strongest arguments I have heard advanced by those in favor of the retention of the 5 ft. 3 in. as the standard has been that more powerful locomotives can be put upon that gauge than on the 4 ft. 8½ in. road. I attach no importance to this point now, as the improvements in locomotives of late years have been so great that for the grades upon Victorian and South Australian lines engines of the power running in New South Wales will haul trains of as great length as it would be desirable to place behind a locomotive.

Victoria, too, has been devoting much thought of recent years to the question of how to cheapen the cost of construction, and the adoption of a somewhat narrower gauge than that at present in use would afford an opportunity of doing something in this direction.

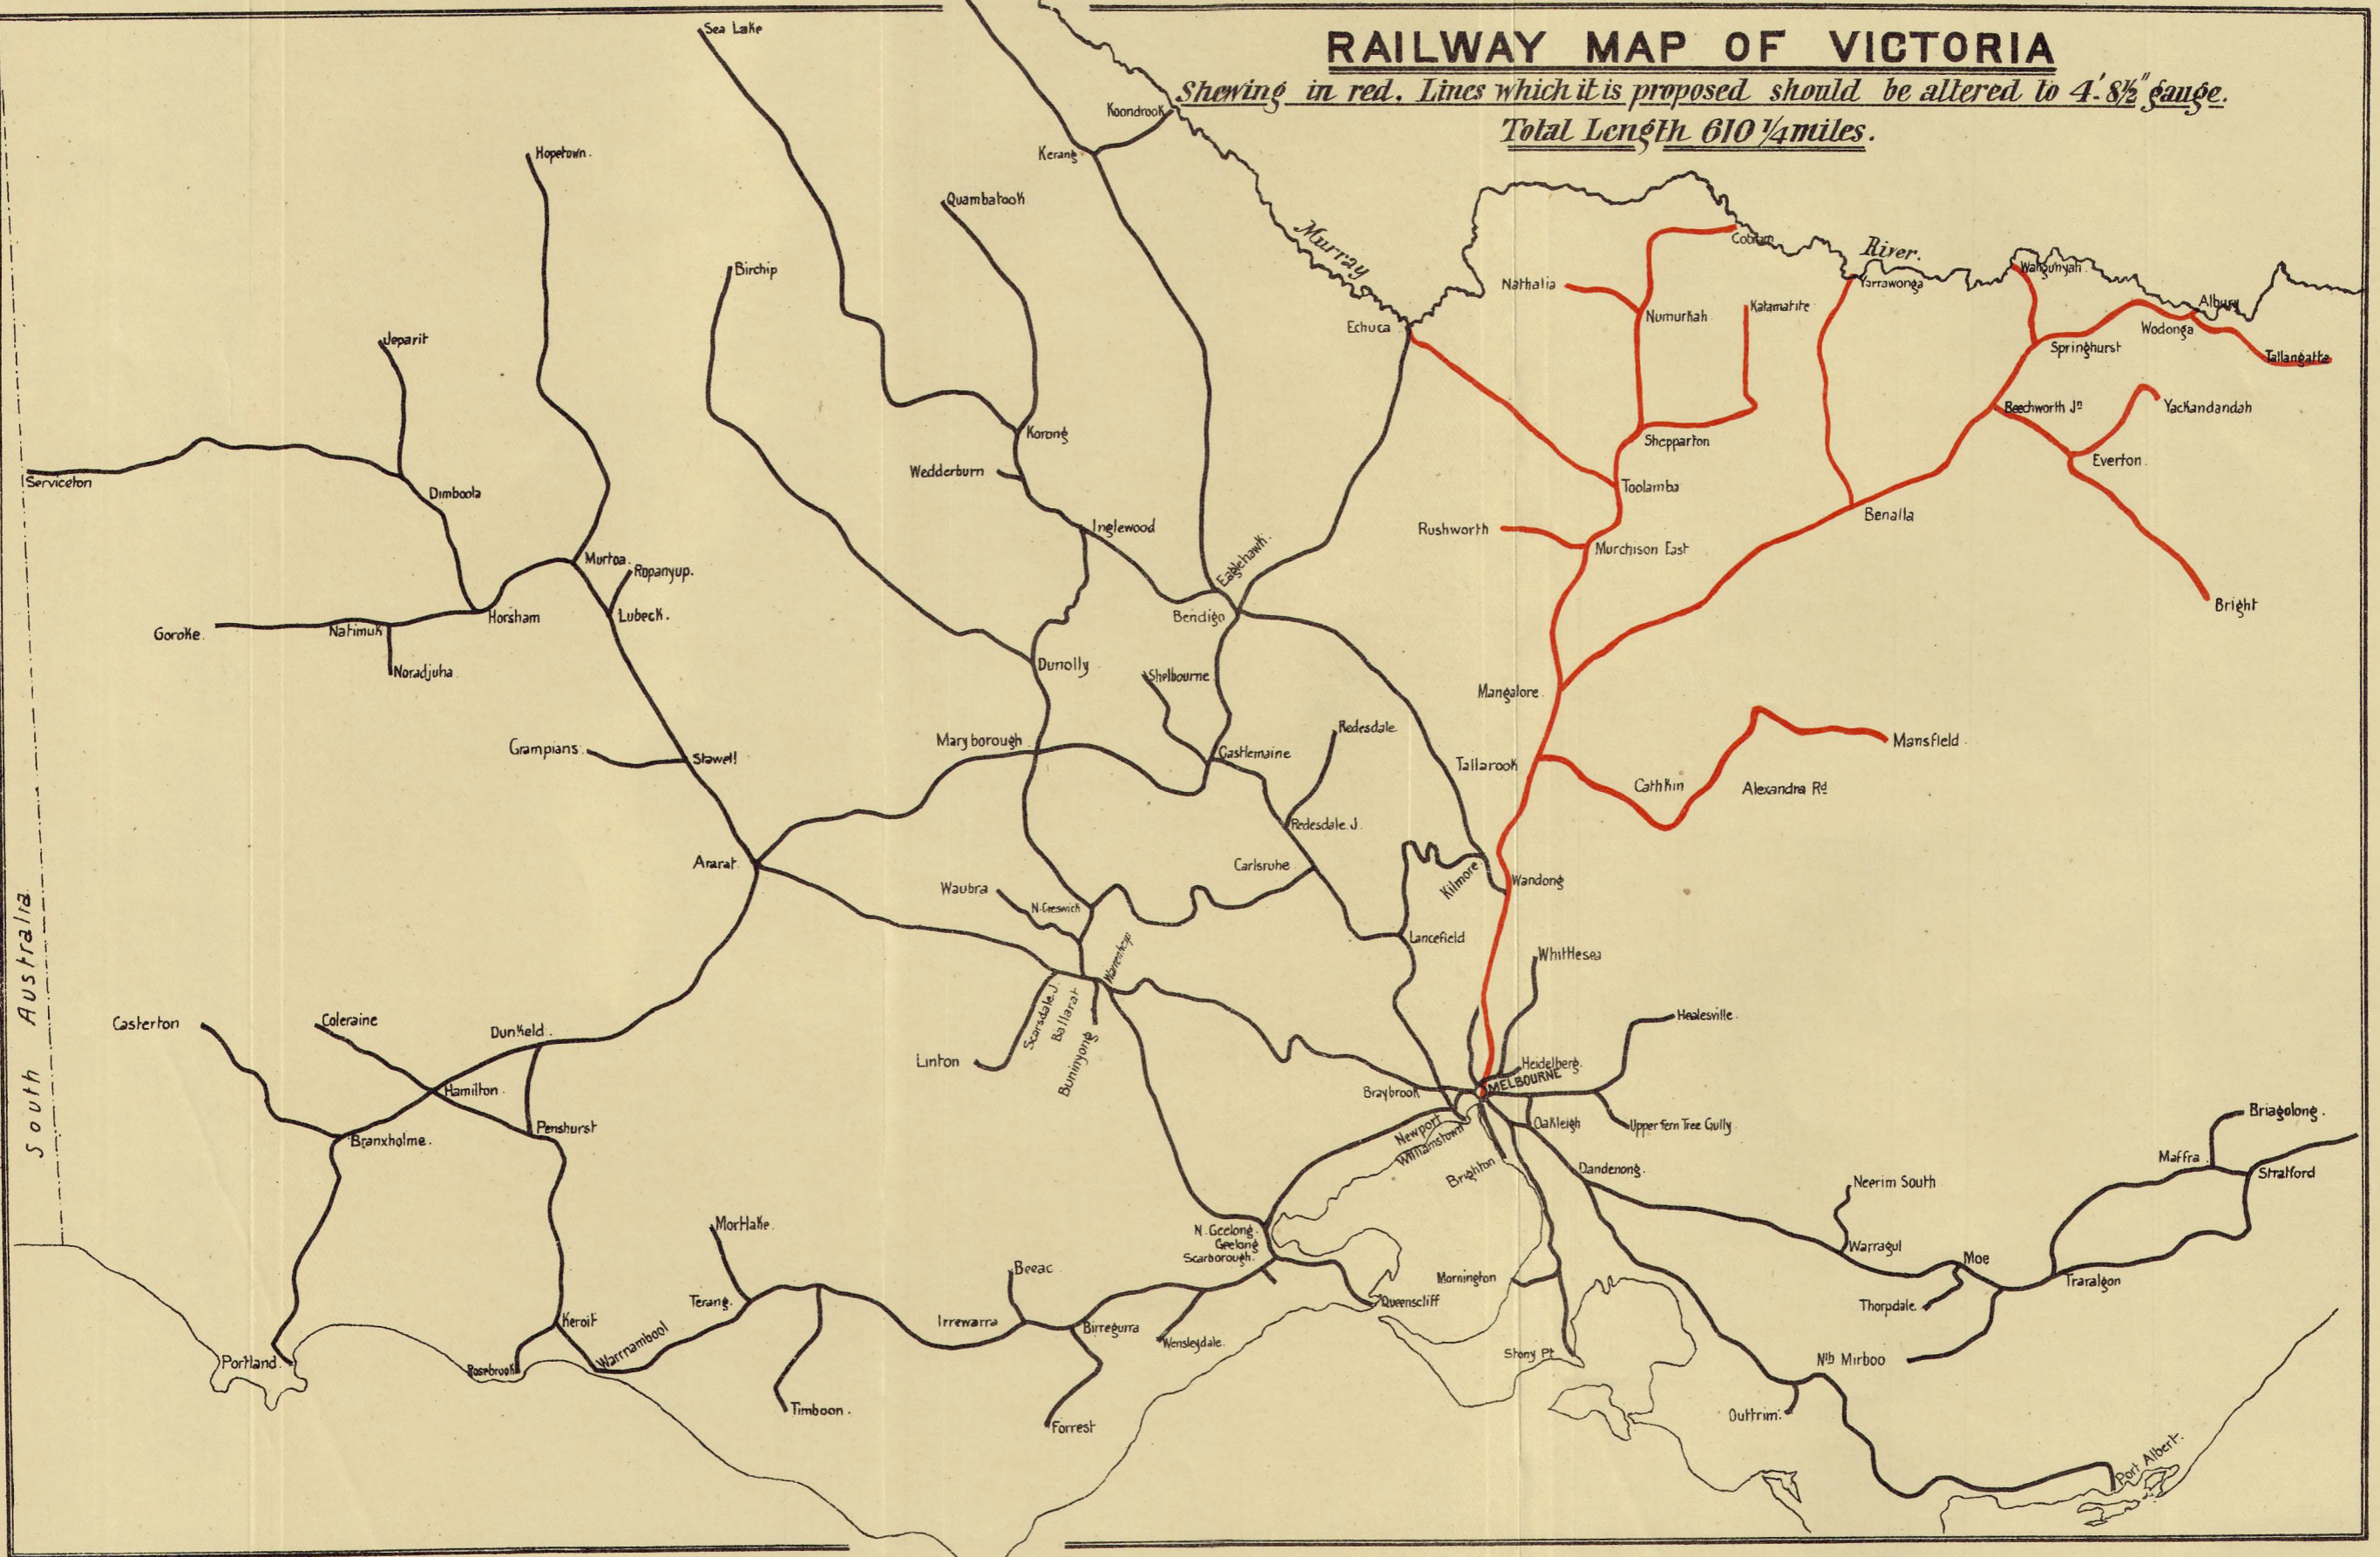

I would suggest for the consideration of the Government that the cost of this change should be borne by the two colonies affected in equal proportions, and when, later on, the whole question as affecting all the colonies is dealt with, the question could be reopened and the expenditure readjusted on the principle decided upon for the larger expenditure.

