Introduction

This publication provides detailed two-party and two-candidate preferred results by polling place for the 2015 New South Wales election. The publication is the latest in a series first published by the Parliamentary Library after the 1991 election and is a companion to "2015 New South Wales Election: Analysis of Results", (Background Paper No 1/2015).

As well as two-party and two-candidate preferred results, several tables of first preference results by polling place are provided on pages 1 to 9. These tables highlight polling places across the state where selected registered parties recorded their highest and lowest percentage first preference vote. The tables exclude most Declared Institution and Sydney Town Hall count centres.

On page 10 are two tables that provide a breakdown of results by vote type. The first table provides percentage first preference, informal and two-party preferred vote by party by vote type for the 2015 election. The second table shows the changing proportion of vote recorded by vote type at New South Wales elections since 1984. This table highlights the declining proportion of the vote taken on polling day as well as the rise in postal and pre-poll voting.

Two-Candidate versus Two-Party Preferred results.

The two-candidate preferred count in a contest is defined as the final tally of votes for the two remaining candidates in a contest after the successive distribution of preferences from excluded candidates. In most cases, the final pairing of candidates will represent a contest between the Labor Party and the Liberal-National Party Coalition, a pairing that is also referred as a two-party preferred count.

At the 2015 election there were 77 electorates where the two-candidate preferred count was also the two-party preferred count between Labor and Coalition candidates. The remaining 16 electorates produced six Liberal-Green contests (Davidson, Manly, North Shore, Pittwater, Vacluse, Willoughby), three Labor-Green contests (Balmain, Newtown, Summer Hill), two National-Green contests (Ballina, Lismore), two National-Independent contests (Murray, Tamworth), two Labor-Independent contests (Lake Macquarie, Wollongong) and one Liberal-Independent contest (Sydney).

A full summary of two-party and two-candidate preferred results by electorate can be found on pages 31-33 of "2015 New South Wales Election: Analysis of Results", (Background Paper No 1/2015).

This publication contains actual two-candidate preferred results by polling place and vote type for all 93 electorates, as well as additional tables of actual two-party preferred results by polling place for the sixteen electorates that did not finish as two-party preferred contests.

Changes to Counting Procedures

The NSW Electoral Commission radically changed its counting procedures for the 2015 election.

As in the past, initial counts were conducted by hand in polling places and in the various centres where declaration and pre-poll votes were counted. Indicative preference counts were also conducted in this initial phase.

The major change in 2015 was the abandonment of the traditional manual check count. Instead, check counts were undertaken by data entering all lower house ballot papers.

Once all ballot papers had been entered, the distribution of preferences and formal declaration of the poll was completed by computer. Having captured all ballot paper details, it was also possible for the Electoral Commission to carry out alternate two-party preferred counts without having to re-count the ballot papers. The results in this publication are drawn from the Electoral Commission's counting system.

Reading the Tables

Each table in this publication contains count information for each polling place, each pre-poll voting centre, as well as totals for the various categories of declaration votes. Totals are provided for ordinary polling day votes, for pre-poll votes and for declaration votes.

Total votes and percentages after preferences are provided for each polling place or vote type, as well as a total of exhausted preferences, formal and informal votes.

Acknowledgments

I would like to thank the NSW Electoral Commissioner Mr Colin Barry and the staff of his Commission for making results of the 2015 election available by polling place in computer readable format.

The author takes responsibility for the calculations of percentages in all tables as well as the vote type calculations on page 10, and the ordering for first preference votes.