I attach a map of the Victorian railways, and have marked thereon in red the lines suggested to be altered to the 4 ft. 8½ in. gauge. If the two Governments are favourably disposed to consider the matter, a rough estimate of the cost of carrying out the scheme could be speedily prepared and laid before you.

E. M. G. EDDY.

TABLES illustrating the Imports and Customs Collections of the Commonwealth of Australia.

ARRANGEMENT OF TABLES.

- FIRST SERIES Value of Imports into each State, distinguishing dutiable and non-dutiable goods, with revenue payable under New South Wales tariff.
- SECOND SERIES Value of Imports into each State, distinguishing dutiable and non-dutiable goods, with revenue payable under Victorian tariff.
- THIRD SERIES Value of Imports into each State, distinguishing dutiable and non-dutiable goods, with revenue payable under South Australian tariff.
- FOURTH SERIES Value of Imports into each State, distinguishing dutiable and non-dutiable goods, with revenue payable under Western Australian tariff. •
- FIFTH SERIES Value of Imports into each State, distinguishing dutiable and non-dutiable goods, with revenue payable under Tasmanian tariff.

EXPLANATORY NOTE.

THE following tables show the imports for home consumption into each of the federating States during the years 1893, 1894, and 1895, and the average annual imports during these three years. The value of dutiable goods is shown separately from that of free goods, and dutiable goods again are divided into intoxicants and narcotics and other goods subject to duty. In order to show what might have been the result had the tariff of one of the other States been adopted in the years under review, instead of the tariff actually in force in each State, the schedule of customs duties of the federating colonies has been applied to the imports of each of the other States in turn, on the assumption that the goods would have been imported to the same extent, no matter what tariff might be in operation. For example, the first series is headed "New South Wales tariff," and shows the value of goods imported into each colony for home consumption, the value of narcotics and stimulants, the value of goods which would have been subject to duty under the New South Wales tariff, and the value of goods that would have been admitted free. The second series gives like information on the assumption that the Victorian tariff was in force in the other colonies as well as in Victoria during 1893, 1894, and 1895; and so on with the tariffs of South Australia, Western Australia, and Tasmania.

Each table is divided into two parts. Part A deals with all goods, while Part B deals only with "foreign" goods imported. For the purposes of these tables the term "foreign" is used as applicable to all countries other than the five federating colonies.

At the end of each series (Table V) is a statement of the amount of revenue which would have been collected under the customs and excise tariff of each colony, not only by the colony in which such tariff was in force, but also by each of the other four federating colonies. Thus, Table V of the third series shows the collections under the South Australian tariff, from which it would appear that if this tariff had been in force in New South Wales during the three years which closed with 1895, the average annual collections would have been £3,181,744, equal to £2 11s. 5d. per head. If Australian goods other than narcotics and stimulants had been admitted free into New South Wales, the customs and excise collections would have been £2,849,709, or £2 6s. 5d. per head.

It will be understood that the imports are exclusive of coin and bullion, and from the imports of South Australia the value of silver ore in transit from Broken Hill to Europe has been excluded.

The tables have been prepared in order to illustrate an important problem of Federal Finance, and not as an exact indication of what might be expected under a uniform tariff.

The export of domestic produce from one colony to another has been determined by the trade returns of the exporting colony, and not by the import statistics of the colony to which the goods were sent. No other plan was found to be workable.

The tariff taken in South Australia and Tasmania is that which existed in 1895. For New South Wales the tariff as it will exist in July, 1897, has been taken; for Victoria, that which took effect on 1st January, 1896; and for Western Australia, that which came into force in October, 1895.

Received by the Legislative Assembly, 26 May, 1897.

To the Honorable the Legislative Assembly of New South Wales.

The Petition of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church of New South Wales,—

RESPECTFULLY SHOWETH:—

That your Petitioners sincerely believe that there ought to appear in the Constitution of the Australian Commonwealth a recognition of the existence of Almighty God, and of His sovereignty over nations, and your Petitioners accordingly pray that such an acknowledgment may be inserted in the preamble of the Commonwealth Bill now before your Honorable House.

And your Petitioners, as in duty bound, will ever pray.

CONSTITUTION OF THE COMMONWEALTH OF AUSTRALIA DRAFT BILL.

(PETITION FROM J. FORDYCE, M.A., CHAIRMAN OF THE COUNCIL OF THE CHURCHES, PRAYING FOR AN AMENDMENT IN THE PREAMBLE.)

Received by the Legislative Assembly, 17th June, 1897.

To the Honorable the Legislative Assembly of New South Wales in Parliament assembled,—

The Petition of the Council of the Churches, consisting of officially appointed representatives of the Church of England, Presbyterian, Wesleyan, Baptist, Congregational, and Primitive Methodist Churches in New South Wales,—

RESPECTFULLY SHEWETH :—

That your Petitioners promoted Petitions to the Federal Convention of Australasia recently assembled in Adelaide, asking that in the preamble to the constitution of the Australian Commonwealth there should be inserted a clause acknowledging God as the Supreme Ruler of the world.

That more than 12,000 male citizens of New South Wales over 21 years of age signed these Petitions, and that the official heads of the different Churches in Australia were in full sympathy with and did their utmost to encourage this movement.

That your Petitioners know that a very large number of the people in New South Wales are in hearty sympathy with this object, and think it of the utmost importance that such a clause should be embodied in the Constitution of the Commonwealth.

That your Petitioners would therefore earnestly pray your Honorable House to insist that the following words, or words to the same effect, be inserted in the preamble of the Constitution:—"That this Commonwealth humbly and reverently acknowledges God as the Supreme Ruler of the world and the ultimate source of all authority in nations."

And your Petitioners, as in duty bound, will ever pray.

Signed, on behalf of the Council,

J. FORDYCE, M.A.,
Chairman.

(PETITION FROM I. E. IVES, MAYOR OF SYDNEY, CHAIRMAN OF A PUBLIC MEETING HELD IN Y.M.C.A. HALL, PITT-STREET, PRAYING FOR AN AMENDMENT IN THE PREAMBLE.)

Received by the Legislative Assembly, 20th July, 1897.

To the Honorable the Legislative Assembly of New South Wales in Parliament assembled,—

The humble Petition of Sydney citizens in public meeting assembled, in Y.M.C.A. Hall, Pitt-street, on July 5th, 1897, the Worshipful the Mayor, presiding.

RESPECTFULLY SHOWETH :—

That your Petitioners unanimously passed the following resolutions :—

1. That this meeting of citizens, representing all classes and creeds of the community, affirms that Almighty God should be recognised as the Supreme Ruler of the world, and the ultimate source of all law and authority in nations, in the preamble of the constitution of the Australian Commonwealth
2. That a Petition be prepared and signed by the Chairman of this representative gathering for presentation to the New South Wales Parliament urging our Legislature to insert a clause recognising God as the Supreme Ruler of the world and the ultimate source of all law and authority in nations in the preamble of the Federal Bill now before Parliament.

Your Petitioners therefore humbly pray your Honorable House to grant this prayer, and to insert such a clause in the preamble of the Federal Bill.

And your Petitioners, as in duty bound, will ever pray.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.
NEW SOUTH WALES.

CONSTITUTION OF THE COMMONWEALTH OF AUSTRALIA—DRAFT BILL.

(PETITION FROM THE AUSTRALASIAN NATIONAL LEAGUE, NEW SOUTH WALES SECTION, SUGGESTING CERTAIN AMENDMENTS FOR INSERTION IN.)

Received by the Legislative Assembly, 26 May, 1897.

To the Honorable the Speaker and Members of the Legislative Assembly of New South Wales in Parliament assembled.

The Petition of the undersigned on behalf of the Australasian National League, New South Wales section,—

HUMBLY SHOWETH THAT:—

1. A Bill is to be introduced into your Honorable House having for its object the establishment of a Federation of the Australian Colonies.

2. That in the opinion of your Petitioners this measure provides in its main general features a form of constitution calculated to bring about the federal union of these Colonies on safe lines, and would tend to raise the whole tone of our national life; but they would respectfully submit that upon some points it is highly desirable that amendments should be made.

3. While recognising the apparent wish of the people, as expressed by the majority of the delegates at the late Federal Convention held in Adelaide, for a Senate elected direct by the people, in constituencies of the whole Colonies, as provided in the Bill, your Petitioners are of opinion that this system is a dangerous one unless provision is made for the representation of minorities. If the election be under the same system as that adopted at the late Federal Elections it is almost certain that what is known as the ticket system, in vogue in other countries, will be introduced, and the whole of the representatives from one Colony will be members of one party. Thus, if in this Colony 150,000 votes were cast, of which 76,000 were for the nominees of one party, they would all be elected, and the other 74,000 voters would be totally unrepresented.

4. Your Petitioners would respectfully suggest the adoption of some system of representation in connection with these elections similar to that successfully introduced in the late general election in Tasmania. Under this method, which is an adaptation of what is known as the Hare system, minorities are represented, and by its adoption in the elections to the Senate, it would be possible for the best men holding various political views to be returned. We would point out that otherwise, if the elections for the House of Representatives and the Senate are not held simultaneously, it is very probable that, owing to a slight change of public opinion in the intervals, the majority of representatives from a Colony in one House would be in conflict with the majority in the other.

5. Amongst the powers of legislation proposed to be given to the Federal Parliament by the Bill, is that of raising money by taxation through the Customs and Excise, and "by any other mode or system of taxation." This latter power, which includes the power of levying direct taxation without restriction, is, in the opinion of your Petitioners, a dangerous one, as being likely to cause serious friction between the federal authority and the separate States. By the general provisions of the Bill, the right of imposing Customs duties will be taken from the States, and the only elastic form of revenue remaining to the State Parliaments will be through direct taxation.

6. In the humble opinion of your Petitioners, this power of direct taxation by the State Parliaments should be untrammelled, and no powers of direct taxation should be held by the Federal Parliament except to be used in time of war. Otherwise it is possible that the Federal Parliament may impose direct taxation in the same form as that in force in some or all of the States, the incidence and collection of which would take precedence over the State taxes. This proposed system of divided authority is likely to result before many years in conflicts between the Parliaments, apart from the fact that it may throw unbearable burdens upon some section of the community, and your Petitioners would respectfully suggest that the taxation powers of the Federal Parliament be restricted to the control of customs, excise, and bounties, and the imposition of direct taxation only in the event of war.

7. Under the provisions of the Bill dealing with the Judiciary it is proposed to establish a High Court of Appeal, which shall be final, except in matters affecting the Commonwealth or some State, when Her Majesty the Queen may give special leave to appeal to the Privy Council. In the opinion of your Petitioners, while it is desirable that there should be a Federal Court of Appeal, the proposed abrogation of the present right of any person within Australia to appeal to the Privy Council would take away one of the highest privileges of a British subject. It would also constitute a serious menace to the integrity of the Empire, by removing one of the tangible existing ties between the Colonies and the British Crown, and would make Australia the only self-governing part of the Empire in which the privilege of appeal would not exist. It is highly desirable that the same commercial law which prevails in Great Britain should be in force here, as otherwise those doing business with these Colonies and living elsewhere may feel uncertainty as to the effect of any operations they may undertake, which may result in a serious diminution of investment and enterprise, and greatly affect our shipping, commercial, and industrial life.

Your Petitioners therefore humbly pray that when considering the clauses of this measure in detail your Honorable House will recommend such amendments as will provide for a system of effective representation in the election of representatives to the Senate; for the limitation of the taxation powers of the Federal Parliament, so that direct taxation may only be imposed in the event of war; and for the granting of the right of appeal to the Privy Council to litigants before the Australian Courts.

And your Petitioners, as in duty bound, will ever pray.

JNO. M. PURVES,
President.
WILLIAM EPPS,
Secretary.
